Again it is said that if you boycott the legislatures, why not boycott the schools and the law-courts? It is a perfectly consistent and logical proposition, but mankind is not governed always by logic and consistency alone. Sometimes mankind gets illogical; it vindicates its weakness as also its strength by being frankly and even brutally inconsistent. Inconsistent we are in boycotting the legislatures and not boycotting the schools and the law-courts and the post office and the railways and what not. But there comes our wisdom in understanding our limitations and the Working Committee did understand those limitations; and although the proposition was contested in the Subjects Committee, the majority of the Subjects Committee have come to the conclusion that we may no longer go to the legislatures, and that we have got strength enough to remain outside the legislatures. There is one stock argument, I know, that no matter what you do your places will never remain vacant; but it is not the idea that the places should remain vacant. If there is an opium den and if you imagine that fifty thousand people go there including yourselves, will we hesitate to empty that opium den because somebody else will go and occupy that place? I am quite certain that we will not. If we believe that the legislatures are played out for the nation and for the Congress, then it is wisdom for us to stay out. That others will occupy our places is not a relevant consideration. The relevant consideration is this: can we or can we not, in terms of complete independence, go to these legislatures or hasten our progress towards our goal by entering or remaining in the legislatures? If you feel that we can hasten our progress towards independence by going into these legislatures, by all means go there. I will not talk to you now about the oath that has got to be taken in the legislatures, though for a man like me that also becomes a conclusive argument.

As for the boycott of the schools and law-courts, as I have told you, I do not see today the atmosphere about us necessary for such boycott. If there is no such atmosphere, what is the use of putting in a clause which is not going to be operative, which is not going to be acted upon by the very people to whom it is addressed?

Then there comes the question of civil disobedience. Civil disobedience is a thing which I swear by because I possibly cannot conceive India winning her freedom by criminal disobedience; and criminal disobedience means the bomb and the sword. I can conceive of freedom and independence being achieved by and on behalf of the starving millions scattered over the length and breadth of India, in the seven hundred thousand villages, by legitimate and peaceful means only. Disobedience to be absolutely effective has got to be always civil, that is always non-violent; and if you want that civil disobedience should come in the near future you will have to transform yourselves. You will then not have jugglery of thought; you will not then deceive yourselves and, unconsciously it may be, deceive the nation also into the belief that the bomb and non-violence can run on parallel lines. In a place like India where the mightiest organization is pledged to [non-] violence, if you really believe in your own creed, that is to say, if you believe in yourselves, if you believe in your nation, then it is civil disobedience that is wanted; and if it is civil disobedience that is wanted, then, you must observe the strictest discipline, you must see that no passion arises at least amongst ourselves, no ugly demonstrations of the sort that we have seen here and that we saw in the Subjects Committee; we must be calm, cool, collected, courageous, brave; and we must speak to the point, never obstruct. It does not matter a bit if every one of my propositions is lost; I must have toleration for those who have moved and supported these amendments. Then only shall I be able to vindicate my faith in non-violent organization. And so, if you really want civil disobedience in the near future, it is necessary for you to conduct the proceedings of the Congress and of the Subjects Committee in a manner behaving peaceful men. If you have got real love for freedom, then there is no room for irritation, mutual jealousies, quarrels; but there is room only for united, brave, calm and collected action. Hence I ask you with all the strength that I can possibly command to carry this resolution with acclamation because this is the central resolution of this session. Let it not be said in the world that we, who today pledge ourselves to independence, pledge ourselves with divided counsels, that we are a house divided against itself and therefore bound to fall. Let us go forth to the whole world that we rose to a man to vindicate our freedom and that we pledged ourselves to attain that freedom by the quickest possible manner. Hence I ask you to reject summarily the resolution of Mr. Subhas Chandra Bose also. I know that he is a great worker in Bengal; he has shone in many a field; he was the commander-in-chief of our forces in Bengal. He has moved a proposition which is not an amendment, it is really a substantive resolution to be substituted for the original resolution. It is a good proposition, I do not deny that; but it goes far beyond my resolution. It suggests a parallel government. If you think that you can have a parallel government today then let me tell you that the Congress flag does not at present fly even in one thousand villages. All honour to those who favour this amendment but it is not bravery, it is not prudence, it is not wisdom. You cannot establish freedom by the mere passing of a resolution. You will establish freedom not by words but by deeds. Therefore, consider whether you can establish a parallel government today, whether you can carry out all the boycotts mentioned in that resolution. We are not declaring independence, mind you. In Madras we declared independence as our goal. Here we go a step further and say that independence is not a distant goal but it is our immediate objective. But Subhas Chandra Bose wants you to go a step further still. I would like to follow him through and through if I considered parallel government a present possibility. Parallel government means our own law-courts, our own schools and colleges, etc. If you think that we have the ability to do today all the things enumerated in Subhas Babu’s resolution you should pass it and reject my proposition. But I suggest to you that we have not that ability today and therefore I ask you to think with me that the step suggested by the Working Committee is the longest step that we can take today; a step further and it lands you in a pitfall. That is my certain conviction and hence I urge you with all the strength that I can command to carry this resolution without the change of a comma.¹

Report of the 44th Indian National Congress, Lahore

¹ The resolution was put to vote and carried.
160. LETTER TO BIJON KUMAR SINHA

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter.

The books I can recommend are: Tolstoy’s The Kingdom of Heaven Is Within You, What to do, Edwin Arnold’s Song Celestial, Max Muller’s What Can India Teach Us?

If you have not read Ramayana you should read it too.

Yours,

BIJON KUMAR SINHA
UNDER-TRIAL PRISONER
BORSTEL JAIL
LAHORE

From a copy: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32579/26

161. A LETTER

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I cannot endorse the appeal you propose to make for a new journalistic venture. I do not know how Liberty is being conducted. But if it is not well conducted the remedy is persuasion and not a counter-enterprise. In my opinion we have too many newspapers in the country at present. Such being my opinion please put me out of your mind.

Yours,

From a copy: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/134

162. LETTER TO RUSTOMJI

BHAISHRI RUSTOMJI,

I do not believe that the observance of brahmacharya in one’s relations with one’s wife is necessary in order to build character. I do believe, however, that for one who wants to dedicate himself completely to service, such extreme brahmacharya is essential. For the purpose of building character, ceaseless search for truth and non-violence and following them in practice are sufficient. Everything else is included in that.

1 This and the following items have been placed as in the source.

Every human being has or should have only one aim, and that is the knowledge of his Creator or realization of the Self. Service of the country is not an independent aim, but without it realization of the Self is impossible.

I find great peace in observing silence. My work becomes cleaner and easier. I can be more introspective. Silence is very helpful in controlling anger.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32579/12

163. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

[1929]

CHI. GANGABEHN,

I have not corrected the whole of your letter as there was no time. Shouldn’t the letter for you be dispatched on Monday?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 11269

164. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

[1929]

CHI. GANGABEHN,

Herewith the common letter¹, and your letter after corrections. The sh at the end of a verb indicating tense is always palatal. You will improve your handwriting quickly if you write slowly with your pen and write big letters. Do no grudge the expense on thing that may be necessary to improve your health. Do not be impatient either.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 11271

¹ For the Ashram women
165. A LETTER

[1929]

Our aspiration is to reach the state of nothingness. Unless we destroy the ‘I’ in us, where will ‘He’ come and sit? How can two occupy one place?

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32578/81

166. A LETTER

[1929]

I hope you have calmed down now. You have to live long and serve and through service have to realize God. Remember the words of Arjuna: “My delusion has gone and I have regained knowledge of my true self.”1 When you also gain full knowledge of your self, delusion will pass away and, instead of trying to conquer your body by fasting, you will have faith and realize the self by serving and also be of great help to others in their quest for self-realization.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32578/76

167. A LETTER

[1929]

CHI. . . . .

You need not apologize. It will be enough if we realize that such mistakes are an indication of our state of ignorance. No one is wholly free of this ignorance. All we can do is to try to free ourselves of it.

I understand the change. It will be enough if you do everything after careful thought. Do not let your improved health have a set-back. Remember what I have told you. You should not do any service which causes you mental suffering. Even out of fear of hurting my feeling you should not take up any burden beyond your capacity. I am not easily hurt and whatever pain I feel is only momentary. Even that I should not feel.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/53

1 Bhagavad Gita, XVIII, 73
168. LETTER TO JAGAT NARAIN LAL

[1929]

Krishna was the servant of His servants. He was always immersed in work of service without the least slackness. No task was too small for Him. One can truly worship Him only by following Him.

PT. JAGAT NARAIN LAL

‘MAHAVI’, PATNA

From a copy of the Hindi: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/119

169. LETTER TO GOVIND BALLABH PANT

[1929]

DEAR GOVIND BALLABHJI,

I have your letter. As for Sitalakhet, I shall find out about it when I have some leisure. There is no hurry.

As regards the Prem Vidyalaya, I have sent a draft for Rs. 2,000 to Bhai Har Govind Pant, as I had said I would. I had intended to send it to you; but I sent it to Har Govind because you are mostly touring and away from the Prem Vidyalaya, while Har Govind is at hand. I assume that the conditions I have sent to the press will be conveyed to you by Har Govind. After seeing those conditions, you may do what you consider proper. I hope you will visit the Prem Vidyalaya now and then and take more interest in it. On that assumption alone I have sent the money.

From a copy of the Hindi: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/130

170. A LETTER

[1929]

It is not proper for a man devoted to duty to be disheartened in any situation.

We must consider death as our friend. Why should we grieve when our dear ones embrace a friend? We have got to give up fear of death.

From a copy of the Hindi: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 35277/72
DEAR SISTER.

I have your letter. All is well if you are content at heart. I am afraid of being disappointed by being hasty in Sodepur. We shall find an opening by proceeding slowly.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Hindi: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/59

DEAR SISTER.

I have your letter. I want to see you restored by whatever means. Do not work beyond your capacity.

I shall try to regard Sodepur as I do Sabarmati. I do not yet so regard it because I doubt if the experiments that have to be conducted at Sabarmati and Wardha can be conducted at Sodepur. I do not intend ruining Sodepur by carrying on those experiments there. Sodepur exists for khadi; Sabarmati is meant for experimenting with truth, etc. This should not give you the idea that Sabarmati is superior. I have merely pointed out the fields of activities of both. I do hope that the experiments at Sabarmati will also be carried out at Sodepur. But all that depends on God. Whatever happens at Sodepur I regard you as an inmate of the Ashram.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Hindi: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/56

I have your letter.

A devoted wife serves her husband best by being perfect and free from blemish.

You cannot save from your scholarship and send the amount to
I have committed a great blunder. Driven by a particular thought I just said that you should go to Calcutta. By all means, go to any place where you can find your peace of mind. I have had long arguments with you. I have prevented you from doing many things. We must give up the habit of indulging so much in arguments. In that state of mind I just told you to go to Calcutta if you so wished. But I cannot give you such a permission. It is one thing if you wish to go and go. But it is another if I happily permit you to go. Not only am I not in favour of your going to Calcutta, but I am against it. Considering my view, take an independent decision. It would not hurt me in any way. My reason for opposing your going to Calcutta is as under:

I have believed that there is no other city in India as wicked as Calcutta. The atrocities that are perpetrated in Calcutta can hardly be witnessed in any other city of the world. This comparison may be somewhat exaggerated. My knowledge about other cities is incomplete. But I have no doubt at all about the cities of India. In Calcutta, thousands of innocent lambs and goats are slaughtered in the name of religion. Such a thing is done nowhere else in India. Everyone, big and small, the learned and the foolish, are a party to this slaughter. No one stops to think about it even for a moment. The enlightened Calcutta does not even protest against it. And in this so-called age of reform, this cruel act is being performed day after day. Stand anywhere in the Bhawanipur area of Calcutta early in the morning and you will see flocks of sheep around. I have witnessed that sight with my own eyes. Right from that moment, I had decided that I would never agree to any suggestion of my settling down at Calcutta. Again, in Calcutta, cows and buffaloes are milched after 1 From the contents. In 1929 Gandhiji returned to Ahmedabad from Calcutta.

174. LETTER TO JAMNADAS GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,
[1929]

TO JAMNADAS.

I have committed a great blunder. Driven by a particular thought I just said that you should go to Calcutta. By all means, go to any place where you can find your peace of mind. I have had long arguments with you. I have prevented you from doing many things. We must give up the habit of indulging so much in arguments. In that state of mind I just told you to go to Calcutta if you so wished. But I cannot give you such a permission. It is one thing if you wish to go and go. But it is another if I happily permit you to go. Not only am I not in favour of your going to Calcutta, but I am against it. Considering my view, take an independent decision. It would not hurt me in any way. My reason for opposing your going to Calcutta is as under:

I have believed that there is no other city in India as wicked as Calcutta. The atrocities that are perpetrated in Calcutta can hardly be witnessed in any other city of the world. This comparison may be somewhat exaggerated. My knowledge about other cities is incomplete. But I have no doubt at all about the cities of India. In Calcutta, thousands of innocent lambs and goats are slaughtered in the name of religion. Such a thing is done nowhere else in India. Everyone, big and small, the learned and the foolish, are a party to this slaughter. No one stops to think about it even for a moment. The enlightened Calcutta does not even protest against it. And in this so-called age of reform, this cruel act is being performed day after day. Stand anywhere in the Bhawanipur area of Calcutta early in the morning and you will see flocks of sheep around. I have witnessed that sight with my own eyes. Right from that moment, I had decided that I would never agree to any suggestion of my settling down at Calcutta. Again, in Calcutta, cows and buffaloes are milched after blowing. This process of blowing is so cruel that I cannot even describe it. This time I witnessed that too with my own eyes. Such cruel things always go on in Calcutta. The very thought that you should spend your life in that city and waste your time by engaging yourself in futile business is terrible for me. It seems to me that you cannot chalk out an ideal life from it. Only some divine creature may remain unaffected in spite of living in such hell. I do not take it for granted that you belong to that category. Think a thousand times about what you wish to do in life and then decide. This is all I wish to say.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: Chhaganlal Gandhi Papers. Courtesy: Sabarmati Museum, Ahmedabad

175. LETTER TO RAMDAS AND NIRMALA GANDHI
Silence Day [SATYAGRAHASRAM, 1929]

CHI. RAMDAS AND NIMU,

You may forget me, but not Ba. She is deeply grieved and crying out her heart. She imagines all kinds of fearful things to have befallen you: ‘Could Nimu be ill, or something have befallen Ramdas?’

When I, a baby in the cradle;
Started crying, who came running to soothe me?

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library
Mahatma Gandhi, in supporting the resolution¹, said:

I have travelled throughout the country more than anybody else.

MR. JAMNADAS MEHTA: I think except Seth Jamnalal Bajaj.

MAHATMAJI: I do not think there is any exception.

MR. JAMNADAS MEHTA: But Jamnalalji claims that.

MAHATMAJI: I refute this charge. I have travelled throughout the country in the third class and have mixed with the poor more than anyone else and I have seen with my own eyes how the poor suffer in winter. This proposal has been placed before you after the most careful consideration of all the months of the year. During the month suggested there is no rain, no malaria or any other epidemic or diseases. It may be said that we get railway concession during the Christmas. But I think it is immaterial. And we hope to be in control of the railways before long. (Laughter) Similarly the question that we will not get students as our volunteers seems to be also immaterial, because besides students there are lakhs of people who are non-students and I hope these poor men will take part in the Congress. The months of February and March are the best months for the poor from the point of view of convenience and cheapness. I very much realize the remark that we are Xmas politicians. Henceforth: we want to dispose of our business most promptly and I think I need not speak much on this resolution.

The Bombay Chronicle, 2-1-1930

¹ Which read: Inasmuch as the Congress is intended to be representative of the poor masses and inasmuch as the holding of the Congress at the end of December involves a very considerable expense to the poor people in providing for extra clothing for themselves and is otherwise inconvenient to them, the date of holding the Congress session is hereby altered to some date in February or March to be fixed by the Working Committee in consultation with the Provincial Committee of the Province concerned.
177. SPEECH AT SUBJECTS COMMITTEE, A.I.C.C.-II

January 1, 1930

Mahatmaji then moved the resolution of the Working Committee repudiating the national debt and declaring that at the time of final settlement of India’s national debt a tribunal would be appointed to judge which debt India should pay and would pay according to the decision of that tribunal.

This Congress is of opinion that the financial burdens directly or indirectly imposed on India by the foreign administration are such as a free India cannot bear and cannot be expected to bear. This Congress, whilst reaffirming the resolution passed at the Gaya Congress in 1922, therefore records its opinion for the information of all concerned that every obligation and concession to be inherited by independent India will be strictly subject to investigation by an independent tribunal, and every obligation, every concession, no matter how incurred or given, will be repudiated if it is not found by such tribunal to be just and justifiable.¹

The resolution was unanimously passed.

MR. SANYAL: May I know who would constitute this tribunal?
Mahatmaji, amidst loud laughter, said:
If you want this information you may correspond in the matter.
I cannot interpret it. Independent India would do that.

The Bombay Chronicle, 2-1-1930 and Young India, 20-2-1930

178. SPEECH AT SUBJECTS COMMITTEE, A.I.C.C.-III

January 1, 1930

Mahatmaji in replying to the opposition said:
I believe you will realize the real significance of this resolution². You all know Pandit Motilal Nehru had come to Lahore

¹ The resolution is reproduced from Young India, 20-2-1930.
² It read: In view of the lapse of the Nehru constitution it is unnecessary to declare the policy of the Congress regarding communal questions, the Congress believing that in an Independent India the communal question can only be solved on a strictly national basis. But as the Sikhs in particular and the Muslims and other minorities in general had expressed dissatisfaction over the solution of communal questions proposed in the Nehru Report, this Congress assures the Sikhs, the Muslims and other minorities that no solution thereof in any future constitution will be acceptable to the Congress that does not give full satisfaction to the parties concerned.
some days before this National Week and he came here only for two reasons, namely, for clearing the misunderstanding entertained by the Sikhs and for deciding the Punjab Congress dispute. To clear the misunderstanding, Panditji, myself and Dr. Ansari had been to see Sardar Kharag Singh, the Sikh leader, about it. Their grievance was that they were not properly treated in the Nehru Report. We discussed with the Sikhs\(^1\) and gave them the assurance that in future if any national problem is solved on the communal basis we shall satisfy them and other minorities. At the same time I say that in an Independent India every problem is to be solved on a national basis and not on a communal basis. Still since these brothers of ours have been offended by the Nehru Report I want to satisfy them and bring them into our fold. I do not say that the moment we pass this resolution this pandal will be full with Sikhs and Muslims. If they come let us welcome them, and if they do not come still we are to carry on our battle for independence. Even if there are only five men, still we five are to attain independence.

The Bombay Chronicle, 2-1-1930

179. INTERVIEW TO THE PRESS

[LAHORE, January 1, 1930]\(^2\)

What is the difference between the Non-co-operation Movement of 1921 and the present movement?

The present movement is directed towards independence, whereas that of 1921 was directed towards the redress of the Khilafat and Punjab wrongs and the attainment of swaraj within the Empire if possible and without if necessary. The boycott is confined this time only to the legislatures, but civil disobedience including the no-tax campaign is common to both, as also truth and non-violence.\(^3\)

The civil disobedience will be of the Bardoli type?

You mean the satyagraha of 1928? Yes, somewhat of that type; only in Bardoli the people fought for the redress of a specific local grievance.

How about the other boycotts?

It may not be necessary to resort to them if we can place civil

---

\(^1\) Vide “Discussion with Sikh Leaders”, 27-12-1929.

\(^2\) A report in The Statesman, 5-1-1930, giving portions from the interview, says it was given just before Gandhiji left Lahore, that is, on January 1, 1930.

\(^3\) What follows appeared also in The Statesman, 5-1-1930.
disobedience on a proper basis.

When do you expect to succeed?

It is more than a human being can say.

Assuming that there is Chauri Chaura again, would you call off civil disobedience?

I am trying to conceive a plan whereby no suspension need take place by reason of any outside disturbance—a plan whereby civil disobedience once started may go on without interruption until the goal is reached.

Have you any such plan?

I have nothing concrete before my mind at the present moment. But I think it should not be impossible to devise such a plan. I am going to leave no stone unturned. It is likely that although one may take all the safeguards that it is humanly possible to do, an outbreak may occur. The plan I am trying to think out is to prevent a discontinuance in case such an event happens.

But supposing you see your mistake?

Well, then, I shall have strength enough to atone for it.

But if you cannot hit upon a plan such as you are thinking of, what would you do?

If I do not succeed in discovering such a formula, and if there is a recurrence of Chauri Chaura, I should not hesitate to stop the movement.

Young India, 30-1-1930

180. SILENCE-DAY NOTE TO MIRABEHN

[On or after January 1, 1930]

What are your impressions of the A.I.C.C. meeting?

Considering the revolutionary character of the two resolutions, the criticism was restrained and the voting showed an extraordinary sense of responsibility and appreciation of facts. The attendance too was quite good.

From the original: C.W. 5440. Courtesy: Mirabehn. Also G.N. 9442

---

1 From the reference to “the revolutionary character of the two resolutions” which were adopted during the A.I.C.C. meeting held in Lahore from December 26, 1929 to January 1, 1930

2 Vide “Draft Resolutions for A.I.C.C., Lahore”, 26-12-1929.
181. THE CULT OF THE BOMB

There is so much violence in the atmosphere immediately surrounding us, politically minded part of India, that a bomb thrown here and a bomb thrown there causes little perturbation and probably there is even joy over such an event in the hearts of some. If I did not know that this violence was like froth coming to the surface in an agitated liquid, I should probably despair of non-violence succeeding in the near future in giving us the freedom which we are all violently-minded and non-violently minded people yearning for. Happily I have a certain belief based upon ceaseless experience during my tour in the heart of India for the past twelve months very nearly, that the vast masses who have become conscious of the fact that they must have freedom are untouched by the spirit of violence. In spite therefore of sporadic violent outbursts such as the bomb explosion under the Viceregal train I feel that non-violence for our political battle has come to stay. It is because of my increasing faith in the efficacy of non-violence in political warfare and the possibility of its being practised by masses of people that I propose to reason with those who may not be so much saturated with violence as to be beyond the pale of reason.

Let us think then for a moment what would have happened if the Viceroy had been seriously injured or killed. There certainly would have been no meeting of 23rd ultimo and therefore no certainty as to the course to be adopted by the Congress. That surely would have been, to say the least, an undesirable result. Fortunately for us the Viceroy and his party escaped unhurt, and with great self-possession he went through the day’s routine as if nothing had happened. I know that those who have no regard even for the Congress, who hope nothing from it and whose hope lies only through violence, will not be affected by this speculative reasoning. But the others, I hope, will not fail to realize the truth of the argument and to put together several important deductions that can be drawn from the hypothetical case put by me.

Take again the net result of political violence practised in this country. Every time violence has occurred we have lost heavily, that is to say, military expenditure has risen. As against this, I am willing to put the Morley-Minto reforms, the Montagu reforms and the like. But an ever widening circle of politicians is now beginning to realize that they have been like toys given to us against heavy economic burden. Whilst paltry concessions have been made, a few more Indians have found employment under Government, the masses in whose name, and for whose sake, we want freedom, have had to bear greater burdens without having any return whatsoever therefor. If we would only realize that it is not by terrorizing the foreigner that we shall gain freedom, but by ourselves shedding fear and teaching the villager to shed his own fear that we shall gain true freedom, we would at once perceive that violence is suicidal.

Then consider its reaction on ourselves. From violence done to the foreign ruler, violence to our own people whom we may consider to be obstructing the country’s progress is an easy natural step. Whatever may have been the result of violent activities in other countries and without reference to the philosophy of non-violence, it does not require much intellectual effort to see that if we resort to violence for ridding society of the many abuses which impede our progress, we shall but add to our difficulties and postpone the day of freedom. The people unprepared for reform because unconvinced of their necessity will be maddened with rage over their coercion, and will seek the assistance of the foreigner in order to retaliate. Has not this been happening before our eyes for the past many years of which we have still painfully vivid recollections?

Take now the positive side of the argument. When, that is in 1920, non-violence came to be part of the Congress creed, the Congress became a transformed body as if by magic. Mass awakening came no one knows how. Even remote villages were stirred. Many abuses seemed to have been swept away. The people became conscious of their power. They ceased to fear authority. The system of begar vanished like mist in Almora and several other parts of India, wherever the people had become awakened to a sense of the power that lay within themselves. Such as it was, it was their freedom that they had attained by their own strength. It was true swaraj of the masses attained by the masses. If the march of non-violence had not been interrupted by events culminating in Chauri Chaura, I make bold to say that we would have been today in full possession of swaraj. No one has been found to dispute this proposition. But many have shaken their heads as they have said, ‘But you can’t teach non-violence to the masses. It is only possible for individuals and that too in rare cases.’ This is, in my opinion, a gross self-deception. If mankind was not habitually non-violent, it would have been self-destroyed ages ago. But in the duel between forces of violence and non-violence the latter

---

1 Vide “Speech on New Congress Creed, Nagpur”, 28-12-1920.
2 Forced unpaid labour have always come out victorious in the end. The truth is that we have not had patience enough to wait and apply ourselves whole-heartedly to the spread of non-violence among the people as a means for political ends.

We are now entering upon a new era. Our immediate objective and not our distant goal is complete independence. Is it not obvious that if we are to evolve the true spirit of independence amongst the millions, we shall only do so through non-violence and all it implies? It is not enough that we drive out Englishmen by making their lives insecure through secret violence. That would lead not to independence but to utter confusion. We can establish independence only by adjusting our differences through an appeal to the head and the heart, by evolving organic unity amongst ourselves, not by terrorizing or killing those who, we fancy, may impede our march, but by patient and gentle handling, by converting the opponent, we want to offer mass civil disobedience. Everybody owns that it is a certain remedy. Everybody understands that ‘civil’ here means strictly non-violent, and has it not often been demonstrated that mass civil disobedience is an impossibility without mass non-violence and without mass discipline? Surely it does not require an appeal to our religious faith to convince us that the necessity of our situation, if nothing else, demands non-violence of the limited type I have indicated. Let those who are not past reason then cease either secretly or openly to endorse activities such as this latest bomb outrage. Rather let them openly and heartily condemn these outrages, so that our deluded patriots may for want of nourishment to their violent spirit realize the futility of violence and the great harm that violent activity has every time done.

Young India, 2-1-1930

182. HINDI IN THE CONGRESS

It is our strange misfortune that we are not as familiar with the name “Mahasabha” as we are with the name “Congress”. When the name Mahasabha is mentioned some take it to mean the Hindu Mahasabha and others take it for some other organization. During my tour of the United Provinces when I used the word Mahasabha for Congress I was told no one would recognize Mahasabha as the Congress. This is the influence of habit. We have got into the habit of using an English word; therefore when someone uses a Hindi word we find it difficult to understand.

Therefore, even though it is a rule that only the Hindi language should be used in the Mahasabha, it is English that is largely used. The Mahasabha notices are generally printed in English. In the Mahasabha office too English is generally used. Correspondence is carried on in English. In the lanes of Lajpat Nagar wherever one looked, one found only English signboards. All this is lamentable. But the remedy for this malady is not rigorous enforcement of the rules. The remedy is love for the national language in the masses and the resultant effort. If the public wishes, it can insist on all the business of the Mahasabha being transacted in Hindi. The fact is, there is neither sufficient awakening nor enthusiasm nor love for their language in the masses.

There is one great practical difficulty in running the Mahasabha office in Hindi. President Jawaharlal Nehru has drawn the attention of the members to it. As I have already written last time, in the United Provinces, Bihar and other Hindi-speaking provinces there are very few people who are willing to take up this work. Those very few who are or who can, are engaged in their own work. Be it in the Mahasabha office or in offices elsewhere, very few Hindi-speaking people are available for national work. In these circumstances it is not surprising that the work of the Mahasabha is done mostly in English only in spite of the rule about the use of the national language.

Ten years ago all the work was done only in English. Now there is considerable change in the desirable direction; even then, much remains to be done. All debates and discussions in the Mahasabha should be conducted only in the national language. And there should be no need for their English translation. Two difficulties crop up in achieving this. One is that, members from Bengal, Tamilnad and other such provinces understand very little Hindi and the second is that, the speaker who wants to say something wishes to explain what he means to all. If he knows both the languages he gains his end by arguing in both of them. To overcome these difficulties there are two ways. One is that, when any member begins to speak in English, he and the President should be reminded of this. Secondly, the Bengali and Tamil brothers and sisters should declare that they have no need for English. Their duty is to learn Hindi or get the sense of the proceedings from their neighbours. The change of heart in the Bengali, Tamil and other brethren depends entirely on the love, determination and courtesy of the Hindi-speaking people. Without courtesy no work can be done. Force and compulsion will not secure for Hindi its rightful place.

[From Hindi]
Hindi Navajivan, 2-1-1930

---

1 The venue of the Congress session in Lahore
183. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL

Thursday [January 2], 1930

CHI. MANI,

I have your two letters. I am writing this in a moving train. Do resolutely whatever you can. If the situation referred to in your second letter arises, you should go to Vile Parle or to Wardha. If you come and see me, I will explain this more fully and you will be comforted. Come on Tuesday or Wednesday, so that you will be able to bring more news from that end. Do what you can with the help of even a few women as co-workers.

Blessings from
BAPU

CHI. MANIBEHN PATEL
NADIAD

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro-4: Manibehn Patelne, p. 70

184. LETTER TO MOTILAL NEHRU

DELI'I, January 3, 1930

DEAR MOTILALJI,

In Lahore there was no time to talk or to read the newspaper or to think of anything else but the next hour’s work. Here, in Delhi, on a cattle farm five miles away I saw the Hindustan Times and the Kelkar manifesto. It struck me immediately that it was absolutely necessary to have from you a brief statement to show why the boycott of Legislatures is an absolute necessity. The sooner you issue it to the Press, the better it would be. Jawahar surpassed all expectations. Even the critics were silenced. If we can but take some decisive step and come to grips this year it will be a fitting finish to the presidential year so well begun.

Yours,

From a copy: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S. N. 32579/35

1 This was the only Thursday on which Gandhiji travelled by train before his arrest in 1930.
DEAR SUBHAS BABU,

You are becoming more and more an enigma to me. I want you to live up to the certificate that Deshbandhu once gave me for you. He pictured you to me as a young man of brilliant parts, singleness of purpose, great determination and above pettiness. Your conduct in Calcutta therefore grieved me, but I reconciled myself to its strangeness. But in Lahore you became inscrutable and I smelt petty jealousy. I do not mind stubborn opposition. I personally thrive on it and learn more from opponents than from friends. I therefore always welcome sincere and intelligent opposition. But in Lahore you became an obstructionist. In connection with the Bengal dispute, in your writings to the Press you were offensive and the discourteous, impatient walk-out nearly broke my heart. You should have bravely recognized the necessity and the propriety of your and other friends’ exclusion. It was not aimed at you, Prakasam or Srinivasa Iyengar. It was meant merely to strengthen the hands of the young President by providing him with a cabinet that would be helpful in carrying forward the national work.

There was no question surely of distributing patronage, of placating personal interest, however high they may be. The question was one of devising measures for achieving independence in the shortest possible time. How could you, having no faith in the programme, or Prakasam, with philosophic contempt for the present programme, or Srinivasa Iyengar, with his unfathomable unbelief in Jawaharlal and Pandit Motilalji, forward the nation’s work? But all the three could help by becoming sympathetic critics offering sound suggestions along their own lines. There was certainly no undemocratic procedure. If the putting of the names en bloc did not

---

1 In 1928.
2 In 1929.
3 T. Prakasam
4 For the Working Committee two independent lists had been prepared, one by Motilal Nehru in consultation with Gandhiji and the other by Jamnalal Bajaj. The addressee and Srinivasa Iyengar, along with a few others, staged a walk-out against this procedure as they wanted the Working Committee to be formed by election.
commend itself to the Committee, the Committee could have so expressed its opinion and that would have been also a fair measure of the strength of your party. But I do not want to continue the argument. I simply write this to ask you to retrace your steps and otherwise also prove to me and those whose co-operation you would seek, the truth of the certificate issued by Deshbandhu. I do not want to change your view about anything, but I do want you to change your conduct in enforcing those views.

Yours sincerely,

From a copy: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S. N. 32579/37

186. LETTER TO S. SRINIVASA IYENGAR

AS AT THE ASHRAM,
SABARMATI,
January 3, 1930

DEAR FRIEND,

I was deeply distressed over your walk-out and the whole of your uncertain behaviour. Uncertainty there always has been behind your acts, but I had not detected before any unworthiness about them. When we first met your sincerity and high aspiration attracted me towards you. That attraction was increasing with closer contact. How is it that it has been decreasing of late and reached almost the ebbing point? I do not mind difference of opinion, but it would cut me if my regard for you were to be diminished. Please correct me if I have erred. If I have not, I would have you retrace your steps and be what you were when I first knew you. Political life need not debase us.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: C.W. 10754. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

1 After the Congress session at Lahore the addressee and S. Srinivasa Iyengar announced the formation of a new party, the Congress Democratic Party.
187. LETTER TO SHAUKAT ALI

DELI,
January 3, 1930

MY DEAR FRIEND AND BROTHER,

I see that we are definitely moving in opposite directions, but that should not mean any breach of friendship, though it was born of political co-operation. You must therefore not empty your pocket of me altogether and I want you to make me a promise always to write to me in the frankest manner possible whenever you feel I am wronging my views or in the expression of them.

Yours sincerely,

[PS.]
Please pass it on to Mohd. Ali.

From a copy: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S. N. 32579/38

188. LETTER TO S. SATYAMURTI

AS AT THE ASHRAM,
SABARMATI,
January 3, 1930

DEAR FRIEND,

It would be wrong of me to conceal from you the grief which I have expressed to others over your highly ungentlemanly, unpatriotic and uncalled-for conduct on the 1st instant at the A.I.C.C. meeting. ¹ I do not mind opposition even though it may be merely destructive, but I do mind want of manners, which I am afraid you were betrayed into on the very day when you would be expected to be restrained and helpful, even though you did not believe in the programme or even the procedure.

Yours sincerely,

S. SATYAMURTI

From a copy: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32579/39

189. LETTER TO SHUAIB QURESHE

AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

January 3, 1930

MY DEAR SHUAIB,

I was grieved that you did not have the chat to which I had looked forward in Lahore. You must now go even out of your way, if necessary, and come to Sabarmati and have at least a day there. I was delighted at the news Mohd. Ali gave me.

Yours sincerely,

From a copy: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32579/40

190. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

DELHI,

January 3, 1930

CHI. MATHURADAS,

I have your letter. The situation is such that Jamnalalji cannot go there for the present. But if at least ten acres of land\(^1\) with water on it was available near Almora things could be managed. I hope all of you are well.

What could I write about Lahore? I am dictating this at Delhi.

Blessings from

BAPU

SHRI MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI
TARA HOUSE
ALMORA, U. P.

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

\(^{1}\) For Gandhi Seva Sangh
191. YOUNG JUDGE

A young judge has put me the following question:1

This question refers to the time when Gujarat was ravaged by floods and a large number of young men and other volunteers were working hard under Sardar Vallabhbhai’s guidance. That a man reaps as he sows is an immutable principle which admits of no exception. The above extract is an example of how the principle can be misinterpreted. Many persons think in this way, and the question deserves consideration because I know that the correspondent has not advanced his plea merely for argument’s sake. The maxim “Reap as you sow” is true for all times. Holy books in Sanskrit state the same thing, and so does the Bible. Nowhere does the maxim imply that we are to inflict on the doer what his deed deserves. The present correspondent, however, has put such a construction on the original sentence, and that has led to a terrible misunderstanding of its meaning. When we say ‘man reaps as he sows’, we mean that God will bestow on him his due and not that any of us might sit in God’s place and mete out justice to the doer according as he thinks of the latter’s deed. If we had the right to judge a man’s deed and reward or punish him as the case may demand, there would be nothing left for anyone to do for anyone else. In that case, the idea of service would lose all meaning. If that idea should disappear, the world would perish. But the fact is that the world has not perished. Countless men have been rendering service to one another, correcting one another’s mistakes and even forgiving one another. From this we see that the meaning of the great maxim in question is not what the correspondent conceives it to be, but it is what I have suggested above.

We do not fully know how to judge a man’s action. With limited experience, we can only draw an inference about a given action. Each one of us often draws a different inference. The seven blind men in the fable came each to his own conclusion according to the elephant’s limb that he could feel. Thus, though each was true in respect of his own experience of the elephant, all the seven remained ignorant and none could form a correct idea of the elephant. Similarly, the justice we mete out is the justice of the blind and is therefore imperfect. Hence, it is our religious duty always to hunger after service and find fulfilment in only serving one another. To reward or punish is God’s exclusive right, for He sees the past, the present and the future. There certainly exists some sentient Power that pervades this world, to whose tunes we dance, no matter whether we call the Power God, or Lord, or describe him as a principle, or whether or not we apply any epithet to it. That Power alone rewards or punishes us as our actions might deserve. In any case, we are not the Power; and so, instead of saying ‘Let us give a man what he deserves’, we say ‘A man gets what he deserves.’ It was from the realization of man’s imperfection that there arose the family of virtues, such as service, generosity, love, forgiveness and non-violence. We do not, therefore, know whether the calamity suffered by Gujarat was the result of people’s sin or goodness in this life or another. But certainly, those who participated in the alleviation of the suffering have done their duty and found self-fulfilment to the extent they did so. If they had put a wrong construction on the law of karma and kept to their homes with hands folded, they should have shown themselves ignorant of duty.

---

1 This is not translated here. The correspondent had objected to relief work in Gujarat.

I hope the correspondent will now see that his statement was not merely one-sided, but was entirely mistaken, and will take care not to commit such a mistake again.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 5-1-1930
192. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

January 6, 1930

CHI. RAMDAS.

We arrived here on Saturday night\(^1\) without any mishap during the journey. Write and tell me how you are keeping. Is Lakshmidasbhai’s dietetic experiment still going on? How is Jivandas? Has he returned? If not, where is he? Ba will leave tomorrow for Vijapur. Nimu is there, and so is Manu, as also Kashi. She is therefore keen to go there. Manilal has gone to Akola. He will return with Sushila in a few days.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

193. LETTER TO HARIBHAU UPADHYAYA

January 7, 1930

BHAISHRI HARIBHAU.

\(^{2}\) and \(^{3}\) had a long talk with me and said all that they wished to say. There is little worth in . . . I did not form a good opinion about . . . About . . ., I formed a better opinion. . . . admitted that they had become, and remained, fairly enslaved by physical attraction for each other. That is their condition even now. . . . says that they felt attracted while helping each other with innocent motives. . . . kept silent on this subject. She agreed to let herself be medically examined. But I doubt very much if, when produced before a doctor, she would not run away from him. . . . says that they did not go as far as the ultimate act, being held back by shame at the thought of their guilt becoming known to you and me. I met . . .’s father. I infer from my talk with him that he may not be aware of this illicit relationship. I did not, however, think it necessary to ask him about it and make sure. I was not much impressed by him. I see from one of your articles that you believe it as proved that he is not . . .’s father. In the second article, I see that you have changed your opinion. . . . says that he is

\(^1\) On January 4, 1930, after attending the annual session of the Indian National Congress at Lahore
\(^2\) The names have been omitted.
\(^3\) ibid
her father. I have given my decision below after considering all the facts.

1. . . . should go and live as . . . ’s wife.

2. If she does not wish to do that and if she can keep herself pure, she may observe brahmacharya.

3. If she cannot overcome the desire for sex-gratification, she may marry some other young man.

4. Her relation with . . . ought to have been kept pure till they were married. Though both of them have claimed that their relation has remained pure, I do not believe that it is moral. If, however, the two cannot control their desire for gratification, they may openly have relations with each other. But they will not have my blessings or my consent if they adopt this course. Nor can they remain in any institution with which I am closely connected. I am afraid . . . will not be able to live without . . . I believe that she gets hysteria because of her craving for sex-gratification. . . . ’s touch being impure, it increases her hysteria.

You may now act as you think best.

I have not revised this after dictating.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 6069. Courtesy: Haribhau Upadhyaya

194. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 8, 1930

CHI. VASUMATI,

I have a letter from you after many days. Even though I am in the Congress, I can sleep over not only postcards but even letters from my sons and daughters. What is your weight? How is your health? If you are not regular in writing your diary, try to be so and also describe in it your thoughts and feelings. One who does not conceal one’s good or bad thoughts from oneself deserves compliments. One who conceals them certainly violates the vow of non-stealing. If you do not understand this idea, ask Vinoba to explain it. Tell Kamala to write to me. She, too, should write a diary. My health is fine. I have worked hard and even feel fatigued, but my health has not suffered.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9273
195. LETTER TO NAUTAMLAL BHAGWANJI

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 8, 1930

BHAISHRI NAUTAM,

Doctor¹ arrived here last evening. Immediately on arrival, he told me that he wished to have Chi. Maganlal’s² marriage, like Ratilal’s,³ celebrated in the Ashram, and that I should write to you for that purpose. Women everywhere look forward to a wedding and wish to enjoy the occasion in various ways. If, however, you have regard for Doctor’s wishes, entreat the women on my behalf and win them over. I am sure you will agree with me that, if rich parents have a truly religious ceremony for the marriage of their sons and daughters, they serve the good of the community and provide an example to the poor. I, therefore, hope that you will obtain the consent of the women and let the marriage be celebrated here. Probably you know that there is no music and dancing and no feasts on the occasion of a wedding in the Ashram. The celebration consists entirely of the religious ceremony and the dresses of the bride and the bridegroom are all of khadi.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS GANDHI

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2583

196. LETTER TO ANANTRAI PATTANI

SABARMATI,
January 8, 1930

TO PATTANI SAHEB,

I had got the letter of recommendation you sent with the two Japanese gentlemen. But I am writing this letter to make you a request. You will no doubt have been pained by the resolutions passed at Lahore.⁴ But when did I ever shrink from causing pain to friends? If I please friends like you by suppressing my conscience I may earn

¹ Pranjivandas Mehta
² Pranjivandas Mehta’s sons
³ Ibid
⁴ Vide “Speech at Congress Session, Lahore-I & II”, 31-12-1929.
their congratulations for a while, but ultimately they will have to leave me. Would it not be better to inflict momentary pain and preserve real friendship? I assure you that neither the main resolution\textsuperscript{1} nor any other resolution was passed to please the public. I drafted the resolution only according to my understanding of the good of the people.\textsuperscript{2} I therefore wish you not to be pained by my action.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32579/42

197. LETTER TO KASTURBA GANDHI

\begin{center}
Sabarmati,
January 8, 1930
\end{center}

BA,

I am sending herewith a letter from Ramdas. If I sat down to write myself, I would have to stop the spinning for that time. That would be so much loss to the country. Is it not better that I dictate this letter?

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32579/43

198. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

\begin{center}
Ashram Sabarmati,
January 8, 1930
\end{center}

CHI. Ramdas,\textsuperscript{3}

I got your letter. I am sending it on to Ba. I am writing to her to keep herself ready to let Nimu leave whenever you desire her to be with you. For myself, I do approve of your wish. I quite understand Nimu’s desire. I should like that from their very childhood, Sumitra, Savitri, Rumbha and Bachu should grow up with you and according to your manner of living and, therefore, I am wholly with you in the suggestion you have made. Ba is simple-hearted and will immediately agree. Keshu\textsuperscript{4} being ill, has been sent away to Devdas in Calcutta. He is better now. Santok and Radha, too, had left this place without consulting me. If I had known of their intention to leave, I would have asked Devdas not to go.

Dr. Mehta arrived last night with Manekbai. He will be here for \textsuperscript{1} About complete independence

\textsuperscript{2} Vide “Draft Resolutions for A.I.C.C., Lahore”, 26-12-1929.
\textsuperscript{3} The letter is in Mahadev Desai’s handwriting.
\textsuperscript{4} Keshav, Maganlal Gandhi’s son four or five days. And I myself having arrived, the place is beginning to get crowded. You did well to send the invitations. I am keeping perfectly well. A diet of milk, curds, and fruits is suiting me very well.
That you are keeping well these days is good news to me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru
Memorial Museum and Library

199. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

ASHRAM, SABARAMATI,
January 8, 1930

CHI. PRABHUDAS,

How did you manage to fall ill? You must have of course known that I was opposed to your going to Lahore. You should for the present avoid going after new adventures and even resist the temptation of seeing new places. Your duty is to be content with what you can think and do without moving about and to live according to a fixed schedule. When Devdas arrives there and relieves you, you may certainly go to Vijapur.

Blessings from
BAPU

SHRI PRABHUDAS GANDHI
JAMIA MILIA
KAROL BAGH
DELHI

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33006

200. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 8, 1930

CHI. BRIJKRISHNA,

I have your letter. I was expecting to see you even today. Prabhudas must be all right by now. I hope you continue writing your daily diary. It must not be interrupted now. Fix the date of departure for Wardha and let me know it. Are you keeping up carding?

1 The subscription is by Gandhiji.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2371

201. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

[About January 8, 1930]¹

CHI. PRABHUDAS,²

I read your letter to Chi. Jamnadas. I did not like it. You cannot be considered fit for a pilgrimage to Badrinarayan. Though I have sent Shantilal to be your companion, it does not mean that he should spend his time in sight-seeing. A man who loves work, will engage himself in some work anyhow. It would be proper for him to help in the weaving work or some other similar work. If you also wish to take up some responsible work, I should like you not to think of going to Badrinath, etc. It would be another matter if you thought of the pilgrimage when a suitable occasion arose, provided that your health was good enough and provided also that your work there had been properly set going. Or, again, there would be no harm in going to Badrinath if you had stayed on there purely for the sake of your health and had taken up no responsible work. Moreover, I am not at all certain that a trip to Badrinath will not harm your health. It would be better to be content with the improvement in your health which has already taken place. I am of opinion that, for the present, you should hold back your desire for sight-seeing. If Jamnadas can go and does go, let him go by himself. But I wish that none of us should forget that we wish to compete with the beggars of India.

Blessings from
BAPU³

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33010

¹ From Gandhiji’s advice to the addressee to withhold his “desire for sight-seeing”, it appears that this letter was written about the same time as the preceding one.
² The letter is in Mahadev Desai’s handwriting.
³ The subscription is by Gandhiji.
202. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

[Before January 9, 1930]

BHAI GHANSHYAMDAJSI,

I did not answer your last telegram. What instructions can I give from this distance? There can be nothing lacking in your attention. I am aware that Keshu needs some comforting. To that end I am sending Devdas. I have little faith in medicines. But I do not interfere in the treatment of those away from me. Hence there was no need for any instructions in response to your telegram. My treatment is quite well known—fasting or fruit juice, sun-baths, sleeping at night in a well-ventilated room and enema in case of constipation. Many patients like Keshu have been cured by this treatment. But I do not wish to practise my theories from a distance. You can do whatever you like. Medicines should not be suggested to Keshav unless he asks for them. I hope Keshav will be out of all danger by the time this reaches you.

Yours,

MOHANDAS

From Hindi: C.W. 6179. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

203. STATEMENT TO “THE NEW YORK WORLD”

[Before January 9, 1930]

The world should realize that as Congressional representatives, Pandit Motilal Nehru, leader of the Nationalists in the Legislative Assembly, and I could only treat the Viceregal pronouncement about Dominion Status in India as a response to the Calcutta Congress resolution of 1928. We were bound, therefore, in pursuance of that resolution to press for a clear declaration that the proposed Round Table Conference would consider only ways and means of framing a scheme for a Dominion Status constitution and no other. This the Viceroy, Lord Irwin, could not do. While, therefore, we appreciated his good efforts and his difficulties, we had no course left open but to decline to have Congress represented at the proposed Conference.

1 From the contents it appears this letter was written before the one to the addressee dated January 9, 1930; vide “Letter to G. D. Birla”, 9-1-1930.
2 Maganlal Gandhi’s son, Keshav
3 The statement was published in The New York World, 9-1-1930.
4 Vide “Speech on Resolution on Nehru Report, Calcutta Congress”, 28-12-1928.
Conference, so far as Congress was concerned, having miscarried, the independence resolution need frighten nobody. I had repeatedly declared that for me, as for all other Congressmen, Dominion Status could mean only virtual independence; that is partnership at will for mutual benefit and to be dissolved at the instance of either partner. It only clears the issue, especially after Secretary of State for India, Wedgwood Benn’s unfortunate statement that India already had a Dominion Status in action.

The real cause for satisfaction to lovers of peace consists in the fact that through the full debate Congress supported methods of non-violence and truth, to the exclusion of other methods. Civil disobedience is a dynamic expression of non-violence. It is undoubtedly fraught with great danger and difficulties, but infinitely less so than the present danger of unbridled but secret violence breaking out in many parts of India, owing to understandable and pardonable impatience on the part of many youths. Responsibility for initiating civil disobedience rests on me and I am not likely rashly to embark upon it. At the same time I must confess that I shall not hesitate to run a certain minimum of risk which is inevitable in any struggle for freedom. The risk for prolonging the present agony caused by the realized slavery here is any day much greater than I am ever likely to run.

The boycott of legislatures is also part of the programme for enforcing the national demand. This was a natural corollary to the independence resolution, and I am glad to say it is finding an adequate response from Congressmen. A constructive programme such as removal of untouchability, communal union, liquor prohibition, and the boycott of foreign cloth remains. These have tremendous social and economic value and also bear great political consequences. The Nehru constitution, with its tentative communal solution, naturally lapses.

Congress, therefore, will concentrate on solving the communal question, not on differential lines, but on strictly national lines. There was also a resolution on financial obligations. It need not disturb any foreigner who has a legitimate interest in India. It should be remembered that there are always, under any foreign Government, obligations incurred and concessions granted that are in no way in the interest of the country concerned, and are indeed often hostile to it. These can never be acknowledged by successors who are free to examine every such obligation and concession. Congress has offered

1 Vide “Speech at Congress Session, Lahore- II”, 31-12-1929.
2 Vide “Speech at Subjects Committee, A.I.C.C.-II”, 1-1-1930.
investigation of these by an independent tribunal. Lastly, the door against a conference purposely convened to satisfy national aspirations, that is, to frame a scheme of independence has been left open.

The Hindu, 25-3-1930

204. NOTES

THE LATE MAZHAR-UL-HAQ

Mazhar-ul-Haq was a great patriot, a good Mussalman and a philosopher. Fond of ease and luxury, when Non-co-operation came he threw them off as we throw superfluous scales off the skin. He grew as fond of the ascetic life as he was of princely life. Growing weary of our dissentions, he lived in retirement, doing such unseen services as he could, and praying for the best. He was fearless both in speech and action. The Sadakat Ashram near Patna is a fruit of his constructive labours. Though he did not live in it for long as he had intended, his conception of the Ashram made it possible for the Bihar Vidyapith to find a permanent habitation. It may yet prove a cement to bind the two communities together. Such a man would be missed at all times; he will be the more missed at this juncture in the history of the country. I tender my condolences to Begum Mazhar-ul-Haq and her family.

PROHIBITION CAMPAIGN

At the Temperance Conference in Lahore one of the resolutions adopted was as follows:¹

It is a matter for sorrow that in a country like India, where drink is almost universally admitted to be a vice, there are respectable newspapers enough to be found to take advertisements for the sake of spirituous liquor whilst their editorial columns favour total prohibition. I hope that the resolution of the Conference will move the newspapers concerned to stop taking the offending advertisements. There may be the question of contracts made with advertisers. Since the proprietors of the newspapers concerned have wronged the nation in taking the advertisements, it is not too much to expect them to part with a portion of the ill-gotten profits in paying for such damages as may be necessary for ending contracts before their times.

Young India, 9-1-1930

¹ The resolution is not reproduced here. It demanded immediate ban on the display of liquor advertisements in public places and newspapers.
Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru more than justified the choice of the people. His address brief and to the point was bold, extreme in conception but moderate in expression. It bore evidence of a man capable of viewing things with complete detachment. A confirmed socialist, he wants for his country only what the country can manage. He is a practical statesman tempering his ideals to suit his surroundings: But for himself he is an idealist who would ever strive to live up to his ideals.

As in his address, so in the chair. He was strong, yet accommodating. His wit came to his rescue on many an awkward occasion. He never hesitated when action was required. His tireless energy and entire self-forgetfulness, his natural simplicity and affability captivated everyone. No Government that is at all anxious to do what is right can have any reason to fear Jawaharlal Nehru. A wicked Government would soon feel the strength of a stalwart who counts no price too dear to pay for ridding the country of wicked rule.

The youth of the country has every reason to be proud of their representative, the nation may well rejoice to find in Jawaharlal Nehru such a noble and worthy son. May God’s blessings descend upon him and may the nation reach her destination during Jawaharlal’s year of service.

The resolutions\(^1\) of the Congress strictly followed the trend of the Presidential address. Let us first consider the central resolution\(^2\). In strict accordance with the Calcutta resolution\(^3\) and owing to a combination of circumstances undesigned by anybody, Dominion Status gave place at the stroke of midnight 31st December 1929 to complete independence as the immediate objective of the Congress. Swaraj in article 1 of the Congress constitution is now to mean complete independence. It is as well. Apart from the Calcutta resolution, Mr. Benn’s statement that India already had

\(^{1}\) Vide “Draft Resolutions for A.I.C.C., Lahore”, 26-12-1929.
\(^{2}\) Vide “Speech at Congress Session, Lahore- II”, 31-12-1929.
\(^{3}\) Vide “Speech on Resolution on Nehru Report, Calcutta Congress-II”, 28-12-1928.
Dominion Status in action made that phrase impossible of acceptance to convey the nation’s meaning. If representation, at important functions, of India through representatives chosen by the British Government, means Dominion Status in action, Heaven help India. The Congress means something totally different from it. For the Congress, Dominion Status meant complete independence plus voluntary partnership with Britain as it might be with any other nation for mutual good. Lastly it has been of late loudly whispered that independence was illegal, and a resolution replacing Dominion Status with independence would mean the death of the Congress. This threat made it a sacred obligation for the Congress to incorporate complete independence in the Congress creed. The Congress would not be worthy to represent the nation if, for fear of consequences, it hesitated to enunciate the nation’s birthright. If swaraj was a doubtful word, it becomes unequivocal by becoming purna swaraj.

‘PEACEFUL AND LEGITIMATE’

But the Congress rejected by an overwhelming majority any change in the description of the means. They still remain ‘peaceful and legitimate’. There were members in the Subjects Committee who suggested that independence would not be vindicated by non-violent and truthful means. Violence there undoubtedly was in the air. But I feel that those who flock to the Congress session year by year have a living faith in non-violence as the only possible means for India at least to regain her lost freedom. Non-violence and truth are the vital need for India if the stupor of the millions is to be removed, if the warring communities are to be welded into one. A foreign power must be a necessary factor for any community that will coerce any other or the others into submission to its will. But the Congress must perforce remain non-violent if it will represent, as it claims to represent, all communities. Whether therefore it takes a year or ages to reach political independence, non-violence and truth are in my opinion the shortest way to it. Complete independence of the Congress is no menace to a single legitimate foreign interest or the presence of a single Englishman who will live as a friend willing to submit to the rules applicable to the whole of independent India.

This is clear from the condemnation of the bomb resolution and the clause in the central resolution appreciating the efforts of the Viceroy to arrive at a peaceful solution of the national problem. Both the bomb resolution and the clause were hotly contested, but the Congress accepted both, the one by a substantial majority ascertained after a division and the second by an overwhelming majority. I am sure that by passing the resolution and the clause the nation has conformed to its creed, and risen in the estimation of the world, as it would have denied its creed and lost in the world's estimation if it had refused to condemn the bomb outrage and perform the common courtesy of recognizing the good even in a representative of a rule which we seek to destroy.

BOYCOTT OF LEGISLATURES

To the constructive programme the Congress has added boycott of legislatures. This was in my opinion inevitable. Those who would have independence have to work outside the legislatures and among the people. That no single seat will remain vacant because of Congressmen withdrawing from the legislatures is no reason for opposing the boycott. Let those who believe in the legislatures by all means go there. It is enough that Congressmen employ themselves otherwise and cease to give those bodies any prestige through their presence there. For me the decisive opinion of Pandit Motilalji in favour of boycott was enough to incorporate it in the resolution.

The programme would have been undoubtedly strengthened if law-courts and Government schools were also boycotted. But the atmosphere was absent. The Congress is not an organization to enunciate theories, but to anticipate national wants and wishes, and forge practical sanctions for their fulfilment.

Local bodies stand on a different footing. They were included in the original draft. But as opinion was sharply divided, I did not press for their retention in the boycott clause. Let no one however run away with the idea that it is now any Congressman's duty to seek election to or capture these institutions. On the contrary it is the duty of every Congressman to retire from or avoid them, if they take away best workers' attention from better work or if they mean continuous wrangling, dissensions or worse. They are at liberty to remain in them or seek election thereto when they are convinced that by their presence there, they can promote not merely some legitimate interest but national independence.

CIVIL DISOBEIDENCE

The greatest and the most effective sanction however is civil disobedience including non-payment of taxes. Whilst the task of choosing the time and the method of it has been nominally and properly left to the All-India Congress Committee to decide, I know that it is a duty primarily devolving upon me. I must confess that I donot see the atmosphere for it today. I want to discover a formula whereby sufficient provision can be made for avoiding suspension by reason of Chauri Chaura. A time must come when there my be a fight to the finish with one’s back to the wall. With the present temper of many Congressmen, with our internal dissensions, with the communal tension, it is difficult to discover an effective and innocent formula. It may be impossible to offer civil disobedience at this stage in the name of the Congress, and it may be necessary to offer individual civil disobedience without the Congress imprimatur and apart from it. But just now every thing is in the embryonic state. I can only give the impatient patriot the assurance, that I am concentrating all my powers on discovering a workable formula. He can help me materially by assisting to promote a non-violent atmosphere and to push forward the constructive programme. I know that many have refused to see any connection between the constructive programme and civil disobedience. But for one who believes in non-violence it does not need hard thinking to realize the essential connection between the constructive programme and civil disobedience for swaraj. I want the reader to mark the qualification. Constructive programme is not essential for local civil disobedience for specific relief as in the case of Bardoli. Tangible common grievance restricted to a particular locality is enough. But for such an indefinable thing as swaraj people must have previous training in doing things of all-India interest. Such work must throw together the people and their leaders whom they would trust implicitly. Trust begotten in the pursuit of continuous constructive work becomes a tremendous asset at the critical moment. Constructive work therefore is for a non-violent army what drilling, etc., is for an army designed for bloody warfare. Individual civil disobedience among an unprepared people and by leaders not known to or trusted by them is of no avail, and mass civil disobedience is an impossibility. The more therefore the progress of the constructive programme, the greater is there the chance for civil disobedience. Granted a perfectly non-violent atmosphere and a fulfilled constructive programme, I would undertake to lead a mass civil disobedience struggle to a successful issue in the space of a few months.

‘IN THE EXISTING CIRCUMSTANCES’

Whilst thus the central resolution lays down the country’s objective and the methods for its attainment in no uncertain terms, it does not rule out the idea of a conference in every circumstance. It merely and most properly says, that ‘in the existing circumstances’ no good purpose can be served by the Congress being represented at the proposed Conference. What are then the conceivable circumstances in which the Congress may be represented at such a conference? I can mention at least one such circumstance. If the British Government invites the Congress to a conference, that is to discuss and frame not any scheme but a scheme definitely of independence Government, and fulfils the other conditions suitable for such a conference, I take it that the Congress leaders will gladly respond. Indeed a conference there must be at some stage or other. It can take place as the proposed Conference was expected to take place out of Britain’s good grace our land pressure of world opinion, or out of pressure from us as we hope it will be if we develop sufficient strength. Whether such a time is to be far or near depends upon how we utilize or waste this year of grace.

OUR FINANCIAL OBLIGATIONS

Next in importance and almost part of the central resolution must be deemed the one dealing with our financial obligations. Everyone who knows anything of public finance knows how extravagant this Government is and how heavy is the load of debts that is crushing the nation. Everyone knows also what concessions have been given to foreigners in utter disregard of the national interest. These cannot demand, dare not expect recognition from independent India under the much abused name of vested interests. All vested interests are not entitled to protection. The keeper of a gambling den or of a brothel has no vested interest. Nor has a corporation that gambles away the fortunes of a nation and reduces it to impotence. The Congress at Gaya therefore passed a comprehensive resolution repudiating certain debts. The last, whilst reaffirming the Gaya resolution, laid down that obligations or concessions pronounced to be unjust and unjustifiable by an independent tribunal shall not be recognized by the independence Government to come. No exception can, in my opinion, be possibly taken against such a reasonable proposition. To shirk the issue is to invite disaster.

COMMUNAL QUESTION

Equally important is the communal resolution. Though it was adopted for the sake of the Sikhs, it was necessary other wise too to enunciate the principles underlying it. Independent India cannot afford to have communal representation, and yet it must placate all communities if the rule of independence is not based on coercion of minorities. But the Congress has now to cultivate a spirit of common nationality and refuse to resort to camouflage or expediency in a matter so vital as the communal question. In the Congress we must

---

1 Vide “Speech at Subjects Committee, A.I.C.C.-II”, 1-1-1930.
2 In 1922
3 Vide “Speech at Subjects Committee, A.I.C.C.-III”, 1-1-1930.
cease to be exclusive Hindus or Mussalmans or Sikhs, Parsis, Christians, Jews. Whilst we may staunchly adhere to our respective faiths, we must be in the Congress Indians first and Indians last. A good Hindu or a good Mussalman should be a better Hindu or a better Mussalman for being a lover of his country. There never can be any conflict between the real interest of one’s country and that of one’s religion. Where there appears to be any, there is something wrong with one’s religion, i.e., one’s morals. True religion means good thought and good conduct. True patriotism also means good thought and good conduct. To set up a comparison between two synonymous things is wrong. But if the Congress is ever forced to consider a solution based on communalism, the resolution binds it to reject any that does not satisfy the parties concerned. In order however that the Congress may never be faced with a situation demanding a communal solution, it should now be joined in large numbers by Mussalmans, Sikhs and others who will have India as one indivisible nation. I for one would welcome the Congress passing into Mussalman, Sikh, Parsi, Christian, Jewish hands rather than that it should be in any sense a sectional organization. Anyone who has the spirit of service in him can capture the Congress. It has the most democratic franchise. Its doors are ever open to those who would serve. Let all join it and make it a mighty instrument for gaining complete independence for the poorest, the weakest and the most downtrodden. I must defer the consideration of other resolutions and the other matters relating to this remarkable Congress to a future issue\(^1\), if not the next.

Young India, 9-1-1930

206. MR. PENNINGTON THE EVERGREEN

My remarks on the Congress\(^2\) are a fitting answer to this letter\(^3\). We must be the judges of our own wants, not Englishmen, however well-intentioned they may be.

Young India, 9-1-1930

---

2. Vide the preceding item.
3. Not reproduced here. Referring to Gandhiji’s article “Honest Differences”, pp. 192-5, Pennington had written that the evils of British rule had been exaggerated and immediate independence for India was an impossibility.
207. JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

Jawaharlal Nehru has proved to be a jewel of India. In his address lofty thoughts are couched in sweet and courteous language. Several topics have been dealt with thoroughly and yet the address is short. The splendour of the soul shines in every sentence. The apprehension that lurked in many hearts disappeared after the oration. As was the address, so was his deportment. During the Congress session he did all his work independently and impartially. And since he worked incessantly and strenuously everything was completed on time and without any hitch.

If under the Presidentship of such a brave and righteous young man we can achieve nothing it will greatly surprise me. But if the ranks are unworthy, what can the brave captain do? Therefore, we should do some introspection. Are we fit to be under the leadership of Jawaharlal Nehru? If we are, then the outcome must be propitious. Liberty cannot be secured merely by proclaiming it. An atmosphere of liberty must be created within us. Liberty is one thing, and licence another. Many a time we confuse licence for liberty and lose the latter. Licence leads one to selfishness whereas liberty guides one to supreme good. Licence destroys society, liberty gives it life. In licence propriety is sacrificed; in liberty it is fully cherished. Under slavery we practise several virtues out of fear; when liberated we practise them of our own free will. A slave will not steal out of fear, will not quarrel with anyone, will not lie and will appear honest. He will be protected from dacoits and others by his master. A slave does not exercise his free will in whatever he does. A free man’s thoughts and actions are identical. Whether for good or for evil he acts of his own free will. Therefore, a free man reaps the full benefits of his good actions, and when this happens society progresses from day to day. A free man will not fail in his duty of protecting others.

Therefore, if we have understood true freedom, we will shed communal fear. Hindus and Muslims will cease to fear one another. If both could shed fear at the same time all the better; but a free spirit should not expect the help of others to cast off fear. If the other side violates justice, even then he would not seek the help of a third party. He will depend only on his own strength, and if he loses, he will try to augment his own strength. To die fighting is itself victory, it is one’s duty. To run away from the fight is slavery and humiliation. Real freedom is impossible without the spirit of a true Kshatriya. Therefore, the unique quality of a Kshatriya is considered to be his determination never to shrink from a battle. For this reason we too, in everything we do, must never run away from the battlefield.

1 Literally, ‘jawahar’ means jewel

[From Hindi]

Hindi Navajivan, 9-1-1930

208. LETTER TO KHALIQUZZAMAN

Sabarmati,
January 9, 1930

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter.

Even before the Independence resolution1 Congress chairmen of local boards have refused to give addresses. I am quite clear that you should not present the address and therefore should resign the chairmanship.

KHALIQUZZAMAN

LUCKNOW

From a copy: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32579/45

209. LETTER TO BEHRAMJI KHAMBHATTA

Ashram, Sabarmati,
January 9, 1930

BHAISHRI KHAMBHATTA,

I received your cheque for Rs. 345. The sum will be used as desired by you. I hope both of you keep good health.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7543

---

1 The resolution on complete independence called upon the Congress members of Central and Provincial legislatures and Government Committees to resign their seats; vide “Speech at Congress Session, Lahore- II”, 31-12-1929.
210. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 9, 1930

BHAISHRI GHANSHYAMDASJI,

Your letter has arrived. Devdas writes that Keshu is receiving loving attention from you all. So writes Radhabehn too. What more can I say in this matter? The treatment too conforms more or less to what I would have wished. Enough; it would be discourteous to write anything further on this subject. I am free from all anxiety.

The Lahore resolutions are very much to my liking. And my opinion is further strengthened by the current happenings. Go through what I have written in Young India1 and offer whatever comments you think fit. You have every right to express your views and offer advice.

Yours,

MOHANDAS

From Hindi: C.W. 6180. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

211. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

January 10, 1930

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

Here is my draft resolution or declaration2 for 26th instant. I have nothing as yet from anybody. But I thought I would not now wait till the last moment. You will cut it up or extend and amend it as you like. The shorter the sweeter.

Ever since we have separated at Lahore, I have been evolving schemes of civil disobedience. I have not seen my way clear as yet. But I have come so far that, in the present state of the Congress, no civil disobedience can be or should be offered in its name and that it should be offered by me alone or jointly with a few companions even as I did in South Africa if you have studied the History of Satyagraha. If you have not, you should. If I do finally see my way clear, I shall think out what part the Congress can play in that event. All this, however, I have no time to discuss through correspondence. If I make further progress, I shall let you know. If you have any remarks to offer, please let me know. In any case prepare yourself to come here a day or two earlier than the Working Committee meeting day. Of course you can come earlier still \ldots \) before 26th inst. if necessary.

2 Vide the following item.

I hope father is going to Bengal on the appointed day.

I am most anxious to come to grips during your year of office, but that strictly according to my lights. Please therefore feel free to criticize whatever I say or suggest. I want to do nothing that would cross your purpose or thwart your plans, if you have conceived any independently. The more I think, the more convinced I feel that it was a happy thing for the country that I did not become President. I would have felt hampered in maturing plans in complete detachment. As it is, I cannot conceive a more favourable opportunity for me for making my experiment than when you are the helmsman of the Congress.

Yours,

BAPU

[PS.] Since writing this, I have your letter. In view of what I have said above, I must not go out. The one who may travel through a few places with effect is father. The weight that he can carry in the matter of the councils boycott is not to be rivalled by anybody. Can he go?

After reading your notes, I did think it necessary to alter my draft.

BAPU

A.I.C.C. File No. 16-A, 1930. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

---

1 Illegible
2 Which read: “\ldots I shall expect your statement and resolution for the 26th in a few days. Could you also add some directions for the observance of the day? \ldots I enclose a letter from Rajagopalachari. I think there is something in what he says. There are so many statements and counter-statements in the Press that the issues are likely to be clouded. Personally I dislike touring on a big scale but if you think I should rush about I shall do so. Rajagopalachari’s idea that we may get some of the non-Congress members out of the legislatures seems to me to be amazingly optimistic. \ldots But even apart from the council boycott it seems desirable to make the country feel that we are in earnest. If we remain quiet for some weeks it may have a bad effect. \ldots” (S.N. 16335)
3 On exploitation of India by England (S.N. 16335)
212. DRAFT DECLARATION FOR JANUARY 26

[January 10, 1930]

We believe that it is the inalienable right of the Indian people, as of any other people, to have freedom and to enjoy the fruits of their toil and have the necessities of life, so that they may have full opportunities of growth. We believe also that if any government deprives a people of these rights and oppresses them, the people have a further right to alter it or to abolish it. The British Government in India has not only deprived the Indian people of their freedom but has based itself on the exploitation of the masses, and has ruined India economically, politically, culturally and spiritually. We believe therefore that India must sever the British connection and attain purna swaraj or complete independence.

India has been ruined economically. The revenue derived from our people is out of all proportion to our income. Our average income is seven pice (less than 2 pence) per day. The taxes we pay are 2.5 pies per day and of these the land revenue derived from the peasantry is 20% and the salt tax, which falls heaviest on the poor, is 3% of the total.

Village industries, such as hand-spinning, have been destroyed, leaving the peasantry idle for at least four months in the year, and dulling their intellect for want of handicrafts, and nothing has been substituted, as in other countries, for the crafts thus destroyed.

Customs and currency have been so manipulated as to heap further burdens on the peasantry. British manufactured goods constitute the bulk of our imports and customs revenue from these, which ought to have been used to lessen the burden of taxation on the masses, is 44 times lighter in India than it is in Russia and 44\footnote{For the final declaration, \textit{vide} “Things to Remember for 26th”, 23-1-1930.} times and 24\footnote{\textit{Vide} the preceding item.} times, respectively, less heavy than it is in the United States of America and Germany. The arbitrary manipulation of the exchange ratio has resulted in millions being drained away from the country.

Politically, India’s status has never been so reduced as under the British regime. All administrative talent is killed and the masses have

\footnote{\textit{Vide} “Telegram to Jawaharlal Nehru”, 16-1-1930.}
\footnote{\textit{ibid} \textit{ibid}.

\textit{All the figures quoted in this paragraph relate to the year 1904. For the changes made by Gandhiji, \textit{vide} “Telegram to Jawaharlal Nehru”, 17-1-1930.} to be satisfied with petty village offices and clerkships. The tallest of us have to bend before foreign authority. No reform has given real political power to the people.

Culturally, the system of education has torn us from our moorings and our training has made us hug the very chains that bind us.

Spiritually, compulsory disarmament has made us unmanly and the presence of an alien army of occupation, employed with deadly effect to crush in us the spirit of resistance, has made us think that we cannot look after ourselves or put up a defence against foreign aggression, or even defend our homes and families from the attacks of thieves, robbers and miscreants.

We hold it to be a crime against men and God to submit any longer to a rule that has caused this fourfold disaster to our country.
We recognize, however, that the most effective way of gaining our freedom is not through violence. We will therefore prepare ourselves by withdrawing, so far as we can, all voluntary association from the British Government, and will prepare for civil disobedience, including non-payment of taxes. We are convinced that if we can but withdraw our voluntary help and stop payment of taxes without doing violence, even under provocation, the end of this inhuman rule is assured. We therefore hereby solemnly resolve to carry out the Congress instructions, issued from time to time for the purpose of establishing purna swaraj.

A.I.C.C. File No. 16-A, 1930. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

---

213. LETTER TO DR. SYED MAHMUD

SABARMATI,

January 10, 1930

DEAR DR. MAHMUD,

I have your touching letter. This death\(^1\) at this time in our history is a blow indeed. I hope my wire was received by Begum Saheba. Tell her please that she must not grieve. We must all bravely bear an event which is the common destiny of all life.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 5074

---

\(^1\) Of Mazhar-ul-Haq; vide “Notes”, 9-1-1930.
214. A LETTER

SABARMATI,
January 10, 1930

DEAR FRIEND,

I have a letter from Abbas Saheb. I do feel that if you can possibly avoid attending the Governor’s function, you should do so.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a microfilm: MMU/XXII/66

215. LETTER TO SUBHAS CHANDRA BOSE

SABARMATI,
January 11, 1930

DEAR SUBHAS,

I like your letter though it does not satisfy me. I wrote¹ and did as I felt. I cannot tax my memory as to . . . ² now about the details. The exhibition I remember vividly. But there of course our ideals differed. I do not believe in the showy part in connection with what is intended to be a pure education for the masses. But I should have a battle royal with you on these things if you had leisure. I assure you I have no partiality for khadi workers. They naturally engage my attention because they have so much in common with me. I would love to have the same contact with you. But I cannot have that privilege as our methods and outlook on life seem to differ. I do not mind these differences, what I mind is bitterness. But do let me have your second letter. I am anxious to come nearer to you.

I should be sorry to think or to discover that I do not know young Bengal which I love and adore.

Yours,

From a copy: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32579/46

² Illegible
216. LETTER TO S. SATYAMURTI

January 11, 1930

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter. We must agree to differ.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

S. SATYAMURTI
2/18 CAR STREET
TRIPLICANE
MADRAS

From the original: S. Satyamurti Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

217. LETTER TO DUNICHAND

January 11, 1930

DEAR LALA DUNICHAND

I thank you for your letter. I shall certainly bear in mind what you say.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 5580

218. SPEECH AT GUJARAT VIDYAPITH CONVOCATION

January 11, 1930

Sjt. Narendra Dev just told you, “You are eager to serve the nation. You are pure in heart, brave and self-sacrificing. Being eager for national service, you will prove your mettle one way or another upon entering worldly life.” I wish that all his praise should be well deserved. But my experience leads me to ask you to be pure and remain pure. Let not the vow you just took remain on paper, but inscribe it in your hearts and let the people’s money and the teachers’ energy spent after you be fruitful. My blessings of course always go with the students.

1 Advocate, High Court, Lahore
2 From Bombay Secret Abstracts
Sjt. Vallabhbhai and Kaka Kalelkar are holding forth their begging bowl before the public. Their appeal for contributions is not to be seen in any of the English papers, for their aim is to see how Gujarat views its special duty to the Vidyapith. My hope was that by now all the sixty thousand asked for would have been collected. If this national work is to progress speedily, people should set our national workers free from anxiety in the matter of money. The citizens of Ahmedabad by themselves can do this if they mean it. If this is done, the teachers can give their whole attention to their proper work. In the Vidyapith we require ability more than numbers. Behind the introduction of the civil disobedience and behind the resolution as a whole, lay the confidence that some students at least would play their part well and bring us success.

The Congress at its Calcutta session had resolved that if the Dominion Status of Pandit Nehru’s scheme was not granted within a year’s time, a resolution demanding independence would be passed even at the risk of incurring the world’s censure. If the choice is between independence and Dominion Status, even a person like me would prefer independence.¹

You will naturally expect me to say something about the independence resolution passed at the Lahore Congress, especially the civil disobedience part of it, and you will want to know what is going to be your share in the struggle. Well, as I have often said here, we rely not on numerical strength, but on the strength of character, and the civil disobedience resolution was moved more because I had faith in a few men sacrificing themselves for the cause than in the number of men coming forward in response to the call. You know that the Calcutta resolution pledged us to changing the first article of the Congress constitution and preparing for a programme of civil disobedience, provided Dominion Status was not forthcoming by the end of 1929. This not having been fulfilled, there was nothing for us but to carry out the pledge even at the risk of adverse criticism and misrepresentation. Events that have happened after the resolution have added force to it. Earl Russell² has given us plainly to understand that India’s Dominion Status is something different from what we have always believed it to be, viz., a status allied to that of Canada, New Zealand and Australia. These, the noble Earl admits, are virtually independent. I never had anything else in mind when I talked of Dominion Status for India. What Earl Russell says is tantamount to saying that instead of being in the iron chains that India has been in for years, she may now have the choice of changing them for golden ones. And some of us seem to hug the proposal. We are so very much fear-stricken that a severance of the British connection means to us violence and chaos. Well, I want to make myself clear once more. Votary as I am of non-violence, if I was given a choice between being a helpless witness to chaos and perpetual slavery, I should unhesitatingly say that I would far rather be witness to chaos in India, I would far rather be witness to Hindus and Mussalmans doing one another to death than that I should daily witness our gilded slavery. To my mind golden shackles are far worse than iron ones, for one easily feels the irksome and galling nature of the latter and is prone to forget the former. If therefore India must be in chains, I would they were of iron rather than of gold or other precious metals.

¹ This and the preceding two paragraphs are translated from the Gujarati in Prajabantha, 12-1-1930. What follows is from Young India.

² Under-Secretary of State for India

The spectre of an Afghan invasion is raised in certain quarters the moment we talk of independence. Well I don’t mind the invasion when we have severed our slavish connection with Britain. But I am an incorrigible optimist, and my faith in India winning her freedom by a bloodless revolution is unshakable. We have a helmsman like Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, and I do not think we are ever going to have a better young man as our President. Would that we achieved our goal whilst he has the reins of our affairs in his hands. And I think it is quite possible, if you will be true to your pledge. I would like to see the graduates of this Vidyapith in the front in any campaign for swaraj. I want you to visualize what is coming. You have a harder ordeal than going to jail. Robbers, dacoits and murderers also can go to jail, and they make themselves thoroughly at home there. But they do not serve the country by going to jail. A mere jail going man does not help the country. What I want from you is the preparedness to offer yourselves willing and pure sacrifices in the struggle. There is a lot of violence in the air, and you will have to immolate yourselves in the flames, if there are violent outbursts when and if I am put into jail. If you are true to your pledge of truth and non-violence, you will not hide yourselves in your houses whilst violence or incendiariism is going on, nor will you be active participators in it, but you will go and rush into the conflagration with a view to extinguishing it. For surely that will be expected of you. Even the votaries of violence will expect that and nothing else from you. Vice pays a homage to virtue, and sometimes the way it chooses is to expect virtue not to fall from its pedestal even whilst vice is rampant round about.

You will be ready of course to march to jail, but I do not think you will be called upon to go to jail. The higher and severer ordeal I have just now pictured to you awaits you. I do not know what form civil disobedience is to take, but I am desperately in search of an effective formula.

If you have become indifferent to constructive work, overcome your indifference. Get rid of any violence and untruth that may be present in it. We must do something and show concrete results this year, and the responsibility for this rests on me in the country. All expect that I shall succeed in the task. I also have the faith that I can do so. I am saying this not to fill you with enthusiasm, but in order to wake you up. Rest assured that tomorrow will see something achieved.¹

I am impatient to reach the goal if we can through non-violence and truth. I have infinite patience to wait, if we cannot reach the goal without the sacrifice of non-violence and truth. Both spring from my unshakable faith in the supremacy of non-violence and truth. I know that however long the route may appear, it IS in my opinion the shortest.

Young India, 16-1-1930 and Prajbandhu, 12-1-1930

219. WELLS AND PONDS²

As in the past, so in the present also a person wanting to found a village would first look for water. If there exists no proper facility to obtain water or it is not possible to create it, he would give up all thought of founding a village at the place. In South India we come across dry, though otherwise beautiful, regions where no villages can be founded for want of water. Man’s first elementary need is air, for which one does not have to go in search. The next is water. Though it cannot be obtained as easily as we get air, the getting of water does not involve the amount of labour needed for producing grain. However, the water we use has to be as clean as the air or food we take in.

We all know that the villagers are ignorant of this requirement, or are indifferent to it though they know it. Education in the uses of water, therefore, has an important place in the programme for rural education entrusted to the gramsevaks. Imparting education in the subject will test the sevak’s patience. It is not to be expected that the villagers would of themselves take pains to think out or employ ways and means of keeping the water clean. Slowly we should teach the villagers the advantages of keeping water clean and the rules to be observed for doing so. We should also get their assistance in this work. In several places, it happens that none of the inhabitants comes forward to help though the work is for their own benefit. In such circumstances, the only way open to the sevak is to work hard by himself and, by doing single-handed as much as he can, to induce in the villagers a feeling of shame for their unhelpful behaviour.

¹ This paragraph is translated from the Gujarati in Prajbandhu, 12-1-1930. What follows is from Young India.
² This appeared in the Shikshan ane Sahitya supplement.
³ Workers engaged in village uplift.

Let us now go a little into the details of what we might do. Many of the villages have only one pond, where the cattle drink and people bathe or wash, cleanse utensils and wash clothes, and people fetch the water for drinking and cooking from the same pond. Experts on hygiene have demonstrated through numerous experiments how poisonous germs are born in such water and diseases like cholera result from drinking it. With a little care, it is possible to keep such ponds clean. The village pond should be enclosed so that no cattle can approach it. Of course there should be a provision for them to drink water. For that purpose there should be built a separate drinking trough near the pond as we find done near many of the wells. If everyone in the village makes it a point every day to fetch and add to it a potful of water from the pond, the daily requirement of the cattle would be met without much difficulty.

Never should utensils be cleansed or clothes washed in a pond from which drinking water is drawn. There are two ways to ensure this. Everyone should do the washing at home with the water fetched for domestic use. The other way is to have a water tank just near the pond. Everyone should fetch and put into the tank his share of the water needed for this kind of work. Then the tank water may be used for washing and cleansing by the village population. This would be possible only if there exists among the villagers a spirit of co-operation and mutual service. If it is not feasible to get the tank and the drinking trough filled through personal labour in the way I have described, this could be done by incurring a little expense on that account. As water is bound to get spilt and spread at a washing place, the immediate open space around should be paved so that no mud gets formed there. Before any utensil is dipped into the pond of drinking water, it ought to have been cleansed outside the pond. Moreover, there should be an arrangement so that the feet of the person fetching water do not have to wade through any part of the pond. This is about the villages that have one pond only.

In some villages there are, or it is possible to have, more than one pond. At such a place the pond for drinking water should be set apart for the purpose.
In the third category of villages there are wells. The water in these wells ought to be kept clean. With that view, the place should have an enclosure built around it and no mud should form there. From time to time the well water should be cleaned to remove the dross at the bottom. To get all this done by the village inhabitants, the sevak should himself be prepared to do it. This is cheap, true and necessary education.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 12-1-1930

220. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

SABARMATI,
January 12, 1930

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

I omitted to reply when I wrote to you1 to your important question about 26th instant. I think there should be nothing mentioned about processions. We do not want the people to hold processions under licences, nor do we want them to hold them without. The only thing, therefore, they should do is to hold meetings and devote the day, if possible, to enlisting members. I do not think that speeches are necessary or advisable. I am anxious to avoid anticipation of a crisis. I would value perfect calm for ushering in civil disobedience. I am writing about this in Young India.2

I hope you received my draft declaration in good time.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

A.I.C.C. File No. 16-A, 1930. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

221. LETTER TO V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI

SABARMATI,
January 12, 1930

DEAR BROTHER,

This is to ask you if you can depute someone to go to South Africa and take charge of Indian Opinion. Manilal is here with his wife. They would both like to be in India now. Manilal is by no means a brilliant or even passable editor. Devdhar\(^1\) was at one time thinking of sending someone. If you think that the proposal is at all feasible, please let me know.

1 On January 10, 1930; vide “Letter to Jawaharlal Nehru”, 10-1-1930.

I do hope you are not over-angry with me for my doings in Lahore. I have but followed the inner voice. I saw no other honourable way out. Russell’s speech\(^2\) has justified the decision, i.e., in my opinion of course. But I know that we can love one another in Spite of sharp differences of opinion.

And how are you now in body?

Yours,

M. K. GANDHI

Letters of Srinivasa Sastri, p. 189

222. LETTER TO JAIRAMDAS DOULATRAM

SABARMATI,
January 12, 1930

MY DEAR JAIRAMDAS,

I have your letter.

Yes, you may bring your draft resolution for the Working Committee’s consideration. It will be a great step if we can avoid the scandal of one province sending as delegates the wastage of other provinces.

I like too your idea of inviting a few friends outside the Working Committee. Will you make up a list?

I am concentrating hard on finding a civil disobedience formula. I hope to find it soon. I feel that we must do something during the year consistently with non-violence. We must run the boldest risks. But of this more when we meet. You will come a day or two earlier please.

Choithram must keep his health. He must not get excited as he did when he was inviting the Congress to Karachi.\(^4\)

Yours,

From a copy: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32579/49

\(^1\) G. K. Devdhar of the Servants of India Society

\(^2\) He was reported to have said at a Labour Party meeting at Cambridge that none knew better than Indians themselves how very foolish it was to talk of complete independence.

\(^3\) Which was scheduled to meet at Ahmedabad from Feb. 14 to 16, 1930

\(^4\) Karachi was selected as venue of the next Congress session.
223. LETTER TO RAMI PAREK

Sabarmati,
January 12, 1930

CHI. RAMI.

I suppose I should not expect any letter from you. Ba yearns to see you. I, on the other hand, get no time even to think about you all. But I too wish that you should come and pay a visit, if Kunvarji permits you and you feel inclined. Just now Ba has gone to Vijapur. She will return in a few days. Manilal is here, and Sushila too.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9713

224. LETTER TO NAUTAMLAL BHAGWANJI

Ashram, Sabarmati,
January 12, 1930

BHAISHRI NAUTAMLAL.

I got your letter. I showed it to Doctor. He was happy. I hope you will succeed in your effort.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

SIT. NAUTAMLAL BHAGWANJI
JETPUR, KATHIWAR

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2582

225. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

Ashram, Sabarmati,
January 12, 1930

CHI. BRIJKRISHNA.

I have your letter. If Prabhudas and Uttamchand are fit to travel, escort them here via the branch line and then proceed to Wardha. Devdas says that Prabhudas need not be detained there till his arrival.

1 Harilal Gandhi’s daughter and wife of Kunvarji Parekh

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
Assure Prabhudas that there is no harm in continuing with the powders prescribed by the vaidya.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2372

226. TELEGRAM TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

AHMEDABAD,
January 13, 1930

WIRE IF TEXT CELEBRATION DECLARATION\(^1\) RECEIVED AND APPROVED. WISH PUBLISH FORTHCOMING YOUNG INDIA. IF MANY CHANGES MADE WIRE TEXT TO REACH TOMORROW MORNING.

GANDHI

A.I.C.C. File No. 16-A, 1930. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

227. SPEECH AT ALL-INDIA NATIONAL EDUCATIONAL CONFERENCE, AHMEDABAD\(^2\)

January 13, 1930\(^3\)

The Vidyapith owes its origin to the non-co-operation movement, and, as I said some years ago, the object of the Vidyapith is the attainment of swaraj. All those studying in national educational institutions and connected with them must do all the things that the country has to do, and must go through the same discipline as the country has to go through for the attainment of swaraj, so that they may be ready to offer themselves willing sacrifices when the time comes.

Ours is a movement of self-purification. There are some who think that morality has nothing to do with politics. We do not concern ourselves with the character of our leaders. The democracies of Europe and America steer clear of any notion of morality having anything to do with politics. Bad characters are often great intellects, and they can manage certain affairs well enough by the force of their intellect. The private character of some of the leading men of the House of Commons will not bear examination. We too have often carried on our political movement in the same fashion, we did not concern ourselves with the morals of the Congress delegates or leaders. But in 1920 we struck an entirely new departure and we declared that since truth and non-violence were the sole means to be employed by the Congress to reach its goal, self-purification was necessary even in political life.

\(^1\) Vide “Draft Declaration for January 26”, 10-1-1930.
\(^2\) Published in Young India, 23-1-1930, under the caption “Not a Policy But Creed”
\(^3\) From The Bombay Chronicle, 14-1-1930

Today there is not much open opposition to the idea, though there are many who secretly believe that politics should have nothing to do with morality. That is why our progress is so slow and in some respect even nil. If we had acted up to our creed of 1920, we should not have taken nine years to arrive even at the present stage. If swaraj was not meant to civilize us, and to purify and stabilize our civilization, it would be nothing worth. The very essence of our civilization is that we give a paramount place to morality in all our affairs, public or private. And as one of the functions of the Vidyapith is to civilize us, the battle of swaraj calls for the greatest sacrifice from the national educational institutions.

I want you all to realize the implications of our creed. If you think that truth and non-violence constitute not the creed but the policy of the Congress, I do not know where I should be. But if you are convinced that they are your personal creed, I need not expatiate on them. The very fact that a person belongs to the Vidyapith should be sufficient guarantee of his truthfulness and non-violence. The first thing therefore that this national educational conference and those who are attending it should do is to ask themselves whether all their doings have been in consonance with that creed. If you have gone about your work, following truth and non-violence as a policy, there will come a day when you might be tempted to alter the policy. For instance my friends the Ali Brothers accepted truth and non-violence as a policy, and they never made a secret of it. They always said that they could not accept them as a creed. There are many others of their way of thinking, and they undoubtedly have their place in the service of the country, but for you, students and teachers of national educational institutions, that attitude will not suffice. You must accept both the principles as your creed and they should be part and parcel of your being. If all make of ahimsa a policy, and I remain the only votary of it as a creed, we can make very little progress. Let us therefore ask ourselves once again, and make sure, that we will in no circumstances harbour untruth and violence for the attainment of swaraj. Then everything will be well.

The constructive programme has sprung out of the creed of truth and non-violence. Let us examine every item of it. Hindu-Muslim unity will be impossible so long as the Hindu cherishes violence against the Mussalman and the Mussalman against the Hindu. The Congress resolution at Lahore on the communal question was a corollary to the creed. The Sikhs wanted bare justice, but the resolution, as you will have noticed, has gone further, and it is meant not only for the Sikhs but for all the communities of India.

Then take the removal of untouchability. While talking of this question, some think of removing physical untouchability, some talk of the removal of the so-called untouchables’ disabilities as regards the use of public wells, schools and temples. But you should go much further. You should love them even as yourselves so that the moment they see you they might feel that you are one of them. Then and then only will you be able to have their co-operation in the constructive programme.

The same is the case with prohibition. Also with the khadi programme. But need I talk about it here? This work is so concrete and tangible that a man who maintains a regular diary of his day’s work can give a clear account of how much he has added to the national wealth. If we had approached the task in that spirit we should have made considerable headway by now. The Foreign-Cloth Boycott Committee has told us what we have been able to achieve even by means of our very little work of last year. To my mind it is trifling, but if all of us had done the thing with a will and an active faith, what would have been the result? We badly need true and efficient workers. But I know that even amongst you there are quite a number of men in whom the will and therefore the capacity are both lacking. We have tossed our inertia, our want of faith, and the capacity will follow as a matter of course.

I have told you what to do. I shall tell you now something as to what not to do. Literary training, scholarly research and linguistic pursuits, study of English and Sanskrit and fine arts had better take a back seat. All our national schools ought to be converted into factories of our national ammunition, viz., constructive work. There are millions of children in India today who have to go without any education, much less national education and the other big things I have mentioned. Why then can’t we do without them until at any rate we have won our freedom?

The Working Committee has appealed to the country to enlist members and volunteers. Why should there be any other organization necessary for this work? You can all be members and volunteers and take charge of the work. Think what the students in Europe did during the great War. Are we prepared to make the sacrifices that they made? If deep down in us is the conviction that we may not even breathe in peace until we have freedom, we will live and move and have our being in carrying out the constructive programme.

Lastly, may I sum up in a word what is expected of you? Even as we have to be pure, let us shed the fear of death. An Englishman has recently told us that though Gandhi may think that India will be none the worse if Englishmen left India, he has no doubt that not a rich man’s property will be safe and not a virgin will be inviolate the moment his countrymen leave India. That shows what a low opinion he has of us Indians. But how can it be otherwise? We are so fear-stricken today that we have to maintain the services of hired men for the defence of our property and our honour. The moment we shed the fear of death, we shall escape from this wretched plight. I expect every maiden studying in the Vidyapith to wake up and muster sufficient moral strength to withstand even the touch of a wicked individual. I want you all to shed the fear of death, so that when the history of freedom comes to be written, the names of the boys and girls of national schools and colleges may be mentioned therein as of those who died not doing violence but in resisting it, no matter by whom committed. The strength to kill is not essential for self-defence; one ought to have the strength to die. When a man is fully ready to die he will not even desire to offer violence. Indeed I may put it down as a self-evident proposition that the desire to kill is in inverse proportion to the desire to die. And history is replete with instances of men who by dying with courage and compassion on their lips converted the hearts of their violent opponents.

In reply to a question at the end of the speech, Gandhiji said:

If I am so keen on the students’ share in the struggle, why did I not press for the boycott of schools and colleges, you ask. I say there was no atmosphere. But I hope you will not retort that if there was no atmosphere, what can even these students do? They can do a lot. Had their devotion to their mission been intenser than it has been, they would have created an atmosphere that would have compelled the students of Government schools and colleges to leave them. What they have not been able to do hitherto, they can do even now.¹

Do not be agitated because I have said this. On the one hand, you must be prepared to die, while on the other hand you must bury yourselves in your present duties as if you were immortal and would never perish.

Young India, 23-1-1930 and Navajivan, 19-1-1930

¹ The following paragraph is translated from the Gujarati in Navajivan, 19-1-1930.
228. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

ASHRAM SABARMATI,
January 14, 1930

CHI. RAMDAS,

Manilal and Sushila left for Vijapur yesterday. Manilal said he would return in two or three days bringing with him Ba and Nimu from there. If you wish, I can arrange for Nimu to be sent with somebody. Someone or the other keeps going from here to Bardoli. I write this only from the point of view of saving expense. If you are thinking of coming here just to take Nimu with, it is not at all necessary to do so and it will save so much of your money. I am not very eager to see you so that you need come here on that pretext for, how am I to find time even to have a look at you, let alone talk with you? I will be satisfied if I know that all of you are living in peace and contentment, and are doing your duty wherever you are. For my part, I am furiously thinking about some way of starting the fight.¹ If the government lets me remain free this year, something big is bound to happen. If, on the other hand, they arrest me, would not that by itself count for something?

Blessings from
BAPU

SHRI RAMDAS GANDHI
SWARAJYA ASHRAM
BARDOLI, ‘VIA’ SURAT

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

229. INDEPENDENCE DAY

It was easy enough to pass the independence resolution at Lahore. It is difficult enough to achieve it even by ‘peaceful and legitimate means’. The first essential is to let the masses know, understand and appreciate the message of the Congress. They must know what independence means and what it is likely to cost. And so the Working Committee whose business is to make the Congress live in the daily life of the people has fixed Sunday, 26th instant, as Purna

¹ That is, the civil disobedience movement contemplated by the resolution passed by the Indian National Congress on December 31, 1929, at its session in Lahore under the Presidency of Jawaharlal Nehru
Swaraj (Complete Independence) Day when a declaration approved by the Working Committee will be made by those present. It is intended to be complete by itself. No speeches are therefore necessary. They are inadvisable, because the idea is abroad that people may indulge in loose talk when independence is in the air. These should understand that loose irresponsible talk is not independence, it is licence; it is not energy generated by love of freedom, it is froth to be thrown away as useless and harmful, whereas 26th instant is intended to be one of complete discipline, restraint, reserve, dignity and real strength. It would be good, if the declaration is made by whole cities, whole villages even as happened on that ever memorable 6th of April 1919. It would be well if all the meetings were held at the identical minute in all the places. In order that these meetings may be numerously attended, there should be house-to-house visits, there may be also leaflets circulated among the people. The villages may follow the customary method of advertising the time by the drumbeat. Those who are religiously minded may as before begin the day by ablutions and concentrating on the task before the country and the means for its fulfilment. They will therefore pass the day in doing some constructive work, whether it is spinning, or service of ‘untouchables’, or reunion of Hindus and Mussalmans, or prohibition work, or even all these together, which is not impossible. Thus a Hindu may get hold of an ‘untouchable’ and invite a Mussalman, a Parsi, a Christian, a Sikh to join in a spinning competition for a stated time, and then they may all go together for say one hour to hawk khadi which they can together buy to resell and then devote an hour to visit the neighbouring liquor shop and speak to the keeper about the evil of gaining a livelihood or making money by such means. They may also speak to the visitors to such places and wind up the day by attending the celebration. It should be remembered that Sunday is also the flag-hoisting day. The day may be well begun by attending the flag-hoisting ceremony.

If the Congress Committees and Congress workers are serious about the resolution, I hope they have already begun enlisting new members and inviting old ones to pay their subscription for the current year. In doing so, they, the old and the new ones, should be informed of the change in the creed and its implications. And if Congress Committees begin methodical work, they will materially help in reorganizing the Congress on a solid foundation, and the people who may then attend the celebration on the 26th will be not merely curiosity-mongers or idlers, but men and women gathered together with a fairly full knowledge of what they are about and determined to fulfill their common purpose. It ought to be possible to make the demonstration universal and yet ensure perfect orderliness throughout the whole length and breadth of India. Nothing untoward or unintended should happen on this Independence Day. In order to enable the central office to gauge the strength of the movement and the Congress organization, it is as necessary to send an absolutely accurate account of the day’s doing in each village or locality as it is to have the celebration itself. A full and faithful record of the day’s happenings will enable the Working Committee that is to meet on the 14th February to shape its future course.

All this work requires whole-timers, in other words, permanent paid volunteers. Part-time workers are good and valuable only when and where there is at least one whole-time worker. I have already suggested that there should be a permanent Provincial Service Board formed for the U.P. which should draw up a workable constitution and immediately set about enlisting recruits. Let us hope that there will be no time lost in bringing into being this very desirable organization. If it works efficiently and honestly it will serve as a model for the rest of the provinces.

Young India. 16-1-1930

230. WHAT NOT TO DO?

In my opinion it was a very wise thing the Lahore Congress did in shifting the time for holding the Congress session from December to some time in February or March. 1 December is no doubt a fine month for the leisured and well-to-do class. For the poor who flock in ever-increasing numbers to the Congress, December is a trying month in most parts of India. They sleep anywhere in the open with the scantiest clothing, and succumb to influenza or the like. The railway concessions during Christmas holidays benefit the poor but little. The Reception Committees are always hard put to it to make the delegates and the visitors comfortable. And lastly it was necessary to break the spell that December had cast over Congressmen. It was originally chosen for the sake of lawyers and others who were connected with the administration of the country and therefore its exploitation. It was therefore but meet, that with the passing of the independence resolution the unbecoming tradition was broken. The Congress has been generally regarded as a pantomime, a holiday show. If independence is to be achieved, it must cease to be a show, it has to become a stern reality.

1 Vide “Speech at Subjects Committee, A.I.C.C.-I”, 1-1-1930.

It was therefore unfortunate that the Subjects Committee refused to reduce its own number or that of the delegates.\textsuperscript{1} But I do not wonder. Even the Congress has become a venue for coveting office, distinction and worse. There is so much scramble for office in the various committees, that election disputes have become a painful feature in our national organization. A coach and four is sought to be driven through every section of the Congress constitution in order to seize office. Well has it therefore been said, that reduction of the organization may work contrary to the expectation, and may even increase the corruption instead of removing or decreasing it. I am fully aware of the danger, and am also aware of the fact that what is needed is not external remedies but internal purification. It behoves us however to use every legitimate external means to purify the Congress, and make it an efficiently working irresistible organization which it undoubtedly can become if it honestly works up to its creed.

I am looking forward to Karachi\textsuperscript{2} with great hope. It may be that by that time I may be in a better place, it may be that the whole face of the land will be changed by the time the Congress meets. But I must review the past for the sake of the future as we may expect in the ordinary course.

Though the reduction of the number of delegates is not in the hands of the Sind workers, there are many other things that they can do to make the next session less unbusinesslike and much less expensive. A city of tents is an expensive affair for this country. Open grass sheds with half walls 10 feet apart for comparative privacy are likely to be the cheapest contrivance. Nothing of the material to be used for the purpose will be valueless after use. The ground chosen should be levelled and well laid out, and open squares may be given on hire for the use of delegates and visitors who may make their own arrangements if they so wish. A small committee of experts should set to work now to consider the best and the cheapest method of building a temporary city. No kitchen should be run by the Reception Committee, but licences may be issued to selected patriotic caterers who would serve meals according to provincial tastes and at pre-arranged rates both \textit{a la carte} and table d’hote. We waste much effort and more money in trying to do things in amateurish fashion, and what is more, we lose each year the experience gained in the past.

\textsuperscript{1} \textit{Vide} Resolution No. 4, “Draft Resolutions for A.I.C.C., Lahore”, 26-12-1929.

\textsuperscript{2} Which was selected as venue of the next Congress session
Had it not been so, at the end of forty-five years of experience, the holding of the annual assembly should be child’s play, and the arrangements should be a pattern of perfection. As it is, the Reception Committees in their respective cities where the session is held have a most anxious time, and thank their stars if everything goes tolerably well. Sanitation, waterworks, medicine, ambulance, catering, building should all be departmentalized and done through honest, nationalist, licensed contractors. Thus alone could corporate national life be built up. The nation’s representatives must be able to deliberate and transact national work in perfect peace and quiet.

The exhibition too should not be a side-show to defray the expenses of the Reception Committee which should easily pay its expenses if it did its work in a businesslike manner. The contractors I have in mind should, through the licence fees they would pay, defray all the expenses of the central office which under the plan suggested by me would only have to do the work of inspection of the several departments and general management. The exhibition must be entrusted to an expert body. I have suggested the A.I.S.A. But if there is prejudice against that body, some other agency may be chosen. To be of real educative value it must satisfy the following conditions:

1. There should be no games and pantomimes. These are amply provided during festivals and by other agencies.

2. Nothing but swadeshi goods should be admitted. Only that may be called swadeshi which is wholly made in India by indigenous skill and for predominantly Indian shareholders where the concern is controlled by a company. Thus a harmonium whose parts are imported and only put together in India is in no sense swadeshi, nor is cloth woven from foreign yarn swadeshi, nor cloth manufactured by a company whose shareholders are principally foreigners.

3. Not all swadeshi goods may be exhibited. Only those should be exhibited that are struggling for existence and that are of real benefit to the nation. Thus cigars, indigenous intoxicating liquors and drugs, obscene indigenous literature, patent medicines, mill-cloth, etc., will be excluded.

4. The spinning-wheel and khadi will be the centre round which all the other exhibits will find place.

Such an exhibition will be of the greatest value to the nation, and if it has a permanent organization behind it, it would provide education of the highest economic value to the masses. Let the Sind workers profit by the mistakes of the past. They have more than twelve months in front of them. Let them not suspend their thinking or their action because something untoward or serious or grand is going to happen. It is a sign of panic to suspend ordinary and necessary business in anticipation of an uncommon event. We may hold ourselves in readiness for it even as we do or ought to for the supreme event, death, without interrupting the even tenor of life. If the Congress is to be the instrument for achieving independence, it must be disciplined, compact, united and responsive to the needs of the dumb millions.

Young India, 16-1-1930

231. POSERS

A political science student of the Benares Hindu University has asked the following questions.

This student’s questions are just the ones that used to be asked in 1922. But they do not surprise me. Very few readers besides the questioners themselves go through answers to questions. Out of them only a few are satisfied. Many others forget these questions and answers. Therefore every time such questions are asked it is the duty of the editor to go on answering them.

The first refers to the lack of a spirit of sacrifice. This is true and at the same time not true. True, because in the immediate environment of the questioner the spirit of sacrifice is not apparent, and, for this reason, he assumes that the spirit of sacrifice is lacking in the whole country. It is not true, because, if the spirit of sacrifice were entirely absent, any national work would have been impossible. Even admitting that there is plenty of room for the growth of the spirit of sacrifice, my experience tells me that the spirit does exist in the country and it is ever growing. There is not the least doubt that in order to achieve complete independence the spirit of sacrifice should be more intense. Regarding the wearing of khaddar the commercial attitude, which the student speaks of, must progressively make room for a benevolent and altruistic outlook.

Regarding the triple boycott, I see more of ignorance in what the student has written because the Congress has not revived the boycott of schools and courts. I do believe, however, that these three boycotts are necessary. To say that someone or the other will go to the Councils, then why should Congressmen not do so, is not right.

---

1 Not translated here. The correspondent had argued that the triple boycott expected a degree of sacrifice which the people were not prepared to make, that even if successful, the boycott was not going to overthrow the Government and that the earlier satyagraha movements seemed to succeed because they did not challenge the very existence of the Government.
Liquor shops will not remain empty, so must we enter them too? If we consider the Councils useless or harmful, why should we attend them? Now take the case of the schools. I see dangerous self-deception in the view that boys will remain uneducated by quitting Government schools. Boys did not remain uneducated before the advent of the British rule. It is a fact that before the British rule was established in India, primary education was much more widespread than it is today and higher education too was imparted in a great measure. Have we fallen so low today that by ending Government-sponsored education our education will come to an end? This student should know that national schools exist in India today and thousands of youths are receiving national education there. Even if all the boys boycott Government schools they need not remain uneducated. Yes, they will certainly not have grand school buildings built with the money soaked in the blood of the poor nor will they receive an education that destroys independence.

Regarding the boycott of law-courts it must be admitted that it is a difficult task. The attachment to them that is evident today is harmful to the interests of the country. We have to rest satisfied only by trying to remove this attachment as far as possible. But it must not be forgotten that the courts are the main refuge of every Government. Therefore, the more lawyers, plaintiffs and defendants shun them, the better. We should lower the prestige of the courts day by day.

In the end, it should be remembered that any institution or person rests on its or his own prestige only. The Government gains prestige through the Councils, schools, courts, etc. Boycott undermines prestige. Therefore the Government’s prestige is lowered by the preaching of boycott. This is most natural. No Government can remain stable on the strength of the gun alone.

To say that the people of Bardoli earned less and lost more on account of the satyagraha is not the truth. They themselves know that they gained immensely by the satyagraha. If one wants tangible proof of this one can visit Bardoli and see for oneself even today. It is true that a hard struggle will have to be waged for attaining freedom; but this is neither regrettable nor surprising.

[From Hindi]

_Hindi Navajivan, 16-1-1930_
232. TELEGRAM TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

SABARMATI,
January 16, 1930

JAWAHARLAL NEHRU
ALLAHABAD

RECEIVED WIRES. FIGURES RETESTED. FOUND ACCURATE. YOU MAY ADD SHORT RESOLUTION IF NECESSARY.

GANDHI

A.I.C.C. File No. 16-A, 1930. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

233. TELEGRAM TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

SABARMATI,
January 16, 1930

JAWAHARLAL NEHRU
ALLAHABAD

YOUR LETTER RECEIVED AFTER DESPATCH WIRE. RESOLUTION DRAFTED BY YOU WHOLLY UNNECESSARY. REVISED DECLARATION SHOULD BE CIRCULATED. TARIFF RATIO SHOULD READ TWENTY-FOUR TIMES AND EIGHT TIMES RESPECTIVELY LESS HEAVY THAN IN UNITED STATES AND GERMANY.

GANDHI

A.I.C.C. File No. 16-A, 1930. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library
234. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

January 16, 1930

Bhai Ghanshaymdasji,

I have both your letters. I am so busy these days that there is no time to answer letters. I shall make my comments after going through the speech. I too had a talk with Malaviyaji Maharaj. Things can improve much if he inculcates tolerance in the other party. Do whatever you can in this direction.

We shall discuss your health when we meet.

I have no anxiety on Keshu’s account.

Yours,

Mohandas

From Hindi: C.W. 6181. Courtesy: G.D. Birla

235. TELEGRAM TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

Ahmedabad,
January 17, 1930

Jawaharlal Nehru

Allahabad

Reading three o’clock this morning para regarding customs currency. Do not like it. If declaration not sent press paragraph referred should read quote customs and currency have been so manipulated as to heap further burdens on the peasantry. British manufactured goods constitute bulk of our imports. Customs duties betray clear partiality for British manufactures and revenue from them is used not to lessen burden on the masses but for sustaining highly extravagant administration. Still more arbitrary has been manipulation of exchange ratio which has resulted in millions being drained away from the country unquote.¹

Gandhi

A.I.C.C. File No. 16-A, 1930. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

¹ This was substituted in the final declaration; vide “Things to Remember for 26th”, 23-1-1930.
236. LETTER TO S. SRINIVASA IYENGAR

SABARMATI,
January 17, 1930

MY DEAR FRIEND,

The prayer bell is just ringing 4 o’clock early morn. Preoccupations compel me to burn after-midnight oil. I can no longer delay acknowledging your angry letter. Though I have an answer to every one of the statements you have made I must restrain myself. I can only give you my assurance that my affection for you is no more diminished because of political differences than for Malaviyaji for the same cause. But this I cannot prove by words. Future conduct alone can prove the truth of my assurance. I did not write my letter to hurt your feelings. I wrote in order to be true to you, a friend and associate, and to myself.

We shall know each other better when the mists have rolled away.

Meanwhile I anticipate your forgiveness for offence given utterly unconsciously.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: S. Srinivasa Iyengar Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

237. SPEECH AT HOSTEL BOYS’ CONFERENCE, AHMEDABAD

January 17, 1930

My idea of a hostel is that it should be like a family. The superintendent and the students living in the hostel should live as members of one family. The superintendent should take the place of the mother and the father of the students. If the superintendent’s wife is also staying there the husband and wife together should discharge the functions of mother and father. Right now the conditions prevailing in the country are pitiable. Unless the superintendent observed brahmacharya his wife can never function as a mother in the hostel. She may not be even approving of her husband working in the hostel. She may be putting up with it just because he earns a certain amount as salary. Even if he stole some ghee from the hostel, his wife would be happy that her own children would have a little more ghee to eat. This is not to suggest that all superintendents belong to this category. But our whole society today is in a state of disintegration.

1 Delivered at the request of hostel superintendents who wanted to know Gandhiji’s views on an ideal hostel for students

There are not many ideal hostels such as I have described either in Gujarat or in India. If there are, I have not come across them. India has very few such institutions outside Gujarat. Students’ hostels are a special product of Gujarat. This can be attributed to many causes. Gujarat is a land of businessmen. It is natural for those who earn money from business to be prompted to build hostels for the students of their community. It was much later that these institutions acquired the big name of hostels. Those poor creatures called them just “Boardings”. They did not aim at anything more than providing for the boys facilities of food, etc. When cultured superintendents came to be associated with these institutions, they began imbuing idealism into them.

Personally I consider hostels more important than schools. A great deal of knowledge which cannot be acquired in school can be acquired in a hostel. A school may be imparting some formal education. But the student is not able to digest what he learns in the school though he may retain something in his mind in spite of himself. At the moment I am picturing only the dark side of schools. The strength of mind that can be developed in boys and girls in a hostel can never be done in a school. In the final analysis my idea is that the hostel itself should be the school.

The hostels which the rich businessmen built turned out to be of a different type. Having established the hostels, they kept themselves aloof. The superintendents too felt that once the boys had taken their meals and gone to their schools or colleges their work was done. Had the businessmen and superintendents taken sufficient interest, the hostels would not have remained as they are. We must now study their conditions and find out what measures could be taken to improve them. We can completely transform this institution if we are keen about it. We can accomplish through the hostels much that cannot be achieved in the schools. Let the superintendent not confine himself to looking after the accounts. Let him also keep himself in touch with what the students learn at school, and look after them with care like his own children or disciples. Today the conditions are such that in many places the superintendent is not even aware of what the students eat or drink.

A serious form of moral indiscipline prevails in our hostels. I specially want to draw your attention to it. The thing is usually winked at. The superintendents are hesitant and hide it thinking that it would spoil the name of their hostel. They feel that they cannot expose the misconduct of the students and do not inform even their parents. But the superintendent never succeeds in keeping it a secret. The superintendent may be thinking that nobody knows anything about it. But the stink spreads in no time. Experienced superintendents must have understood what I am hinting at. I caution the superintendents in this regard. They must be vigilant and realize their duty thoroughly. Those who cannot keep the hostels pure must resign and relieve themselves of this work. It is a reflection on the fitness of the superintendents if, by staying in hostels, the students become cowards, their strength of character is destroyed, their thinking becomes disorganized and their intellect becomes sterile.

I can cite many instances in support of my statement. I receive heaps of letters from students. Many of the letters are anonymous and I consign them to the waste-paper-basket. But I do take in the substance of these letters. Many simple-hearted students give their names and addresses and ask me to suggest solutions. When the new habit is being formed, they are not comforted by the superintendents and helped to fight against it. On the contrary they are encouraged. Later when they awaken they find themselves wanting in will-power. They have no control over their minds nor the strength to follow the advice from someone like me.

Some persons who can handle the work of a superintendent quote high prices for themselves. They have widowed sisters to be supported and children to be married. Such superintendents, even if they are worthy, are unacceptable to us. There are others who think that they are meant for this very work. They would not be attracted by any other work. And some have come forward who are ready to work getting in return just enough for their subsistence.

It should be clear from what I have said that a superintendent should be almost a perfect man. Only such a man who can impress the students and enter into their hearts can become a superintendent. To collect boys together in the absence of such a superintendent would be a terrible thing.

So much for the superintendents. Now something for the students. If the students forget themselves and look upon the superintendent as their servant and believe that all their work should be done by servants and they may do nothing themselves, they are making a mistake. The students should realize that the hostel is not meant for their pleasure. Let them not think that they are paying for their stay in the hostel. Whatever they may be paying is not sufficient to meet the expenses of the hostel. The donors who have built the hostels are under the impression that students benefit by being pampered, that they would be doing their duty by providing them comforts. Under such a belief they provide comforts to the students; but quite often this results in violation of dharma rather than observance of dharma. The students, on the contrary, are spoilt and tend to depend on others. Let the students who can use their brains calculate the rent of the hostel premises and the salaries of the servants and the superintendent. All that is not recovered from the students. They pay only for their board. In some hostels, even food, clothes and books are provided free. The businessmen would be doing well if they took an undertaking from the boys that they would serve the country after completing their studies. But they are so generous that they do nothing of the kind. But the students should realize that if they do not do something in return for what they have been getting, it is like enjoying stolen wealth. I had learnt a poem by Akho Bhagat when I was a young boy:

“Enjoying stolen wealth is like eating unprocessed mercury.”

Students will not become brave by enjoying stolen wealth. They will become miserable. Let all of you here resolve that you would not eat the food that is offered as charity. You may well take advantage of the facilities provided for you. But when you have gone back from here you should give notice to the superintendent that all the servants should be relieved forthwith. Or, if you feel pity for the servants, let them be continued; insist on doing all your work yourself. Resolve to do all the work yourself, including the cleaning of lavatories. Then alone will you become householders and will be able to serve your country. Today people do not even have the strength to support themselves and their wives and mothers by any honest occupation.

Anyone who believes in his pride that since he has secured employment he is following an honest occupation should consider why he is getting Rs. 75 as a clerk in the mill and that a worker with a large family gets only Rs. 12. If he examines this carefully he will know that he does not deserve a higher salary and that it is not an honest earning. All of us in the cities eat stolen food. We are all commission agents working for a giant gang of plunderers. Ninety-five per cent of what we collect from the people we send away to foreign countries. Any earning from such an occupation is, as good as no earning at all.

If you have faith in what I have told you today start practising it immediately.
A hostel is like a hermitage. All those who live there must be brahmacharis. Even those who are married should have renounced their family life. If you spent some 5 to 10 years in such ideal conditions you would be able to do for India whatever you might wish to do. The sacrifice for freedom has begun. But what can anyone depending on charity contribute towards it? Someone like me would be ready. But I would be carrying with me bread made from jowar or bajra while you will want spicy food every evening! Some of you may be proud enough to say that everything will be done when the time comes and that there is no need to worry right now. I have seen many people talking in this vein. But when the time comes they hang back. We have already had the experience of how people behave in jail after they are arrested. It is well known to everyone how the people who had gone to jail during 1920-21 had created a row over food and what practices they had resorted to. We had all been put to shame by it. Do not be under the impression that you can learn to make sacrifices all at once. It can be learnt only after long training. Anyone who is eager to make a sacrifice but has not tried to overcome his subtle craving for pleasures is betrayed by them at the critical moment. This is proved by experience. If you students would but understand you would find that what I have said today can be easily put into practice,

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 23-2-1930

238. SPEECH AT PRAYER MEETING, SABARMATI ASHRAM

[On or after January 17, 1930]

I am glad that you all want me to speak to you on the meaning of and the necessity for prayer. I believe that prayer is the very soul and essence of religion, and therefore prayer must be the very core of the life of man, for no man can live without religion. There are some who in the egotism of their reason declare that they have nothing to do with religion. But it is like a man saying that he breathes but that he has no nose. Whether by reason, or by instinct, or by superstition, man acknowledges some sort of relationship with the divine. The 1 This was mainly addressed, after the evening prayers, to hostel boys who had participated in a students’ conference at the end of the National Educational Week. They sought Gandhiji’s advice on the necessity of making congregational prayers compulsory, a proposal which was earlier rejected at the Conference.

2 The National Educational Conference concluded on January 17, 1930.
rankest agnostic or atheist does acknowledge the need of a moral principle, and associates something good with its observance and something bad with its non-observance. Bradlaugh, whose atheism is well known, always insisted on proclaiming his innermost conviction. He had to suffer a lot for thus speaking the truth, but he delighted in it and said that truth is its own reward. Not that he was quite insensible to the joy resulting from the observance of truth. This joy however is not at all worldly, but springs out of communion with the divine. That is why I have said that even a man who disowns religion cannot and does not live without religion.

Now I come to the next thing, viz., that prayer is the very core of man’s life, as it is the most vital part of religion. Prayer is either petitional or in its wider sense is inward communion. In either case the ultimate result is the same. Even when it is petitional, the petition should be for the cleansing and purification of the soul, for freeing it from the layers of ignorance and darkness that envelop it. He therefore who hungers for the awakening of the divine in him must fall back on prayer. But prayer is no mere exercise of words or of the ears, it is no mere repetition of empty formula. Any amount of repetition of Ramanama is futile if it fails to stir the soul. It is better in prayer to have a heart without word than words without a heart. It must be in clear response to the spirit which hungers for it. And even as a hungry man relishes a hearty meal, a hungry soul will relish a heartfelt prayer. And I am giving you a bit of my experience and that of my companions when I say that he who has experienced the magic of prayer may do without food for days together but not a single moment without prayer. For without prayer there is no inward peace.

If that is the case, someone will say, we should be offering our prayers every minute of our lives. There is no doubt about it, but we erring mortals, who find it difficult to retire within ourselves for inward communion even for a single moment, will find it impossible to remain perpetually in communion with the divine. We therefore fix some hours when we make a serious effort to throw off the attachments of the world for a while, we make a serious endeavour to remain, so to say, out of the flesh. You have heard Surdas’s hymn.¹ It is the passionate cry of a soul hungering for union with the divine. According to our standards he was a saint, but according to his own he was a proclaimed sinner. Spiritually he was miles ahead of us, but he

¹ Where is there a wretch
   So loathsome and wicked as I?
   I have forsaken my Maker,
   So faithless have I been.
felt the separation from the divine so keenly that he has uttered that anguished cry in loathing and despair.

I have talked of the necessity for prayer, and therethrough I have dealt with the essence of prayer. We are born to serve our fellowmen, and we cannot properly do so unless we are wide awake. There is an eternal struggle raging in man’s breast between the powers of darkness and of light, and he who has not the sheet-anchor of prayer to rely upon will be a victim to the powers of darkness. The man of prayer will be at peace with himself and with the whole world, the man who goes about the affairs of the world without a prayerful heart will be miserable and will make the world also miserable. Apart therefore from its bearing on man’s condition after death, prayer has incalculable value for man in this world of the living. Prayer is the only means of bringing about orderliness and peace and repose in our daily acts. We inmates of the Ashram who came here in search of truth and for insistence on truth professed to believe in the efficacy of prayer, but had never up to now made it a matter of vital concern. We did not bestow on it the care that we did on other matters. I awoke from my slumbers one day and realized that I had been woefully negligent of my duty in the matter. I have therefore suggested measures of stern discipline and far from being any the worse, I hope we are the better for it. For it is so obvious. Take care of the vital thing and other things will take care of themselves. Rectify one angle of a square, and the other angles will be automatically right.

Begin therefore your day with prayer, and make it so soulful that it may remain with you until the evening. Close the day with prayer so that you may have a peaceful night free from dreams and nightmares. Do not worry about the form of prayer. Let it be any form, it should be such as can put us into communion with the divine. Only, whatever be the form, let not the spirit wander while the words of prayer run on out of your mouth.

If what I have said has gone home to you, you will not be at peace until you have compelled your hostel superintendents to interest themselves in your prayer and to make it obligatory. Restraint self-imposed is no compulsion. A man, who chooses the path of freedom from restraint, i.e., of self-indulgence, will be a bondsman of passions, whilst the man who binds himself to rules and restraints releases himself. All things in the universe, including the sun and the moon and the stars, obey certain laws. Without the restraining influence of these laws the world would not go on for a single moment. You, whose mission in life is service of your fellowmen, will go to pieces if you do not impose on yourselves some sort of discipline, and prayer is a necessary spiritual discipline. It is discipline and restraint that separates us from the brute. If we will be men walking with our heads erect and not walking on all fours, let us understand and put ourselves under voluntary discipline and restraint.

Young India, 23-1-1930

239. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 18, 1930

CHI. VASUMATI,

I have your letter. I understand what you say. You may write your diary in any manner you think proper. It is very strange that you have not yet been able to overcome your constipation. Do you have to take pills? I think your handwriting has improved a little, but there is room for further improvement.

This place has become overcrowded.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9274

240. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

January 18, 1930

The description which you give of the site is beautiful indeed, but the lack of facility of water is in my eyes a serious drawback. Even if the supply of water was assured, I do not wish to start anything new this year. The plan of the struggle that is taking shape in my mind is of a fight of such magnitude that no one can say how it will end. It is also possible that ultimately I do not succeed in thinking out an effective plan and decide to do nothing. But 75 against 25 the chances are that my inner voice will prompt me to fight and not to drop the plan.

When you return to Bombay, where do you intend to stay? You can maintain the improvement only if you take a small bungalow in a suburb and live there. Would you not like to take a small house on the outskirts of a fine village and go there to live? And serve the village in every way you can? . . .

[From Gujarati]

Bapuni Prasadi, pp. 98-9
241. LETTER TO BARJORJI BHARUCHA

January 19, 1930

BHAISHRI BHARUCHA,

Here is the message for the Kaiser-e-Hind¹: ‘No sincere Englishman need be afraid of free India.’

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary . S.N. 32579/54

242. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

ASHRAM SABARMATI,

January 18, 1930

CHI. PRABHUDAS,

I got your letter. Now build up your body and make it quite sturdy. I, on my part, had written to you advising you to go to Vijapur at the earliest but you did not get the letter in time. It was good that you came over. Ramdas wants Nimu to be sent over soon. You also must have received a similar letter. We have here somebody who can escort her. You may therefore write and suggest to me if Nimu can come here by herself, you would let her do so, or you would arrange for somebody to accompany her here or, whether Manilal should be sent from here to bring her. Write whichever alternative suits you best. Write to me regularly telling me how you are keeping. Kashi must be quite fit.

Blessings from

BAPU

SHRI PRABHUDAS GANDHI
UDYOGALAYA
VIJAPUR, “VIA” KALOL

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33005

¹Gujarati daily on Bombay
243. LETTER TO BENARSIDAS CHATURVEDI
January 19, 1930

BHAI BENARSIDAS,

At present I do see no need to make any changes in the profession and the treatment of immigrant Indians. Moreover, a discussion would serve no purpose.

I am fully informed about the anti-Andrews happenings in America.

Yours,
Mohanandas

SIT. BENARSIDAS CHATURVEDI
CALCUTTA
From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2561

244. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA
January 20, 1930

DEAR SATIS BABU,

Either a p.c. or none. I have yours. It is well you are now going thoroughly into the Utkal khadi business. When I was in Utkal, I had spoken to the workers about their laziness and ignorance in the presence of Niranjan Babu. I hope both of you are well. Have you not sent Rs. 2,500 to Abhoy Ashram? Have you got the amount? I have a reminder from the AA1.

Yours,
Bapu

SIT. SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA
KHADI PRATISHTHAN
SODEPUR
From a photostat: G.N. 1614

1 Abhoy Ashram
245. LETTER TO C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

ASHRAM,
January 20, 1930

MY DEAR C. R.,

I had your letter. But I am so immersed in work that I have no time to attend to correspondence to my satisfaction.

I cannot agree that any purpose can be served by my touring. And what matters if those who believe in Councils enter them? We shall not prevent them even if we entered upon a hurricane campaign. It is for me and should be for you enough that the Congress is no longer interested in the legislatures. Touring for that purpose can only create bad blood. Vallabhbhai too agrees.

What I am doing is to think hard about civil disobedience. I have some idea of what I want to do. This much seems to me to be clear that civil disobedience must not be started under the Congress aegis, it must be started by me. Further I have not yet been able to see. I want you to come here a few days before 14th Feb. I am asking Jawaharlal to do likewise.¹

I hope you are keeping well in health.

[PS.]

Mahadev is taking 7 days’ fast for peace of mind and Durga for health. They are both doing well.

From a copy: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32579/55

246. LETTER TO MOTILAL NEHRU

SABARMATI,
January 20, 1930

DEAR MOTILALJI,

I have your letter. I did not realize you were so bad. In the circumstances there is no occasion for touring. After all we have said our say. Let those who wish seek election.

I do not think they will begin arrests so soon. But if they do, all the better. They are not likely to take all of us at the same time. If they do and if they put us all together, we shall have a rare time of it.

¹Vide “Letter to Jawaharlal Nehru”, 10-1-1930.
I am giving careful hints in Young India and Navajivan.¹

_Yours sincerely,_

M. K. GANDHI

[PS.]

I am not writing to Jawaharlal today. The messenger is being detained for the time being.

From a copy: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32579/57

247. LETTER TO ANANDANAND

SABARMATI,

January 20, 1930

Vallabhbhai shares with me your letters to him. About the Chamber let it be what it will. Bomanji has wired to say that he is coming on Friday.

I am writing this letter with regard to your suggestion for a tour. I do not think it would do any good to undertake a tour to campaign against the legislatures. If anything, I think it might do harm. It would certainly lead to more bitterness. Those who are keen on entering the legislatures will do so in any case. Let them. Such a campaign was necessary in 1920-21 because the idea was new then. The aim then was to get those who were in the legislatures to leave those bodies. This time everybody has decided that they should leave legislatures. Since the Congress is free from that bother it has rid itself of the corruption.

My task is to organize civil disobedience. I am thinking how to plan it. I cannot do that if I undertake a tour. I have got to be in the Ashram for that purpose. I have already made some decisions. The whole picture is not yet clear.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32579/56

¹_Vide “Independence Day”, 16-1-1930 and “Posers”, 16-1-1930._
248. LETTER TO HARIBHAU UPADHYAYA

January 20, 1930

BHAI HARIBHAU,

I got your letter. If meetings are prohibited, I think it would be best not to hold them in Indian States or in localities in which they are prohibited.

What can we do about the report in Arjun? What do you suggest?

Blessings from BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 6071. Courtesy: Haribhau Upadhyaya

249. NOTE TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

Silence Day [January 20, 1930]¹

CHI. GANGABEHN,

Tell me about the following things either at mealtime or during the afternoon or in the evening whenever you get time.

To whom did you give the bangles on the Rentia Baras² day? Why did you give them?

To whom are biscuits served in the afternoon? What is the quantity served if the persons concerned do not eat ghee and sugar?

Does anyone supervise the children’s spinning class? If no one does so, somebody should be asked to do it from today. What is the duration of the class and when does it commence?

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro–6: G.S. Gangabehnne, p. 34

¹ As in the source
² Bhadarva Vad 12, Gandhiji’s birthday according to the Gujarati calendar, celebrated as Spinning Day
250. LETTER TO SHARDABEHN SHAH

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 21, 1930

CHI. SHARDA,

Your original name becomes you best. A Sharadā would understand through a mere hint why a well-wisher forbids a thing. One reason for doing that is provided by you three sisters. You have all said the same thing in your letters, but instead of signing the same letter you wrote three separate letters and thereby wasted your time and money, which really belong to the people. A satyagrahi’s time or money is not his own. He has offered up everything to the Lord. The second reason is that a woman of careful habits does not write important letters with a pencil. I had to stop in this letter at the point where my handwriting starts, and complete it today, the 21st.

The real reason is that I think it desirable that you should wait for some time. It is not necessary for everyone to join a struggle. This being my view, I do not send a wire.

Blessings from
BAPU

251. LETTER TO DEVCHAND U. PAREKH

BHAISHRI DEVCHANDBHAI,

I have your letter. I do believe that, if the Thakore Saheb of Morvi offers to use his good offices to settle the dispute, they should slacken the satyagraha. I don’t understand why Manilal is so impatient. Moreover, Fulchand, too, is there to help them. Write to me from time to time. If possible, you should even run down to Malia.

Vandemataram from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5724

1 Goddess of learning
2 From here the letter is in Gandhiji’s handwriting.
252. LETTER TO KUNVARJI PAREKH

Wednesday [January 22, 1930]¹

CHI. KUNVARJI,

Rami and the children arrived here quite safe. I got your letter after the train for Viramgam had left. I have not, therefore, been able to send anyone there. Write to me from time to time and keep me informed about your condition.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9714

253. LETTER TO HARI-ICHCHHA DESAI

Wednesday [January 22, 1930]²

CHI. HARI-ICHCHHA.

I was happy to read the letter written by you three sisters. Write to me like that from time to time. Instead of my going there, why should not you all come here? How are your studies progressing? You ought not to give up spinning. How could you ever think of that?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7462

¹ From the postmark
² From the G.N. Register
254. LETTER TO BENARSILAL BAZAJ

January 22, 1930

CHI. BENARSILAL,

I have a letter from Jamnalalji and another from Rukmini’s paternal grandfather. Phalguna Shukla 2 is an auspicious day. It falls on Sunday, March 2. Regard this date as fixed for the wedding which will be solemnized in the Ashram. I hope it suits you. If you wish to write anything please do.

Blessings from
BAPU

SHRIYUT BENARSILAL
NEW SWADESHI MILLS RAILWAYPURA
AHMEDABAD

From Hindi: C.W. 9301. courtesy: Benarsilal Bazaj

255. INTERVIEW TO “THE DAILY EXPRESS”

AHMEDABAD,
January 22, 1930

The great trial of strength in this country is at hand. Events now depend entirely on the British Government, for we shall not in any circumstances, now or in the future, participate in any conference unless it is called to consider our complete secession from Great Britain. The day has passed when we could accept anything less than that.

We are engaged, as the world must know, in a struggle for the absolute severance of the present British connection and we shall not rest until that aim has been achieved.

We have begun now. You shall find in every section of the land millions of our men and women in their cottages spinning hour after hour. This means a nationwide boycott of foreign-spun cloths, and in time must mean the end of British predominance in an industry which is the principal reason for the presence of your British troops in this country.

Asked to outline the details of his plans for the execution of his crusade of civil disobedience, Gandhiji replied:

I am not yet sure of the form it will take. I have come here and in my seclusion I hope to evolve a plan of civil resistance which will not cause destruction or involve bloodshed, but which will be large enough to make the impression I desire. That is all I am doing here, otherwise, as you can see, I am spinning.

He lapsed here into a long theoretical explanation of the necessity for careful preparation. He was not certain that the precise moment had arrived which would ensure the success of this first step in the coming revolution, but it would be a guide—the measure of its success would be a guide to him. He went on to explain:

It is absolutely necessary for the person controlling such a movement to keep himself in tune with the voice of his followers, and therefore he must be as impervious to outside influences as he has to be sensitive to every little thing that goes on within.

I asked Gandhi if it was not possible that he might yet be able to avoid the extreme measures to which he was proceeding. When he replied promptly in the affirmative and said that the slightest gesture from the British Government would work the miracle, I inquired what that gesture in his view should involve. He replied:

Any real gesture from the British Government and the British people, or any unexpected combination, spontaneous and healthy among ourselves, which would in itself constitute sufficient pressure to compel world attention, and not merely the attention of the British people.

That meant, of course, combination with extremists, but what kind of gesture from Britain?

Supposing the British Cabinet were to say tomorrow, ‘We are prepared to consider and further a scheme of Indian independence’, and produce an atmosphere, as it can certainly do, congenial to the framing of such a scheme, that would automatically prevent any further preparation for civil disobedience.

Does not the proposed Round Table Conference offer you an opportunity for full discussion in this respect?

He answered with some emphasis:

No, not in any shape or form. Because the Round Table Conference scheme so far as I have understood it from authentic sources is designed to discuss anything between a form of government infinitely less than the present and Dominion Status. There is, for example, this proposition made by responsible ex-officials that powers hitherto enjoyed by the people of India, such as they are now, should be taken away, because these critics actually suggest that we have proved ourselves unworthy of the powers. Therefore, such a Round Table Conference, where even the capacity of India for full freedom is in question, has no place for me whatever. It is entirely out of the question that I should attend. I can only attend a conference which is pledged not to consider how much power India should or should not enjoy, but to consider ways and means of framing a scheme of complete independence. This is the only conference I could consider for a moment attending.

I asked Gandhi bluntly at this point whether he seriously believed his methods would frighten the British Government into subjection to his demands. It all depends on the response of the people. I am confident, but I am not certain. I think the time is ripe now to formulate my plans. It is my own limitations that make it impossible for me to penetrate the surrounding darkness.

In other words, the atmosphere round me is depressing, and there are undoubtedly forces of violence to be seen on the surface which I may not be able to control.

But, as I have said, true non-violence which I advocate might yet be able to circumvent and rise superior even to these forces, but being myself an imperfect instrument I may not be able readily to lay my hands on the proper form of non-violence which will meet these circumstances. It is this menacing force of violence which threatens the land which must first be sterilized.

Gandhi emphasized here that civil disobedience was the extreme limit of action that he would countenance, declaring it to be the limit of non-violence, anything more involving a programme of violence, to which he would never be a party.

Replying to a further question, he said:

The strength of the extremists is not great today, but is growing.

But supposing the extremists got out of hand and the responsibility for bloodshed becomes theirs, and therefore yours—what then? Supposing the British Government are then forced to take the action which the British public will demand of them, and they make arrests and arrest you—what then? He replied solemnly:

I am not afraid of arrest and it is quite open for the British Government to precipitate the reign of violence as they have done in the past. What the consequences then will be I cannot say but such a step would, in my opinion, be the sheerest folly.

Then your view of the immediate future is what?

The immediate future is, for a man so optimistic as I am, quite bright, but if I were to calculate the pros and cons and to enter into the arithmetic of the situation, I must confess that the problem is insoluble. I do not know what is going to happen. I am not in the happy position of a general who knows beforehand the whole of his plan, who works according to a time-table, and can profess to be able to forecast results with certainty.

But I can assure you of this much. The trial of strength in India is now at hand. The outcome depends entirely on the British Government.

There are two courses which they may pursue. One way is the old panicky way which will lead to Dyerism, to frightfulness and mad repression, and then anarchy. The other course is the way of the wise man who reflects on his past sins, repents, and retraces his steps. Let us hope.

The Searchlight, 12-2-1930

256. TO THE INDIAN CRITICS

I know that you are angry with me for my having been the supposed breaker of the negotiations with the Viceroy. You think I have made a hash of it. If I have done so, I was driven to it. I was disinclined to join the party. But I was wanted if only for my supposed influence over the masses. I went and spoke in accordance with the dictates of the inner voice. This ability to hear and obey that voice gives me whatever power I may have and has enabled me to render some little service to the country. You will not have me at this time of my life to change my course and listen to any other voice but the inner.

And what is the offence that I have committed in common with Pandit Motilalji? Not to depart from the Congress instructions, not to depart from the terms of the now famous Delhi manifesto? It is well known that the terms mentioned therein, no matter by what name they are called, were binding on all Congressmen. We broke on the very central point of Dominion Status. I make bold to say that the country has gained by the correct attitude Pandit Nehru and I adopted.

Surely nothing will be lost by the Congress abstaining from participation in the Conference if the British Cabinet mean well. Let those that have faith attend, and if they bring anything worth looking at from the independence standpoint, the Congress will capitulate. The days of being satisfied with costly toys are over. It is the substance that India wants.

British domination must cease.

British administration, that is costing the country far beyond its means, must end now, not in the remote future.

The vast majority of Congressmen believe that this cannot be had through any round table conference unless a proper atmosphere for it is created. Diplomatic language that may mean one thing for the British voter and another for the Indian peasant will never make India free. The British people must realize that the Empire is to come to an end. This they will not realize unless we in India have generated power within to enforce our will. The English have paid dearly for their freedom such as it is. They therefore only respect those who are prepared to pay an adequate price for their own liberty. The real conference therefore has to be among ourselves.

Instead therefore of looking at the independence movement with hostility, the critics should bless it even when they cannot identify themselves with it.

But perhaps they do not mind the independence propaganda so much as they mind the idea of civil disobedience. Will they have an armed rebellion instead? The Congress cannot stay its hands after having passed the independence resolution. It was no bluff, no showy nothing. It was a deliberate definite change in the Congress mentality.
It is then as much up to the critics as to me to devise ways and means of achieving independence.

There is undoubtedly a party of violence in the country. It is growing in strength. It is as patriotic as the best among us. What is more, it has much sacrifice to its credit. In daring it is not to be surpassed by any of us. It is easy enough to fling unkind adjectives at its members, but it will not carry conviction with them. I am not now referring to the frothy eloquence that passes muster for patriotism I have in mind that secret, silent persevering band of young men and even women who want to see their country free at any cost. But whilst I admire and adore their patriotism, I have no faith whatsoever in their method. They and I are as poles asunder. India’s salvation does not lie through violence. I am convinced that their methods have cost the country much more than they know or will care to admit. Let them study the reforms which they claim were a result of their activity.
Assuming that their claim is just, let them remember that the reforms have cost more than the country could at all pay. But they will listen to no argument however reasonable it may be, unless they are convinced that there is a programme before the country which requires at least as much sacrifice as the tallest among them is prepared to make. They will not be allured by our speeches, resolutions or even conferences. Action alone has any appeal for them. This appeal can only come from non-violent action which is no other than civil resistance. In my opinion it and it alone can save the country from impending lawlessness and secret crime. That even civil resistance may fail and may also hasten the lawlessness is no doubt a possibility. But if it fails in its purpose, it will not be civil resistance that will have failed. It will fail, if it does, for want of faith and consequent incapacity in the civil resisters. This argument may not appeal to the critic. I shall be sorry, if it does not. Even so, he will perhaps admit the purity of my motive.

We must cease to dread violence, if we will have the country to be free. Can we not see that we are tightly pressed in the coil of violence? The peace we seem to prize is a mere makeshift, and it is bought with the blood of the starving millions. If the critics could only realize the torture of their slow and lingering death brought about by forced starvation, they would risk anarchy and worse in order to end that agony. The agony will not end till the existing rule of spoliation has ended. I would have waited if I could have been convinced that the condition of the masses has undergone progressive amelioration under British rule. Alas, he who runs may see that it has progressively deteriorated under that rule. It is a sin, with that knowledge, to sit supine, and for fear of imaginary anarchy or worse, to stop action that may prevent anarchy, and is bound, if successful, to end the heartless spoliation of a people who have deserved a better fate.

Young India, 23-1-1930

257. TO ENGLISH FRIENDS

To the many known and still more unknown English friends, I owe perhaps a word on the eve of what may end in being a life-and-death struggle. In spite of myself I tried to believe in the possibility of self-respecting Congressmen attending the proposed Round Table Conference. I had my doubts because I knew that the Congress, though it is admittedly the most representative organization in the country, had no adequate power behind it for vindicating its position. It could therefore be represented at the Conference, only if it knew that the British Government and people had, either through a generous impulse or through the pressure of world opinion, decided to grant immediate Dominion Status, and that the Conference was to meet in order to discuss not anything the different groups liked but to discover the contents of a Dominion Status constitution. The Viceroy made it clear in no uncertain terms that he could give no such assurance. Such being the case, consistently with its past declaration and with the national interest of which the Congress claims to be the principal trustee, clearly it could not allow itself to be represented at the Conference. But it may be asked: Granting that the Congress could not in the circumstances be expected to send its representatives, where was the necessity for going from Dominion Status to independence? The answer is plain. Organizations like men, if they are to command respect and grow, must have a sense of honour.
and must fulfil their promises. Well, the Congress promised at Calcutta to change the creed to independence if Dominion Status was not forthcoming by the 31st of December 1929. It did not come nor was there any prospect of its coming for certain in the immediate future. The Congress therefore had no other course left open, if it was not ‘to commit suicide’, but to declare its immediate objective to be complete independence instead of Dominion Status.

But what is there intrinsically wrong in wanting independence? It is not possible for me to understand this opposition from sober Englishmen to the enunciation of an inalienable right of every nation to be independent except on the supposition that even they, the sober Englishmen, do not want India to be free.

‘But you are not fit for independence’, say some. Surely it is for us to judge whether we are fit or not. And granting that we are not, there is nothing wrong or immoral in our aspiring after independence and in the attempt rendering ourselves fitter day by day. We shall never be fit by being taught to feel helpless and to rely upon the British bayonet to keep us from fighting among ourselves or from being devoured by our neighbours. If we have to go through the agonies of a civil war or a foreign invasion, it won’t be a new thing in the history of nations that have struggled for freedom. England has gone through both the experiences. After all freedom is not a hot-house growth.

It is open to those English friends who are sincerely anxious for India’s welfare to assist India in her fight for freedom and on her terms. She knows best what she needs. Complete independence does not mean arrogant isolation or a superior disdain for all help. But it does mean complete severance of the British bondage, be it ever so slight or well concealed. The opposition therefore to the demand for immediate independence raises the strongest suspicions about the good intentions of those who have conceived the idea of the Conference. It must be clearly understood that the largest nationalist party in India will no longer submit to the position of a dependent nation or to the process of helpless exploitation. It will run any risk to be free from the double curse.

Is it not now intelligible why, notwithstanding its undoubted risks, I am planning some sort of civil disobedience so as to get together all the non-violent forces and see if it stems the tide of onrushing violence? Hatred and ill will there undoubtedly are in the air. They are bound sooner or later to burst into acts of fury if they are not anticipated in time. The conviction has deepened in me that civil disobedience alone can stop the bursting of that fury. The nation wants to feel its power more even than to have independence. Possession of such power is independence.

That civil disobedience may resolve itself into violent disobedience is, I am sorry to have to confess, not an unlikely event. But I know that it will not be the cause of it. Violence is there already corroding the whole body politic. Civil disobedience will be but a purifying process and may bring to the surface what is burrowing under and into the whole body. And British officials, if they choose, may regulate civil disobedience so as to sterilize the forces of violence. But whether they do so, or whether, as many of us fear, they will, directly or indirectly, consciously or unconsciously, provoke violence, my course is clear. With the evidence I have of the condition of the country and with the unquenchable faith I have in the method of civil resistance, I must not be deterred from the course the inward voice seems to be leading me to.

But whatever I do and whatever happens, my English friends will accept my word, that whilst I am impatient to break the British bondage, I am no enemy of Britain.

Young India, 23-1-1930

258. THINGS TO REMEMBER FOR 26TH

1. Remember that 26th is the day not to declare independence but to declare that we will be satisfied with nothing less than complete independence as opposed to Dominion Status so-called. Hence the word swaraj in the Congress constitution now means complete independence or purna swaraj.

2. Remember that on 26th we do not start civil disobedience, but merely hold meetings to declare our determination to attain purna swaraj and to that end to carry out Congress instructions that may be issued from time to time.

3. Remember that since we desire to attain our end by non-violent and truthful means only, we can do so only through self-purification. We should therefore devote the day to doing such constructive work as lies in our power to do.

4. Remember that at the meetings there are to be no speeches. There is to be mere recitation and approval by show of hands of the declaration distributed among all the Congress committees. The recitation should be in the provincial language.

For ready reference here is the text of the declaration' to be

1 For Gandhiji’s draft, vide “Draft Declaration for January 26”, 10-1-1930. made on 26th:

We believe that it is the inalienable right of the Indian people, as of any other people, to have freedom and to enjoy the fruits of their toil and have the necessities of life so that they may have full opportunities of growth. We believe also that if any government deprives a people of these rights and oppresses them, the people have a further right to alter it or to abolish it. The British Government in India has not only deprived the Indian people of their freedom, but has based itself on the exploitation of the masses, and has ruined India economically, politically, culturally and spiritually. We believe therefore that India must sever the British connection and attain purna swaraj or complete independence.

India has been ruined economically. The revenue derived form our people is out of all proportion to our income. Our average income is 7 pice (less than two pence) per day, and of the heavy taxes we pay, 20 per cent are raised from the land revenue derived form the peasantry and 3 per cent from the salt tax, which falls most heavily on the poor.

Village industries, such as hand-spinning, have been destroyed, heaving the peasantry idle for at least four months in the year, and dulling their intellect for want of handicrafts, and nothing has been substituted, as in other countries, for the crafts thus destroyed.

Customs and currency have been so manipulated as to heap further burdens on the peasantry. The British manufactured goods constitute the bulk of our imports. Customs duties betrary clear partiality for British manufactures, and arevenue from them is used not to lessen the burden on the masses but for sustaining a highly extravagant administration. Still more arbitrary has been the manipulation of the exchange ratio which has resulted in millions being drained away form the country.¹

Politically, India’s status has never been so reduced as under the British regime. No reforms have given real political power to the people. The tallest of us have to bend before foreign authority. The rights of free expression of opinion and free association have been denied to us, and many of our countrymen are compelled to live in exile abroad and cannot return to their homes. All administrative talent is killed, and the masses have to be satisfied with petty village offices and clerkships.

Culturally, the system of education has torn us from our moorings and our training has made us hug the very chains that bind us.

Spiritually, compulsory disarmament has made us unmanly, and the presence of an alien army of occupation, employed with deadly effect to crush in us the spirit of resistance, has made us think that we cannot look after ourselves or put up a defence against foreign aggression, or even defend our homes and families form the attacks of thieves, robbers and miscreants.

We hold it to be a crime against man and God to submit any longer to a rule that has caused this fourfold disaster to our country. We recognize, however, that the most effective way of gaining our freedom is not through violence. We will therefore prepare ourselves, by withdrawing, so far as we can, all voluntary association from the British Government, and will prepare for civil disobedience, including non-payment of taxes. We are convinced that if we can but withdraw our voluntary help and stop payment of taxes without doing violence, even under provocation, the end of this inhuman rule is assured. We therefore hereby solemnly resolve to carry out the Congress instructions issued from time to time for the purpose of establishing purna swaraj.

¹ Vide “Telegram to Jawaharlal Nehru”, 17-1-1930.

Young India, 23-1-1930

259. HAS NON-VIOLENCE BEEN ABANDONED?

A friend writes:¹

It is very improper of any editor to publish incorrect reports about someone in this manner, without proper investigation and verification. I have never said what has been quoted above. Non-violence is an integral part of my life; I can never forsake it. My faith in non-violence is growing day by day. I have also been getting visible proof of its success. Whatever I said regarding what people should do after my arrest is the exact opposite of what is quoted above. In other words, I said that if people should turn violent under these circumstances the adherents of non-violence should endeavour to restrain them. As for slavery, I said that if I were compelled to choose to be a witness to slavery or violence, I shall certainly choose to be a witness to violence. There is a vast difference between these words and what is published in the papers. There is no word in favour of violence in what I spoke. We are all witnesses to violent and other undesirable actions, even though it be unwillingly; but we have always been so and must remain so.

One lesson has to be learnt from the above letter, namely, when one hears or reads anything unusual about a well-known public servant or a public leader, it should never be believed without corroboration from him.

[From Hindi]

Hindi Navajivan, 23-1-1930

¹ The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had reported that some newspapers quoted Gandhiji as suggesting violent action in the event of his arrest.
260. NOTE TO ANAND T. HINGORANI

[January 23, 1930]

I value your frank criticism. But much of it is hasty. Its value lies in its honesty. You can certainly be with me on my walks.

BAPU

From a microfilm. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

261. LETTER TO DR. ROMER

SABARMATI,
January 23, 1930

DEAR DR. ROMER,

Could you please repair the accompanying set for Mrs. Gandhi? It slipped from her hand and broke.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 4582

262. LETTER TO RAMESHWARDAS PODDAR

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 23, 1930

BHAJ RAMESHWARDAS,

I got your letter. You need not worry. I will now set the matter right. You have not violated truth in any way. I can be blamed for an oversight, though I do not know what mistake I made. I distinctly remember that I told Pyarelal or Kusumbehn what should he done. If either of them made a mistake, it should be regarded as mine. This is not formal justice but real justice.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 202

---

1 From the addressee’s diary
2 Of the functioning and atmosphere of the Sabarmati Ashram
3 Of dentures
4 Vide also “My Notes”, 2-2-1930, sub-title, “Attention to Detail”.

VOL. 48 : 21 NOVEMBER, 1929 - 2 APRIL, 1930 263
263. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

ASHRAM SABARMATI,
January 23, 1930

CHI. PRABHUDAS,

I have your letter. Chhaganlal and Ramniklal are immediately leaving the Ashram because of the new rules. I do not want to go deep into the reasons for their leaving as I do not have the time. I have received your letter regarding Chandradutt. He is not at all ready to go to Vijapur. He started crying when I talked to him about it. What was the use of sending him against his wishes? So I am keeping him here. I will see what I can do. I am unable to look after him. From what you write, it seems that the situation is difficult. I hope you do know that Bhagirathji is here.

Keep making efforts to improve your health. Do not worry about us. I will go through the Ramayana. Ba sends her blessings.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32946

264. TELEGRAM TO NALINI RANJAN SARKAR

[On or before January 24, 1930]

MY CONGRATULATIONS TO SUBHAS AND OTHER FRIENDS. SEND ME FULL PARTICULARS. TELL ME ALSO WHAT STEPS BEING TAKEN.

Amrita Bazar Patrika, 25-1-1930

265. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 24, 1930

CHI. VASUMATI,

I have your letter. You may come whenever you wish to. I shall be here up to the 2nd of March, if I am not arrested before then. On the 2nd is Rukhi’s wedding.

1 The report is datelined “Calcutta, January 24”.
2 On their conviction
How did Kamala develop constipation? Never forget that it should not be tolerated even for a day.

Gangabehn must be giving you all the news about the ebb and flow here.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9275

266. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 24, 1930

CHI. BRIJKRISHNA,

I got your letter. Somehow or other your digestion must improve. There are several remedies, but ultimately you have to find one yourself.

As regards work, I would advise you to perform cheerfully whatever task is assigned to you. You will derive true strength out of that. Do discuss with Jamnalalji if you feel the need of doing anything in particular. He will delegate that job to you if he approves. Even otherwise have no worry. This is the duty of a true soldier. Our welfare lies in the welfare of the organization and only the man at the helm must judge the interests of the organization, even though the judgment may not be the right one.

You can certainly pay Vinobaji the boarding expenses incurred by the Ashram on you and you must not hesitate to inquire from Jamnalalji what you owe him for the expenses incurred in his kitchen. He will not only not mind it but will appreciate it.

Prabhudas has reached Vijapur. He shook off his fever only after reaching there.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2373
267. LETTER TO JAMNALAL BAJAJ
January 25, 1930

CHI. JAMNALAL,

What advice should I give you regarding Shantikumar? Do whatever you think is right. Do nothing beyond your capacity. I may however say this, that the step I am contemplating this time will be the final step. It will be either the greatest mistake of my life or its purest act. I for one have no doubt at all about its purity. I am examining myself as carefully as I can. My self-confidence has grown greatly.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32579/60

268. LETTER TO ANANDANAND
January 25, 1930

BHAISHRI ANANDANAND,

I have your letter. I do not know what agitation Malaviyaji is carrying on. But if it is against the Congress he can hold no position in the Anti-Untouchability Committee.¹ I have no doubt about this. Let Jamnalalji trace Malaviyaji’s speech against the Congress and send it to him, and, like a son to his father put to him his doubt about the propriety of his remaining in the Anti-Untouchability Committee. Malaviyaji is not hurt by such questions, and even if he is, he has a great capacity for suppressing his feelings. I had thought that he would never carry on an agitation against the Congress for whatever reason. It is necessary to clear this matter at once.

I have still not understood Rajaji’s suggestion regarding Vallabhbhai and myself touring. Boycott of the Assemblies is a necessary but negative and not a very important part of our new programme. The important and constructive part is civil disobedience. And for that I do not think it necessary for anybody to tour the country. On the contrary, those who regard non-violence as an essential means for the attainment of independence should avoid touring. If you do not follow this, ask me for further clarification, for it is necessary that Jamnalalji, you and others should understand it well.

The letter up to here was dictated at five o’clock in the morning.

¹ Set up by a resolution passed by the Calcutta Congress in 1928. Jamnalal Bajaj was appointed to look after the work of the committee.
Afterwards I got your letter regarding Shantikumar. I am writing to Jamnalalji today leaving the matter to his decision.

I note what you say about Nataraj. Many will come round now. This is no new experience for me in my life. We should go on doing what seems right to us. You are however doing well in meeting all these classes of people.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32579/59

269. NAVAJIVAN KARYALAYA

A full report of the activities of the Navajivan Karyalaya accompanies the present number of Navajivan. I invite to it the attention of every lover of the journal. The reader will please consider it pardonable if he notices anywhere in the Report a sense of pride resulting from self-satisfaction. This Karyalaya came into being in circumstances that no one had ever imagined. It got the services of Swami Anand, who helped to give the Karyalaya the stability which it now has. My purpose in drawing attention to the Report is to show that a business, run with honesty and in a spirit of service but in a businesslike manner, can succeed, and to dispel the illusion that one cannot afford to be entirely honest in business.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 26-1-1930

270. LETTER TO C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

ASHRAM,

January 27, 1930

MY DEAR C.R.,

I cannot give you the letter I would love to. Every ounce of energy is taken up in attending to the details of life here.

I do not still see the necessity of touring. In view of the impending C.D. I do not want to create occasions for other resistances. Let the critics have a clear board as far as platform propaganda is concerned. More of this when we meet. I want you to be here at least on the 12th if not much earlier. I want you to understand me of today as thoroughly as you can.

Yes, I wrote to Srinivasa, Satyamurti and Subhas. S.N. has sent me a book of choice adjectives in reply. S.M. has sent an argumentative apology. Subhas’s is a good reply. Anyway I am glad I wrote to them.

I feel that I have now a scheme of effective C.D. The picture is not yet complete. But I think I am nearing completion. I am thinking of nothing else. You must keep your health in full working order.

What a strange letter from The Hindu? Yet it did not surprise me.

Yours,

From a copy: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32579/62

271. LETTER TO A. SUBBIAH

ASHRAM,
January 27, 1930

MY DEAR SUBBIAH,

I grieve for you and your wife, for you must naturally have felt it. Death causes no sorrow in me now. It has become to me a veritable friend. Comparing death with birth, death may almost be an event for rejoicing and birth for sorrow. Death may be a deliverance, birth is imprisonment. Even a living baby dies after and never before . . . If there are still more debts to pay, there is another body to inhabit.

Yours,

From a copy: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32579/63

272. LETTER TO M. R. JAYAKAR

January 28, 1930

DEAR MR. JAYAKAR,

I thank you for your note¹. I said that if everything was in order I should try to help the friends. I had heard however that Sir Purshottamdas was unwilling to shoulder the burden. If my recollection is correct², the friends were also to raise an equivalent amount. I had entrusted the whole thing to Mr. Baban Gokhale

¹ For the resolution adopted by the Working Committee on Civil Disobedience and Gandhiji’s comments, vide “Never Faileth”, 20-2-1930.
² The rest of the sentence is obscure in the source.
³ About Gandhiji’s promise to secure for N. D. Bhosle a fund of Rs. 15,000 for a hostel for the depressed class students in Bombay; vide “Letter to N. D. Bhosle”, 17-3-1928.
⁴ The source has “correction”.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
who was not well impressed. If you could spare the time, I would like you to send for and see Mr. Gokhale. I would welcome your active intervention in this matter.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Jayakar’s Private Papers, Correspondence File No. 422. Courtesy: National Archives of India

273. PREFACE TO “KATHAKUSUMANJALI”

UDYOGA MANDIR, SABARMATI,
January 29, 1930

This is a collection of articles by Sjt. Valji Desai. All readers of Navajivan know by now the labour which preceded the writing of each one of these articles. They were not written to serve a journalist’s immediate aim, but were written to serve permanent public good. Hence they deserve to be published in book form. The subjects dealt with in these articles will be of great help to anyone seeking satsang. From the point of view of language, too, their value is no less, for Valji Desai commands a unique style.

MOKHANDAS KARAMCHAND GANDHI

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 9276. Courtesy: V. G. Desai

274. CLEARING THE ISSUE

I have never sought to delude Indian opinion into the belief that a definition of purpose, however plainly stated, would of itself by the enunciation of a phrase provide a solution for problems which have to be solved before that purpose is fully realized. The assertion of a goal, however precise its terms, is of necessity a different thing from the goal’s attainment. No sensible traveller would feel that a clear definition of his destination was the same thing as the completion of his journey.

* * *

But though the Conference cannot assume the duty that appertains to His Majesty’s Government, it will be convened for the purpose, hardly less important, of elucidating and harmonizing opinion, and so affording guidance to His Majesty’s Government on whom the responsibility must subsequently devolve of drafting proposals for the consideration of Parliament.

The foregoing titbits from His Excellency the Viceroy’s address

1 Literally, ‘a floral tribute in the form of stories’
2 Company of righteous or religious men to the Assembly make it as clear as possible that Dominion Status was never to be the immediate objective of the proposed Round Table Conference. And why need any of us doubt that even Lord Birkenhead will concede that Dominion Status may be India’s distant goal? Where time is of essence, it makes a difference not in degree but in kind. And when that difference in kind was discovered at the interview at Delhi, there was no meeting ground left between the Viceregal mentality and the Congress mentality. The Viceroy would not mind waiting for the grant of Dominion Status till every millionaire was reduced to the level of a wage-earner getting seven pice per day. The Congress will today, if it had the power, raise every starving peasant to a state in which he can at least get a living even equal to a millionaire’s. And when the peasant is fully awakened to a sense of his plight and knows that it is not kismet that has brought him to the helpless state but the existing rule, unaided he will in his impatience abolish all distinctions between constitutional and unconstitutional, even violent and non-violent means.

The Congress expects to guide the peasant in the right direction.

The Viceroy’s speech has cleared another thing. We now know why Sir John Simon has made the discovery that the question of Indian princes should be made an integral part of his precious inquiry. A pure creation of the British Government, unlike those in British India, bereft even of speech, they are to be pawns in the game of exploitation to be played at the Conference. The Conference room will ring with the name of Dominion Status whilst further burdens will be sought to be heaped upon the devoted heads of the starving millions. Let those who wish join a game where one party plays with loaded dice.

His Excellency is offended over the Congress resolution on financial obligations! Why? Be it noted that the Congress has referred the examination of the justness or otherwise of these obligations to an impartial tribunal. Is it a crime to question the propriety of some of these obligations? Lord Irwin’s impatience over that most innocent resolution is typical of the British mentality. Thousands of Englishmen honestly believe that all obligations have been incurred voluntarily and for India’s good, and that it is the height of ungratefulness even to suspect unfairness about any of the transactions of the Secretary of State for India.

Prominence has been exclusively given in that speech to the

---

1 On January 25
2 On December 23
unity which is impossible of full achievement so long as a foreign rule divides the varied interests and unconsciously or consciously plays one against another for the purpose of perpetuating itself. The Congress is well out of the tangle. It can afford even to be in a minority if need be. But the demonstrations of 26th are an unmistakable proof that the Congress still remains the one body to rule the hearts of the masses. Thank God, they have unity in their starvation. This Government is wholly impartial in the discharge of its duty of extracting the last pie from the peasantry whether Hindu or Mussalman or any other.

I make the same ‘childish’ offer (almost) to Lord Irwin that I had the honour of making to Lord Reading.¹ Let him and the British Cabinet initiate the following reforms:

1. Total prohibition,
2. Reduction of the ratio to ls. 4d.,
3. Reduction of the land revenue to at least 50% and making it subject to legislative control,
4. Abolition of the salt tax,
5. Reduction of the military expenditure to at least 50% to begin with,
6. Reduction of the salaries of the higher grade service to one half or less so as to suit the reduced revenue,
7. Protective tariff on foreign cloth,
8. The passage of the Coastal Traffic Reservation Bill,
9. Discharge of all political prisoners save those condemned for murder or the attempt thereat by the ordinary judicial tribunal, withdrawal of all political prosecutions, abrogation of Section 124 A, the Regulation of 1818 and the like, and permission to all the Indian exiles to return,
10. Abolition of C.I.D. or its popular control,
11. Issue of licences to use firearms for self-defence subject to popular control.

This is by no means an exhaustive list of pressing needs.² But let the Viceroy satisfy these very simple but vital needs of India. He will then hear no talk of civil disobedience, and the Congress will heartily participate in any conference where there is perfect freedom of expression and demand.

¹ Vide “Letter to Viceroy”, 1-2-1922.
² These were the terms which Gandhiji communicated to Bomanji who undertook to negotiate with Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald. (The History of the Indian National Congress, Vol. I, p. 366)
Our disunion is no bar to these reforms. The Congress is not agitating for a shadow. Hundreds of thousands of people do not gather to the annual session of the Congress in order to secure independence in mere name, they gather in the hope that the glow of freedom, when it comes, will be felt in the remotest village. The greatest evil is undoubtedly the economic pressure and the corroding feeling of inferiority which the people experience in every walk of life. We are like Sir Narayan Chandavarkar’s goat whom, when released from airy surroundings to which she was forcibly taken, the deceased Knight saw frisking about on a Poona road being led by her mistress to her dungeon home. We refuse to be satisfied with the airy peace, we would rather risk the dark anarchy if perchance thereby we can be released from the grinding pauperism.

The threat of dire vengeance uttered against civil and criminal resisters is idle and therefore uncalled for. There is this in common between both. Both have counted the cost. They are out for suffering. Would that their means were also common. Unfortunately instead of being complementary, they neutralize each other. I know that the non-violent revolutionary like me impedes the progress of the violent revolutionary. I wish the latter would realize that he impedes my progress more than I do his, and that I, being a Mahatma, if left unhampered by him, am likely to make greater progress than he can ever hope to make. Let him realize too that he has never yet given me a fair chance. Some of them no doubt have been most considerate. I want full suspension of his activity. If it will please him, I am free to admit that I dread him more than I dread Lord Irwin’s wrath.

His Excellency the Viceroy deserves the thanks of every Congressman for having cleared the atmosphere and let us know exactly where he and we stand.

Young India, 30-1-1930

275. DIFFICULTY OF PRACTICE

The reader should read Rev. B. de Ligt’s letter printed elsewhere in this issue¹. I welcome the letter as of a fellow-seeker in the field of ahimsa. It is entitled to respectful consideration. And such friendly discussion leads to a clearer conception of the possibilities and limitations of non-violence.

In spite of the greatest effort to be detached, no man can altogether undo the effect of his environment or of his up bringing. Non-violence of two persons occupying different positions will not outwardly take the same shape. Thus the non-violence of a child towards his father would take the shape of conscious and voluntary submission to his violence when he loses his temper. But if the child has lost his temper, the father’s submission to the child’s violence would be meaningless. The father would take the child to his bosom and instantaneously sterilize the child’s violence. In each case it is of course assumed that the outward act is an expression of the inward intention. One who having retaliation in his breast submits to violence out of policy is not truly non violent and may even be a hypocrite if he hides his intention. It should also be remembered that non-violence comes into play only when it comes in contact with violence. One who refrains from violence when there is no occasion for its exercise is simply unviolent and has no credit for his inaction.

¹ Under the title “Cat and Mouse”

Dominion Status ceasing to be a factor, the points raised from that imaginary event now need not be discussed except to say, that the enjoyment by India of Dominion Status would have meant India, then become an equal partner, instead of being ruled by it, dominating the foreign policy of Great Britain.

My general and hearty approval of the Nehru Report must not be taken to mean endorsement of every word of it. My approval need not carry endorsement of the constructive programme for the future governance of free India. My non-violence would prevent me from fighting my countrymen on the many questions that must arise when India has become free. A mere academic discussion can only hamper the present progress of non-violence. I know however that if I survive the struggle for freedom, I might have to give non-violent battle to my own countrymen which may be as stubborn as that in which I am now engaged. But the military schemes now being considered by the great Indian leaders are highly likely to appear even to them to be wholly unnecessary, assuming that we have come to our own demonstrably through non-violent means deliberately chosen and used.

My collaboration with my countrymen today is confined to the breaking of our shackles. How we would feel and what we shall do after breaking them is more than they or I know.

It is profitless to speculate whether Tolstoy in my place would have acted differently from me. It is enough for me to give the assurance to my friends in Europe, that in no single act of mine have I been consciously guilty of endorsing violence or compromising my creed. Even the seeming endorsement of violent action by my participation on the side of Britain in the Boer War and the Zulu revolt was a recognition in the interest of non-violence of an inevitable situation. That the participation may nevertheless have been due to my weakness or ignorance of the working of the universal law of non-violence is quite possible. Only I had no conviction then, nor have any now, of such weakness or ignorance.

A non-violent man will instinctively prefer direct participation to indirect, in a system which is based on violence and to which he has to belong without any choice being left to him. I belong to a world which is partly based on violence. If I have only a choice between paying for the army of soldiers to kill my neighbours or to be a soldier myself, I would, as I must, consistently with my creed, enlist as a soldier in the hope of controlling the forces of violence and even of converting my comrades.

National independence is not fiction. It is as necessary as individual independence. But neither, if it is based on non-violence, may ever be a menace to the equal independence of the nation or the individual as the case may be. As with individual and national independence, so with the international. The legal maxim is equally moral: Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas. It has been well said that the universe is compressed in the atom. There is not one law for the atom and another for the universe.

Young India, 30-1-1930

276. NOTES

BENGAL PATRIOTS

My congratulations to Sjt. Subhas Bose and his companions on one year’s rigorous imprisonment for having dared to serve the country. Bengal may be rent into many divisions and parties. But Bengal’s bravery and self-sacrifice can never wane. The only way the country can react to these imprisonments is to fill the prisons to overflowing till the Government has a surfeit of political prisoners. A few discharges occasionally obtained take the attention off the real thing which is to make such prosecutions impossible. That will only happen when either the British people have changed their viewpoint, or when we have, by filling the prisons honourably, made it profitless to imprison any more people. No government puts people in prison, if the punishment does not deter a single soul from so-called offence.

FORTY-FOUR DEATHS

Sjt. Benarsidas Chaturvedi and Pandit Bhavani Dayal send me the following wire:
Forty-four emigrants died on Sutlej returned West Indies. Bad diet, worse accommodation. Letter follows.

I await the letter. But the brief telegram is enough to show that there is hardly any improvement upon the old system after the happening of the tragedy that took place not long ago regarding such emigrants. The whole thing calls for a thorough investigation, and complete stoppage of all facilities to the countries that care not for the lives of those who labour for them.

LOCAL BOARDS

Sjt. Sasadhar Ganguly, a member of the Manbhum District Board and Purulia Municipality, writes:

I heartily endorse the suggestion made in this letter. No municipality represented by nationalists can accept dictation as to the holidays to be observed. And it would be an insult to the memory of departed patriots if members stole in the observance of their memory under cover of another holiday. It is the right of every nationalist municipality and local or district board to maintain its own holidays.

Young India, 30-1-1930

277. MONSTROUS MARRIAGES

Shri Benarsidas Chaturvedi writes:

I draw your attention with great shame to the article “Surfeit of child-marriages in Mathura” which was published in the 30th December issue of Mathuri Hitaishi. These weddings took place in our Mathur Chaturvedi caste. It is the misfortune of our caste that girls of 2, 2½ and 3 years are given in marriage. There has been considerable agitation over this. The well-known leader Shri Radheyjlal Chaturvedi, who belongs to our caste, tried very hard but these child-marriages could not be prevented. Last year an eight-month-old girl and a 15-month-old girl were given in marriage. One does not know how to reform these people. It must be pointed out that we, the Chaturvedi community, consider ourselves the highest Brahmins. We consider it a sin to eat food cooked even by other Brahmins.

What else can the marriages described by Benarsidasji be called than monstrous? It is sad that those who perpetrate such marriages continue to be respectable. This creates many difficulties in thwarting them; and when scriptures are quoted in their favour, the difficulties multiply. However, satyagraha can become a sure means of overcoming all kinds of tyranny. Always and under every circumstance we may not have the strength to resort to satyagraha or we may not know how to employ it. This is a different matter. It points to the limitations of the satyagrahi, not of satyagraha.

1 The letter is not reproduced here. The correspondent had asked whether members of local bodies should resist dictation from bureaucracy and suffer the consequences.

In the above circumstances every person can resort to one method. The family in which such marriages are recognized should be boycotted and no help of any kind should be expected of it. For example, if a father wishes to get his little daughter married, or if he wishes to sell her, then, in that case, the boys and girls of that house, or at least any one of them who has the courage, must leave the father’s house and should accept no help whatever from him. If this is done it will surely have some effect on the father’s heart. Even if there is none, those who have left the father’s house will escape from the sin. And let them remember that the ultimate result of such a sacrifice can only be good. I have cited one method of satyagraha in this case only as an example. According to the circumstances every satyagrahi can find other ways and means for himself.

[From Hindi]

Hindi Navajivan, 30-1-1930

278. LETTER TO RAJA MAHENDRA PRATAP

January 30, 1930

DEAR FRIEND,

Just a line to thank you for your letter. I am too preoccupied to say more just now. I know that you are doing all you can for the country. ¹

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

RAJA MAHENDRA PRATAP
KABUL
AFGHANISTAN

From a photostat: Raja Mahendra Pratap Papers. Courtesy: National Archives of India

¹Vide also “The U. P. Tour-IX”, 14-11-1929.
279. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 30, 1930

CHI. PRABHUDAS,

Your criticism of the poet’s praise of the wicked has not appealed to me. It is an expression not of Tulsidas’s charity but his satire. It is a condemnation of the wicked. It commends the company of the good and non-co-operation with the wicked. This is shown by every quatrain and every couplet of this group of verses.

The one on meeting causes great pain.

The other on parting takes away one’s life.

What does this suggest? Hence, though your effort is commendable and your imagination good, the writing needs improvement in certain places. You must be going ahead with the other cantos.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32579/65

280. LETTER TO JAYAPRAKASH NARAYAN

SABARMATI,
January 30, 1930

CHI. JAYAPRAKASH,

I have your letter. I was glad to know that you were able to find work in the Congress office. Now we shall only be able to meet when your work brings us together. If I stay out of jail for any length of time, you must keep writing to me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Hindi original: Jayaprakash Narayan Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library
281. NOTE TO ANAND T. HINGORANI

[January, 1930]¹

Well written² but this expensive note-book is of foreign make, I fear. You must learn to be thrifty. One pice ill spent is so much gone out of the pockets of the poor where it should belong.

BAPU

From a microfilm. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

282. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

February 1, 1930

MY DEAR RAIHANA,

I have your sweet letter. It was a great day the 26th. You always have my blessings. Sing away.

BAPU

From a photostat: S.N. 9613

283. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
February 1, 1930

CHI. VASUMATI,

I have your letter. Since you are coming shortly, I do not write anything in this letter. This time I am thinking of providing you a room near the place where I sit. The houses occupied by Jaisukhlal and Kashi have become vacant. They can accommodate a large number. “Hridaykunj”³ is overcrowded just now. Perhaps you can sleep in it, but we shall think more about this after you come.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9279

¹ From the addressee’s diary
² The addressee had noted down in his diary what had motivated him to come to the Ashram.
³ Gandhiji’s cottage in the Ashram
284. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
February 1, 1930

CHI. BRIJKRISHNA,

Your letter. Don’t you lose heart like this If the climate of Vijapur suits you, most certainly go there; or go to Bardoli if that suits you. And during summer you can stay at Tadikhet. Your health must improve. If you are drawn towards Vijapur, come here and we shall discuss about Morvi too.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2374

285. MY NOTES

THE KHAKHRECHI SATYAGRAHA

The Khakhrechi satyagraha was a simple one and on a modest scale. The demand put forward by the farmers was actually small, but the satyagraha owed itself to the cultivators’ courage, which was remarkable for Kathiawar and indeed surprising for a principality that lies in a remote corner of the region. What deserved the notice of all the States was how the farmers had initiated the satyagraha on their own. Their demand was so just that no one could have opposed it. The injustice against which the satyagraha was aimed was obvious. It was a painful surprise that the Durbar made the cultivators suffer for about six weeks. When a batch of satyagrahis arrived there to assist these farmers, it was only doing its duty. The satyagrahis deserve compliments for going through their sufferings patiently with no violation of limits of propriety. One cannot say that at the end of this satyagraha the prince on his part had showed any grace. It is true that the farmers have been pacified by doing them some justice and a promise to do some more. If the prince desires congratulations on the point, he might have them. But according to my information, the prince’s behaviour towards the volunteer corps lacked grace, decency and courtesy. It does no honour to him that the members of the corps should have been banished from the territory in spite of their modest conduct, and insolently dealt with by the State police. It is an unpleasant fact that the victorious end of the satyagraha is not followed by the sweetness which we should have expected. The people of Kathiawar have a right to expect from all the States there courteous conduct towards such public men as Sjt. Manilal Kothari and Sjt. Fulchand, so well known for their love of peace. The princes and the people both have a lesson to learn from this small-scale satyagraha.

CHILD-MARRIAGES

A Patidar youth writes:

Many others must be in such a plight. I would advise all such persons to refuse firmly to get into the bonds of such a marriage and to suffer whatever consequences follow from the refusal. Such marriages are a sign of our weak minds. This weakness retards our growth socially, economically, politically and spiritually. If we should assert our mental strength in one field, its effect cannot but be felt in the others. Hence I particularly advise youths in such a plight not to submit themselves, whatever the cost, to evil customs like child-marriage which are a bane to the society. Let them however show the utmost courtesy in their conduct towards the elders and equally scrupulous regard for truth. Courtesy without full regard for truth is no courtesy. It is only flattery, it is hypocrisy, and, therefore, truly speaking, it is discourtesy.

FEASTS AFTER DEATH

The Secretary, Visnagara Nagar youth Association, writes:

My note on the subject of child-marriage above applies in this case too. I hope that the deceased’s father himself will understand his dharma and refrain from following the savage custom of giving a caste dinner on his son’s death. If the father does not so refrain, let the Youth Association stick to its resolution, and let all the youths of the town of Visnagar support it. For the sake of their principle, youths ought to be, and remain, prepared to forgo the advantages of living in the family home and other monetary help received from their elders, or be ready to be boycotted by them.

ATTENTION TO DETAIL

Last December when I was in Wardha, the inmates of the Satyagraha Ashram gave me a piece of cloth of very fine count spun and woven by them. It was big enough for a khadi dhoti to be made

1 The letter is not translated here. Marriages of the correspondent, aged 15, and his sister, aged 10, were being planned by their father.

2 The letter is not translated here. The young men had decided to boycott the customary dinner after the death of a sixteen-year-old boy leaving behind a thirteen-year-old widow.
out of it. I could not bear the thought of taking it into personal use. Hence I thought of making money out of it. The cloth attracted the attention of Rameshwardas who offered Rs. 500 for it. He suggested that he would like me to give the five hundred rupees to the funds being collected for the Vidyapith rather than get it credited to any other account. Moreover, he put in the condition that in the Vidyapith account the money should not be shown and acknowledged in his name as was done; if at all it should be shown as proceeds of the sale of the khadi cloth. I had accepted this suggestion, and promised to write, when sending the money to the Vidyapith, that the acknowledgement was to be as I have described here. My impression is that I had given instructions to write to the Vidyapith accordingly, but the sum has not been acknowledged in the manner desired and was shown as a donation by Sjt. Rameshwardas in the note published. He was uneasy at this. For one thing, he thinks that the credit of having made a donation to the Vidyapith is too much for him to accept. Moreover, he does not have the means to make such donations. He fears that some persons, happening to read the mistaken acknowledgement published in his name, might seek such other donations, and it would not be nice to have to disappoint them. Hence Rameshwardas desires the true facts to be published, which I do here. In this case, directly or indirectly, even if the donation was for propagation of khadi, the religious merit earned belongs to Rameshwardas alone. However, a person who is particular about the uprightness of his worldly transactions would of course ask for the correction desired by Rameshwardas. That has been made here and I hope it will satisfy him. And let me take this opportunity to tell the well-wishers of the Vidyapith that the purse of the Vidyapith has not yet been filled and that they should fill it.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 2-2-1930

286. LETTER TO C. F. ANDREWS

February 2, 1930

MY DEAR CHARLIE,

You have written to me more or less regularly, but owing to your wanderings, I have not known where to write. Your latest has given me a deliberate address. I hope therefore this will reach you safely

---

2 In Canada and U.S.A.
wherever you may be.

I have read your article in the New Republic. I am not taking it in Young India. It is therefore being sent to Brelvi\(^1\) as you have desired.

The events have moved fairly fast. I see as clearly as never before that the spirit of violence must be dealt with by non-violent action if the situation is to be at all saved. There is the growing violence of the Government expressing itself in a variety of ways — the subtle exploitation and the necessary prosecutions as a consequence of that exploitation, for instance. You will note the extended meaning I have given to violence. Greed, pilfering, untruth, crooked diplomacy—all these are phases or signs or results of violent thought and action. The reaction of this violence upon the thinking educated people is remarkable and daily growing. I have therefore to deal with this double violence. To sit still at this juncture is stupid if not cowardly. I have made up my mind to run the boldest risks. I have arrived at this definite conclusion as a result of deep and prayerful thinking. Lahore revealed it all to me. The nature of the action is not yet clear to me. It has to be civil disobedience. How it is to be undertaken and by whom besides me, I have not yet seen quite clearly. But the shining cover that overlays the truth is thinning day by day and will presently break.

I hardly wanted to write this when I began this letter. But there you are.

Gurudev\(^2\) passed a delightful two hours with me. He has aged considerably. We came nearer each other this time and I was so thankful. We had fully intended to meet again, but Bomanjee suddenly took him away to Baroda.

Manilal and his wife and baby are here. Ramdas has a baby. He is in Bardoli assisting Vallabhbhai’s work. Mahadev is just now here.

We did not get your first volume\(^3\) from the publishers. I asked the Young India people to purchase a copy. It is on my desk at present. I have read the first chapter. It is a fair presentation of my religious attitude.

Love.

MOHAN

---

1. Syed Abdullah Brelvi, Editor of The Bombay Chronicle
2. Rabindranath Tagore
3. Mahatma Gandhi’s Ideas (1929)
[PS.]
I do hope you have had your copies of Young India.

From a photostat: G.N. 997

287. LETTER TO V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI

SABARMATI,
February 2, 1930

DEAR BROTHER,

I have your two letters. Of course, if you could send someone to take charge of Indian Opinion, he will shape its policy not according to my instructions but most decidedly yours. I should not interfere at all.

I wish you had written the letter you intended to. You know how I prize your opinion. It would give me immense relief to be able to adopt your mode of thought. But it has been my misfortune often to differ from most valued friends. My consolation lies in the fact that the mutual affection has never suffered.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 2192

288. LETTER TO DR. M. A. ANSARI

February 2, 1930

DEAR DR. ANSARI,

Will you please accompany Motilalji? It will serve a double purpose. You will treat him and help the treatment of the greater patient—our country. Please do not say ‘no’.

Tell Motilalji I shall reply to the conundrum of 11 points when we meet. I have a complete answer.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

Ansari Papers. Courtesy: Jamia Millia Library

1 This should be read after “Letter to V. S. Srinivasa Sastri”, p. 445.
2 He was going to Ahmedabad to attend the meeting of the Congress Working Committee.
3 In his reply dated February 10, 1930, Dr. Ansari expressed his inability to go to Ahmedabad “owing to an unforeseen professional responsibility”.
DEAR SIR PURSHOTTAMDAS,

There was no need for an apology for writing to me in English. My own impression is that the depreciation is largely manipulated and the letter from the India Office is intended to frighten us. At the same time when the effect of the Congress resolution comes to be really felt, I know that all the gilt-edged securities are bound to suffer heavy depreciation unless the British Government underwrites all losses and is in a position to do so. I know that during the South African War even all the Republican notes, which 24 hours before the declaration of war were fully worth their face value, became scraps of paper and I understand that such was the case in France and Germany during the late War. It would not surprise me, if we have to go through the same purgatory. The meaning to me of the resolution is that the poor people who have invested their little savings in these securities should not suffer and that the British Government should be made to take over such liabilities as are held by the tribunal referred to in the resolution to be unjust or unjustifiable.

Lastly, you will agree with me that the interpretation of the resolution as also the momentary depreciation are not of so much importance as what action India is going to take in the near future. We are so many and our case is so overwhelmingly just that, if the other parties instead of belittling the Congress resolution and the Congress efforts were to endorse them, even if by reason of their weakness, they cannot make common cause with the Congress, we should come to our own without much disturbance of the present life in the cities. A radical reshaping of the life in the cities which is today related to the false and artificial standard that is set up by the British administrators and that is out of all keeping with the life of the millions is in any case necessary, if the terrible burden of taxation upon the poor is to be removed. I hope you are not among those who believe that by a mere change of the constitution the starving ryots will find themselves in a position to pay a larger revenue than they are paying today or even to pay comfortably what they are paying now. In my opinion the only meaning of swaraj to these people will be an appreciable reduction in the taxes that they are paying directly and indirectly and fixity of tenure. This cannot happen until we, who are partners with the British administrators in the game of the exploitation of the masses, are prepared to change the angle of our vision even as we expect the former to do.

1 The addressee had written: “The repudiation of debts as approved of by the Indian National Congress at their Lahore session by their Resolution No. 10 has had considerable effect on the securities market both in England and in India as you are perhaps already aware. In the course of this week there has been published a letter addressed by the India Office to an investor in London, and I mention this to show what anxiety this Resolution of the Congress has created in the minds of investors in London.... My principal motive in addressing this letter to you is to draw your attention to the serious depreciation of Indian sterling securities in London since December last. . . . There is no doubt that an enormous amount of loss is being encountered by the present holders of Indian Government paper, either rupee or sterling, and it cannot be to the advantage of any school of politicians to make the innocent ones suffer. . . .” Vide also “Speech at Subjects Committee, A.I.C.C.-II”, 1-1-1930 & “Some Implications”, 6-2-1930.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

290. LETTER TO WILFRED WELLOCK
February 2, 1930

DEAR FRIEND,

You will forgive me for not being able to write to you earlier. It is impossible for me to deal with every friendly letter separately. I only hope that you are following carefully the pages of Young India in which I pour out my heart weekly.¹ It seems to me the problem is beyond Mr. Benn's² capacity even if he has the will. Justice will not be done to India till Britain realizes that India has been terribly wronged and that, therefore, she has to part with millions that are being yearly drained from India.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

WILFRED WELLOCK, ESQ.

From a copy: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S. N. 32579/70

¹ Vide “Clearing the Issue”, 30-1-1930 and “Some Implications”, 6-2-1930.
² Wedgwood Benn, Secretary of State for India, who had made a statement that India already had Dominion Status in action
291. LETTER TO SONJA SCHLESIN

February 2, 1930

DEAR MISS SCHLESIN,

I have your letter. I do wish you will come in time to correct the many inaccuracies you have discovered in the volumes. It is highly likely that when your long leave is on I may be in one of the king’s hotels. Even so, you will see my spirit incarnate in the Ashram. It certainly brings into prominence all my shortcomings and some of my good points.

Manilal, Sushila and Sita are here. Ramdas has also a baby. I think I told you of the event. He is in Bardoli. Manilal is anxious to bewith me during these times. He is waiting for a word from Sorabji.

Yours,

M. K. GANDHI

From a copy: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S. N. 32579/71

292. LETTER TO H.S.L. POLAK

February 2, 1930

MY DEAR HENRY,

What shall I do? I fear I have again disappointed you by my action in Lahore. If you had lived here as I have during the past 15 years, you would have done what I have. No tinkering will cope with the daily loot that is going on here. You should treat my writings in Young India as my weekly letter to you and other friends. Anyway our love will stand the strain of any difference in views and action based thereon.

Yours,

Bhai

From a copy: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S. N. 32579/72

1 A Jewish woman who was Gandhiji’s secretary for many years in South Africa
2 Sumitra Gandhi
293. LETTER TO REVASHANKAR JHAVERI

February 2, 1930

RESPECTED REVASHANKARBHAI,

I have your letter. I have read the matter enclosed with it. I would advise you to issue a brief notice and hold a meeting here of the original donors. It will not matter if you cannot attend the meeting. The statement of accounts should be published and a copy of it should be sent to each donor along with the notice. I shall be present at the meeting and try to guide the proceedings. I shall try to get a resolution passed to hand over the amounts to the Vidyapith in accordance with certain rules and cautions which will be framed. If anyone suggests a better arrangement, we shall consider it at that time. Please let me know if you approve of this idea. I will then make a draft of the notice and send it to you. Get the rest done by Jamnadas. I do not wish to involve you in any worries or responsibilities in this matter. The proper thing would be to do what we can without too great an effort and then let things take their own course.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S. N. 32579/67

294. LETTER TO MANILAL KOTHARI

February 2, 1930

BHAI MANILAL,

If it is likely that the Maharaja of Jodhpur will see you, it would be better for you to go to Delhi. Even if you think of going to Jodhpur, a visit to Delhi would be worth while. I would not advise you to go to Jodhpur by defying the State’s prohibitory order. I have often said that if we accept the policy of utmost peace, we have got to endure some consequences that follow from that policy. By all means let the subjects of Jodhpur do all they can. They can never do enough. But I believe that you can do nothing more than carry on correspondence with the Jodhpur state. Having said this, I may tell you that my advice to you would always be finally to do as your conscience bids you.

I did not follow the point about the car. Vallabhbhai will explain when he comes. Take care of your health. You seem to have done well in Bhavnagar. Return to Vallabhbhai the balance of Khakhrechi money.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32579/66
295. A LETTER

February 2, 1930

I have your letter. I am sure what the people should do if I am arrested will be clear when that time comes. Shri Aurobindo Ghosh is not likely to come out at present.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S. N. 32579/68

296. A LETTER

February 2, 1930

RESPECTED THAKORE SAHEB,

Only today I saw in the papers that your father had passed away. I remembered my happy relationship with him and felt sad. Man’s body perishes but his good actions do not. You are heir to your father’s good actions. May you add to them. Be happy and make your people happy. This is my wish and also my blessing.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32579/73

297. LETTER TO AMBALAL

February 2, 1930

BHAISHRI AMBALAL,

I have your letter. If you are regretting not having given the customary funeral dinner under pressure from people, you should give one. But the truth is that the dead neither eat nor drink. If you feed others, is that food going to reach the dead person’s stomach? But do what you think right.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32579/74

298. NOTE TO MAHADEV DESAI

Silence Day, February 3, 1930

CHI. MAHADEV,

I did not find a single word in “If We Let Go” which required to be changed.

1 A note by Mahadev Desai published in Young India, 6-2-1930
Vallabhbhai himself had suggested four or five days. Whatever happens, you must be present on the morning of the 12th. You know it is your job to persuade others to come forward. Has Durga stopped crying?

I understand about the Gujarati translation. We shall decide about it after I break my silence. If you have left today, we shall decide about it after you return. Counting the days, I think it is necessary that you should return on the 8th. If Durga wishes to go with you, you may take her.

I will send a letter to Reginald.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11470

299. LETTER TO REGINALD REYNOLDS

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
February 4, 1930

MY DEAR REYNOLDS,

Here are two letters for you.¹

I hope you received my previous letter. I want you to tell me all your experiences after you separated at Lahore. I have called Young India my weekly letter to friends. I hope, therefore, that you are carefully taking in that mouthful.

No time to dictate more.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

From a photostat: C.W. 4529. Courtesy: Swarthmore College, Philadelphia

¹ Vide the following item.
300. LETTER TO C. Y. CHINTAMANI

SABARMATI,
February 4, 1930

DEAR FRIEND,

This is to introduce a young English friend, Mr. Reynolds, who has come to India in a spirit of purest service. He has no axe of his own to grind and he holds views that may startle even the most advanced nationalist.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

SIT. C. Y. CHINTAMANI
ALLAHABAD

From a photostat: C.W. 4530. Courtesy: Swarthmore College, Philadelphia

301. LETTER TO S. P. PATWARDHAN

February 5, 1930

BHAISHRI APPA.

I have your letter. We may certainly participate in all Congress activities to which the authorities of the states do not object. There should be no need to seek permission, but it would be good to know their attitude indirectly if it can be done. I am not in favour of carrying on the Congress activities in the states by defying prohibitory orders wherever such orders exist. This is because states are helpless in such matters. In all such matters we have to use our discretion. In some places it may be easy to carry on such activities and in some others it may be wisdom not to do so. There is, of course, no room for cowardice on any occasion. Nor would it be proper to think that because some people have been carrying on such activities in some particular states, we also may do so in others. Whether or not the Congress activities should be carried on in a particular state should depend on conditions in that state and the skill of the worker.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32579/75
302. LETTER TO DEVDAS GANDHI

February 5, 1930

CHI. DEVDAS,

I have your letter. There was also a long letter which deserved to be read by all. So I had it passed on to Mahadev, who may already have sent you some reply. Your letter of today has not impressed me. The earlier one did. In today’s letter I notice fatigue. The meanings you read in the speeches of Benn and the Viceroy are forced. If you read my recent articles carefully you will find in them the answers to all your arguments. The eleven points I have put forward1 have silenced even a bitter critic of mine like Natarajan. He believes that my demand is perfectly just. Why don’t you understand that neither Benn nor the Viceroy is willing to concede even a single one of those demands or could do so even if he were willing? To make that possible responsible Englishmen will have to educate the British public opinion. Till that is done nothing is possible.

Vallabhbhai does not at all have the feeling you attribute to him. I asked Vallabhbhai and he told me positively that he did not in the least feel as you thought he did. He gave me his clear opinion that after the Viceroy’s reply nothing else is possible. You must be observing what Raja is doing at present. Or do you think that he is striving so hard in Madras against his better judgment merely to please me? From his letter I see that the effect of the 26th January celebration has been unexpected. Even the papers which had been against us have now become silent. What more can I write to console you?

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32579/76

303. LETTER TO RANI VIDYAVATI

February 5, 1930

DEAR SISTER,

I have received your letter. If somebody takes away our spinning-wheel by force, we must spin on a takli. If even the takli is taken away, we can prepare takli from a piece of bamboo and spin on it. If even this is not possible let us not feel that the yajna has been violated.

1Vide “Clearing the Issue”, 30-1-1930.

It would be wonderful if you could work in a village. Where is Lakshmi Devi? How is your health? Why have you written in pencil? Are you cheerful?

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Hindi original: Rani Vidyavati Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

304. THE ISSUE

I gladly publish the foregoing circular letter. I have the privilege of knowing Mr. Horace Alexander personally, and I believe him to be a true friend. Common courtesy demands utmost frankness at this stage. I am as anxious as he and other English friends for honest co-operation as between equals. But the element of equality is wanting. The interview broke on the one single issue of Dominion Status, but not as Mr. Alexander puts it. No promise was asked for, ‘that the outcome of the Conference would be the immediate establishment of full Dominion Status’. In the words of the Viceroy this is what was asked for:

On behalf of the congress Party the view was expressed that unless previous assurances were given by His Majesty’s Government that the purpose of the Conference was to draft a scheme for Dominion Status which His Majesty’s Government would undertake to support, there would be grave difficulty about Congress participation.

This is totally different from what Mr. Horace Alexander has understood. Both Lord Irwin and the Cabinet must have their own opinion apart from Simon Commission. That the latter has been a misfit and misfire everybody knows, though it may not be diplomatic to acknowledge it. If the farce of the Commission needs to be kept up for hoodwinking the British electorate, it is bad game at which the Indian reformer should not be invited to play. In the language of the man in the street, unless the reformer knows that he has in the Cabinet and the Viceroy his staunch supporters, he may not attend the Conference except to court disaster. If all the parties that are likely to

---

1 Not reproduced here. In his letter, Horace G. Alexander had described how most English people remained in complete ignorance of Indian conditions and concluded: “Whatever may come, I believe you will not forget that you have friends in England, and you will not forget, as I hope we shall not either, that we are all children of one Father, even though some of us may be erring children. With sincere good wishes for a year that may still belie our fears and more than justify our hopes, . . .” be invited could agree upon what they want, they would not need to go to London to demonstrate the fact. The Viceroy knows, the world knows, that the parties that are supposed to represent Indian opinion do not agree and are not likely to agree just yet. For them to be invited to London for any proposal they may wish to make is to accentuate their differences. The fact is that there is really only one party in the country that has weight with the masses. It is the congress. There is perfect agreement among Congressmen as to the demand. But I am free to confess that the Congress does not yet command such recognition from the Government. It has not yet the sanction behind it for enforcing its will. If therefore the Congress sends representatives to a heterogeneous conference, it must know definitely what the British Government intend doing. It must not have an open mind as to what India should have. The Conference, therefore, to serve any useful purpose, must necessarily have only one thing in view, i.e., to frame or recommend a scheme of Dominion Status (now independence) to suit India’s needs. This Lord Irwin could not do; hence the break. The other points raised by Mr. Alexander were never reached at the interview. But there never has been any indication of a real change in the British policy. Political prosecutions, or to speak more correctly, political persecution has never ceased. And it cannot cease unless the British residents in India will be content to live only on the goodwill of the people. And this they will not do, so long as they consider it to be their right to exploit the starving masses of this land. Every approach to the Indian problem is made by them on the basis that British commerce must not suffer. Congressmen hold that British commerce as it is carried on today must suffer a radical change if India is at all to live.

Young India, 6-2-1930

305. SOME IMPLICATIONS

Well might the points suggested by me as for immediate attention raise a storm of indignation in the British Press. They mean more to the British investor, and in fact every Britisher, than Dominion Status or even Independence. Dominion Status or independence may conceivably be hedged in with stipulations that may make it impossible for India to get rid of the burdens that have brought her to the verge of utter starvation. Hitherto progress towards the so-called constitutional freedom has meant more burdens upon the dumb millions and more money into the pockets of the Britisher. And

1 Vide “Clearing the Issue”, 30-1-1930.
British imagination pictures to itself an India under Dominion Status remaining a perpetual El Dorado for the British. If Dominion Status is feared, it is because the reality of it would mean ability to undo continuing wrongs and therefore unjust burdens whether in the shape of Government of India loans or guarantees given to the military and the civil services, or favours shown to British manufactures at the expense of India, or concessions granted to the British trader, capitalist or prospector.

Whether therefore a bona fide Round Table Conference comes today or the day after, it is as well to know the truth lying behind the remarkable demonstration of 26th ultimo. The masses feel that the Congress will remove the burdens which they vaguely feel but cannot describe. I venture to claim that in formulating the eleven points, I have somewhat and to the extent of my ability given a concrete shape to their feeling.

It is not difficult to understand the resentment felt in England over the ‘demands’ nor the hysterics of Sir Malcom Hailey over the idea of repudiating debts in any circumstance whatsoever. Yet that is precisely what every ward, when he comes of age, has the right to do. If he finds the trustee having buttered his own bread at the ward’s expense, he makes the trustee pay for his malpractices or misappropriation or breach of trust or whatever other name by which his selfishness may be described. There will thus be no atmosphere for a dispassionate examination of the case of the dumb masses either in India or in England till the Englishmen realize that they must part with some of the ill-gotten gains and cease in future to expect the inflow to England of millions that are annually drained from India under one pretext or another. If the stopping of the drain means a revision of the tastes of the city people of this land who live upon the commission they make from their British principals, it means also that the British as a whole will have to revise their tastes by reason of the sudden stoppage of the millions looted from India for their sakes.

It is clear, that the riches derived from the tillers of the soil are not a voluntary contribution or a contribution compelled for their benefit. The villages are not affected by the Pax Britannica so-called; for they were untouched even by the invasions of Timur or Nadirshah. They will remain untouched by anarchy if it comes. But in order that this enormous contribution may be exacted without resistance, violence has been organized by the British Government on a scale unknown before and manipulated in so insidious a manner as not to be easily seen or felt as such. British rule has appeared to me to be a perfect personification of violence. There are snakes that by their very appearance paralyse their victims. They do not need to make any further demonstration of their power. Even so, I am sorry to have to say, has the British power worked upon us in India. Frightfulness is not a word of: Indian coinage. It was coined by a British judge1 in order to bring vividly to light the meaning of Jallianwala massacre.
And we are promised a multiple, if we dare lift up our heads and say:
‘We will have no more of this loot that has bled India dry.’

Let us, too, understand how organized violence works and is on that account far more harmful than sporadic, thoughtless, sudden outburst. Ordered violence hides itself often behind camouflage and hypocrisy as we see them working through the declarations of good intentions, commissions, conferences and the like, or even through measures conceived as tending to the public benefit but in reality to the benefit of the wrongdoer. Greed and deceit are often the offspring as they are equally often the parents of violence. Naked violence repels like the naked skeleton shorn of flesh, blood and the velvety skin. It cannot last long. But it persists fairly long when it wears the mask of peace and progress so-called.

Such awe-inspiring violence concealed under a ‘golden lid’ begets the violence of the weak which in its turn works secretly and sometimes openly.

Non-violence has to work in the midst of this double violence.
But if it is the supreme law governing mankind, it must be able to make its way in the face of the heaviest odds. Violence such as we have to face may well make us cowards utterly unable to discover the method of working non-violence. If therefore the forces of violence arrayed against us cannot be checkmated during our time, it would be no proof of the futility of non-violence, it would certainly be proof of the pervading cowardice.

The greatest obstacle in the path of non-violence is the presence in our midst of the indigenous interests that have sprung up from British rule, the interests of monied men, speculators, scrip holders, land-holders, factory owners and the like. All these do not always realize that they are living on the blood of the masses, and when they do, they become as callous as the British principals whose tools and agents they are. If like the Japanese samurai they could but realize that they must give up their blood-stained gains, the battle is won for non-violence. It must not be difficult for them to see that the holding of millions is a crime when millions of their ownkith and kin are starving and that therefore they must give up their agency.
No principal has yet been found able to work without faithful agents.

But non-violence has to be patient with these as with the British principals. The aim of the non-violent worker must ever be to convert. He may not however wait endlessly. When therefore the limit is reached, he takes risks and conceives plans of active satyagraha which may mean civil disobedience and the like. His patience is never exhausted to the point of giving up his creed. But working in a hostile atmosphere, he runs the risk of forces of violence, which till then were held under check from mutual fear, being let loose through the restraint of such fear being removed. The Government will spread out its red paws in what it will call self-defence, the party of violence may commit the mistake of seeing its chance of coming out in the open. The non-violent party must then prove its creed by being ground to powder between the two millstones. If there is such a party, all is well for India and the world. My hope and plans are built upon an ever-increasing faith in the existence of that party of true non-violence.

Young India, 6-2-1930

306. NOTES

The Finishing Touch

It will be remembered that the Broomfield Committee\(^1\), whilst holding that the Bardoli peasants' complaints were substantially justified, and cancelling the enhanced assessment to the extent of something over 89,379 rupees, still recommended a net increase of Rs. 30,806 over the old assessment. But there was a legal flaw about this recommendation. Government seem to have rectified the error by revising the assessment in something like 40 villages, and now they are making arrangements for giving full effect to the Broomfield Committee’s recommendations about the rectification of errors in the classification of lands and kindred matters. The net result of all this might amount to, in effect, a restoration of the old assessment of the Taluk. That would put a finishing touch to the success of that historic struggle. No wonder that an English friend, writing to Mahadev Desai about his Story of Bardoli, says, “Lahore made me feel most sceptical of the power of India to work unitedly and effectively for swaraj, but the Story of Bardoli has more than answered my fears.”

Though both the Lahore demonstration and the Bardoli struggle were offshoots of the Congress, the difference the English friend noticed is easily explained. The Lahore demonstration was the whole

---

\(^1\) Comprising R. S. Broomfield and R. M. Maxwell
Congress at its best and its worst. It necessarily included every variety of character. Moreover it was the yearly deliberative function. The Bardoli struggle on the other hand was a Congress body in action. It was Congressmen who conceived it. The Sardar himself was the President of the Provincial Congress Committee, and he mobilized the whole resources of the Committee for the struggle. The forces of violence were hushed in the presence of non-violent action. It remains to be seen how the all-India struggle for independence will shape. The law that governed the Bardoli struggle which centred round a local grievance will govern the greater struggle for independence. The partakers will have to be strictly non-violent; they will have to visualize the grievance of slavery as the Bardoli peasant visualized the grievance of an unjust assessment; they will have to submit to the strictest discipline even as the Bardoli peasants did.

THE POET ON BARDOLI

The Bard of Shantiniketan writing to Mahadev Desai on his Story of Bardoli says:

I have finished your Story of Bardoli. It has the spirit of the Epic Age in its narrative of the triumph of moral right over arbitrary power through a fight moral in character, unique in modern times. I thank you, and the leader of the fight and the fighters, also your great guide. My blessings.

Let us all on whom the Poet showers his blessings accept them in all humility and qualify ourselves for the task that awaits us. For if the blessings pronounced by the great are given for something accomplished, they also carry with them the expectation of something greater still.

Young India, 6-2-1930

307. WHY ‘PURNA’ SWARAJ?

A fair friend writes:

This letter raises two questions. I shall take the last first. To qualify ‘swaraj’ is no doubt doing violence to art. The writer’s logic is also irresistible. But very often in national and similar complex matters logic and art have apparently to be sacrificed. In substance that which carries out a good intention is both true logic and true art.

1 Vallabhbhai Patel
2 Rabindranath Tagore
3 The letter is not reproduced here. The correspondent had doubted the nation’s capacity to win independence by non-violent means and questioned the propriety of prefixing the adjective ‘purna’ to ‘swaraj’.

VOL. 48 : 21 NOVEMBER, 1929 - 2 APRIL, 1930
'Swaraj’ in the Congress constitution was given a double meaning: it could be within the Empire if possible, without if necessary. A word or an expression had therefore to be found in order to connote the last meaning only. We could not do without the word ‘swaraj’. Hence the expedience of ‘purna swaraj’. I admit that it does not sound well to the ear. But if it carries out the nation’s meaning as it does, it will presently sound well. We could not have managed with a dubious word.

The second question is more difficult to dispose of. But attainment of swaraj means conquest over all difficulties. Non-violence or rather non-violent men are on their trial. They have to find out the best method of offering battle in spite of the violent atmosphere surrounding them. Non-violence is not of much consequence if it can flourish only in a congenial atmosphere. It is not then non-violence. It may easily be fear of being hurt. But my reading of the national temper is somewhat different from the friend’s. Dissensions and squabbles do not affect those who have ultimately to take part in the struggle. The latter will instinctively react to active non-violence. But whether they do or not, the party of non-violence must now use up all its resources. There can be no more waiting without its creed being laughed at or itself being thoroughly and rightly discredited. If it cannot act, it must own its incapacity and retire from the field of battle.

Young India, 6-2-1930

308. CONFUSION OF THOUGHT

A correspondent who is an honours graduate and an LL.B. writes:

This letter shows how even a trained lawyer can become confused when he is obsessed with an idea. The group that would not have liked the interview to succeed is the very group I had in mind. They are not the avowed enemies of India, but they are ‘deluded patriots’. The other group the writer refers to could never concoct a plot to assassinate the Viceroy for whose protection they are paid. Of course nothing is impossible, but we can only act on probabilities. Moreover the outrage deserves condemnation even if the plotter was a person belonging to a Government department. The Congress could not pass the incident by without laying itself open to the charge of hypocrisy or criminal indifference about its own creed.

---

1 The letter is not reproduced here. Referring to Gandhiji’s article “Cult of the Bomb”, 2-1-1930, the correspondent had written that the bomb outrage might have been manoeuvred by the guardians of law and order to justify their existence or magnify their importance.

And why am I guilty of participating in violence when I condemn the outrage? Condemnation or no condemnation, the Government would go its own way in trying to find out the guilty parties. I would be participator in violence if I approved of the penal code and its sanctions. If I had my way I would fling open doors of prisons and discharge even murderers. But I know that in holding this opinion, I am in the proud position of being in the minority of one. I must not however take up the valuable time of the reader by discussing my pet theories about crimes and punishments.

The writer pays poor compliment to the party of violence or by whatever name it may be called, when he imputes to them fear of death. They forfeited their lives when they dedicated themselves to their creed. That they keep themselves in hiding does not mean that they fear death, but it means that they want to hang on to life as long as possible so as to carry out their project. They stand in no need of my protection, active or passive. They know that I hold their lives as dear as my own, but they know too that I am a determined enemy of their creed. But my enmity resolves itself into an attempt to convert them to my own. Condemnation of the outrage was a method of conversion. That it may fail in its purpose does not affect it. I must act according to my lights and leave the result to the Higher Power.

Lastly, the writer’s complaint that I had not a word to say about the policy that is responsible for the existence of the cult of the bomb shows what a superficial reader of Young India he must be. He must know that almost every issue of Young India contains some condemnation of the Government policy. What perhaps he means is that I should have said something about it in the very article. Well, it would have been wholly irrelevant, and what is more, my analysis of the doings of the cult would have lost much of its force. The point to be made in the article was that violence was ineffective, no matter how wicked was the policy of the Government.

Young India, 6-2-1930

309. “KHADI PRADARSHAK”

The book series called Navajivan Mala of the Shuddha Khadi Bhandar of Calcutta has already been mentioned by me in a former issue of Hindi Navajivan. I have, today, before me the booklet Khadi Pradarshak published by this Bhandar. This is the fifteenth number of the series. Besides the eight pages of appendix, it has eighty-six pages and costs only four annas. This booklet is a Hindi translation of the Khadi Guide published by the Charkha Sangh. A lot of information has been given in this guide. It gives particulars of the progress of khadi in every province, the output and the sales in each one of them. Every person who loves khadi should have a copy of this booklet. There are several addresses where the books of Navajivan Mala are obtainable. The principal one is 132/1 Harrison Road, Calcutta.

[From Hindi]

Hindi Navajivan, 6-2-1930

310. VARNADHARMA AND DUTY OF LABOUR

Questions asked and my answers to them are given below:

Q: Do you accept the duty of [bread] labour expounded by Tolstoy?
A: Yes, certainly.

Q: Do you expect that every person should do all his work himself?
A: I do not expect it and I do not think it practicable; Tolstoy too did not consider this essential. Man’s dependence is no less than his independence. So long as he remains in society, and remain he must, he has to curtail his independence to fit into that of others, that is, society. Therefore it can only be said that each person, as far as it is possible, must do his work himself; that is to say, I may fill a mug for my use, but may not dig a well myself. Not to fill the mug is pride; to plan or begin digging a well is stupidity. One must, therefore, exercise discretion in deciding whether a task is to be done by oneself or with the help of others.

Q: Do you wish that all should earn their livelihood by the sweat of the brow?
A: Certainly. Everyone does not do so and that is why dire poverty has arisen in the world and especially so in India. This is also the main cause of ill health and the immense greed for acquisition of wealth. If all earned their livelihood by physical work, greed would decrease and much of the power to acquire wealth would weaken automatically. If physical labour is done, ill health will almost disappear and the greatest gain will be the complete obliteration of the distinction between high and low in society.

[From Hindi]

Hindi Navajivan, 6-2-1930

---

1 Published serially in four consecutive issues of Hindi Navajivan
311. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

February 6, 1930

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

I never thought you would miss the importance of the 11 points. However I do not propose to waste your time by arguing when a day or two after this reaches you will be on your way to Sabarmati. I expect you here for certain on 12th. I hope to satisfy you that our case has been strengthened not weakened by the 11 points. Will Kamala accompany you?

Yours,
BAPU

PANDIT JAWAHARLAL NEHRU
ANAND BHAWAN, ALLAHABAD

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1930. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

312. LETTER TO LILAVATI KODIDAS

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
February 6, 1930

CHI. LILAVATI,

I have your letter. It will be a good thing if you form the habit of writing with ink and in a good hand. See that you keep hysteria at arm’s length now. You should reason with Uncle and explain to him that, since the jewellery is lying unused, it would be better to [sell it and] get interest on the money. Do not be in a hurry to return. You are, however, free to return as soon as you can do so with complete peace of mind. Live on milk and fruit.

Blessings from
BAPU

SMT. LILAVATIBEHN KODIDAS
C/O MR. DWARKADAS GORULDAS
KALBADEVI, BOMBAY NO. 2

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 9271

1 Vide “Clearing the Issue”, 30-1-1930.
313. LETTER TO MANILAL KOTHARI

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
February 7, 1930

BHAI MANILAL,

It would be better if you slowed down a little even for the sake of the service which you are yearning to take up. Humbly recognizing that nobody’s service is indispensable to the world, we should serve only within the limits of our physical capacity. If we imagine that though ill, we should climb heights and earn the applause of the world it will never do. Rather we should regard it as ignorance to do such a thing. I am firmly of the view that no harm would have come to Rajkot if you had not addressed a public meeting for one hour at Wadhwan. Now take complete rest. If you cannot do so there, come here or go to Chorvad. Observe self-control in eating. You can eat all the sweets you like after you have recovered. Know that moderation in eating is a hundred times more beneficial than fasting.

Regarding the car, write a polite letter to the Thakore Saheb of Morvi and ask him. No satyagraha is going on against him at present.

From the Gujarati original: Chhaganlal Gandhi Papers. Courtesy: Sabarmati Sangrahalaya

314. A LETTER

February 8, 1930

I have your letter. I see some risk in holding the conference at present. It is likely to produce unnecessary bitterness. It will not be possible to prevent trouble-makers from getting in. They may harm our work by making or inspiring all sorts of demands and forcing unsatisfactory replies. Our duty is to go on doing what we can and be content to satisfy as well as we can those who bear real hardships. This, however, is only a personal opinion expressed without knowledge of the actual circumstances. It need not therefore be given more importance than it deserves.

From the Gujarati original: Chhaganlal Gandhi Papers. Courtesy: Sabarmati Sangrahalaya
315. A LETTER

February 8, 1930

Condemning the wicked does not necessarily betray want of moderation. The condemnation is not of the wicked but of their wickedness. We often criticize the English in strong language, but we never wish ill of them. From that we claim that we condemn not the wicked but their wickedness. As a matter of fact the word condemnation is wrongly used here. There is no condemnation of the crow in calling it black, but there is of the swan in calling it black. Saying that Yudhishthira resorted to falsehood on one occasion in his life is not to condemn him, but saying that he was a coward because he did not protect Draupadi when she was being disrobed is condemning him and shows one’s ignorance. If you understand this distinction, my meaning, will become clear to you. Bowing in respect both to the saintly and the unsaintly may be regarded as an explanatory comment on Chapter XVI of the Gita. There the description of the demoniac nature was necessary in order to explain the meaning of the divine nature and show its excellence by contrast.

From the Gujarati original: Chhaganlal Gandhi Papers. Courtesy: Sabarmati Sangrahlaya

316. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

Sabarmati Ashram,
February 8, 1930

CHI. PRABHUDAS,

I have your letter. There is no need to be humble in the criticism of the wicked. In such criticism, you criticise wickedness, not the wicked. We speak ill of the British many a time but we never wish them ill. From that, we can claim that the criticism is of wickedness and not that of the wicked. In fact, the word ‘criticism’ is wrongly used here. Calling a crow black is not criticism of the crow but calling a swan black, is criticism. It is not a criticism of Yudhisthir when we say that he lied once in his life, but to call him a coward because he did not rescue Draupadi when she was being derobed, is his criticism. It is ignorance. What I want to say will be clear to you if you understand the difference. Praise of saints and satan alike can be considered criticism of the 16th chapter of the Gita. But in order to bringout fully, the meaning of a divine temperament, and to lend it importance, it was necessary to describe the qualities of the satan.

I understand about Chandradutt and Devidutt. It is certainly necessary to know how the work ought to be done in the villages. I hope you are gaining weight.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S. N. 32941

317. MY NOTES

OUR CARELESSNESS

A friend writes:¹

As has been stated above, there is no doubt that smokers transgress limits, and non-smokers do not even attempt to prevent the former from smoking, out of shame or fear. We no longer have such respect for women that in their presence we would not smoke, would not use obscene language or be guilty of any other discourteous conduct!

I cannot blame the railway servants in this matter. What can they do when passengers themselves are indifferent to their own comforts? We should bear in mind that these persons do not take up employment for the service of others. Moreover, even in accordance with the law, they have no authority to prevent without reason any passenger from smoking. This is because the regulations do not prohibit smoking under all circumstances, but only when one passenger objects to another doing so when the latter happens to be smoking in a compartment which is not meant for smokers. How can an officer know whether or not a particular passenger has been asked not to smoke? Hence so long as any passenger does not complain, the officer does not have the authority to prevent anyone from smoking.

Volunteers can render much assistance in this. They can politely reason with smokers and, if the latter are not amenable to reason, they can complain to the officer and pull the alarm-chain and stop the train. But I would not advise them to do this.

Difficulties are bound to arise in trying all at once to enforce a regulation, enforcement of which has not been attempted since it was made. Clashes too will arise. Hence, for the present, the task of the volunteers consists in educating public opinion and in explaining to the non-smokers their rights and to the smokers their limits. When the passengers begin to understand this matter and the smokers realize that many people are inconvenienced by their smoking, it is possible that they will stop doing so. Moreover, a satyagrahi volunteer will not as far as possible make anyone obey regulations by getting him punished. By trying to perform the duty of a policeman a reformer often fails to perform his own duty. The dharma of a reformer lies in trying to bring about a change of heart in those who violate regulations. In the beginning, patience is required for doing this but in the end the result endures and becomes widespread. Despite this, where certain ill habits have taken root, the law where it prevails can be helpful in eradicating them. This has happened in the past and will also happen in the future; for instance, the task of prohibition can be carried on very speedily if it is given the backing of law. Those who are addicted to smoking have formed such an evil habit that they would seldom listen to anyone however courteously they may be approached. For the enthusiastic volunteer, therefore, this is a fine occasion for testing his own forbearance and courtesy. In doing so, the volunteers can also utilize this fine occasion for cultivating among the people respect towards women. And, an attempt can be made to prevent those who create public nuisance just as those addicted to smoking keep doing so on all occasions without any consideration for the feelings of others.

¹ The letter is not translated here.

KHADI WHILE ABROAD

A gentleman asks: ¹

I do not think so. If after going abroad, it is desirable or necessary to compete with the Britishers in all matters, why not do so here also? With regard to virtues, we should always compete with an enemy, with regard to vices, there can be no such competition. Anyone who wishes to wear khadi can do so even when he is abroad. When Pandit Motilal went abroad, he had his entire outfit—from head to foot—made out of khadi. The definition of khadi here also includes material which is made out of hand-spun and hand-woven wool. It is true that I have expressed an opinion that there is no reason to regard khadi as something compulsory when living abroad. It may not be possible there to get the kind of khadi one requires or it may not be possible to buy the quality one wants as it may be too expensive; in that case, it would not be regarded as adharma to buy cloth which is mill-made but swadeshi or even that which is foreign.

¹ The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had sought advice whether Indians going abroad might give up khadi and compete with the British in all matters.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 9-2-1930

318. “GANDHISHIKSHAN”

Bhai Nagindas Amulakhrai writes:

It is not surprising that I should be enamoured of my own writings. Hence, readers will not set much store by my testimonial to these volumes; nevertheless, those who are attracted towards Navajivan would like to make a collection of these volumes which are available almost at the price of its paper. My request to such persons is that they take advantage of Bhai Nagindas’s suggestion. His address is as follows: Sjt. Nagindas Amulakhrai, Sukhadwala Building, Ravelin Street, Hornby Road, Bombay.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 9-2-1930

319. SPINNING-WHEEL WITH TWO SPINDLES

I, too, believe that the speed of spinning can be much increased if the sliver is of a good quality. I am a slow spinner. Hitherto I could spin in an hour 160 rounds of 20 counts. As the slivers I am at present using are good I am able to spin 200 rounds per hour without effort.

Good slivers are obtained when cotton pods are plucked by hand and are free from impurities, the cotton-wool is ginned by hand so neatly that no seeds get crushed and mixed with the cotton and, finally, such cotton is carded carefully.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 9-2-1930

---

1 A set of thirteen volumes of Gandhiji’s teachings
2 The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had requested Gandhiji to take such note through Navajivan as he thought proper of the reduction in the price of this set from Rs. 8-10-0 to Rs. 2-0-0.
3 These are Gandhiji’s remarks published along with an article by Prabhudas Gandhi under this title.
320. VILLAGE ROADS

We have seen how to remove dung-hills and prevent harm being done to the village health and to produce from it manure worth its weight in gold. We also saw how to increase village income without much hardship by not using cow-dung for making dung-cakes for fuel, but instead by producing manure from it. Moreover we discussed how village health might be protected by cleaning wells and ponds and maintaining them clean.

Now let us consider village roads. One glance at them tells us how tortuous they are. They look like heaps of dust just levelled. Great hardship is caused to men walking along the roads, as also to cattle drawing cart-loads over them. For use on such roads we have to build heavy carts with heavy wheels, with the result that the bullock is unnecessarily required to draw a double load. To the hardship of the journey over roads full of dust heaps, we add the expense involved in having to draw heavy carts. If the roads are metalled, the bullock would draw double the load ordinarily carried, the carts would be less expensive and the health of villagers would improve. The present state of things illustrates the proverb, “Butter is given away with whey and, moreover, the giver is branded a slattern.” On these roads so much mud is formed in the rainy season that it gets highly difficult to drive the cart through it, and men have either to swim or walk waist-deep in water. And in addition, people get the gift of all kinds of diseases.

Where the village is an extended dung-hill, where no one takes care of wells and ponds, where roads are what they were in Grandfather Adam’s days, how can the state of children be any better? The behaviour of children, their culture—everything is bound to reflect the conditions of the village life. A look at the children will show that they are cared for no better than the roads. To speak of this now, however, would be to digress.

What, then, is to be done for these roads? If the spirit of co-operation prevails among the inhabitants, with no cost or with a little expense on account of gravel, etc., villagers can buildmetalled roads and add to the wealth of the village. Moreover, both the young and the old would get true education free of charge through such co-operative activity. As far as possible, villagers should employ no labourers for any work. The village inhabitants are mostly peasants

---

1 This appeared in the supplement Shikshan ane Sahitya.
2 Vide “Cowdung Cakes or Manure?”, 17-11-1929.
and hence their own labourers.

When necessary they may ask their neighbours to help them. By giving a little of their time to the roads daily, the village people would soon set their roads right. To be able to do this, they should prepare a map of the village streets and also of the approach roads leading to neighbouring villages. Then they should arrange a programme of work according to their capacity so that, men, women and children, all might participate to some extent. The present state of our culture embraces family life only. The improvement of villages depends upon an extension of the family feeling to the whole village. The look of our villages would be a measure of our culture. Just as every member in a family joins in keeping the home clean, every family should be prepared to do the same for the village. Not until this is done can the village people live happily and become self-reliant. Today, however, we look up for everything to the Government—for clearing dung-hills, for making the roads and keeping them in repair, for cleansing wells and ponds, for children’s education, for protection against wild animals, for protection of our property, etc. This attitude of the mind has crippled and disabled us. This helplessness goes on ever increasing and adds to the burden of taxes. If all the villagers regard themselves answerable for the cleanliness, the neatness and the safety of the place they live in, most of the necessary improvement would take place immediately and almost without cost. Moreover, with increased facilities for travel and transport and with improved health, the economic condition of the village would also improve.

Some application of intellect is certainly needed for cleaning the roads. I have already spoken of the road map. All the villages do not have the same kind of facilities for building good metalled roads. Some villages may have stone, but in several regions of Bihar no amount of search would find any stone. What ways should be adopted to make strong roads is left to the volunteers contemplated in this series of articles. Let him go and examine the neighbourhood. Let him see if there is anything worth learning from Government methods in the matter. One could certainly adopt such Government methods for making strong roads as are suitable. At times we might come across village elders who have much practical knowledge of such matters. The village worker should have no hesitation in finding and using such talent in the countryside. As in other matters, so in this one of making strong roads, let the village worker make a beginning by setting an example with his own personal labour.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 9-2-1930
321. LETTER TO PURSHOTTAMDAS THAKURDAS

MY DEAR SIR PURSHOTTAMDAS

I thank you for your letter.

I must not enter into argument with you, for argument is useless when conviction on either side is deep-seated. I can only give you my assurance that I shall take no hasty step. A risky step need not necessarily be a hasty step.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

SIR PURSHOTTAMDAS THAKURDAS
BIRLA HOUSE, ALBUQUERQUE ROAD
NEW DELHI

Purshottamdas Thakurdas Papers, File No. 96, 1930. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

322. LETTER TO R. B. MOTWANI

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter.

The problem you present should not cause any difficulty to a real lover of his country. He will neither marry nor fall other wise. Love of the country should be sufficient to keep him untouched by base passions.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

R. B. MOTWANI
C/O SIND CENTRAL CO-OPERATIVE BANK, LTD.
KARACHI (SIND)

From a photostat: G.N. 2777

1 Wherein the addressee had written: “I do not believe India will benefit either now or within a few decades by revolution as much as by a process of evolution. . . . If the constitution is not sufficiently changed after the Conference in London as to make us masters in our own house . . . I can understand your impatience. But to resort to civil disobedience during the brief intervening period does strike me as being a hasty step.”
BHAISHRI MANILAL,

... Shankerlal is not here at present. It is within his authority to call for the figures you have asked for. I have sent your letter to the Charkha Sangh office and asked for the figures. But I am afraid you are unnecessarily prejudiced against Harjivan\(^1\). Harjivan is an experienced man. He has won the confidence of all his superiors. He is a capable and self-sacrificing worker. He cannot take more profit and put it in a safe. He keeps accurate accounts. The Charkha Sangh has not accepted the policy of taking limited profit on all varieties of cloth, but has adopted the policy of limited profit on the total stock and permitted more profit on some special varieties of cloth because on some other varieties it takes even less than the permitted limited profit. For instance, there should be no objection to taking 100 per cent profit on khadi lace, while on dhoti no profit need be taken or very little if at all. Some things may even be sold at loss. Business can be carried on only in this way.

Kashmiri items are made for luxury-loving people like you and me, while the khadi sold in the general market is for persons who do not know patriotism but are forced to adopt simplicity. Hence some of the things are sold even at a loss. If you have anything to say against this policy adopted by the Charkha Sangh you may certainly do so. You and I get from friends money for first-class fare when we ask them for third class. Similarly we get the costliest variety of Kashmiri shawl when we ask for an ordinary Kashmiri shawl. And when we ask for dates from an orchard we get dates neatly packed inelegant boxes more expensive than the dates. If we condemn the people taking profit on such dates and shawls, don’t you think we would degrade ourselves? How many crores do you think there would be in India who consumed such dates and wore such shawls? As I am dictating this letter I have in front of me a Kashmiri shawl which would cost not less than twenty-five or thirty rupees. And though I know this, I am shamelessly using it every day. I hope you will understand my meaning.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Chhaganlal Gandhi Papers. Courtesy: Sabarmati Sangrahlaya

\(^1\) Omission as in the source
\(^2\) Harjivan Kotak, A. I. S. A. representative in Srinagar
324. LETTER TO JYOTI PRAKASH

ASHRAM SABARMATI,
February 9, 1930

BHAISHRI 5 JYOTI PRAKASH,

I have received your letter. Do include the Ramayana in the curriculum. Keep sending me your diary every week. Give each hour’s account of your activities in it.

Blessings from
BAPU

SHRI JYOTI PRAKASH
LALA GYAN PRAKASHJI MASTER
RAMJAS SCHOOL, NO. 2
ANAND PARBAT
DELHI

From the Hindi original: S.N. 34066

325. LETTER TO CHHOTUBHAI PATEL

February 10, 1930

BHAII CHHOTUBHAI,

It saves me time to write out a reply instead of asking you to come over. When one comes across a suitable girl one can hardly resist the temptation to marry. You may, if you can, overcome the temptation, if you are convinced of the greatness of brahmacharya. If you insist more and more on qualifications in the bride, you would find no one eligible. You would find them all [fit] to be your sisters; but no one to be your wife.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10469
326. LETTER TO KUNVARJI PAREKH

ASHRAM SABARMATI,
February 12, 1930

CHI. KUNVARJI,

I have your letter. Chi. Rami will leave for Rajkot by the 6th or the 7th. Will that be all right and serve the purpose? I hope you are keeping good health.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9715

327. AN ADVOCATE’S DILEMMA

The following2 from an advocate has been passed on to me for reply:

The dilemma is there. My sympathies and my opinion are with the advocate. But the argument goes deeper than the advocate has carried it. When I use a postage stamp or a coin bearing the King’s portrait, I seem to belie my profession of independence. When I obey a policeman’s instructions or pay taxes, I acknowledge the King’s authority. And some of these things I should be doing even if we declared an independent parallel government which we have not as yet. How am I to solve the puzzle? Must I, because I do not or cannot go the ‘whole hog’, continue to bear allegiance to the King? One escape from the dilemma is to withdraw all such voluntary co-operation as it is possible for me to withdraw and as is calculated to diminish the prestige and the authority of that rule. The Congress could not go further than it did without weaning from it a large number of useful and able workers. Experience has shown that the Congress organization breaks down where lawyers withdraw their assistance. They have from the very commencement taken the most active and effective part in the Congress. It is unfortunate, that the other classes still feel powerless to run Congress Committees without the assistance of lawyers. They are called officers of the Court. They know what foreign rule means. By training they are the fittest to carry on political agitation when they are honestly and patriotically moved. They have undoubtedly done much for the national movement, but much more is expected from them. And I have no doubt, that when the movement demands from them the last sacrifice, many if not all of them will prove equal to it. Meanwhile since the Congress has not declared boycott of law-courts, the matter rests with individual conscience. Where, consistently with it, a lawyer cannot both practise and remain in the Congress and cannot give up practice, he may give up Congress, and still help it as effectively as if he was in it, provided of course that he believes in independence being the right and the duty of every Indian to work for and achieve. I may mention incidentally that many lawyers think that they have a lien on the Congress, and they resent as intrusion the advent of laymen to office, whereas they should deem it a privilege to prepare laymen to take office and make them feel that, if they the laymen have bravery and sacrifice, they can run Congress organizations just as well as lawyers. Indeed there are today several Committees that are being efficiently and ably managed by non-professional men. The movement in that direction however needs to receive a much greater impetus. We want a Committee in every one of the seven hundred thousand villages. Thank God we have not got in all India even seventy thousand lawyers. Cobbler, scavengers, tanners, tailors, bricklayers and the like should be found willing and able to work Congress Committees. The educated few can hasten the event, if they will.

1 According to the Gujarati calendar
2 Not reproduced here. The correspondent had asked how a practising lawyer owing allegiance to the King could be a member of the Congress after the independence resolution.

Young India, 13-2-1930

328. ‘THE DUTY OF LAWYERS’

The first number of the English edition of the bulletin of the Organizing Committee of the International Juridical Conference has been on my file for the past three or four months. The bulletin is edited by a Board of Directors drawn from Austria, Czechoslovakia, Cuba, France, Germany, Holland, Indonesia, Mexico, Poland and Venezuela. The Organizing Secretary is Dr. Alfred Apfel of Berlin where the bulletin is issued. The editorial notice says that the bulletin is only a temporary publication. The opening article is headed the ‘Duty of Lawyers’ from which I take the following two interesting sections as being not irrelevant in the present times in India.

Young India, 13-2-1930

1 Not reproduced here. The extracts described how the fundamental rights in a democracy are abridged through the creation of extraordinary courts and emergency laws and the attitude a jurist should adopt in the situation.
329. MY INCONSISTENCIES

Thus writes Sjt. Trivikramrav, a Bezwada barrister:1

Some others have also written much in the same fashion. I must admit my many inconsistencies. But since I am called ‘Mahatma’, I might well endorse Emerson’s saying that ‘foolish consistency is the hobgoblin of little minds’. There is, I fancy, a method in my inconsistencies. In my opinion there is a consistency running through my seeming inconsistencies, as in nature there is a unity running through seeming diversity.

Boycott of legislatures is wholly consistent with the demand for the reforms suggested in the eleven points.2 I would myself sit if need be in a legislature in which the passage of the reforms is assured. But the existing legislatures are powerless to pass most of those measures if any at all. I have not said that the struggle for independence is to cease the moment [the] eleven points are gained. What I have said is that, if they are gained, the Congress will lift the ban on the Conference and that civil disobedience will be suspended. The points were mentioned in order to prevent the misconception that the Viceroy’s speech had given rise to. Even an Independence Constitution is not an end in itself. Independence is wanted in order to remove the grievous defects of the present rule. Independence means at least those eleven points, if it means anything at all to the masses, the man in the street. Mere withdrawal of the English is not independence. It means the consciousness in the average villager that he is the maker of his own destiny, he is his own legislator through his chosen representatives. The eleven points are some of the vital tests of the villager’s authority. The very letter of the Bezwada barrister shows how necessary it was to clear the issue. By mentioning the eleven points I have given a body in part to the elusive word independence. I should be prepared to reconsider my attitude towards the legislatures if the legislators can accomplish the things covered by the eleven points. And if they are covered, I should have no hesitation in advising Congress representation at the Conference where independence could be made the basis. For I do conceive the possibility of a conference even for discussing an Independence Constitution.

1 The letter is not reproduced here. The correspondent had pointed to the inconsistency of advocating boycott of legislatures while voicing ‘minimum demands’ and allowing Congressmen to associate with local bodies.
2 Vide “Clearing the Issue”, 30-1-1930.
As to the local bodies, I am aware of my weakness. I have little faith in their substantial usefulness. I admit that they have led to bad blood and disgraceful wrangling. But one cannot take things by storm in a vast body like the Congress. There is no question now of capturing local bodies. A wise and selfless man, when he finds that he can render no service through these bodies, will retire from them as did Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, Sardar Vallabhbhai and Babu Rajendra Prasad.

As for my leadership, if I have it, it has not come for any seeking, it is a fruit of faithful service. A man can as little discard such leadership as he can the colour of his skin. And since I have become an integral part of the nation, it has to keep me with all my faults and shortcomings, of some of which I am painfully conscious and of many others of which candid critics, thanks be to them, never fail to remind me. Of this however I am certain, that if they and those who would never criticize me will have the patience to understand my programme and have the steadfastness to follow it, purna swaraj is near.

Young India, 13-2-1930

330. TREATMENT OF SMALLPOX

Friends have pressed me to publish the modes of the treatment of smallpox patients. The Udyoga Mandir has not escaped the infection. There have been in all seven cases in the Mandir. One has proved fatal. It is possible to say that that case was not treated like the rest. It was an early case, and I feel guilty of having shown want of firmness. Contrary to my conviction, the girl remained without hydropathic treatment and was permitted even to take solid food. The treatment adopted in the cases that have recovered or that I hope will recover was:

1. Complete rest;
2. Free ventilation;
3. Light received through a red medium;
4. No solid food, and milk diluted with equal quantity of water when there was no fever; otherwise orange juice or dried grapes juice;
5. Occasional opening medicine and regular enema;
6. Wet sheet pack. Rolling the patient in a sheet wrung out of cold water and put between blankets till perspiration.

During the 1915 epidemic I had two very serious cases of confluent smallpox. I knew nothing then of red light treatment. In the 1916 cases the boys were given a bath daily with hot water in which neem leaves were boiled. This was regarded by me somewhat a substitute for Condy’s fluid. After convalescence the boys were stronger than before.

The treatment given in a book called Why Vaccinate by Harold W. Whiston, price 6d., published in Macclesfield by Claye, Brown and Claye is copied below.¹ The book can be also had from the National Anti-Vaccination League, 50 Parliament Street, London, S.W.

I have no doubt that more people die of fright than of disease itself. I notice this fright even in my children who, poor things, have been taught from childhood to dread the disease. There is no reason whatsoever that smallpox is any more fatal than many other diseases. Smallpox yields to nature’s treatment just as well as any other illness. It is nature’s way of purging the body of latent poison. In order to drive away the fright and to prevent simple people from rushing to the vaccination depot, I give the most salient passages from the book to show how unnecessary, even dangerous and filthy the practice of vaccination is.

This is how a medical man describes the process of preparing lymph:²

The following emphatic testimony³ against vaccination of Dr. Walter R. Hadwen will be read with interest.

There is ample other medical evidence against vaccination collected in the booklet.

Young India, 13-2-1930

331. NOTES

AMAZING IGNORANCE

The Secretary, C. P. (Marathi) Congress Committee, writes:

In the C. P. Legislative Council, while opposing the motion of Mr. G. R. Pradhan, recommending to the Local Government a grant of amnesty to political prisoners, etc., Mr. Gordon on behalf of the Local Government is reported to have stated that offenders like Avari, who incited murders and preached open violence, would never be pardoned by the Government.

The ignorance of some of these officials is equalled only by their arrogance. They do not even care to study the facts on which they claim to speak with authority. If Mr. Gordon had taken the trouble to inquire, he would have discovered that Sjt. Avari had never incited to murder or violence. Whatever his faults, he was never guilty of incitement to violence. And Mr. Gordon added injury to insult by associating Sjt. Avari’s name with pardon. If I know him at all, I know that he will never be guilty of asking for pardon. As a satyagrahi that he has always professed to be, he could not ask for pardon. If he commits an offence, he serves his deserved punishment; if he seeks imprisonment as a civil resister, he could never seek pardon.

¹ Not reproduced here
² ibid.
³ ibid.

MORE TEMPLES OPENED

The Anti-Untouchability Committee appointed by the Working Committee is making steady progress. It reports that eight more temples owned by the Telugu Munurvar community residing in cosmopolitan Bombay were declared open on 2nd instant to the so-called ‘untouchables’. This opening was no hurried matter. The proposal was discussed in various meetings of the community, and the temples were thrown open to the ‘untouchables’ only when there was almost complete unanimity. At the last meeting presided over by Advocate Sayaji Lakshman Silam, member of the Corporation, there was only one dissentient when the final vote was taken. The resolution also appealed to the suppressed brethren to carry out internal reforms.

The Committee further reports that Dr. Patwardhan of Amraoti, President of the Hanuman Vyayam Prasarak Mandal, which has 4 branches in the town besides the Central Gymnasium which alone has a daily attendance of about 1,000 boys, and which has about 50 branches throughout Berar, has addressed a letter to the Secretary, Anti-Untouchability Committee, in the course of which he says: 1

> Boys of the so-called untouchable classes are admitted to our gymnasiums along with the boys of the so-called caste Hindus on terms of absolute equality, and no distinction whatever is made as to their instruction or treatment. . . .

> These are encouraging events. All the parties concerned deserve congratulations. But for the ready atmosphere Advocate Silam could never have carried the whole of the Munurvar community with him. Dr. Patwardhan’s letter does not surprise me. He is an old worker in the field, and it would have been surprising indeed if he had been found behind the times. Let us hope that before long temples and institutions shutting their doors against the suppressed classes will be among the exceptions and not the rule as they still unfortunately are today. The appeal made by the Munurvars to the suppressed class for internal reform is quite relevant. The two movements, internal reform

---

1 Only an extract is reproduced here.
by the latter and repentance by the so-called ‘touchables’, should go hand in hand.

OVERCROWDING IN TRAINS

Sjt. T. N. Sharma of Anandaniketan, Andhra Desha, writes:¹ In my opinion the idea of stopping the train by pulling the chain to avoid overcrowding is quite sound. If the railway authorities enforce the rule of numbers for 1st and 2nd class compartments, why will they not for the 3rd class? The overcrowding is at times suffocating as was described the other day by Shrimati Mirabehn in these pages.² It is largely greed of profits that makes the authorities indifferent to the comfort of the uncomplaining submissive 3rd class passengers who provide the profits, not 1st and 2nd class passengers. It will be interesting to know why Sjt. Shrihariray is being prosecuted if the facts are as stated above.

FIVE CONUNDRUMS

Sjt. P. K. Majumdar, Bar-at-Law of Jalapahar, asks the following questions which are preceded by a long argument which I omit, as it is contained in the questions themselves:

1. Is Man a special creation of God?
2. Does the ‘Inner Voice’ mean the ‘message of God’?
3. Defenceless as India is in the way of arms and ammunition, is it wise to court ‘force’ from a war-equipped opponent on the off chance of being successful by the use of ‘soul force’ with the consequent risk of civil war or foreign invasion?
4. Does ‘soul force’ mean what a man cannot do physically but is latent in his ‘soul’?
5. Is ‘soul’ something apart from ‘life’?

The answers are:

1. Man is a special creation of God precisely to the extent that he is distinct from the rest of His creation.
2. The ‘Inner Voice’ may mean a message from God or from the Devil, for both are wrestling in the human breast. Acts determine the nature of the voice.
3. The most defenceless mouse struggles for liberty against his born enemy the cat who is armed to the teeth. The mouse does not court ‘force’. It is his nature to struggle though he knows that he will be worsted in the unequal contest. It is only reserved for man to act less than the mouse, if it is also reserved for him to act infinitely better than the mouse by recognizing the inner power within him which has been known repeatedly to defy all the physical forces arrayed against it. The risk of civil war is nothing against the fact of the existing condition in which an enslaved India feels powerless to struggle for freedom even to the extent that the poor mouse does.

¹ The letter is not reproduced here. It described how a young man campaigned against overcrowding in trains and how he was arrested.
² Vide “The Third-Class Carriage”, 12-12-1929.

4. Soul force begins when man recognizes that body force, be it ever so great, is nothing compared to the force of the soul within, which pervades not only him but all creation.

5. Soul is apart from life. The latter is conditioned by the body, the former is not.

Since my legal correspondent has asked for my opinion as ‘senior counsel’, the fee for it is that he should give up his gown, and wear the Congress uniform and join the battle for freedom in spite of the odds against us. If he pays the fee, he will discover that the opinion was worth it.

Young India, 13-2-1930

3.32. VARNADHARMA AND DUTY OF LABOUR–II

QUESTION: Is not the division of labour under varnashrama dharma sufficient for the development and welfare of humanity? Which do you value more—varnadharma or duty of labour?

ANSWER: The purport of this question is that varnadharma and duty of labour are incompatible obligations. In fact they are not. Both are concurrent and imperative. Varnadharma pertains to the society and duty of labour pertains to the individual. The sages divided society into four sections for its welfare and thereby attempted to root out rivalry which is fatal to society. Therefore they made one varna responsible for the growth of knowledge in society, the second responsible for the protection of life and property in society, the third for trade in society, and the fourth for service to society. All the four functions were and are equally essential; therefore there was no reason to consider one high and the other low. Adverting to the equilibrium of scales Maharshi Vyas has indeed said that each individual by performing the duties of his own varna acquires fitness for salvation; whereas mutual rivalry and distinctions of high and low bring about ruin. Varnadharma does not in the least imply that any Varian is exempt from manual labour. The duty of labour is incumbent on every person belonging to every varna. The Brahmin also had to approach his guru with firewood in his hands, that is to say, he also had to go into the forest and glean firewood and tend cattle. This work he did for himself and his family, not for society. Only children and cripples were exempt from such manual work.
The doctrine of manual labour for a living which Tolstoy has expounded is a corollary of the duty of labour. Tolstoy felt that if everyone had to do manual work then it means that man must earn his bread by manual labour, never by mental work. In varnadharma the work of each varna was for the welfare of society. Livelihood was not the motive. Gain or no gain, the Kshatriya had to defend the people. The Vaishya had to farm and tend cattle whether he earned money or not. But Tolstoy’s doctrine that every person must do manual work for a living is perfectly true. We come across distressing disparities in the world today because this universal duty has been neglected or forgotten. Disparities will always be there, but like the several leaves of a tree they will look beautiful and pleasant. In the pure varnadharma disparity is no doubt there, and when it was in its pure form, it was pleasing, peaceful and pretty. But when several people use their talents for amassing wealth, distressing disparities are created. Just as, if a teacher (Brahmin), a soldier (Kshatriya), a businessman (Vaishya) and a carpenter (Shudra) follow their professions for amassing wealth, not for the welfare of society, then varnadharma is destroyed. Because in matters of duty there can be no room for amassing. In society there is need for lawyers, doctors, soldiers and others. But when they work for selfish ends they no longer are protectors of society but become parasites on society.

The Gita III, 10 has expounded a great principle where it says:

Together with sacrifice did the Lord of beings create, of old, mankind, declaring: “By this shall ye increase; may this be to you the giver of all your desires.”

Now we can clearly comprehend the etymology of the word yajna. The meaning of yajna is manual work and this is the first and foremost act of worship of God. He has given us bodies. Without food the body cannot exit and without labour food cannot be produced. That is why manual labour has become a universal duty. This duty of labour is not Tolstoy’s alone but of the whole world. Ignorance of this great yajna has led to the worship of mammon in the world and intelligent people have used their talents to exploit others. It is clear that God is not covetous. Being all powerful, He creates every day only as much food as is sufficient for every human being or living creature. Not knowing this great truth, several people indulge in all kinds of luxuries and thereby starve many others. If they could give up this greed and work for their living, and eat enough to meet their needs, the poverty that we find today will vanish. I hope the interrogator would now see that varnadhara and duty of labour are concurrent, complementary and essential.

[From Hindi]
_Hindi Navajivan, 13-2-1930_

333. LETTER TO REGINALD REYNOLDS
[Before February, 14, 1930]¹

MY DEAR REGINALD,

If you need my apology for my silence so long, you have it. But my correspondence is lying neglected. I simply cannot cope with it. I have been thinking of your letter for these last three days. The real thing is likely to begin not before March.

I know you are doing your work in a thorough manner. Come when you can. I wish you will be here on 14th February. But I don’t want you to interrupt your experiments. The Ashram is your home to come to whenever you like.

No more today.

Yours,

From a copy: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32579/64

334. LETTER TO KASTURBEHN BHATT
_February 14, 1930_

CHI. KASTURBEHN BHATT.²

Where are you [now]? You may write to me. Have you now mastered all the things? Do you meet Harihar? Where are Taranath, Tansukh?

_Blessings from_
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9249

---

¹ Inferred from the contents
² Wife of Harihar P. Bhatt, an inmate of the Ashram
335. LETTER TO NAUTAMLAL BHAGWANJI

February 15, 1930

BHAI NAUTAMLAL BHAGWANJI,

I have your letter. I understand your feelings. Doctor will not desire to do anything which may make you unhappy. I will write to him.

Vandemataram from

MOSANDAS

SIT. NAUTAMLAL BHAGWANJI

JETPUR, KATHIWAR

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2581

336. LETTER TO MANILAL KOTHARI

February 15, 1930

BHAISHRI MANILAL,

I have your letter. I am writing this at 3-30 in the morning, so please do not expect me to write more.

There is no need to pass any resolution about satyagraha just now. All the things that I expect from people will be clearly explained in Young India' and Navajivan. I will write to you if I have to add anything. What I expect from you is that you should make your body strong.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Chhaganlal Gandhi Papers. Courtesy: Sabarmati Sangrahalya

337. LETTER TO DEVDAS GANDHI

February 15, 1930

CHI. DEVDAS,

I have your long letter. The session of the W. C. is going on. It has been decided that I should start civil disobedience. That of course does not mean that I alone should start it; it means that all those to whom ahimsa is a creed in the striving for swaraj should resort to it. I am inclined to start with you. Are you ready? Are you willing? If you are, obtain Zakir Saheb’s permission and reach here soon. Whatever I decide to do I wish to do at once.

There is no time to reply to the rest of your letter, nor is it necessary to do so.

I am writing this before the 4 o’clock morning prayer. Keshu arrived yesterday. Mathuradas is here. A nice group has gathered here. Manilal and Ramdas also have come.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Chhaganlal Gandhi Papers. Courtesy: Sabarmati Sangrahalaya

338. SPEECH AT PRAYER MEETING, SABARMATI ASHRAM

February 15, 1930

Gandhiji addressing the inmates referred to the names he had received and said that it was not necessary that one and all should give their names. If they felt the slightest doubt about their ability to join the campaign they might withdraw their names even then.

He continued:

People expect you to join in the fight with great preparedness on your part. The whole world is looking at the Ashram with great expectancy. It may be that you might not be ready when you joined the Ashram, but the discipline and atmosphere must have brought that much confidence in you and must have helped you in preparing yourselves for the ensuing fight.

Gandhiji apprised them of the sufferings and hardships they would have to undergo during the fight. They might be sent to jail, and they might be beaten, but that was not all. They might have to go without food or might be driven out of the Ashram or a worse fate might befall them. But under all circumstances they must be prepared to remain non-violent in thought and in action and must never lose their temper or get angry. They must try to have a thorough change of heart. The time might come when even God might be angry with them, but they must not lose patience.

He continued:

Suffering is writ large on the face of every devotee. Even Rama and Sita had to suffer. God tests you on the touchstone and if it is found that you have withstood that test, then nothing remains to be desired. In the Ashram itself, you have enjoyed yourselves to a certain extent, but enjoyment is worth while only when you show your mettle and sacrifice yourself when the time comes. You must now convert the Ashram into a lamp of sacrifice. Those who feel themselves weak or unable to join the fight must quit the Ashram. Once you have plunged yourselves in battle, if you retreat, it will be a blemish on you and blot on the whole fair name of India.

The Hindu, 17-2-1930

339. LETTER TO DR. M. A. ANSARI.

SABARMATI,

February 16, 1930

DEAR DR. ANSARI,

It is now 3.30 a.m. I have been struggling to find time to give you a few lines. Your letter I appreciate. It was first seen by Motilalji and Jawaharlal and then read to the Working Committee. There were various comments. No one, however, thought that there was anything in it to warrant a departure from the Lahore programme. I agree that the Hindu-Muslim problem is the problem of problems. But I feel that it has to be approached in a different manner from the one we have hitherto adopted—not [as] at present by adjustment of the political power but by one or the other acting on the square under all circumstances. Give and take is possible only when there is some trust between the respective communities and their representatives. If the Congress can command such trust the matter can proceed further, not before. The Congress can do so only by becoming fearless and strictly just. But meanwhile the third party—the evil British power—has got to be sterilized. There will be no charter of independence before the Hindus and the Muslims have met but there can be virtual independence before the charter is received. Hence must civil disobedience be forged from day to day by those who believe that there is no escape from non-violence and that violence will never bring freedom to India.

I do not know if I have made myself clear. Anyway my own personal line is cast. I fancy that I see my way clear now. There will be no turning back. I can live if God wills and if He finds work for me. I have no interest in living if there is no work for me in the direction for which He appears to me to have called me. If all this be hallucination I must perish in the flames of my own lighting. I want you then to

---

1 This should be read after “Speech at Prayer Meeting, Sabarmati Ashram”. For the addressee’s letter dated February 13, 1930 to which this was a reply, vide Appendix “Letter from Dr. M. A. Ansari”, 13-2-1930. cheer up. It does not matter at all if we do not see eye to eye. It is well with us if our hearts are pure, as I know they are.

Yours ever,
M. K. GANDHI

[PS.]
I had a heart to heart chat with Shuaib. He has promised to meet you. I would love to see as he does. You may share this with him or any friend you like.

M. K. G.

340. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA
February 18, 1930

BHAI SATIS BABU,

I have your two letters. I miss you these days. But I have deliberately refrained from sending for you. I feared that it might arouse envy. What more can I talk to you about ahimsa? I have always discussed only ahimsa. However, if you feel the necessity of talking over anything, do not hesitate to come.

I believe they will arrest me in the middle of March. I expect my letter to the Viceroy will be despatched on the 2nd.

I had some talk with Antarjami. It was not very satisfying. I am awaiting the arrival of Shankerlal [Banker]. It will be good if the Utkal work is organized well.

I am awaiting Hemprabha Devi’s letter. How is she keeping?

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
Do tell me if you find any difficulty with my handwriting or language.¹

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1615

¹ In the G. N. series this is the first letter in Hindi to the addressee.
341. LETTER TO AMBALAL SARABHAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
February 18, 1930

DEAR BROTHER,

I have received your gift of books. I understand your affection and I am thinking of you all the time.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 11125. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

342. LETTER TO UDIT MISHRA

February 19, 1930

BHAI UDIT MISHRAJI,

Only today have I been able to read your letter to the end. Persons with views or faith contrary to ours should never be employed to teach our children. And in no case should half the study time be devoted only to English. Knowledge of Hindi is not essential for an English teacher.

If the children [distrust] any teacher, he ought to be removed.

When a junior teacher gives wrong lessons to the children, it is the duty of the Head Master to check him. It is also his duty to warn the guardians of the children if he notices any impropriety in the conduct of the junior.

The consideration of anyone’s pleasure or displeasure has no place in following the right path.

The children should be taught to reject courteously gifts of foreign articles by whomsoever made.

Sacrificial spinning on the takli should never be given up; I am arranging to send taklis.

Yours,

MOHANDAS

1 The source is illegible.
[PS.] It would be right to inform Ghanshyamdasji of all this. This letter too may be shown to him.
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 4219

343. ‘NEVER FAILETH’
अहिंसा प्राप्तिस्वारं तत्सत्त्विः बैत्त्यन्:।
‘HATE DISSOLVES IN THE PRESENCE OF LOVE.’

In the opinion of the Working Committee civil disobedience should be initiated and controlled by those who believe in non-violence for the purpose of achieving purnaswaraj as an article of faith, and as the Congress contains in its organization not merely such men and women, but also those who accept non-violence as a policy essential in the existing circumstances in the country, the Working Committee welcomes the proposal of Mahatma Gandhi and authorizes him and those working with him who believe in non-violence as an article of faith to the extent above indicated to start civil disobedience as and when they desire and in the manner and to the extent they decide. The Working Committee trusts that when the campaign is actually in action all Congressmen and others will extend to the civil resisters their full co-operation in every way possible, and that they will observe and preserve complete non-violence notwithstanding any provocation that may be offered. The Working Committee further hopes that in the event of a mass movement taking place, all those who are rendering voluntary co-operation to the Government, such as lawyers, and those who are receiving so-called benefits from it, such as students, will withdraw their co-operation or renounce benefits as the case may be, and throw themselves into the final struggle for freedom. The Working Committee trusts, that in the event of the leaders being arrested and imprisoned, those who are left behind and have the spirit of sacrifice and service in them, will carry on the Congress organization, and guide the movement to the best of their ability.

This resolution of the Working Committee gives me my charter of freedom if it also binds me in the tightest chains. It is the formula of which I have been in search these long and weary months. For me the resolution is not so much a political as a religious effort. My difficulty was fundamental. I saw that I could not work out ahimsa through an organization holding a variety of mentalities. It could not be subject to the decision of majorities. To be consistent with itself, it might have to be inconsistent with the whole world.

A person who has a choice before him is ever exposed to temptation. The instinct of those therefore, with whom non-violence is

1 Patanjali’s Yogadarshanam, ii. 35
2 Adopted on February 15, 1930 at Ahmedabad
a policy, when tempted by violence, may fail them. That of those who have no remedy but non-violence open to them can never fail them if they have non-violence in them in reality. Hence the necessity for freedom from Congress control. And I was thankful that the members of the Working Committee saw the utter correctness of my position.

It is to be hoped, that no one will misunderstand the position. Here there is no question of superiority. Those, who hold non-violence for the attainment of freedom as an article of faith, are in no way superior to those with whom it is a mere policy, even as there is no such inequality between brown men and yellow men. Each acts according to his lights.

The responsibility devolving on me is the greatest I have ever undertaken. It was irresistible. But all will be well, if it is ahimsa that is guiding me. For the seer who knew what he gave to the world has said, ‘Hate dissolves in the presence of ahimsa.’ The true rendering of the word in English is love or charity. And does not the Bible say:

Love worketh no ill to his neighbour,
Believeth all things,
Hopeth all things,
Never faileth.¹

Civil disobedience is sometimes a peremptory demand of love. Dangerous it undoubtedly is, but no more than the encircling violence. Civil disobedience is the only non-violent escape from its soul-destroying heat. The danger lies only in one direction, in the outbreak of violence side by side with civil disobedience. If it does I know now the way; not the retracing as at the time of Bardoli. The struggle, in freedom’s battle, of non-violence against violence, no matter from what quarter the latter comes, must continue till a single representative is left alive. More no man can do, to do less would be tantamount to want of faith.

Young India, 20-2-1930

344. SOME QUESTIONS

With reference to the imminent civil disobedience some pertinent questions have been put by friends as well as critics. These need answering.

Q. Surely you are not so impatient as to start your campaign without letting the authorities know your plans and giving them an opportunity of meeting you and arresting you?

A. Those who know my past should know that I hold it to be contrary to satyagraha to do anything secretly or impatiently. My plans will be certainly sent to the Viceroy before I take any definite step. A satyagrahi has no secrets to keep from his opponent or so-called enemy.

¹ I Corinthians, xiii

Q. Did you not say even at Lahore that the country was not prepared for civil disobedience, especially no-tax campaign on a mass scale?

A. I am not even now sure that it is. But it has become clear to me as never before that the unpreparedness in the sense that a non-violent atmosphere is wanting will, as time goes by, very likely increase as it has been increasing all these years. Young men are impatient. I know definitely many stayed their violent designs because in 1921 the Congress had decided to offer civil disobedience. That school has been more active than before because of my repeated declarations that the country was not prepared for civil disobedience. I feel then that if non-violence is an active force, as I know it is, it should work even in the face of the most violent atmosphere. One difficulty in the way was that the Congress claiming to represent the whole nation could not very well offer civil disobedience and disown responsibility for violence especially by Congressmen. I have procured discharge from that limitation by taking over the responsibility for launching on civil disobedience. I represent no one but myself and at the most those whom I may enroll for the campaign. And I propose at present to confine myself only to those who are amenable to the Ashram discipline and have actually undergone it for some time. It is true that I may not shirk responsibility indirectly for any violence that may break out on the part of the nation and in the course of the campaign. But such responsibility will always be there and can be only a degree more than the responsibility I share with the British rulers in their sins against the nation in so far as I give my co-operation however reluctantly and ever so slightly. For instance I give my co-operation by paying taxes direct or indirect. The very salt I eat compels my voluntary co-operation. Moreover it has dawned on me never so plainly as now that if my non-violence has suffered the greatest incarnation of violence which the British imperialistic rule is, it must suffer the crude and ineffective violence of the impatient patriots who know not that by their ineffectiveness they are but helping that imperialistic rule and enabling it to consolidate the very thing they seek to destroy. I see now as clearly as daylight that my non-violence working as it has done against the British misrule has shaken it somewhat. Even so will it shake the counter-violence of the patriot if taking courage in both my hands I set my non-violence actively in motion, i.e., civil disobedience. I reduce the risk of the outbreak of counter-violence to a minimum by taking sole charge of the campaign. After all is said and done, however, I feel the truth of the description given to my proposal by The Times of India. It is indeed ‘the last throw of a gambler’. I have been a ‘gambler’ all my life. In my passion for finding the truth and in relentlessly following out my faith in non-violence, I have counted no stake too great. In doing so I have erred, if at all, in the company of the most distinguished scientist of any age and any clime.

Q. But what about your much vaunted faith in Hindu-Muslim unity? Of what value will even independence be without that unity?

A. My faith in that unity is as bright as ever. I do not want independence at the cost even of the weakest minority, let alone the powerful Mussalman and the no less powerful Sikh. The Lahore Congress resolution on unity finally sums up all its previous effort in that behalf. The Congress rules out all solution proposed on a communal basis. But if it is ever compelled to consider such a solution it will consider only that which will give (not merely justice) but satisfaction to all the parties concerned. To be true to its word therefore, the Congress cannot accept any scheme of independence that does not give satisfaction, so far as communal rights are concerned, to the parties concerned. The campaign that is about to be launched is calculated to generate power for the whole nation to be independent. But it will not be in fact till all the parties have combined. To postpone civil disobedience which has nothing to do with communalism till the latter is set at rest will be to move in a vicious circle and defeat the very end that all must have in view. What I am hoping is that the Congress being free from the communal incubus will tend it, if it remains true to the nation as a whole, to become the strongest centre party jealously guarding the rights of the weakest members. Such a Congress will have only servants of the nation, not office-seekers. Till independence is achieved or till unity is reached it will have nothing to do with any office or favours from the Government of the day in competition with the minorities. Happily the Congress has now nothing to do with the legislatures which have perhaps more than anything else increased communal bitterness. It is no doubt unfortunate that at the present moment the Congress contains largely only the Hindu element. But if the Congress Hindus cease to think communally and we take no advantage that cannot be shared to the full with all the other communities, it will presently disarm all suspicion and will attract to itself the noblest among 1 Vide 1st footnote to “Speech at Subjects Committee, A.I.C.C.-III”, 1-1-1930.

Mussalmans, Sikhs, Parsis, Christians, Jews and all those who are of India. But whether the Congress ever approaches this ideal or not, my course is, as it always has been, perfectly clear. This unity among all is no new love with me. I have treasured it, acted up to it from my youth upward. When I went to London as a mere lad in 1889 I believed in it as passionately as I do now. When I went to South Africa in 1893 I worked it out in every detail of my life. Love so deep seated as it is in me will not be sacrificed even for the realm of the whole world. Indeed this campaign should take the attention of the nation off the communal problem and to rivet it on the things that are common to all Indians, no matter to what religion or sect they may belong.

Q: Then you will raise, if you can, a force ultimately hostile to the British?

A: Never. My love for non-violence is superior to every other thing mundane or supramundane. It is equalled only by my love for Truth which is to me synonymous with non-violence through which and which alone I can see and reach Truth. My scheme of life, if it draws no distinction between different religionists in India, it also draws none between different races. For me “man is a man for a’ that”¹. I embark upon the campaign as much out of my love for the Englishman as for the Indian. By self-suffering I seek to convert him, never to destroy him. Q: But may not all this be your hallucination that can never come to pass in this matter of fact world of ours?

A: It may well be that. It is not a charge wholly unfamiliar to me. My hallucinations in the past have served me well. This last is not expected to fail me. If it does, it will but harm me and those who may come or put themselves under its influence. If my hallucination is potent to the authorities, my body is always at their disposal. If owing to my threatened action any Englishman’s life is put in greater danger than it is now, the arm of English authority is long enough and strong enough to overtake any outbreak that may occur between Kashmir and Cape Comorin or Karachi and Dibrugarh. Lastly no campaign need take place, if all the politicians and editors instead of addressing themselves to me will address themselves to the authorities and ask them to undo the continuing wrongs some of which I have inadequately described in these pages.

Young India, 20-2-1930

¹ Robert Burns
345. ‘BUCCAANEERING COMMISSION’

As the public have a short memory, I reproduce below the two Congress resolutions which have been defended by Professor Coomarappa and which have been so misrepresented here and abroad:

GAYA CONGRESS RESOLUTION (1922)

Whereas by reason of unjustifiable military expenditure and other extravagance, the Government has brought the national indebtedness to a limit beyond recovery, and whereas the Government still pursues the same policy of extravagance under cover of the authority of the so-called representative assemblies constituted without the suffrage of a majority or any substantial fraction of the voters and despite their declared repudiation of the authority of such assemblies to represent the people:

And whereas if the Government is permitted to continue this policy, it will become impossible for the people of India ever to carry on their own affairs with due regard to the honour and happiness of the people, and it has therefore become necessary to stop the career of irresponsibility:

This Congress hereby repudiates the authority of the legislatures that have been or may be formed by the Government in spite of the national boycott of the said institutions in future to raise loans or to incur any liabilities on behalf of the nation, and notifies to the world that on the attainment of swarajya the people of India, though holding themselves liable for all debts and liabilities rightly or wrongly incurred hitherto by the Government, will not hold themselves bound to repay any loans or discharge any liabilities incurred on and after this date on the authority or sanction of the so-called legislatures brought into existence in spite of the national boycott.

LAHORE CONGRESS RESOLUTION (1929)

The Gaya resolution is surely innocuous and even charitable at the expense of posterity, in that it makes the people liable for the then existing debts whether ‘rightly or wrongly incurred’. The Lahore resolution undoes the mistake, and adopts the honourable and usual method of submitting all accounts, past, present and future when the time comes, to the scrutiny of an impartial tribunal. What happens when an institution or a business passes from one steward to another?

---

1 In this article to which Gandhiji appended his comments, J. C. Coomarappa had explained how the people of India had been burdened with debts by the British Government to the tune of over £200 million—all by unjust transactions—and had invited the readers’ attention to the resolution on the subject passed at the Gaya and Lahore Congresses.

2 Not reproduced here.
Does not the outgoing steward render accounts to the incoming one? Are not those accounts subject to scrutiny? The future national Government will betray its trust at the very threshold of its career, if it fails to perform the obvious duty of submitting to the strictest scrutiny all the obligations it may take over. If Great Britain and India are then solvent, no investor need fear the loss of a penny or a pice. For whatever India takes over, she will have to pay. Whatever cannot be charged justly against her has to be taken over as a matter of course by Great Britain. It is only the present helpless voiceless India that is made to pay against her will what cannot be justly charged against her. When the time comes for reckoning, it will be the sacred duty owing to India’s millions to repudiate every transaction proved to be unjust. But that would mean merely an inevitable and just transference about which the investor, the scripholder and the like need not be concerned.

Young India, 20-2-1930

346. NOTES

‘NO SURRENDER’

Here are the choicest bits from Northcliffe House just received:

. . . Politicians must for ever drop their gibberish about Dominion Home Rule for the Eastern Empire. Those of them who persist in toying with so fatal a policy must be remorselessly driven from public life.

The retention of India is more important to the welfare of Great Britain than tariffs or any other political question. That country may fairly be described as the very keystone of the Empire. Its trade is vital to our people. The total loss of the Indian market would mean bankruptcy for Lancashire and misery for her industrial workers. In the last year for which figures are available British exports to India were £; 83,900,000 in value (one-ninth of our total exports), and there is no other country or territory, British or foreign, which takes anything like that amount of British goods. This trade it is the deliberate purpose of the revolutionaries to destroy if they get the chance.

British investments in India reach the enormous figure of £1,000,000,000, according to evidence given before the Simon Commission. Again, it is the declared intention of the revolutionaries to repudiate the Indian debt and to confiscate the plantations and factories which British capital has created on Indian soil. From the loss of such a sum Great Britain could never recover.

The policy of surrender in India has got to stop. . . . There are two courses, and only two. The first is to get out and hand over the country to the Princes, who would pretty quickly settle the Hindu lawyers of the All-India Congress. The second is to stay in India and govern. That second course is the one which this country will take.
The title is the Daily Mail’s as also the italics and different types. The writing is as outspoken as it is true notwithstanding Mr. Benn’s belittling of it. But ‘no surrender’ is a game at which either party may play. If the millions of India play ‘no surrender’ their non-violence will be more than a match for the British ‘no surrender’ in spite of the combined aid of the military, the naval and the air forces which it can summon. It is the material benefits which England derives from the connection that matter to the British public. It is the extinction of those benefits that matters most to the Indian masses who can no longer bear the crushing burden. For India considers many of them ill-gotten. Let this double no surrender stagger humanity. British bullying must stop at all cost.

NO CONVERSION PERMISSIBLE

The English Press cuttings contain among many delightful items the news that Miss Slade known in the Ashram as Mirabai has embraced Hinduism.¹ I may say that she has not. I hope that she is a better Christian than when four years ago she came to the Ashram. She is not a girl of tender age. She is past thirty and has travelled all alone in Egypt, Persia and Europe befriending trees and animals. I have had the privilege of having under me Mussalman, Parsi and Christian minors. Never was Hinduism put before them for their acceptance. They were encouraged and induced to respect and read their own scriptures. It is with pleasure that I can recall instances of men and women, boys and girls having been induced to know and love their faiths better than they did before if they were also encouraged to study the other faiths with sympathy and respect. We have in the Ashram today several faiths represented. NO proselytizing is practised or permitted. We recognize that all these faiths are true and divinely inspired, and all have suffered through the necessarily imperfect handling of imperfect men. Miss Slade bears not a Hindu name but an Indian name. And this was done at her instance and for convenience. We have more such instances. Richard Gregg who is not suspected of having given up Christianity is to us Govindji. An old Christian sister, Miss Ada West now in Louth, became Devibehn to us in Phoenix.

Young India, 20-2-1930

¹ This was observed in the introductory remarks to the “Interview to The Daily Express,” 22-1-1930.
347. VARNADHARMA AND DUTY OF LABOUR-III

Q. It is of course good to find the virtues of all the four varnas in any one individual but can the majority of human beings acquire them all and is it proper to place this ideal before society?

A. Many virtues and functions are common to all varnas and ought to be so; but it is neither necessary nor possible for everyone to have all the virtues of all the varnas.

Q. If Tolstoy’s duty of labour is universally accepted will it not be difficult for poets like Kabir and Rabindra to live in this world? And would this not be a misfortune for the world?

A. Acceptance of the duty of labour is not a denial of Kabir and Rabindranath; on the other hand it is capable of making the poetry of both more forceful and radiant. Manual labour does not weaken the mental faculty; on the contrary it nourishes it. The difference merely is that the votary of manual labour will never earn a living by only writing poetry nor will he give up manual labour altogether. Kabir was of course an advocate of manual labour. He never earned a penny by composing religious songs and hymns. He earned his living as a weaver of cloth. Propagation of religion and morality had become his nature or hobby. Rabindranath is a great poet of this age because he does not earn his living by writing poetry. Whatever he earns by writing poetry is all donated to his institution. He lives by the income from his estates. I do not know how far he believes in the duty of labour; this I do know that he certainly does not despise it. We learn from history that ancient poets or sages had accepted the duty of labour even if it might have been implicitly. As a result their benedictions are with us even today.

Q. According to the doctrine of the duty of labour, Jesus, Buddha and Tolstoy himself are blameworthy. Tolstoy’s wife herself has said that beyond writing books he could do nothing else. He might have learnt carpentry and some other manual work only to become a laughing-stock; but this does not satisfy Tolstoy’s concept of the duty of labour. Is it not therefore necessary to examine it very carefully?

A. This view takes no note of history. Jesus was a carpenter. He never used his intellect to earn his livelihood. We do not know how much manual work Buddha did before he attained wisdom. Yes, we know this much, that he did not propagate religion for securing his livelihood. He lived on charity. That could not militate against the duty of labour. A roving ascetic has to do a lot of manual work. Now, to come to Tostoy, what his wife has said is true but it is not the whole truth. After the change in his outlook Tostoy never took for himself the income from his books. Although he had property worth millions, he lived like a guest in his own house. After the attainment of wisdom, he worked eight hours a day and earned his wages. Sometimes he worked in the field and sometimes he made shoes at home. Although he did not earn much by doing such work, still he earned enough to feed himself. Tolstoy strove hard to practise what he preached. This was characteristic of him. The sum and substance of all this discussion is that the duty which the ancients observed themselves and which the majority in the world discharges even today has been presented to the world in an explicit manner by him. In fact this doctrine was not Tolstoy’s original idea; it was thought of by a great Russian writer by name Bondoref. Tolstoy endorsed it and proclaimed it to the world.

[From Hindi]

Hindi Navajivan, 20-2-1930

348. LETTER TO NAUTAMLAL BHAGWANJI

[February 20, 1930]

BHAISHRI NAUTAMLAL,

I have your letter. I am glad that your worry is over. Observe as much simplicity as possible.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

BHAISHRI NAUTAMLAL BHAGWANJI

JETPUR, KATHIWAR

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2580

349. LETTER TO ANAND T. HINGORANI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM,

SABARMATI,

February 22, 1930

MY DEAR ANAND,

I was delighted to receive your letter. I hope that your firmness will last and will increase day after day. Take no hasty step and do not try to coax your wife to come. If she comes she must do so of her own absolutely free will. You know too that she will have to live

1 From the postmark

2 Vidya
separately from you.¹ Let her also know that the impending struggle may upset all arrangements and may result in her having to go back soon.

I hope you are keeping as well in body as you seem to be in mind.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

From a microfilm. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

350. LETTER TO DEVDAS GANDHI

February 22, 1930

CHI. DEVDAS,

You will have received my reply to your wire. Now I am awaiting your letter. A letter to the Viceroy will go from here on the 2nd.² You will see everything if you are here at the time. It will not be surprising at all if they arrest me any day after the 4th. Let those who wish to join you in the march, have patience for the present. My desire, if I myself lead the march, is to keep you with me. Alternatively, I may send you in the first batch and try to follow after all of you have been arrested. They are sure to arrest me to prevent all this. In that case you should court arrest. And after that most of the Ashram inmates should get themselves arrested. I should like you to be here at least to enable me to give you a complete picture of this plan. Manilal also will be here by about the 27th. Motilal and Jawaharlal are coming.

You may now do what you think best.³

From a copy of the Gujarati: Chhaganlal Gandhi Papers, Courtesy: Sabarmati Sangrahalaya

¹ Vide also “Letter to Anand T. Hingorani”, 14-11-1929.
³ Someone adds in a post-script: “After the above was written Bapu received your letter. He wants me to write that what he has written above is still the best plan.”
351. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
February 22, 1930

CHI. PRABHUDAS,

I got your letter. Keep me informed about the effect of the injections. I had told Narandas about your budget for the spinning-wheel. I will note down your name. In the satyagraha movement, physical illness is no impediment. Even though Kishorelal is bedridden, he goes on sending his own and Gomatibehn’s names. And I have also entered them. This of course does not mean that all are to be sent to jail. But it does mean that they will take up whatever duties relating to the struggle are assigned to them by me or by those who remain behind after I am arrested. Devidutt should not be encouraged, but he should not be discouraged either. His services too will be used when the time comes. He should be told that for that he should daily make progress in self-purification.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Chhaganlal Gandhi Papers. courtesy: Sabarmati Sangrahalaya

352. LETTER TO KISHORELAL MASHRUWALA

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
February 22, 1930

CHI. KISHORELAL,

All the three types of people mentioned by you can join this struggle. But discussing these distinctions in Navajivan at present is likely to confuse people’s minds. I think everyone has understood the broad meaning of the Working Committee’s resolution. Almost all men and women here have sent in their names. All of them cannot understand the distinctions suggested by you. But I think they all have faith in non-violence and understand that no Englishman should be harmed or permitted to be harmed in any way. They believe in non-violence not as an expedient but as a creed. Who can say how far their ahimsa will endure when the testing time comes? What can we say even about you and me? Peter who was as hard as stone turned out to be soft as wax at the moment of crisis. And those two women who were only guided by their faith remained as firm as rock. If you have any questions pertaining to the articles I am writing these days, do place them before me. Read the rules about satyagraha carefully and let me know if you notice any omission in them.

And now for the monthly periods. A couple of women who had not during their periods joined others for meals for fear of criticism followed Mirabehn’s example and joined. That gave rise to some discussion. The matter had been settled earlier. It had been agreed that any woman who, like Mirabehn, wished to join others for meals during her periods could do so. She must observe three rules: she should not enter the kitchen for the four days of menses; even from outside the kitchen she should not look at the food being cooked or at the water used for cooking; she should not touch the cooked food. This decision was arrived at after correspondence with Nathji through Panditji. But a couple of women were in panic after a woman in menses had joined at the meals. Therefore, benefiting from Nathji’s presence the conditions necessary for preserving the sacredness of mantras have been ascertained and clarified. We have among the inmates some persons who practise mantras and such persons also constantly visit the Ashram. I believe that it is the duty of the Ashram for the sake of such persons to observe as fully as possible the conditions for preserving the sacredness of the mantras. If I can understand the purpose of the conditions better, I shall help in their still stricter observance. I had asked Ramniklal to get one or two points clarified by Nathji. But he does not seem to have been able to do so. Is milk polluted by the look or touch of a woman in menses? From the papers I have with me it seems that it is polluted by touch. In Nath’s opinion, even if a person practising mantras does not know that a particular sample of milk has been touched by a woman in menses, the fact of the touch itself has the power of nullifying the effect of the mantra, to some extent at least. This means that a person practising mantras should practically live without milk, because whether in the Ashram or outside, particularly outside, women in menses do happen to look at milk. We can think of hundreds of ways of milk being polluted by look. Hence the question of milk needs to be carefully considered. I understand that uncooked grain is not polluted either by touch or look. Is it not the same with regard to ghee and oil? At what stage can look or touch affect water? For I understand that the water meant for cooking is affected both by look and touch. Nath says from experience that cooked food is affected both by the look and the touch of the woman in menses. But he is not able to explain the reason. Have you thought about the reason? If you have, send me your opinion on it and also on the other questions above after discussing them with Nathji or independently if you can.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Chhaganlal Gandhi Papers. Courtesy: Sabarmati Sangrahalaya
353. LETTER TO TULSI MAHER

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
February 22, 1930

BHAI TULSI MAHER,

I received your letter.

You are carrying on your work quite well and I hope it will continue so. Do not be perturbed by the news of the struggle here. Your duty lies in sticking to your post.

These days smallpox is rampant here. We are being tested in this way too.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 6537

354. SOME RULES OF SATYAGRAHA

Satyagraha literally means insistence on truth. This insistence arms the votary with matchless power. This power or force is connoted by the word satyagraha. Satyagraha, to be genuine, may be offered against parents, against one’s wife or one’s children, against rulers, against fellow-citizens, even against the whole world.

Such a universal force necessarily makes no distinction between kinsmen and strangers, young and old, man and woman, friend and foe. The force to be so applied can never be physical. There is in it no room for violence. The only force of universal application can, therefore, be that of ahimsa or love. In other words it is soul force.

Love does not burn others, it burns itself. Therefore, a satyagrahi, i.e., a civil resister will joyfully suffer even unto death.

It follows, therefore, that a civil resister, whilst he will strain every nerve to compass the end of the existing rule, will do no intentional injury in thought, word or deed to the person of a single Englishman. This necessarily brief explanation of satyagraha will perhaps enable the reader to understand and appreciate the following rules:

AS AN INDIVIDUAL

1. A satyagrahi, i.e., a civil resister will harbour no anger.
2. He will suffer the anger of the opponent.

1 The Gujarati original of this appeared in Navajivan, 23-2-1930.
3. In so doing he will put up with assaults from the opponent, never retaliate; but he will not submit, out of fear of punishment or the like, to any order given in anger.

4. When any person in authority seeks to arrest a civil resister, he will voluntarily submit to the arrest, and he will not resist the attachment or removal of his own property, if any, when it is sought to be confiscated by authorities.

5. If a civil resister has any property in his possession as a trustee, he will refuse to surrender it, even though in defending it he might lose his life. He will, however, never retaliate.

7. Therefore a civil resister will never insult his opponent, and therefore also not take part in many of the newly coined cries which are contrary to the spirit of ahimsa.

8. A civil resister will not salute the Union Jack, nor will he insult it or officials, English or Indian.

9. In the course of the struggle if anyone insults an official or commits an assault upon him, a civil resister will protect such official or officials from the insult or attack even at the risk of his life.

AS A PRISONER

10. As a prisoner, a civil resister will behave courteously towards prison officials, and will observe all such discipline of the prison as is not contrary to self-respect; as for instance, whilst he will salaam officials in the usual manner, he will not perform any humiliating gyrations and refuse to shout ‘Victory to Sarkar’ or the like. He will take cleanly cooked and cleanly served food, which is not contrary to his religion, and will refuse to take food insultingly served or served in unclean vessels.

11. A civil resister will make no distinction between an ordinary prisoner and himself, will in no way regard himself as superior to the rest, nor will he ask for any conveniences that may not be necessary for keeping his body in good health and condition. He is entitled to ask for such conveniences as may be required for his physical or spiritual well-being.

12. A civil resister may not fast for want of conveniences whose deprivation does not involve any injury to one’s self-respect.

AS A UNIT

13. A civil resister will joyfully obey all the orders issued by the leader of the corps, whether they please him or not.

1 Government
14. He will carry out orders in the first instance even though they appear to him insulting, inimical or foolish, and then appeal to higher authority. He is free before joining to determine the fitness of the corps to satisfy him, but after he has joined it, it becomes a duty to submit to its discipline irksome or otherwise. If the sum total of the energy of the corps appears to a member to be improper or immoral, he has a right to sever his connection, but being within it, he has no right to commit a breach of its discipline.

15. No civil resister is to expect maintenance for his dependents. It would be an accident if any such provision is made. A civil resister entrusts his dependents to the care of God. Even in ordinary warfare wherein hundreds of thousands give themselves up to it, they are able to make no previous provision. How much more, then, should such be the case in satyagraha? It is the universal experience that in such times hardly anybody is left to starve.

IN COMMUNAL FIGHTS

16. No civil resister will intentionally become a cause of communal quarrels.

17. In the event of any such outbreak, he will not take sides, but he will assist only that party which is demonstrably in the right. Being a Hindu he will be generous towards Mussalmans and others, and will sacrifice himself in the attempt to save non-Hindus from a Hindu attack. And if the attack is from the other side, he will not participate in any retaliation but will give his life in protecting Hindus.

18. He will, to the best of his ability, avoid every occasion that may give rise to communal quarrels.

19. If there is a procession of satyagrahis they will do nothing that would wound the religious susceptibilities of any community, and they will not take part in any other processions that are likely to wound such susceptibilities.

Young India, 27-2-1930

355. TO CONTRIBUTORS AND CORRESPONDENTS

An article with the caption “Plight of Women” was published on p. 125 of Navajivan, dated December 15, 1929. I was taken in by the correspondent having given names, addresses and other details. I took the writer to be entirely truthful. Now, from the facts supplied to me in this matter, I find that the letter was full of exaggeration and was libellous. The truth has been so twisted in the presentation that the chief actor in the incident comes out as cruelty incarnate. The information now reaching me puts the whole incident in a different light. However, I do not desire to go into the details of the case. My aim in writing this is to request correspondents to give facts only. Exaggeration does not help improvement in any way or anywhere. I advise the correspondent who wrote the original letter to apologize to the person whom he has slandered for the exaggeration he has made. If he still desires to adhere to his statement, he should write to me permitting me to send his letter to the persons concerned.

\[1\text{ Vide “Plight of Women”, 15-12-1929.}\]

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 23-2-1930

356. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

Sabarmati,
February 23, 1930

MY DEAR RAIHANA,

I am quite clear that those who believe in and would fight for immediate independence cannot take part in conferences such as you mention.

Yours,

BAPU

From a photostat: S.N. 9614

357. LETTER TO MURIEL LESTER

Sabarmati,
February 23, 1930

MY DEAR MURIEL,

Your letter is lying in front of me demanding an answer. On the eve of what promises to be a life and death struggle I think of all my English friends known and unknown. You are not the least among them.

My love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 6561
358. LETTER TO KISHORELAL MASRUWALA

Sunday [February 23, 1930]

CHI. KISHORELAL,

Although it did not occur to me when I spoke to Nath, the thought suddenly came to me while talking to Surendra that it would be better if you both did not come here right now. It seems so from all points of view. Surendra thinks that in the interest of the health of both of you, it might be better to come over. If that is so, I would wish you to come post-haste. I have been hesitating to call you only from considerations of your health, fearing that the water of this place may suit you even less. If you think that since sooner or later you have to face up to it, you might as well do so now? then you had better come over. I would wish you to be around on the 2nd when the letter to the Viceroy is to be despatched.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C. W. 10710. Courtesy: Gomatibehn Mashruwala

359. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

February 24, 1930

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

I have your letter. I had not read the speech. I hardly get time to read.

You will see the forthcoming issue. It will contain much. The substance has already appeared in Gujarati Navajivan. Perhaps we shall get a few moments to discuss things more fully when we meet on 1st March. My letter to the Viceroy1 will also clarify the issue.

I am glad there is nothing serious with Kamala. But why should she not now go to a hospital and have the necessary treatment?

Yours,
BAPU

Gandhi-Nehru papers, 1930.Courtesy:Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

1 From the reference to the letter to the Viceroy to be sent on the 2nd. The reference presumably is to the letter of March 2, 1930. The Sunday preceding was February 23, 1930.

1Vide “Letter to Lord Irwin”, 2-3-1930.
360. LETTER TO JAISUKHLAL GANDHI

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
February 25, 1930

CHI. JAISUKHLAL,

I have your letter. I am including your name in the list but how can I ask you to give up the responsibility which you have undertaken there and call you here?

Blessings from

BAPU

SIT. JAISUKHLAL GANDHI
KHADI KARYALAYA
CHALALA (KATHIWAR)

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: MMU/III/75

361. LETTER TO MITHUBEHN PETIT

February 26, 1930

DEAR SISTER.

I was eagerly awaiting your letter. Come on the 1st. Jamnabehn, Perinbehn, Khurshedbehnn Jawaharlal, etc., will also have arrived on that day.

Blessings from

BAPU

SMT. MITHUBEHN PETIT
SWARAJ ASHRAM
SURAT

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2685
362. LETTER TO HARI-ICHCHHA DESAI

February 26, 1930

CHI. HARI-ICHCHHA,

I got your letter. May you live long and render much service. I would have been happy if you could have come. Janakibehn will come in a day or two.

I got Chandan’s letter too.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7463

363. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

[February 26, 1930]¹

CHI. PRABHUDAS,

I have your postcard. You ought to complete the course of injections which you have commenced. If necessary, therefore, you should stay either in the Vidyapeeth or the Ashram for that purpose. I believe the Ashram air to be very bad these days. Small-pox is widespread. I should therefore like it if Manu too, stayed on there.

It is good that Brijkishan is quite well. Let him improve his health to the utmost.

Blessings from

BAPU

CHI. PRABHUDAS GANDHI
STRI UDYOGALAYA
VIJAPUR “VIA” KALOL

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33046

364. WHEN I AM ARRESTED

It must be taken for granted that, when civil disobedience is started, my arrest is a certainty. It is therefore, necessary to consider what should be done when the event takes place.

On the eve of my arrest in 1922² I had warned co-workers

¹ From the postmark
² Vide “Message to the Public”, 9-3-1922 & “Message to the Country”, 18-3-1924.
against any demonstration of any kind save that of mute, complete non-violence, and had insisted that constructive work which alone could organize the country for civil disobedience should be prosecuted with the utmost zeal. The first part of the instructions was, thanks be to God, literally and completely carried out —so completely that it has enabled an English noble contemptuously to say, ‘Not a dog barked.’ For me when I learnt in the jail that the country had remained absolutely non-violent, it was a demonstration that the preaching of non-violence had had its effect and that the Bardoli decision\(^1\) was the wisest thing to do. It would be foolish to speculate what might have happened if ‘dogs’ had barked and violence had been let loose on my arrest. One thing, however, I can say, that in that event there would have been no independence resolution at Lahore, and no Gandhi with his confidence in the power of non-violence left to contemplate taking the boldest risks imaginable.

Let us, however, think of the immediate future. This time on my arrest there is to be no mute, passive non-violence, but non-violence of the activest type should be set in motion, so that not a single believer in non-violence as an article of faith for the purpose of achieving India’s goal should find himself free or alive at the end of the effort to submit any longer to the existing slavery. It would be, therefore, the duty of everyone to take up such civil disobedience or civil resistance as may be advised and conducted by my successor, or as might be taken up by the Congress. I must confess, that at the present moment, I have no all-India successor in view. But I have sufficient faith in the co-workers and in the mission itself to know that circumstances will give the successor. This peremptory condition must be patent to all that he must be an out and out believer in the efficacy of non-violence for the purpose intended. For without that living faith in it he will not be able at the crucial moment to discover a non-violent method.

It must be parenthetically understood that what is being said here in no way fetters the discretion and full authority of the Congress. The Congress will adopt only such things said here that may commend themselves to Congressmen in general. If the nature of these instructions is to be properly understood, the organic value of the charter of full liberty given to me by the Working Committee should be adequately appreciated. Non-violence, if it does not submit to any restrictions upon its liberty, subjects no one and no institution to any restriction whatsoever, save what may be self-imposed or voluntarily adopted. So long as the vast body of Congressmen continue to believe in non-violence as the only policy in the existing

\(^1\) Of February 1922 to suspend the civil disobedience movement; \textit{vide}
“Working Committee’s Resolutions at Bardoli”, 12-2-1922.
circumstances and have confidence not only in the bona fides of my successor and those who claim to believe in non-violence as an article of faith to the extent indicated but also in the ability of the successor wisely to guide the movement, the Congress will give him and them its blessings and even give effect to these instructions and his.

So far as I am concerned, my intention is to start the movement only through the inmates of the Ashram and those who have submitted to its discipline and assimilated the spirit of its methods. Those, therefore, who will offer battle at the very commencement will be unknown to fame. Hitherto the Ashram has been deliberately kept in reserve in order that by a fairly long course of discipline it might acquire stability. I feel that if the Satyagraha Ashram is to deserve the great confidence that has been reposed in it and the affection lavished upon it by friends, the time has arrived for it to demonstrate the qualities implied in the word satyagraha. I feel that our self-imposed restraints have become subtle indulgences, and the prestige acquired has provided us with privileges and conveniences of which we may be utterly unworthy. These have been thankfully accepted in the hope that some day we would be able to give a good account of ourselves in terms of satyagraha. And if at the end of nearly 15 years of its existence, the Ashram cannot give such a demonstration, it and I should disappear, and it would be well for the nation, the Ashram and me.

When the beginning is well and truly made I expect the response from all over the country. It will be the duty then of everyone who wants to make the movement a success to keep it non-violent and under discipline. Everyone will be expected to stand at his post except when called by his chief. If there is spontaneous mass response, as I hope there will be, and if previous experience is any guide, it will largely be self-regulated. But everyone who accepts non-violence whether as an article of faith or policy would assist the mass movement. Mass movements have, all over the world, thrown up unexpected leaders. This should be no exception to the rule. Whilst, therefore, every effort imaginable and possible should be made to restrain the forces of violence, civil disobedience once begun this time cannot be stopped and must not be stopped so long as there is a single civil resister left free or alive. A votary of satyagraha should find himself in one of the following states:

1. In prison or in an analogous state; or
2. Engaged in civil disobedience; or
3. Under orders at the spinning-wheel, or at some constructive work advancing swaraj.

Young India, 27-2-1930

348
365. SALT AND CANCER

I gladly publish this letter\(^1\). I have glanced at the literature. As an ardent food reformer I have lived without any salt for over six years. Even now I take very little salt internally. But even a food reformer like me has many other uses of salt. To cure a cold, a hot salt water nasal douche is effective. As a tooth powder, finely powdered salt is precious. The way to teach people moderation in salt is not to tax that otherwise most valuable commodity. And above all what is true of well-fed or overfed people, who can provide for themselves every variety of condiment and salt-charged foods that the earth can produce or the ingenuity of man can manufacture, may not be true of millions who are semi-starved and live on rice or stale unleavened cakes. Who can say with certainty that these do not need much more salt than they get? At any rate there are doctors who do say that India’s millions need more salt than they eat, and that her cattle too need much more than the poor farmers can afford to give them.

Young India, 27-2-1930

366. SALT TAX

A paragraph appeared in the Press that I would advise non-payment of the salt tax to begin with. The manufacturer of the canard did not know, perhaps, that the salt tax was so ingeniously devised that it would not yield to easy non-payment. Nevertheless there was this truth in it, that I was contemplating some method of attacking this nefarious monopoly. The garbled report has however resulted in most valuable information having been supplied to me by known and unknown writers. Among the publications thus received is the monograph issued by the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce on salt. It is a valuable publication giving an authentic history of the process of killing by wicked methods salt manufacture in Bengal and dumping down Liverpool salt on a soil which could produce good salt for only a little labour. This history of the evolution of the salt tax furnishes by itself complete condemnation of the British Government.

Next to air and water, salt is perhaps the greatest necessity of life. It is the only condiment of the poor. Cattle cannot live without salt. Salt is a necessary article in many manufactures. It is also a rich manure.

\(^{1}\) From Frederick T. Marwood, not reproduced here. The correspondent had enclosed literature proving causal connection between salt and cancer and had asserted that the salt tax was a blessing in disguise.

There is no article like salt outside water by taxing which the State can reach even the starving millions, the sick, the maimed and the utterly helpless. The tax constitutes therefore the most inhuman poll tax that ingenuity of man can devise. The wholesale price per maund of 82 lbs. is according to Government publications as low as 10 pies, and the tax, say, twenty annas, i.e., 240 pies. This means 2,400 per cent on sale price! What this means to the poor can hardly be imagined by us. Salt production like cotton growing has been centralized for the sake of sustaining the inhuman monopoly. The necessary consequence of the wilful destruction of the spinning-wheel was destruction of cottage cultivation of cotton. The necessary consequence of salt monopoly was the destruction, i.e., closing down of salt works in thousands of places where the poor people manufactured their own salt. A correspondent writes to me from Konkan, saying that if the people had freedom, they could pick up salt from the deposits made by the receding tides on the bountiful coast. But he sorrowfully adds that officers turn the salt over into the sea as fast as nature deposits it. He adds however, that those who can successfully evade the salt police do help themselves to this sea salt. Gujarat workers report the existence of many places where, but for the prohibition, people can get their salt as easily as they can dig out earth for many household purposes. Bengal free can today manufacture all the salt she can ever need. And yet she is forced to import all the salt she eats.

Here is what a retired salt officer writes without disclosing his name:

Under the law the manufacture of salt includes every process by which salt is separated from brine or earth or any other liquid or solid substance and also every process for the purification or refinement of salt.

Contraband salt means salt or salt earth which has not paid duty.
1. Manufacture, removal, or transport of salt without licence;
2. The excavation, collection, or removal of natural salt or salt earth;
3. And possession or sale of contraband salt are punishable with a fine up to Rs. 500 or imprisonment up to six months or both.

The whole western littoral of the Bombay Presidency from Cambay to Ratnagiri; the whole coast of Kathiawar and the southern coast of Sind is a huge natural salt-work, and natural salt and salt earth from which salt can be easily prepared is in every creek.

If a band of volunteers begin the work all along the coast, it would be impossible for the whole strength of the police and customs staff to prevent them from collecting natural salt and salt earth, turning them into salt in the interior and retaining it. The people of the presidency or at least the men and women of the older generation firmly believe, that locally manufactured sea salt is healthier than Kharaghoda salt, and they would love to have it, while everyone would like to have cheap salt. The poor people on the coast will join to get salt from Government salt-works without paying duty would be stealing or robbery, an act of First Class Hinsa that would justify even shooting down of the offenders if they persisted in the act.

I have given the letter as it was received. When salt can be manufactured much more easily than it can be taken from salt depots, I am not likely to advise people to help themselves to the article from salt pans or storehouses. But I do not share the salt officer’s characterization of such helping as first-class himsa. Both the helping from pans and manufacturing contraband salt are statutory crimes heavily punishable. Why is the manufacturing without licence a virtue and taking salt from a manufacturing pan a vice ? If the impost is wrong, it is wrong whether in connection with manufactured salt or the crude article. If a robber steals my grain and cooks some of it, I am entitled to both the raw and the cooked grain. I may draw a distinction for the sake of avoiding inconvenience between in the collection of salt spontaneously in these days of unemployment. Trying manufactured and crude salt, and adopt the easier method of manufacturing salt. But that does not alter the legal position in the slightest degree. When therefore the time comes, civil resisters will have an ample opportunity of their ability to conduct their campaign regarding the tax in a most effective manner. The illegality is in a Government that steals the people’s salt and makes them pay heavily for the stolen article. The people, when they become conscious of their power, will have every right to take possession of what belongs to them.

Young India, 27-2-1930

367. NOTES

THE NATIONAL FLAG

The more the National Flag is gaining in importance, the nicer become the questions that are being raised about its colours, size, the charkha symbol, etc. It should be remembered that the National Flag has become national only by convention and not by any Congress resolution. With the growing consciousness of oneness, Congressmen have begun to dislike the communal meaning that as inventor of the design I gave to the colours on the Flag. A correspondent some days ago sent me a cutting describing a new meaning a lady gave to the colours. So far as I recall her speech, red was suggestive of bravery, green of calmness and white of purity. I have no hesitation in accepting this meaning in the place of mine. When we have achieved heart unity, there is no doubt that we shall be ashamed of recalling things which had no use but to placate warring elements in the nation. When we are really united, we shall never need to remember our differences, we shall want to forget them as soon as we can. But we shall always need to cultivate and treasure the virtues of bravery, calmness and purity. This new meaning therefore should set at rest all differences about the colours. As for the spinning-wheel, I shall be sorry to find anybody objecting to the wheel which means energy, which binds the poor and the rich, and which ever reminds Congressmen that in anything that they may do, they dare not forget the masses.

SMOKING NUISANCE

A correspondent writes:

In this case at any rate the authorities are not to blame. Unless the passengers affected complain the railway authorities can take no action. The passengers can do much to abate the nuisance which is very real. The smoker all the world over is perhaps the most inconsiderate of all the slaves of habit. He takes it for granted that everybody else smokes or ought to. He will part with many things before he will part with his pipe. He will spit anywhere and smoke in your very face and expect you to enjoy the smoky curl that mounts up in front of you. And it would be the height of insolence if you were to protest against the enjoyment thus thrust on you. Our proverbial docility enables the Indian smoker to outdo his foreign companions in indifference. And so the smoker in India appears to have acquired a prescriptive right to make of himself a nuisance. Who can deny that he is in a majority? For of the travelling public almost every other man one meets with is smoking tobacco in one form or other. The only remedy is for volunteers to come into being, who will courteously ask the offending smokers to desist from smoking, and then if need be, to report to the authorities. Of course the best course

\[The\ \text{letter is not reproduced here. The correspondent had questioned why the railway authorities and passengers did not enforce the legal provision to penalize passengers smoking in trains.}\] is as elsewhere to set apart smoking compartments or perhaps to reserve compartments for non-smokers.

Young India, 27-2-1930

368. HISTORY OF SALT MANUFACTURE

The following is abridged from the publication Moral and Material Progress 1910-11. Many curses have been handed down to us from time immemorial as salt monopoly is claimed by the publication to have done. Only the whole people were never in the grip of the salt tax curse in the pre-British days. It was reserved for the British Government to reduce the curse to a perfect formula covering every man, woman, child and beast.

Young India, 27-2-1930

369. RAISING FALSE HOPES

With the deeper penetration among the masses, there is danger of Congressmen making thoughtless promises and raising false hopes which may never be realized. As an illustration I have before me a Hindi circular issued by a Youth League which among twenty-five promises contains these:

- Cow-slaughter will stop altogether.
- Milk, ghee and curds being cheap, all will put on flesh and be strong.
- Child mortality will decrease.
- Grain will not be exported to foreign parts. Knavery will cease and all will be honest.
- Boys and girls will receive free instruction up to the age of 14.
- Life will be clean and healthy.
- Everyone will have arms for self-defence.
- There will be no child widows.
- Postage and railage will be reduced.

The promises are admirable, but extravagant and hardly likely to be fulfilled by the mere fact of India gaining independence. Many of the reforms hoped for will require tremendous social effort. Foreign domination is undoubtedly responsible for many evils, but we need to remember that many pre-existing evils were also a potent cause of that domination. Therefore the mere throwing off of the foreign yoke, whilst it is as essential as life breath, will never be the cure-all.

Take the cow-slaughter. This will not stop for the mere independence. It will come by the good grace of our Mussalman countrymen and still more by hard thinking and harder acting. It is much more an economic than a religious problem. If we knew and acted according to the science of cow keeping, cow breeding and some other things mentioned in these pages, the cow can be saved today. To mention her in an enumeration of the future hopes is to retard the process of her preservation.

1 Not reproduced here

I will run through the other items.

Cheap milk, ghee, curds will come from applied knowledge, never from independence.

Child mortality will not decrease except by banishing poverty and instructing the adult population in the art of rearing children.

Grain, if we produce more than we need, will certainly be exported as well for our benefit as that of mankind in general.

Knavery will cease only if we achieve our freedom by non-violent and truthful means, not otherwise.

I doubt if we shall ever be able to give free instruction to boys and girls up to anything like 14. But we might be able to take their labour as fees. This will happen if the nation is weaned from false notions of education.

Life will be as dirty as it is today unless we learn corporate sanitation.

I am certain that everyone will not have arms for self-defence, but there will be much freer issue than hitherto. Issue of arms will still be regulated but from wholly different motives from now.

There will be child widows in abundance, unless by the time we achieve freedom, blind orthodoxy and lust have given place to reasoned faith and self-restraint.

I am not sure that postage can be further reduced. Railage may be.

But I may be wrong and the Youth League in question may be right in its estimate of the capacity of independence to do things for us. The point is not who is right. The point to be made is that it is rash and imprudent to make hasty promises. It is more than enough to be able to say without fear of contradiction, that Independence means the removal of the greatest obstacle in the path of our economic, political, cultural and spiritual progress, that without the removal of that obstacle there is no progress, and that delay means national bankruptcy, suicide.

Young India, 27-2-1930
370. KHADDAR FRANCHISE

The clause in the Congress constitution requiring Congressmen to wear hand-spun and hand-woven garments on pain of being debarred from voting at meetings continues to cause trouble. A correspondent writes:

These Congress members, though they are clad top to toe in foreign and Indian mill-made garments, do not hesitate to say when questioned that to the best of their ability and knowledge they are dressed in khaddar garments. In the face of Pandit Motilalji’s decision at Calcutta the chairmen at Congress Committee meetings feel obliged to accept such statements though they are manifestly false. Honest men who when challenged admit that they are not dressed in khaddar are debarred. Can you not show a way out, or cannot the Working Committee provide a remedy?

The remedy that comes to me on the spur of the moment is that the chairmen at such meetings should firmly rule out of order those who are manifestly clad in any but khaddar garments. Pandit Motilalji’s decision was given, I imagine, to obviate a difficulty. It establishes no precedent, and he will himself refuse to be bound by a decision which was neither serious nor considered. On the eve of the great struggle that we are about to enter upon, it behoves all Congressmen to carry out the Congress constitution honestly. Those who do not like the khaddar clause are free to agitate for its repeal but they are in honour-bound to give effect to it while it forms part of the constitution.

Another correspondent asks questions which present no difficulty. The following answers obviate the necessity of copying the questions:

1. No one at the time of becoming a four anna member is obliged to wear khaddar. The idea behind the wording of the clause was first to enlist everyone who would subscribe to the 1st article and pay 4 annas or the required quantity of self-spun yarn and then to induce him to wear khaddar.

2. Those who are entitled to vote at meetings must be habitual wearers of khaddar. It is not enough therefore to wear khaddar only for the purpose of attending Congress functions. But the practice has grown up of not making any further inquiry when a person attending any meeting is found to be wearing khaddar.

3. Those who are partly dressed in khaddar cannot be considered khaddar clad.

4. Mill-made cloth is not khaddar.

Young India, 27-2-1930
371. THAT NOXIOUS PALM

This reminds me of what is now going on in Bengal. The water hyacinth beautiful to look at is a deadly plant floating on the great Bengal rivers. The local Government are trying to destroy it as otherwise it bids fair to destroy the crops that are watered by the rivers. I have known of stringent legislation requiring people on pain of being imprisoned to destroy noxious plants. The central point of the world crusade against opium is to destroy and prevent the cultivation of the poppy. It was not therefore surprising to find condemnation of this ‘wild date palm’ as it has been called in the extracts unearthed by Mahadev. It has no value apart from the fiery liquid it provides. The sooner the other owners destroy it to make room for life-giving crops, the better it will be for them and society.

Young India, 27-2-1930

372. BORDERLAND OF INSOLVENCY

The address of Sjt. Ghanshyamdas Birla as President of the Federation of Indian Chambers of Commerce and Industry, delivered recently at Delhi in the presence of the Viceroy, has justly attracted wide attention. I take the following seasonable paragraphs from it our foreign liabilities.

Sjt. Birla as a financier can only deal with the arithmetic of the transactions and find how those liabilities just or unjust may be met. Reformers claim to go behind these liabilities and to know how and why they were created. We need not be squeamish about repudiation of liabilities only so called and imposed upon us involuntarily and often without our knowledge. Constitution making is a good pastime under healthy conditions. But it is deceptive and ruinous when the patient for whom a new constitution is prescribed is about to die. An impartial and unfettered examination of our financial position should therefore be a condition precedent to any scheme of constitution making.

Young India, 27-2-1930

1 Mahadev Desai’s article under this title giving extracts from settlement reports and other documents, is not reproduced here. It showed that toddy trees were injurious to cultivation and fit only to be destroyed.

2 Not reproduced here. They analysed the extent and impact of British investments, home charges and charges for such services as transport, insurance, etc.
373. VARNADHARMA AND DUTY OF LABOUR-IV

Q. Tolstoy has written “Money and slavery are one and the same thing. Their object is the same and their outcome is also alike. . . . Money is a new and frightful image of slavery and like the ancient personal bondage, it degrades and depraves the slave as well as the master. That is not all. It is worse; because it destroys the human affection which subsisted between master and slave in the ancient form of personal slavery.”

Do you support this view? Can money never become a harmless medium of exchange? If so, how? and if not, why not?

A. I am not aware that Tolstoy wrote what the questioner quotes as the former’s statement. Slavery and money do not belong to the same class and therefore they cannot be compared. Slavery is a status and always abhorrent. Money is only a medium for one’s dealings with the world. However powerful a medium it may be, it is just as likely to be beneficial as to be harmful. This same can be said of many other material things. Under every circumstance and in some form or other, the need for money will surely exist. Slavery never was and never could be necessary. We must understand the meaning of money here. When I barter grain for shoes, then, as the grain is the medium of exchange for shoes, it becomes money. But because barter by grain becomes difficult for a large number of people, a bit of metal or paper is used to represent it. This metal or paper is money. There can be no objection to this. But when a person hoards such paper, metal or grain beyond his needs, it leads to evil. It is therefore clear that money by itself is not harmful, but greed for it is harmful. As opposed to this, slavery is a sign of greed. It is wrong and greedy to make a man a slave, but possession of money becomes wrong only when it is held in excess.

However, the man who believes in varanadharma is contented and therefore will not be greedy of wealth. And the man who believes in the duty of labour will never make another a slave,

[From Hindi]

Hindi Navajivan, 27-2-1930
374. LETTER TO NAUTAMLAL BHAGWANJI

ASHRAM SABARMATI,
February 27, 1930

BHAISHRI NAUTAMLAL,

I got your letter. I make the following suggestion. The bridge should be dressed in as simple garments as possible. The ornaments, too, should be as few as possible. Whatever you wish to give to her, give it in the form of a hundi¹. Do the same if you also wish to give a dowry to the bridegroom. Apart from that, give him a very simple dress of khadi. There should be no dinner party at all. There will be some guests on the day of the wedding and it will of course be necessary to feed them. The menu for them should include as few delicacies as possible. The noisy singing by women should be altogether forbidden. There should be no band. The wedding should be made a purely religious ceremony. The guests should not be pressed to stay on after the wedding is over. The custom of giving presents to members of the caste should not be observed. If you wish to spend something on the occasion of the marriage, spend it on some good cause, and, if possible, on a cause which will benefit all people. It would be better if you spend nothing specially for the benefit of the caste. Sub-divisions of the caste deserve no help. I have dictated these suggestions in some haste; you may carry out as many of them as you can.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2584

¹ Bill of exchange or indigenous cheque
375. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

SABARMATI,

Thursday [February 27, 1930]

CHI. RAMDAS,

I have your letter. I understand your desire not to leave the Ashram this time, I do wish to frame some rules. How is the girl? And Nimu?

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

376. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

February 28, 1930

BHAI GHANSHYAMDASJI,

I have your letter. I have reproduced your speech at length.\(^1\) Whatever was done is all to the good. I have practised my ‘gift’ well by this time. I now see that they have no answer to it. They merely exploit our ignorance and cowardice.

The sooner the Assembly dissolves the better. I have little hope of remaining out of jail by the end of March.

I have a query. Keshu and his mother were there, so were Radhabehn and Devdas. Tell me what you think of them? How did Keshu behave during his illness?

Yours,

MOHANDAS

From Hindi: C.W. 6182. Courtesy: G.D. Birla

\(^1\) The date suggested in the source is February 26, 1930. Thursday, however, corresponded to February 27.

\(^2\) Vide “Borderland of Insolvency”, 27-2-1930.
377. LETTER TO RUKMINI BAJAJ

[Before March 2, 1930]

CHI. RUKHI,

I have received your letter.

I am astonished to read what you write about Narandas. He has never shown himself disinclined. And I am sure Jamnadas can never oppose it, judging from his views on the subject. However, I am pleased to know that you are not the least perturbed and that both of you, mother and daughter, are steadfast. In this matter, your opinion alone should count most. But when Santok also completely agrees with you, then the likes and dislikes of other people do not matter much. If you and Benarasi become an ideal couple, then all criticism will be silenced and you will have shown the path to the Hindu community. I say to Marwari friends in jest, “You have taken away a daughter from me. Therefore, my tax on you will now be doubled.” Only today I have collected Rs. 201/- for khadi from a Marwari gentleman by using this joke on him. He gave the amount with great pleasure.

Radha’s health creates anxiety. I am enclosing a letter for her. Learn Hindi either from Totaramji or from Kashinathji.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 9047

378. THAKKAR BAPA’S BEGGING-BOWL

What shall I add to the details below, which Thakkar Bapa has sent? Even if there should be war trumpets blowing, even if conditions should be hard, for such public good and at the instance of this aged worker, the rich will certainly loosen their purse-strings. The next donor should be a Jugal Kishore Birla not of Marwar but of Gujarat. That will be to the glory of Gujarat.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 2-3-1930

---

1 From the contents, the letter appears to have been written some time before the addressee’s marriage to Benarasidas; they were married on March 2, 1930; vide “Speech at Wedding, Sabarmati Ashram”, 2-3-1930.

2 Concerning expenditure incurred on digging 49 wells for untouchables, out of funds donated by Jugal Kishore Birla, and giving a list of 37 villages where work had to be suspended for lack of funds.
A young man writes:

Not all parents are like this. Here is a letter that a mother wrote to her son at the Gujarat Vidyapith, who was wanting to join the satyagraha movement.

This mother deserves congratulations. If India has many such mothers, our struggle will end successfully and quickly. Fortunately, the number of such parents is well on the increase. There are two well-to-do girls whose parents, too, have given them full encouragement and put no restrictions on their self-disciplined freedom. I have intentionally used here the adjective “self-disciplined” before “freedom” to suggest that freedom can be either self-disciplined or self-willed.

Where there is opposition to one’s good intentions, as in the case of this young man, from one’s father or teacher, one should, if one is an adult son or daughter over sixteen years of age, first humbly try to persuade the elders concerned, and then respectfully disobey their order or their will. That is the clear duty of the son or the daughter in a situation like this. If the son’s description of his father in the letter above is true and if the latter recognizes himself as the father referred to, I would request him to honour the khadi he wears, give his blessings to the son and encourage him in his idea of self-sacrifice. The father should also discard both tea and the thermos. Tea is never a necessity of life, and a thing like a thermos has no place in his poor home. I have no prejudice against such foreign articles as are needed for maintaining one’s health or for similar uses. However, to decide what is essential is a matter to which considerable thought should always be given. It is not enough to wear khadi. The wearer should also realize that khadi symbolizes the spirit of patriotism and modesty. Wearing khadi does not give one the licence to enjoy all kinds of liberty, but is the first step in the direction of self-restraint and a sign of our desire to curtail other unnecessary freedoms. I shall show here a cheap, indigenous way of preserving the temperature of hot water or any similar drink. If hot water or a similar drink is put in a vessel that can be closed tight, and if the vessel is then wrapped up on all sides in a woollen blanket or in cotton and kept inside a chest or box, the drink will preserve its temperature for twenty-four hours.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 2-3-1930

1 The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had complained that guardians discouraged the patriotic urges of their wards. He had also referred to his khadi-wearing father using a foreign thermos flask.

2 Not translated here. It complimented the son on his eagerness to court arrest.
DEAR FRIEND.

Before embarking on civil disobedience and taking the risk I have dreaded to take all these years, I would fain approach you and find a way out.

My personal faith is absolutely clear. I cannot intentionally hurt anything that lives, much less fellow human beings, even though they may do the greatest wrong to me and mine. Whilst, therefore, I hold the British rule to be a curse, I do not intend harm to a single Englishman or to any legitimate interest he may have in India.

I must not be misunderstood. Though I hold the British rule in India to be a curse, I do not, therefore, consider Englishmen in general to be worse than any other people on earth I have the privilege of claiming many Englishmen as dearest friends. Indeed much that I have learnt of the evil of British rule is due to the writings of frank and courageous Englishmen who have not hesitated to tell the unpalatable truth about that rule.

And why do I regard the British rule as a curse?

It has impoverished the dumb millions by a system of progressive exploitation and by a ruinously expensive military and civil administration which the country can never afford.

It has reduced us politically to serfdom. It has sapped the foundations of our culture. And, by the policy of cruel disarmament, it has degraded us spiritually. Lacking the inward strength, we have been reduced, by all but universal disarmament, to a state bordering on cowardly helplessness.

In common with many of my countrymen, I had hugged the fond hope that the proposed Round Table Conference might furnish a solution. But, when you said plainly that you could not give any assurance that you or the British Cabinet would pledge yourselves to support a scheme of full Dominion Status, the Round Table Conference could not possibly furnish the solution for which vocal India is consciously, and the dumb millions are unconsciously, thirsting. Needless to say there never was any question of Parliament’s verdict being anticipated. Instances are not wanting of the British Cabinet, in anticipation of the Parliamentary verdict, having pledged itself to a particular policy.
The Delhi interview \(^1\) having miscarried, there was no option for Pandit Motilal Nehru and me but to take steps to carry out the solemn resolution of the Congress arrived at in Calcutta at its Session in 1928.\(^2\)

But the Resolution of Independence should cause no alarm, if the word Dominion Status mentioned in your announcement had been used in its accepted sense. For, has it not been admitted by responsible British statesmen that Dominion Status is virtual Independence? What, however, I fear is that there never has been any intention of granting such Dominion Status to India in the immediate future.

But this is all past history. Since the announcement many events have happened which show unmistakably the trend of British policy.

It seems as clear as daylight that responsible British statesmen do not contemplate any alteration in British policy that might adversely affect Britain’s commerce with India or require an impartial and close scrutiny of Britain’s transactions with India. If nothing is done to end the process of exploitation India must be bled with an ever increasing speed. The Finance Member regards as a settled fact the 1/6 ratio which by a stroke of the pen drains India of a few crores. And when a serious attempt is being made through a civil form of direct action, to unsettle this fact, among many others, even you cannot help appealing to the wealthy landed classes to help you to crush that attempt in the name of an order that grinds India to atoms.

Unless those who work in the name of the nation understand and keep before all concerned the motive that lies behind the craving for independence, there is every danger of independence coming to us so changed as to be of no value to those toiling voiceless millions for whom it is sought and for whom it is worth taking. It is for that reason that I have been recently telling the public what independence should really mean.

Let me put before you some of the salient points.

The terrific pressure of land revenue, which furnishes a large part of the total, must undergo considerable modification in an independent India. Even the much vaunted permanent settlement benefits the few rich zamindars, not the ryots. The riyot has remained as helpless as ever. He is a mere tenant at will. Not only, then, has the

---

1. Which took place on December 23, 1929.
3. The resolution referred to is the Congress resolution passed at Lahore in 1929. Vide “Speech at Subjects Committee, A.I.C.C.”, 27-12-1929.
land revenue to be considerably reduced, but the whole revenue system has to be so revised as to make the ryot’s good its primary concern. But the British system seems to be designed to crush the very life out of him. Even the salt he must use to live is so taxed as to make the burden fall heaviest on him, if only because of the heartless impartiality of it incidence. The tax shows itself still more burdensome on the poor man when it is remembered that salt is the one thing he must eat more than the rich man both individually and collectively.
The drink and drug revenue, too, is derived from the poor. It saps the foundations both of their health and morals. It is defended under the false plea of individual freedom, but, in reality, is maintained for its own sake. The ingenuity of the authors of the reforms of 1919 transferred this revenue to the so-called responsible part of dyarchy, so as to throw the burden of prohibition on it, thus, from the very beginning, rendering it powerless for good. If the unhappy minister wipes out this revenue he must starve education, since in the existing circumstances he has no new source of replacing that revenue. If the weight of taxation has crushed the poor from above, the destruction of the central supplementary industry, i.e., hand-spinning, has undermined their capacity for producing wealth. The tale of India’s ruination is not complete without reference to the liabilities incurred in her name. Sufficient has been recently said about these in the public Press. It must be the duty of a free India to subject all the liabilities to the strictest investigation, and repudiate those that may be adjudged by an impartial tribunal to be unjust and unfair.

The iniquities sampled above are maintained in order to carry on a foreign administration, demonstrably the most expensive in the world. Take your own salary. It is over Rs. 21,000 per month, besides many other indirect additions. The British Prime Minister gets £ 5,000 per year, i.e., over Rs. 5,400 per month at the present rate of exchange. You are getting over Rs. 700 per day against India’s average income of less than annas 2 per day. The Prime Minister gets Rs. 180 per day against Great Britain’s average income of nearly Rs.
2 per day. Thus you are getting much over five thousand times India’s average income. The British Prime Minister is getting only ninety times Britain’s average income. On bended knees I ask you to ponder over this phenomenon. I have taken a personal illustration to drive home a painful truth. I have too great a regard for you as a man to wish to hurt your feelings. I know that you do not need the salary you get. Probably the whole of your salary goes for charity. But a system that provides for such an arrangement deserves to be summarily scrapped. What is true of the Viceregal salary is true generally of the whole administration.
A radical cutting down of the revenue, therefore, depends upon an equally radical reduction in the expenses of the administration. This means a transformation of the scheme of government. This transformation is impossible without independence. Hence, in my opinion, the spontaneous demonstration of 26th January, in which hundreds of thousands of villagers instinctively participated. To them independence means deliverance from the killing weight.

Not one of the great British political parties, it seems to me, is prepared to give up the Indian spoils to which Great Britain helps herself from day to day, often, in spite of the unanimous opposition of Indian opinion.

Nevertheless, if India is to live as a nation, if the slow death by starvation of her people is to stop, some remedy must be found for immediate relief. The proposed Conference is certainly not the remedy. It is not a matter of carrying conviction by argument. The matter resolves itself into one of matching forces. Conviction or no conviction, Great Britain would defend her Indian commerce and interests by all the forces at her command. India must consequently evolve force enough to free herself from that embrace of death.

It is common cause that, however disorganized and, for the time being, insignificant it may be, the party of violence is gaining ground and making itself felt. Its end is the same as mine. But I am convinced that it cannot bring the desired relief to the dumb millions. And the conviction is growing deeper and deeper in me that nothing but unadulterated non-violence can check the organized violence of the British Government. Many think that non-violence is not an active force. My experience, limited though it undoubtedly is, shows that non-violence can be an intensely active force. It is my purpose to set in motion that force as well against the organized violent force of the British rule as [against] the unorganized violent force of the growing party of violence. To sit still would be to give rein to both the forces above mentioned. Having an unquestioning and immovable faith in the efficacy of non-violence as I know it, it would be sinful on my part to wait any longer.

This non-violence will be expressed through civil disobedience, for the moment confined to the inmates of the Satyagraha Ashram, but ultimately designed to cover all those who choose to join the movement with its obvious limitations.

I know that in embarking on non-violence I shall be running what might fairly be termed a mad risk. But the victories of truth have never been won without risks, often of the gravest character. Conversion of a nation that has consciously or unconsciously preyed upon another, far more numerous, far more ancient and no less cultured than itself, is worth any amount of risk.

I have deliberately used the word “conversion”. For my ambition is no less than to convert the British people through non-violence, and thus make them see the wrong they have done to India. I do not seek to harm your people. I want to serve them even as I want to serve my own. I believe that I have always served them. I served them up to 1919 blindly. But when my eyes were opened and I conceived non-co-operation, the object still was to serve them. I employed the same weapon that I have in all humility successfully used against the dearest members of my family. If I have equal love for your people with mine it will not long remain hidden. It will be acknowledged by them even as the members of my family acknowledged it after they had tried me for several years. If the people join me as I expect they will, the sufferings they will undergo, unless the British nation sooner retraces its steps, will be enough to melt the stoniest hearts.

The plan through civil disobedience will be to combat such evils as I have sampled out. If we want to sever the British connection it is because of such evils. When they are removed the path becomes easy. Then the way to friendly negotiation will be open. If the British commerce with India is purified of greed, you will have no difficulty in recognizing our independence. I respectfully invite you then to pave the way for immediate removal of those evils, and thus open a way for a real conference between equals, interested only in promoting the common good of mankind through voluntary fellowship and in arranging terms of mutual help and commerce equally suited to both. You have unnecessarily laid stress upon the communal problems that unhappily affect this land. Important though they undoubtedly are for the consideration of any scheme of government, they have little bearing on the greater problems which are above communities and which affect them all equally. But if you cannot see your way to deal with these evils and my letter makes no appeal to your heart, on the 11th day of this month, I shall proceed with such co-workers of the Ashram as I can take, to disregard the provisions of the salt laws. I regard this tax to be the most iniquitous of all from the poor man’s standpoint. As the independence movement is essentially for the poorest in the land the beginning will be made with this evil. The wonder is that we have submitted to the cruel monopoly for so long. It is, I know, open to you to frustrate my design by arresting me. I hope that there will be tens of thousands ready, in a disciplined manner, to take up the work after me, and, in the act of disobeying the Salt Act to lay themselves open to the penalties of a law that should never have disfigured the Statute-book.

1 The march, however, started on March 12.

I have no desire to cause you unnecessary embarrassment, or any at all, so far as I can help. If you think that there is any substance in my letter, and if you will care to discuss matters with me, and if to that end you would like me to postpone publication of this letter, I shall gladly refrain on receipt of a telegram to that effect soon after this reaches you.¹ You will, however, dome the favour not to deflect me from my course unless you can see your way to conform to the substance of this letter.

This letter is not in any way intended as a threat but is a simple and sacred duty peremptory on a civil resister. Therefore I am having it specially delivered by a young English friend who believes in the Indian cause and is a full believer in non-violence and whom Providence seems to have sent to me, as it were, for the very purpose.²

I remain,
Your sincere friend,
M. K. GANDHI

H. E. LORD IRWIN
VICEROY’S HOUSE
NEW DELHI-3

Young India, 12-3-1930; also S.N. 16624

381. SPEECH AT WEDDING, SABARMATI ASHRAM
March 2, 1930

Whenever a wedding is arranged through the Ashram, I say a few words while offering my blessings. On this occasion again I wish to express the hope which I expressed on the occasion of the marriage of Shri Shankarilal and Umiya.

Bhai Benarsi, I have a right to hope for much from you. I have been very happy to observe your humility and your religious devotion. I hope that you will devote yourself to national work to the best of your ability and inspire Rukmini to do likewise. Try to ¹The Viceroy’s reply was simply an expression of regret that Gandhiji should be “contemplating a course of action which is clearly bound to involve violation of the law and danger to the public peace”.

²Reginald Reynolds who took the letter to the Viceroy, referring to it in To Live in Mankind, observes: “Before I went Gandhi insisted I should read the letter carefully, as he did not wish me to associate myself with it unless I was in complete agreement with its contents. My taking of this letter was, in fact, intended to be symbolic of the fact that this was not merely a struggle between the Indians and the British….” Vide also “About That Letter”, 6-3-1930.
³Of Benarsilal Bazaj and Rukmini, daughter of Maganlal Gandhi.
understand fully the meaning of the saptapadi vow and preserve it in practice in your life. In this vow, the bride and the bridegroom promise to be each other’s friends; but their friendship is real only if they try to remedy each other’s defects and to strengthen their own virtues. The cause of the attachment and aversion we see in the world is people’s habit of observing one another’s defects. Those whose only aim is enjoyment in life are bound to be filled with such feelings. I should, therefore, like to see a bond of friendship between husband and wife, instead of one of sensual enjoyment. I know that it is difficult to cultivate such a relationship, but nothing is too difficult for determined effort. The vow requires the bride to say that the bridegroom is her guru and her god. I had wanted this time to alter the vow in this regard, but refrained from doing so for fear that that might confuse people’s minds. I intend to omit the words ‘guru’ and ‘god’ in future, because it is not right that a husband should regard himself as a guru or god. Anyone who serves another does become a guru or god without his claiming to be one. This, however, does not mean that today’s vow is not binding. Rukmini has accepted you as her guru and god, understanding quite well the meaning of the vow. You should, therefore, be worthy of her trust. Take care of her as you would of a flower. Tolerate the differences in outlook and manners which may arise from the fact of you two belonging to different provinces. May the bond between Marwar and Gujarat which has been formed grow and bear happy fruit. May your relationship become an ideal for others.

Rukhi, the choice of Benarsi was not mine; it was Maganlal’s. I have only tried to be worthy of his legacy. You should fulfill the hope which Maganlal had cherished about you. You know that his entire life was dedicated to service. I have occupied the seat left vacant by him in the hope that his virtues may grow in me. You know my views. Follow them and so live your life that you will win praise for your father and grandfather. My ambition for you is that your mother-in-law and others should never detect a trace of selfishness in you, and that you will do nothing of which I, Khushalbhai, Devbhabhi or Santok need feel ashamed. I would be pained if you should be guilty of a single act which would make us feel ashamed of you. People will admire you if you exercise self-control even in your enjoyments. Let self-control be your aim in all that you enjoy. We obey the instincts of our nature and do certain things. For instance, music at the time of prayers is a form of enjoyment, for the experience of sweetness is a pleasure. But we wish to learn renunciation through this enjoyment. Similarly, married life is a form of enjoyment but we should know that the aim behind it is self-control. Our enjoyment is for the purpose of overcoming the desire for enjoyment. You have been learning this lesson from the time that we were in South Africa. Always serve others. Let Benarsi not repent having married a Gujarati girl, and one brought up in the Ashram. Even if he does not have virtues which would make him worthy of being regarded by you as a guru or god, you should be a women of such ideal character that he may acquire those virtues. My sincere blessings to you both for a long life.

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 9296

382. NOTE TO ANAND T. HINGORANI

March 3, 1930

You are a good young man of promise. If the surrounding atmosphere responds, it will be well with you. I hope to go through your other diary. Look at my remarks on your ‘who am I.’

BAPU

From a microfilm. Courtesy: National Archives Of India and Anand T. Hingorani

383. LETTER TO DR. M. A. ANSARI

Sabarmati, March 3, 1930

DEAR DR. ANSARI,

I have your message. It does not move me. I want you to read my letter to the Viceroy with an unbiased mind. You seem to have made up your mind that the Independence Resolution is wrong and that Civil Disobedience—its corollary—is also wrong, i. e., at the present moment. You will find neither to be wrong. We cannot achieve unity through any Conference. But we can through fighting for common causes. At the time of the flood in Gujarat four years ago, all without exception in the flood area made common cause. There was no difficulty about Mussalmans seeking the same shelter as the Hindus. The blindly orthodox Hindu suspended his prejudice against the untouchable. The snake discarded his venom for the time being. True, they are again “as you were”, but a few more such lessons will certainly set them right. I want you to realize the new orientation I have given to the struggle. I seek independence through a redress of the age-long grievances which touch the masses more than us. I want you to throw yourself heart and soul into this battle. If your preoccupations prevent you, you must at least give it your blessing. I have smallpox raging in the Ashram. We are most of us anti-vaccinationists from religious motives. No provable virtue of vaccination will therefore move us. If you know of a remedy apart from vaccination, please send me the prescription. The treatment we are having is red colour, strong permanganate solution warm baths followed by wet-sheet pack and liquid food, chiefly fruit juices, and when the virulence abates a little milk and water, but of 12 cases three have proved fatal. Two obstinate cases of confluent smallpox have completely recovered. There is uncertainty about one bad case. We are trying to keep children from the patients but it is so difficult to isolate patients completely. It is an expensive process if you will not make it heartless and leave the patient practically to his fate.

1 The addressee in a note had asked Gandhiji what he thought of him.

If you have leisure please dictate full instructions.

Id mubarak.

Yours ever,

M. K. GANDHI

From a copy: Ansari Papers. Courte sy: Jamia Millia Islamia Library

384. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

Monday, 3.45 a.m. [March 3, 1930]

CHI. BRIJKRISHNA,

I was expecting your letter. I was relieved to learn from Chhaganlal and Kashibehn that your fever had gone down.

If you can digest milk with ghee added to it, do take it. It would be all right too if a little milk taken with chapati can sustain you. The finding of vaidyas is that those who find milk constipating are bound to find other things excepting fruit constipating, too. But there is no need of other things. Take whatever relieves you.

Now, for Delhi. Send a telegram restraining your brother and mother from coming over. Tell them there is no likelihood of your going to jail now, and that they must not interfere in your activities. If, in spite of this, they do come, remain firm and say courteously that they must give up all hope of exerting pressure upon you. Bear with their suffering. A time will come when they will be reconciled.

Mahadev has not gone to Delhi. Reynolds has taken the letter.

Blessings from

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2375

1 The date is inferred from the reference to the letter to Lord Irwin, which was delivered by Reginald Reynolds.

370 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
BHAISHRI MANMOHANDAS.

March 3, 1930

I got both the books sent by you. You already see that I have been using the book on the subject of salt. If you have this further information, send it to me; if you don’t have it, please get it for me. What is the expenditure incurred on the collection of the salt tax? Some say it is eight per cent and some that it is twenty per cent. Compare the percentage of expenditure on this tax with the percentage of expenditure on other taxes.

If you have a copy of the latest Administration Report on salt, send it to me. If you have no spare copy, I will return it to you.

Send me any other information which you think will be useful to me.

Now about your book on cotton. I have been reading it. But I may point out two errors just now. You say that formerly weaving and spinning were probably independent professions and not subsidiary occupations. Weaving and spinning are two independent activities. Weaving was (chiefly) an independent profession and is so even today. That spinning, on the other hand, has always been (chiefly) a subsidiary occupation we can prove with thousands of instances even today. The individuals were alive when the movement for the revival of spinning started in 1919. This is an important distinction, and so you must have seen that your error is a serious one. This error will continue to be made in the absence of personal knowledge of the facts. Even writers who have gone deeper than you have committed it, But that defence will not serve an humble student. The second error is this. Writing about the Mogul period you say that there were then such frequent and widespread massacres that no profession could flourish. There are two errors in this view. Such massacres were never widespread. Before Akbar, no Muslim ruler had entered villages. The massacres always took place in cities and there, too, they had little effect on the artisan classes. Even today we see these classes going on with their occupations under this anarchical rule. Formerly, the government touched the lives of only those who were connected with the administrative machinery. It is only in the present age that governments have become eager to extend their grip over entire populations. And, among them all, the British Government has acquired the utmost efficiency in this. It is this efficiency which is ruining us, for British rule is inspired by no philanthropic motives.
I found some time in the morning to write this, for I expect you to make a valuable contribution to the cause.

Blessings from
MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6

386. LETTER TO MANGALDAS, KASTURBHAI AND GORDHANBHAI

SABARMATI,
March 4, 1930

SHETH SHRI MANGALDAS, SHETH SHRI KASTURBHAI AND SHETH SHRI GORDHANBHAI,

I remember it was a condition that in the administration of the sums contributed by the mill-owners to the Tilak Swaraj Fund, my advice also would be sought. For some time, the workers have not been getting the benefits from that amount which they were getting previously. It is likely that I may have to go to jail after the 11th. If, therefore, you call a meeting to the mill-owners before that date, I may place my views before them and we may discuss how the amount might be utilized.

Yours,
MOHANDAS GANDHI

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33141

387. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
March 5, 1930

MY DEAR RAIHANA,

I must dictate this letter or not write to you at all.

Whilst you are at liberty to use or not to use anything you like, I think the position taken up by Father and Mother is unassailable. They are the rulers of the household. You may make gentle suggestions but you may not resent their dispositions. Nobler parents no one can desire. It is enough that you do not make use of Western facilities and contrivances wherever it is possible for you to avoid them. By being strict with yourself and charitable towards your surroundings you can affect them as in no other way.

Yours,
BAPU

From a photostat: S.N. 9615
388. REMARKS AT PRAYER MEETING, SABARMATI ASHRAM

March 5, 1930

The campaign will start on the morning of the twelfth, and, therefore, all joining me have to get ready in five days. You should not worry about food or water. Let us put our trust in God and we shall have everything.

We shall march in the direction of Pethapur. A horse will accompany us, and if I am not well I shall ride it. I shall be marching with Shri Abbas Tyabji and a batch of fifty. Let everyone have a copy of the Bhagavad Gita with him. In the jail too, if it should be necessary, we shall offer civil disobedience. Only men will accompany us. Women and others will stay in the Ashram.

Women will have enough opportunity to offer satyagraha. Just as Hindus do not harm a cow, the British do not attack women as far as possible. For Hindus it would be cowardice to take a cow to the battlefield. In the same way it would be cowardice for us to have women accompany us. In the coming struggle, even children might get killed. Knowing this, if we take children with us it would be sheer folly.

I wish the struggle to come to an end in a month or so, but it may continue longer.

[From Gujarati]

Gujarati, 9-3-1930

389. LETTER TO VITHALDAS JERAJANI

March 5/6, 1930

BHAISHRI JERAJANI,

I have your letter. You may go to any place which Shankerlal may ask you to visit. Don’t think it necessary to obtain my permission in such matters. When I need you, I will call you from wherever you are.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9769

1 Gandhiji said this in answer to a boy’s question about the place to which they were to march.

2 It had been suggested that four or five women might be allowed to go along.

3 The letter was dictated on the 5th and signed by Gandhiji on the 6th.
390. PENAL SECTIONS OF THE SALT ACT

The following sections\(^1\) copied or abridged from the Bombay Salt Act and the Indian Salt Act will show the design underlying their operation. The Bombay Act is a refined reproduction of the India Act of 1882. Most of the penal sections of the Bombay Act show a stiffening of the original which evidently experience of administration had shown to be necessary. Only one section has been taken from the central Act. The reader will not fail to notice a strange section which makes “cowardice” on the part of the salt-revenue officers a crime punishable with imprisonment extending to three months. The word “cowardice” is not defined. But the reader with an imagination will have no difficulty in understanding what cowardice can possibly mean in the administration of an Act which takes in its sweep millions of human beings, men and women, young and old, cripples and healthy.

Young India, 6-3-1930

391. PUBLIC DEBT ANALYSED

Sjt. Haridas Muzumdar has prepared a note on Public Debt. I give below the following condensation\(^2\) which will assist the reader to know what this debt is.

Young India, 6-3-1930

392. ABOUT THAT LETTER

My letter to the Viceroy went on the 2nd instant as anticipated by the newspapers. Forecasts have been published of its contents which are largely untrue. I wish these correspondents and the news agencies will, instead of making the publication of news a matter merely of making money, think of the public good. If there had been anything to give to the public, surely Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru would have given it. But it was thought advisable to wait for an acknowledgement from Delhi before publishing the letter. I am not intent on a fight. I am leaving no stone unturned to avoid it. But I am ready for it the moment I find that there is no honourable way out of it. Premature publication of news indirectly obtained by means not always straight ought not to be the function of journalists. I know that the newspaper said to be the greatest in the world makes it a boast to obtain by secret methods news which no other agency can. It makes it a boast to publish news which the keepers are most anxious often in the public interest to withhold for the time being. But the English

\(^1\) Vide Appendix “Penal Sections of the Salt Act”, 6-3-1930.
\(^2\) Not reproduced here.
public submits to the treatment, because moneyed and influential men conduct The Times. We have blindly copied the rulers’ code of manners without discrimination in the matter of publication of news as in many others of still greater importance. I know that mine is a voice in the wilderness, though I speak with the authority of an unbroken experience of practical journalism for over twenty years, if successful conducting of four weeklies¹ can be regarded as such. Be that as it may, the imminent fight includes among the points of attack this slavish habit of copying everything English. No one will accuse me of any anti-English tendency. Indeed I pride myself on my discrimination. I have thankfully copied many things from them. Punctuality, reticence, public hygiene, independent thinking and exercise of judgment and several other things I owe to my association with them. But never having had the slightest touch of slave mentality in me and never having even a thought of materially benefiting myself through contact, official or otherwise, with them, I have had the rare good fortune of studying them with complete detachment. On the eve of battle therefore I would warn fellow journalists against copying the English method of obtaining and publishing news. Let them study my original method which was introduced long before I became a Mahatma and before I had acquired any status of importance in the public life of India. It was a hard struggle, but I found in the field of journalism as in many others that the strictest honesty and fair dealing was undoubtedly the best policy. Any shorter cut is longer at least by double the length sought to be saved. For there must be a retracing. I say all this not for the sake of reading a lesson to fellow-journalists but for the sake of the struggle in which I would value the co-operation of journalists whether they approve of or oppose my methods of political warfare. Let them not add to the risks I am already taking. The rule I would like them to observe is never to publish any news without having it checked by someone connected with me and having authority.

With this long preface I may inform the reader that the letter was sent through a special messenger to be personally delivered to the Private Secretary to His Excellency the Viceroy. The messenger selected was a young English friend Reginald Reynolds who came to India some months ago and who has identified himself completely with the Indian cause. For me the sending of the letter was a religious act as the whole struggle is. And I selected an English friend as my messenger, because I wanted to forge a further check upon myself against any intentional act that would hurt a single Englishman. If I have any sense of honour in me, this choice should prove an automatic restraint even upon unconscious error. It pleases me also to have the unselfish and unsolicited association of a cultured, well-read,

¹*Indian Opinion, Young India, Navajivan and Hindi Navajivan.*
devout Englishman in an act which may, in spite of all my effort to the contrary, involve loss of English life.

As for the letter itself, when the reader has the text before him he will see that it is not an ultimatum, but it is a friendly, if also a frank, communication from one who considers himself to be a friend of Englishmen. But the reader must hold himself in patience for a while.

Young India, 6-3-1930

393. STUDENTS AND CHARACTER

A retired Inspector of Schools (Punjab) writes:¹

I have already written about the cries in a previous but recent issue of Young India.² I fully agree that “Down with the Union Jack” smells of violence. There are several other objectionable cries that have come into vogue. One who believes in non-violence even as a policy may not utter those cries. They do no good and may do harm.
A disciplined young man will not utter those cries. It is certainly opposed to satyagraha. As for the second point raised by the writer, he has evidently failed to see that the authorities are reaping as they have sown. The system of education is responsible for the lack of character wherever it shows itself. The remedy now is not to seek my opinion or assistance, but for the teachers to make common cause with the students and lead them to victory. The latter know the tragic history of their own nation, they know how the other nations have gained their liberty. It is impossible to restrain them from working for the freedom of their own country. If they are not properly guided in their approach to their goal, they will take the means that their unripe and unaided reason will suggest. In any event, in so far as I am concerned, I have shown them the way. If I am responsible for their enthusiasm, I am glad. I am trying too to guide it in the right direction. If they go wrong in spite of my effort, I cannot be held responsible.

No one can be more grieved than I over the bomb outrage at Amritsar through which an innocent young man, Sardar Pratap Singh, who was undoubtedly not the target of the bomb-thrower, met his death. These outrages are surely due to the lack of character to which the retired inspector of schools has drawn attention.
The word “character” is perhaps not the happiest expression. Ballast is the right word. If it was the Principal of the Khalsa College who was aimed at, the incident is proof of a deep-seated disease. There is no bond between the teachers and the taught. The teachers of educational

¹ The letter is not reproduced here. The correspondent had sought Gandhiji’s opinion on the growing violence, hatred and indiscipline among students.

institutions, whether entirely owned or aided by the Government, naturally feel it incumbent upon them, whether they have it in them or not, themselves to profess and inculcate in others loyalty to the existing Government. The students have no sense of loyalty in them. They have become impatient. Impatience has led to loss of self-control, and so their energy finds its vent through dubious channels. For me these incidents are no warning to stay my hand, but to go on with my programme and gain control over, or break myself in the attempt to stem the surging tide of violence on either side.

Young India, 6-3-1930

394. THE PUBLIC DEBT

Thanks to the Congress resolution on public debts, important literature on the subject is springing into being. The Bombay Chronicle is rendering a service by publishing the informing series of articles by ‘Politicus’ on this subject. Financial problems are always a dry subject requiring concentration and some previous study. It is for our learned economists to put these problems in an interesting manner capable of being understood by the public. The series by ‘Politicus’ is an attempt in that direction. I am not however sure that the presentation of his subject cannot be made simpler even if that should require a fuller treatment. I pick up from the series two things for the reader’s consideration. After examining all available figures, ‘Politicus’ concludes that:

the aggregate burden of all kinds of Public Debt, owed by all sorts of authorities and incurred for no matter what purpose or in what form, will be not much short of Rs. 1,200 crores at the present moment. This is about half of India’s total annual wealth in material goods of all kinds. And that wealth barely suffices to give only one meal a day of the coarsest kind to every human being in the land and that too if we exclude all other needs of human life.

If this statement is true, it constitutes a black record of crime against India. It shows that the debts are largely unproductive. If these obligations were healthy, our wealth should have so increased as to give more than enough to every one of us to eat. Having summed up the total debt, ‘Politicus’ examines the ethics of the obligations and sums up thus:

The fact, however, must be repeated that, hitherto, the debt has been contracted by the Government without consulting the people of India; that the latter have no power to vote the borrowing programme or the debt charges, even under the reforms of 1919-20; and that any condition precedent to the recognition of our political majority, even in the form of a full Dominion Status, which will serve as an encumbrance for all time to come on the people of India, without their explicit consent or confirmation, must, in law as well as conscience, be held to be void. The trustee liquidating or dissolving the trust is entitled, of course, to a full statement of accounts regarding his management of the trust, so that no unexpected claims or counter-claims be urged against him subsequently by the beneficiaries coming into their own. But that is no reason why the trustee should be permitted to insist, on the occasion of dissolving the trust, that all his claims against the trust estate shall be passed and adopted, without examination, by the erstwhile beneficiaries under his trust.

The Congress resolution means no more than this, save that it suggests also an unexceptionable machinery for a due examination of these transactions.

But they have the power to impose their will, we have not yet generated strength to resist that will. Or Sir Malcolm Hailey would not be able to say as he is reported to have said. He was speaking to the U. P. Legislative Council. In the course of his address he said:

First and foremost, every legal means would be adopted to defeat the campaign of civil disobedience, and in the event of legal resources proving insufficient, we shall attempt to secure such legal provision as is required to effect our purpose.

This was not enough, and so His Excellency warmed up and said:

He might even feel that it would not be wholly amiss if the Government were, on this occasion, to furnish some proof of the demoniac character of which he has been told so much.

I trust that civil resisters have counted the cost. For the rulers to give an exhibition of that admirable character would be no new experience for India. I hope that the campaign will so shape itself as to allow the fury exhaustively to expend itself. That is the inevitable result of the law of non-retaliation.

Young India, 6-3-1930

395. NO RULE v. MISRULE

This letter is obviously meant for publication. Mr. Pennington must always command respect for his great industry at his age and for his sincere advocacy of a cause he believes in. Professor Kumarappa is well able to take care of himself. He, being in village, is not easily accessible. But whether he has any answer or not to Mr. Pennington’s facts, I can say this from my own experience. Most of the “facts”

---

1 Not reproduced here. J. B. Pennington had criticized J. C. Kumarappa’s chapters on “Public Finance and Our Poverty” which were serialized in Young India from November 28, 1929 to January 23, 1930. Pennington had pointed out some benefits derived by India from Pax Britannica and expressed misgivings about the proclamation of independence.
such friends as Mr. Pennington can produce may be true, and yet do not affect the conclusion arrived at by nationalists, nor do those facts warrant the deductions their authors base upon them. “One swallow does not make a summer.” Nor can high prices paid for a few acres in a rich tract prove the general prosperity of a continent. As against isolated facts of isolated prosperity stands the grim fact of the general pauperism of India as a whole. This pauperism can be seen with physical eyes by anyone who would care to wander through India’s villages. Pax Britannica is not a beneficial operation. It has as much value to India as the slave dwellers have in an estate whose owner keeps the slaves from fighting with one another, protects the estate from foreign inroads and makes the slaves work with a regularity that is just enough to keep the estate going in his, the owner’s, interest. The slaves of this imaginary estate will, when they grow to consciousness of their position, prefer anarchy to slavery if there is no other choice. Even so should I prefer anarchy to the existing rule and its much-vaunted peace if I can have no other choice. Surely no-rule is better than bad rule. As for the friends who “are most anxious to hold me in respect”, I can only say that while I would always esteem their affection, I must be content to go without it if I cannot retain it consistently with obedience to the Inner Voice. What shall it profit me even though I may win the esteem of a whole world, if I have to lose my soul?

Young India, 6-3-1930

396. OBSCENE LITERATURE

No country and no language is free from obscene literature. As long as there are self-indulging and immoral people in the world, obscene literature will continue to be produced and read. But when such literature is disseminated through newspapers of good standing, and under the guise of art or service, it is truly horrible. I have received this kind of obscene literature from the Marwari community. I have also received a copy of the statement published on behalf of respectable Marwaris. The statement seeks to rouse the Marwari community and calls upon it to boycott literature which goes under the name of art but in reality has money as its end. What provoked the statement was the Marwari number of a monthly called Chand. I could not read all of it, nor do I wish to do so, but whatever I could read was so obscene and loathsome that no man who has any sense or who has the good of society at heart would ever publish such things. To publish such things in the name of reform is unnecessary and harmful. People who sing filthy songs such as are published in Chand do not read newspapers. Its readership can only be of two types: the educated debauchees who wish to satisfy their lust by any means, and innocent men who, though so far free from the ways of vice, are so impressionable that they may be corrupted. For such people obscene literature is fatal. This is also the experience of all. I hope that the effect of the statement issued by these distinguished Marwari gentlemen will be felt by the editor of Chand and his associates, and that they will withdraw this number of Chand and will refrain in future from publishing such obscene literature. A greater duty as regards this is that of the Marwari community and of society in general. It should never buy nor even read such obscene literature. Editors of Hindi papers have a twofold responsibility. Since we want to make Hindi the national language, it becomes their duty to protect this language. One like myself who worships the national language would expect only books with lofty ideas. Therefore, if it is possible, the Hindi Sahitya Sammelan should appoint a language committee whose function it would be to scrutinize every new book for its language, thought, etc. The committee should then prepare lists of books adjudged best and those adjudged obscene, and it should popularize the goodbooks and boycott the obscene ones. Such a committee can only be successful if its members are well versed in literature and are willing to devote themselves whole-heartedly to the service of literature.

[From Hindi]
Hindi Navajivan, 6-3-1930

397. TELEGRAM TO JAWAHRLAL NEHRU

AHMEDABAD,
March 6, 1930

JAWAHRLAL NEHRU
ALLAHABAD

LETTER1 HANDED PRESS FOR PUBLICATION. MARCHING EARLY MORNING 12TH WITH SIXTY COMPANIONS.

GANDHI
A.I.C.C. File No. 178, 1930. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

398. LETTER TO JAISUKHLAL GANDHI

THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
March 6, 1930

CHI. JAISUKHLAL,

I have your letter. I do not think it advisable to ask you to leave that place just now. I will start on the march on the 12th, accompanied by most of the men in the Ashram.

1 Vide “Letter to Lord Irwin”, 2-3-1930.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U. III

399. LETTER TO TEHMINA KHAMBHATTA
March 6, 1930

DEAR SISTER,

I can understand that you will feel hurt if Bhai Khambhatta joins the struggle at present. Just now I agree with you. I hope you do not wish that he should not join the struggle at any time? It is one’s duty to do everything possible to preserve one’s body. When, however, a situation arises in which one can be faithful to dharma only by laying down one’s life, it becomes one’s duty to do so. I am sure, therefore, that if and when such a time comes both of you will be ready to sacrifice yourselves. Rest assured that, to those who fight in the name of God, He gives the strength to endure all hardships.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7544

400. LETTER TO BEHRAMJI KHAMBHATTA
March 6, 1930

BHAISHRI KHAMBHATTA,

I have your letter. Though you have not joined the Ashram, to me you are more than an inmate of the Ashram. Your regular study of Young India and Navajivan and your manner of life are not unknown to me. You are quite fit to join the struggle. But you should not be in a hurry just now. You should respect the feelings of Tehminabehn. There is some substance, too, in what she says. The way you are neglecting your body, who can guarantee how long it will be able to stand the life in jail? Hence it would be better to be humble. My advice, therefore, is this: Hold yourself back for the present and join the struggle when it takes a crucial turn. If you get an opportunity in Bombay itself, you may certainly take the plunge. At that time, I think Tehminabehn also will not restrain you but, on the contrary, will encourage you. If it becomes necessary, she herself will plunge into the struggle. I think women, too, will have to join in this final struggle. If, moreover, violence breaks out in Bombay, it will become your duty to try to preserve peace and even lay down your life in doing so. It would, therefore, be better if you hold yourself in reserve for the time being. It is indeed necessary that some persons should do so.

I was glad, all the same, that you sent a letter to me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7545

401. LETTER TO PUNJABHAI

THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
March 6, 1930

BHAISHRI PUNJABHAI,

I have your letter.
The march will start on the 12th. If you wish to join, you should come and see me before that.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4010

402. DRAFT OF RESOLUTION FOR THE WORKING COMMITTEE

[Before March 7, 1930]¹

The W. C. notes with sorrow that Dr. Syed Mahmud has recently had three deaths in his family including the loss of his elder brother² who was the manager of his large joint household and its mainstay. The difficulty is intensified by the fact that Dr. Mahmud’s wife is suffering from a serious illness. In the circumstances the W. C. is of opinion that Dr. Mahmud should not be allowed to run the imminent risk of being arrested and therefore relieves him of the office of Secretary of the Congress and membership of the Committee till such time as may be necessary for making satisfactory arrangements for the management of his domestic affairs.

DR. SYED MAHMUD
BAR-AT-LAW
CHHAPRA
BIHAR

From the original: Dr. Syed Mahmud Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Also G. N. 5085

¹ From the postmark, which bears the date March 7, 1930
² Mazhar-ul-Haq, who died on January 4, 1930; vide also “Notes”, 9-1-1930
403. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

March 7, 1930

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

After a talk with Sitla Sahai, I have decided to send him there. Let him see what he can do there and you will watch developments. If he and you decide that he should come back, he may do so. His wife and children will remain here and he can draw upon the Ashram for his bare upkeep. The rest you will hear from him.

Yours,
BAPU

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1930. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

404. LETTER TO MRIDULA SARABHAI

March 7, 1930

CHI MRIDULA,

You can come tomorrow (Saturday) at 9.30 a.m. if it is convenient. If this time does not suit you, come any time and we shall meet. If you can make it at lunch time, it will be good. We shall lunch together.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11108. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

405. STATEMENT ON ARREST OF VALLABHBHAI PATEL

March 7, 1930

It is a good omen for us that Sardar Vallabhbhai has been arrested and sentenced. It remains to be seen what use we make of this happy beginning. The fight has now commenced and we have to carry it to its conclusion. People should celebrate the Sardar’s arrest and the sentence passed on him by observing a general hartal. I request the mill-owners to close the mills, the students to absent themselves from their institutions and all shopkeepers to close their shops. There should be no need to tell Gujarat to preserve peace. Our struggle must remain non-violent from beginning to end.

[From Gujarati]
Gujarati, 9-3-1930
406. CABLE TO JOHN HAYNES HOLMES

[On or after March 7, 1930]\(^1\)

NOBODY HAS AUTHORITY REPRESENT ME AMERICA. MOVEMENT ABSOLUTELY PEACEFUL. CONGRESS POLICY OF NON-VIOLENCE REMAINS UNCHANGED. IN EVENT MASS RESPONSE DIFFICULT SAY HOW THINGS WILL SHAPE BUT THOUSANDS BENT ON KEEPING PEACE UNDER GRAVEST PROVOCATION. NO ONE EVEN WHISPERS ABOUT MILITARY RESISTANCE. NO ONE ARMING NATIONALISTS. CIVIL DISOBEDIENCE UNDER STRICTEST RESTRICTIONS BEING STARTED ON 12TH.

GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 16637

407. FOREWORD TO COW-PROTECTION\(^2\)

SABARMATI, March 8, 1930

Those who are interested [in] the preservation of the priceless wealth of India in the shape of the cow through constructive means will find much food for thought in the following well-written pages.

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: C.W. 9327

---

\(^1\) This was sent in reply to the following cable of March 6, 1930, received at the Ashram the following day: “Friends Indian independence universal peace most anxiously watching nationalist movement under your leadership redoubling efforts rallying American sympathies. Subsidized imperialist agencies permanent obstacle but most serious damage being done Indian cause by Sailendranath Ghose styled representative Indian Congress, your agent, etc. His persistent wildly violent misrepresentations like announcing Indian resolve military resistance arming million nationalists would [sic] your sponsorship increasingly alienating sympathies millions who pinning faith your non-violence victory. Respectfully urge Congress immediately disavow Ghose’s representative character prevent further injury. Rezmie founder India Independence League ceaselessly influencing all shades American Press public through accurate temperate sympathetic interpretation nationalist position your creed acts. Rezmie zealous trustworthy could splendidly represent you and Congress. First time we venturing advise you but condition very serious danger permanently losing American support imminent. Kindly act before disobedience starts. . . .”

\(^2\) A book by Valji Desai
408. FOREWORD TO “DRAUPADINAN CHIR”

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
March 8, 1930

Those who wish to study the subject of khadi from a historical point of view or understand why spinning is a moral duty will find the following chapters by Shri Valji Desai immensely interesting.

Mohanandas Karamchand Gandhi
From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 9273. Courtesy: V. G. Desai

409. FOREWORD TO “RAJKATHA”

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
March 8, 1930

A study of the mutual obligations of rulers and subjects has a special relevance at the present time. Shri Valji Desai’s collection of essays helps us to understand clearly the duties of a king, the distinction between a good king and a bad king, how kings were elected and dethroned in ancient times, and so on.

Mohanandas Karamchand Gandhi
From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 9272. Courtesy: V. G. Desai

410. LETTER TO TOTARAM HINGORANI

March 8, 1930

DEAR FRIEND,

I am glad you have written to me about Anand. The more I see him the more I like him. All he needs is a little firmness. I wish you will not press him to go to you just now. Leave him to develop along his own lines and you will be proud of him. He has decided to join the column I am to lead.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. Gandhi

From a microfilm. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani
411. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

Saturday [March 8, 1930]

CHI. BRIJKRISHNA,

If you have the strength this is your duty.

Assure mother that you will not court imprisonment, but that you will have to go if arrested. She must return to Delhi in peace. Even if she does not go you will have to leave for Vijapur.

And having said your say, go away to Vijapur. Whatever your mother may do, even if she should die, you cannot deviate from your dharma. And it would be adharma to shirk on this occasion. Your duty is to strengthen your body and devote yourself to your work. If mother will stay on here, she will be looked after and served. Your brother told me that he quite understood; I think mother too will come round. Anyway, your path is quite clear.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

See me for a minute before leaving.

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2376

412. SPEECH AT AHMEDABAD

March 8, 1930

I know that my voice will not reach you all. In the first place it does not have the power it once had. And then no man’s voice can be heard by such a large crowd. I must be content if a few of these men and women can hear me. More people will be able to hear if those that cannot hear will be quiet and wait till their neighbours can give them a report of the speech.

I have nothing new to tell you. I have already given to the people of Ahmedabad and the whole of India the message which I had to give. Now the time has come when you and I will be finally tested, and in that matter the Government has made our path easy—yours as well as mine. I had never dreamt that Sardar Vallabhbhai would be imprisoned so soon. I think his services to Gujarat, and more particularly to this city, exceed mine a hundred times. Hence it is no wonder that he has been honoured by imprisonment before me. That certainly is his good fortune and yours also. But I find myself in a difficult situation because he has been imprisoned before me. I am eager to get arrested at any cost. I want to deprive the Government of its illegitimate monopoly of salt. My aim is to get the Salt Tax abolished. That is for me one step, the first step, towards full freedom. Sardar Vallabhbhai is no longer with us in this task. The people of India are now impatient and will not rest until they have won complete freedom. My voice is bound to reach the Government somehow, but Gujarat should preserve complete peace. The imprisonment of Vallabhbhai is the Government’s way of rewarding his services in preserving complete peace during the satyagraha at Bardoli.

---

1 The date is from At the Feet of Bapu, p. 57

We have known it for years that this is the only way in which the Government can reward an independent-minded and freedom-loving person like Sardar Vallabhbhai. Let us all get so completely absorbed in our task that we win at once what we have been yearning for all these years. To fulfil the pledge we took on the 26th we should offer civil disobedience. Though Vallabhbhai had broken no salt law, the Government has arrested him and broken my right hand, so to say. If it has imprisoned and removed one Vallabhbhai, you, the men and women of Ahmedabad, should take his place and work as his representatives. Get ready at once, if you have love for him and have come here to sacrifice yourselves. If you are ready to follow him in his self-sacrifice, we shall show to the Government and to the world how our aspirations are bound to be realized. May God grant us the strength necessary for the sacrifice we have to make.

My determination to march on Wednesday morning with the first batch, comprising the Ashram inmates, stands unchanged. Let everyone present here do his duty. Vallabhbhai has said in his message that his speech at Broach clearly indicates what people should do if and when Gandhi is arrested. By going to jail himself, he has beenas good as his word. Let the Government reward us all in that way. I have no intention of asking you to pass any resolution here. But I expect you to put into practice the pledge which I have drafted for you to take now.

We the citizens of Ahmedabad, men and women, hereby resolve to follow Sardar Vallabhbhai to jail, or win complete independence. We shall have no peace, nor will we let the Government have any, till we have won complete independence. We believe that India’s freedom is to be won through peaceful and truthful means.

I hope that the thousands of men and women present here will raise their hands and take the pledge for which I have been training the country in general, and the citizens of Ahmedabad in particular, for the last fifteen years, and which was taken at the time of the labour strike here. Raise your hands only if you have the strength to act upon it.¹

I congratulate you on the peaceful strike you have observed. I expect the men, women and students of Ahmedabad to do their duty by Sardar Vallabhbhai and the country.

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 10-3-1930

413. TALK TO MILL-OWNERS’ ASSOCIATION MEMBERS

March 8, 1930

The Majoor Mahajan used to be paid the interest on the National School funds. That pleased me and I believe you too were pleased. But now that money has stopped coming in. I had asked M. Sheth not to stop it. Nevertheless it was stopped. The objection was that the mill-owners should have a say in its management—this was of course a difference of principle. It is for the Mahajan to decide how the Majoor school should be run. Moreover, it is they themselves who run it. Even the inspectors have been satisfied. I too have inspected it. I have noticed progress every time. Be that as it may, we cannot have a hand in managing the affairs of an institution to which we make a donation. For then it ceases to be a donation. I had explained this even at the time I asked for donations from you. You had remarked that my work was of a political and social nature. After this was made clear, you gave me this money for social work. Likewise you accepted my views generously. It is not proper that you should now demand a hand in the management. I ask you to have a committee of inspection. If you feel that the work is not being carried on properly, you may stop your donations. Even the Government does not participate in the management though it does supervise. You too can do what you like as inspectors. Even then if you do not like to donate funds, I shall make another suggestion. The people are filled with admiration for the school that is being run there, the Montessori school. Donate money to him—to Prof. Miller. . .² The labourers need that money. You talk of the increase in the wages of labourers. I must tell you that even sons of big men study there and do not pay full fees. You seem to desire that this school should be run on the small sum that the labourers save. Do the labourers collect money for the purpose of fighting? You should be thankful to me because they do not collect funds to launch a fight.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: S.N. 16657

¹ Thousands of hands were raised.
² One sentence here is obscure.
How can I go back on the principles I have held dear all my life, when I find that it is these principles that are being put to the test? I have no doubt in my mind that vaccination is a filthy process, that it is harmful in the end and that it is little short of taking beef. I may be entirely mistaken. But holding the views that I do, how can I recant them? Because I see child after child passing away? No, not even if the whole of the Ashram were to be swept away, may I insist on vaccination and pocket my principle. What would my love of truth and my adherence to principle mean if they were to vanish at the slightest touch of reality?

But God is putting me through a greater test. On the eve of what is to be the final test of our strength, God is warning me through the messenger of death. I have tried hydropathy and earth treatment with success in numerous cases. Never has the treatment failed as it seems to have done during the month. But does that mean that I must therefore lose faith in the treatment and faith in God? Even so my faith in the efficacy of non-violence may be put to the severest test. I may have to see not three but hundreds and thousands being done to death during the campaign I am about to launch. Shall my heart quail before that catastrophe, or will I persevere in my faith? No, I want you, everyone, to understand that this epidemic is not a scourge, but a trial and preparation, a tribulation sent to steel our hearts and to chain us more strongly and firmly to faith in God. And would not my faith in the Gita be a mockery if three deaths were to unhinge me? It is as clear to me as daylight that life and death are but phases of the same thing, the reverse and obverse of the same coin. In fact tribulations and death seem to me to present a phase far richer than happiness of life. What is life worth without trials and tribulations which are the salt of life? The history of mankind would have been a blank sheet without these individuals. What is Ramayana but a record of the trials, privations and penances of Rama and Sita? The life of Rama, after the recovery of Sita, full of happiness as it was, does not occupy even a hundredth part of the epic. I want you all to treasure death and suffering more than life, and to appreciate their cleansing and purifying character.

Young India, 12-3-1930

1 A brief report of this speech was published in Navajivan, 9-3-1930.
2 Three children had died of smallpox in the Ashram.
3 As in the source.
415. THE FINAL TEST

The letter to the Viceroy was despatched from here on Sunday. It reached him on Tuesday. As proposed therein, it was given to the Press on Thursday for publication after awaiting the Viceroy’s telegram. The reader will find in this issue a translation of the letter.

God willing, I hope to start the march at daybreak on Wednesday. Workers from Surat side tell me that there are many facilities there for easy manufacture of salt. Moreover, as they say, complete peace is likely to be preserved there and, along with it, help from the general public is also very probable. In the district of Surat, again, the choice has fallen on Jalalpur taluka for the marching corps to enter. In 1921, when the struggle for swaraj was launched at Bardoli, the Jalalpur taluka had applied for being chosen for the honour and I still have several sweet memories of my experience of the place. Even today the constructive programme there is in a flourishing state. The taluka has many facilities for the manufacture of salt. The people of the place are full of enthusiasm and in every way ready to participate in the struggle. This is Sardar Vallabhbhai’s view, and he has, therefore, selected Jalalpur taluka for offering civil disobedience against the salt law. Whether my co-workers or I shall be able to proceed so far in our march, that is, whether Government will let us reach there, is a question. I believe we shall not be so allowed. Even then, I expect, Jalalpur taluka will take full part in the struggle. The Sardar is quite sure that it will. But I shall not be satisfied with that. I hope the whole of Gujarat will join this time. If Gujarat takes the initiative, I have no doubt that the whole of India will rise up. When a great awakening takes place among a people, there is always the fear of violence breaking out. This non-violent war is not free from that fear. No one is pained at the outbreak of violence where no question of violence or non-violence arises. Many even welcome it. But in this struggle we have a large number whose duty it would be to prevent, and not welcome, the outbreak of violence. Deterred by the fear of violence, I had been holding back civil disobedience and trying till now to dissuade the people from launching it. But I am now ready to take the ultimate step even at the risk of a violent outbreak, because I find that there is no other way in which I might prepare the people for the struggle. Looking at the other side, I find that the Government’s organized violence goes on increasing day by day and the group wanting to meet violence with violence is becoming correspondingly stronger. Hence, if non-violence has the power to check violence or if I am truly non-violent, I must be able to find a non-violent way to restrain the double violence which I have mentioned. That way, I believe, is the way I am now adopting. And if I am mistaken, I have no doubt that I ought to cease obstructing the progress of the people any more. I do clearly see that I would put my non-violence to shame if I remained content with working only for khadi. There is no doubt in my mind that the power of non-violence is a million times greater than that of khadi. Nor do I in any way doubt that khadi is an essential element of the non-violent way to win swaraj and that without khadi, there can be no swaraj. I have no doubt also that unless khadi had made the progress it has I should not have had the self-confidence to adopt the way I am now preparing to take. But it is clear that there should now be some other action besides the manufacture of khadi. There is need of greater awakening among the people even for giving more impetus to the khadi movement. If we are able to rouse the people and also maintain non-violence, there is no doubt that swaraj will be ours here and now. Having thus considered the matter I am taking the plunge. The reader will observe that this reasoning occurred to me after I had first seen the way. It is my belief that great things are achieved by man in obedience to the prompting of the inner voice. It is another matter whether the inner voice is from God or Satan. It has been my experience, with regard to myself and many others, that after one has heard the inner voice, one finds arguments in support of it.

1 Vide “Letter to Lord Irwin”, 2-3-1930.

It is clear as daylight that I ought to get out of the way if this inner voice is wrong or devilish. I believe the inner voice to be divine and hence the only way open to me is to follow the way shown by the light within and demonstrate its success or die in the attempt.

I, therefore, look upon this struggle as the final test. Those who join it may join on this understanding only.

If countless multitudes join the struggle and if peace is preserved, we shall win swaraj sooner than we imagine.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 9-3-1930

416. SATYAGRAHIS’ MARCH

Our party is likely to consist of about a hundred men. I have not been able to finalize the list yet, as, besides the present inmates of the Ashram, I am selecting for inclusion some others who observe the rules of Ashram life and are eager to join, and who have to be included.

The march will begin at 6.30 on the 12th morning. I give below the programme as tentatively fixed:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Day</th>
<th>Morning</th>
<th>Evening</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Wednesday, the 12th</td>
<td>Aslali</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Thursday, the 13th</td>
<td>Bareja</td>
<td>Navagam</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Friday, the 14th</td>
<td>Vasana</td>
<td>Matar</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Saturday, the 15th</td>
<td>Dabhan</td>
<td>Nadiad</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sunday, the 16th</td>
<td>Boriavi</td>
<td>Anand</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Monday, the 17th</td>
<td>Napa</td>
<td>Borsad</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tuesday, the 18th</td>
<td>Raas</td>
<td>Badalpur</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

I request the mahajans and the workers of the respective places to bear in mind the following. The satyagrahi party is expected to reach each place by 8 o’clock in the morning and to sit down for lunch between 10.00 and 10.30 a.m. It may be half past nine by the time the party reaches Aslali on the first day. No rooms will be needed for rest at noon or night, but a clean, shaded place will be enough. In the absence of such a shaded place, it will be enough to have a bamboo-and-grass covering. Both bamboo and grass can be put to use again.

It is assumed that the village people will provide us food.

If provisions are supplied the party will cook its own meal. The food supplied, whether cooked or uncooked, should be the simplest possible. Nothing more than rotli or rotla or kedgeree with vegetables and milk or curds, will be required. Sweets, even if prepared, will be declined. Vegetables should be merely boiled, and no oil, spices and chillies, whether green or dry, whole or crushed, should be added or used in the cooking. This is my advice for preparing a meal:

Morning, before departure:

Rab and dhebra; the rab should be left to the party itself to prepare.

Midday:

Bhakhri, vegetable and milk or butter-milk.

Evening, before the march is resumed:

Roasted gram, rice. Night: Kedgeree with vegetable and butter-milk or milk.
The ghee for all the meals together should not exceed three tolas per head: One tola in the rab, one served separately to be smeared on the bhakhri, and one to be put into the kedgeree. For me goat’s milk, if available, in the morning, at noon and at night, and raisins or dates and three lemons will do. I hope that the village people will incur no expenses whatever, except for the simple food items named above.

I look forward to meeting the people of each village and its neighbourhood.

Everyone in the party will be carrying his own bedding, so that the village people will have to provide nothing except a clean place for resting in.

The people should incur no expense on account of betel leaves, betel-nuts or tea for the party.

I shall be happy if every village maintains complete cleanliness and fixes beforehand an enclosed place for the satyagrahis to answer calls of nature. If the villagers do not already use khadi, it is clear that they should now start using it.

It is desirable that information under the following heads should be kept ready for each village:

1. Population: Number of women, men, Hindus, Muslims, Christians, Parsis, etc.
2. Number of untouchables.
3. If there is a school in the village, the number of boys and girls attending it.
4. Number of spinning-wheels.
5. The monthly sale of khadi.
6. Number of people wearing khadi exclusively.
7. Salt consumed per head; salt used for cattle, etc.
8. Number of cows and buffaloes in the village.
9. The amount of land revenue paid; at what rate per acre.
10. The area of the common grazing-ground if any.
11. Do the people drink? How far is the liquor shop from the village?
12. Educational and other special facilities, if any, for the untouchables.

It will be good if this information is written out on a sheet of paper neatly and handed to me immediately on our arrival.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 9-3-1930

VOL. 48 : 21 NOVEMBER, 1929 - 2 APRIL, 1930

393
I was waiting every day to hear from you. Not a day passed on which I did not remember you, but I quite understand your feeling that I neglect you. My pitiable condition is responsible for it. I have no time even to raise my head to look at anybody. I was content with knowing where you were and what you were about.

Father did not leave any instructions for you. He had no idea [he would be arrested]. You should live in any place where you will be happy and at peace.1 You can certainly go to jail when the time comes. Mahadev has written about it. I understand why you like to live in the Ashram. But I think your attitude is not proper. Compulsion in such matters however is out of the question. So I will say nothing more about it. I only wish that you should be at ease, no matter where you live.

I expect to be arrested before Tuesday.

Be brave and improve your health.

Blessings from

BAPU

SMT. MANIBEHN
C/O DAHYABHAI VALLABHBHAI PATEL
SHRIRAM NIWAS, PAREKH STREET, BOMBAY-4

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro-4: Ku. Manibehn Patelne, p. 69

418. LETTER TO SATIN D. GUPTA
[Before March 10, 1930]

I know my absence will bring a fresh leader to the forefront. Let every man constitute himself into a leader and conduct the movement whose success must depend on the deep faith of the mass in non-violence.

The Bombay Chronicle, 10-3-1930

---

1The addressee had been ailing and was receiving treatment in Bombay.
March 10, 1930

I am glad that you have been coming to our prayer in such large numbers, and generally I would say, ‘May your tribe increase.’ But I must utter a few words of warning. If it is mere curiosity that draws you here, you had better not come at all. If it is the prayer that attracts you, you are quite welcome, but in that case this sudden inroad cannot be accounted for. But I presume you come both for the prayer and for understanding the significance of the campaign I am about to launch.

As for the prayer, I assure you that mere utterance, parrot wise, of the name of God is of no avail. All your trouble in coming this long distance from the town would be wasted and the quiet of our prayers would be disturbed. If therefore your desire to take part in the prayer is genuine, you must be prepared to fulfil a condition which alone can prove your bona fides, and that is that you come here dressed in khadi. You may or may not admit the many claims made on behalf of khadi, but one thing is now practically universally admitted, that khadi unites the wearer to the poorest of the land. And I may tell you that but for the progress that khadi has made in recent years I should not have been able to launch this campaign. It is the spread of khadi that infuses in me the hope that the message of non-violence has spread to the masses, for I have always associated non-violence with khadi. A believer in violence may wear khadi, but he would do so in order to exploit it.

As for the other desire that also prompts you to come here, you know that the march begins on Wednesday morning. Everyone is on the tiptoe of expectation, and before anything has happened the thing has attracted world-wide attention. Now I should like to analyse the thing for you and to implore you to appreciate its implications. Though the battle is to begin in a couple of days, how is it that you can come here quite fearlessly? I do not think anyone of you would be here if you had to face rifleshots or bombs. But you have no fear of rifleshots or bombs. Why? Supposing I had announced that I was going to launch a violent campaign (not necessarily with men armed with rifles, but even with sticks or stones), do you think the Government would have left me free until now? Can you show me an example in history (be it England, America or Russia) where the State has tolerated violent defiance of authority for a single day? But here you know that the Government is puzzled and perplexed. And you have come here because you have been familiarized by now with the idea of seeking voluntary imprisonment.

---

1 This is a condensed summary of Gandhiji’s speech made at the end of the prayer meeting, which was attended by about 2,000 people.

Then I would ask you to proceed a step further. Supposing ten men in each of the 700,000 villages in India come forward to manufacture salt and to disobey the Salt Act, what do you think can this Government do? Even the worst autocrat you can imagine would not dare to blow regiments of peaceful civil resisters out of a cannon’s mouth. If only you will bestir yourselves just a little, I assure you we should be able to tire this Government out in a very short time. I want you, therefore, to understand the meaning of this struggle and to do your part in it. If it is only curiosity that moves you to walk this long distance, you had better not waste your time and mine. If you come here to bless us and our movement, the blessings must take some concrete shape. I don’t want any money from you. I am hoping that it may be possible to fight this battle with the least possible money. At the time of Kheda Satyagraha in 1918 I had to refuse several offers for raising contributions. In Bardoli an appeal was made and there was a spontaneous response, but much of the money was saved and is now being utilized for constructive work. So I do not want you to contribute any money just now. That you will do unasked when our suffering has reached that stage which cannot but compel your sympathy. But I want you to take your courage in both hands and contribute in men towards the struggle which promises to be fierce and prolonged. I certainly expect the city of Ahmedabad, the Ahmedabad of Vallabhbhai, who is already in jail, to furnish an unlimited supply of volunteers to keep the stream unbroken, in case batch after batch happens to be arrested and marched to jail. That is the least I expect of you. May God give you the strength to rise to the occasion.

Young India, 12-3-1930

420. MESSAGE TO ANDHRA

[Before March 11, 1930]

This is a battle to the finish. The Divine Hand is guiding it. It must be prolonged till the last man offers himself for satyagraha.

The Hindu, 14-3-1930

¹This was read out at a public meeting held on March 11 under the auspices of the Rajahmundry City Congress Committee.
421. INTERVIEW TO H. D. RAJAH

[On or before March 11, 1930]

I had a prolonged interview with Gandhiji regarding the coming struggle and the part youths are to play. Gandhi said:

I begin the struggle in right earnest on 12th morning. This struggle must be continued to the successful end. Either we shall be effaced out of the earth or we shall spring up as an independent nation enjoying full freedom. We shall face the bullets with our backs to the wall. In our fight, we shall be engaged in active civil disobedience campaign and fill the prisons with men and women, but there will be no retreat at any cost. I hope to return to Ashram triumphant in our struggle for India achieving her independence.

Questioned by me as to what the people should do when he is arrested, Gandhiji said:

Yes, I expect arrest at any moment. But the fight should continue. The Congress Committees, Provincial, District or Taluka, should organize the campaign.

What part can the Youth Leagues play in this fight?

The Youth Leagues should organize volunteers and offer them to the Congress Committees which decide on a course of action. If any Congress Committee of a particular place fails to do the work, the Youth League would take up the work and do it. . . .

The Bombay Chronicle, 12-3-1930

422. INTERVIEW TO “THE MANCHESTER GUARDIAN”

SABARMATI ASHRAM,

[On or before March 11, 1930]²

I don’t believe that the slightest good for India can come of the Round Table Conference in London. I would like to spare the world the melancholy spectacle of Indians fighting against Indians in a foreign country, but this is what the Conference would lead to, as it seems to be composed at present. I shall waste no time. I expect my movement to be successful. I hope that my movement will not lead to deeds of violence, but even in this case there can be no going back for me. Yet I supported the Nehru Report once; but many things have ¹ This was published as a letter to the Editor.

² Evidently the interview was given before Gandhiji started on his march on March 12, 1930.
changed since then.

I admit that this may be my last chance, and if I do not seize it, it may never come again. The revolutionary and, of course, violent movement has gained ground heavily. The need for the speediest action is absolutely clear. The question of religious antagonisms and the problem of the native States are subordinate questions, and cannot be solved until we have the power in our own hands. I do not believe that there is any solution to the Indian problem except the one I have now proposed.

The Hindu, 11-6-1930

423. ON RECORDING OF MESSAGE

[On or before March 11, 1930]

If there is truth in my message, then whether I am inside or outside the jail, people are bound to pay heed to it. But if there is no truth in it, then in spite of all your efforts, and even with the help of gramophone, you would not be able to carry it to the people. If the satyagraha we are going to start is really satyagraha, that is to say, if it means an insistence on truth, and if we are prepared to go ahead on the basis of truth and non-violence, it is bound to succeed, whether people hear my words or not, and whether my voice reaches their ears or not. Therefore, a record like this is neither necessary nor likely to be of any help.

At the Feet of Mahatma Gandhi, pp. 181-2

424. ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS

[On or before March 11, 1930]

Q. What sort of Government do you want?
   A. I want a Government that would obey and carry out the wishes of the people.

Q. You want a democracy?
   A. I am not interested in words, and I never worry myself about the form of government.

Q. But don’t you mind methods?
   A. I do mind them very much indeed, but I don’t mind the form.

---

1 Rajendra Prasad had suggested that a message of Gandhiji might be recorded so that it could be played after his arrest. This was Gandhiji’s reply.
2 These were reported by Mahadev Desai under the heading “Talks before the Trek”.

398 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
Q. Then you would not mind a monarchy?
A. I said form and machinery do not much matter to me.
Q. Well, then, tell me what form your democracy will take.
A. I do not know; the method alone interests me, and by method I mean the agency through which the wishes of the people are reached. There are only two methods: one is that of fraud and force; the other is that of non-violence and truth. Force always includes fraud, non-violence always excludes it.
Q. Can’t you have fraud with non-violence?
A. No. Impossible. Fraud itself is a species of violence.
Q. Well, I have seen fraud associated with non-violence. China is reputed to be one of the most peaceful countries in the world, and if I were to tell you about the frauds there, you would be shocked.
A. I repeat, words do not capture my imagination. As a people, the Chinese are one of the most peaceful in the world, but that peace cannot be real and voluntary if there is fraud in it. If I harbour ill-will in my breast but do not express it in acts, I am still violent. By non-violence or peace I mean the peace which comes through inner strength. If I have that peace, that non-violence, I won’t have any hate in me. Violence does not necessarily mean bodily harm. What I want to impress on everyone is that I do not want India to reach her goal through questionable means. Whether that is possible or not is another question. It is sufficient for my present purpose if the person who thinks out the plan and leads the people is absolutely above board and has non-violence and truth in him. Non-violence works organically, not mechanically. It was for that reason that I asked for unrestricted authority from the Working Committee of the Congress to work out my plan of non-violence.
Q. Don’t you think, Gandhiji, boycott of foreign goods would be more potent than civil disobedience?
A. Years ago I heard that futile cry and I replaced it by one for the boycott of foreign cloth. It made some impression, but that of boycott of foreign goods made none at all.
Q. My impression is that in Bengal boycott of British goods was tried with success, but no other province took it up.
A. No. It fizzled out. The mills in Ahmedabad and Bombay defrauded the nation by sending spurious cloth; and when genuine mill-cloth was sent, exorbitant prices were charged.
Q. That is what I mean to say. The thing was not tried seriously.
A. If it was not, it means that the people did not want to. So far as I am concerned, I never believed in it and so I could never back it.
Q. But would it not be easier to handle foreign-cloth boycott than civil disobedience?

A. No. It is far more difficult. In one case you want the cooperation of 300 million people. In the other, even if you have an army of ten thousand defiant men and women, your work is done.

Q. Why? They can be all clapped in jail and nothing more will happen thereafter.

A. Let them try the experiment. They would have to hang these men before they could dismiss them from their minds. If these men are trusty and true their very presence will worry the Government unto death.

Q. Will they worry Government even in prison?

A. For one thing they can’t keep them there for any length of time. The fact is that we never had even 5,000 full civil resisters in 1921. Every political prisoner is not necessarily a civil resister.

Q. Will not your movement lead to violence?

A. It may, though I am trying my best to prevent any outbreak of violence. Today there is greater risk of violence, in the absence of any safety-valve in the shape of a movement of non-violence like the one I am contemplating.

Q. Yes, I have heard you say that you are launching this campaign for the very purpose of stopping violence.

A. It is one argument, but that is not the most conclusive argument. The other and most conclusive argument for me is that if non-violence has to prove its worth, it must prove its worth today. It must cease to be the passive or even impotent instrument that it has come to be looked upon [as] in certain quarters. And when it is exercised in the most effective way, it must act in spite of the most fatal outward obstructions. In fact non-violence by its very nature must neutralize all outward obstruction. On the contrary, inward obstacles in the shape of fraud, hatred, and ill-will would be fatal to the movement. Up to now I used to say: “Let me get control over the forces of violence.” It is growing upon me now that it is only by setting the force of non-violence in motion that I can get those elements under control.

But I hear people say, “History will have to repeat itself in India.” Let it repeat itself, if it must. I for one must not postpone the movement unless I am to be guilty of the charge of cowardice. I must fight unto death the system based on violence and thus bring under control the force of political violence. When real organic non-violence is set to work, the masses also will react manfully.
Q. But after you are removed the movement will no longer be in your control?

A. In South Africa the movement was not in my control during the latter part of it, when it gained considerable momentum without any action on my part. Thousands joined the movement instinctively. I had not even seen the faces of them, much less known them. They joined because they felt that they must. They had possibly only heard my name, but they saw in the twinkling of an eye that it was a movement for their liberation; they knew that there was a man prepared to fight the £3 tax and they took the plunge. And against what odds? Their mines were converted into jails; the men who oppressed them day and night were appointed warders over them. They knew that there would be hell let loose on them. And yet they did not waver or falter. It was a perfect miracle.

Q. But would not the movement add to the already numerous divisions existing in the country?

A. I have no such fear. The forces of disunion can be kept under control, even as the forces of violence. You may say that there is fear elsewhere. The party of violence may not respond to my advances and the masses might behave unthinkingly. I am an optimist and have an abiding faith in human nature. The party of violence will give me fair play and the masses will act rightly by instinct. It is possible that I may be living in a fool’s paradise. But no general can possibly provide for all contingencies. For me it is the opportunity of a lifetime. The movement is none of my seeking. Almost in spite of myself I was irresistibly drawn to Calcutta. I entered into a compromise to which I was driven. The period of two years I changed to one, simply because it did not involve any moral principle. In Lahore I had to conceive and frame practically every resolution. There I saw the forces of violence and non-violence in full play, acting side by side; and I found that non-violence ultimately triumphed over violence.

Q. You said some time ago that the time was not ripe for civil disobedience. What has happened between that time and today that has helped you to alter your view?

A. I am quite positive that it is fully ripe. The reason I will tell you. Nothing has happened externally, but the internal conflict in me, which was the only barrier, has ceased; and I am absolutely certain now that the campaign had been long overdue. I might have started it long before this.

Q. And what was that internal conflict?

A. You know I have always been guided solely by my attitude towards non-violence, but I did not know then how to translate that attitude into action in the face of growing violence. But now I see as clearly as daylight that, pursuing the course that I have adopted, I minimize the risk I am taking.

Q. Are you sure that the salt campaign will lead you to jail?

A. I have not a shadow of doubt that it will. How long exactly it will take is more than I can say, but I feel that it will be much sooner than most people would be inclined to think. I expect a crisis to be soon reached which would lead to a proper Conference—not a Round Table Conference, but a Square Table, one where everybody attending it would know his bearings. The exact lineaments of that Conference I cannot at present depict, but it will be a Conference between equals met to lay their heads together to devise ways and means for the establishment of an Independent Constitution in India.

Q. Were you not responsible for allowing the Viceregal negotiations to come to an abrupt end?

A. I know that is the impression in certain quarters; the public blamed me for a time, but now it has come to understand the true position.

Q. Are you quite sure that in the position you took, the influence of the younger generation did not weigh with you?

A. No. Not a bit. I had never been sanguine about the Round Table Conference. I went of course as far as I could. But the central thing I always insisted on was that the Conference should apply itself to a scheme of Dominion Status suited to the needs of India. If the Viceroy had said ‘Yes’, I should gladly have asked him to proceed to the other points.

Q. Then you had no objection to the scheme coming into operation some years hence?

A. If the scheme was such as to come into operation at a future time, I should rule it out. But I may not talk about our interview with the Viceroy. The public might know more about it some day. I can assure you however that there was no question of a real Dominion Status scheme being framed.

Q. Just a question about your now famous eleven points. If some of them are conceded, would there be room for a compromise?

A. If they were to concede a few main points and couple the concession with a promise that the rest would be conceded as soon as possible, I would be prepared to consider a proposition for a Conference. But the justice of all those demands must be admitted. You will agree that there is nothing new about them. Most have been handed down to us from Dadabhai Naoroji’s time.

Q. Supposing they conceded your demand about the reduction of civil and military expenditure, would you not regard it as a sufficient proof of their bona fides?

A. I should seriously reconsider my position, but it would all depend on the spirit in which the concession was made.

Young India, 20-3-1930

425. SPEECH AT PRAYER MEETING, SABARMATI
ASHRAM

[On or before March 11, 1930]¹

Let me, moreover, make one thing clear. Either we shall win the goal for which we are marching or die in the attempt to win it. There can be no turning back for us hereafter. We will keep on our fight till swaraj is established in India. This will be the last fight. The soldiers who accompany me must note that there is to be no retreat. Those of them that are married should take leave of their wives, and the wives should congratulate their husbands on their being the first soldiers of the country’s freedom battle. We are as good as parting from the Ashram and from our homes. Only with complete victory can we return to this place.

[From Gujarati]
Gujarati, 16-3-1930

426. SPEECH AT PRAYER MEETING, SABARMATI
ASHRAM

March 11, 1930

In all probability this will be my last speech to you. Even if the Government allow me to march tomorrow morning, this will be my last speech on the sacred banks of the Sabarmati. Possibly these may be the last words of my life here.

I have already told you yesterday what I had to say. Today I shall confine myself to what you should do after I and my companions are arrested. The programme of the march to Jalalpur must be fulfilled as originally settled. The enlistment of volunteers for this purpose should be confined to Gujarat. From what I have seen and heard during the last fortnight I am inclined to believe that the stream of civil resisters will flow unbroken.

But let there be not a semblance of breach of peace even after all of us have been arrested. We have resolved to utilize all our resources in the pursuit of an exclusively non-violent struggle. Let no one commit a wrong in anger. This is my hope and prayer. I wish these words of mine reached every nook and corner of the land. My task shall be done if I perish and so do my comrades. It will then be for the Working Committee of the Congress to show you the way and it will be up to you to follow its lead. That is the only meaning of the Working Committee’s resolution. The reins of the movement will still remain in the hands of those of my associates who believe in non-violence as an article of faith. Of course, the Congress will be free to chalk out what course of action commends itself to it. So long as I have not reached Jalalpur, let nothing be done in contravention to the authority vested in me by the Congress. But once I am arrested, the whole general responsibility shifts to the Congress. No one who believes in non-violence, as a creed, need therefore sit still. My compact with the Congress ends as soon as I am arrested. In that case there should be no slackness in the enrolment of volunteers. Wherever possible, civil disobedience of salt laws should be started. These laws can be violated in three ways. It is an offence to manufacture salt wherever there are facilities for doing so. The possession and sale of contraband salt (which includes natural salt or salt earth) is also an offence. The purchasers of such salt will be equally guilty. To carry away the natural salt deposits on the seashore is likewise a violation of law. So is the hawking of such salt. In short, you may choose anyone or all of these devices to break the salt monopoly.

¹ According to the source the speech was delivered to a large gathering either on the 10th or 11th of March.

We are, however, not to be content with this alone. Wherever there are Congress Committees, wherever there is no ban by the Congress and wherever the local workers have self-confidence, other suitable measures may be adopted. I prescribe only one condition, viz., let our pledge of truth and non-violence as the only means for the attainment of swaraj be faithfully kept. For the rest, everyone has a free hand. But that does not give a licence to all and sundry to carry on on their individual responsibility. Wherever there are local leaders, their orders should be obeyed by the people. Where there are no leaders and only a handful of men have faith in the programme, they may do what they can, if they have enough self-confidence. They have a right, nay, it is their duty, to do so. The history of the world is full of instances of men who rose to leadership by sheer force of self-confidence, bravery and tenacity. We too, if we sincerely aspire to swaraj and are impatient to attain it, should have similar self-confidence. Our ranks will swell and our hearts strengthen as the number of our arrests by Government increases.

Let nobody assume that after I am arrested there will be no one left to guide them. It is not I but Pandit Jawaharlal who is your guide. He has the capacity to lead. Though the fact is that those who have learnt the lesson of fearlessness and self-effacement need no leader, but if we lack these virtues, not even Jawaharlal will be able to produce them in us.

Much can be done in other ways besides these. Liquor and foreign-cloth shops can be picketed. We can refuse to pay taxes if we have the requisite strength. The lawyers can give up practice. The public can boycott the courts by refraining from litigation. Government servants can resign their posts. In the midst of the despair reigning all round people quake with fear of losing employment. Such men are unfit for swaraj. But why this despair? The number of Government servants in the country does not exceed a few hundred thousand. What about the rest? Where are they to go? Even free India will not be able to accommodate a greater number of public servants. A Collector then will not need the number of servants he has got today. He will be his own servant. How can a poor country like India afford to provide a Collector with separate servants for performing the duties of carrying his papers, sweeping, cooking, latrine-cleaning and letter-carrying? Our starving millions can by no means afford this enormous expenditure. If, therefore, we are sensible enough, let us bid good-bye to Government employment, no matter if it is the post of a judge or a peon. It may be difficult for a judge to leave his job, but where is the difficulty in the case of a peon? He can earn his bread everywhere by honest manual labour. This is the easiest solution of the problem of freedom. Let all who are co-operating with the Government in one way or another, be it by paying taxes, keeping titles, or sending children to official schools, etc., withdraw their co-operation in all or as many ways as possible. One can devise other methods, too, of non-co-operating with the Government. And then there are women who can stand shoulder to shoulder with men in this struggle.

You may take it as my will. It was the only message that I desired to impart to you before starting on the march or for the jail. I wish there to be no suspension or abandonment of the war that commences tomorrow morning, or earlier if I am arrested before that time. I shall eagerly await the news that ten batches are ready as soon as my batch is arrested. I believe there are men in India to complete the work begun by me today. I have faith in the righteousness of our cause and the purity of our weapons. And where the means are clean, there God is undoubtedly present with His blessings. And where these three combine, there defeat is an impossibility. A satyagrahi, whether free or incarcerated, is ever victorious. He is vanquished only when he forsakes truth and non-violence and turns a deaf ear to the Inner Voice. If, therefore, there is such a thing as defeat for even a satyagrahi, he alone is the cause of it. God bless you all and keep off all obstacles from the path in the struggle that begins tomorrow. Let this be our prayer.

Young India, 20-3-1930

427. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

[March 11, 1930]

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

It is nearing 10 p.m. now. The air is thick with the rumour that I shall be arrested during the night. I have not wired to you especially because the correspondents submit their messages for approval and everybody is working at top speed. There was nothing special to wire about.

Things are developing extraordinarily well. Offers of volunteers are pouring in. The column will proceed with the march even though I may be arrested. If I am not, you may expect wires from me; otherwise I am leaving instructions.

I do not know that I have anything in particular to say. I have written enough. I gave a final message this evening to a vast crowd that gathered for prayer on the sands.

May God keep you and give you strength to bear the burden.

With love to you all,

BAPU

A Bunch of Old Letters, pp. 83-4

428. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

March 11, 1930

BHAJ SATIS BABU,

This may be my last letter—before my arrest at any rate. Tomorrow I feel they are bound to arrest me. There are rumours also to this effect. I have received your letters. What reply can I give? Do whatever is possible. I am giving instructions that a copy of the Gita be sent to you. It is ready.

I have no time to write separately to Hemprabha Devi. May God grant you both the strength to give up all, the wisdom always to discern your duty and a long life for service.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1636

406 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
429. TELEGRAM TO BHAWANIDAYAL SANNYASI

[On or after March 11, 1930]

WISH YOU SUCCESS.

GANDHI

From a microfilm: S.N. 16668

430. MESSAGE TO BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CONGRESS COMMITTEE

[Before March 12, 1930]

I have the telegram of the Bombay Provincial Congress Committee about Jamnalalji. I agree with the Committee that Jamnalalji’s presence in Bombay at the present moment will be of greater benefit to the country than elsewhere. I have conferred with him and he has decided to give Bombay as much time as he can. I only hope that Bombay will make the fullest use of his presence and will take a leading part as has been its wont in the movement of emancipation. I hope that Bombay has fittingly celebrated Sardar Vallabhbhai’s arrest.

The Bombay Chronicle, 13-3-1930

431. SARDAR VALLABHBHAI PATEL

Sardar Vallabhbhai is the one man who has been responsible for keeping the peace in Gujarat during these troublous times. He is the man whose unique administration of the Ahmedabad Municipal Board drew unstinted praise from the Government. He is the man whose tireless energy put heart into the flood-stricken people of Gujarat in 1927 and when the Government machinery had broken down, his workers were responsible for saving the lives of thousands of people. It was Vallabhbhai Patel who waged a peaceful war in Bardoli the other day resulting in a settlement honourable to both the parties. This man of peace, this idol of the Gujaratis, their uncrowned king, is now a prisoner for disregarding a notice prohibiting speech when there was not even the remotest danger of breach of the peace. He had not gone, the authorities knew, for disobeying the provisions of the Salt Act. He had gone simply to prepare for my march. He had to be removed somehow or other. The Viceroy is sorry for my

---

1 This was in reply to the addressee’s telegram received on March 11, 1930, which read: “Accepted presidentship Shahabad District Congress, Starting satyagraha after your arrest. Send blessings.”
contemplated breach of the law. What is to be said of this act of corrupting and abusing the law, interfering with a man’s liberty in the name of the law?

And where is Sardar living and how? He is in a common cell, unable to sleep in the open and without any light. He is given food which may induce dysentery to which he is prone.

He may not receive any but religious books. As a satyagrahi, he wants no special treatment. But why should the commonest felon be prevented, if he is no danger to safety, from sleeping under the sky in this hot weather? Why should a felon not be given light to read or write if he needs it? May not a murderer read and instruct himself? And why should Sardar Vallabhbhai not have food that his health demands? But this is a matter of prison reform. Sardar Vallabhbhai is not the man whose spirit will be broken, if he does not get the necessary creature comforts. Did not the learned journalist and dramatic author Sjt. Khadilkar have similar treatment only the other day? The spirit of satyagraha will not be broken by shabby treatment in the Indian prisons. Only let those who have faith in the proposed conference know what Dominion Status in action really means. Gujarat, nay, India, is preparing to vindicate the authority of the supreme law which will supersede the utter lawlessness masquerading under the name of law. The authorities have imprisoned Vallabhbhai in the hope that his work will languish. Before long they will realize that his work will continue as if he were bodily in the midst of his people.

PS.

Information has just been received that Sardar is being better treated. He is to be allowed literature and the food he may need.

Young India, 12-3-1930

432. BEGGING THE QUESTION

Dear Mr. Gandhi,

His Excellency the Viceroy desires me to acknowledge your letter of the 2nd March. He regrets to learn that you contemplate a course of action which is clearly bound to involve violation of the law and danger to the public peace.

Yours very truly,
G. Cunningham
Private Secretary

The reader is familiar with this reply. He will note, too, that it begs the question; and if further justification were needed, this stereotyped reply affords it. On bended knees I asked for bread and I have received stone instead.
It was open to the Viceroy to disarm me by freeing the poor man’s salt, tax on which costs him five annas per year or nearly three days’ income. I do not know outside India anyone who pays to the State Rs. 3 per year, if he earns Rs. 360 during that period. It was open to the Viceroy to do many other things except sending the usual reply. But the time is not yet. He represents a nation that does not easily give in, that does not easily repent. Entreaty never convinces it. It readily listens to physical force. It can witness with bated breath a boxing match for hours without fatigue. It can go mad over a football match in which there may be broken bones. It goes into ecstasies over blood-curdling accounts of war. It will listen also to mute resistless suffering. It will not part with the millions it annually drains from India in reply to any argument, however convincing. The Viceregal reply does not surprise me.

But I know that the salt tax has to go and many other things with it, if my letter means what it says. Time alone can show how much of it was meant.

The reply says I contemplate a course of action which is clearly bound to involve violation of the law and danger to the public peace. In spite of the forest of books containing rules and regulations, the only law that the nation knows is the will of the British administrators, the only public peace the nation knows is the peace of a public prison. India is one vast prison house. I repudiate this law and regard it as my sacred duty to break the mournful monotony of the compulsory peace that is choking the heart of the nation for want of free vent.

Young India, 12-3-1930

433. THE FOURFOLD CURSE

The moral influence of British rule on personal character, on the position of women, in stimulation of public spirit, in the attitude to children and the poor and infirm, far outweighs the great material burdens imposed by it.

Thus writes the Indian Daily Mail of 7th March. I was unprepared for this defence of the British rule at this hour of the day. It reminds me of a learned Indian saying fifteen years ago, at a conference, that he was proud to own the British Tommy as his master as he owed all his knowledge to his British professors. A Governor and his wife were present at this conference. I hung my head in shame when I heard the learned sentiment and the vigorous clapping of it by the Governor’s wife. One sees in the two sentiments quoted by me an exemplification of our cultural conquest which is worse than the material.

But for the cultural conquest, it must be the plainest thing to see that it is not the British rule but British contact that has exercised whatever moral influence we may feel. Surely the two things are different and may well be contradictory. British contact may be a godsend. British rule may be a curse. And we may have the one without the other. My description of the rule as a curse would be accurate even though a knowledge of the good influence of British contact might be present with me at the time of giving the description. Personally I dispute much of the glorification whether of the British contact or the British rule painted in the sentence quoted. Nor must it be forgotten that the masses are wholly untouched by the influence described by the writer. Is the doubtful character of the moral results on the educated few an ample or any compensation for the pauperization of millions? And what is this moral influence on the few educated among us? Are we more truthful, are we cleaner, are we more sober, are we more humane, are we braver than the masses? Are the wives of the educated few better off than those of the masses who fearlessly work in their fields without molestation from their husbands? Is our record about venereal diseases—that infallible index to the moral content of a human being—better than among the masses? Are we less selfish than they? What do we do for the poor and the infirm? How much do we set apart even from our superfluities for their sake? I need not prolong the agony. I fear that the confinement to the city life and the comparative ease that the city life has given us have made us too lazy and too indifferent to study the condition of rural India and to think for ourselves.

Nor do we fully realize the meaning of economic distress. It is below par in the sense that the distress has reduced man in India below his species. He is an underfed beast of burden in human form and is daily sinking. The money taken from him is never used for his betterment. He is untouched by any moral or other good influence. But the article under consideration says that the Indian States are much worse. If they are, our thanks are again due to the British rule. The Princes have no incentive to be good, they are exposed to every temptation to ‘go wrong’. They are more irresponsible than they were before. The ryots were once able to rise against Princely tyranny; now the Princes are protected by the awe-inspiring British power. It is true that they are free to do what good they like. But the hot-house culture which they are given from infancy has given them a taste for pleasures and pomp they will not forgo, and the seclusion which is imposed upon them in childhood so isolates them from their people as to make them strangers in their own land. It speaks volumes for the ancient culture that in spite of every influence to the contrary, there are bright examples now and then to be seen. Remove the dead weight of the British rule which ‘stunts’ them and us, and they and we as independent parts of the same ancient land will grow as if by magic. But if they hug the golden chains that bind them to the British footstool, they are at liberty to hold on to the chains. India outside the States zone is awake and will bear the yoke no longer, even if it has to break in the attempt.

The exclusive stress in my letter to the Viceroy on the economic exploitation was inevitable for my purpose. But the moral and spiritual wrong which is a direct result of the foreign rule is probably greater even than the economic wrong. Those who are engaged in the war of independence are not, it is obvious, moved by the economic wrong. They do not feel it. They are moved solely by the moral and spiritual wrong which they feel in every fibre of their being. The degradation they scent in the air, the very knowledge that a whole continent of which they are children lies prostrate at the feet of a handful of men coming from a distant island fills them with horror and disgust with themselves. In their impatience to break through the snaky coil they do not mind what they do so long as they do something, even though it may destroy them. I claim to have presented India with a sovereign remedy for dealing effectively with the fourfold curse. The remedy is designed to free India and also Britain. It will not be long before her people will acknowledge that I am not their enemy. I claim to be their true and wise friend and an equally true and wise servant of India.

Young India, 12-3-1930

434. MISREPRESENTATION

Having lost caste with some Mussalmans, there are numerous misrepresentations about me to be seen in the Muslim Press. A friend has brought the latest to my notice. It is to the effect that I have prevented the Imam Saheb, an inmate of the Ashram and an honoured life co-worker, from joining the Ashram group of civil resisters, on the plea that he could not subscribe to non-violence as an article of faith for achieving the national purpose. The fact is quite the reverse. Imam Saheb’s name is on my list. He gave it after full deliberation. I personally never had any difficulty about reading the message of non-violence in the Koran. Imam Saheb is not joining the march as he is too weak to undertake the exertion. But it is quite likely that he may offer himself for arrest when the actual manufacture of contraband salt commences. Two Mussalmans are actually enlisted for the march, as they have no difficulty about subscribing to the creed of non-violence for the purpose of swaraj.
Thus the insinuation referred to is baseless in two ways. But the moment there is suspicion about a person’s motives, everything he does becomes tainted. The present plan of campaign is so designed as ultimately to dispel all suspicion.

Young India, 12-3-1930

435. WHAT IT IS NOT

Maulana Shaukat Ali is reported to have said that the independence movement is a movement not for swaraj but for Hindu Raj and against Mussalmans, that therefore the latter should leave it alone. On reading the report I wired to the Maulana inquiring whether he was correctly reported. He has kindly replied confirming the report. The Maulana has launched a grave charge against the movement. It needs to be repudiated once for all. Whatever the movement is, it certainly is not for Hindu Raj, nor is it against Mussalmans. It bears within itself a complete answer to the charge. The Congress has taken the first step in final non-co-operation. No Congressman can enter the legislatures, much less accept employment under the Government. No Congressman can seek or receive favours from the Government. Does not the Hindu-Muslim question centre round a division of political power—spoils of office? How can the movement be anti-Mussalman or for Hindu Raj when no one identified with it has the slightest notion, till independence is reached, of possessing any political power? True, the Congress has still left open the entrance to local boards. What is at present going on in Calcutta almost makes me think that instead of being weak, I should have pressed for the boycott even of these boards. The Congress is better without these temptations. They are just now mere snares for the unwary or the selfish rather than instruments of national service for the patriot. But I am sure the Maulana did not have the local boards in mind when he said that the movement was against Mussalmans. The only ground for the belief, in so far as I can fathom it, can be that those who are engaged in it must, by its very nature, become more self-reliant, more defiant and more capable of resisting any encroachment on their liberty than before, and that since the vast majority of them are Hindus, they will in course of time become more powerful than the Mussalmans. But such reasoning would be unworthy of the brave Maulana I have known him to be. He must therefore explain to the public what he means by his serious charge.

I grant that if till the end of the chapter only Hindus join the movement in the right spirit, they will become an irresistible force of the right, i.e., non-violent type. But the obvious deduction from this fact is that all those who are keeping aloof should join the movement at the earliest moment. And I prophesy that, if the movement keeps the chalked path, the Maulana and the other Mussalmans, Sikhs, Christians, Parsis, Jews, etc., will join it.

Surely all are equally interested in securing repeal of the salt tax. Do not all need and use salt equally? That is the one tax which is no respecter of persons.

Civil disobedience is a process of developing internal strength and therefore an organic growth. Resistance to the salt tax can hurt no single communal interest. On the contrary it must, if successful, help the abstainers equally with the participants.

As against this absolutely national method of gaining our end, put the unnatural, artificial and diplomatic method of a Round Table Conference in which conflicting interests will be represented by interested parties, and all the Indian groups together will be moved and dominated by the paramount and all-powerful British group. This conference without the power of the people behind it and composed of the powerful and the weak will bring anything but swaraj. In the existing circumstances therefore it can only result in further consolidating the British power.

Civil resisters can have nothing to do with such a conference. Their business is merely to generate and conserve national strength. They have nothing to do with communalism. But if they are compelled by force of circumstances to countenance a communal solution, they are pledged only to consider such as may be satisfactory to the parties concerned. How the Maulana can call such a movement anti-Muslim or one for obtaining Hindu Raj, passes comprehension.

The fact that those taking part in the movement are preponderatingly Hindus is unfortunately true. By proclaiming a boycott the Maulana is helping the process. Even so, there can be no harm, if the Hindu civil resisters are fighting not for themselves but for all—Muslims, Sikhs, Christians, Parsis, and others who will make the nation of the future free India.

Not much imagination is required to see that even when civil resisters have acquired sufficient influence to make themselves felt, it will still be open to anyone at the time of framing a constitution to block the way. The only time when abstainers, be they Mussalmans or Hindus or any other, will be helpless against the civil resisters is when they drive out the English or when the latter retire in a huff or in disgust. In the first place, however, they can never do this if their means are uniformly peaceful. Secondly, Mussalmans above all can help themselves and the nation by joining the struggle. Thirdly, if no violence on the part of the people is offered, civil resistance must result in complete conversion of the English. They will then consider it their duty, it will be their penance, to help us, at their own expense, to arrive at a solution of the many difficulties of which they will own themselves to have been the authors. They will help us as absolute equals and friends to inaugurate an independent organized government.

As for the irritation felt by the Maulana against me personally, I need not say much. Since I have no counter-irritation in me, I prophesy that when his temper has cooled down and when he discovers that I am not guilty of the many sins he imagines against me, he will restore me to ‘his pocket’ in which I had the honour to be only the other day as it were. For it is not I who have gone out of his pocket. He has thrown me out of it. I am the same little man that I used to be in 1921. I can never be an enemy of Mussalmans, no matter what any one or more of them may do to me or mine, even as I can never be an enemy of Englishmen, even though they may heap further wrongs upon the Everest of wrongs their representatives have already piled. I am too conscious of the imperfections of the species to which I belong to be irritated against any single member thereof.
My remedy is to deal with the wrong wherever I see it, not to hurt the wrongdoer, even as I would not like to be hurt for the wrongs I continually do.

Young India, 12-3-1930

436. A NEW ORIENTATION

The discussion that has raged round the eleven points mentioned in my article on the Viceregal address to the Assembly and my reference to some of them in my letter to the Viceroy shows how necessary it was to bring them out. Critics have said that these points fall far below even Dominion Status, not to speak of Independence. They could not have carefully read my article or my letter. If they will re-read them, they will find it stated therein that the conceding of those points was a preliminary to a conference about Independence.

Whilst therefore there is no substance in the criticism levelled against my presentation of the case, I am free to admit that I have endeavoured to give a new orientation to the national demand. Just as it was necessary in 1921 to keep the Khilafat and the Punjab wrongs separate from swaraj and I used to say then that for me to have their

1 Vide “Clearing the Issue” 30-1-1930.
redress purely through our effort was tantamount to swaraj, so has it become necessary for me on the eve of battle to lay stress on the eleven points and even to say that they are swaraj. For if they are not included in swaraj, it can have no meaning for the nation; and if we generate sufficient strength to gain those points, we have strength enough to gain an Independence Constitution.

Let me illustrate my point. There is the proposal for protecting the mill industry and at the same time of Imperial Preference. I call this a dangerous trap, especially when the expression Dominion Status is being bandied about in connection with the proposed Round Table Conference. If against the grant of Dominion Status or even Independence a stipulation is made that there should always be preference for British cloth, Dominion Status or Independence will have no meaning either for the millions or for the indigenous mills. There can never be preference for things British when India is capable of manufacturing them to the full extent of the demand thereof within her own borders. She may share foreign trade with others; she dare not share her inland trade with anybody so long as she is able to cope with it herself. Indeed she is entitled and it is her duty to protect growing industries against even a friendly England or any other friendly power. It would be wrong and unpatriotic for the mill-owners to fall into the trap laid for them. They should stoutly refuse to have anything to do with Imperial Preference for British cloth, even if they gain a prohibitive tariff against all other foreign cloth.

But to revert to my point. The new orientation consists in familiarizing the nation with the contents of Independence. It must know what it is to mean for the masses. There was much meaning in the circular letter of a Youth League recently criticized in these pages. The masses should know both what Independence will and will not mean for them. If the main features are not constantly kept in view and public opinion formulated, when the time comes, they are likely to be overlooked or even deliberately sacrificed. The controversy over public debt has now made it impossible, I hope, for any representative to bind the nation to its payment without being satisfied that it was all incurred in the national interest. It is, I hope, impossible similarly to bind the nation in any future constitution to the high cost of civil and military expenditure. And so it may be said regarding all the illustrative points and many more that can be mentioned by me.

The plan therefore I have in mind is to concentrate the national attention on all these points one after another or simultaneously and demand relief preparatory to Independence.
This is the most expeditious plan, if Independence is to be achieved through peaceful means. Satyagraha works only in this manner. It arms people with power not to seize power but to convert the usurper to their own view till at last the usurper retires or sheds the vices of a usurper and becomes a mere instrument of service of those whom he has wronged. The mission of satyagrahis ends when they have shown the way to the nation to become conscious of the power lying latent in it.

Young India, 12-3-1930

437. SPEECH AT PRAYER MEETING, SABARMATI ASHRAM

[March 12, 1930]¹

God willing, we shall set out exactly at 6.30. Those joining the march should all be on the spot at 6.20. If our first step is pure, all our subsequent steps will be good and pure. As Manilal is joining us, I would say something for his benefit. He should not join just because he is my son though he cannot help being my son, nor can I forget that I am his father.

We who are setting out with a great responsibility on our heads—we the Ashram inmates—have but one capital. We can boast of no learning. We who took certain vows and pledged ourselves to the Ashram way of life ought to adhere to those vows scrupulously. The seventy-two men joining the march should once again read the Ashram rules and think whether or not they should join the march. Those inmates of the Ashram who have any dependants will not be able to draw money from the Ashram for them. None should join the struggle with that hope. This fight is no public show; it is the final struggle—a life-and-death struggle. If there are disturbances, we may even have to die at the hands of our own people. Even in that case, we shall have made our full contribution to the satyagraha struggle. We have constituted ourselves the custodians of Hindu-Muslim unity. We hope to become the representatives of the poorest of the poor, the lowest of the low and the weakest of the weak. If we do not have the strength for this, we should not join the struggle. For my part I have taken no pledge not to return here, but I do ask you to return here only as dead men or as winners of swaraj. Chhaganlal Joshi will not be able to run up here if Dhiru falls ill. Even if the Ashram is on fire, we will not return. Only those may join, who have no special duty to their relatives. The marchers have vowed to follow life-long poverty and to observe brahmacharya for life. They leave here with the determination to observe brahmacharya and will remain faithful to that determination. The man who always follows truth and always proclaims what he does is a brave man. Anyone who deceives others is not brave. I cannot speak to anyone privately for I have not a minute to spare. Though addressing myself to Manilal particularly, I say this to all.

¹ The source does not mention the date. It is, however, apparent that this was delivered on the morning of the 12th before the beginning of the march.

² Actually seventy-eight; for a list of the names, vide Appendix “Letter from Jawaharlal Nehru”, 4-11-1929.

We are entering upon a life-and-death struggle, a holy war we are performing an all-embracing sacrifice in which we wish to offer ourselves as oblation. If you prove incapable, the shame will be mine, not yours. You too have in you the strength that God has given me. The Self in us all is one and the same. In me it has awakened; in others, it has awakened partially.

[From Gujarati]
From the manuscript of Mahadev Desai’s Diary

438. PARTING MESSAGE AT CHANDOLA

March 12, 1930

Your surpassing love for me has drawn you thus far. I appreciate your affection for me which has been so vividly demonstrated by you . . . There were rumours of my arrest last night. God is great, mysterious indeed are His ways. I am here to say good-bye to you. But even if I were in prison, with your strength I could come back. Indeed, it is your strength that will bring us swaraj. Go back and resolve to do your share. Propagate khaddar work, be prepared to offer yourselves as civil resisters. Let there be no flinching. Your way at present, however, lies homeward; mine straight on to the sea-coast. You cannot accompany me at present, but you will have an opportunity to accompany me in a different sense later. . . .

The Bombay Chronicle, 18-3-1930

439. INTERVIEW TO HARIDAS T. MAJUMDAR

March 12, 1930

While he was having lunch, I asked our beloved captain if such an uninterrupted walk of over eleven miles did not tire him out.

1 Gandhiji and party left Sabarmati Ashram at 6.30 a.m. followed by a huge procession. They reached Chandola lake at 8.30 a.m. after covering seven miles. Gandhiji addressed those who had come to see him off. The message has been extracted from a letter to the Editor by Haridas T. Majumdar who was among the volunteers marching with Gandhiji.
I should not say I am very tired; to be sure, I am tired, but it is ordinary fatigue. I myself am amazed that I should have been able to walk so far at a stretch. You know I have had no practice for some time in long-distance walking....

I asked him what he would like to say in regard to the parallel between the great march of 3,000 men, women and children he had organized in South Africa and the present march to the sea-coast.

Well, the technique is the same even though the organization is different. Soul-force is the weapon common to both. In South Africa, however, there were 3,000 persons, here we are only 79. Again in South Africa we were in the midst of a hostile environment, social as well as political, and we had to carry our own foodstuffs with us; here we are in the midst of a hospitable environment and do not have to carry our food. The march in South Africa was attended by greater hardships than the present one.

The Bombay Chronicle, 18-3-1930

440. SPEECH AT ASLALI

March 12, 1930

Do not be content with merely wearing khadi and plying the spinning-wheel, thinking that you have done all that you could do.

Take the case of your own village: For a population of 1,700, 850 maunds of salt will be required. For 200 bullocks, 300 maunds of salt will be required. That is, a total of 1,150 maunds of salt will be required.

The Government levies a tax of Rs. 1-4 on one pukka maund of salt. Hence, on 1,150 maunds, which is equal to 575 pukka maunds, you pay a tax of Rs. 720.

A bullock must be given two maunds of salt. In addition, there are 800 cows, buffaloes and calves in your village. If you give them salt, or if the tanner uses salt for treating hides, or if you use salt as manure, you would be paying that amount of tax in excess of Rs. 720.

Can your village afford to pay this amount in taxes every year? In India, the average income of an individual is calculated at 7 pice or, in other words, hundreds of thousands of persons do not earn even a single pice and either die of starvation or live by begging. Even they cannot do without salt. What will be the plight of such persons if they can get no salt or get it at too high a price?

Salt, which sells at 9 pice a maund in the Punjab, salt of which heaps and heaps are being made on the coast of Kathiawar and Gujarat, cannot be had by the poor at less than Re. 1-8-0 a maund. What curses the Government may not be inviting upon itself from the poor for hiring men to throw this salt into mud!

The poor destitute villagers do not have the strength to get this tax repealed. We want to develop this strength.

A democratic State is one which has authority to abolish a tax which does not deserve to be paid. It is one in which the people can determine when a certain thing should or should not be paid.

We, however, do not possess such authority. Likewise, even our supposedly great representatives do not have it. In the Central Legislative Assembly, Pandit Malaviya said that the manner in which Sardar Vallabhbhai was arrested could not be called just; that it was unjust and high-handed. And this resolution was supported by Mr. Jinnah. To this the Government official replied that their magistrate had acted in a manner which beffited a loyal subject, if he had acted otherwise, he would have been regarded as a traitor. If, however, that is the case, this bearded person (Abbas Saheb) and I should also be arrested, because I on my part openly make speeches about preparing salt.

We want to establish a government which will be unable to arrest a single individual against the wishes of the people, which cannot extract ghee worth even a quarter pice from us, cannot take away our carts, cannot extort money from us.

There are two ways of establishing such a government: that of the big stick or violence and that of non-violence or civil disobedience. We have chosen the second alternative, regarding it as our dharma. And it is because of this that we have set out to prepare salt after serving notice on the Government to that effect.

I can understand there being a tax on such things as the hookah, bidis and liquor. And if I were an emperor, I would levy with your permission a tax of one pie on every bidi. And if bidis are found too expensive, those addicted to them may give them up. But should one levy a tax on salt?

Such taxes should now be repealed. We should make a resolve that we shall prepare salt, eat it, sell it to the people and, while doing so, court imprisonment, if necessary. If, out of Gujarat’s population of 90 lakhs, we leave out women and children, and the remaining 30 lakhs get ready to violate the salt tax, the Government does not have enough accommodation in jails to house so many people. Of course, the Government can also beat up and shoot down those who violate the law. But the governments of today are unable to go to this extent.
We, however, are determined to let the Government kill us if it wishes.

The salt tax must be repealed now. The fact that a sea of humanity had gathered and showered blessings upon us—for a distance of seven miles from the Ashram to the Chandola lake—a sight for the gods to see—that is a good omen. And, if we climb even one step, we shall readily be able to climb the other steps leading to the palace of Independence.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 16-3-1930

441. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

DURING DANDI MARCH,
[After March 12, 1930]

CHI. NARANDAS,

I have your letters. Find some work for Ranchhodbhai. It can be manual labour. If you can find even some teaching work discuss the matter with him and fix it up.

In this weather Punjabhai can sleep outside. If he does that, mosquitoes at any rate will not bite him.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 8091. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

442. HINDI IN BENGAL AND ASSAM

Teachers know that in 1928 a society for the spread of Hindi was formed in Calcutta. The treasurer of the society was Shri Ghanshyamdas Birla. I have received a statement of the working of this society and a statement of accounts. I give the following facts from the statement of its working.

From this it is apparent that the work is progressing in some measure. There is much room for expanding this work. An effort is being made to meet the expenses of each school with local help, which is praiseworthy. Only thus can success be achieved. The start may well be made with the main centre but ultimately all local work should become self-supporting. Only then will the publicity work widen and take on a permanent shape. Bengal and Assam are two places where thousands of people can be taught Hindi. This work is already divided into two parts. The first is instruction and the second is expansion of this work by lectures arranged by local branches. There is need for a third part; and that is revision of the methods of making instruction easy. Competent and resourceful teachers are daily in search of means to make this work of instruction yield quick results. Many Bengali and Assamese words resemble Hindi. Books to make this fact known should be written, pocket-size Hindi-Bengali and Bengali-Hindi dictionaries should be prepared, Bengali books in Devnagari script and Hindi books in Bengali script should be published. Such books can pay their way as has been shown in Madras. When the books are really useful and good they gain value and they become popular.

1 Not translated here

One word more. Bengal is a big centre of Marwari traders. The task of spreading Hindi in Bengal is a special responsibility of these traders. So, there should be no hitch in this work for want of funds.

[From Hindi]
_Hindi Navajivan, 13-3-1930_

443. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

_March 13, 1930_

CHI. MIRA,

Whilst there is time, you should write and that fully or as fully as time permits. Yesterday’s demonstration was a triumph of non-violence. I know it won’t be everywhere and always like that during the struggle, but it was a great and good beginning.

You will be patient, anxious for nothing, charitable towards those who do not do as you would have them do. Your central work is women and children.

See that Reginald takes care of himself and is not rash.
Everything must be in an apple-pie order.
Your diary will be fully kept.
And you will not be anxious about me. He will keep me fit so long as He needs me.

With love,

BAPU

From the original: C. W. 5426. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9660

444. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

_March 13, 1930_

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

I hope you received what might have been my last letter¹. The news given to me of my impending arrest was said to be absolutely authentic. But we have reached the second stage safely. We take the third tonight. I am sending you the programme. All the friends are most particular that I should not go to Ahmedabad for the Working Committee. There is considerable force in the suggestion. The Working Committee may, therefore, come to the place where we may be for the day or you alone may come. The sentiment that we won’t voluntarily go back without finishing the struggle is being well cultivated. My going back will mar it a bit. Jamnalalji told me he had written to you about it. I hope Kamla is keeping well.

---

¹ Vide “Letter to Jawaharlal Nehru”, 11-3-1930.

I asked yesterday that full wires should be sent to you.

Yours sincerely,
BAPU

A Bunch of Old Letters, p. 84

445. LETTER TO REGINALD REYNOLDS
March 13, 1930

MY DEAR REYNOLDS,

Take care of yourself. Besides looking after Young India, do please identify yourself with the activities of the Ashram. I am anxious for it to become an abode of peace, purity and strength. You I hold to be a gift from God for the advancement of that work.

Yours,
BAPU

From a photostat: C. W. 5431. Courtesy: Swarthmore College, Philadelphia

446. LETTER TO GANGABEHN ZAVERI
March 13, 1930

CHI. GANGABEHN ZAVERI,

I believe you have joined the common kitchen now. Will you also stay in the Hostel? Nanibehn should live only on milk and fruit. If she does that, she will be all right.

This is a rare opportunity for women. I think it will be a great achievement on their part if they assume the entire burden of the internal management of the Ashram.

I have no time to write more.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3099

1 Not available: vide, however, “Satyagrahis’ March”, 9-3-1930.
447. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK
March 13, 1930

CHI. PREMA,

You are certainly mad, but your madness endears you to me. You have been working with greater devotion than I had expected from you and God keeps you in good health. Never be impatient. Try to speak less loudly. If you do so, you will not aggravate the condition of the tonsils.

Tell Kusum that something still remains to be done about her tongue, and that the doctor should attend to it at his leisure.

Write to me. I have no time to write more.

BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro—5: Ku. Premabehn Kantakne, pp. 8-9

448. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI
March 13, 1930

CHI. KUSUM¹,

I have your letter. I should have got it yesterday, but Pyarelal forgot to put it up to me and it came into my hand just as I was finishing a letter to Ba.

You have done very well in deciding to move to the Hostel. Now persuade Dudhibehn to do the same. If, instead of living in a separate room, she went to live in the Hostel, it would be possible to look after her. See that Sarojini works. Do not hesitate to talk to her plainly about it. Get Shantu’s teeth examined by Haribhai³. Give me reports about all who are ill. Do not neglect to maintain your diary. Study the Gita carefully. Clear the Gujarati file. Give me your daily programme of work. I cannot say when I shall be arrested. They may arrest me whenever they wish. In any case, you should write to me regularly. For one day more a car will come from there⁴. Try once again to write about Haribhai⁵. Do not give up the effort in despair.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1792

¹ Kusum Desai used to act as Secretary of the Ashram in the absence of male inmates.
² A trainee of the Charkha Sangh
³ Dr. H. M. Desai of Ahmedabad
⁴ Ahmedabad
⁵ Haribhai Desai, the deceased husband of the addressee. The reference is to his biography that she was intending to write.
449. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI
March 13, 1930

CHI. MAHADEV,

I did get your letter. God will grant you everything. We may take it the Ashram has done well so far. But there is scope for much further awakening still. Let us not feel elated too soon. If I remain free, you should certainly take the plunge. I want an account of the good or the harm which the fast may have done Durga.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
I had intended to write a separate letter to her, but have dropped the idea.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11471

450. SPEECH AT BAREJA
March 13, 1930

This is our second halt after the march began. As at our first halt, here too I was given the required information about this village. I was pained to read it. It is strange that a place so near Ahmedabad has zeroes against the columns for consumption of khadi, the number of habitual khadi rearers and spinning-wheels at work. During my tours of North and South India, I used to follow a rule, namely, that the barber cutting my hair should be a khadi-wearer. But here you keep yourselves far away from such a thing as khadi. Khadi is the foundation of our freedom struggle. All like khadi, but people are nowadays deterred by the fear that those wearing khadi will have to go to jail and die. Bareja has not a single khadi-wearer, which is indeed a very painful fact. There is a khadi store here and you can certainly remove this blot. We do not disown our mother because she is fat or ugly to look at and adopt another woman, more beautiful, to fill her place. Foreign cloth will never bring us freedom. I request you to renounce luxuries and buy khadi from this heap before you.

At present Sardar is in jail, and I have come here to ask you to join in our common struggle for freedom. Think over the matter and get ready to join. The state of our villages is pitiable in various ways. With the help of these soldiers of freedom, you will be able to make your village clean. It does not take much time to do so. Diligence and care are all that is necessary. The people of this place number twenty-five hundred. If you so resolve, you can make the village beautiful and have as many amenities as you choose. By doing so, you will help agriculture here and also add to your strength. The education imparted in present-day schools is, according to me, no education at all. The village has a large number of Christians and Muslims also. If you all come together, you will be able to achieve much for the village. For winning complete freedom, all these communities will have to unite.

As for the Bhangis, you believe that they are the scum of the earth. We do nothing at all for their betterment. We only lower ourselves by believing them to be of low birth.

Now, having said this, let me turn to other things. We have come forward to win our freedom from this tyrannical and oppressive Government. If we cannot put our own house in order in an organized manner, how shall we run the country’s Government? I ask you, therefore, to learn order and organization. Think of cow-protection also. In this band marching with me, there are experts on animal husbandry who will be able to help you. Introducing improvements by slow degrees, you can solve the question of cow-protection. Do think about these things. This struggle against the Government on which we have embarked is not going to reach its conclusion with five, or twenty-five, or even millions of men getting killed. We have to look after these other things also simultaneously.

[From Gujarati]
Prajabandhu, 16-3-1930

451. SPEECH AT NAVAGAM

March 13, 1930

As I enter the Kheda District, memories—some sweet, some bitter—fill the mind. It was while working in the Kheda District that I became one with the lives of people. I have seen nearly all the villages here. I covered many of them on foot. I have come to Navagam in the middle of a battle. This is our third halt: Aslali was the first, Bareja was the second and Navagam now is the third. Vallabhbhai had great expectations of the Kheda District. Having been arrested in this district, he has won glory for himself.

The Government found some pretext or other to arrest Vallabhbhai. It knew well that his, and not the Government’s, writ would prevail in Kheda if he was free. Pressure was brought to bear on the Magistrate somehow to serve a notice on Sardar, and he was arrested. What could a poor Magistrate do where the entire atmosphere is vitiated? We do not yet have the necessary spirit of self-sacrifice and the necessary self-confidence for anyone of us to tell the Government that he could not issue such a notice. What does it matter that a person receives salary from the Government? And, moreover, who pays that salary? Who am I to explain to the Magistrate that it is God who does that? How can I do it? To the Magistrate the Government is God, the protector, and everything.

The Patidars and the Dharalas, the two principal communities of the Kheda District, are both courageous. What will they do to fight this Government? Before I ask the question, I have to congratulate you all.
All the Matadars here have shown great courage in my presence and stated that they would not accept the Headman’s office, with the result that the latter has now resigned. I congratulate you on your resignations. If you have been offering resignations under pressure from anyone, I must ask you to withdraw them. Not only will that cause me no pain, but I will protect you against those who might try to force you to resign. This fight is based on truth. I want no victory with unworthy help.

It is after many days and nights of heart-searching that I have decided to stake my life on this last struggle, and to take my co-workers with me so that they, too, may sacrifice their lives. I depend on truth alone for winning this war. I shall be happy if I have your support in that. It will make no difference to me even if you do not resign.

When we win swaraj, even a scavenger will be free to take Vallabhbhai to task. When he was in jail Vallabhbhai used to ask whom he could fight when all officials from the peon upward were Indians. You should remember this. With the present Government might is right. But, against me, its guns and gunpowder are no more than dust or pebbles. Your present duty is to show the Government your strength through your work.

Be true to your word, Headman and Matadars, if you are bent on winning complete independence. You should remember and act upon Tulsidas’s words:

“The way of the Raghus it has been ever,
Life may be lost but a pledge never.”

Before all these present here I remind you of this. Listen to me and, if you so feel, admit truthfully that you do not have the strength to resign. The people of the Kheda District have bathed me in their love. No resident of this district should first give me a promise and then stab me in the back.

I shall regard you as brave men if you truthfully withdraw your resignations, and also if you truthfully adhere to them.¹

In the present struggle, which we have started to establish Ramarajya, both the poor and the rich are ready to give me monetary help, but I look up to the people for strengthening me. You will have redoubled my strength when, following me, you come forward to manufacture salt. By leading you along my path, I wish to bring glory to one and all among us. I may ask for your resignations or for money from you; but for the present I am asking for soldiers for this fight. Civil disobedience of the salt law is within the power of all—men and women, young and old.

I have gone through the figures regarding Navagam. In the population numbering a thousand, only one person is a habitual khadi-wearer and there is just one spinning-wheel to swear by. I ask you now to take a vow to produce and wear khadi. That way you will save Rs. 5,000 a year. By working at the spinning-wheel, women too will be adding to their power greatly.

Remember that in the resignations you have handed in I see God’s hand. The Kheda District has made an auspicious beginning. I have embarked on this last struggle of my life because God wishes to make me His instrument for this work. The life of this skeleton which is addressing you is God, and it does whatever good He desires. Let us now part with Ramanama on our lips.

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 16-3-1930

452. TALK TO PRESS REPRESENTATIVES²

Navagam,
March 14, 1930

I wish to offer some consolation to the Press representatives present here. I am responsible for the hardships caused by the application of Ashram rules. I have been asking for alms from the people, though I have no right to demand any. Hence, I cannot permit everybody to accompany me and live on the alms. We do need the help of newspapers. But this struggle is a unique one. If they have respect for the movement they may help it. No one need write anything for my sake. They may criticize me. From the village people I receive food in measured quantities and no one can accept more ¹ At this stage the Headman and the Matadars explained how they had resigned of their own free will, and the Headman presented Rs. 125 to Gandhiji on behalf of the village.

² Given at the end of the morning prayer meeting than what the rule permits. I request the Ashram inmates and the Press representatives that if they need any item in excess of what is permitted by the rule, they may get it only with my permission. In the last analysis, even the Press representatives have come for public service, have they not?

Hundreds of thousands will follow this batch of seventy-eight in whatever they do. People will criticize us if we do not cultivate self-sacrifice. If the people feel the slightest distrust of us, they will condemn the whole movement. We have, therefore, to treat them with love, not force. The mountain is an assemblage of earth particles sticking together. Similarly, all great accomplishments in the world are the result of homogeneous effort. When the effort is heterogeneous the result is quite different. Because the river Ganga has the power to sanctify all waters, it absorbs all impurity within itself.

If the satyagrahis follow truth in carrying on this struggle, they will show, not merely to India but to the whole world, that ours is a holy war. My speech yesterday was also in the nature of a prayer to all.

People fall ill through their own negligence. The rule for one who falls ill is that he should be left where he falls ill. I am indeed sorry that I cannot try to meet you all. I ask you, therefore, to come and see me when you need to consult me. The burden of work on me is too heavy to leave me time to see you.

It is my advice to you that no person should come here without special permission. Only after obtaining previous permission may anyone accompany this batch. Those who desire to come here and see what is happening should rather stay where they are and do their duty there. They should persuade every one to offer civil disobedience and offer it themselves.

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 16-3-1930

453. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT
March 14, 1930

CHI. VASUMATI,

I want a full account of the arrangements made for you. Send me your daily programme of work and also tell me about your health. Let me know whether or not you can clearly understand the translation of the Gita. Read it with great care. Do you enjoy complete peace of mind?

Blessings from
BAPU
[PS.]
My blessings to Kamla. What work does she do?
From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9281

454. LETTER TO SUSHILA GANDHI
March 14, 1930

CHI. SUSHILA,

I don’t know how to compliment you as well as you deserve. I had observed your strength of character even when I first saw you before you were married. But the strength which you have actually revealed has surpassed my expectation. If you cannot keep your peace of mind there, you may go to Akola without any hesitation. But I should certainly like you to remain there if you can be tranquil and if you and Sita can keep good health, for the Ashram is at present the best school for women. You will not get at any other time the experience you are getting there just now. I am sure you will not worry about Manilal. God has given him a strong physique. And he is all simplicity of heart. Nothing makes him unhappy. There is no limit to his courage. How can such a person suffer? He has been looking after me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4765

455. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI
March 14, 1930

CHI. KUSUM,

If Krishnakumari’s eyes are sore, get them examined by Haribhai. Tell Chandrakanta that I expect much from her. Get Shantu’s teeth examined by Haribhai and ask him to remove the loose ones. Send me a report about Dhiru and about anybody else who may be ill.

Send me your daily programme of work. Do you have a separate room to yourself? How do you feel there?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1793
March 14, 1930

You have all given us an excellent reception. You have seen to it that there is nothing wanting. You have raised this pandal and erected a cottage for me, which I very much like. I am glad that you have arranged things as I had wanted them. But a doubt lingers in my mind about this village, and as a satyagrahi I should tell you the thought that occurs to me. Of course it is not practical wisdom in a man to speak out all that he thinks. Still, for my part, I regard myself a very practical man. One should have nothing to do with the practical wisdom which goes against the world’s welfare. My co-workers or I have lost nothing through this attitude of mine. I wonder if you thought that, since there were five Antyajas, and possibly some Muslims, accompanying me on this campaign, it would be best to lodge me and my party outside the village. I hope you have not been clever and thus quietly avoided trouble. I first asked people to inquire about this, but subsequently decided to put the question to the meeting here. I am determined to reach Jalalpur, having given you all that I have. Those accompanying me are only students. A true student always hungers for knowledge, which he seeks to garner with the world as his school and with nature and mankind as his books. Many saints were illiterate, but they had trained themselves in the art of thinking and so they were students. I even sent some students to inspect the Antyaja locality here.

This fight is based on truth and non-violence and, therefore, we are true satyagrahis. And I ask you to believe me when I prophesy that a day will come when the British will apologize to us. Shri Vallabhbhai turned nights into days and rendered help to the British. He served the people, and the Government is repaying him now by arresting and removing him away from us. I tell you, though the Government has been able to imprison for the present a man like Vallabhbhai it will have to apologize to him. Of course he does not care that he has been arrested. To me, he was my hands and feet. Had he not worked and prepared the ground here in this district, I could not have mustered the courage to speak these few words before you.

What is going to be your reply to the salt law? All of you have to reform yourselves and offer a fight to the Government. We can prepare ourselves to win complete freedom by serving our Antyaja brethren. I should be happy if my doubt about your village is

---

1 The meeting was held at 3 p.m. ill-founded. May you serve one and all without exception. Abolition of the salt tax or remission of some other taxes will not mean swaraj for us. Winning swaraj is not going to be so easy as that. That is only a way to it and by following it we shall reach the goal of freedom.

It is indeed a good thing that the Headmen of Navagam, Vavdi, Agam, Mahelaj and other villages have tendered their resignations.
Why should they stick to Headmanship for the mere five rupees a month that the Government pays them? If the Collector summons a Headman, let him say, “Give us back our Sardar. Grant us a remission in land revenue.” To give up Government service is to exorcise an evil spirit haunting the home. In resigning his job, your Headman has done a meritorious deed. When we have a people’s Government, we shall see what to do. Satyagraha means disobedience to every law of the Government. Disobedience of the salt law is one item of such satyagraha. Such disobedience is our duty; it is our right. In the fight for that right, I need your help, not in the form of money but of volunteers to break the law.

The next item on my programme is khadi. How shameful that your village shows a zero against the columns for the number of spinning-wheels and khadi-wearers! If you have not been wearing khadi hitherto, wake up and begin now. I appeal to you to help our poor country by using khadi. It is my wish that there should be none among you who does not wear khadi, I earnestly ask you to be dressed in khadi clothes. For women, spinning used to be a yajna. There were five such yajnas. The first was the kitchen fire. Performing that yajna, my mother set apart a go-grasa, a morsel for the cow. The second was the quern, the third was the broom, the fourth the spinning-wheel and the fifth was fetching water. Now all these yajnas are on the wane, because selfishness has crept in among us. If you wish to follow the path of dharma, start again the spinning-wheel sacrifice and follow the good sense that God has bestowed on you.

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 16-3-1930

457. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

ON THE DANDI MARCH,
March 15, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS

Credit to the Navajivan account the money which you are receiving.

I am writing to Mathew. That is how he always works. Unless he is able to fix his attention, he is of no service even in the G.S.S.¹

Ask Prabhudas to write to me. So far I have experienced no difficulty in walking.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 8090. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

458. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

[March 15, 1930]²

CHI. BRIJKRISHNA,

It pained me to have to use harsh words with you, but it had to be done, as I wished to remove your pusillanimity. Unless you are determined and firm in your purpose, your energies cannot be fully utilized. Tenderness of heart is essential, but for true tenderness determination is even more essential. Thereby family ties are purified, and delusion is overcome. You must also give up your desire to meet me. Whatever I could give you I have already given. A time will come when you too will have to go to jail like so many of us, but for the present your work is your prison. Therefore do not leave Vijapur unless it is on important business. Improve your health, and continue to render whatever help you can.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2377

459. SPEECH AT DABHAN

[March 15, 1930]

I have come to know that a Headman, a Matadar and a watchman of Kanakapura have submitted their resignations. I hope that you have handed in those resignations willingly and that none of you will yield if any of the officials intimidates you and that you would not, seeking pardon, withdraw them. When we have once taken a vow, we shall not withdraw them even if we die.³

Your Headman has submitted his resignation but his old uncle has registered himself as a volunteer. It is not that only young people can join this struggle. This is a religious as also a non-violent struggle

¹ Gandhi Seva Sangh
² The date is from At the Feet of Bapu, p. 58.
³ This and the following three paragraphs have been taken from Prajabandhu, 16-3-1930.
and even children can take part in it. The names of some women have also been received by me. I have received names even of children below the age of fifteen and I do not hesitate to mention them.

I have received names of many more old men also and they say that it is better to die in jail than outside it, but only out of thoughtfulness I do not take them along with me. On reaching Dandi, we shall call them first and send them first to jail.

I hope that the Headmen and Matadars from the neighbouring villages also will send in their resignations.

Although we claim to practise cow-protection, we should now call it buffalo-protection or service to buffaloes. In this town of Dabhan, there are three hundred buffaloes as against three cows. This suggests that we are ignorant of animal husbandry. In this district, it is difficult to obtain cow’s milk or ghee for sick persons or for those who have taken the vow to serve only the cow. Goseva does not mean saving the cows from Muslims or Englishmen—this amounts to cow-slaughter. That is a misinterpretation of the term goseva.¹

The number of cows sent to Australia to be slaughtered is a hundred times the number that are slaughtered in India by the Muslims. If you desire to see to it that cows are not exported abroad, you should all train yourselves in animal husbandry and act in accordance with that science.

I do not recall the taste of buffalo’s milk. Hence I cannot distinguish it from cow’s milk. However, doctors have testified that buffalo’s milk and ghee are not as nourishing as those of the cow and Europeans do not even touch the milk of the buffalo.

Ours is a holy war. It is a non-violent struggle. Even women and children can take part in it. The soldiers of satyagraha will never do what the ordinary soldiers do. Your village consumes 800 maunds of salt a year, and thus pays money to the Government without reason. The Government appropriates to itself all the taxes you pay without making any return to you. We wish to throw off that burden and hence we demand complete freedom. If you feel strong enough, give up Government jobs, enlist yourselves as soldiers in this salt satyagraha, burn your foreign cloth and wear khadi. Give up liquor. There are many things within your power through which you can secure the keys which will open the gates of freedom.²

[From Gujarati]

_Prajabandhu_, 16-3-1930, _Navajivan_, 30-3-1930, and _Gujarati_; 23-3-1930

¹ This and the following two paragraphs have been extracted from “Swaraj Gita”, _Navajivan_, 30-3-1930.
² This has been taken from _Gujarati_, 23-3-1930.
I have visited Nadiad often and made many speeches here, but never before did I see such a huge mass of men. Bound by the chains of slavery, we are being crushed at present, and we want to shake them off. I am sure you have come here today not for my sake or for the sake of my troop of eighty, but because you hunger for complete freedom. Since I left Ahmedabad, on my way here large numbers have showered their blessings on me and my mission. The showers have swelled into a flood, as it were. You, too, are witnessing the same thing.

Vallabhbhai’s services to Kheda District have been many and various. At the time of the floods he saved thousands of men. That Vallabhbhai is now behind the prison bars. I too have done some work in this district. You have, therefore, a threefold duty to discharge. The imprisonment of Vallabhbhai is your imprisonment. Arresting him in Kheda is arresting Kheda itself. Of course by imprisoning Vallabhbhai the Government has honoured him, but you it has insulted. What is to be your reply to this insult? Your reply can only be winning complete freedom. How could you do that? Only by following my path. That is as clear as the rule of three.

I wish all Government servants to give up their jobs. What is Government service worth after all? A Government job gives you the power to tyrannize over others. And what do you earn in the job? By dint of independent labour a man can earn thousands if he chooses to do so. The local Headman has resigned his post. But is that enough? Nadiad produced Govardhanram and Manilal Nabhubhai. It has been a city of men of letters. Are there any heirs of these learned men now? What is the duty of the students in this city of learned men? And the duty of their sisters and mothers? It is up to you all to give a reply to these questions. You all have to enlist yourselves as volunteers. As soon as I get behind the bars or as soon as the All-India Congress Committee gives a call, you should come forward to offer yourselves for being jailed. Then alone shall I believe that Nadiad has made its contribution to our struggle.

Nadiad is thirty-one thousand strong. You spend three hundred and ten thousand rupees on cloth year after year. Instead of letting this wealth flow out of the city, what a gain it will be if you keep it in your homes! You will then have obeyed the most beautiful law of nature. That is the simple calculation I ask the heirs of Govardhanram and Manilal to make. If they do not do so, they would be bringing disgrace on the good name of Nadiad. Will not Nadiad, the pride of Gujarat, do even this much? May God grant you the strength to do it.

[From Gujarati]
Gujarati, 23-3-1930

461. LETTER TO DURGA GIRI
[On or after March 15, 1930]

CHI. DURGA,

I have your beautiful letter written in a beautiful hand. What you write about Mahavir is correct. He who regards all as equals wins. Kaka’s Shankar too has joined the caravan. Immerse yourself fully in works of service. Do not be lazy about anything. We are all well here. Tell Maitri not to be indolent in the least. Does she dip her hands in potassium permanganate solution? She must observe restraint in her diet.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Hindi]
Bapuki Virat Vatsalta, pp. 30-1

462. WE ARE ALL ONE

God is present in all of us. For my part, every moment I experience the truth that though many we are all one. He does not reveal Himself in the same form in all of us, or rather the hearts of all of us not being alike we do not see Him in the same form— just as in mirrors of different colours and shapes a thing is reflected in different colours and shapes.

From this it follows that the sin of one is the sin of all. And hence it is not up to us to destroy the evil-doer. We should, on the contrary, suffer for him. From this thought was born the idea of satyagraha and of civil disobedience of law. Criminal, violent or uncivil disobedience is sin and ought to be abjured. Non-violent disobedience can be a holy duty. It is with this thought that Deenabandhu Andrews has often said that he is doing atonement on behalf of the English, that Mirabai has come to live in the Ashram and that Reginald Reynolds is staying in the Ashram.

Shri Khadgabahadur Giri is known to all. He killed a man for committing adultery and then surrendered himself to the police. This friend had lived in the Ashram for some time. In his statement to the

---

1 The text of the original, which is in Gujarati, is not available.
2 Shankar, D. B. Kalelkar’s son mentioned in the letter, joined the Dandi March on this day.
court he described himself as a believer in the principles of the Ashram. Though I could not understand his meaning, I was not prepared to examine his action. This led many to write strong letters to me, but I did not reply to them and I remained silent, as I did not think it my duty to pronounce an opinion. Now this friend has come to join in the present pilgrimage. Missing his train, he arrived a day late. Now, since he cannot join unless he has my permission, he has had to stay back at the Ashram. I believe that the struggle which is in the offing should be started only by those who observe the principles of the Ashram. I have, therefore, written to him: “You may come if you accept the principles of the Ashram as binding on you.”

This account, however, is irrelevant to the present article. It has been given merely to introduce Shri Khadgabahadur. The reason for publishing his name is that he, too, has come to do atonement for the sins of others. He has given his reason for insisting on being included in the very first batch as under:

The Mahavir mentioned in this letter is the son of the late Dalbahadur Giri. Following the line of thinking in the extract above, Dalbahadur Giri himself had joined the Non-co-operation movement in 1921 and also suffered imprisonment. When he came out of jail he had been suffering from severe dysentery, which proved fatal. He had advised his wife to go and live in the Ashram. The widow communicated her resolve to come and stay in the Ashram. I had known Dalbahadur Giri. I could not disregard his death-bed wish, and the wish of his wife. I thought it my duty to respect it. This widowed mother encouraged her son to join the present struggle. The boy is being brought up at the Ashram for the last nine years. As Mahavir’s guardian, I also permitted him to join. Such boys as had completed fifteen years of age had the permission to join if they so wished. Mahavir has joined the struggle of his free will and with the blessings of his elders. My experience of him has been a sweet one.

These facts will probably enable the reader to see the struggle in a better light. He will also have a better understanding of what satyagraha means. The whole conception rests on unbounded faith in the unfailing power of non-violence. The satyagrahi always acts in the spirit of atonement. He believes that he shares in the sins of the ruler or the ruled. He regards himself also as a sinner. One is certainly a sinner as long as the possibility of sin remains in one. One is guilty of passion if one has potentiality for passion.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 16-3-1930

1 The letter is not translated here.
463. THE DEPARTURE

Thousands of Ahmedabad citizens, both men and women, kept vigil on the night of the 11th. Thousands flocked to the Ashram. One heard rumours all through the night. “Here is some news,” someone with a grave face twice whispered into my ear! “Reliable news has been received that a special train is arriving this evening and will take you away to be borne to Mandalay.” As it is the same to me whether I am in jail or outside, the news had no effect on me and I went to bed in perfect peace. But the sight of the mill-workers and mill-owners around me could not but make me happy. Though eagerly expected, “they” did not come, and at the appointed hour and minute God gave us the send-off. We walked on between rows of people who had come to see us set out, the rows extending to as far as the Chandola lake. I can never forget the scene. For me, this was the form in which God’s blessing descended on me. In the face of such a spectacle, how could I believe that there was no prospect of success in this struggle? Both the rich and the poor were present in proportion to their numbers in the population. If the spectacle has any meaning, it is this, at any rate, that all people want freedom and they want it through peaceful means. In the eyes of men lining the road from the Ashram to Ellis Bridge I saw not poison but nectar. I saw in their eyes no anger against British rule or rulers, but I saw there the joy born of the confidence that complete freedom was now at hand.

The authorities on their part had acted wisely. Not one policeman was to be seen. What business could the police have where people had come together for a festive occasion? What would the police do there?

May the self-confidence displayed by the citizens of Ahmedabad last for ever! Let that confidence spread all over the country, and complete freedom will be ours without much effort. If such freedom is our birthright, how much time should we need to win that right? To breathe is my birthright, and breathing therefore proceeds with ease. It is the long history of slavery that has given us the illusion that slavery is our natural state. The truth is that it is not the natural state of any man whatever. If three hundred million men and women are determined to win freedom, you may take it that it is theirs. The scene on the 12th was a sign of that determination.

But I am not a man to be easily taken in by appearances. All over the world, the common mass of men move like sheep following one another. It was so on the 12th too. Many had come out just because others had done so. For many others, this coming out for the festival was the beginning and the end of their self-sacrifice. If that was the truth, their coming out was no sign of the approach of freedom. If a hundred thousand men oppress three hundred million and the latter come together to struggle to get rid of the oppression, they will win their freedom from slavery with very little effort and sacrifice. But some sacrifice there has to be. Winning freedom is not child’s play. It requires the labour of thoughtful men, so that if the three hundred million would not become khadi-wearers, at any rate three million must come forward to offer civil disobedience. If many join in this sacrifice for swaraj they would share the labour. If the number of such people is small, they will have to bear a greater burden, for the labour needed for winning freedom will always be the same. The only question therefore, is who should bear this burden and how. The immediate burden of bringing success to the present march falls on the Gujaratis. Bringing success to the march does not mean only providing regular meals and rendering other services to the party. The mahajans at the various places are doing that with love. To bring success to the march means men and women coming out in large numbers to join the struggle. People should get ready for civil disobedience of the salt law as soon as the marching party reaches Jalalpur. Every village should get ready its own quota of civil law-breakers so that at the proper time they plunge into the fight.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 16-3-1930

464. "BHAGAVAD GITA" OR "ANASAKTIYOGA"

It is more than forty years since I have been reading, pondering and following the Gita. Friends expressed a desire that I should put before the Gujaratis my understanding of that work. I embarked on translating it. From the point of view of scholarship my qualifications for attempting the translation would seem to be nil, but as one following its teaching I may be considered to be fairly well qualified. The translation has now been published. Many editions of the Gita carry the Sanskrit text also. It has been intentionally left out in this one. I would like it if all knew Sanskrit, but all will never learn Sanskrit. Moreover, many cheap editions with Sanskrit are available. I, therefore, decided to leave out the Sanskrit text and reduce both the size and the price. This edition has 19 pages of introduction and 187 pages of translation so that it can be easily carried in one’s pocket. Ten thousand copies have been printed. My aspiration is that every Gujarati will read this Gita, ponder it and practise its teaching. An easy way to ponder it is to try and understand the meaning without referring to the Sanskrit text and then to conduct oneself accordingly. For example, those who interpret the teaching of the Gita to mean that one ought to kill the wicked without making a distinction between one’s kinsmen and others, should kill their parents or other relatives if they are wicked. In practice, they will not be able to do so. Naturally, then, it would occur to the reader that where destruction is prescribed the work contemplates some other form of destruction. Almost every page of the Gita advises us not to make a distinction between our own people and others. How is this to be done? Reflection will lead us to the conclusion that we should perform all our acts in a spirit of non-attachment. In the very first chapter we find Arjuna facing the troublesome question of one’s own people and others. In every chapter the Gita brings out how such a distinction is false and harmful. I have called the Gita Anasaktiyoga. The interested reader will be able to learn from the work what that is, how non-attachment is to be cultivated, what its characteristics are, etc. Trying as I do to live according to the teaching of the Gita, I could not avoid the present struggle. As a friend says in his telegram to me, this is a holy war for me. It is a happy augury for me that this book is being published just as the holy war is entering its last phase in the form of the present struggle.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 16-3-1930

465. LETTER TO ABBAS TYABJI

March 16, 1930

DEAR BHRR,"

What a joy to have received your letter! Of course, you must take rest. Sardar has filled me with many anecdotes about you and now Mahadev has come in to give us the latest. I am glad this time you have not brought any illness with you. Can’t afford to think of you as an old man in spite of the whiteness of your ample beard. Mahadev tells me you can dance. I feel like asking for a short leave to come and see you dance. But that cannot be. I am, therefore, imagining all sorts of movements. You should be put with the Poet!!!

Love from us all.

Yours ever,

M. K. G.

From a photostat: S.N. 9569

1 This was a form of greeting used between Gandhiji and the addressee.
466. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

March 16, 1930

CHI. VASUMATI,

I have your letter. Restrain your desire to come and see me. If, despite your best efforts, you cannot do that there is no harm in coming. Keep in mind the condition that you should take proper care of your health while working. You will not get such an opportunity again. You should, therefore, preserve your health.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9282

467. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

ON THE DANDI MARCH,
Sunday [March 16, 1930]¹

CHI. NARANDAS,

I get your letters. I send with this a letter on the Bank. If it does not serve your purpose, please let me know.

I have asked those three gentlemen from Madras and the two from Bengal to return. They do feel sorry. If you see them repenting when they arrive there and if they are keen on joining the Ashram again, take them back. There is no harm in doing so if they are real workers. But I do not wish to interfere with your management, and that is why I refused to give them any letter.

How is Purushottam keeping? Cannot Keshu lead the recitation of the Gita? He can sing the bhajans too. If he does not agree, in any case Premabehn is there.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Enclosed with this is a letter written by Jamna, which seems to have been sent to me by mistake.

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8092. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

¹ From the enquiries about Purushottam’s health and arrangements regarding recitation of the Gita and bhajans, this appears to have been written on the first of the three Sundays during the Dandi March.
468. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

Sunday [March 16, 1930]

CHI. CHANDRAKANTA,

I hope your work is proceeding well. I have pinned great hopes on you. May God grant you the strength to fulfil these hopes. Sumangal\(^2\) had a slight touch of fever. There is no cause for anxiety. He is being nursed well.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

[PS.]

Keep writing to your parents.

From a photos tat of the Gujarati Chandrakanta Papers. Courte sy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

469. LETTER TO VIDYA HINGORANI

March 16, 1930

CHI. VIDYA,

I have heard much about you from Anand, and I was glad to hear about your devotion to God. You should not be anxious on account of Anand. God will protect him.

_Blessings from_

MOHANDAS

From a microfilm of the Hindi. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

470. SPEECH AT BORIAVI

March 16, 1930

In this peaceful struggle there is no room for coercion of any kind. We will coerce no Englishmen nor any of our countrymen. I do not want anyone to resign under compulsion. Resignations tendered under duress or in awe of somebody ought to be withdrawn. They have jailed your Sardar, that is, they have taken from you swaraj itself. We must get him released from prison and, you will have proved your strength if you can see to it that he is out in one month instead of after three. After Vallabhbhai is released, take care that you do not

\(^1\) From the contents the letter appears to have been written on the first of the three Sundays during the Dandi March; _vide_ also “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 17-3-1930.

\(^2\) Sumangal Prakash, addressee’s cousin apologize and withdraw your resignations. You can withdraw the resignations and become Headmen again only when we get control of the Government.

If you drink liquor, tea, etc., and still think that Gandhi who has gone to battle with his band will bring you swaraj, you are making a mistake. Gandhi will leave for ever and his troop will be lost in the sea. Swaraj can be won only if you all take up constructive work. Those of you who do not enlist as soldiers of swaraj should at least wear khadi.

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 23-3-1930

471. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

March 17, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

I have your letter and the flowers that were struggling to find me out. My fatigue so far seems to be health-giving. For it enables me to take milk twice instead of once and plenty of fruit. Today the fatigue of the past five days made me sleep five times during the day. I hope to find myself thoroughly fit to undertake the ensuing week’s march or whatever else may be in store for me. So you will not worry about me.

I see you are now finding yourself there. The struggle has been a veritable godsend for all of us. It is, as it should be, a process of cleansing. Let us never be slack.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5427. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9661

472. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

ANAND,

March 17, 1930

BHAII SATIS BABU,

I saw in the newspapers that Bengal has appointed you dictator. Is it true? If true, have you been appointed by both the factions or only one? Whatever it may be, I know that your love will put everything right. Only yesterday Panditji¹ gave us a song in the prayer meeting which can be translated thus: “The way of love is like the purifying flame.” When true love is born it destroys all impurities.

¹ Narayan Moreshwar Khare

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
Your job is the hardest of all, I realize. Your penance of eight years will give you wisdom and strength. May God give you and Hemprabha Devi a long life.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1616

473. LETTER TO SUSHILA GANDHI

ANAND,
Silence Day [March 17, 1930]¹

O Parsi Lady,

There is no limit to your cunning. You seem to be preparing an alibi in advance. If parents lift you up, haven’t they the right to throw you down? And why do you believe that I have lifted you up in order that I may afterwards throw you down? Why did I have Chapter XII [of the Gita] read out on the day of your marriage? If you believe that you do not possess the virtues I attribute to you, you should pray to God to grant them to you. But your uncle calls you Dhairyamata². What do you say to that?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4766

474. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

ANAND,
Silence Day [March 17, 1930]³

Chhi. Kusum,

I have your letter. What you say about a house is quite correct. But your duty was to move into the Hostel, and it was good that you did so. We should love what is good for us. Work as much as you like, but preserve your health. And be sure that you write to me from time to time.

The secretaryship still clings to you. When you get time, clear up everything. Don’t worry about me. I know that I have made ¹ From the contents the letter seems to have been written in 1930. In that year, Gandhiji was at Anand on this date.

² Literally, “Mother of Courage”; the addressee’s daughter was named Dhairyabala.
³ The reference to the addressee moving into the Ashram Hostel suggests that this was written in 1930.
you unhappy, but I don’t feel sorry that I have done so. Who else could have that privilege?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1794

475. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI
Silence Day, March 17, 1930

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I have had no letter from you for some time. It was expected that I would be arrested on the 12th itself. Now six days have passed, and since it is Monday today I have sat down to write this letter. Though I have been walking a great deal, I have kept fine till now. You must be reading the accounts in the papers. Hence I do not write anything about it here, nor have I the time to do so. If you like, you may show the accompanying letter to Jayaprakash, and if he permits, inform Father and go to the Ashram.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
Mahadev came a moment ago and read out your letter. I felt happy. If you can come, please do.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3361

476. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI
Silence Day [March 17, 1930]¹

CHI. NARANDAS,

I have your letter.

The fact that people still come presents a very difficult problem. Keep those who work. Those who do not work should immediately leave.

I certainly like your going to the common kitchen for your meals. But give your body the food which it requires and preserve its health. You seem to me to be a follower of the Gita and I believe, therefore, that the burden of your happiness and welfare will be borne by God.

Kevalram’s wife may certainly come. Illness dogs us here too.

¹ Sumangalprakash was left behind at Anand where Gandhiji was on March 17, 1930.
Three persons are ill. Sumangalprakash has a mild attack of measles. I will leave him here.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Has Purushottam left? If so, who conducts the prayers? I suppose you know how to do that? Do not forget that Keshu also is an expert. No burden should be put on Prabhudas.

From Gujarati: C.W. 8094. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

477. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

Silence Day [March 17, 1930]¹

CHI. GANGABEHN (SENIOR),

I have your letter. You will always be doing good, doing service. Lakshmibehn came and told me something. As you know, I could not spare time to ask her for more details. Take care of your health.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 8743. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

478. LETTER TO JAYAPRAKASH NARAYAN

ANAND,

March 17, 1930

CHI. JAYAPRAKASH,

Nowhere else have I observed such zeal for sacrifice as has been displayed by the Ashram women. At present the women are to a great extent managing the internal affairs of the Ashram. The chance of acquiring such experience will never be repeated. I would therefore advise you to send Prabhavati there. After my arrest the Ashram women too will court imprisonment. I think Prabhavati should join them. She is worthy in every respect. I hope your work is proceeding well.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 3362

¹ The source bears the date March 20, 1930 in the addressee’s hand which could be the date of receipt. The preceding Monday was March 17.
479. LETTER TO RANI VIDYAVATI

March 17, 1930

DEAR SISTER,

I have your letter. When the women at the Ashram are ready to go to jail, you ladies may also go. In the meantime you should do organizational work in villages.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

SHRI RANI VIDYAVATI
BARUA
Via HARDOI
U. P.

From the Hindi original: Rani Vidyavati Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

480. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

Silence Day [March 17, 1930]

CHI. CHANDRAKANTA,

It was discovered today that Sumangal has smallpox. You should not feel unhappy about Bhaiya’s illness. Nor should you worry. Anand is like a big city. All kinds of facilities are available there. The house is also good. I shall make all arrangements and look into everything. I shall be getting news every day. Do not cause worry to your parents by informing them. There are not many pustules noticeable. You do know that the satyagrahis are under a vow and cannot return on any account. Still, I have ascertained what Bhaiya wants. I have not been able to speak today. I shall do it tomorrow and then go.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: Chandrakanta Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

481. SPEECH AT ANAND

March 17, 1930

You have just heard Panditji sing that the path of love is like a flame. A satyagrahi’s path is the path of love, not one of enmity. It

---

1 From the reference to the illness of Sumangal Prakash, who was left behind at Anand where Gandhiji was present on March 17, 1930; vide also “Letter to Kapilrai Mehta”, 3-4-1930.
should be the ambition of a satyagrahi to win over even the most hard-hearted of enemies through love.

How can one demonstrate that there is nothing but love underlying civil disobedience? Pritam must have had a direct experience of this, as a result of which this bhajan poured forth from his heart.

Ill feeling perhaps could be compared to fire. How could that be said of love? Whereas ill feeling burns others, love burns oneself and purifies the other person. When love assumes this intense form, it may well appear to some as fire, but you may be sure that in the end it will make its cooling effect known. This band of satyagrahis which has set out is not staging a play; its effect will not be merely temporary; even through death, it will prove true to its pledge—if death becomes necessary. The Government will, in the end, have to admit that these persons practising satyagraha were devotees of truth and non-violence. Nothing will be better than if this band of satyagrahis perishes. If the satyagrahis meet with death, it will put a seal upon their claim. None of us can assert today whether we have the strength to die a satyagrahi’s death. To stab someone in the abdomen in a fit of rage or to die harbouring anger in heart, but keeping up an appearance of non-violence through shame is not to die a satyagrahi’s death.

Not only should there be no anger within one’s heart at the time of death, but on the contrary, one should feel and pray: ‘May good befall him who kills me!’ When anyone meets death in such a manner, I would call it a satyagrahi’s death and only in such a death would the dying person be considered to have been true to his pledge. Even with regard to myself I cannot give any assurance today. It is only others who can judge a person by this test after his death.

Here in Anand, you have Narsinhbhai’s hut. Anand is the educational centre of the Patidars. Kheda district is the home town of the Patidars of Vallabhbhai, of Motibhai Amin, and of the volunteers of the Charotar Education Society. Where can I give expression to the feelings within me if not before such an audience? I have come to you filled with great expectations.

I have asserted at many places that this time I have not set out to beg for funds. I know how to do that. This struggle is not one based on money. It is going to be carried on without it. In a trice this morning, the yarn merchants of Bombay presented me with Rs. 2,501. The Diamond Association has sent me Rs. 2,000. Moreover, if I make even a feeble appeal for funds, Gujarat and India would shower money upon me; I would be buried under its weight and would be unable even to reach Jalalpur.

I have come to ask for a big contribution. In your hands lies the honour of the Patidars of Charotar. You are like salt in the sea of Patidars. If the salt loses its savour, wherewith shall it be salted? Salt is more sapid than either sugar or jaggery. The latter may even cause jaundice, whereas a pinch of salt adds flavour to the meal. If Anand gives up its savour, if courage and such other virtues which have been attributed to the Patidars are not displayed in Anand at this juncture, where else can one see them?

You must have understood the reason for this introduction. Are the students of Anand and Kheda district going to sit down with their books, or will they follow the lead that has been given by the Vidyapith? We have already received a return with interest for the 2 lakhs of rupees spent by Dr. Mehta for the Vidyapith and contributions made by other well-wishers. Today the Vidyapith has wound up its book-learning and has proved its motto: That is learning which liberates.

All the students who have entered their sixteenth year have united in giving up their studies, and the teachers too have joined them. What more can be expected of a place where all the students as well as the teachers obtain cent per cent marks? Why do you also not adopt this path?

It is my hope that Gujarat will set an object-lesson to the rest of the country. One cannot say yet whether the fight will be a prolonged one or will end quickly. If, however, we have sacrificed our all in the movement, we should not worry about whether it will be long or short.

I have a right to entertain such hopes of the Patidars of Kheda district. They have been giving me hopes ever since my South Africa days. Kheda district has a population of seven lakhs which includes our Thakore brethren. If the Patidars show the way, the Garasias are bound to follow them. Has not Tulsidas said that base metal shines at the touch of the parasmani

You students must suspend your studies for as long as this struggle continues. At this time, I recall the words of the late Deshbandhu. He was unhappy about non-co-operation in schools. He used to say that we should certainly call out students when the time came for the final struggle but that we should leave them alone at the moment. I did not agree, and he joined in the boycott of schools. But these words were uttered in 1920. Not five, but ten years have elapsed since then. The final battle has to be waged. Hence there is no reason why students should now remain in schools.

1 Philosophers’ stone
Today I am not asking for preparing one battlefield only. Today, everyone from Kanyakumari to Kashmir and from Karachi to Dibrugarh will be able to practise non-co-operation either individually or collectively.

Until last December, I felt that the atmosphere was not favourable for civil disobedience and I said what I felt. I now claim that if ever the circumstances were opportune, they are today. This is the auspicious moment. If at this auspicious time we do not develop the strength for civil disobedience we shall never do so.

What student is he who will continue to study at such a time? Formerly, I asked the students to leave schools and to set up national schools. Today I ask them to leave schools and come out on the battlefield and become mendicants for the sake of the country. If a business man continues to carry on his business today, he will not enhance his prestige. If India wishes to launch satyagraha on a wide scale, this is the time when it should do so.

God will provide food and drink; countless people will provide it. If there is a flare-up in the entire country, and if the whole of India starts practising civil disobedience, how long will it take for 30 crores of people to free themselves from the grip—the domination—of a hundred thousand Britishers? School children will work this out by the rule of three.

The army consists of 70 thousand Britishers and others including Sikhs, Pathans, Gurkhas and Marathas. This army is sitting astride both our shoulders; although it may be stationed in Meerut and other cantonments, we see nothing else behind the laws that suppress us. The British make us dance to their tune on the strength of the backing of this army.

Please remember again I am not asking you to give up your studies for good, but only to give up book-learning while the struggle lasts. It is up to you whether it will be a protracted one or not. Youth leagues—that is you students—proclaim many big things. This year our Congress President is a young man who rides a horse. Hence a large part of the burden of this struggle is to be borne by you students.

May God give you inner strength. This is not a question of utilizing your intellect. If something has to be made convincing through the use of the intellect, it can be set out in the same manner as a proposition of geometry with a Q.E.D. at the end of it. However, here the intellect becomes helpless if there is no strength of heart. The intellect is a handmaid of the heart.

I am helpless, however, if you feel at heart that this man has only begun a stunt, that at the end of a month he will call the thing off saying he has committed a Himalayan blunder and withdraw quietly to the banks of Sabarmati. If, however, you do not believe this to be the case, rest assured that so far as you and I are concerned this is indeed the final struggle and the means to be adopted are peaceful, involving civil disobedience and so on.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 23-3-1930

482. TALK TO VOLUNTEERS

March 17, 1930

Ours is a sacred pilgrimage and we should be able to account for every minute of our time. Let those who cannot finish their quota or do not find time to spin or to write up their diaries see me. I shall discuss the thing with them. There must be something wrong about their time-table and I should help them to readjust it. We should be resourceful enough to do all our daily duties without the march coming in our way. I dare say we are not hardy enough for a strenuous trek, and I am, therefore, providing for a weekly day of rest. But I should listen to no proposal for the relaxation of the regular discipline of the Ashram. I repeat that ours is a sacred pilgrimage, and self-examination and self-purification are essentials which we cannot do without. The diary is a great help in this matter. This regular spinning, counting the yards spun each day, the daily diary—all these things were thought out by me in the Yeravda Jail, and for us whose ambition it is to lay the foundation of the edifice of swaraj, inasmuch as ours will be the first sacrificial offering, it should be as unsullied as possible. Those who follow us may dispense with the rigid discipline we are going through, but for us there is no escape. That rigorous self-discipline will generate in us a force which will enable us to retain what we have won. It is the natural result of active non-violence and should stand us in good stead after swaraj. It is hardly likely that when we are imprisoned, we shall all be kept together. Therefore if our life is well-regulated from now, we should not have the slightest difficulty in going regularly through our daily task.

Young India, 20-3-1930

---

1 Extracted from an account by Mahadev Desai
483. SPEECH TO SATYAGRAHIS

[After March 17, 1930]¹

It is possible that what you say is true. If you regard the rules burdensome, they are so. However, in this matter, the condition was laid down before we set out that only those who were prepared to shoulder this burden should join the march. Hence, these rules cannot now be relaxed. It is only through total adherence to these rules that any massive strength can be generated. The inner, spiritual rules have a greater effect than the external and material factors. Such is the idea behind this march. In this struggle we are attempting to eradicate the pervading violence by means of non-violence and in it we need humility as much as determination and courage. So long as we are arrogant, so long as we try to progress through our own efforts, we are bound to fail. So long as the elephant relied on his own strength, it did him no good. This demonstrates a fundamental principle.

Do we not find that those amongst us who appeared to be weak are hale and hearty today, while those who appeared to be strong are bed-ridden? When a man gives up his arrogance and becomes humble like dust, only then is the power of non-violence awakened in him and the divine strength becomes his. Hence we should all become fully devoted to our duties. We should pray to God that He alone do everything. In this manner, if the eighty persons who have set out become like ciphers, our task will certainly be accomplished.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 13-4-1930

484. A GREAT SEER

NAPA, March 18, 1930

Kavi Rajchandra was born in a place called Vavania in Kathiawar. I came in touch with him in 1891, the day of my return from London, at Dr. P. J. Mehta’s residence in Bombay. Kavi, as I used to call him, was nearly related to Dr. Mehta. He was introduced to me as a shatavadhani, i.e., one who can remember a hundred things at a time. Kavi was quite young at the time, not much older than I was then, i.e., 21 years. He had, however, given up all public exhibition of his powers and was given to purely religious pursuits. I was much struck by his simplicity and independence of judgment. He was free from all touch of blind orthodoxy. What struck me perhaps more was his combining business with religion in practice. A student of the philosophy of religion, he tried to practise what he believed. Himself a Jain, his toleration of the other creeds was remarkable. He had a chance of going to England for studies, but he would not go. He would not learn English. His schooling was quite elementary. But he was a genius. He knew Sanskrit, Magadhi and, I believe, Pali. He was a voracious reader of religious literature and had acquired through Gujarati sources a knowledge, enough for his purpose, of Islam, Christianity and Zoroastrianism. Such was the man who captivated my heart in religious matters as no other man has till now. I have said elsewhere that in moulding my inner life Tolstoy and Ruskin vied with Kavi. But Kavi’s influence was undoubtedly deeper if only because I had come in closest personal touch with him. His judgment appealed to my moral sense in the vast majority of cases. The bedrock of his faith was unquestionably ahimsa. His ahimsa was not of the crude type we witness today among its so-called votaries who confine their attention merely to the saving of aged cattle and insect life. His ahimsa, if it included the tiniest insect, also covered the whole of humanity.

¹ This has been extracted from “Dharma Yatra”.
² This speech was delivered after one of the satyagrahis had had an attack of smallpox and had to be left behind at Anand, where Gandhiji was on March 16 and 17.

Yet I never could regard Kavi as a perfect man. But of all the men I knew he appeared to me to be nearer perfection than the rest. Alas! he died all too young (thirty-three years) when he felt that he was surely going to see truth face to face. He has had many worshippers but not as many followers. His writings, largely consisting or soulful letters to inquirers, have been collected and published. An attempt is being made to have them translated in Hindi. I know that they would bear an English translation. They are largely based on inward experience.

Modern Review, June 1930

485. LETTER TO RAMANAND CHATTERJEE

BORSAD,

March 18, 1930

DEAR RAMANAND BABU,

Under great stress I was able today to scribble the enclosed1. You may do what you like with it. I hope you are giving

1 Vide the preceding item.
the movement your unreserved support and blessing.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From the original: C.W. 9287. Courtesy: Sita Devi

486. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

March 18, 1930

CHRI. CHANDRAKANTA,

I have your letter. Brother has been well today, I get news of him twice in the day. If Gangabehn\(^1\) and Narandasbhai\(^2\) permit do go to look up brother for a day. Narandasbhai has written that you are doing good work in the office.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: Chandrakanta Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

487. SPEECH AT BORSAD

March 18, 1930

At one time I was wholly loyal to the Empire and taught others to be loyal. I sang "God Save the King" with zest and taught my friends and relations to do so. Finally, however, the scales fell from my eyes, and the spell broke. I realized that the Empire did not deserve loyalty. I felt that it deserved sedition. Hence I have made sedition my dharma. I try to explain it to others that while sedition is our dharma, to be loyal is a sin. To be loyal to this Government, that is to say to wish it well, is as good as wishing ill of the crores of people of India. We get nothing in return for the crores of rupees that are squeezed out of the country; if we get anything, it is the rags from Lancashire. To approve the policy of this Government is to commit treason against the poor. You should free yourselves from this latter offence. I believe I have done so. Hence I have become ready to wage a peaceful war against this Government. I am commencing it by violating the salt law. It is for this purpose that I am undertaking this march. At every place, thousands of men and women have conferred their blessings upon it. These blessings are not showered on me but on the struggle.

Our patience has been severely tried. We must free ourselves

---

\(^1\) Gangabehn Vaidya
\(^2\) Narandas Gandhi
from the yoke of this Government and we are prepared to undergo any hardships that we may have to suffer in order to secure swaraj. It is our duty as well as our right to secure swaraj.

I regard this as a religious movement since sedition is our dharma. Every moment I desire the end of the policies of this Government. I have no desire to touch even a single hair of our rulers. But we certainly shall not bow down to them. Kindly, therefore, become conscious of your responsibilities and wash away your sins against India. Today we are defying the salt law. Tomorrow we shall have to consign other laws to the waste-paper basket. Doing so we shall practise such severe non-co-operation that finally it will not be possible for the administration to be carried on at all. Let the Government then, to carry on its rule, use guns against us, send us to prison, hang us. But how many can be given such punishment? Try and calculate how much time it will take a lakh of Britishers to hang thirty crores of persons.

But they are not so cruel. They are human beings like us and perhaps we would be doing the same things that they are doing if we had been in their position. Man does not have the strength to fight circumstances; the latter mould his actions. Hence I do not feel that they are to be blamed for this. But I find their policy so bitter, that I would destroy it today if I could. It will be destroyed regardless of whether I am put behind the bars or allowed to remain free. I breathe here before you and with every breath that I take, I desire this very thing. I am fully convinced that there is nothing base in it. I act exactly as I believe.

No one has been able to reply to the complaint I have registered before God and mentioned in my letter to the Viceroy. No one says that the salt tax is just. No one says that the expenditure on the army and the administration is justified. No one holds that the policy of collecting land revenue is justifiable, nor indeed that it is proper to extort 20 to 25 crores of rupees from the people after making drunkards and opium-addicts of them and breaking up their homes. Both foreigners and British officers testify to the fact that all this is true. However, what can be done about it? Money is required. For what purpose is it required? In order to repress the people.

Recently the Government has appointed all police officers above the rank of constables as officers dealing with salt. As a result of the authority vested in him, even a policeman can arrest me and perpetrate any indignity on me that he likes; if he fails to arrest me he would be guilty of the offence of cowardice. Here we find this offence of cowardice which does not exist in any other Act of the Government.
Any constable who sees us making salt, who sees us heating a pan of salt water, can arrest us, snatch away the pan and throw away the water. What can he feel in throwing away the salt? In Lansundra near Kapadvanj there is a mound of salt, which has been covered with dust. Why is this so? Why this injustice? It is our dharma to oppose such outrageous conduct and such inhuman policy.

If you feel that I should be grateful to you for the purse you have presented to me, I should say I am grateful. But my hunger will not be satisfied with money. I desire that all of you men and women should enrol yourselves in this sacrificial movement. It is my cherished desire that all students studying in this high school who are above the age of fifteen, and all teachers too, should enrol themselves. Wherever revolutions have taken place, that is, in Japan, China, Egypt, Italy, Ireland and in England, students and teachers have played a prominent role. In Europe, war broke out on the 4th of August in 1914, and when I reached England on the 6th of that same month, I found that students had left colleges and marched out with arms.

Here, in this righteous war, truth, non-violence and forgiveness are the weapons. The consequence of using such weapons can only be beneficial, and it is the duty of every student and teacher to take part in such a struggle. At a time when the final struggle is being waged in order to free India from slavery, any student or teacher who takes shelter in his home or in the school will be regarded as having acted as a traitor to his country. Will you be engaged in learning poems by heart or in doing sums at a time when a person like Sardar is behind the bars? Just as when a house is on fire everyone comes out to extinguish it, similarly you should all come out to put an end to these sufferings of our country.

Those who say that Hindus, Muslims, Christians, Jews and others have not united speak an untruth. This salt tax applies equally to all. If it is the case that whereas Hindus have to pay this tax, Muslims can get themselves exempted from it, they may very well do so. If anyone can save himself in this manner, I shall have to modify my dharma. I am prepared to get this tax abolished even if I have to prostrate myself on the ground in order to do so. Why should not everyone unite in order to have that tax abolished from which even a buffalo and a cow cannot escape?

My prostrating myself on the ground for the sake of removing the hardships of crores of people was of no avail. I have spared no efforts in drafting appeals. Everyone knows that I know how to use polite language. However, I have become a revolutionary when politeness and persuasion proved infructuous. I find peace in describing myself as a revolutionary and I practise my dharma to some extent. In a revolution which is calm, peaceful and truthful, you should get yourselves enrolled regardless of the religion to which you belong. If you enlist yourselves with sincerity and if you can keep up your courage, the salt tax will have been abolished, this administration will have come to an end and all the hardships enumerated in the letter to the Viceroy as well as those which have not been so enumerated will have to cease. Then when new administrative policies are to be formulated, the time will be ripe for solving communal disputes and satisfying everyone.

I invite you all in the name of God. Even the Britishers will join in this movement. Will they perpetrate many injustices in order to justify one? And will they put innocent men behind the bars, whip them and hang them?

God cannot be identified with that which is untruth, that which is injustice. It is as plain as I am speaking to you here and now. I see equally clearly that the days of this administration are numbered and total swaraj is in sight. The Goddess of Independence is peeping in and wishes to garland us. If at such a time we run away, who will be as unworthy as we?

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 23-3-1930

488. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

RAS,
March 19, 1930

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

You are in for a whole night’s vigil but it is inevitable if you are to return before tomorrow night. The messenger will bring you where I may be. You are reaching me at the most trying stage in the march. You will have to cross a channel at about 2 a.m. on the shoulders of tried fishermen. I dare not interrupt the march even for the chief servant of the nation.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

This is the place where Vallabhbhai was arrested. All the hereditary officials of this village have just gone, leaving their resignations in my hands.

PUNDIT JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1930. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library
March 19, 1930

Today we have entered the taluka in which Sardar Vallabhbhai was arrested and sentenced to prison and in which he had carried on such a vigorous struggle in 1924 that the Government had finally to admit its error and mete out justice that should not have required a struggle. It is as if Sardar was sentenced to prison as a reward for having served you!

The question now is what you can do to serve the cause for which he has been sent to jail and what I should do.

Some of the Headmen and Matadars have handed in their resignations. I congratulate them. However, there are still many who cannot abandon the line. I have not come across a single person who has accepted the post of a Headman for the sake of the salary attached to it. Headmen have the privilege of perpetrating indignities on the people or it may be said that they have the right to participate in the indignities perpetrated on the people. The improper reason for their clinging to their posts is that this privilege satisfies their base self-interest or assists them in their work. But how much longer will you keep on doing your part in squeezing these villages?

Have not your eyes yet been opened to the robbery that is being committed by the Government?

The Headman, the Talati and the Ravania are the representatives of the Government in the villages, and it is through these persons that the latter carries on its administration. A village which is afraid of a handful of men and continues to act in a manner contrary to its own wishes, neither enhances the prestige of the Headman, the Talati or the Ravania nor that of the villagers themselves. Sardar was making great efforts to end this indignity.

Sardar neither made speeches nor came here to foment trouble. Neither the Magistrate nor you had expected any sort of trouble. The task for which Sardar had approached you was not a secret to anyone. A satyagrahi has no secrets. Even a child can see how a satyagrahi stands, sits, eats and drinks. It can also examine the latter’s accounts. What secret can a satyagrahi like Sardar have? He had come here to clear the way for me. He had not come here to convey the message regarding salt. We had both so planned that it would be through me and those whom I took along with me that the salt law would be violated. You do not know many of the persons who are accompanying me. They are all public workers devoted to Sardar.
have not been able to understand the nature of Sardar’s offence. Even the Magistrate did not know it. That Sardar should be awarded a sentence of three months’ jail is a matter of shame both to Sardar and to the Government. A person like him should be sentenced to a term of seven years’ imprisonment or be exiled. It would not befit the Government to sentence me to three months’ imprisonment. Exile for life or hanging would be a punishment fit for a person like me. I am guilty of sedition. It is my dharma to commit sedition against the Government. I am teaching this dharma to the people. A regime under which tyranny is being perpetrated, under which the rich and the poor are made to pay the same amount of tax on an item like salt, under which exorbitant sums are being spent on watchmen, the police and the army, under which the highest executive receives a salary which is five thousand times the income of the cultivator, under which an annual revenue of 25 crores of rupees is derived from narcotics and liquor, under which foreign cloth of the value of Rs. 60 crores is imported every year, and under which crores of persons continue to remain unemployed, it is one’s dharma to rise against and destroy such a regime, to pray that fire may consume it policies.

For such a treasonable offence, I was once sentenced to six years’ imprisonment but, unfortunately for the Government and myself, I fell ill and I was released as it was felt that I should no longer be held in prison. Now again a cloud, if you choose to call it so, or a procession with a fanfare if you wish so to describe it, is approaching me. It will be good if I am arrested. The magistrate will be put to shame if he sentences me to three months’ imprisonment. One guilty of sedition should be banished to the Andamans, sentenced to a life-term of exile, or to hanging. What other punishment can be meted out to anyone like me who regards sedition his duty?

The Government must have believed that by sentencing Sardar to three months’ imprisonment, it will be able to scare the people and suppress them. However, the fact that you have turned out here in thousands appears to signify that you are looking forward to a celebration. You must regard it as something to celebrate if my colleagues and I are arrested. But will you sit quiet after regarding this as an occasion for celebration? Will the Headmen and the Matadars cling to their offices as flies clinging to dirt? That would indeed be a matter of shame and grief.

Durbar has come and settled in this taluka for many years. Who is this Durbar? He has given up his kingdom—however tiny a village it may be. He does not want any comforts; he only wants to serve. You should learn courage and sacrifice from him. What an adverse impression it will create if the Headmen of such a taluka do not give up their office!

The money that you have given me today has no value for me. When I collected a crore of rupees, it did have value for me. Those crores of rupees have rendered service many times their value. Today, however, I do not need money but your services. All the men and women present here should get themselves enrolled. Say that you are prepared, when your turn comes to violate the salt law. Even women can participate in this righteous struggle and many have already enrolled themselves.

This religious struggle does not involve hurting even a hair of anyone. We shall teach the Government a lesson by suffering hardships ourselves, and by doing so create world opinion in our favour. And, finally, we shall achieve a change of heart in our rulers. At present, however, the Government is inclined to indulge in oppression instead of meting out justice.

A person like Shri Sen Gupta, Mayor of Calcutta, whose name is familiar to everyone in Bengal, has been imprisoned in Burma. The Government has adopted the policy of arresting those who are not guilty of any offence. At a time when the nation cries out in despair and thousands are coming forward to express their grievances, the Government should abolish a thing like the salt tax and redress other grievances as well. But this Government cannot afford to do so. It cannot afford to see a crore of rupees remaining with the people. It is behaving in such an outrageous manner in order that this sum is sent out to England. The first step towards freeing ourselves from such oppression is to seek the abolition of the salt tax. We shall violate the salt tax law to such an extent that we shall be prepared to suffer whatever the penalty we may have to face—be it imprisonment, flogging or any other.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 23-3-1930

490. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

DURING DANDI MARCH,

Wednesday, 10.30 p.m. [March 19, 1930]¹

CHI. NARANDAS,

I have your letter. If those young men are so keen, I believe that we should admit them. They did repent before me at any rate. I refused to give them a letter of recommendation, so that you may decide there as you think best. That is the position even now. Do only what you think right.

¹ Vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 16-3-1930.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8093. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

491. NOTES

SALT TAX

Fifteen villagers of Bhangore and Matla in 24 Parganas District have been fined eight annas each by the Sub-Divisional Officer of Alipore on a charge of illicit manufacture of salt. The men pleaded guilty and throwing themselves at the mercy of the Court, submitted they were too poor to buy salt and were manufacturing it for their own consumption.

This seasonable item is from the public Press. Eight annas fine for poor people is no joke. The magistrate might have discharged the men with a caution or he might, as magistrates have done before now, have paid the fine from his own pocket, if he felt that he was bound to impose a penalty. It is likely of course that in that case, he might have laid himself open to the charge of cowardice under the Salt Act. Be that as it may, the fact that the men “threw themselves at the mercy of the court,” and “submitted that they were too poor to buy salt,” and that the magistrate rejected the plea of the villagers, is eloquent testimony in favour of the civil disobedience campaign. No milder agitation would have answered the purpose. Moreover, the salt tax is but a sample from the mountain of such grievances, from which it is the duty of every Indian who knows the wrongs being done to India to strain every nerve to free her.

HOW TO BREAK IT

A correspondent writes to say that there is no salt tax in Portuguese India, that Daman is quite near Pardi, that salt is sold at 2 annas per maund in Daman, and that any quantity may be imported from Daman and payment of tax refused on passing the British border. A similar suggestion has come too from Kathiawar. There also there is no tax, though there is the State monopoly which makes the salt dearer than the cost price. Nevertheless it is much cheaper than in the British territory. Thus a maund (cutcha) costs, I understand, Rs. 1-4 in Ranpur whereas the same quantity outside Ranpur will cost probably no more than 10 annas, if that. Anyway, when the instructions for civil disobedience on a mass scale are issued, there is no doubt that the salt law is the easiest to break.

The Government is naturally preparing to combat the civil law breakers after its usual fashion. Every police officer above the rank of a constable in the Bombay Presidency except in Sind and Aden has been appointed a salt officer. These men, armed with new powers, may be fully expected to give a good account of themselves. And when they have stained their hands with innocent blood, there will be no doubt the usual inquiry followed by a repeal of the Salt Act. But this time the object of civil disobedience is double—the repeal of the tax and the repeal of the British bondage of which the salt tax is but an offshoot. No inquiry merely into the Salt Act followed by its repeal can stop the campaign of civil disobedience. It behoves all who want the repeal of the salt tax to join the agitation at least to that extent, unless they would have the tax rather than success of civil disobedience even for a specific grievance.

SOMETHING ADDED, NOTHING DEDUCTED

It has been said that I have now abandoned my first love and that I have given up Hindu-Muslim unity, removal of untouchability and khaddar as conditions of swaraj. This is a mischievous suggestion. The fact is that I have given up nothing. Many new things have been added. Hence have I called the recent presentation a new orientation. There will be no swaraj without the old conditions being fulfilled. But there will be none if some more conditions are not also fulfilled. They might have been neglected altogether at the time of formulating the constitution. Now they form an integral part of any scheme of swaraj if it is conceived in the interest of the masses. Again civil disobedience is being offered irrespective of the full fruition of the various points; for it, being in substitution for an armed rebellion, can go on side by side with the prosecution of the amplified constructive programme—even as an armed man will be fighting, whilst the civil population may be engaged in various other national pursuits, suspending them to the extent necessary for supporting the armed man. There is no danger of any one of the conditions of swaraj being neglected or given up as those who are engaged in civil disobedience are irrevocably committed to them. The question therefore is, who are guiding the civil disobedience movement? It is well if they are pure nationalists not directly or indirectly fostering communalism. Civil disobedience is the method whereby the nation is to generate the strength to reach her formulated goal.

DEENABANDHU ANDREWS

The reader knows that C. F. Andrews had become a convert to Independence before I came to it. I had hugged the belief that Dominion Status was superior to Independence. But Deenabandhu knew his England better than I did. In this latest letter written on his birthday he says:

I cannot tell you how much I have been thinking of you! At such times as these I have realized that thoughts are prayers. The greatest of all struggles has begun, and India is right, as I have always believed, in claiming nothing short of Independence. She cannot be part of an Empire. It is unthinkable.

The idea behind this letter evidently is that India with Dominion Status can only be part of an Empire, not a member on an equal footing of a commonwealth of nations. Of course when I talked of Dominion Status, I had no thought of being anything but an equal partner. Apart therefore from the Calcutta resolution, when the experience of 1929 proved that partnership on a footing of absolute equality was out of the question, I became a convinced Independence-wallah.

Young India, 20-3-1930

492. THE CHOICE BEFORE STUDENTS

It has been often said that the money spent on national education in general and the Gujarat Vidyapith in particular has been so much waste. In my opinion the Gujarat Vidyapith by its supreme sacrifice has more than justified its existence, the hopes entertained by its authors and the grants made to it by donors. For the Vidyapith has suspended its literary activities save for boys under 16 who are already under training there. The teachers and students of over 15 years of age have offered their services as volunteers and nearly forty students with the teachers are already in the field. A class for giving fifteen days’ emergency training in connection with satyagraha has been opened for the sake of those who may need such training. I congratulate the students and the teachers on the promptitude with which they have acted. I may state that twenty of these are with me on the march. They are divided into two parties, both preceding the 80 pilgrims to make preparations in advance and assisting the villagers. They are under orders not to offer civil resistance till the 80 are arrested and immediately to replace them as soon as they are arrested.

I am sure that every national educational institution will copy the noble example of the Gujarat Vidyapith which was the first to come into being in response to the call of non-co-operation in 1920. And I hope that the Government and aided institutions will also copy the example. Every revolution of modern times has found students in the forefront. This, because it is peaceful, ought not to offer less attraction to the students.

The motto of the Gujarat Vidyapith is: सा विपण्या या जिनः रुपण्ये. It means:
That is knowledge which is designed for salvation. On the principle that the greater includes the less, national independence or material freedom is included in the spiritual. The knowledge gained in educational institutions must therefore at least teach the way and lead to such freedom.

The most superficial observer will not fail to notice that the daily routine of the satyagrahi pilgrims constitutes by itself a perfect education. It is not a company of violent rebels who are moving about creating ravages and letting loose every passion; it is a band of self-restrained men who have declared non-violent rebellion against organized tyranny and who seek to secure freedom from it by severe self-suffering, spreading on their march the message of freedom through non-violence and truth. No father need feel the slightest anxiety about dedicating his son or daughter to what is after all the truest education that can be conceived in the existing circumstances of the country.

Let me distinguish between the call of 1920 and the present call. The call of 1920 was for emptying Government institutions and bringing into being national ones. It was a call for preparation. Today the call is for engaging in the final conflict, i.e., for mass civil disobedience. This may or may not come. It will not come if those who have been hitherto the loudest in their cry for liberty have no action in them. If the salt loses its savour, wherewith shall it be salted? The students are expected to precipitate a crisis not by empty meaningless cries but by mute, dignified, unchallengeable action worthy of students. It may again be that the students have no faith in self-sacrifice, and less in non-violence. Then naturally they will not and need not come out. They may then, like the revolutionaries, whose letter is reproduced in another column, wait and see what non-violence in action can do. It will be sportsmanlike for them either to give themselves whole-heartedly to this non-violent revolt or to remain neutral, and (if they like) critical, observers of the developing events. They will disturb and harm the movement, if they will act as they choose and without fitting in with the plan of the authors or even in defiance of them. This I know, that if civil disobedience is not developed to the fullest extent possible now, it may not be for another generation. The choice before the students is clear. Let them make it. The awakening of the past ten years has not left them unmoved. Let them take the final plunge.

Young India, 20-3-1930

493. OFFICIAL PETTINESS

The Government of Burma knew that Sjt. Sen Gupta was but a bird of passage when he was in Rangoon the other day. Yet he, the Mayor of the Calcutta Corporation, has been taken under warrant to Rangoon for prosecution. A prosecution so vindictively brought is bound, if past experience is any guide, to result in a conviction. The inference is irresistible that there is an unwritten but well understood conspiracy among the high officials to ‘lop off tall poppies’. It was Sardar Vallabhbhai yesterday, it is Sjt. Sen Gupta today. It will be other leaders tomorrow. There is no other way open to the Government than either repression or relief. The latter the Government does not propose to give; the former therefore is inevitable. The swifter and stronger it is, the better it is for the movement. For if it has inherent vitality in it, it will grow with every wave of repression. I therefore tender my congratulations to Sjt. Sen Gupta on his arrest.

I observe that a spontaneous movement has grown up in the country to appoint convinced believers in non-violence as dictators in the various provinces. Tamil Nad has taken the lead by appointing Sjt. C. Rajagopalachari; Andhra Desha has followed by appointing Deshabhakta Konda Venkatappayya. Now comes the news that Sjt. Satis Chandra Das Gupta has been similarly appointed in Bengal. I am a little nervous about Bengal. For the Press message is not clear whether the appointment is on the part of both the groups or only one. I hope it is by both. They may have their vital differences, if any. But on the question of the goal and the method of civil disobedience, there can be none. And since Sjt. Satis Chandra Das Gupta has no designs either upon the Council or the Corporation, he should be able to weld the two elements together. The two great leaders being taken away, surely it is the duty of the rival groups to coalesce and assist Satis Babu.

In any event the task of a dictator is no bed of roses. He may himself be taken away any moment. He allows himself to be appointed for that purpose. But he ought to receive the unanimous and unquestioned support of the people. Once a person is called to such an office, he should have absolute allegiance. All argument should be hushed at the time of battle. The time for argument was when the appointment was made.

The word “dictator” is, in my opinion, ill-chosen and has a bad odour. I should name him First Servant. The definition of his duties will give the precise meaning to the office. Use of some words from current and apparently similar movements is inevitable. But we ought to avoid the use, in a movement in which dictatorship is altogether out of place and impossible, of a word bearing that meaning and having that force.

Young India, 20-3-1930
494. GOOD IF TRUE

I publish the foregoing just as I have received it. I have not the privilege of knowing “Colonel Bedy”. If he and the letter are not a hoax and if the letter is genuine, I congratulate the revolutionary party on its decision. Three years’ limit given to me is ample. If during three years of active non-violence under the auspices promised by the party are not enough to carry conviction, I should regard myself to be an unworthy representative of non-violence. I hope therefore that the revolutionary party will not only suspend its own activities but will also prevent so far as is possible, sporadic violence from breaking out.

Young India, 20-3-1930

495. SWARAJ AND RAMARAJYA

No matter in how many ways swaraj may have been defined, no matter how many interpretations I myself may have given it, to me its only meaning which is eternally valid is Ramarajya. If the word Ramarajya offends anyone, then I shall call it ‘Dharmarajya’. The sense of the word Ramarajya is this: under such a rule the poor will be fully protected, everything will be done with justice, and the voice of the people will always be respected. But in order to attain Ramarajya all must help. But in order to achieve this khadi alone is the universal and constructive instrument. But in order to increase the power of the people something else with a wider appeal was needed. That something is salt tax. Both the poor and the rich use salt equally and because a tax is levied on this universally useful thing, one that is necessary for everyone, one and all can offer civil disobedience against the salt tax law and thus strengthen their power. The power that we shall gain by this sort of civil disobedience will, because of its civil and peaceful nature, help us in securing Ramarajya. There are many other taxes like the salt tax which weigh heavily on the people and in resisting which people can get a good training, and their strength can increase. Ramarajya, by such means, will become easy to establish. No one can predict when we shall attain full Ramarajya. But it is the duty of every one of us to contemplate it day and night. And true contemplation is that in which proper methods also have been used for the establishment of Ramarajya. It should be remembered that in order to establish Ramarajya no

1 The letter from “Members of the Executive Council of R.L.R. represented through Secretary, Colonel Bedy” is not reproduced here. It said that the revolutionaries had decided to give three years’ time for “Gandhism” to succeed after which they would declare the “civil war of independence”.

VOL. 48 : 21 NOVEMBER, 1929 - 2 APRIL, 1930 465
learning is necessary. The necessary talent is found in all—men and women, young and old, and in people of all religions. The only sad thing is that not all perceive its presence now. Cannot every one of us, if we want, today give proof of qualities such as truth, non-violence, propriety of conduct, bravery, forbearance, courage, etc.? The fact is we are under a delusion and for this reason we are not able to perceive what is in us, and instead we strive, in vain, to understand things that are beyond us. Undoubtedly this is a very sad thing. But even then I shall request the readers of Hindi Navajivan that in this great yajna which has been started in the country today they should be prepared to do their full share.

[From Hindi]
Hindi Navajivan, 20-3-1930

496. SPEECH AT KARELI

March 20, 1930

It should not be difficult to get 5,000 volunteers out of a population of 2,75,000. If all the officials of the four hundred villages resign we would not be required to go to jails to achieve our goal. But circumstances are not yet favourable for that. We can manufacture salt on the banks of Mahi near its mouth. But Sardar Vallabhbhai has asked me to go to Jalalpur for the purpose. If I and my troop of volunteers get arrested, every volunteer should begin manufacturing salt. The people of Baroda State may also come into the British territory and make salt. Meanwhile, all should put their hands to the production of khadi and work to stop consumption of liquor.

[From Gujarati]
Gujarati, 23-3-1930

497. LETTER TO GANGADEVI SANADHYA

KARELI,
Thursday [March 20, 1930]

CHI. GANGADEVI,

I received your letter. Take good care of your health and render what service you can. Whatever the doctors may say, you must not even think of including in your diet anything except milk and fruit.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2533

1 The date has been inferred from Gandhiji’s presence at Kareli.
498. LETTER TO ABDUL KADIR BAWAZEER

GAJERA,
March 21, 1930

BHAJIM SAHEB,

I think about you every day. How shall I describe your love? I feel extremely happy to see that you have risen very high. The Ashram is yours and I need not entrust it to your care. Take care of your health. Qureshi has been doing fine work. I observe that everyone is pleased with him.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6645

499. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

March 21, 1930

CHI. KUSUM,

If you do not write letters, how can you call yourself a secretary? I do not expect anything from Mahadev at this time. He can get no time. Though he is a secretary, he is not doing a secretary’s work but is doing some other work more important than a secretary’s. You have not risen beyond being a secretary. I expect reports about people who are ill. I also wish to hear about the activities there. You may also write about anything else which you may think about. How is Ba’s health? How is your health? Do you study hard? Do you card? Do you spin? Do you write the diary? And the life-sketch?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1795

500. SPEECH AT GAJERA

[March 21, 1930]

You should be firmly convinced that you have performed a meritorious deed by bringing the Antyajas in your midst and have

1 Gulam Rasul Qureshi, addressee’s son-in-law
2 Extracted from “Swaraj Gita”
3 Gandhiji was at Gajera on this date.
taken a step forward towards swaraj. You can see from the dress and behaviour of the two Brahmins who sang “Raghupati Raghava Rajaram, Patitapavana Seetaram”, that they are not new-fashioned Brahmins, that they are persons who would not gamble, eat meat or be guilty of licentious conduct. They are Brahmin teachers who are well-versed in the Gita, know Sanskrit and fully understand their responsibilities. They do not regard it as a sin to live with the Antyajas or with those who belong to other religions, but rather look upon it as a sin not to do so. Hence, you should be convinced that you are not guilty of irreligious conduct.

When Shri Ramachandra left Ayodhya and arrived on the banks of the Ganga, King Nishad rowed him across to the other bank, and offered him fruits and vegetables to eat. Who was Nishad? He was regarded an Antyaja. When Bharata met him, he embraced him and congratulated him on having served Shri Ramachandra in his hour of need. There is an Antyaja family which has also joined our group.

Besides the 60 crores of rupees that go out of the country every year by way of payment for the foreign cloth that we import, millions more are sent out of the country. During the days of the Gazni, Ghori, and the Mogul Empire, the wealth of the country stayed within it, but under this Government, the pensions of all officers are sent out of the country. How can one rest when the country is being robbed in this manner?

There are three hundred districts in India and in all these districts the Collector reigns supreme. It is truly a matter of shame to them and to all of us, if we only stop to think, that these three hundred men should rule over 30 crores of us.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 30-3-1930

501. SPEECH AT ANKHI

[March 21, 1930]

I have received a complaint that villagers do not supply provisions or water to the police officers or other Government officers who happen to come here. We are not guilty of any violence in doing so; however, whether these officers happen to be Indians or Britishers, if they are really dying of hunger or thirst, it is not our dharma to let them perish in either manner. The dharma in obedience to which I act and which has made an outlaw of me teaches me that if Dyer and O’Dwyer, whose deeds, which were the very incarnations of cruelty, I

---

1 Extracted from “Swaraj Gita”
2 The date is from Prajabandnu, 23-3-1930.
had termed as “Dyerism”, shoot me and if I am still conscious and come to know that one of them has been bitten by a snake, I would go running to them to suck out the poison. I have done such things in the past. In South Africa once I was beaten by a certain person 1 and when I regained consciousness, I beseeched the Government to release him. However, if an officer approaches us with arrogance which derives from the office he holds, he would get neither food nor drink, neither a bed, nor matches nor even fodder for his horse.

A potter is not born in order to fetch water for others. Even if we happen to lose our hands, we shall no longer salute the Government. We shall ourselves settle all our disputes and, when a new era begins, washermen, barbers and other workers will be ready to serve those who serve the people. However, in a democracy, there will be no distinctions of high and low. Even a Brahmin will become as much of a public servant as a Bhangi.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 30-3-1930

502. MESSAGE TO MAHARASHTRA

AMOD, March 22, 1930

I am extremely glad to hear that in Maharashtra both wings of the Congress have come together and have decided to take part in the fight for swaraj. I hope in this religious fight Maharashtra will take the foremost place.

The Bombay Chronicle, 24-3-1930

503. INTERVIEW TO YUSUF MEHERALLY

[AMOD, March 22, 1930] 2

Q. What part do you expect the youth movement to play in the present struggle?

A. The Youth League can do a great deal. They can supply recruits in large numbers in the civil disobedience campaign. They can, moreover, help to carry the message of independence to every nook and corner of the land. They can usefully picket foreign cloth and liquor shops.

1 Mir Alam; vide “My Reward”, 22-2-1908.
2 According to the source this was published in the Vanguard, 22-3-1930.\nGandhiji, however, arrived in Amod on the evening of the 22nd.
Those of its members who are unable to participate actively in the present campaign can render good service in the realm of social reforming, popularizing khaddar and swadeshi articles, in pushing forward prohibition propaganda, etc.

Indeed at this juncture great things are expected from the youth of the country and I have no doubt they will fully rise to the occasion.

Q. Will you advise students to leave schools and colleges immediately?

A. Yes. I wish to point out that the present appeal to the students differs from that of 1921. In the latter case, the students were asked to quit their Government-controlled educational institutions and join national educational institutions. The present call is: Suspend your studies and join in the fight for freedom. When victory is won and you happen to be alive, you will resume your studies in schools of our own Government. For to my mind it is a fight to the finish. The greatest service that the youth can now render is to empty schools and colleges and swell the ranks of satyagrahi volunteers.

Q. Would you advise Youth Leagues to call out even those students whose examinations are a month or even a week ahead?

A. Yes. If the students themselves feel the call they should come out at once. As I said, I consider it a fight to the finish. If they have not the faith, they won’t do it.

Q. Would you approve of the suggestion mooted in Youth League circles that the houses of “blackleg” M.L.C.’s who have not resigned their seats and those of selected other officials be picketed, and they be harassed in other ways as much as possible?

A. I should say no. During the N.C.O. days three specific instances of this type came to my notice. They did no good. I know they did harm.

Q. Would you suggest any method by which the Muslims could be still more attracted to the Congress fold and protected from the pernicious propaganda of communalists?

A. The best way to increase Muslim interest in the Congress is for Congressmen to serve them. Convince them that the Congress is as much theirs as anybody else’s. My present programme—the breaking of the salt laws—should appeal to all the communities in India, for it affects them all alike. I am an optimist. I have no doubt that soon the Congress will stand higher in the affections of the Muslims than it ever did before. The masses are sound at heart. They only require a correct and courageous lead. I repeat that the best way of winning over the Mussalmans is by seeking occasions

---

1 Non-co-operation

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
of service and assuring them that the resolution of the Congress on the communal question means what it says.

Q. In case you are not arrested in the next few days, are the other Provinces not to embark on satyagraha?

A. If I am not arrested till I reach Jalalpur, I expect that the Provinces will be free to start civil disobedience soon after I have committed the breach of Salt Act.

The Hindu, 25-3-1930

504. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

[Before March 23, 1930]¹

CHI. MIRA,

I have your two letters. No time to say anything. I notice that everywhere they say you have taken charge of the Ashram. This needs contradiction.² I am trying to think out something.

I hope those [who] were stung have now recovered.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5387. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9621

505. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

AMOD,

Before prayer, March 23, 1930

CHI. KUSUM,

I have your letter.

If Narandas and Gangabehn permit you, come and spend a day. I hope you know that we reach Broach on Wednesday. You should get this letter on Monday. You would have got it today, but I had no time at all to write.

It is foolish of you to feel sorry that you could not get up at three. How can you help if your body is not strong enough? Besides,everything depends on God’s will. It is enough if you do not remain complacent. I know that you are striving hard. I have no time to write more.

I have of course written to Dudhibehn.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1796

¹ On the back of the letter is noted “March 23, 1930”, which appears to be the date on which it was received by the addressee.

² Vide “Notes”, 27-3-1930, sub-title, “Mirabai Not Manager”.

VOL. 48 : 21 NOVEMBER, 1929 - 2 APRIL, 1930

471
506. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

BUVA,
Sunday, March 23, 1930

CHI. PREMA,

You seem to have taken a vow not to write to me. I know that you are submerged in work. That is precisely why I must have a letter from you. You should not work so much that you may fall ill. Speak less loudly and spare your throat.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro—5: Ku. Premabehn Kantakne, p. 9

507. SPEECH AT BUVA

March 23, 1930

Although I make strong speeches and have set out to violate the law, the Government dare not arrest me. Why are you afraid of such a Government? The Government took Shri Sen Gupta to Rangoon and sentenced him to about 10 days’ simple imprisonment. Should we not conclude from this that as compared to 1857 and 1919, it has lost some of its strength? I have only 80 volunteers with me. Even then the Government cannot arrest me. What then could it do if there were 80,000 volunteers? Hence Hindus and Muslims, men and women, should participate in this struggle.

[From Gujarati]
Gujarati, 30-3-1930

508. SPEECH AT SAMNI

March 23, 1930

To date, at least 80 persons have handed in their resignations. It will be regarded as cowardice to hand in one’s resignation and then to withdraw it. There is no compulsion to resign. It is advisable to give up the post of Headman, looking upon it as something base, dirty and filthy. In the Ashram, classes have been started to train up women in fifteen days. Dadabhai’s grand-daughter\(^1\) is a teacher there. The women of Samni should also come forward. If you cannot do so, will you not at least produce khadi? Nowadays a large number of people

\(^1\) The meeting was held at 9 p.m.

\(^2\) Khorshedbhcn Naoroji wear khadi. But if those who make it go to jail, who will continue to produce khadi? You should therefore produce khadi.

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 30-3-1930

509. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

SAMNI,

Monday [March 24, 1930]1

CHI. MAHADEV,

I send seven articles in this packet. It is about 10 p.m. now. I have revised the articles, but you should revise them further if necessary. I do not think I have left out anything. I am sending with this some letters for Ashram inmates. See that you do not forget to pass them on to the persons concerned and do not lose them.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

I wished to write to the women there, but all the available time was taken up by Young India and rest. There are three loose letters and two envelopes.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11484

510. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

TRALSA,

March 25, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

I have just sent a p.c. to Nonami.

You will see a paragraph2 I have devoted to you in Young India.

Give me your latest time-table. I have suggested to Narandas that Keshu may be asked to lead the prayer. He sings well. He has an excellent ear for music and his Sanskrit pronunciation is perfect. Is the women’s prayer recited daily?

I am taking my journeyings very well indeed. But over 15 have become disabled. They expect to be all right by tomorrow. They are all in Broach which we reach tomorrow morning.

I am feeling sleepy now.

Love.

BAPU

1 Gandhiji was at Samni on this date.
2 Vide “Notes”, 27-3-1930, sub-title, “Mirabai Not Manager”.
If the 5 young men who came to me were repentant and undertook to abide by the rules, I did contemplate their being taken.

From the original: C.W. 5389. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9623

511. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

TRALSA

Tuesday, March 25, 1930

CHI. PRABHUDAS,¹

I have your letter. Your anger is meaningless. The Gita teaches us restraint. At the same time, it says that it is not possible for a man to change his nature. So far as possible, restrain your temper and be satisfied with that. It is enough if you never try to deceive yourself. If you can master your health you will be able to do so many other things. You have done the right thing in holding the children’s prayer in a separate courtyard. I had sent you that information while I was on tour of U.P.² and therefore have nothing to say against it. There are two advantages in having separate prayers for the children. The prayers of the grown-ups can be conducted with more seriousness and we will be able to pay more attention to the prayer for the children.

Keep on writing to me.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32942

512. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

Tuesday [March 25, 1930]³

CHI. BRIJKRISHNA,

I have your letter. You must give up all worry. Your achievement lies in your effort.

“Never, O loved one, does the doer of a good deed meet with a sad end.”⁴ Look up the meaning. Keep doing whatever you can. Go to Morvi if your health is not satisfactory, there is no harm at all in going. Keep on writing to me as long as I am free. Learn the ¹ The letter is in a different hand but the subscription is by Gandhiji.

² In September-October, 1929.
³ The letter was received by the addressee on March 26, 1930.
⁴ Bhagavad Gita, vi. 40
pronunciation of the Gita verses from Krishnadas.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2378

513. DRAFT RESOLUTION FOR A.I.C.C.

[March 25, 1930]¹

This meeting of A.I.C.C. endorses the resolution² passed by the Working Committee giving full authority to Gandhiji in the matter of civil disobedience and congratulates him and his companions and the country on the march begun by him on 12th instant,³ in pursuit of his plan of civil disobedience. The Committee hopes that the whole country will respond to the action taken by G. and his band in a manner befitting the occasion.

The A.I.C.C. hereby authorizes the Provincial C.C.s to undertake such civil disobedience as to them may seem proper and in the manner that may appear to them to be most suitable. The committee, however, hopes that so far as is possible the Provinces shall concentrate on a civil breach of the Salt laws. The committee trusts that whilst preparations may be fully made civil disobedience for Poorna Swaraj shall not start till Gandhiji has reached his destination, actually committed a breach of the Salt laws and given the word to the other Provinces through this committee or he has been earlier arrested.

In the purview of the A.I.C.C. time has arrived for all educational institutions whether Government-owned, aided or national to suspend their literary activities and devote their whole attention to the campaign for liberty.

The A.I.C.C. congratulates Sardar Vallabhbhai, Sjt. Sen Gupta on their arrest and notes with satisfaction that their arrest instead of weakening has strengthened the national resolve to reach the goal without any delay.⁴

¹ From a copy: Gandhi-Nehru Papers. Courtesy. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

² The meeting of the A.I.C.C. was held on March 25, 1930.

³ Vide “Never Faileth”, 20-2-1930.

⁴ Vide 1st footnote to “Parting Message at Chandola”, 12-3-1930.

⁵ Vide also “Official Pettiness”, 20-3-1930 and “Mountain in Labour”, 27-3-1930.
514. SPEECH AT PUBLIC MEETING, TRALSA

March 25, 1930

Mahatmaji said he heard that some Muslim friends had complained that he and his party did not pass through their villages. If he was invited he would surely have included such villages in his programme but his present tour was such that he could not go to any village uninvited and he could not force the villagers to receive him.

In Dandi, a Muslim has invited me and I will be putting up in his bungalow. Satyagraha will commence from the Muslim friend’s house. My Muslim friends should not, therefore, feel aggrieved. I only want their blessings so that I may achieve success in my religious fight. Muslims and Hindus both want that this tax should go as both consume equal quantity of salt and both feel the pinch. Only when they are able to get the tax abrogated, will they get enough strength to get swaraj. They must know that crores are being sent away to England by various means.

Making a passing reference to the Sarda Act, Gandhiji said they need not be afraid of that Bill. He could not think of the Government interfering in such things but the people also should understand that nothing is gained by marrying their children of tender age.

This is not the time for marriages when this fight is going on. They must not put any restraint on their sons but all this abysmal ignorance is due to our bondage and dependence.

The Bombay Chronicle, 26-3-1930

515. LETTER TO SUSHILA GANDHI

Wednesday, March 26, 1930

CHI. SUSHILA,

I have your letter. I also read your letter to Manilal. I will not, therefore, rag you in this letter.

I can justify your point of view. And I believe that you wish to keep Sita at Akola. You, too, must then stay there. She should live where you do, and you should live where she does.

But I do not believe that you cannot bring up Sita in the Ashram as you would wish to do. If you use your imagination, you will realize that you will get nowhere else the atmosphere you have in the Ashram. Old and young, all absorb imperceptibly a great deal from the moral atmosphere surrounding them. There is only a half-truth in your belief that the children there are ill-mannered. In the Ashram we try to make the children independent-minded. They are not punished.
physically and, therefore, they seem to have become ill-mannered. But I am sure that the ultimate result will be good. However, if you decide to stay in the Ashram and to keep Sita there, you must observe the following rules:

1. You should not leave Sita unattended to do any work.
2. You must take a promise from anyone to whom you may entrust Sita that he or she will give her nothing to eat.
3. Sita should be fed at fixed hours.
4. If possible, she should be kept on milk and fruit only.
5. [You] must take some exercise every day.
6. If you or Sita do not keep good health, you should run away from the place.

You should follow these rules disregarding opposition from anybody. If you do not have the strength of mind to do that, I think it will be difficult for you to stay in the Ashram. Do come and see me at Surat.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4767

516. SPEECH AT BROACH

March 26, 1930

Chandubhai has asked for my blessings. But who am I to give blessings? I have myself come to seek blessings. I hope that by the time I reach Dandi the blessings I am receiving at every village on this march will have added up to such a mountain that even this monster of a Government will cower at the sight.¹

A Muslim youth has sent me questions on the Hindu-Muslim problem. One of them is: “Do you expect to win swaraj through your own single effort or assisted merely by the Hindus?”

I have never dreamt that I could win swaraj merely through my effort or assisted only by the Hindus. I stand in need of the assistance of Mussalmans, Parsis, Christians, Sikhs, Jews and all other Indians. I need the assistance even of Englishmen. But I know too that all this combined assistance is worthless if I have not one other assistance, that is, from God. All is vain without His help. And if He is with this struggle, no other help is necessary.

¹ A summary of the speech was published in Young India, 3-4-1930, under the heading “Hindu-Muslim Question”, with the following note from Gandhiji: “The speech delivered at Broach on 26th ultimo deals with the communal question and is rather important. A full summary is therefore given below.” In what follows, the Young India version has been collated with the Gujarati report.

¹ The following thirteen paragraphs are from Young India.

But to realize His help and guidance in this struggle, I need your blessings, the blessings of all communities. The blessings of thousands of men and women belonging to all communities that have attended this march are to me a visible sign of the hand of God in this struggle.

I know that there are occasions when the hand of God has to be traced in the curses of men. But this is not such an occasion. Today I am doing what the nation has been yearning for during the past ten years. Have I not been rebuked for delaying civil resistance? Have not friends angrily said, “You are stopping the progress of the nation towards its goal? You have only to say, ‘Let there be civil resistance’, behold! there is swaraj.” There is some truth in the taunt. Full civil resistance does mean swaraj. But I was staying my hand. I had no confidence in myself. I was straining my ear to listen to the still small voice within, but only up to yesterday there was no response. It was in Lahore I had told a journalist that I saw nothing on the horizon to warrant civil resistance. But suddenly, as in a flash, I saw the light in the Ashram. Self-confidence returned. Englishmen and some Indian critics have been warning me against the hazard. But the voice within is clear I must put forth all my effort or retire altogether and for all time from public life. I feel that now is the time or it will be never.

And so I am out for battle and am seeking help on bended knees from this white beard¹ as also the little girls. For in this battle even they can help; and thank God, they are eager to do so. I have insistent letters from them demanding enlistment.

Thus the answer to the Muslim youth’s question is complete. I need the help of all races and from all climes.

A satyagrahi has no power he can call his own. All the power he may seem to possess is from and of God. He therefore moves towards his goal carrying the world’s opinion with him. Without the help of God he is lame, blind, groping.

Ever since 1921 I have been reiterating two words, “self-purification” and “self-sacrifice”. God will not assist him without these two. The world is touched by sacrifice. It does not then discriminate about the merits of a cause. Not so God. He is all-seeing. He insists on the purity of the cause and on adequate sacrifice therefor.

¹ Gandhiji here pointed towards Abbas Tyabji.
The question was put by a Mussalman representing a powerful interest. But had a little Parsi girl representing but a hundred thousand Parsis asked the question, I should have given the same answer and said: “Without the help of Parsis there is no swaraj.” I am thankful to be able to say that I have had during the march abundant proof of the blessings of these communities. I have read friendliness in the eyes and in the speech of the Mussalmans who along with the rest have lined our route or attended the meetings. They have even given material aid.

Yet I know that I have not the Ali Brothers with me. Maulana Shaukat Ali will no longer have me in his pocket. Do not think, I do not miss him. I hold no distinction between him and blood brother. His resistance therefore can only be short-lived. If truth is in me, the Brothers must capitulate. They cannot long keep out of the battle. I crave too the assistance of Englishmen. It was neither empty formulanor a touch of vanity that prompted me to send an English friend with my letter to the Viceroy. But choosing Reginald Reynolds as my messenger, I sealed the bond between them and me. For my enmity is not against them, it is against their rule. I seem to be born to be an instrument to compass the end of that rule. But if a hair of an English head was touched I should feel the same grief as I should over such a mishap to my brother. I say to them as a friend: “Why will you not understand that your rule is ruining this country? It has got to be destroyed even though you may pound us to powder or drown us. We must declare what we feel.”

The second question is: “Under swaraj how many seats will Mussalmans, have in the legislatures? ” What answer can I return to such a question? If I were Viceroy of India I should say to the Mussalmans, Sikhs, Christians, Parsis, etc. “Take what you like, the balance will go to the Hindus.” It is true that the Sanatani Hindu will never let me become Viceroy. The fact is that I am unfit to do such accounting. But it should be sufficient to know that the Congress has pledged itself not to accept any communal solution that does not satisfy the parties concerned. I am bound by that pledge. For the Congress all are one. They are all Indians and therefore their freedom is guaranteed. No more can be expected by any community.

Civil resistance will merely give the power to the nation to assert her will. But when the time comes for its assertion, the document embodying the will will have to be sealed by all the communities. Thus without the co-operation of all communities, there is no Independence.

But what should we do meanwhile? We must at least be true to the salt we eat. Her starving millions are the salt of India’s earth. To be true to them we must free the salt from a tax which they have to pay equally with the rich and in the same proportion as the rich. In our ignorance we have been paying this inhuman imposition. Having realized our folly we will be traitors to the starving millions if we submit to the exaction any longer.

Who can help liking this poor man’s battle? The cruel tax is no respecter of persons. It is therefore as much the interest of the Mussalman as of the Hindu to secure its abolition. This is a fight undertaken in the name of God and for the sake of the millions of the paupers of this country.¹

Who does not approve of a struggle to do away with a salt tax amounting to Rs. 6 crores? What a great hardship it is for a poor Muslim if he cannot get salt. Is there any Indian who will not participate in this struggle to get this tax repealed?

This struggle is being carried on in the name of God. It is being carried on for the benefit of the poor and the needy and not for the sake of the wealthy. And is there anyone who will keep away from a struggle for the needy?

I have answered the questions. Shri Chandubhai has vehemently asserted that the Broach District will contribute the largest share in this struggle and, although the people of this district may lose their lives, they will not fail to serve the people. I hope that the men and women who have assembled here will fulfil Chandubhai’s hopes. If all of them get themselves enrolled, Shri Chandubhai’s hunger will be satisfied and I shall consider that I have received more than what I had asked for.

I pray to God, in Whose name I began: may He grant you the ability to understand what I have told you and the strength to act accordingly.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 30-3-1930

517. SPEECH AT ANKLESHWAR

March 26, 1930

By merely saying that a government is “foreign”, no idea is conveyed as to its nature. It may be that though a government is foreign, the plight of the people under it may not be so miserable. Although Rajpipla is an Indian State, I would regard it as “foreign”

¹ What follows has been taken from Navajivan.
since it has such a large number of liquor booths.

One can understand the Government levying a tax on ghee. Liquor or cigarettes can also be taxed. This Government is, however, so cunning, arrogant and inhuman that it levies a duty on an item which is consumed by the poorest of the poor. We are lucky, at any rate, that there is no tax on the air we breathe! There is a tax on water and the tax on salt amounts to 1,400 per cent. When people develop the strength to abolish the tax that is levied on salt, we shall not have to hear the complaint that there are so many liquor booths. The wealthy consume liquor, but they do not pay Rs. 25 crores for it; this amount comes from the pockets of the poor.

Resignations have been received from Headmen. I do not, however, trust these people as some of those who have resigned have informed the Collector that they were compelled to do so. Moreover, where one person has resigned, another has taken charge. If there is such a scramble for this office, we should find out whether those who have resigned have actually relinquished charge.

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 30-3-1930

518. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

[After March 26, 1930]

CHI. MIRA,

Your reference to Reynolds is instructive. You must come closer to him and not let him feel lonely. There is something wrong in his resistance to the wheel. He must see the truth lying behind it. The wheel is not an Eastern institution. At one time it was common to mankind. When Adam delved and Eve span, who was then the gentleman? But you know how best to make him feel thoroughly at home. He may be as Western as he can be and yet should be able to feel at home in the Ashram. There must be something wrong with it, if he cannot do so. All things are possible with love.

Totaramji is all you describe him to be.

You must cope with the noise. Confer with Narandas.

My health seems to be excellent. I have put on 2 lb. weight. All have. We were weighed in Broach.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5383. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9617

1  Gandhiji was at Broach on March 26. The letter was evidently written some time after.
519. MOUNTAIN IN LABOUR

The mountain was in labour in Rangoon and it brought forth a ridiculous mouse. A powerful Government put a distinguished son of India, who was suffering from a dangerous illness, under the strain of an utterly unnecessary prosecution, and spent public money. The ostensible reason was that Sjt. Sen Gupta had delivered, whilst he was passing through Burma, two speeches the like of which are delivered every day from a thousand platforms all over the country without being noticed by the Government. The prosecution could find no witness who was affected by the “seditious” performance. The magistrate was apologetic for having to deliver the judgment he did. Had he been in an environment of freedom he would have discharged the distinguished prisoner and reprimanded the Government for bringing a frivolous complaint before him.

Sjt. Sen Gupta is none the worse for the prosecution. It has enhanced his popularity, and his resolute refusal to defend himself or to answer any questions has furnished an additional proof of the courage for which he has always been known.

But this judgment has a deeper meaning. If Sardar Vallabhbhai was really guilty of the crime imputed to him, he deserved a severer punishment; if Sjt. Sen Gupta was guilty of sedition he deserved exemplary punishment, not mere ten days. If disaffection is a crime and the section has any reality about it, I who have made of sedition a religion should have been tried and heavily punished long ago.

Let no one think that lighter punishments are being awarded or I am being left alone because the Government is afraid of anything. The real reason is deeper and perhaps creditable to the Government. They are ashamed of punishing people for holding opinions and publicly expressing them. They are sensitive to the world opinion rising against them for such conduct. The Rangoon magistrate felt constrained to say that inasmuch as there was in Sjt. Sen Gupta’s speech no incitement to violence, he saw no reason to award a penalty befitting the crime of sedition. Section 124A is really concerned with violence. The authors of the section probably never conceived the possibility of anybody harbouring sedition and yet having no trace of violence in him. This reluctance or even incapacity to punish heavily or even to prosecute in the absence of violence is an eloquent tribute to non-violence. He who runs may see that if the campaign that has hitherto remained wholly untainted by violence retains its character, victory in the near future is a certainty. Not only will the salt-tax go, but the other difficulties in our progress towards swaraj will also vanish like smoke, in the pure air of non-violence.

Young India, 27-3-1930
An unknown English friend has thought it worth while cabling to me that in launching upon civil disobedience I am going against the teaching of Jesus: “Render unto Caesar that which is Caesar’s”. Another, an Indian Christian, writes from the Punjab somewhat in the same fashion and, forsaking charity, pours abuse upon my devoted head for my action. He says further that whereas he considered me to be a good man formerly, he is now utterly undeceived. I can reassure this friend that civil disobedience is no new thing with me. I began to preach and practise it in 1906. His regard for me therefore was evidently from ignorance, if his present dislike of me is wise. But I have learnt from the New Testament, as also from other sources, that if one wishes to walk in the fear of God, one should be indifferent about popular praise or blame.

Now for the question. As I hold my conduct to be in utter agreement with universal religion and as I hold the New Testament teaching in great esteem, I should not like it to be justly said of me that I was going against the teaching of Jesus. “Render unto Caesar” was quoted against me before too. I have not read into the celebrated verse the meaning that my critics have sought to put into it. Jesus evaded the direct question put to him because it was a trap. He was in no way bound to answer it. He therefore asked to see the coin for taxes. And then said with withering scorn, “How can you who traffic in Caesar’s coins and thus receive what to you are benefits of Caesar’s rule refuse to pay taxes?” Jesus’s whole preaching and practice point unmistakably to non-co-operation, which necessarily includes nonpayment of taxes. Jesus never recognized man’s authority as against God’s. He who disregarded the whole host of priesthood, which was in those days superior to kinghood, would not have hesitated to defy the might of emperors had he found it necessary. And did he not treat with supreme disdain the whole of the farcical trial through which he was made to pass?

Lastly, let me warn honest friends against running into the trap of literalism. The “letter” surely “killeth”, it is the “spirit” that “giveth life”. In the present case I find no difficulty in reading into the text a satisfactory meaning. But it would matter little to me that some text should confound me, if there was no mistaking the spirit of the whole teaching of a book respected as among the world’s religious scriptures.

Young India, 27-3-1930
521. DUTY OF DISLOYALTY

There is no halfway house between active loyalty and active disloyalty. There is much truth in the late Justice Stephen’s remark that a man to prove himself not guilty of disaffection must prove himself to be actively affectionate. In these days of democracy there is no such thing as active loyalty to a person. You are therefore loyal or disloyal to institutions. When therefore you are disloyal you seek not to destroy persons but institutions. The present State is an institution which, if one knows it, can never evoke loyalty. It is corrupt. Many of its laws governing the conduct of persons are positively inhuman. Their administration is worse. Often the will of one person is the law. It may safely be said that there are as many rulers as there are districts in this country. These, called Collectors, combine in their own persons the executive as well as the judicial functions. Though their acts are supposed to be governed by laws in themselves highly defective, these rulers are often capricious and regulated by nothing but their own whims and fancies. They represent not the interests of the people but those of their foreign masters or principals. These (nearly three hundred) men form an almost secret corporation, the most powerful in the world. They are required to find a fixed minimum of revenue, they have therefore often been found to be most unscrupulous in their dealings with the people. This system of government is confessedly based upon a merciless exploitation of unnumbered millions of the inhabitants of India. From the village Headmen to their personal assistants these satraps have created a class of subordinates who, whilst they cringe before their foreign masters, in their constant dealings with the people act so irresponsibly and so harshly as to demoralize them and by a system of terrorism render them incapable of resisting corruption. It is then the duty of those who have realized the awful evil of the system of Indian Government to be disloyal to it and actively and openly to preach disloyalty. Indeed, loyalty to a State so corrupt is a sin, disloyalty a virtue.

The spectacle of three hundred million people being cowed down by living in the dread of three hundred men is demoralizing alike for the despot as for the victims. It is the duty of those who have realized the evil nature of the system however attractive some of its features may, torn from their context, appear to be, to destroy it without delay. It is their clear duty to run any risk to achieve the end.

But it must be equally clear that it would be cowardly for three hundred million people to seek to destroy the three hundred authors or administrators of the system. It is a sign of gross ignorance to devise means of destroying these administrators or their hirelings. Moreover they are but creatures of circumstances. The purest man entering the system will be affected by it and will be instrumental in propagating the evil. The remedy therefore naturally is not being enraged against the administrators and therefore hurting them, but to non-co-operate with the system by withdrawing all the voluntary assistance possible and refusing all its so-called benefits. A little reflection will show that civil disobedience is a necessary part of non-co-operation. You assist an administration most effectively by obeying its orders and decrees. An evil administration never deserves such allegiance. Allegiance to it means partaking of the evil. A good man will therefore resist an evil system or administration with his whole soul. Disobedience of the law of an evil State is therefore a duty. Violent disobedience deals with men who can be replaced. It leaves the evil itself untouched and often accentuates it. Non-violent, i.e., civil, disobedience is the only and the most successful remedy and is obligatory upon him who would dissociate himself from evil.

There is danger in civil disobedience only because it is still only a partially tried remedy and has always to be tried in an atmosphere surcharged with violence. For when tyranny is rampant much rage is generated among the victims. It remains latent because of their weakness and bursts in all its fury on the slightest pretext. Civil disobedience is a sovereign method of transmuting this undisciplined life-destroying latent energy into disciplined life-saving energy whose use ensures absolute success. The attendant risk is nothing compared to the result promised. When the world has become familiar with its use and when it has had a series of demonstrations of its successful working, there will be less risk in civil disobedience than there is in aviation, in spite of that science having reached a high stage of development.

Young India, 27-3-1930

522. VOLUNTEERS’ PLEDGE

The A.I.C.C has framed a brief pledge for volunteers. It had necessarily to be the simplest possible. We may not expect hundreds of thousands to sign meticulous pledges. Beyond therefore signing the Congress creed, which includes non-violence and truth as I translate the expression ‘peaceful and legitimate’, and beyond the undertaking to obey orders, the pledge contains nothing more. Later on, when the whole mass of people join, there will be no pledges. There will then be many silent nameless heroes; if there will also be some bad or weak men. Let it be also understood that the pledge is an application. It does not entitle the applicant to be admitted for the mere signing of the form. Let it be remembered too that the old stringent forms are in no case superseded. The present form is devised for the emergency. The responsibility of recruiting officers is indeed great. The form in no way means that we have now said goodbye to communal unity, khaddar, or removal of the evil of untouchability and drink and drugs. It means that these things are an integral part of the Congress. Only in bringing into the Congress fold thousands of men and women for the fight for swaraj we present to them a simple formula in the certain belief that those who are controlling the Congress will not, in any shape or form, water down the integral parts of the Congress programme. The present plan is based upon implicit trust in the Congress organization being run with absolute honesty. Lastly it should not be forgotten that these volunteers do not become Congress voters.

Young India, 27-3-1930

523. SOME SUGGESTIONS

The resolution passed by the A.I.C.C. at its Ahmedabad meeting throws the burden on me of giving the signal for starting civil disobedience all over the country, assuming that I am kept free till I reach Dandi. The reason is obvious. The A.I.C.C. wishes to take every reasonable precaution against mishaps. In the event of my arrest, it would be dangerous to stop the movement. Before my arrest, the A.I.C.C. will not anticipate me. So far as I can judge now, the workers may assume that the date for making an all-India start will be the 6th of April. It is the day of commencement of the national week. It is the day of satyagraha that in 1919 witnessed a mass awakening unknown before. The seven days that followed witnessed some dark deeds on our part and culminated in the inhuman Jallianwala massacre. If all goes well I should reach Dandi on April 5th. April 6th therefore appears to me to be the most natural day for commencing satyagraha. But the workers, while they may make preparations, must await the final word.

The release of the embargo however does not mean that every province or every district is bound at once to commence civil disobedience although it may not be ready and although its First Servant does not feel the inner urge. He will refuse to be hustled into action if he has no confidence in himself or in his immediate surroundings. No one will be blamed for inaction, but blame will most decidedly descend upon the shoulders of him who instead of controlling the surroundings is carried away by them.
What we all are after is mass civil disobedience. It cannot be made. It must be spontaneous, if it is to deserve the name and if it is to be successful. And there certainly will be no mass response where the ground has not been previously tilled, manured and watered. The greatest precaution has to be taken everywhere against an outbreak of violence. Whilst it is true, as I have said, that civil resistance this time will continue even though violence may break out, it is equally true that violence on our part will harm the struggle and retard its progress. Two opposite forces can never work concurrently so as to help each other. The plan of civil disobedience has been conceived to neutralize and ultimately entirely to displace violence and enthrone non-violence in its stead, to replace hatred by love, to replace strife by concord.

The meaning then of not suspending the fight in spite of any outbreak of violence simply is that votaries of non-violence will allow themselves, will even seek, to be consumed in the flames if any should rise. They will not care to remain helpless witnesses either of the organized violence of the Government or of the sporadic violence of an enraged group or nation. The workers will therefore take, in each province, all precautions humanly possible and then plunge into the fight even though in so doing they run the greatest risks imaginable. It follows that everywhere there will be willing submission to the judgment of those who may be in their own provinces known for their belief in non-violence as an article of faith for the purpose of gaining Purna Swaraj.

There has been talk of disobeying other laws. The proposal has not attracted me. I believe in concentrating attention upon the salt laws. Salt mines are to be found almost everywhere. The idea is not to manufacture salt in salable quantities but through manufacture and otherwise to commit a deliberate and open breach of salt laws.

The chaukidari tax laws have been suggested for possible disobedience. This tax does not in my opinion comply with the conditions that the salt tax fulfils. The idea is to disobey such laws as are bad for all time as far as can be seen today. We do not want the salt tax even under swaraj. Chaukidari tax is perhaps not such a tax. We may need chaukidars even under swaraj. If such is the case, it may be wise not to touch that tax so long as we have other taxes or other laws to combat.

Then there are the forest laws. I have not studied them. I must therefore write with reserve. There can be no doubt that we do not want our forests to be destroyed altogether or wood to be cut uneconomically. There is a need, I have little doubt, for mending these laws. There is greater need perhaps for humaner administration of these laws. The reform may well await the establishment of swaraj. Nor so far as I am aware has there been any popular education about the grievances arising out of these laws or their administration.

Closely allied to the forests are grazing areas. I do not know that regulations governing their use are so irksome as to be a just grievance.

Much better from my standpoint is the picketing of liquor shops, opium dens and foreign-cloth shops. Though picketing is not by itself illegal, past experience shows that the Government will want to suppress all effective picketing. That does not much matter. We are out to resist it wherever we can, consistently with our creed. But I fear the unscrupulous behaviour of liquor dealers and the ignorant wrath of foreign-cloth dealers. I should like public opinion to consolidate itself more fully around these two evils and would like workers to undertake more systematic education of the dealers as also of their customers. We have to eradicate both the evils some day or other. Wherever, therefore, workers have confidence in their ability to carry on picketing without taking undue risks of the type I have mentioned, they should start the campaign, but in no case because they must be doing something when the word is given for action and because they do not see their way to take up the salt laws. It seems to me to be the safest thing to take up the latter for the time being; what I have said above is merely by way of caution. Wherever workers feel that they have the real inner call for action and are themselves free from violence, they are at liberty, as soon as the word is given, to take up such civil disobedience as they may consider necessary and desirable, subject of course to the A.I.C.C. control.

Meanwhile between now and the 6th of April the provinces should lose no time in making their preparation for mobilization.

Young India, 27-3-1930

524. NOTES

SCARCITY OF KHADDAR

There is naturally nowadays a run on khaddar and letters are being received at the A.I.S.A. office that there is going to be shortage of khaddar in the near future. This is as it should be. The remedy is for full khaddarites to cut down their requirements, for converts to buy only what they need and for all to help to manufacture more khaddar. Just as there never can be scarcity of bread if there is an ensured supply of wheat, so need there be no scarcity of khaddar if there is an ensured supply of cotton. There is no danger of the supply of the cotton running out. The tragedy consists in the people needlessly believing that khaddar cannot be manufactured in our villages and streets as food is prepared in every home. People need not take up the spinning-wheel if they will take up the takli and begin spinning at once. They have then to go to the ordinary weaver and coax him to weave their yarn. If there is a proper awakening of national consciousness, the weavers will not look askance at hand-spun yarn as many of them undoubtedly do today. For such organization of khaddar on a large scale, there must be a real yearning for it among the people. Everyone will not take part in civil disobedience, but everyone can take part in the manufacture of khaddar. Let the reader know that the leaders in the civil disobedience campaign all over the country are, in the vast majority of cases, derived from confirmed khaddarites. Their withdrawal from khaddar manufacture will tend seriously to tell upon the output of khaddar unless people take to self-spinning and self-help generally.

MIRABAI NOT MANAGER

I observe that papers persistently report that Shrimati Mirabai Slade is managing the Ashram as its head in my place. This is not true. The Ashram has been now for a long time under the control of a managing board of which Mahadev Desai is the Chairman, Imam Saheb Bawazeer the Vice-Chairman and Narandas Gandhi the Secretary. Mirabai became head of the sanitary department as other women took up other departments in order to relieve the men joining me in the march. She is also taking her due share in teaching the infant class and rendering such other service as may be required. What she will ultimately be, no one can tell, she least of all. Suffice it for the reader to know that she has thrown in her lot with the Ashram and me for all time to come. Her desire for serving India is an overmastering passion. It was a privilege to receive her in the Ashram. Over four years of closest contact have not diminished the affection she evoked in me when I knew nothing about her parentage, and knew her only through her two reticent letters which I had received when she first applied for admission. No member of the Ashram has striven more strenuously than Mirabai to observe the rules of the Ashram and to realize its ideals. But she is not the head of the Ashram.

Young India, 27-3-1930

525. THE LAW OF THE SWORD

A teacher writes:¹

Reading this letter, one is reminded of the story of the wolf and the lamb. The wolf wanted to eat up the lamb anyhow and was only ¹ The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had criticized the system of land revenue introduced by the British in India.

looking for an excuse. Unable to find a better it accused the lamb’s forefathers of some guilt and ate it up. If one has land, what concern is it of the Government to investigate who the rightful owner of the land is? The Government is hungry for money and it collects the money by the strength of the sword. In the Council the bureaucracy allows lengthy debates. But there is always behind the debates the assumption that ultimately there will be no decrease in land revenue that will accrue to the Government whoever might be the rightful owners of the land.

Therefore, the real question before us is how we are going to meet this power of the sword. Shall we do it with the sword? If we have to fight the sword only with the sword, we shall remain in slavery for years and years to come; because, whatever kind of government there may be, the strength of the sword of the crores of farmers who pay land revenue cannot increase in a day. To establish the farmer’s ownership of the land, there is only one way; and that is to teach him the mantra of satyagraha. This is a power which is inherent in everyone. The farmer has only to be aware of this power. If a farmer could realize that by peacefully resisting injustice his land could be prevented from being seized by anyone, he would never fall a victim to injustice. Today, the whole of India is taking lessons in the school of satyagraha. It would be good if peasants were to join this school. Then the intricate question of the ownership of land would be solved by itself.

[From Hindi]

_Hindi Navajivan, 27-3-1930_

526. MESSAGE TO HINDUSTANI SEVA DAL

SAJOD,

_March 27, 1930_

I expect the volunteers of the Hindustani Seva Dal to stand by their pledge of non-violence under every conceivable circumstance.

_The Hindu, 29-3-1930_

527. LETTER TO MRIDULA SARABHAI

ANKLESHWAR,

_March 27, 1930_

CHI. MRIDU,

I have received your letter. I was of course intending to write to you, but some work or other kept coming up and writing to you got postponed.
The newspaper report was incorrect. Only Sumangal Prakash was really ill. The members of the Anand Mandal gave him very good treatment. Others stayed on merely to take rest. There is no such thing as opening a camp for the sick. Had it been so, I would have sent for you first. I feel that it will not be long before women too plunge into the struggle. I have no doubt at all that God will fully nourish your desire to serve. Khurshedbehn will be most probably coming to meet me. If you wish, you may come here at that time.

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11178, Courtesy Sarabhai Foundation

528. SPEECH AT PRAYER MEETING, SAJOD

[March 27, 1930]¹

It is deplorable that we do not listen to one another. If someone listens to everyone’s advice, everyone will finally stop advising him. Each one of us should become humble and carry on. No one should find fault with others but each should seek out and rid himself of his own shortcomings. None should arrogantly believe that because everything has gone on well so far, we have as good as arrived at Dandi. Who knows what will happen tomorrow or the very next moment? On the night prior to the coronation, Shri Ramachandra and the people were under the impression that it would take place the following morning, but God’s ways are inscrutable. Hence we should not fail to remember God every moment. When setting out from the Ashram, the condition was laid down that those who wished to leave should do so before the march began. Today I go further and say that those who wish to leave before we reach Dandi may do so. It is all right even if I alone stick on. I shall keep smiling. If the world criticizes me, I shall join in that criticism and conclude that I merit the charge of being stupid. However, despite this, I shall fight alone and continue to prepare salt.

From today, the first batch will form the rear and the line will begin with the batch which is at the tail end now. Those who are unwell or weak or are bothered by dust may go ahead and rest at the next halt or may follow later. If crowds of people try to rush in, we should make up the rear of the line. We shall have no difficulties if we do so. Perhaps they, too, will understand and make things easy for us.

¹ Extracted from “Dharma Yatra”
² The speech was delivered one day after Gandhiji and party left Ankleshwar, which was on March 26.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 13-4-1930

529. SPEECH AT SAJOD

March 27, 1930

Tomorrow morning the tour of the Broach District will be over, and it will be proper to sum up my impressions at this place. If we are to depend for swaraj on what has been done so far, it will take us very long to win it, because it cannot be secured by mere attendance at meetings or by large numbers joining the civil disobedience movement against the salt tax. The achievement in the field of constructive work is very meagre in other districts indeed, but here also it is just as poor. We have not achieved complete boycott of foreign cloth and have not succeeded in popularizing khadi. The entry in the column for the quantity of khadi produced is nil. You have a rich crop of cotton in this district, but you put it to no use yourselves. Consumption of liquor has spread widely. Even in these circumstances, however, I have the hope that this movement will bring about a great awakening among us. The use of khadi is spreading widely in the whole of India. If, in consequence of this, there is shortage of khadi, you can even help in producing more of it. After I leave this place they may or may not let me reach Dandi, but take it from me that the salt tax is gone. If you start doing all that I have suggested, I believe we shall have stormed and won not merely the fort of the salt tax but many other forts as well. As I have the blessings of you all, this monstrous salt tax—no adjectives can be strong enough to describe it—is bound to be abolished. If you produce and spread the required climate by boycotting foreign cloth, we will win the next fort. That is, we shall win Rs. 60 crores. Through liquor and opium we have been throwing away Rs. 25 crores for the privilege of becoming mad. That third fort also we will certainly win, but only if you give up drinking. Rs. 60 crores for foreign cloth, Rs. 25 crores for intoxicants and Rs. 6 crores for the salt tax—if we save all this money our faces will beam with lustre and swaraj will be won in no time. The salt tax is as good as gone, and hence those of you who do not wish to join the present movement should all co-operate and help in these two matters. I request all brothers and sisters here to give up foreign cloth and wear khadi. Understand what your true duty is.

[From Gujarati]
Prajabandhu, 30-3-1930
530. SPEECH AT MANGAROL

March 27, 1930

Let us be under no delusion. As long as we accept the presence of God’s hand behind all things, we may keep up our courage and self-confidence and believe the abolition of salt tax a certainty. So far we had been untrue to our salt, but now we must be true to it. It was only on the 12th that we started talking about breaking the salt law. But we have been speaking of two or three other things since 1920. If you remember, according to the Bezwada Congress programme, we were to have two million spinning-wheels working and to boycott all foreign cloth. How much of that have we accomplished? This is a painful, shameful thing. The same can be said about the drink habit. Liquor is being freely consumed. In regard to these two, we believe that we shall be able to enforce them only when we have captured power. But take it from me that the power to remove this Government will drop into our hands when we do away with the evils of foreign cloth and liquor. If we mean to work, here is work for us. All men in this village eat salt; let them manufacture salt for their own use. Even children should openly steal salt, as it were. Let us burn foreign cloth and buy khadi to wear in its place, or manufacture it with our own hands. At the same time, we should see the licence-holders running liquor booths and persuade them to close the booths. We shall then enjoy fighting for swaraj and become really interested in swaraj. We shall win it only when we do all these things. The fight may start even before the 6th of next month. It only awaits my arrest. No sooner do they arrest me than you should start making salt. When I am arrested, you may do with only a loin-cloth but wear no foreign cloth at all. I repeat even today my old slogan: swaraj hangs by the hand-spun yarn and the khadi woven from it.

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 30-3-1930

531. LETTER TO SHANTIKUMAR MORARJEE

RAYMA,

March 28, 1930

CHI. SHANTIKUMAR,

You are often in my thoughts. Father’s watch, which is always hanging from my waist, constantly reminds me of him. The enclosed is among the letters which Mahadev has sent to me to see. I pass it on to you, as it contains a reference to Father. It need not be returned.
I hope you maintain your peace of mind even in the midst of this calamity. Has the burden now lightened somewhat? Do write to me. If you wish the letter to reach me during the march, it may be sent to Surat. If sent to the Ashram, it will be forwarded to me.

Is grandmother at peace with herself? Do not fail to write to me. God bless you.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 4717. Courtesy: Shantikumar Morarjee

---

532. _SPEECH AT RAYMA_¹

_March 28, 1930_

I cannot live in a district where salt cannot be prepared. So although I am conscious of the affection you have all shown me I have to proceed to Dandi. Although I find it difficult to leave this district, I must go to Dandi and break the law. If on the 12th we can oppose this tax with the blessings of all, Hindus, Muslims, Christians and Parsis, we may take the law as abolished. All of you, Hindus and Muslims, should unite and start making large quantities of salt on the 6th. If the Government chooses to do so, it can even levy a tax on the mud that is dug out of the ground; so why should we pay this tax that it levies on salt? Just as poor women go about selling _babul_ twigs which we use for cleaning our teeth, let us all set forth and sell salt to everyone. Shall we not even do this much for the poor millions? History has no instance of a tax as cruel as the salt tax. However, we shall not secure swaraj as soon as the salt duty is abolished. We have to become alert and do other things. We have to get rid of foreign cloth. It is not enough that we wear khadi made in the Punjab. Every one of us should spin for himself and have cloth made out of that yarn. It is our stupidity that we do not all—from children to old men—engage ourselves in this simple and beautiful task. This bespeaks disloyalty towards our country. We can win swaraj immediately by getting rid of foreign cloth and liquor. After having won independence for India, we shall carry out our tasks from the seat of office. Hence by participating in this salt satyagraha and by accomplishing these two other objectives—the latter by those who cannot participate in the struggle itself—you should demonstrate the fact that the Broach district is wholly engaged in India’s freedom struggle.

[From Gujarati]
_Prajabandhu, 30-3-1930_

¹ Delivered at 3.30 p.m.
533. SPEECH TO VOLUNTEERS

[March 28, 1930]

This is the last week of our pilgrimage. At its very beginning, let us all wash away our sins. We have come across a river while crossing the boundary of each district. We regard a river as sacred. A river is after all an external sign of purification. We should become pure even with its help, we should become humble. We have looked upon Dandi as Hardwar. Let us become worthy of entering a place as holy as Hardwar.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 13-4-1930

534. SPEECH AT UMRACHHI

March 28, 1930

If a man wishes to undertake a march at the age of sixty-one, he should go to the Himalayas, so that he can at least attain moksha, at least have darshan of God. But I have learnt an opposite dharma. I want to have this darshan through this march only. After having had darshan of you, I beg you also to participate in it. This is so because so long as we do not succeed in overthrowing the Satanic Government that exists in the country, we are all participants in it. Such participants will not attain moksha even if they go to Dhaulagiri. The darshan of God is fraught with difficulties. He dwells in the hearts of thirty crores of people. If you wish to catch a glimpse of Him there, you should establish total identification with their hearts. These thirty crores include all the skeletons of Orissa, Muslims, Parsis, Christians, Sikhs, men and women. We shall continue to be atheists and not believers so long as we do not achieve this unity with every section of the community. Hence I thought to myself that even at the age of sixty-one, I must not rest in peace. How can there be any rest for me so long as this Empire is not destroyed? Until today I held my peace; I used to listen to and suffer hosts of friends. I was afraid lest people take to the wrong path. What if people did not listen to me? I felt, however, that I was a coward. This was a weakness of my spirit. What right did I have to distrust people?

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 6-4-1930

---

1 Extracted from “Dharma Yatra”
2 Gandhiji made these remarks when he and the party crossed the river Keem into Surat district, which was on March 28.
3 Extracted from “Swaraj Gita”
I have been asked to deliver a sermon. I have little fitness for the task. But tonight I propose to make a confession and turn the searchlight inward. You may call this introspection a sermon if you like.

India in general and you in particular are acquainted with one part of my nature. Moreover, more than in any other part of Gujarat, in this district are concentrated workers who have come in closest touch with me. They know this habit of mine from personal experience.

I am plain-spoken. I have not hesitated to describe the mountain-high faults of the Government in appropriate language. And I have not hesitated often to picture as mountain-high our faults appearing to us as trifling. You know, the common rule is to see our own big lapses as tiny nothings. And when we do realize our blemishes somewhat, we at once pass them on to the broad shoulders of God and say He will take care of them; and then with safety thus assured we proceed from lapse to lapse. But as you know I have disregarded this rule for years. So doing, I have hurt the feelings of many friends and even lost some of them. Tonight I have to repeat the painful operation. ²

I have already told the group of people who are accompanying me that this is the last week of our march. As we shall reach our destination next Saturday, we shall not have to march any further. But we shall be faced with another task. During this last week we shall have to go through Surat district.

Only this morning at prayer time I was telling my companions that as we had entered the district in which we were to offer civil disobedience, we should insist on greater purification and intenser dedication. I warned them that as the district was more organized and contained many intimate co-workers, there was every likelihood of our being pampered. I warned them against succumbing to their pampering. We are not angels. We are very weak, easily tempted. There are many lapses to our debit. God is great. Even today

---

1. This appeared in Young India under the title “Turning the Searchlight Inward” with the following note from Gandhiji: “At Bhatgam (Dist. Surat) on 29th ultimo I delivered an introspective speech which moved both the audience and me deeply. As it turned out to be an important speech, I give a free and somewhat condensed translation below.”

2. The paragraph that follows has been translated from Navajivan, 6-4-1930.
some were discovered. One defaulter confessed his lapse himself whilst I was brooding over the lapses of the pilgrims. I discovered that my warning was given none too soon. The local workers had ordered milk from Surat to be brought in a motor lorry and they had incurred other expenses which I could not justify. I therefore spoke strongly about them. But that did not allay my grief. On the contrary it increased with the contemplation of the wrongs done.

In the light of these discoveries, what right had I to write to the Viceroy the letter in which I have severely criticized his salary which is more than 5,000 times our average income? How could he possibly do justice to that salary? And how can we tolerate his getting a salary out of all proportion to our income? But he is individually not to be blamed for it. He has no need for it. God has made him a wealthy man. I have suggested in my letter that probably the whole of his salary is spent in charity. I have since learnt that my guess is largely likely to be true. Even so, of course, I should resist the giving of such a large salary. I could not vote Rs. 21,000 per month, not perhaps even Rs. 2,100 per month. But when could I offer such resistance? Certainly not if I was myself taking from the people an unconscionable toll. I could resist it only if my living bore some correspondence with the average income of the people. We are marching in the name of God. We profess to act on behalf of the hungry, the naked and the unemployed. I have no right to criticize the Viceregal salary if we are costing the country, say, fifty times seven pice, the average daily income of our people. I have asked the workers to furnish me with an account of the expenses. And the way things are going, I should not be surprised if each of us is costing something near fifty times seven pice. What else can be the result if they will fetch for me from whatever source possible, the choicest oranges and grapes, if they will bring 120 when I should want 12 oranges, if when I need one pound of milk, they will produce three? What else can be the result if we would take all the dainties you may place before us under the excuse that we would hurt your feeling if we did not take them? You give us guavas and grapes and we eat them because they are a free gift from a princely farmer. And then imagine me with an easy conscience writing the Viceregal letter on costly glazed paper with a fountain pen, a free gift from some accommodating friend! Will this behove you and me? Can letter so written produce the slightest effect?

To live thus would be to illustrate the immortal verse of Akho Bhagat, who says that “stolen food is like eating unprocessed mercury”. And to live above the means befitting a poor country is to live on stolen food. This battle can never be won by living on stolen food. Nor did I bargain to set out on this march for living above our means. We expect thousands of volunteers to respond to the call. It will be impossible to keep them on extravagant terms. My life has become so busy that I get little time to come in close touch even with the eighty companions so as to be able to identify them individually. There was therefore no course open to me but to unburden my soul in public. I expect you to understand the central point of my message. If you have not, there is no hope of swaraj through the present effort. We must become real trustees of the dumb millions.

I have exposed our weaknesses to the public gaze. I have not yet given you all the details, but I have told you enough to enable you to realize our unworthiness to write the letter to the Viceroy.

Now the local co-workers will understand my agony. Weak, ever exposed to temptations, ever failing, why will you tempt us and pamper us? We may not introduce these incandescent burners in our villages. It is enough that one hundred thousand men prey upon three hundred millions. But how will it be when we begin to prey upon one another? In that event dogs will lick our corpses.

These lights are merely a sample of the extravagance I have in mind. My purpose is to wake you up from torpor. Let the volunteers account for every pice spent. I am more capable of offering satyagraha against ourselves than against the Government. I have taken many years before embarking upon civil resistance against the Government. But I should not take as many days for offering it against ourselves. The risk to be incurred is nothing compared to what has to be incurred in the present satyagraha.

Therefore in your hospitality towards servants like us, I would have you to be miserly rather than lavish. I shall not complain of unavoidable absence of things. In order to procure goat's milk for me you may not deprive poor women of milk for their children. It would be like poison if you did. Nor may milk and vegetables be brought from Surat. We can do without them if necessary. Do not resort to motor-cars on the slightest pretext. The rule is, do not ride if you can walk. This is not a battle to be conducted with money. It will be impossible to sustain a mass movement with money. Anyway it is beyond me to conduct the campaign with a lavish display of money.

Extravagance has no room in this campaign. If we cannot gather crowds unless we carry on a hurricane expensive propaganda, I would be satisfied to address half a dozen men and women.¹

It will be said that in that case reports will not appear in newspapers. I wish to tell you once and for all that this campaign will not succeed through newspaper reports, but with the assistance of Shri Rama. And, no light is necessary when we are near Him; neither are pen and ink and such other accessories required, nor even speech. An appeal can be made to Him even if one has lost one’s limbs.

¹ The paragraph that follows has been translated from Navajivan, 6-4-1930.

We may not consider anybody low. I observed that you had provided for the night journey a heavy kerosene burner mounted on a stool which a poor labourer carried on his head. This was a humiliating sight. This man was being goaded to walk fast. I could not bear the sight. I therefore put on speed and outraced the whole company. But it was no use. The man was made to run after me. The humiliation was complete. If the weight had to be carried, I should have loved to see someone among ourselves carrying it. We would then soon dispense both with the stool and the burner. No labourer would carry such a load on his head. We rightly object to begar (forced labour). But what was this if it was not begar? Remember that in swaraj we would expect one drawn from the so-called lower class to preside over India’s destiny. If then we do not quickly mend our ways, there is no swaraj such as you and I have put before the people.

From my outpouring you may not infer that I shall weaken in my resolve to carry on the struggle. It will continue no matter how co-workers or others act. For me there is no turning back whether I am alone or joined by thousands. I would rather die a dog’s death and have my bones licked by dogs than that I should return to the Ashram a broken man.¹

I admit that I have not well used the money you have given out of the abundance of your love. You are entitled to regard me as one of those wretches described in the verses sung in the beginning. Shun me.

Young India, 3-4-1930

536. LIMITS OF BOYCOTT

In my speeches during this march I have said quite a lot about boycott. I have no idea how the newspapers have reported those parts of my speeches. It is necessary to consider and lay down the limits of boycott here as the subject is an important one. As this struggle is a sacred, truthful and non-violent one, that is to say, as it is a religious struggle, it is absolutely essential that no mistake should be made consciously or otherwise. Even the minutest error committed cannot

¹ Gandhiji here says: “Turning to the women, I concluded and nearly broke down as I finished the last sentences.”
Boycott has been working in two ways: one is directed against the Government officials and the other against those who do not respect public opinion—for instance, Headmen and such other persons.

It is necessary, indeed it is our duty, not to bow to the official when he visits our village and not to go and pay homage to him. Non-co-operation implies that we should not attend to this official’s needs and provide no facilities to him. A bullock-cart-owner should not put his cart at his disposal. The potter should not fetch drinking water for him, the grocer should not provide him with any provisions, and the Headman should not give him a mattress belonging either to the village or to himself. This is so because the official expects these facilities by virtue of his office. The purpose behind not providing these facilities is not to impose any hardship on him but to put an end to his authority and it may also involve an element of civil disobedience.

What if the official is dying of hunger or suffering pain and no one is there to attend on him? At such a time, even at the cost of personal inconvenience, we should serve him. For instance, if his car breaks down, and he is in need of food, we should provide him food and not expect any money in return if he does not happen to have any. Supposing he is suddenly taken ill and there is no one to attend on him, we should nurse him with as much care as we would show in nursing our own relatives. We bear him no ill will as a human being. We hate his administration. The Government has not so far become insane, as it has not had to put up with much inconvenience in carrying on the administration. However, once it is really inconvenienced, there is every possibility of its becoming so and transgressing all bounds. It is possible that when this does take place, its officials will be ordered forcibly to exact anything they need from the public. At such a time full use could be made of boycott as explained above. At such a time we realize that boycott is surely our dharma. The official assumes that by virtue of his office the people are obliged to provide all facilities for him. People would be said to have set themselves free only when they can disprove this belief and in the process put up with any hardships that they may have to face. They will be said to have triumphed when they do not yield to such force. Today boycott can be regarded as being extremely simple. However, even when Government officials receive permission to commit robbery and the people, despite the fact that they have been rendered penniless, do not voluntarily give even a twig to be used as a toothbrush, they will be regarded as having carried out their duty of boycott. However, it should be borne in mind that even when this does occur, if the official is placed in a difficult situation and the authorities do not come to his rescue, we should attend to his needs. This should be considered an occasion for practising the same towards a friend and an enemy. For a satyagrahi there are no enemies in this world, he cannot have any, he should not regard anyone as such. He would boycott even his own son or father if either of these two happened to be an official. For a satyagrahi, there should be no distinction between his own relatives and those holding no such relationship. He would never do to others what he would not do to his own relatives. Let us now take the case of a Headman. Although the entire village wants him to resign, he does not have the courage to do so, or he does not wish to do so out of self-interest. He should not be boycotted on this ground. Such boycott would amount to coercion. Compelling the Headman to resign would amount to making him forcibly perform a meritorious deed. But there can be no use of force, so far as our dharma is concerned. A democratic form of government can never be established by getting anyone to do something by force. To use such force on this nation which is half-dead would be a great sin and, considering the matter solely from the point of view of expediency, we shall see that we shall never be able to serve our purpose by the use of such force. Whether we succeed or not, such force is nothing but violence. Whether the Headman resigns or not is for him to choose. It would be a good thing if he did so yielding to public opinion, but force cannot be used against him if he does not resign. But he cannot exercise his authority; he cannot make the people do anything whatsoever for him by virtue of his authority. He has a dual role to play: he is an official and he is a villager. He will not get any services as an official; as a villager he has a right to get provisions, etc., which he wants. To refuse him these amounts to compelling him to resign. A satyagrahi cannot do so.

The people have a right to carry on a limited social boycott of those who defy public opinion and at times it becomes their duty to do so. Society should not honour a Headman who clings to his office for selfish reasons; in other words, although it would meet its daily requirements, it would sever all other connections with him; people would not attend marriages in his home, decline invitations to dinners from him and although they would share his sorrows, they would refuse to share in his enjoyments. There should be neither bitterness, nor ill will nor violence in such boycott. What should we do if the Headman happens to be our own brother? We should give him the treatment that we would expect from society for ourselves.
We have now considered three types of boycott:
1. boycott of officials because of their office;
2. boycott through use of force of such persons as Headmen; and
3. limited boycott of such persons as the Headmen who refuse to respect public opinion.

The first type of boycott deserves to be practised; it is our dharma to do so. Only those who have courage should practise it. It is well to remember that such boycott may result in occasions when we shall have to put up with extreme hardships. At present the Congress does not ask for such boycott. This latter has already begun in certain parts of Gujarat as the Gujaratis are used to it and have developed a good ability to practise it. It is the special dharma of Gujarat to do so in view of Sardar Vallabhbhai’s imprisonment. However, those who cannot continue to carry it on at the critical hour should not do so as there is no harm in their not practising it. It will be harmful, however, if it is given up once it has begun.

The second type of boycott involving the use of force is always to be eschewed, as it involves violence, and there is every possibility of its doing great harm to the people.

The third, that is, limited boycott, is well worth practising. In every task which the satyagrahi undertakes, he has himself to bear suffering but he must never make the opponent suffer. The former is helpless if in the course of his own suffering or his practising his dharma, the opponent has to suffer or put up with inconvenience.

At present what I ask of the people is civil disobedience of the salt law. If nothing more can be done, let everyone sit quiet but it will be both dangerous and harmful if they retreat after having taken a step forward.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 30-3-1930

537. ABOUT HEADMEN AND MATADARS

Since so many Headmen and Matadars have handed in their resignations, the need has arisen to write something about them. I have heard so many rumours concerning these resignations that I myself have doubts about their veracity. If the resignations have been tendered without pressure, they are indeed very valuable. However, as compared to the services of Sardar, against whose imprisonment they are a protest, they have little value. The Gujarat for which Sardar Vallabhbhai has sacrificed his all—any sacrifice that Gujarat may make will not be too great. Although Sardar has sacrificed his all for Gujarat, his ultimate goal is swaraj. Hence Gujarat should make all possible efforts for it.

Let us examine the office of Headman from this standpoint. I did not understand its implications before as clearly as I do now. The Headman is the policeman or the Headman. It is through him that the Government collects the revenue and it is through him that it exercises its authority. Mamlatdars and other officers would become ineffective without him. It is not just anyone who is appointed a Headman, but only one who carries weight in the village. A register of such persons is maintained in Government offices and they are known as Matadars. It is from among these persons that Headmen are appointed by rotation for a period of five years. The Government pays a certain sum annually to these Matadars, amounting to about four or five rupees as allowance. A Headman gets a sum of thirty to fifty rupees every year as nazrana. I use the word nazrana. No one regards it as salary. The amount received by the Headman is not of any great consequence to him, as ordinarily he is a well-to-do person. While considering what term should be used for this amount given to him, I called it nazrana. The Amir of Afghanistan also receives a nazrana. However, I am aware that there is a great deal of difference between the nazrana received by the Amir and that given to the Headman. While the former consists of a large sum, the latter is a small one. There are other differences also. Nevertheless, the purpose underlying both these payments is to gain a hold upon the recipients.

Why do Headmen and Matadars get committed in this manner? It is certainly not for the purpose of enjoying an empty office, but because the office will enhance their prestige and because they can use their status in order to get money out of it. This cannot be done with honesty. It necessarily involves dishonesty. Hence, the office of Headman implies that by accepting this office the person concerned ceases to be the village mahajan and protector, and preys upon the villagers. It is not my intention to say that all Headmen are like this. But this is a conclusion I have reached after talking to a large number of Headmen.

Such Headmanship and Matadarship should be given up not for the sake of Sardar or swaraj, but rather for the sake of one’s dharma and morality. These two classes of persons can make a significant contribution to the movement for self-purification that is on in the country at the moment. Others may advance the excuse that they have to earn their livelihood, but this does not apply in the case of these Headmen and Matadars. For them, it is like giving up titles. It is for

---

1 Allowance or bounty
this reason that I have described this situation as a garbage heap and the description is fitting. May the Headmen and the Matadars save themselves from this.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 30-3-1930

538. LETTER TO SUMANGAL PRAKASH

March 30, 1930

CHI. SUMANGAL,

I have your letter. You should both come to Surat on Tuesday. Anyone at the station will direct you to the place of our stay. We shall all be reaching Surat late at night.

Blessings from
BAPU

SIT. SUMANGAL PRAKASH
SEVASHRAM
BROACH, B.B. & C.I. RLY.

539. SPEECH IN OLPAD TALUK

[On or before March 30, 1930]

I feel that in this struggle for freedom, the contribution of women will exceed that of men. Even today, women are making a far greater contribution to the Charkha Sangh. It is the women who operate the one lakh or one lakh and a half spinning-wheels that are plying in fifteen hundred villages. It is on account of the skill of women that we can get the fine khadi made in Andhra. I tell you that it is absolutely true to say that swaraj is tied to a strand of yarn. These are the words of Brahma. Hence, whether we wish to boycott foreign cloth through the means of khadi or through mill-made cloth, it is women who are the spinners. Therefore, it is women who will play a larger part in the non-violent struggle for swaraj and children of the future will say that it was their mothers and sisters who had played the more significant role. You are capable of doing this. However, you should not touch a spinning-wheel if you do not know what compassion is.

1 Extracted from “Swaraj Gita”
2 Gandhiji entered Olpad Taluk on March 28 and left it on March 31, 1930, but the 31st was Silence Day for him.
Even in the cause of prohibition, if young girls come forward in the same manner as Mithubehn, you can make Olpad a dry area. If men approach drunkards, the latter will resort to obscene language; however, if young girls approach them and question them as to why they drink, ask them what indeed they are up to, whether it befits them under the influence of drink to fail to recognize a mother or a daughter, than on hearing such words steeped in affection, even the worst of drunkards will hang his head in shame and he will possibly burst into tears, and will take a vow in the name of Rama to give up liquor. But do Indian women have this moral fervour, this courage and this benevolence? However, I can provide this courage. Who will cast an evil eye on you if you walk straight on with the name of God on your lips? Be convinced at heart that purity itself is a shield.

[From Gujarati]
\[Navajivan, 6-4-1930\]

\section*{540. SPEECH AT SANDHIYER}

\textit{March 30, 1930}

I would like to congratulate yet another Talati who has handed in his resignation. Today, it is your special duty to cast away Government offices, regarding them as filth or refuse. You should practise your special dharma although you be imprisoned, hanged or have to starve. The Headmen of this place are especially loyal and ask others not to resign. They talk of unrealistic things. I humbly request them to hand in their resignations. You must carefully go through the article on this subject entitled “Limits of Boycott”\footnote{Vide “Limits of Boycott”, 30-3-1930.} in \textit{Navajivan}, and act on it afterunderstanding its implications. As we are practising non-co-operation against the Government, to that extent we shall have to boycott it.

Let me not talk of salt now. The tax is unjust and evil and has a long history behind it. The Government will not be able to say whether the imposition of this tax is moral or immoral. However, look upon it as already abolished. I make this statement depending upon your courage to fight. Swaraj will not be won as soon as this tax is abolished. Other tasks will have to be accomplished after this is done.

Cloth merchants of Bombay have come here today. They have realized the importance of the boycott of foreign cloth far more than they did in 1921. My thoughts are directed only towards furthering the growth of Indian villages and Indian merchants. The latter have now realized that this struggle is as much for their benefit as for that of the poor. They alone are going to be the cloth merchants in independent India. Today theirs is an inhuman occupation, whereas under swaraj it will become a divine one. What then can merchants contribute to this struggle? They say that they will import goods from Japan and not from England. However, there are two great drawbacks in doing so. In the first place, it is not because of our enmity towards the British that we refuse to buy their cloth. We wish to eschew doing so as the Britishers want to extract money from the poor masses of India by means of trade. We should not even dream that by foreign cloth we refer to British cloth. Although you have been engaged in business so long, you have been unable to understand their cunning methods of carrying on business. Perhaps you do not know how they conquered Delhi. They are able to get all they want from even the smallest hole. That is how they captured Kashmiri Gate and became masters of Delhi. The Government of the East India Company won only after this. All this is tragic history. We should not allow a single loophole for foreign cloth through which they may make entry. No one can surpass them in betrayal. If you permit Japanese goods to be imported, Britishers will send their goods via Japan. They can do so even by giving a commission to the Japanese. Hence if you allow even a single yard of cloth to be imported from abroad, bale after bale will soon be coming in. It is the business community of India that is responsible for India losing her independence and it is through the strength of this community alone that it has to be regained. Hence those who have already put in orders should bear in mind that their cloth will be lying about like unused goods. We shall get rid of even these through our self-sacrifice. Now let us take the other subject of prohibition. Shrimati Mithubehn has sacrificed so much for this. Let us all join in this cause. If all this can be achieved, we can save Rs. 60 crores on foreign cloth, Rs. 25 crores on liquor and opium, and Rs. 6 crores on salt. However, in order to do so we should have the capacity for self-sacrifice, the capacity to unite and act as a group, intellectual capacity and the capacity to think. If all this is there, swaraj is near at hand.

You are aware of the virtues of my colleagues as scavengers. Now today I wish to talk of women volunteers. One of them is the grand-daughter of Dadabhai. She arrived today. She went to the village of Sayan and asked for brooms. She found the entire village filthy. Dadabhai’s grand-daughter did not approve of the filth, so she started to sweep it away. The people who had not recognized her at first then recognized her and accorded her a very warm welcome. I do not speak of this example in order to give it publicity, but because it is worthy of imitation by all volunteers. Village sanitation is very essential today. Hence we are going to clean filthy villages. We have learnt from this lesson that she has brought swaraj near to us. I wish to sacrifice our women too. I wish to remind you that we have to effect self-purification. On the one hand we should practise civil disobedience, while on the other we should become progressively purer. May God give you the ability to understand all this.

[From Gujarati]
Prajabandhu, 6-4-1930

541. SPEECH AT DELAD¹

March 30, 1930

As has been said in the Gita, that which tastes bitter at first but is finally sweet is wholesome. Hence, although I was agitated yesterday and still am, I have not lost my peace; the fiery words of love which I had directed towards my friends, companions and the assembly were not regarded by them as such. Instead of the dazzling lights of yesterday I see small, dim lights of hurricane lanterns.

Yesterday I did not find the outer and inner peace which I find in today’s assembly. There was an artificiality in yesterday’s lights. I found no affinity between those lights and our rural life. Such lights are a consequence of contact with cities, but vast numbers of villages are hundreds of miles removed from cities or railway lines. Our idea is to serve such villages. You do not even know those villages. Perhaps there are no such villages in Gujarat. But then, is Gujarat the whole of India? It is only a fraction of India. What is Gujarat as compared to Bengal, Bihar and the United Provinces? While travelling through the last-mentioned province, one does not come across even one light at night; one only hears the barking of dogs. In comparison with the houses of Gujarat, houses there seem like ruins; one feels like crying and saying, ‘O God! are there such houses in India!’ And the people there are like skeletons. They cannot even get a mattress in the severely cold winters. They bolt the doors and just lie down covering themselves with rags. I remember those villages. Could we afford to have such lights in those villages? If a wealthy person were to give me five lamps for such villages and I were to take them there I would be committing adharma and be party to the sin to that extent. At places where the houses are like rubbish heaps and people are suffering from want of food and water, if anyone gives me the money I would first of all have wells dug and get their houses repaired, I would give them cows and spinning-wheels and, if it is convenient, also get gardens laid out. But I would certainly not take money for lights. Despite this, I am aware that because of the absence of light, about 20 lakh persons die of snakebite in such villages according to Government’s figures. And there must be many others who are not accounted for! There are neither medicines nor lights to save their lives; however, I shall not dare to take such a lamp even there. That would amount to adding to their needs. That will be like giving churma to a person who is fasting. Once anyone has added to his needs, he would go to any lengths to satisfy them. While millions of persons do not get even half a roti and enough of inferior salt, I ask myself while I eat what right I have to eat even this much. However, owing to attachment as also in the hope of doing service, I continue to take milk.

¹Extracted from “Dharma Yatra”

We have to consider our dharma. We want to face the might of a rakshasi empire, and this cannot be done either by looking upon it with contempt or by shouting loudly; it can only be done through the path of non-violence. Ahimsa may appear to be blind and crippled or clad in rags, but when God-given strength is added to it, the opponent loses his strength before it, he becomes paralyzed. We have to work with such a power, and this cannot be done with lights. I have hurt my companions by dispensing with these lights. They felt that without these the people would become restless. However, in my opinion, there was no need for such fears. The message that I am conveying to you at the moment does not appear to you to be a harsh one. Lights could not have brought about this result.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 13-4-1930

542. LETTER TO REGINALD REYNOLDS

Unrevised March 31, 1930

MY DEAR REYNOLDS,

I have been daily thinking of you and thinking of writing to you too. But time would not permit my writing. Today I must begin the day after the morning prayer with this.

I did not like your writing in the Chronicle. It is not ahimsa. The Indian Daily Mail did not deserve the notice you took of it. If the notice had to be taken, the way was bad. Why should you spoil a good case by bad adjectives? And when you have a good cause never descend to personalities. Yours is a case where the saying ‘Resist not 1

1 Kind of sweet
2 Replying to a “particularly vicious attack on Gandhiji”, the addressee had written to The Indian Daily Mail “in a sudden explosion of anger”.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
evil’ applies. It means: ‘Resist not evil with evil.’ You have neutralized the evil writing of the I.D.M. by a writing of the same kind. That you had a good case makes no difference. The I.D.M. writing was a piece of violence. You have supported your good case with counter-violence. So you see, what I want to emphasize is not merely bad manners. It is the underlying violence that worries me. Is this not quite clear to you? If it is, I would like you to promise to yourself never to write any such thing without submitting it to someone in whose non-violence you have faith. If you have realized the fundamental truth of what I have said, you will even partially mend the evil by apologizing to Wilson by writing a private note somewhat after this style: “Although I hold your charges and innuendoes to be wrong, I feel that I ought not to have adopted towards you the language I did. I want to follow Christ. I own that my conduct was not Christian. I had no right to judge you. I would feel somewhat relieved if I could have a line from you to say that you had accepted my apology.”

You have undertaken at the call of duty a great task. I do not want you to damage it on the threshold of your career.

Your writing in Young India was unexceptionable.

If my argument does not convince of course you will go on as you have begun. I know you are well able to take care of yourself. My concern was merely to elucidate the principle we hold in common.

How are you getting on? Are you keeping good health and insisting on getting what your body may need?

What is this paragraph about your engagement, etc.? Is it all true? Is your mother correctly reported?

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: C.W. 4532. Courtesy: Swarthmore College, Philadelphia

543. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

DELAD, March 31, 1930

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

I have your letter. I have not wired, as I do not think there are any Pathans at Dandi and, if there are, we shall cope with them. The

1 The addressee send an apology and informed Gandhiji accordingly. Vide also “Letter to Reginald Reynolds”, 4-4-1930.

2 The article “Modern English Mythology” appeared in the issue of March 27, 1930.
advent even of good and true friends from the Frontier will cause complications. I want to present at Dandi, if I am allowed to reach it, the one issue without any avoidable complications. Things seem to be shaping very well indeed in Gujarat.

I am surprised that they have already arrested so many in Rae Bareli. I feel you are right in confining your attention to the salt tax for the time being. We shall know during the next fortnight what more we can or should do.

Unless you hear from me to the contrary, please take 6th April as the date for simultaneous beginning.

It is now nearing 10 p.m., so good night.

BAPU

A Bunch of Old Letters, p. 85

544. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

Silence Day [About March, 1930]

CHI. KANTA,

I do think of you often. I have built great hopes on you. Are you getting letters from Brother? Where is he? What are you doing? Has Krishna gone home? Write all details.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Hindi original: Chandrakanta Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

545. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

[About March, 1930]

CHI. NARANDAS,

I don’t worry at all, since you are not likely to feel any burden. I know that guests will continue. Please look after them. Dissuade anyone who may wish to follow me.

Shri Mullick is the Municipal Engineer. He will go there in a day or two and advise you on how to increase the supply of water. Show him the Chandrabhaga1 also. I have talked to Shri Mullick about Parner-kar. Get acquainted with him and introduce Parnerkar to him also.

What is Purushottam doing? Will he go for a change of air? If he had keen will, I would certainly have taken him with me. If you

1 A rivulet near the Sabarmati Ashram, now dried up

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
think it is necessary to consult me about anything, please do so.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—Narandas Gandhine, Part I, p. 273

546. LETTER TO KASTURBHAI LALBHAI
March 31, 1930

BHAII KASTURBHAI,

I thank you for your letter. All of you brothers may surely come. We will talk about each other’s joys and sorrows.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original : S.N. 33142

547. SPEECH AT CHHAPRABHATHA
April 1, 1930

Every day people tell me, “Today you will certainly be arrested.” However, the tiger does not appear! The newspapers claim that I have become impatient at the Government not arresting me. This is partially true as it had been decided that while Sardar should remain free, I should court arrest. However, now that Sardar is in prison, I shall remain free. If we wish to secure the release of Vallabhbhai, we can only do so by carrying on this struggle.

Choryasi took full advantage of the last fight of Sardar, so you must make your full contribution to this movement. The Government has acted on the principle that all places will get the rainfall of swaraj in equal measure. We certainly have the strength to secure his release. If we were determined, we might say, from a superficial glance at the villages, that swaraj was round the corner. I am not however a person who will thus deceive himself. For the present I am trying to gauge the situation.

On inquiring about spinning-wheels I found a single one here. If matters are in such a state, we cannot secure Sardar’s release. We have to go forward in all directions. At present we have set out to get the salt tax abolished. We shall tire out the Government by making salt at any number of places. However, all this can be achieved only when you put into practice the aphorism that ‘swaraj lies in a strand of yarn’. The saying that it is easy to secure swaraj will only be proved true when 30 crores of people start wearing khadi and develop all aspects of swaraj, giving due consideration to rural problems. Swaraj is within our grasp if we practise this simple and easy duty. Consider how the bridge on the river Keem was built in a single night. If people act voluntarily in accordance with their capacities in this manner, swaraj is not difficult to secure. I thank all the wealthy capitalists of Bombay and Ahmedabad who have come here and contributed large amounts. I see the blessing of God in the fact that all sections of the community are helping this movement.

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 6-4-1930

548. SPEECH AT SURAT

April 1, 1930

There is no alternative but for us to do something about our troubles and sufferings and hence we have thought of this salt tax. You may say it is a godsend. It is so beastly and inhuman that through salt the Government taxes even little children and young girls. I have read the texts in which it is claimed that those who would carry on administration must find ways to collect taxes from all members of the public. I have gone through the holy books of Islam, Hinduism, Christianity and Zoroastrianism. All these state that women and the poor should at no time be taxed. If we go through the rules of war, we shall find that they lay down that old persons, children and women should be left untouched in war. The same is applicable to this tax. Muslims, Hindus, Parsis—all consume salt in like quantities. The Government has, however, found a device whereby all have been taxed at an equal rate. This is an inhuman law, a Satanic law.

I have not heard of such justice anywhere in the world; where it prevails, I would call it inhuman, Satanic. To bow to an empire which dispenses such justice is not dharma but adharma. A man who prays to God every morning at dawn cannot, must not, pray for the good of such an empire. On the contrary while praying or saying the namaaz he should ask God to encompass the destruction of such a Satanic empire, such an inhuman government. To do so is dharma. Although I have been saying this openly for the last twenty days, the Government has left me and my colleagues free. I admit that this is a familiar trait in this Government. I have been calling this Government inhuman till today. I admit however that I do not believe even for a fraction of a second that it does not have power or authority. It has an army, it has gun-powder and it can, by merely moving a finger, destroy someone like me. But it cannot readily transgress the limits it has set for itself. It is ashamed of itself before the world. I have never in my dreams or waking moments desired and not a single one of my colleagues or the thousands of persons who have come into contact with me has ever desired, that either the King or any of the officers of this Empire should be destroyed even though we call the Empire-tyrannical. This is for it something new and it does not know how to deal with it.

Today, on the banks of the Tapi, I wish to tell you the very same thing that I said on the banks of the Sabarmati on the eve of my departure. Would the Government have left even one of us free if we had said that we wanted to throw so much as a pebble at officers? Some people say that I want to be arrested. I do not regard it as my dharma to get arrested; but I am not afraid of it and I am giving you the mantra that none of you should be afraid. I want that you should not be afraid of being arrested or hanged while you do your duty. I wish to convert prison into a palace. If I wished to be imprisoned I would commit theft, practise deceit, resort to assault and abuse. I would then certainly be arrested, no one would spare me. The Government would not then say ‘the Mahatma is dead; we shall not arrest him’. If the Government does arrest me, while in prison I will pray to God to bring about a change of heart in this Government and eradicate the sentiment which it has developed and which does not befit a human being. Sooner or later, it has no alternative but to arrest me and if it does not do so the whole of India will flare up within a short while. It is difficult for the Government either to imprison me or to leave me at large. Hindus, Muslims, Parsis—all should do their duty. When all of us start doing so, it will be beyond the power of the most tyrannical Government to arrest us.

Then there will hardly be any talk about arrests. Laws will get broken fast. One today, another tomorrow. And, when laws are destroyed, how can the Empire continue to function? Headmen and Talatis should resign. They should know that it is God alone who provides us our daily bread. What difference does it make whether or not you get Rs. 37 as a Talati? Mill workers—of whom I happen to be one—earn fifty rupees. However, although they can threaten mill-owners to go on strike, the latter do not dismiss them. They cannot do without the workers. If a Talati seeks employment in a mill and works faithfully, he can earn Rs. 50 or more if he shows good work. It will be the easiest thing for him to earn Rs. 37. Even if he happened to be a cripple, he could earn a living through spinning. Earning a livelihood is no problem to one who is prepared to work. What will the Government do when Talatis and Government servants are no longer afraid? Will it send for troops from England and entrust to them the work of Talatis and Headmen? What action will it take when Hindus, Muslims and Parsis all refuse to co-operate with it? It will be able to do nothing. All its limbs will become immobilized. In this manner, swaraj will be in our pocket without any effort, without a single person having to go to jail. But whom shall I teach all this?

You find khadi coarse and expensive. You wish to appear naked while I wish to clothe you. It seems to have become a dharma today to appear naked in spite of the clothing that is worn. It is a rakshasi dharma, it is only under this Empire that going naked becomes a dharma. We wear clothes to cover our bodies. If you wish to go about naked, why clothe yourselves? Under this Empire, going naked is no crime at all. You may therefore remain so. If you do wish to clothe yourselves to cover your bodies, what better material than khadi can I offer you? Why do you wish for anything else? You are ashamed to wear clothes woven out of yarn spun by your mothers and sisters who are starving at home.

Today you must understand the dharma of the boycott of foreign cloth, because it is impossible to give up British cloth while still using Japanese material. If we attempt to do so, we shall not be able to achieve either of our objectives—we shall not be able to do away with British goods and Japan will start ruling over us instead of Britain. Then again, you may claim that cloth from both countries could be boycotted by using mill-made cloth. Mills have existed now for fifty years. Nevertheless there has been no boycott. Why? I have been shouting repeatedly that boycott is impossible without khadi. You could practise boycott with the help of khadi and the textile mills. But it is impossible today to carry on boycott depending on mills alone. Maybe it can be done in fifty or a hundred years. If you intend to do so through fighting and bloodshed that is a matter about which I know nothing, it is beyond my conception, it is something which I have renounced. If the women of Surat come to Mithubehn’s assistance, prohibition can be accomplished in Surat district in no time. And what is so attractive about that trade? Those who run liquor dens can earn a living from some other occupation.

Whatever may happen in India, I am resolved that either I shall die offering civil disobedience or I shall win swaraj. I, therefore, called these people together and set out on this march. If I am alive tomorrow, I shall start out from here after receiving your blessings. I invite those who care to accompany me.

It is a blessing that Hindus and Muslims here are, for the present, united and are not quarrelling. I was afraid that since I am tired of the fighting, I might not like to go to a place where these two communities were fighting and if I did go there, that I would die. So I wrote to the workers not to take me to the city in order to kill me, but to let me reach Dandi. I was informed, however, that for the present they were as good as united and that there were no quarrels between them. I do not believe, however, that Hindus and Muslims have become one yet. Why should there be any ill feeling, any distrust, or any fear of one another even for a fraction of a second between them? Can there be a worse government than the present one? There would be about a lakh officers in this country. What will you do with the remaining 299.9 million people? How will you account for them? To what purpose will you fight against one another? Give me a seat in the legislative assembly only if there is any left after giving them to Muslims, Parsis, Christians and all others. You may consider the salt tax as abolished if you are true to your salt. Even poor, needy Muslims are its victims. We can fight amongst ourselves after it is repealed. The religious books of both Hinduism and Islam regard liquor as something sinful. The Zoroastrians do not read their religious texts carefully. They should read what they say about liquor.

Please give me your blessings and pray to God that He may grant my wishes. Postpone the settlement of your disputes till after the salt tax is repealed. What strength you will gain if you do so! If this tax is repealed we shall save six crores of rupees. Then adding 25 crores to be saved by prohibition and 60 crores from boycott of foreign cloth—it makes a total of Rs. 91 crores. Take it as a present. If you refuse it, you will be answerable not to me but to God. May God grant you the wisdom to understand all this and to act accordingly.

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 6-4-1930

549. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

Wednesday [April 2, 1930]

CHI. GANGABEHN,

I have your letter. You have been doing very good work. If it is very necessary for you to go to Bombay for the sake of your sister, you may. But you should remember that such occasions will arise again and again. You and I can give no help in such matters. We cannot attend to two things at a time. When you are faced with such problems, you may consult Nathji. I am here today; tomorrow I may not be.

1 Bapuna Patro-6: G. S. Gangabehnne gives April 1 as the date, which was a Tuesday.
I cannot say when they will arrest me. Here, too, there are rumours every day. So great is the power of non-violence that they do not have the courage to arrest me.

So long as you maintain good health, I am not particular about your eating fruit.

I am writing this before the morning prayer.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 8744. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

550. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

April 2, 1930

CHI. PREMA,

I have your perfect letter. You do not mention in it your having received my letters, but I presume that you have received them.

I have not received the pansy,¹ but I shall take it as received.
Your rearing the plant with love is as good as presenting the flower to me. Giving it physically is mere ceremony.

Is it true that you beat children? Mirabehn has gently complained to me that you do.

I hope you take care of your health.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 6667. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

551. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

April 2, 1930

CHI. CHANDRAKANTA,

Received your letter. Brother came away to Surat yesterday. He walked today. His health has improved. There is no cause for worry.
You have done well in restraining yourself from coming. Those who come here to meet me are truly guilty of a lapse. But what can they do? They cannot control themselves.

Blessings from
BAPU

¹ The addressee had planted a few pansies near where Gandhiji slept at the Ashram. They flowered after Gandhiji had set out for Dandi.
[PS.]
You are doing wonderful work.

From a photostat of the Hindi: Chandrakanta Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

552. LETTER TO TRILOKCHANDRAJI

Wednesday, [April 2, 1930]¹

MUNISHRI TRILOKCHANDRAJI.

I feel that you need not join the satyagraha but should propagate its teaching to all in clear terms.

It will not be necessary to keep a watch as you suggest when the satyagraha becomes widespread. The latent power of truth and non-violence will act like electric current and keep the people under control.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

[From Gujarati]

Jainprakash, Margashirsha, 1987

553. SPEECH AT DINDOLI

April 2, 1930

We were told that it was doubtful whether Congress workers would be allowed to halt here at all. I must say, however, that so far we have received nothing but warm welcome everywhere. Both the factions in this village have united in looking after us well and have been equally warm in welcoming us.

There is the hand of God in this struggle. That is why one finds today that people have ceased to be enemies and become friends of each other. It is all the grace of God. In the Privy Council, disputes are not settled for generations together. You must free yourselves from that snare. We are carrying on this struggle against those who are riding on the backs of others. We have to free our millions of the burden which the white man has placed on them. But first we ourselves have to get off the backs of the poor. If anyone says that the Government will cease to function if the salt tax is repealed, I will say that such a person is not true to his salt. From the fact that a larger quantity of salt is sold when the tax rate is lowered, we can conclude that it is the poor who suffer the most from this tax. In the past the poor used to get even clothes. And in the past the workers in villages got everything in kind in exchange for their labour. However much the Government may try, can it ever make these foreign rags cheaper than khadi?

¹ According to the source Gandhiji replied to the addressee’s letter which was given to him in the morning before he left Surat during the Dandi March. This was on April 2, 1930, which was a Wednesday.

I congratulate the Headman for the other bit of news given me. I also congratulate the village which has such a courageous Headman. Those who have not yet resigned should do so and cease to be afraid of the Government. I am surprised a person like me who cannot wield even a tiny stick can make such a mighty Empire tremble. However, if Rama dwells in your hearts, it is easy to shake the foundations of not one but twenty empires more powerful than this one. Like the old lady at the charkha you should earn honest money.

[From Gujarati]

_Prajabandhu, 6-4-1930_
APPENDIX I
VICEROY’S STATEMENT

I have have just returned from England where I have had the opportunity of prolonged consultation with His Majesty’s Government. Before I left this country I said publicly that as the King-Emperor’s representative in India I should hold myself bound to tell my fellow-countrymen, as faithfully as I might, of India’s feelings, anxieties and aspirations. In my endeavours to discharge that undertaking I was assisted by finding, as I had expected a generous and sincere desire, not only on the part of His Majesty’s Government but on that of all persons and parties in Great Britain, to hear and to appreciate everything that it was my duty to represent.

These are critical days, when matters by which men are deeply touched are in issue and when, therefore, it is inevitable that political feeling should run high, and that misunderstandings, which would scarcely arise in conditions of political tranquillity, should obtain firm foothold in men’s minds. I have, nevertheless, not faltered in my belief that behind all the disquieting tendencies of the time, there lay the great mass of Indian opinion, overflowing all divisions of race, religion, or political thought, fundamentally loyal to the King-Emperor, and, whether consciously or not only wanting to understand and to be understood. On the other side I have never felt any doubt that opinion in Great Britain, puzzled as it might be by events in India, or only perhaps partially informed as to their true significance, was unshaken in its determination that Great Britain should redeem to the full the pledges she has given for India’s future. On both countries the times have laid a heavy and in some ways a unique responsibility, for the influence on the world of a perfect understanding between Great Britain and India might surely be so great that no scales can give us the measure either of the prize of success or, the price of failure in our attempts to reach it.

In my discussions with the Prime Minister and the Secretary of State, it was inevitable that the principal topic should have been the course of events in India. It is not profitable on either side to discuss to what extent, or with what justification, the appointment of a Parliamentary Commission two years ago has affected the general trend of Indian thought and action. Practical men must take facts and situations as they are, and not as they would have them be.

Sir John Simon’s Commission, assisted as it has been by the Indian Central Committee, is now at work on its Report, and until that Report is laid before Parliament it is impossible, and even if it were possible, it would in the view of His Majesty’s Government clearly be improper, to forecast the nature of any constitutional changes that may subsequently be proposed. In this respect every British party is bound to preserve itself complete freedom of action. But what must constantly engage our attention, and is a matter of deep concern to His Majesty’s Government, is the discovery of means by which, when the Commission has reported, the broad question of British Indian constitutional advance may be approached in co-operation with all those who can speak authoritatively for opinion in British India. I would venture to recall some words which I used in addressing the Assembly eight months ago in reference to the then existing political situation. “On the one side,” I said, “it is judgment on the problem as it would be short-sighted of Parliament to underrate the importance of trying to reach a solution which might carry the willing assent of political India.” We shall surely stray from the path, at the end of which lies achievement, if we let go either one or other of these two main guiding principles of political action.

But there has lately emerged, from a totally different angle, another set of considerations which is very relevant to what I have just stated on this matter to be the desire of His Majesty’s Government.

The Chairman of the Commission has pointed out in correspondence with the Prime Minister, which, I understand, is being published in England, that as their investigation has proceeded, he and his colleagues have been greatly impressed, in considering the direction which the future constitutional development which may, at some future time, develop between British India and the Indian States. In his judgment it is essential that the methods, by which this future relationship between these two constituent parts of Greater India may be adjusted, should be fully examined. he has further expressed the opinion that if the Commission’s Report and the proposals subsequently to be framed by the Government take this wider range, it would appear necessary for the Government to revise the scheme of procedure as at present proposed. He suggests that what might be required, after the Reports of the Statutory Commission and the Indian Central Committee have been made, considered and published but before the stage is reached of the Joint Parliamentary Committee, would be the setting up of a Conference in which His Majesty’s Government should meet representatives both of British India and of the States, for the purpose of seeking the greatest possible measure of agreement for the final proposals which it would later be the duty of His Majesty’s Government to submit to Parliament. The procedure by Joint Parliamentary Committee conferring with delegations from the Indian Legislature and other bodies, which was previously contemplated and is referred to in Sir John Simon’s letter to myself of 6th February 1928, would still be appropriate for the examination of the Bill when it is subsequently placed before Parliament, but would, in the opinion of the Commission, obviously have to be preceded by some such Conference as they have suggested. With these views I understand that His Majesty’s Government are in complete accord. For, while they will greatly desire, when the time comes, to be able to deal with the question of British Indian political development under conditions the most favourable to its successful treatment, they are, with the Commission, deeply sensible of the importance of bringing under comprehensive review the whole problem of the relations of British India and the Indian States.
Indeed, an adjustment of these interests in their view is essential for the complete fulfilment of what they consider to be the underlying purpose of British policy, whatever may be the method for its furtherance which Parliament may decide to adopt.

The goal of British policy was stated in the declaration of August 1917 to be that of providing for the gradual development of self-governing institutions, as an integral part of the British Empire. As I recently pointed out my own Instrument of Instruction from the King-Emperor expressly states that it is His Majesty’s will and pleasure that the plans laid by Parliament in 1919 should be the means by which British India may attain its due place among His Dominions. Ministers of the Crown, moreover, have more than once publicly declared that it is the desire of the British Government that India should, in the fullness of time, take her place in the Empire in equal partnership with the Dominions. But in view of the doubts which have been expressed both in Great Britain and India regarding the interpretation to be placed on the intentions of the British Government in enacting the Statue of 1919, I am authorized on behalf of His Majesty’s Government to state clearly that in their judgment it is implicit in the declaration of 1917 that the natural issue of India’s constitutional progress, as there contemplated, is the attainment of Dominion Status.

In the full realization of this policy, it is evidently important that the Indian States should be afforded an opportunity of finding their place, and even if we cannot at present exactly foresee on what lines this development may be shaped, it is from every point of view desirable that whatever can be done should be done to ensure that action taken now is not inconsistent with the attainment of the ultimate purpose which those, whether in British India or the States, who look forward to some unity of all India, have in view.

His Majesty’s Government consider that both these objects, namely, that of finding the best approach to the British side of the problem, and secondly, of ensuring that in this process the wider question of closer relations in the future between the two parts of Greater India is not overlooked, can best be achieved by the adoption of procedure such as the Commission has outlined. When, therefore, the Commission and the Indian Central Committee have submitted their reports and these have been published, and when His Majesty’s Government have been able, in consultation with the Government of India, to consider these matters in the light of all the material then available, they will propose to invite representatives of different parties and interests in British India and representatives of the Indian States to meet them, separately or together as circumstances may demand, for purpose of conference and discussion in regard both to the British-Indian and the all-Indian problems. It will be their earnest hope that by this means it may subsequently prove possible on these grave issues to submit proposals to Parliament which may command a wide measure of general assent.

It is not necessary for me to say how greatly I trust that the action of His Majesty’s Government may evoke response from and enlist the concurrence of all sections of opinion in India, and I believe that all who wish India well, wherever and whoever they are, desire to break through the webs of mistrust firmly assured that the course of action now proposed is at once the outcome of a real desire to bring to the body politic of India the touch that carries with it healing and health, and is the method by which we may best hope to handle these high matters in the way of constructive statesmanship.

31st October, 1929

IRWIN
VICEROY AND GOVERNOR-GENERAL

India in 1929-30, pp. 466-8
APPENDIX II

LETTER FROM JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

ALL-INDIA CONGRESS COMMITTEE,
52 HEWETT ROAD, ALLAHABAD,
November 4, 1929

MY DEAR BAPUJI,

I have thought well for two days. I can take, I think, a calmer view of the situation than I could two days ago but the fever in my brain has not left me.

Your appeal to me on the ground of discipline could not be ignored by me. I am myself a believer in discipline. And yet I suppose there can be too much of discipline. Something seems to have snapped inside me evening before last and I am unable to piece it together. As General Secretary of the Congress I owe allegiance to it and must subject myself to its discipline. I have other capacities and other allegiances. I am President of the Indian am intimately connected with the youth movement. What shall I do with the allegiance I owe to these and other movements I am connected with? I realize now more than I have ever done before that it is not possible to ride a number of horses at the same time. Indeed it is hard enough to ride one. In the conflict of responsibilities and allegiances what is one to do except to rely on one’s own instincts and reason?

I have therefore considered the position apart from all outside connections and allegiances and the conviction has grown stronger that I acted wrongly the policy underlying it. I am afraid we differ fundamentally on that issue and I am not likely to convert you. I shall only say that I believe the statement to have been injurious and a wholly inadequate reply to the Labour Government’s declaration. I believe that in our attempts to soothe and retain a few estimable gentlemen we have ruffled and practically turned out of our camp many others who were far more worth having. I believe that we have fallen into a dangerous trap out of which it will be no easy matter to escape. And I think that we have shown to the world that although we talk tall we are only bargaining for some tit bits.

I do not know what the British Government will do now. Probably it will not agree to your conditions. I hope they will not. But I have little doubt that most of the signatories—including you of course—will be quite prepared to agree to any modification of the conditions which the British Government might suggest. In any event it is quite clear to me that my position in the Congress will become daily more and more difficult. I accepted the presidency of the Congress with great misgivings but in the hope that we shall fight on a clear issue next year. That issue is already clouded and the only reason for my acceptance has gone. What am I to do with these “Leaders” Conference”? I feel an interloper and am ill at ease. I cannot have my say because I am afraid of upsetting the conference. I repress myself and sometimes the repression is too much for me and I break out and even say things which I do not wholly mean.

I feel I must resign from the Secretaryship of the A.I.C.C. I have sent a formal letter to Father, a copy of which I enclose.

The question of the presidency is a far more difficult one. At this late hour I do know what I can do. But I am convinced that I was a wrong choice. You are the only possible president for the occasion and the year. I cannot be president if the policy of the Congress is what might be described as that of Malaviyaji. Even now if you agree there is a possible course which does not necessitate a meeting of the A.I.C.C. A circular might be sent round to A.I.C.C. members saying that you are agreeable to accepting the presidency. I would beg of them to excuse me. This would be a formal matter as of course all the members, or nearly all, would welcome your decision with joy.

An alternative course is that I should declare that in view of the circumstances, and also in view of the difficulty of choosing another president now, I shall not retire now but immediately after the Congress is over. I shall act as the chairman and the Congress can decide what it likes regardless of me.

One of these two courses seems to me to be necessary if I am to retain my physical and mental health.

As I wrote to you from Delhi I am not issuing any public statement. What others say or do not say does not worry me very much. But I must be at peace with myself.

Yours affectionately,

JAWAHARLAL

[PS.]

I am sending a copy of this letter to Father. I feel a little lighter after writing this letter. I am afraid it will trouble you a little and I do not want to do so. I feel half inclined not to send it to you just yet but to wait for your arrival here. Ten days more will no doubt lessen my agitation and give me a better perspective. But it is better that you should know how my mind has been working.

A Bunch of Old Letters, pp. 74-5

APPENDIX III

LETTER FROM VALLABHBHAI PATEL

Personal

SARDARGRIHA,

BOMBAY

November 11, 1929

PUJYA BAPUJI,

I have been here for the last two days. Vithalbhai is also here. I sent you a wire after having had a long talk with Mr. Jinnah.

The Working Committee is meeting on the 16th. We wish its final resolution does not result in a complete break. Ultimately, it is for us to do what we like. But before it is finally decided to close the door upon all future negotiations or before the original Delhi statement is amended, it would be fair to invite to a meeting all those who have signed it. Before any resolution is passed, yourself, Jinnah, Motilalji, Vithalbhai and Sapru should confer together or Jinnah and Vithalbhai should be given an opportunity to discuss the matter with you personally. There would be no problem if the Working Committee is to adhere to the Delhi manifesto. But in view of the subsequent debate in Parliament, if we choose to break off with the Government, I see no harm in postponing such a decision for a few days. Besides, it will be proper that another opportunity of looking at the manifesto is given to those who have signed it. Mr. Jinnah and Vithalbhai wish to discuss a few things with you some time.

1 Vide “Telegram to Vithalbhai Patel”, on or after 13-11-1929.

According to Mr. Jinnah, the Conference can be summoned in July. If an announcement is made about the personnel and general amnesty to our liking, can this be regarded as evidence of a change of heart? Another important matter would remain to be settled, namely, the Government should announce before we decide to attend the Conference that it has to frame a scheme for Dominion Status. This needs to be discussed with you since there could be no two opinions that under the present circumstances no government would make any such announcement. Mr. Jinnah wishes also to know in what other manner we can be reassured. He for one thinks that if these three things are settled, we get practically everything that we seek; and in that case, he is prepared to do whatever he can in respect of the fourth matter. He is quite convinced of the good faith of the Labour Government as well as the Viceroy, and thinks that this opportunity should on no account be missed. He is prepared to play his part to the best of his ability.

We shall decide the venue when I have your reply to my wire.

Vandemataram from
VALLABHBHAI

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 15568

APPENDIX IV

LETTER FROM DR. M. A. ANSARI

JAORA,
February 13, 1930

MY DEAR MAHATMAJI,

I wrote to you from Delhi last Monday. The letter was dictated in a hurry in a few moments snatched during a very strenuous day. It naturally did not express all that I wanted to tell you. Further, I was hoping I would be able to get away from here in time to be with you on the 14th or the 15th. I find, however, to my disappointment, that my patient here is suffering from peritonitis and is so very ill that I cannot even mention my leaving her. Indeed, it does not seem possible to get away from here for another week or ten days. I am, therefore, writing to you as the next best thing to my being with you in person at such a critical moment. I feel I owe it to Pt. Jawaharlal, Pt. Motilal, yourself, and your colleagues in the Working Committee, who have got the reins of the Congress in their hands and are leading the country, to tell you frankly what I feel about your policy and programme in relation to the present situation in the country. I would try to be as brief as possible, but you would excuse me if this letter becomes somewhat long in spite of my efforts to curtail it.

Hindu-Muslim unity is not only one of the basic items in our programme, but

1 Vide “Letter to Dr. M. A. Ansari”, 16-2-1930.
according to my firm belief and conviction, the one and only basic thing. I would have liked to trace the whole history of our efforts to achieve unity, but I would take up the most recent history, viz., from autumn of the year 1927. You would remember how the Unity Conference at Simla failed in spite of every effort made there. I felt after its failure that it was not possible to have agreement between extreme communal groups, but that it was feasible to have a workable agreement between Nationalist Hindus and Nationalist Mussalmans. I, therefore, urged Srinivasa Iyengar, the then President of the Congress, to convene another Peace Conference at Calcutta under the aegis of the Congress, and in more suitable surroundings than the Simla Conference. The Calcutta Conference brought about an understanding between the Congress and the Mussalmans of all shades of opinion, as evidenced by the warm welcome given to the Pact even by such Mussalman as Sir Mohd. Shafi, Sir Zulfiqar Ali, Dr. Muhammad Iqbal and many others. This Pact, with certain modifications suggested by you, was passed by the Madras Congress and was agreed to by Pt. Malaviya. I have not the slightest doubt that if we had stuck to it we would have gradually overcome the opposition of the Hindu Mahasabha, and Hindu-Muslim unity would have been an accomplished fact by now. But, we wanted to be more just and fair and in our effort to do justice and bring greater harmony and unity in the shape of the Nehru Report at Lucknow, followed closely by the Sikhs. But, at the Calcutta Convention, it was the Hindu Mahasabha which completely did the work of destruction. I cannot help expressing that the speech made by Mr. Jayakar and subsequently the attitude in the Committee taken by Pt. Malaviya, Dr. Moonje, and Hindu Mahasabha friends destroyed all chances of understanding. Prof. Jatindra Lal Bannerji’s motion for the reservation of seats for 45 per cent Hindu minority in the Bengal which was carried in the Convention and only withdrawn at my special appeal and request was a painful revelation. Pt. Motilal’s cold reception to Mr. Jinnah, whom I had succeeded after a great deal of effort in persuading to come and see Panditji at his house, was also a great disappointment. After that, the communalist Mussalmans got the chance and the Muslim attitude hardened as shown by the absurd resolution passed at the All-Parties’ Muslim Conference at Delhi and subsequently the fourteen points of Mr. Jinnah.

The year 1929, in spite of the great influence and efforts of Panditji, yourself and Pt. Jawaharlal, did not see the constructive programme advance and the quota fixed in May last year was not completed by most of the Congress Committee. The Sikh situation was, in the mean time, going from bad to worse.

In such circumstances when I read the advance copy of the Viceroy’s statement of November 1st,1 I considered it a godsend (as the telephonic message sent by me to Panditji and received by Jawaharlal would bear out). I, at once, took Vallabhbhai with me and met you at Meerut. We found you less enthusiastic, more cautious, but on the whole, taking a very favourable view of the announcement. At the Conference held in Delhi on November 1st, you would remember I pressed for certain parts of Dr. Sapru’s statement to be embodied in yours. The reason was that I found myself in agreement with him. I was representing not only my own personal views, but, those of a group consisting of Messrs Khaliquzzaman, Tasadhuq Ahmed Sherwani, Raﬁ [Ahmed]

1 Vide “Viceroy’s Statement”, 31-10-1929; the statement was issued on October 31, 1929.
Kidwai, Dr. Mahmud, and a few others. At Lahore, I expressed the same views in the Working Committee. When asked by Panditji, to give my opinion on the 22nd of last December in Delhi, I told him that owing to our internal dissensions, unpreparedness and weakness, I would advise him not to let the Conference with the Viceroy break up, but to utilize it to the fullest advantage. Panditji characterized my observations as based on weakness. I repudiated the charge, but our conversation ended. When I heard that the Conference between you and the Viceroy had ended without any agreement, I was disappointed. At the meeting of the Working Committee held in Lahore last December and on one or two subsequent occasions, I expressed similar views but with the exception of Mrs. Naidu, I did not find support. I have felt that the situation has been mishandled both by the Viceroy and our own representatives. The Viceroy was obviously very much shaken by the bomb outrage, and was not in his normal frame of mind. For I do not see how even with the limited powers given to him he could have failed to give you the necessary assurance for a scheme of Dominion Status to be the basis of discussion at the Round Table Conference. I cannot, for the life of me, imagine after reading and re-reading the statements of the Viceroy and the Secretary of State, what else could be the basis of discussions at the Round Table Conference if not a scheme of Dominion Status. It may be a very incomplete scheme which would form the basis; even our own scheme presented in the Nehru Constitution was not a scheme of complete Dominion Status. The final decision would be matters for adjustments, understandings and bargains, as it is bound to be at any time. But, at any rate, it would have given us the chance of placing the demand of India before the British on communal matters, they would have been obliged to concede our demand of Dominion Constitution to a very great extent. This has been my view all along and is my view today.

I did not feel that it would be in the interest of the Congress [for me] to resign from the Working Committee at Lahore and express my views in the All-India Congress Committee or in the open Congress. I felt that there were already sufficient divisions in the Congress and one more division would not have improved the situation. Out of loyalty to the Congress and my personal devotion to you, Pt. Motilal and Jawaharlal, I kept quiet. But I deliberately refused the General Secretaryship and the membership of the Working Committee, and took the risk of being misunderstood rather than say or do anything to injure the Congress. At the same time, not being in sympathy with the policy and programme of the Congress, I could not be one of its executive. The same reason led me to resign from the Presidentship of the Preventive. Indeed, the only thing possible for me and those who think like me was to drop out of the Congress Executive. And whilst not opposing the policy and programme of the Congress or doing anything to injure it by our actions or words, to remain as one of its camp followers. So far as I am aware, Mrs. Naidu, Rangaswami Iyengar, Pt. Harkaran Nath Misra, Choudhary Khaliquzzaman, R. A. Kidwai, T. A. K. Sherwani and a few other leading Congressmen (whose names I may not mention) hold similar views.

You are taking a great responsibility on yourself by declaring war against the Government today. The situation today is quite the reverse of what it was in 1920, when you started the campaign of non-co-operation. I would briefly compare the situation in a comparative table as under; of course, it is not complete, but I am giving only the salient features:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>1920</th>
<th>1930</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>(1) Great dissatisfaction against the Government, owing to war-time promises, owing to war-time promises not having been kept. Dissatisfaction against Rowlatt Act, Martial Law, and Khilafat wrongs.</td>
<td>(1) Large number of people believe in the goodwill of Labour Government and sincerity of Labour Government and sincerity of the Viceroy, rightly or wrongly.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(2) Highest water-mark reached in Hindu-Muslim unity.</td>
<td>(2) Lowest water-mark reached in Hindu-Muslim unity.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(3) Sikhs entirely with the Congress.</td>
<td>(3) Sikhs almost entirely against the Congress.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(4) Complete unity inside the Congress. Great enthusiasm amongst the workers and the rank and file.</td>
<td>(4) Disunity in the Congress (Revolt against its mandate), diversity of purpose, complete lack of enthusiasm amongst the workers. Lukewarmness among the rank and file.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>(5) Complete non-violent atmosphere and yet breaking of violence in Chauri Chaura.</td>
<td>(5) Obvious existence of violence, even large number of leading Congressmen believing in it and the certainty of violence breaking out.</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

Like Harishchandra you seem to be bent on keeping the word given by you at Calcutta, irrespective of consequences. I feel as if you are deliberately offering yourself as a sacrifice. I earnestly submit to you for your consideration that to the demand made at Calcutta there has been a response. It is not satisfactory from our point of view. But, it is all that the Government can make, and certainly, it cannot be said that there has been no response. I, therefore, urge that the question of keeping your word in case of no response to the Calcutta offer does not arise and, therefore, the idea of keeping your word at all costs is not morally justifiable and certainly it is not politically expedient.

I hope I have made my position quite clear to you. Holding the views stated above and feeling that the real test of our preparedness lies more in the results achieved with regard to the enrolment of members and volunteers, collections of funds, and above all, in the achievement of Hindu, Muslim and dependence Day, it is my conviction that the country is not the least ready for starting a campaign of civil disobedience in any shape or form, and it would do an incalculable damage should you decide to embark on such a campaign now or in the near future. I would, therefore, earnestly urge you and the members of the Working Committee to desist from doing so. I believe, that if you could see the wisdom of passing a resolution asking the Congress organization for intensive preparation including H.M.S. understanding, but, in the mean time, postponing the campaign of civil disobedience for the present, until you find yourself ready and obliged to start civil disobedience, it would meet the present situation much better and give a chance to those countrymen of ours who are thinking of participation in the London Round Table Conference.

I wish you to share this letter with Pt. Jawaharlal and Pt. Motilal Nehru. I hope this would find you in the best of health.

With kindest regards,

Yours sincerely,

M. A. ANSARI

APPENDIX V

PENAL SECTIONS OF THE SALT ACT

SEIZURES, DETENTION SEARCH AND ARREST

Section 39 of the Bombay Salt Act which is practically the same as Sections 16-17 of the Indian Salt Act (XII of 1882), empowers any Salt-revenue officer to do the following among other things:

1. To enter any place where illicit manufacture is going on;
2. “In case of resistance, break open any door and remove any other obstacle to his entry upon or into such land, building, enclosed place or premises”;
3. To take possession of or destroy salt illicitly manufactured;
4. “To seize in any open space, or in transit, any article which he has reason to believe to be contraband salt and any package or covering in which such article is found and the other contents, if any, of such package or covering in which the same is found, and any animal, vessel or conveyance used or intended to be used in carrying the same”;
5. “To detain and search and, if he thinks proper, arrest any person, whom he has reason to believe to be guilty of any offence punishable under this or any other law for the time being in force relating to salt revenue, or in whose possession contraband salt is found”.

THINGS LIABLE TO CONFISSICATION

Section 50 of the Bombay Salt Act (in which Sec. 12 of the Indian Salt Act is incorporated) lays down that “All contraband salt, and every vessel, animal, or conveyance used in carrying contraband salt and

1 Vide “Penal Sections of the Salt Act”, 6-3-1930.
All goods, packages and coverings in or among which contraband salt is found, and every apparatus, implement, utensil or material employed for the manufacture, excavation, collection, or removal of salt without a licence or for the purpose of utilizing natural salt or salt-earth contrary to any of the provisions of this Act or any rule made thereunder shall be liable to confiscation."

ADDITIONAL PUNISHMENT FOR REPETITION OF OFFENCE

Section 10 of the Indian Salt Act (Act XII of 1882) lays down that "Any person convicted of an offence under Section 9, after having been previously convicted of an offence under that section, or Section II of the Inland Customs Act, 1875, or under any enactment repealed by that Act, shall be punished with imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months, in addition to the punishment which may be inflicted for a first offence under Section 9, and every such person shall, upon every subsequent conviction of an offence under Section 9, be liable to imprisonment for a term which may extend to six months in addition to any term of imprisonment to which he was liable at his last previous conviction."

DUTIES OF OFFICERS

Section 41 of the Bombay Salt Act makes it "incumbent on every village officer" to do the following among other things:

1. To communicate to some salt revenue officer of the rank of a Sarkarkun or a Daroga any information concerning offences under the Act;
2. "To interpose for the purpose of preventing and to prevent, by the use of all reasonable means within his power, the commission of any such offence".

Section 48A lays down among other things that any salt-revenue officer, "who is guilty of cowardice shall on conviction before a magistrate be punished with imprisonment which may extend to three months, or with fine which may extend to three months' pay, or with both."

Young India, 6-3-1930
1. NOTES

DOG IN THE MANGER

The volume of information being gained daily shows how wickedly the salt tax has been designed. In order to prevent the use of salt that has not paid the tax which is at times even fourteen times its value, the Government destroys the salt it cannot sell profitably. Thus it taxes the nation’s vital necessity, it prevents the public from manufacturing it and destroys what nature manufactures without effort. No adjective is strong enough for characterizing this wicked dog-in-the-manger policy. From various sources I hear tales of such wanton destruction of the nation’s property in all parts of India. Maunds if not tons of salt are said to be destroyed on the Konkan coast. The same tale comes from Dandi. Wherever there is likelihood of natural salt being taken away by the people living in the neighbourhood of such areas for their personal use, salt officers are posted for the sole purpose of carrying on destruction. Thus valuable national property is destroyed at national expense and salt taken out of the mouths of the people.

Nor is this all. I was told on entering the Olpad taluka that through the poor people being prevented from collecting the salt that was prepared by nature or from manufacturing it they were deprived of the supplementary village industry they had in addition to the spinning-wheel.

The salt monopoly is thus a fourfold curse. It deprives the people of a valuable easy village industry, involves wanton destruction of property that nature produces in abundance, the destruction itself means more national expenditure, and fourthly, to crown this folly, an unheard-of tax of more than 1,000 per cent is exacted from a starving people.

I cannot help recalling in this connection the hue and cry that was raised when I first proposed the burning of foreign cloth. It was considered to be an inhuman, wasteful proposal. It is generally admitted that foreign cloth is harmful to the people. Salt on the other hand is a vital necessity. Yet it has been and is daily being wantonly destroyed in the interest of a wicked exaction.

This tax has remained so long because of the apathy of the general public. Now that it is sufficiently roused, the tax has to go. How soon it will be abolished depends upon the strength the people are able to put forth. Happily the test will not be long delayed.

EXAGGERATED STATEMENTS

Paragraphs have appeared in the Press to the effect that 18 of my companions have become ill and incapacitated. This is a gross exaggeration. It is quite true that that number had to take two days’ rest at the Broach Sevashram. But that was because they were fatigued and footsore. With the exception of the case of smallpox which proved to be quite mild, there was no illness worth the name. One of the companions certainly had strong fever. But that fever too proved to be due to overzeal in marching. He had a wiry constitution and was over-confident about his ability to pull through without resting. He would not therefore rest till nature absolutely compelled him. But both are quite well now though being weak they are still being made to rest a few days. They expect to join the company at Surat. A third, though still a little footsore, insisted on walking, but had to rest at Ankleshvar. All the others are fit and marching daily. It has become necessary to make this statement in order to prevent anxiety on the part of guardians and friends. It would be ungrateful not to mention here the great attention the villagers are paying to the satyagrahis and the exceptional care that was bestowed upon the smallpox patient by the Charotar Education Society at Anand and on the footsore men by Dr. Chandulal’s staff at Sevashram.

A moral may also be drawn from these accidents. The modern generation is delicate, weak and much pampered. If they will take part in national work, they must take ample exercise and become hardy. And no exercise is as good and as effective as long vigorous marches. Gymnastics and the like are good and may be added to walking. They are no substitutes for walking, justly called the prince of exercises. Our march is in reality child’s play. Less than twelve miles per day in two stages with not much luggage should cause no strain. Those who have not been footsore have gained in weight. I may add too that the hot Condy’s fluid, baths and wet sheet packs are proving a most efficient remedy for smallpox.

THE TRUE SPIRIT

Shrimati Khurshedbai Naoroji came the other day to Sandhier, a halting station during the march. She was accompanied by Mridulabehn, the daughter of Sjt. Ambalal Sarabhai, Madalasa, the little daughter of Jamnalalji, Shrimati Vasumatibehn and Radhabehn from the Ashram. They had to await a lift for Sandhier. They wanted to turn to national account the time at their disposal. They saw that the surroundings of the place were not overclean. They therefore decided to clean up the rubbish and so asked for brooms from the surprised villagers. As soon as the villagers realized what had happened, they also joined these national scavengers, some of whom were drawn from aristocratic families and the village of Sayan perhaps never looked as clean as when these sisters utilized their spare time for scavenging. I commend this true service, this mute speech of the sisters to the army of young men who are pining to serve and free the country. Freedom will come only when we deliver a simultaneous attack on all the weak points. Let it be known that all these sisters have enlisted as civil resisters and are eagerly, even impatiently, awaiting marching orders. In this campaign of swaraj by self-purification, it will be nothing surprising if the women outdo the men.

Motilalji’s Munificence

The palatial Anand Bhavan, the pride of the Nehrus, is to be national property from 6th instant, the national Satyagraha Day. Motilalji has much service to his credit. Jawaharlal is his living gift to the nation. There was no need to add brick and mortar. But I know he has been pining to part with that spacious house which has the historical associations now made known to the public. Truly, Motilalji has spent as he has earned. Let us prove worthy of his services and his gifts.

Young India, 3-4-1930

2. REMEMBER 6TH APRIL

This will be in the readers’ hands on Thursday 3rd instant. If there is no previous cancelling, they all may regard this as the word from me that all are free and those who are ready are expected to start mass civil disobedience regarding the salt laws, as from 6th April.

Let me gather up what has been said in these pages at various times.

The only stipulation for civil disobedience is perfect observance of non-violence in the fullest sense of the term.

Mass civil disobedience means spontaneous action. The workers will merely guide the masses in the beginning stages. Later the masses will regulate the movement themselves.

Congress volunteers will watch developments and render aid wherever needed. They will be expected to be in the forefront.

Volunteers may not take sides in any communal quarrels.

Wherever there is a violent eruption, volunteers are expected to die in the attempt to quell violence.

Perfect discipline and perfect co-operation among the different units are indispensable for success.

If there is true mass awakening, those who are not engaged in civil disobedience are expected to occupy themselves and induce others to be engaged in some national service, such as khadi work, liquor and opium picketing, foreign-cloth exclusion, village sanitation, assisting the families of civil resistance prisoners in a variety of ways.

Indeed if there is a real response about civil resistance regarding the salt tax, we should by proper organization secure boycott of foreign cloth through khadi and secure total prohibition. This should mean a saving of 91 crores per year, and supplementary work for the millions of unemployed. If we secure these things, we cannot be far from independence. And not one of these things is beyond our capacity.

Young India, 3-4-1930

3. PROHIBITION

Pandit Dev Sharma “Abhaya” proposes to launch a prohibition campaign in the area around Hardwar. I have given him my approval saying that if he has the self-confidence he should certainly take up the work. The idea of non-co-operation was born out of the spirit of self-purification. That is why in 1920-21 such a great campaign for prohibition became possible and even succeeded. The campaign had later to be halted, or one may say it stopped by itself, because impurity, that is, coercion, had entered it.

This time people have realized that coercion will not bring lasting results. Therefore, in areas where there is no risk of violence and where workers in sufficient numbers are available, prohibition campaign can and should be launched.

This campaign can be carried on in three ways:
1. by visiting the homes of addicts and dissuading them from drinking;

2. by persuading the liquor-booth owners to close their business; and

3. by picketing the liquor booths.

All these three can also be taken up simultaneously. In the first two there is no risk whatever. In the third a risk of violence exists. In regard to this the Government may issue prohibitory orders. If such orders are issued we should not be frightened. The easiest way to offer civil disobedience is to disregard them.

Clearly, everyone cannot do picketing nor can it be resorted to everywhere. So the campaign will be somewhat restricted in area. But even though it is restricted it is good work and it may also bring good results. Therefore if those who have the self-confidence take up such a campaign, it can only give me pleasure.

[From Hindi]
Hindi Navajivan, 3-4-1930

4. LETTER TO KAPILRAI MEHTA

Midnight [April 3, 1930]

CHI. KAPILRAI,

I got the news about you. There is no hurry. Come on Saturday, but only if you have no temperature. They will send you back from Navsari. Do not apply the wet-sheet pack any longer. Do take milk. There is no harm in taking hot-water bath. As for the cough, consult the doctor. He says that you should remain in Surat for at least ten days. I also see no harm in your coming on Saturday if you have no temperature on that day.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
Show this to the doctor.

CHI. KAPILRAI SAINIK
ANAVIL ASHRAM, SURAT

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 1594. Courtesy: Kapilrai Mehta; also G.N. 3972

1 From the postmark

VOL.49 :3 APRIL, 1930 -22 AUGUST, 1930  5
5. SPEECH AT PRAYER MEETING, VANJH

April 3, 1930

Only two days now remain before we conclude this march. We shall then set to work. A large number of people will be present. I told you about the scarcity of water in Dandi. We shall have to use water as if it was milk, like the Jain sadhu who lived in the forest. I must also tell you that they are finding it very difficult to arrange for our meals. So after reaching Dandi all that you will be given three times a day would be _ seer of gram, _ seer of puffed rice, and boiled water with a tola of ghee and jaggery added. You shall get used to this for we have to lead austere lives.

Another piece of information that I have received is that the Government intends to use fire-engines to stop us. We have prepared ourselves for death from cannons and guns, compared to which this is nothing. Of course, even with jets of water, the Government can kill us through torture. It is certainly painful. However, you must bear in mind that not one of us will retreat. I do not think the Government will be so cruel, but we must be prepared.

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 6-4-1930

1 Held at 4 a.m.
6. SPEECH AT NAVSARI

April 3, 1930

Navsari is the headquarters of our Parsi brethren. The total number of Parsis in the world is less than a hundred thousand and of these the majority live in the Bombay Presidency, chiefly in Navsari and Bombay.

If I come across a Parsi friend anywhere in the country while touring, I never fail to recognize him. An English writer called Lang while comparing charitable attitudes the world over has established that in generosity Parsis, if we consider their number, top the list. The Parsi brethren who are like a drop in the ocean, have made the world talk of their generosity. History records no other instance of a community having practised such dispassionate generosity. Whenever I have stretched out my hand before Parsis, it has never returned empty.

In the satyagraha in South Africa too, Parsi brethren were in the forefront. Sheth Rustomji sacrificed his all. That is why I have sung his praises like a minstrel.

How can I repay this debt to the Parsis? Being a beggar, how can I repay my debts with money? I am not a saheb or a Viceroy that I may give them high offices or titles. Hence, today, having come to Navsari, I shall sing their praises and take away something from them. Parsi brethren are, of course, there in this struggle. A Zoroastrian friend who is like a brother to me and who is suspected of having cancer, is nevertheless dying to take part in this struggle.

Take the case of Dadabhai’s grand-daughters. These sisters are just crazy and impatient to join the struggle. What more then need I say about the assistance from Parsis? However, I want something special.

You may take it that the salt tax is as good as abolished. Ever since I set out from the Ashram, at various places Parsis have showered blessings on me and said: “May you triumph. God is with you. And come back after securing swaraj.” And I shall return, if I am alive, after winning swaraj.

You can make the largest contribution if, instead of joining in the salt struggle, you participate in the prohibition movement.
We ruin ourselves by spending Rs. 25 crores on liquor. Because of this evil habit our homes have been destroyed. Although I was a lawyer in South Africa, I moved about a good deal among our labouring brethren there. These labourers also came to see me about their problems. And, since I had made myself part of their lives they told me their joys and sorrows, their tales of woe. And they would break down and cry while telling me how they had ruined themselves through drink. I know from experience that many of my labourer brethren in Ahmedabad are in a similar plight. Those who are given to drink often cannot distinguish between wife, mother and daughter. Man degenerates into brute. Whoever gets entrapped in this vice becomes an animal. I have with my own eyes seen the captain of a ship, when drunk, rolling in vomit. I ask my Parsi brethren to help me rescue addicts from this vice.

Mithubehn saw people given to drink. It moved her and leaving her mother, her home and her belongings she has plunged into the cause of prohibition. However, the sacrifice by one Parsi lady is not sufficient to complete this task. The heart of every Parsi must be touched for the sake of this cause. And, where it seems necessary, persons like me may even have to offer satyagraha. Parsis are intelligent and capable and they earn crores of rupees. They are god-fearing. If, from today, Parsi owners of liquor booths give up this trade on realizing that to do business in liquor is a sin, other liquor-booth owners will certainly follow their example.

When we save thus 25 crore rupees we shall have rehabilitated crores of poor homes. The gods will then shower flowers upon us.

If you can enter the hearts of people and make them give up liquor, it will generate such power that we shall be able to achieve whatever we want.

I ask the ladies in particular to help in this. They should visit the homes of those who drink and plead with them. I have seen women of the Salvation Army do this. Why should not the women of India do the same? Are they—the Hindu, Muslim and Parsi women—less capable of doing good? Are not those who are caught in the vice their own brothers? If I go and reason with them, they will quarrel with me as they will with other men. They will not, however, be disrespectful or insulting to any woman. They are not such beasts that they will not understand you. As soon as they come in contact with you they will be awakened, they will step back and, seeing the love and affection.
pouring from your eyes, they will conclude that it is some sati or yogini confronting them and ashamed of themselves they will give up liquor.

When you sisters come to know the wives and daughters of drunkards, when you make friends with their ignorant, straying children, when you see that they continue to drink although they own nothing but the sky above them and the earth below, you cannot but feel inspired to take up this sacred cause.

I leave this message for the sisters in case the Government whisks me away to prison. Gujarati women are trained in such matters. Women in no other part of India have received as much training as they have. Hence all you sisters must plunge into the field which has already been prepared by Mithubehn.

In this non-violent struggle, women can play an even greater part than men because they are the very embodiment of renunciation and compassion, i.e., of non-violence. A man understands the dharma of non-violence through his intellect whereas a woman has imbibed it even before her birth. A man escapes with very little responsibility, but women have to serve their husbands, their children and other members of the family.

Parsis have laid me under a crushing burden of debt to them. They have made a slave of me by their words of love. And a slave enjoys the right to demand more from his master. In this yajna of self-purification, I shall not be satisfied even if you drown me in money or provide me with volunteers. I shall be satisfied only when the entire Parsi community hears my appeal and when Parsi brothers and sisters identify themselves with the work that Mithubehn is doing.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 13-4-1930

7. SPEECH AT DHAMAN

April 3, 1930

Many people from this taluka were my clients in South Africa. Many people from the surrounding villages also had contributed their share in South Africa. Of the eighty of us many are from Baroda State, since this state is spread all over Gujarat. Hence we cannot make any distinction between the two. The natives of this place gave me much help in the Satyagraha in South Africa. Their leaders also were Muslims. Right to the present moment the Congress has pursued the policy of having a certain number of people from this community in its higher echelous. In South Africa, however, this was not the practice. Among the Muslims there was Ahmed Kachalia who roared like a lion. He was a man of his word and I can say as a satyagrahi that I have not come across a single Hindu or Muslim in all India who could surpass him in courage and integrity. Kachalia qualified himself as a satyagrahi even in difficult circumstances. He put up with everything in order to keep his word. His son Ali too studied under me in South Africa. I knew him quite well.

I have greater expectation from Dhaman because I have found here thirty spinning-wheels. I am happy that there are so many here. The fact is that although the subjects of Indian States cannot participate in this struggle, they can work for khadi and prohibition to their hearts’ content. Secondly, I should like to congratulate you that your village has not been guilty of the cruel and stupid practice of many parents who get their children married without understanding the implications of the Sarda Act. Amongst the Antyajas of this village, nine men and ten women have vowed not to take liquor or carrion. In such things women must go along with men.

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 6-4-1930

8. LETTER TO REGINALD REYNOLDS

Bijalpur,
April 4, 1930

MY DEAR REGINALD,

I was delighted to have your letter. There is no question of restoration of confidence, for it was never lost. Assimilation of true ahimsa is a slow and sometimes painful process. And very few realize that there is such a thing as mental himsa and that it needs to be eradicated. It is to me a great joy that you saw the thing at once. I do not mind the other letters you have written. I should be glad if you will make another promise to yourself, viz., never to write for the Press for the time being. Let Young India be your sole vehicle for the time being. What do you say to your writing a brief note in Young India repenting of the unconscious indiscretion? I understand what you say about your engagement.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: C.W. 4533. Courtesy: Swarthmore College, Philadelphia

1 No such note appeared in Young India.
9. SPEECH IN VIJALPORE

April 4, 1930

After this meeting is over, I have to make two more speeches before I reach my destination. I shall make a speech at Dandi if I have to. Forty-one Headmen have handed in their resignations and the President of the Taluka Committee has congratulated them. Besides the 47, I have been informed today of some seven more.

Bharat Bhushan Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya has resigned from the Legislative Assembly and six others have followed him. These six are also well-known men. On the one hand Bharat Bhu-shan Malaviyaji has resigned, on the other the Headmen have resigned. The action of the latter is more valuable, for Malaviyaji was not a Government servant. He had entered the legislature with a view to serving the coun-try if possible. I can think of no one who has served the country with such single-minded devotion as Malaviyaji has. Nevertheless I assign greater value to the resignations of the Headmen of Gujarat. The reason is that Malaviyaji has not been a part of the administration of this country. The latter is run by these Headmen and Malaviyaji in fact only lends a gloss to the administration which we fear. The gloss can always be separated from the utensil. Headmen, however, are not a gloss which can be separated. They along with the Talatis are the two legs on which this Government rests. An enumeration of the Headmen and Talatis in the seven lakh villages of this country would give us fourteen lakhs of such legs and in this manner the resignation of each Headman would amount to the loss of one leg. It is for this reason that these resignations have value. This is so, however, only if they have been tendered sincerely. Sardar, who once had an income ranging bet-ween Rs. 1,000 and Rs. 2,000 a month has to beg for his meals today. For him, it was not easy to resign. The poor Headman, on the other hand, receives a paltry sum of Rs. 50 or 51-8-0 by way of a bounty. What are the Headmen then clinging to? If they want to be loyal to Sardar they will have to be disloyal to the Government.

I am going to Dandi. But I would request you not to follow me there. If you do, come as soldiers carrying your food on one shoulder and water on the other. Come with the intention of doing some work. Do not come with the idea of having a picnic. The stock of khadi is fast being exhausted. You must use it sparingly in the same manner as you use ghee. If you cannot obtain khadi, it is your duty to come clad only in loin-cloths made of khadi, but on no account must you come clad in foreign cloth. Those who drink must not come to take the pledge.

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 6-4-1930

10. STATEMENT TO ASSOCIATED PRESS

DANDI,
April 5, 1930

God be thanked for what may be termed the happy ending of the first stage in this, for me at least, the final struggle for freedom. I cannot withhold my compliments from the Government for the policy of complete non-interference adopted by them throughout the march. After the graceless and childish performance in the matter of Mr. Vallabhbhai’s arrest and imprisonment and equally unprovoked arrest and imprisonment of Mr. Sen Gupta, I was wholly unprepared for this exemplary non-interference. I am not so foolish as to imagine that the Government has suddenly lost their proved capacity for provoking popular resentment and then punishing it with frightfulness. I wish I could believe this non-interference was due to any real change of heart or policy. The wanton disregard shown by them to popular feeling in the Legislative Assembly and their high-handed action leave no room for doubt that the policy of heartless exploitation of India is to be persisted in at any cost, and so the only interpretation I can put upon this non-interference is that the British Government, powerful though it is, is sensitive to world opinion which will not tolerate repression of extreme political agitation which civil disobedience undoubtedly is, so long as disobedience remains civil and, therefore, necessarily non-violent.

It remains to be seen whether the Government will tolerate, as they have tolerated the march, the actual breach of the salt laws by countless people from tomorrow. I expect extensive popular response to the resolution of the Working Committee. I have seen nothing to warrant the cancellation of the notice I have already issued, that all committees and organizations throughout the length and breadth of the land are free, if they are prepared, to commence from tomorrow civil disobedience in respect of the salt laws. God willing, I expect with my companions (volunteers) to commence actual civil disobedience at 6.30 tomorrow morning. 6th April has been to us, since its culmination in Jallianwala massacre, a day for penance and purification. We, therefore, commence it with prayer and fasting. I hope the whole of India will observe the National Week commencing from tomorrow in the spirit in which it was conceived. I am positive that the greater the dedication to the country’s cause and the greater the purification, the speedier will be the glorious end for which millions of India consciously or unconsciously are striving.

Speeches and Writings of Mahatma Gandhi, p. 761

11. A MESSAGE

DANDI,
April 5, 1930

I want world sympathy in this battle of Right against Might.

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: Mahatma Gandhi (Album), p. 87

12. MESSAGE TO AMERICA¹

DANDI,
April 5, 1930

I know I have countless friends in America who are in deep sympathy with this struggle but mere sympathy will avail me nothing. What is wanted is concrete expression of public opinion in favour of India’s inherent right to independence and complete approval of the absolutely non-violent means adopted by the Indian National Congress. In all humility but in perfect truth I claim that if we attain our end through non-violent means India will have delivered a message for the world.

The Bombay Chronicle, 7-4-1930

¹This was given to S. A. Brelvi, correspondent of the Eastern News and Press Agency, New York.
13. LETTER TO MRIDULA SARABHAI

DANDI,
April 5, 1930

CHI. MRIDU,

I have received your letter. I have never had any doubt that we have to do real service only in the villages by living in villages. I have thought about a special work for women. You will read about it in Navajivan. If you like it, there is courage in it, and there is bravery. May God shape you into a first-class volunteer.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 11178. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

14. LETTER TO KANTIPRASAD C. ANTANI

April 5, 1930

BHAI KANTIPRASAD,

May the conference¹ be a success. If there is nothing else you can do, you should at least do khadi work.

Mohandas Gandhi

[From Gujarati]

Purusharthi Kantiprasad Chandrashankar Antani, p. 83

¹ Vide “To the women”, 6-4-1930 and “To the women”, 13-4-1930.
² The Anjar Prajakiya Parishad which was to be held on April 20, 1930
15. SPEECH AT DANDI

April 5, 1930

When I left Sabarmati with my companions for this seaside hamlet of Dandi, I was not certain in my mind that we would be allowed to reach this place. Even while I was at Sabarmati there was a rumour that I might be arrested. I had thought that the Government might perhaps let my party come as far as Dandi, but not me certainly. If someone says that this betrays imperfect faith on my part, I shall not deny the charge. That I have reached here is in no small measure due to the power of peace and non-violence: that power is universally felt. The Government may, if it wishes, congratulate itself on acting as it has done, for it could have arrested every one of us. In saying that it did not have the courage to arrest this army of peace, we praise it. It felt ashamed to arrest such an army. He is a civilized man who feels ashamed to do anything which his neighbours would disapprove. The Government deserves to be congratulated on not arresting us, even if it desisted only from fear of world opinion.

Tomorrow we shall break the salt tax law. Whether the Government will tolerate that is a different question. It may not tolerate it, but it deserves congratulations on the patience and forbearance it has displayed in regard to this party.

If the civil disobedience movement becomes widespread in the country and the Government tolerates it, the salt law may be taken as abolished. I have no doubt in my mind that the salt tax stood abolished the very moment that the decision to break the salt laws was reached and a few men took the pledge to carry on the movement even at the risk of their lives till swaraj was won.

If the Government tolerates the impending civil disobedience you may take it for certain that the Government, too, has resolved to abolish this tax sooner or later. If they arrest me or my companions tomorrow, I shall not be surprised, I shall certainly not be pained. It would be absurd to be pained if we get something that we have invited on ourselves.

What if I and all the eminent leaders in Gujarat and in the rest of the country are arrested? This movement is based on the faith that when a whole nation is roused and on the march no leader is necessary. Of the hundreds of thousands that blessed us during our march and listened to my speeches there will be many who are sure to take up this battle. That alone will be mass civil disobedience.

We are now resolved to make salt freely in every home, as our ancestors used to, and sell it from place to place, and we will continue doing so wherever possible till the Government yields, so much so that the salt in Government stocks will become superfluous. If the awakening of the people in the country is true and real, the salt law is as good as abolished.

But the goal we wish to reach is yet very far. For the present Dandi is our destination but our real destination is no other than the temple of the goddess of swaraj. Our minds will not be at peace till we have her darshan, nor will we allow the Government any peace.

Those Headmen who have resigned their posts should prove themselves true to their word and should regard it as a sin to serve this Government till freedom is won.

For the last four or five days, I have been speaking about other constructive activities also, and they should be taken up immediately in this Jalalpur taluka. Surat district is notorious for the drink habit, and the Jalalpur taluka is particularly so. Now that the wind of self-purification is blowing here, it should not be a difficult task to eradicate the drink evil altogether. There is sin in every leaf of the palm tree. Its only value lies in the ruin it brings us. This plant is like poison to us. All palm trees should therefore be cut down.

There should not be a single person in Jalalpur taluka wearing foreign cloth. Everyone who comes to Dandi should come with the intention to participate in, and offer his mite to, this swaraj yajna.

I would not like anyone coming to Dandi wearing foreign cloth. If it is our wish to turn Dandi into a place of pilgrimage or a bulwark of swaraj, everyone coming here should be dressed exclusively in khadi. I know that the stocks of khadi in the khadi stores are about to be exhausted, and if, therefore, you fail to get a full-length sari or dhoti and come wearing only a khadi langoti, you will be welcome here as a civilized person. If, ignoring my suggestion, any of you come to Dandi wearing foreign cloth, I shall have to place at the points of approach to Dandi, volunteers who will kneel before you and request you to wear khadi. If you feel offended by their doing so and slap them in the face, those satyagrahis will let themselves be slapped.

Dandi was chosen not by a man but by God. How otherwise could we have chosen for the battle-field of satyagraha such an out-of-the-way place—a place where no food grains are to be had, where there is scarcity of water, where thousands can assemble only with difficulty, walking ten miles from the railway station, and where if you are travelling on foot, you have to negotiate creeks full of slush and mud? The truth is that in this struggle we have to put up with suffering. You have made the road from Navsari to Dandi famous throughout the world by arranging for free drinking-water at frequent intervals all along it. If this struggle did not have your approval, your blessings, why would you be doing this?

Dandi should be a sacred ground for us, where we should utter no untruth, commit no sin. Everyone coming here should come with this devout feeling in his heart. If you brothers and sisters come forward as true volunteers and commit civil disobedience of the salt law, no matter what force the Government threatens to use against you, and if you do whatever else you may be required to do, we shall have in us the power to attain in a single day what we hold to be our birthright. Time was when I was infatuated with British rule, as British law taught that the person of every individual is sacred. According to that law, the police cannot kill or manhandle a man even though he might be guilty of murder. It is the duty of the police to produce the man alive before the court. Nor has the police any authority outside the jail to seize from a person even goods alleged to have been stolen. But here the very opposite is true. How otherwise can the police have the authority to decide whether I hold a handful of salt or pebbles?

Every man’s house is his castle. Our body also is a fort of a kind. And once salt has entered that fort, it should not be allowed to be forced out of it even if horses are made to trample on your heads. From today we should begin cultivating the strength of will to see that a fist holding salt does not open even if the wrist should be cut off.

Unauthorized entry into a house is a barbarous act. It is for a judge to decide whether I hold in my hand salt or dust. The English law holds the human person to be sacred. If every official assumes the authority of a judge and enters our homes, he would be acting as a robber.

But the officers in India, when they feel impelled, throw the English laws to the winds or ignore them completely at their sweet will and, resorting to the Act of 1818, render them all ineffective.

They have started arresting one leader after another. But according to the principle of this struggle, that the leader is one who endures the utmost suffering, one of those left outside should assume leadership and take the movement forward.

This is a struggle not of one man but of millions of us. If three or four men can fight and win swaraj, they will rule the country afterwards. Hence, in this struggle for swaraj millions should offer themselves for sacrifice and win such swaraj as will benefit the vast masses of the country.

The Government is taking away from us all the eminent leaders one after another. If we get ready to follow in their footsteps and do the duty shown by them, we can smile at what the Government is doing, but if we fail to do our duty we should feel ashamed. The leaders are behind the bars, and now we in our turn should take their place.

It is true that many of the leaders in and outside Gujarat have been jailed, that many volunteers have been wounded because they would not part with the salt in their hands, and that, at places, some were beaten so hard that they became unconscious. But I remain unmoved. My heart now is as hard as stone. I am in this struggle for swaraj ready to sacrifice thousands and hundreds of thousands of men if necessary. Since we have embarked upon a movement which will send thousands to jail, how can we weep over their imprisonment? In this game of dice we are playing, the throw has been as we wanted. Should we then weep or smile? This is God’s grace; let us remain unmoved and watch His miracles.

If in spite of our breaking several salt laws the Government takes no notice of the camp here till the 13th, we shall disband it after that date and go somewhere else. But this plan depends entirely on the Government. For the present, we can but take what the Government gives.

If you have not yet gone out to remove salt, let the whole village get together and go. Hold the salt in your fist and think that you are carrying in your hand salt worth Rs. 6 crores. Every year the Government has been taking away from us Rs. 6 crores through its monopoly of salt.

You can today take the pledge not to eat salt supplied by the Government. You have a mine of salt right at your doorsteps.

There is at Rohtak a humble, brave and selfless publicworker named Lala Shyamlal. At the time of the non-co-operation movement in 1921 he gave up his law practice but resumed it when the tide was low and earned thousands of rupees. However, his heart melted once more after the Lahore Congress and he pleaded to be taken into the Ashram. He also expressed his eagerness to join this march of satyagrahis to Dandi. But why should I exchange this gold mohur for a mere pice? So I sent him back to Rohtak. As he writes to me, he took leave of me after he had understood the value of non-violence better than before. He has now vowed never to give up non-violence and never to prove disloyal to the Ashram principles. This Lala Shyam-mlal has now been arrested on a charge of spreading disaffection against the Government.

He must have made some speech on the lines of my writings in Young India in which I preach disaffection as our moral duty. In the first place, they should apply Section 124A to the person who has been every moment praying for the destruction of the Empire and has also been attempting to destroy it—apply it, that is, to myself. But the true position is that Section 124A can be applied only to a person who wishes to overthrow the Government by rebellion or armed action. It can never apply to a person who wishes to destroy the Empire through self-suffering by following the path of non-violence and truth. But I am no judge. I have even been disbarred.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 13-4-1930

16. LETTER TO NARANADAS GANDHI

DURING DANDI MARCH,

[Before April 6, 1930][1]

CHI. NARANADAS,

If Reginald has asked for a name and if you call him Angad the name is quite appropriate.

Send money to Krishnadasi as and when he asks for it. You need not consult me so long as he asks for Rs. 100 at a time and the total does not exceed Rs. 1,000. If you yourself feel like asking me, you may do so.

[1] From the contents it appears this was written before the letter to the addressee dated April 6, 1930.

[2] A Vanara messenger in the Ramayana
You should remove all luggage from Jamna Kutir and similar buildings in which in any case there is hardly any luggage and which require no watch.

If Giriraj is not restless, he should remain there for the time being and look after the tannery. It is necessary that we go on making shoes, etc. If, however, he is keen on coming, he may. I am writing to him.

It is difficult to say what we should do about the money which we receive for the satyagraha campaign. My view is this. The money which has been received from villages during the march should be handed over to the Provincial Committee. The other sums which we receive may remain in the Ashram for the present. However, do as Mahadev advises. If you have doubt, consult Vallabhbhai. His word should be final.

I am of the opinion that if Bhansali keeps watch at the Ashram at night, you should let him do so. He is a man of a frank nature. He sleeps very little at night. His keeping watch will be a pure action, and he will probably catch the thief. However, discuss the matter with Imam Saheb, Mahadev and Mirabehn.

We have given to the Labour Union school Rs. 25,000 from the Birla Fund. Whatever the figure, send a date-wise statement of account to Gordhanbhai Patel, Secretary of the Mill-owners’ Association. Send a copy to me too.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Send it immediately. We shall get that money.

From Gujarati: C.W. 8095. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi
17. EXTRACTS FROM SPEECHES IN SURAT DISTRICT

[Before April 6, 1930]

It is within your power to remain peaceful and at the same time set Sardar free before his sentence of three months and three weeks expires. I ask one hundred per cent of the Headmen, and not fifty per cent of them, to resign. The same applies to the Talatis also. These two are the two pillars on which the Government rests. The political structure of India is supported on these. If these crack, the whole structure will crumble and mingle with the dust.

* * *

Beware! Burn up all false resignations. We can do without these. If there are people who think that since I am a Mahatma and have practised penance, and since Sardar is on my side, they will be able to go back to their posts in a couple of months, they are in for disappointment. Swaraj may be won within a couple of months or may take a lifetime. It may be that we shall not win swaraj even after my bones and those of Sardar are reduced to ashes. Now, however, we have become outlaws, and that too of a kind that cannot be disregarded. We have become outlaws by refusing to co-operate with an Empire on which the sun never sets. This Empire is a mass of untruths, however large that mass may be. It will bow at the very touch of the breath of truth. However, this can only be accomplished when such truth is kindled within us. Hence today, at the very outset, I wish to make up my accounts and warn you not to betray us. To betray me is to betray Sardar, Mother India and yourselves. No one craves for your resignations. Do not tender them under the assumption that the task will be accomplished in a trice. Resign only on the understanding that you will never again get back your posts as headmen or Talatis.

* * *

The women sang the song “It is easy to win swaraj”, but that has yet to be demonstrated. I have said so much about salt, now I shall add a couple of lines about the spinning-wheel. Do not conclude from this that whereas swaraj lies embedded in a mountain of salt, it does not lie concealed in a strand of yarn. In fact, swaraj lies in the latter

---

1 Extracted from “Swaraj Gita”. The source does not mention either the places or the dates of the speeches.
only. There is no other means of bringing happiness and peace to millions of human beings. Whether all of you come forward to prepare salt or not, keep chanting the mantra of khadi. And what about liquor? Mithubehn is crazy about this cause. We should be ashamed of continuing to drink when a Parsi lady gives up her home because of it.

* * *

I am tired of repeating the conditions for swaraj every day. Let me now practise the dharma that still remains even in addition to it. I have only to point out your dharma to you. As I had decided that regardless of what happened in the country, I should lay down my life or win swaraj through civil disobedience, I invited others to accompany me and I have set out. If I am alive tomorrow, I shall set out from here also after receiving your blessings. I invite those of you who are ready to accompany me. The others who do not do so should wear khadi and produce it. There is a dearth of khadi. I, who am one of its producers, am going away. If I were around, I would supply it to all by getting it from anywhere. Here I am, a producer of khadi, setting forth with others who also produce it, and those of its producers who are left behind do not have the capacity to meet the needs of all. It is therefore your duty to produce as well as wear khadi.

* * *

Even in my dreams, I would not wish anyone ill—be he an Englishman, a Parsi or a Muslim. I am a well-wisher of all. How then can it do anything to me? It dare not do so. It would arrest me, if it could muster up the requisite courage. And even if I should be arrested, while in prison I would pray to God to bring about a change of heart in this Government and to eradicate the sentiment that has been born within it which does not befit a human being. In other words, even in prison I would wish it well. I do not wish to see the King or his officers murdered; hence, it becomes difficult to arrest and imprison a person like me. The authorities could certainly arrest me if they wanted to, but I congratulate them on being ashamed to do so. However, such a situation will not continue always. They have no alternative but to arrest me some day, and, if they do not do so, the whole of India will flare up within a short period. I am aware that all you men and women have not come here today to court arrest. For me, it is all the same whether I am arrested or remain free. All of you will be in that position one day.
The Government’s plight is that of the serpent which has swallowed a rat. It would find it hard to resort to either course of action—allowing me to remain out or putting me behind the bars. I am pointing out this ordinary duty to you. Everyone, whether a Hindu, a Muslim or a Parsi, should follow it. When all of us do so, it is beyond the power of any Government to arrest us.

* * *

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 6-4-1930

18. TO THE WOMEN

As I am fully aware of the fact that countless women in India are illiterate, the principles of education which I have formulated are concerned with how they can attain their due status in spite of their lack of education; and it is from these that the means for securing swaraj have been derived. I can make the claim that this struggle has been so organized that the women of India, if they so desire, can make a bigger contribution than the men. The entire khadi movement depends on the women. This movement would collapse today if the women were to refuse to extend their co-operation to it. At least five times as many women as men are lending support to the cause of khadi. As a matter of fact, their number should be regarded ten times as large since there will be ten women working on a loom which runs for eight hours. Everyone knows that the contribution of men towards providing yarn for looms is very small, but even in other aspects of khadi work a good number of women are contributing their share. There are of course a large number of women working the loom. Hence, with regard to khadi it has already been established that this activity depends solely on women and it is because of this that women in India have made such progress which is unprecedented in Indian history and beyond what anyone had imagined to be possible. I saw this in the course of my three tours around India and today, walking through Gujarat, I see the same thing and that in a measure which can be calculated by the rule of three. That is to say, the awakening among women in a particular area has been in proportion to the number of spinning wheels working there.

1 The first three paragraphs of this article are not translated here. They are covered by the first three paragraphs of "To the Women of India", pp. 219-20.
Considering this and keeping in mind the impatience of women to take part in civil disobedience, I felt that if women truly wished to take risks, if they wished to leave a stamp not only on the history of India but on the history of the world, if they wished to see a resurgence of the civilization of India, they should find an exclusive field for themselves. Let us consider this. If women wish to participate in civil disobedience, they can do so in a very few days. But, after having found something, I am not interested in inviting them to offer civil disobedience against the salt law. Even if women participate in this, they will be lost amongst the men. For I expect that at every place large numbers of men will come forward. I do not believe that women will come forward in such numbers. And even if they do, neither the women nor the men will have anything to do and the salt tax will be repealed. The more I think the more I feel that we shall not have much difficulty in getting the salt tax abolished.

I feel that it is, or it can become, the special field of women to bring about a change of heart in these people [the drink addicts]. History testifies that man cannot conquer hearts as speedily as woman can. If women wished they could take up the work of prohibition today. The following is my idea of it:

1. Trained women should start satyagraha units at various places, go in deputations to the owners of liquor booths and request them to give up this trade.

2. They should go to the homes of drink addicts and also start picketing liquor booths, singing devotional songs and preventing those entering them from being caught in the vice.

If liquor booths and opium dens were closed down, it would mean a saving of 25 crores of rupees of the people’s money. It is possible to collect 25 crores of rupees of revenue in some other way. Only one result would follow from this; there would be a heavy reduction in the expense on the army and the administration—so heavy a reduction indeed that the very nature of the administration would be changed. The present policy is based on distrust of the people. Tomorrow’s policy will be based on trust of the people. In a policy so based there would be neither a large police department nor a large army. But why should I involve women in this tangle? At this

---

1 One paragraph following this is not translated here. It is covered by paragraph 4 of “To the Women of India”, p. 220.

2 One paragraph following this is not translated here. It is covered by paragraph 5 of “To the Women of India”, p. 220.
juncture I merely offer to women the field of prohibition without entering into discussion of any other field of activity. I believe that Gujarat is the best place for carrying on this activity. The physically delicate Parsi lady Mithubhn Petit is the person who has prepared the ground for this work. And it was her remarkable effort that suggested this field of work to me. Hence, all that remains to be done is that Mithubhn’s work should be multiplied a hundredfold. Not that only a hundred women should prepare themselves for the work, but, rather, that countless-sowo-men should prepare themselves and the activity should increase a hundredfold. The manner in which the work is at present being carried on should be slightly modified. All men should step aside. They should only do such work as is allotted to them by women. But the principal work of picketing, of persuading people, of pleading with them and of taking deputations to the liquor-booth owners should be done by women alone.¹

I have only given an outline of the scheme as I visualize it. Details may be filled in. It is my desire that women should become pioneers in this task and should give this activity such momentum that it will shake up the people as well as the Government.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 6-4-1930

19. WELLS FOR ANTYAJAS

A few weeks ago, Navajivan published Thakkar Bapa’s appeal for wells for our Antyaja brethren. Some men from Bombay recently came to see me at Sandhiyer. Thakkar Bapa, too, was present at the time. I suggested to those friends that they themselves should fill Thakkar Bapa’s purse. Rs. 40,000 was not too big a sum for them to give. These Antyaja friends require that amount. Immediately, one of the rich visitors paid the sum needed for sinking one well. Shri Narandas consulted the others and undertook to raise without delay the whole sum needed. This filled me with great joy and I complimented the visitors. I now advise these friends to collect this sum and place it at the disposal of Thakkar Bapa. Wells can be sunk only during the next three months. No well can be sunk after the monsoon has set in.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 6-4-1930

¹Two paragraphs following this are not translated here. They are covered by the last two paragraphs of “To the Women of India”, p. 221.
20. MY NOTES

SOME QUESTIONS

QUESTION. Should one insist upon khadi in jail?

ANSWER. I was not aware of this problem when I conceived the khadi vow. I feel that such insistence is unnecessary. Ordinarily a satyagrahi should not oppose any of the prison rules which do not violate his dharma. But everyone should decide his own duty in this regard. If someone has taken a vow that under no circumstances will he wear anything but khadi, he should certainly insist upon khadi. But I would consider it improper for one to take such a vow and go to jail.

Q. Anyone who follows the rule of eating only after having spun 160 strands of yarn would prefer the spinning-wheel to the takli. Should one therefore insist on being provided with a spinning-wheel and facilities for carding? Spinning on a takli would take much time and interfere with prison work, hence the spinning-wheel is an absolute necessity. Is one justified in insisting upon spinning 160 strands or should one be satisfied with less?

A. Spinning is a yajna so one can insist upon being provided with a spinning-wheel and facilities for carding. Anybody who has taken the vow of spinning must insist on both. It is not enough that a takli is provided. Whether one should be satisfied with less than 160 strands depends upon the vow. If the vow is to spin 160 strands one cannot do with less.

Q. What should one generally do when, for instance, the food provided is dirty, or when no urinals are provided, or when one is required to complete the calls of nature within two or three minutes and is not allowed to visit the lavatory again if the need arises, or when one is over-burdened with work, or when one cannot sleep owing to the warders shouting out the roll-call all night long? What kind of insistence concerning what matter would be regarded as dharma?

A. The common rule in such matters is that those inconveniences with which one can put up and which do no harm to one’s self-respect, should be tolerated while in the remaining matters one should fight as befits a satyagrahi. I would not tolerate dirty food or filthy utensils. I would not tolerate dirty urinals, but if facilities for this were provided in my cell I would not object to these. I would certainly take my own time with regard to evacuation of the bowels and would not tolerate being hustled in this matter. I would tolerate the noise of roll-call.
TO THE HEARTLESS MEN

The heartless Gujaratis do not appear to be concerned about Gujarati women being killed every day by Primus stoves. I have just been informed of the death of two women. During the present pilgrimage, I have had first-hand experience of the dangers involved in using these stoves. Even one of my experienced and skilled colleagues has had two narrow escapes. As a result of this, I have prohibited the use of such stoves altogether. Women do not know how to use a Primus stove, for it does require some skill. And our women cannot put it on a table. Hence, it is the duty of men to boycott it. So long as they do not do so, the deaths of the young girls and women from the use of this stove will be on their heads. Even Primus stoves which have been bought should be discarded. It is an illusion that the Primus saves time. We must also consider all the attention it needs when it goes out of order.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 6-4-1930

21. SWADESHI

The cloth merchants of Bombay are talking of boycotting foreign cloth. The Gujarat Sabha of Ahmedabad is doing the same. The intention of both is to help as much as possible the movement for the boycott of foreign cloth. However, if either of them should make a mistake, harm may be caused to the movement.

We now find the following varieties of swadeshi:

(1) Pure khadi, i.e., khadi made from hand-spun and hand-woven yarn.

(2) Cloth made in India in mills owned and run by Indians and from yarn that is also produced in such mills.

(3) Cloth made in such mills out of yarn that is wholly or partly of foreign origin.

(4) Cloth made in any mill which, although located in India, is owned and controlled by foreigners.

(5) Any object that is made in India.

(6) Any object for the making of which part of the work has been done in India, for instance, a musical instrument assembled here, though all its parts were made abroad.
The following are the various forms of boycott.

(a) Boycott of all foreign cloth.
(b) Boycott of British cloth alone.
(c) Boycott of all British goods.
(d) Boycott of all foreign goods.

In my opinion (1), i.e., pure khadi alone is swadeshi and, true boycott implies (a), i.e., boycott of all foreign cloth. If item No. (1) is proved to be swadeshi, other necessary items will prove their swadeshi character. We shall be unable to satisfy the need for even one article of swadeshi which is essential, if we try to obtain all swadeshi goods which may be found to be desirable.

Only one form of boycott, i.e., item (a), boycott of all foreign cloth, is essential and this can be achieved through khadi alone.

The reader should remember that discussion on other swadeshi goods has been going on ever since the Congress came into existence forty-five years ago. Even so, no conclusion has been reached. The question of pure swadeshi, that is khadi, was first taken up only nine years ago. Nevertheless, we have achieved a fair amount of success there. For the furtherance of this cause a national institution has come into being the like of which I do not find anywhere else in the world. It is only through khadi that the experiment of civil disobedience on such a large scale became possible.

The reader should remember that although we have been talking about boycott of British goods for the past forty-five years, we have not met with any success in this sphere. Boycott of foreign cloth on the other hand has now proved so effective that the people have developed faith in the possibility of such a boycott.

In my opinion it would be harmful from a practical standpoint to divert the attention of the people from the boycott of foreign cloth and it will be short-sightedness to think of attempting such a boycott without the help of khadi. If such a boycott were possible with the help of Indian mills, this could have been achieved by now, i.e., during the last fifty years. Yes, the mills could certainly help khadi in making the boycott effective. I have already shown how this could be done in practice.

The swadeshi of Indian mills is not merely useless, it is also harmful. This is because it puts khadi on a par with mill-made cloth. This is like the friendship between a tall and a short man. If the short man has the same rights as the tall man, he really has none. One can see with the naked eye that someone who is short cannot stand alongside someone who is tall. Hence, if the tall man wishes to be just to the short man he should always put the latter in the front. He should be ready to renounce anything in his favour. It may even be necessary for him to lift the short man on his shoulder in order to sustain him. The relationship between khadi and mill-made cloth is exactly of this nature. Whereas the latter is well set on its feet, the former has as yet only learnt to crawl. Hence anyone who has not taken the vow to wear pure khadi can at least act in the following manner. He can refuse to wear any cloth which has a single thread of foreign yarn in it. Instead, he should take the vow of using pure khadi alone. And, in case he is unable to do so, he should use cloth made in mills which are exclusively owned and controlled by Indians.

If khadi is not constantly kept in view, the result will be that the price of cloth made in mills in India—not Indian mills—will keep increasing and the boycott will never become effective.

1. In this age, no amount of effort would make it possible for mills to make cloth sufficient to meet the country’s needs.
2. The concern of mills generally is, and will be, profits.
3. The Government can, at any time, suppress the mills.
4. The present trend indicates that mills in this country are passing under foreign ownership and control.
5. As mills are dependent upon foreign machines and foreign techniques, they could, all of a sudden, be faced with a difficult situation.

While on the contrary:

1. If the sentiment for khadi becomes widespread in the country, we can produce today as much khadi as we require.
2. Khadi does not require as much capital as mills do.
3. It does not require as much technical skill.
4. It may be said that potentially there are thirty crores of labourers employed in the production of khadi.
5. All the implements required for the production of khadi are made in the country.
6. Khadi cannot be suppressed either by the Government or any other power.
7. Khadi can be produced in every home.
(8) It is not necessary to make khadi at one place and send it to another. At present it does have to travel to some extent because the sentiment for khadi has not gained much ground. The reader will see from all this what precisely swadeshi dharma means. While practising it, anyone who has imbibed the spirit of swadeshi will also readily abide by it in all other things. Anyone who wears khadi out of ignorance, by way of imitating others or out of hypocrisy, will not be regarded as having taken the vow of khadi, despite the fact that he wears it. Such fashionable khadi-wearers could not be regarded as advancing the sentiment for khadi. Anyone who uses khadi with knowledge will start denying himself all foreign goods which he can do without.

Let us now turn to boycott. It is madness to try and boycott everything. The idea is indefensible.

It is impossible to boycott only British goods or British cloth. This is because such goods or cloth can find their way into the country under the guise of other foreign goods or cloth. During the days of the Partition of Bengal, British cloth was being sold as swadeshi with the British markings on it removed. So when we think of boycotting British cloth alone, no purpose is served except that of giving an impetus to cloth made in Japan and other countries.

So far I have considered the matter only from the view-point of the boycott of foreign cloth.

But if we consider the situation after swaraj, if we consider the interests of the starving millions, we can only think of khadi.

[From Gujarati]

_Navajivan,_ 6-4-1930
In saying that I am greatly pleased at the kindness shown by the mill-owners of Ahmedabad, I am not merely being polite: I am expressing the deepest feelings of my heart. Their presence on the eve of my departure from Sabarmati, their visits to me from time to time and finally their coming to Surat in a group out of their affection for me are a happy indication that this struggle is not directed against mill-owners or against capitalists.

However, I myself attribute a special significance to their presence and their blessings. I have been associated with them now for almost fifteen years. During this period, despite the fact that perhaps some of them regarded my conduct as being detrimental to their interests, they have accepted me as a friend and our relationship has been cordial even when there has been a dispute between us. I believe that their co-operation on this occasion is, to some extent, because of that relationship. If this conclusion is correct, I have the right to expect some more practical support from them in addition to their presence and their blessings.

They have taken a step forward by their decision that hence-forth they will boycott foreign cloth and use only swadeshi cloth. This resolution, though commendable, has loopholes. Some may regard khadi as swadeshi. Others may prefer mill-made cloth with a border that is made of foreign yarn. The dharma of swadeshi cannot be practised in this manner. In my opinion, the purest form of swadeshi to the extent it is practicable is khadi. If this is not possible, then swadeshi should mean cloth made in mills owned and controlled by Indians out of yarn spun in those mills. If even this cannot be done, not only is swadeshi meaningless but it is also harmful from the point of view of boycott.

If mill-owners encourage khadi and run their mills with an eye to attaining the object of swadeshi, I regard the boycott of foreign cloth as something very simple. If I find the time, I hope to consider this subject in detail in a separate article. Here I wish to show how and in what ways mill-owners can specially assist this movement. It is beyond argument that the relations between mill-owners and workers should be friendly. If, instead of opposing each other, they were to help each other they would encourage the cause of swaraj. In this regard the following points should be borne in mind:

(1) Mill-owners should carefully remove the everyday inconveniences the workers have to face.

(2) Since mostly I am not there and Sheth Mangaldas is old—even older than I am—there should be a permanent panch to solve problems as they arise.

(3) Mill-owners should consider the Majoor Mahajan a friendly body and have faith in it. They should make full use of its assistance and co-operate fully with it.

(4) With a view to improving their moral and social condition labourers should be given financial and other assistance whenever there is need for it. In other words, schools, hospitals, reading-rooms and such other institutions meant exclusively for them should be supported without anything being expected by way of return.

(5) Those labourers, clerks and others who wish to participate in civil disobedience or such other national work, should be given help and wherever it becomes necessary to relieve them, this should be done reserving their right to return. If it becomes necessary to support the families this should be done.

(6) In order to free labourers from the vice of drink, mill-owners should start canteens and provide recreation to suit their tastes. In order to induce abstention those who give up liquor should be recognized and encouraged in various ways.

(7) There should be no profit motive behind the production of cloth by mills. The purpose of such production should be boycott of foreign cloth.

(8) Mills should never produce cloth with the intention of passing it off as khadi; they should not mark it as khadi or stamp it with the spinning-wheel; instead, they should produce such qualities of cloth as cannot be found in khadi at present. In other words, they should decide upon the quality of cloth to be produced in consultation with the Charkha Sangh.

(9) Mills should stock khadi, propagate it and give of their talent and experience for its production.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 6-4-1930
23. LETTER TO REGINALD REYNOLDS

April 6, 1930

MY DEAR REGINALD,

I hope you had my previous letter¹.

The letter from Wilson’ is quite good. God will keep you out of harm’s way.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 4534. Courtesy: Swarthmore College, Philadelphia

24. LETTER TO LALA DUNICHAND

DANDI,
April 6, 1930

DEAR LALA DUNICHAND

The news that Lala Shamlal of Rohtak has been arrested has prompted Lala Surajbhan to rush to the Punjab. I have approved of the suggestion. Please make what use you like of him. I do hope that you and Mrs. Dunichand will not fail to sacrifice your all in this final battle for freedom.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 5588

¹ Vide “Letter to Reginald Reynolds”, 4-4-1930.
² After the addressee had written an apology to Wilson, author of the critical comment in the Indian Daily Mail, the latter sent a “very friendly reply” which was forwarded to Gandhiji.
25. INTERVIEW TO FREE PRESS OF INDIA

DANDI,
April 6, 1930

Now that a technical or ceremonial breach of the salt law has been committed, it is now open to anyone who would take the risk of prosecution under the salt law to manufacture salt wherever he wishes and wherever it is convenient. My advice is that a worker should everywhere manufacture salt and where he knows how to prepare clean salt should make use of it and instruct villagers to do likewise, telling the villagers at the same time that he runs the risk of being prosecuted. In other words the villagers should be fully instructed as to the incidence of salt tax and the manner of breaking laws and regulations in connection with it, so as to have the salt tax repealed and it should be made absolutely clear to the villagers that this breach is to be open and in no way stealthy. This condition being known they may manufacture salt or help themselves to salt manufactured by nature in creeks and pits near the seashore, to use it for themselves and for their cattle and to sell it to those who will buy it, it being well understood that all such people are committing a breach of the salt law and therefore running the risk of prosecution or even without prosecution to be subjected by the so-called salt officers to harassment. Thus the war against salt tax should be continued during the national week up to the 13th instant. Those who are now engaged in this sacred work should devote themselves to vigorous propaganda for boycott of foreign cloth and use of khaddar. They should also endeavour to manufacture as much khaddar as possible. As to this and prohibition of liquor I am preparing a message for the women of India who, I am becoming more and more convinced, can make a larger contribution than the men towards the attainment of independence. I feel they will be worthier interpreters of non-violence than men, not because they are weak, as men in their arrogance believe them to be, but because they have greater courage or the right type and immeasurably greater spirit of self-sacrifice.

1Gandhiji gave the interview after he had broken the salt law by picking up a lump of salt mixed with mud.
QUESTION. Now that you have infringed the salt law and Government have not interfered with you what do you intend doing afterwards? —the Free Press representative. Gandhiji replied:

ANSWER. Oh, I shall continue to manufacture illicit salt.

You must subordinate bread-earning to national interest. You must take interest in gaining independence for India and freeing her from the heavy burden of this infernal tax. You must all take concerted action and co-operate in India’s interest.

The Amrita Bazar Patrika, 7-4-1930

26. SPEECH AT DANDI

April 6, 1930

At four in the afternoon Gandhiji addressed a meeting. Reviewing the day’s Programme he remarked that the beginning of the national week had been very auspicious. Whether Government arrested them or not they had to do their duty. He was sure that all over India people must have started satyagraha on this day. Proceeding, he said there was not much of natural salt at Dandi since Government servants had taken timely care to destroy it. That was a monstrosity which it was their duty to get rid of. When they made a beginning in the morning he had himself picked up more mud than salt, but after washing and cleaning he could get two tolas of pure quality which was sufficient for his day’s requirements. That was only a beginning but that signified great things. Today those who had broken the law had become either thieves or owners.

He then referred to the raid at Aat. Mr. Antia, the police officer in charge, had shown considerable prudence in his behaviour. That was the victory of ahimsa. What an amount of public money Government had wasted in confiscating that salt!

Gandhiji then made a reference to the arrest of Lala Shamlal of Rohtak under section 124A. He paid a glowing tribute to Lala Shamlal for his excellent national work.

He could not understand the policy of Government in arresting other workers and leaving him alone. Not that he was anxious to be arrested, but that was not a just course. He did not expect any greater honours by his arrest. He was already a Mahatma. He did not want the title of Mahatma.

He was not at all anxious to go to jail. Surely he enjoyed the good climate of Dandi. Government must arrest him before others, because he was the greatest offender. It was the duty of every person in Rohtak to commit breach of 124A under which Lala Shamlal was arrested. In conclusion, Gandhiji asked the people not to eat taxed salt any more.

The Bombay Chronicle, 8-4-1930
27. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

Sunday, After 10 p.m. [April 6, 1930]

CHI. MAHADEV,

I hear that Manilal Kothari has been arrested. Ramdas and others have already been arrested. All this is very good. For you also it is a matter of days or hours. As for me, it will make no difference whether I am inside or outside jail.

I have sent the articles for Young India directly to Mohanlal. You may or may not be there to receive them.

If you get time, organize the women. There will be no harm if the Ashram women make a start. On the contrary, it may be necessary that they do so. I am referring to the campaign against drinking.

Surajbhan is going to the Punjab, with my permission, after hearing about the arrest of Lala Shamlal.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Here they have not laid hands on anyone so far. Sarojini Devi has remained here and has decided to take Abbas’s place if the old man is arrested.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11472

---

1 The arrests of Manilal Kothari, Ramdas and others were reported in Navajivan, 13-4-1930. The letter was evidently written on the preceding Sunday.
28. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI,

KARADI,

10.15 p.m. [April 6], 1930

CHI. NARANDAS,

You must have received the reply to your question. Perhaps it will be better if Purushottam comes over here. The air here is very good. About arrangements for water we must wait and see what can be done. There are no signs yet of my being arrested.

That lady Kamaladevi is a very good-natured woman. She will stay for about fifteen days. If the place suits her child, she may even stay on. If she wishes to, she is worth encouraging. See that she does not feel lonely.

A Bengali gentleman from Santiniketan will be arriving there for a fortnight’s stay. Cultivate his acquaintance. He, too, is a frank-hearted man. After gaining some experience, he will return to Bengal.

It will be very good indeed if Ratilal sticks to the work he has taken up.

Tell everyone that it is because I do not get time that I do not write letters to them.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Surajbhan is going to the Punjab with my permission.

From Gujarati: C.W. 8096. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

---

1 From the reference to Surajbhan’s going to the Punjab, it appears this was written the same day as the preceding item.
29. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

April 6, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

No time to send you a long love letter. It is now nearing 11 p.m. How much yarn have you now left to be paid for the two Sanghs, to what dates have payments been already made?

More when time permits. Manilal has gone to replace Ramdas.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5388. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9622

30. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

Silence Day [On or before April 7, 1930]¹

CHI. MIRA,

If you feel like coming, you are at liberty to come. You won’t see Dandi. If you are quite calm, you need not come. Even if you are to join the prohibition work at a later stage, you will be none the wiser for coming. All the talk will be in Gujarati. But if you want to come because you must see me, then come some other day for that sole purpose. But you must judge for yourself. I leave you entirely free to decide.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

You will carefully follow Young India nowadays.

From the original: C.W. 5384. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9618

¹ Gandhiji seems to refer to the women’s conference held at Dandi on April 13 which passed a resolution on prohibition. The preceding Monday was April 7.
31. BARBAROUS

[April 7, 1930]

The threatened has after all happened. I congratulate the Government on having commenced arrests in right earnest of salt tax resisters at least in Gujarat. They have arrested Sjt. Manilal Kothari and all his companions, so also Sjt. Amritlal Sheth and his companions, Dr. Chandulal Desai of Broach Sevashram and his companions. They have arrested Darbar Gopaldas, Sjt. Fulchand, Sjt. Ravishankar, the intr-epid reformer who has weaned the brave but ignorant Rajputs of Kheda from many an error. They have arrested Ramdas Gandhi, Keshavbhai Ganesji, Chimanlal Pranshankar and others. All this the Government had the right to do. But they had no right to do what they did today\(^1\) at the village Aat four miles from Dandi. The police tried by force to snatch salt from the civil resisters. This they had no right to do, if they were representing a civilized Government. There was no provocation offered. The resisters were not running away. Their names could have been taken. But they insulted these brave men and through it the nation by touching their sacred persons without warrant and without just cause. One of the resisters by name Ukabhai Rama of Bardoli was slightly injured on the wrist. I admit that the police went unarmed to the scene of action. They will probably admit that there never was the slightest occasion for carrying arms. For the people were obviously and absolutely peaceful, nevertheless this laying hands on the people for the purpose of seizing the salt they were carrying was morally wrong and even wrong I fancy according to English common law. But I do not know what powers are given by a statute that makes a crime of undefined cowardice. This first drawing of blood, however little, brought down practically the whole of the village to the scene. Women were just yet to take no part in the act of civil disobedience, nor were the men of the village expected as yet to do so. But they, men and women (some with babes in arms), immediately they heard that salt was being forcibly seized and that one of the volunteers was injured, rushed out, and men on one side and women on the other descended to the channel and began to dig out the salt. As soon as I heard of the attempt at forcible seizure from the persons of the resisters, Monday being my day of silence, I wrote on a piece of paper that Shrimati Sarojini Devi and Sjt. Abbas Tyabji should go, and if the police did not desist they should also dig out salt and challenge them to seize it from their hands. But I charitably assume that the police had seen their mistake before these friends reached the scene and had not the heart to touch a whole villageful of people including women. The sat-yagrahis, however, would not be satisfied without my presence although I might not speak. They wanted me evidently to see with my own eyes how they had behaved and with what zest the whole village was participating in the struggle. Ukabhai Rama was brought to me with the salt rescued. I went. For me it was a soul-stirring sight. The forcible seizure served a good purpose. It brought life to the whole village. Nevertheless, for the sake of the Government and for the sake of keeping the salt war on the gentlemanly plane, I wish this ugly incident had not happened.

\(^1\) Monday, April 7, 1930

Legal procedure may be a cumbersome business for the Government. But since they have begun well let them not end ill. Let it be a pure trial of strength between them and the people. If they will resort to terrorism and if I am not mistaken, they will find the people, men as well as women, ready for any ordeal they may prepare for them. Salt in the hands of satyagrahis represents the honour of the nation. It cannot be yielded up except to force that will break the hand to pieces. Ukabhai, as he was describing the action of the police, said, “God gives strength to a satyagrahi to defend what is entrusted to him.” Let the people defend the salt in their possession till they break in the attempt, but they should do so without malice, without anger, without an angry word. The police have the easiest way open to them of taking possession of the salt. Let them arrest the civil resisters, and they can take possession of the salt for they have possession of their persons. But it can become forfeit only after conviction, not before.

Young India, 10-4-1930
32. STATEMENT TO THE PRESS

April 7, 1930

The reports received so far indicate that the magic wave of mass civil disobedience in Gujarat has had its effect on the Government. The Government has lost no time in arresting the leaders of this movement but I understand that it must have paid similar attention to the leaders in other provinces as well. This is something we can congratulate ourselves on. It would have been surprising if the Government had allowed the satyagrahis to act as they pleased. It would have been considered barbaric if it had attacked the life and property of the satyagrahis without any previous inquiry. One cannot object to trial and conviction according to established procedure. Prison and such other punishments are the ordeal through which a satyagrahi must pass. A satyagrahi can be said to have fulfilled his purpose only when he does not flinch, when he does not betray those whom he represents and when he is not scared by the arrest of his leader. The time has come when everyone will have to be both soldier and commander.

I shall be deeply grieved if even after these arrests, students who attend schools or colleges run or controlled by the Government do not leave these institutions. People should make salt only after realizing the risk involved in doing so, or, alternatively, they should collect the salt that has naturally accumulated in creeks and holes on the seashore and use it for themselves and their cattle and sell it to those who may wish to buy it. Everyone should realize that in defying the salt law they run the risk of legal action being taken against them. It is also possible that the officers of the so-called salt department may harass them without resorting to any legal steps. The struggle against the salt law has to be carried on in this fashion during the whole of the National Week ending on 13th April. All those who do not take part in this sacred task should devote themselves wholly to the powerful movement for the boycott of foreign cloth and use khadi. They should try and make as much khadi as possible and carry on the struggle for prohibition.

I am preparing a message to the women of India. I am becoming increasingly certain that in the struggle for securing swaraj, the women of this country could contribute a greater share than the men. I feel that women will be able to explain the meaning of non-violence to the country more effectively than men. Not because men, out of vanity, regard them as weak but because they possess real courage in a greater proportion and an immeasurable sense of dedication.

[From Gujarati]
Prajabandhu, 13-4-1930

33. LETTER TO GEOFFREY MAW

DANDI,
April 7, 1930

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter of 26-3-30 and the book. I have read the passage referred to by you. From my experience of such incidents I doubt if the deceased ever uttered the sentiments imputed to him or that the Indians referred to by the author or ever said what has been reported of them. But I should be sorry to discover that the deceased made the remarks ascribed to him, although he had never met me and although he had never studied the movement. For I hold with many Christian friends that Jesus himself was a confirmed non-co-operator. His whole life as we know it was one of sustained non-co-operation with priesthood because it was identified with evil.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a copy: Geoffrey Maw Papers. Central Library of the Selly Oak College, Birmingham. Courtesy: Marjorie Sykes

1 In which the addressee had said: “Forgive me if I appear to criticise. Your way of non-co-operation appears good for you... though you foresee bloodshed and enmity and further cleavage of the two races ahead... Aggrey’s way seems to me to be truly ‘the more excellent way’. I think he would have counselled ‘patience and still more patience’...”

2 The passage from the book titled Aggrey of Africa by Edwin Smith had quoted Aggrey to say: “I stand for co-operation with the white man. Your friend Gandhi makes a mistake when he goes in for non-co-operation. So long as he persists in that policy he will never help India...”
34. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

DANDI,
April 7, 1930

CHI. MAHADEV.

I have your letter. The first day at any rate Gujarat celebrated very well and the Government on its part may also be said to have celebrated it quite well. Except for what happened at Aat village, there has been nothing that one might complain about. I have written about Aat for Young India and you will find the article there among the papers. The sentence awarded to Durbar and others may be regarded as reasonable. As my article is based on the information I have received, you may make in it any alterations and additions you think fit.
If you have the courage and if you wish, you may distribute salt at a public meeting; but from this distance I still think that it will be an unnecessary risk to try to distribute salt at a public meeting. I have explained to Gangabehn everything about women and about the drink evil. If you have time, think on the subject and discuss it with others.
If you don’t, you may drop the idea.

I am busy at the moment with a long letter which I have just received from the Kheda district.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11473
35. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

DANDI,

Silence Day [April 7, 1930]

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I do get your letters. But what can I do? I can get no time and, therefore, have not been able to write to you. I very much wish to write, of course. I have to write about the struggle under the everpresent possibility of arrest and days pass. I should indeed be happy if you are permitted and go to the Ashram. The Government has still not arrested me. It has started arresting others. Ramdas has been arrested. I have, therefore, sent Manilal to take his place. Our work is going on very well here. Dandi is a small village; its water and air seem to be excellent.

I stop here.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 3363

1 From the reference to Ramdas Gandhi’s arrest the letter appears to have been written on Monday, April 7, 1930. Vide also “Letter to Prabhavati”, 10-4-1930.
36. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

April 7, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS,

I send with this a cheque received from Bhai Shantikumar. Treat it as an anonymous contribution.

Gangabehn will start from here tomorrow morning.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I have permitted Jayantiprasad to go to the U.P.

From Gujarati: C. W. 8097. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

37. LETTER TO SHANTIKUMAR MORARJI

DANDI,

April 7, 1930

CHI. SHANTIKUMAR,

I have your letter enclosing a cheque. I would not expect a cheque from you just now. If, however, you send one, it will have for me a hundred times its value. I know that your heart is here. We have, however, to practise non-attachment. It is the quintessence of all religious teaching. I have given autographs and blessings in both the copies of the Gita. May God give to both of you Shanti and Sumati and may you be worthy of your names.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 4718. Courtesy: Shantikumar Morarji

---

1 Peace of mind
2 Wisdom. Sumati is the name of the addressee’s wife.
38. ADVICE TO VOLUNTEERS, AAT

April 7, 1930

Gandhiji asked them to cling to their resolve under any circumstances. He warned them against putting any resistance that would encourage violence on the part of the police. They had every right, he said, to hold, tight to their bosom the salt which they might collect. That was no violence. To them their salt was as dear as their blood. He hoped that by their patience and suffering they would change the hearts of police even. Gandhiji advised volunteers to carry on their work without minding such interference of police.

The Bombay Chronicle, 8-4-1930

39. MESSAGE TO KATHIAWAR

DANDI, April 7, 1930

From what I hear it seems that the Government have conferred upon Kathiawar greater honour. While information from other centres states that leaders have been arrested, as regards Kathiawar, Mr. Manilal Kothari and Sheth Amritlal are arrested with their volunteers. Nothing could be more creditable and welcome for Kathiawar. Moreover, the recent death of Mr. Kothari’s wife has added more to the valour. The tragic sentiment is there in the death of a dear one and when a warrior is deeply affected by such departure without succumbing to sorrow and plunges into the field without a moment’s delay, his bravery shines even more. I hope Kathiawar will understand this sentiment and will nurture it. There is only one way to do so. If Kathiawar is pouring incessantly to join satyagraha and take up the work left by these men, success will be theirs.

The Bombay Chronicle, 8-4-1930

1 After the arrest of two volunteers at Aat, Gandhiji accompanied by Abbas Tyabji and Sarojini Naidu, visited the spot where satyagraha was offered. As Gandhiji was observing silence, he wrote a brief message on a piece of paper which was read out by the captain of the volunteers.
40. MESSAGE TO GUJARAT

DANDI,
April 7, 1930

Gujarat has worked wonders. The hopes which Pandit Motilal Nehru had expressed at Jambusar seem to fructify. The first day of self-purification week has begun with auspicious omens. Good news is pouring in from all centres from Ranpur right up to Surat. Messrs Manilal Kothari and Amritlal Sheth have been arrested with the volunteers and the news just now reaches us that Durbar Gopaldas, Talati and Ravishanker, all leaders of Kaira District, have been arrested. They have enhanced the prestige of Gujarat and India as well. But what will the remaining workers in Gujarat do? I hope the volunteers will pour in large numbers from all quarters, without waiting for any call and fill up the gap immediately caused by the arrests. The time has now come when students, pleaders, Government servants and others will be put to test. Will those who remain outside keep on waiting and watching when seasoned soldiers are being arrested?

The Bombay Chronicle, 8-4-1930
41. LETTER TO KALAVATI TRIVEDI

DANDI,

Silence Day [On or after April 7, 1930]

CHI. KALAVATI,

I got your letter. I liked it. What are you doing? Are you at all studying? Are you happy?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 5285

42. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

DANDI,

Silence Day [On or after April 7, 1930]

CHI. CHANDRAKANTA,

Write to Mother now that she should stay on there in peace. When she feels truly inspired from within, she can register herself in the Satyagraha Camp there itself.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: Chandrakanta Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

---

1 Gandhiji reached Dandi on April 5, 1930.
2 Wife of Kashinath Trivedi, then Assistant Editor of Hindi Navajivan. She was at the time residing in the Sabarmati Ashram.
3 Gandhiji reached Dandi on April 5, 1930. April 7 was a silence day. Gandhiji was at Dandi on the following silence day also.
43. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

DANDI,

Tuesday, April 8, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

I have your letter and postscript. I hope Mother is not suffering from cancer. But the life is so artificial that one wonders that we do not suffer more than we do.

Yes, the things are hastening to an end. You were right in not going when you did not feel like it.1 You will hear all about the exclusive field I have suggested for women.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5390. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9624

44. LETTER TO AMINA TYABJI

DANDI,

April 8, 1930

MY DEAR SISTER,

Abbas Saheb is going tonight to Nadiad as even Fulchand has been arrested. Now there is hope of his being arrested. He thinks that here I am blocking his way. He may be right.

Khuda Hafiz.

Love.

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 9687

---

1 Vide “Letter to Mirabehn”, 7-4-1930.
45. LETTER TO RAMESHWARDAS PODDAR

DANDI,
April 8, 1930

Bhai Rameshwardas,

I got your letter. If you stop worrying and go on doing your best, God is bound to be pleased with whatever you can do. And do not give up Ramanama in any circumstances.

Blessings from
Bapu

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 219

46. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

Tuesday, April 8, 1930

Chh. Mahadev,

Bhai Amritlal has been arrested. And on the Dholera side the authorities seem to be acting in a novel fashion. I think you should pay a visit to that part. From today I have started visiting the neighbouring villages. I don’t intend this week to go outside the limits of this taluka or its neighbourhood. If, however, it becomes necessary I will be ready to go to Dholera or any place near it. I suppose you have heard about the arrests of Jamnalal, Ishvarlal, etc.

Blessings from
Bapu

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11474
April 8, 1930

I am glad the Government has allowed me to remain free so that I can fulfill the promise I made to you yesterday. Yesterday when Ukabhai was beaten and all of you suddenly jumped down in order to collect salt, you all, including even the women, must have found it difficult to stand the sight. That incident will remain indelible in the history of India. Our first battle is going to be fought at Aat. Ours is a war of love in which we have to suffer too. We shall not allow the salt to be taken away even at the risk of losing our lives, just as a mother would not allow herself to be robbed of her child even if she had to die for it.¹ When this happens the whole of India will rise up. India cannot tolerate such insult even when it is perpetrated against men. God is the only ammunition that we possess. You have glorified the second day of your struggle and I hope that all the villages of Gujarat and the whole of the country will follow your example. Let the Government arrest all the national leaders it wants to. It will find that its belief that the struggle will be terminated for want of leaders is false. When you have collected the salt, do not waste a single grain of it. You should be determined to eat only that salt upon which no tax has been levied. If the Government levies an excise duty on paddy you would have no alternative but to eat paddy grown in your own fields; you have to follow a similar course with regard to salt also.

Do not let go of salt when the police tries to snatch it from your hands. So long as your wrists are intact, do not let your fists be loosened. Your fists will acquire the strength of iron if you have faith in satyagraha.

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 13-4-1930

¹ This sentence is from The Bombay Chronicle, 9-4-1930.
At last the long expected hour seems to have come.

In the dead of night my colleagues and companions have roused me from deep slumber and requested me to give them a message. I am, therefore, dictating this message, although I have not the slightest inclination to give any.

Messages I have given enough already. Of what avail would this message be if none of the previous messages evoked a proper response? But information received until this midnight leads me to the belief that my message did not fall flat, but was taken up by the people in right earnest. The people of Gujarat seem to have risen in a body as it were. I have seen with my own eyes thousands of men and women at Aat and Bhimrad fearlessly breaking the Salt Act. Not a sign of mischief, not a sign of violence have I seen, despite the presence of people in such large numbers. They have remained perfectly peaceful and non-violent, although Government officers have transgressed all bounds.

Here in Gujarat well-tried and popular public servants have been arrested one after another, and yet the people have been perfectly non-violent. They have refused to give way to panic, and have celebrated the arrests by offering civil disobedience in ever increasing numbers. This is just as it should be.

If the struggle so auspiciously begun is continued in the same spirit of non-violence to the end, not only shall we see Purna Swaraj established in our country before long, but we shall have given to the world an object-lesson worthy of India and her glorious past.

Swaraj won without sacrifice cannot last long. I would, therefore, like our people to get ready to make the highest sacrifice that they are capable of. In true sacrifice all the suffering is on one side — one is required to master the art of getting killed without killing, of gaining life by losing it. May India live up to this mantra.

---

1 This was published with a note which read: “The following is an English translation of a message dictated by Gandhiji at Dandi on April 9, when there was a strong rumour of his impending arrest. A month has gone by, but the message still holds good. We publish it today as a challenge to the honour and loyalty of India to meet the fiery ordeal that now lies before her.”
At present India’s self-respect, in fact her all, is symbolized as it were in a handful of salt in the satyagrahi’s hand. Let the fist holding it therefore be broken, but let there be no voluntary surrender of the salt.

Let the Government, if it claims to be a civilized Government, jail those who help themselves to contraband salt. After their arrest the civil resisters will gladly surrender the salt, as they will their bodies into the custody of their jailors.

But by main force to snatch the salt from the poor, harmless satyagrahis’ hands is barbarism pure and simple and an insult to India. Such insult can be answered only by allowing our hand to be fractured without loosening the grasp. Even then the actual sufferer or his comrades may not harbour in their hearts anger against the wrongdoer. Incivility should be answered not by incivility but by a dignified and calm endurance of all suffering in the name of God.

Let not my companions or the people at large be perturbed over my arrest, for it is not I but God who is guiding this movement. He ever dwells in the hearts of all and he will vouchsafe to us the right guidance if only we have faith in Him. Our path has already been chalked out for us. Let every village fetch or manufacture contraband salt. Sisters should picket liquor shops, opium dens and foreign cloth dealers’ shops. Young and old in every home should ply the takli and spin, and get woven, heaps of yarn every day. Foreign cloth should be burnt. Hindus should eschew untouchability. Hindus, Mussalmans, Sikhs, Parsis, and Christians should all achieve heart unity. Let the majority rest content with what remains after the minorities have been satisfied. Let students leave Government schools and colleges, and Government servants resign their service and devote themselves to service of the people, and we shall find that Purna Swaraj will come knocking at our door.

Young India, 8-5-1930
49. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

April 9, 1930

CHI. MAHADEV.

I am halting in Surat for a few hours on my way to Bhimrad. The car took the wrong road, with the result that I missed the train and came here by car. At present my very thoughts have grown wings and they seem to have effect even when not expressed in speech or action. That is a fact. Thoughts which are part of tapascharya are single-pointed, and hence their power is greater than that of electricity or of still subtler ether. Your suggestion, therefore, was acted upon immediately yesterday. All the men in my batch will have to be dispersed and posted wherever they may be needed. Surajbhan has already left, and so has Jayantiprasad, each for his own district. Vamanrao Pataki also has gone to his district. I did not have to suggest to any of the three that he should go. They themselves felt that they should go. Surendra is waiting at Navsari to proceed to Bhimrad. Puratan and Haridas Gandhi are at Navsari waiting to leave for Olpad. I have sent Abbas Saheb to Nadiad, where I will send other men whom he may ask for, provided I am not arrested by then. However, if I am not free and you are, it will be for you to send them; and if even you are not free, those who are left behind will make the necessary arrangements. Fortunately, Dayalji at least will stay behind, and he will issue orders through the children. If none else, there will always be Lord Krishna whose orders are bound to be felt by all in their hearts and the work will go on somehow. I am certainly ready to send Chhaganlal to Wadhwan, but Kevalram can go there as well. I think you know that he has offered to do so. However that may be, you may, if you are free, communicate to me any other suggestions which may occur to you. I have sent word to the Broach Sevashram people that they may ask me if they need any men. As for you, I think you will not be a free man for long.

I also have written to Saraladevi, but that was only about the drink evil. Yesterday I sent a letter addressed to Kaka on this subject. I think you must have read it. You will have seen from it that I, at any rate, wish to start the movement against the drink evil and foreign cloth along with the salt agitation on the 13th. Even if that should not be possible, I should like the fight against the drink evil to start from Monday if you, Kaka and other men and the Ashram women and other women visitors feel the necessary self-confidence.
wrote to Saraladevi suggesting that she might throw herself into this very work. If, however, my plan itself does not appeal to all of you, you may leave it. I do not at all believe that the salt tax will go in seven days. But I think it very necessary to utilize this golden opportunity and combine these three aims of our movement. Personally, I am convinced that if we should succeed in these three things, swaraj would soon be an accomplished fact, the women would realize their power in no time and, without any effort on our part, the whole world would see for itself how ours was indeed a holy war. Many women can contribute their share in this movement even while attending to their domestic duties. We have the land revenue tax as a last resort. That is why, though I have discussed the subject in my article “The Immoral Foundation”, I do not wish to touch the tax just now. Nor is it necessary to do so. At present, my eyes are fixed on the 91 crore rupees and considering the prevailing atmosphere in the country I think we shall easily succeed in our aim.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
I have talked at length on these matters with Mithubehn. She has made up her mind. The Anavil Ashram will be handed over to her for the use of women workers. Those women who are willing to give all their time to the work will be admitted to it. Of course there will be other conditions for admission. The present idea is to make an intensive effort in the Surat district where some work of this kind has been done, and to extend the area of activity as the women’s self-confidence increases. Such of the Ashram women as are ready for this, like Mithubehn, should start coming here. Mithubehn herself has already had experience of this work and, therefore, the women who come here will have the benefit of that experience. As the women coming from the Ashram are trained in discipline, Mithubehn will find it easier to take work from them. I have already discussed the matter with Shardabehn. She and Dr. Sumant liked the idea very much. Shardabehn said that she would certainly go there.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 16785

1 Vide “The Immoral Foundation”, 10-4-1930.
50. SPEECH AT BHIMRAD

April 9, 1930

BROTHERS AND SISTERS,

This is the camp of civil resisters. Some of you have been arrested but instead of being sorry for it I find you all more cheerful. We prepared for a thing and asked for it. After receiving it we must not be afraid of it, otherwise we would be considered ungrateful to the Almighty God. We pray to God for imprisonment, hanging or independence. We do not want slavery and dependence. God has said that without sacrifice you will get nothing. We must qualify ourselves to go to jail. It will be useless to go to jail for thefts or for being drunk. We only congratulate those who go to jail for pure actions. From our point of view those who go to jail for good deeds do not deserve imprisonment but freedom. In a Satanic Government innocent persons must suffer. Under this rule, if we are good, we will get handcuffs, kicks, daggers and gallows. Women will have to make greater sacrifices. I have brought material for sacrifice. We consider it a picnic and I hope it will continue as such till the end. This is just a beginning. Sardar Vallabhbhai ought to have been sent to jail for 30 years. The Government is trying us. At Bhimrad you will not be killed. Salt will be snatched away from you but if you have courage you should not part with salt in your possession until you are unable to withstand the force used for snatching it away from you. I understand that by keeping salt in our possession we [shall] have kept with us 6 crores of rupees and in it lies the independence of India. We want boys who are 16 years old for the present struggle. If a fist containing salt be clenched, none dare to open it. They may open fire upon you. Men may come with bayonets and sticks and use them on you, but salt should not be taken out of your hands. If none of you then cry over it, I would consider it a picnic. Bodies may be lying dead, hands may have been cut off but still you keep to your promise. I will then understand that swaraj is approaching. The Government is testing us because this Government is of bold persons. Do not consider that we are fighting against impotent persons. They would not suffer defeat quietly and we cannot defeat them soon. If 30 crores unite in the struggle, the Government would yield to it. If you remain true, I am sure I shall see the light of success. I have come here to request you to stick to the present struggle until we have won. You are all doing good work. Do not doubt about the salt tax. When Ukabhai received an injury I considered it a sign that the salt tax would go. Do not consider that you will be happy after the repeal of the salt tax. Rs. 6 crores are nothing for a nation of 30 crores. I asked Tyabji and he left willingly (for Kaira district). Picketing of liquor shops should be done by women and not by men. If men go there, it will be presumed that they were there to assault others. Government would not like it because they would lose Rs. 25 crores income from the sale of liquor. I therefore advise all of you sisters to act according to the instructions of Mithubehn. Foreign cloth is as bad as liquor. Those who have put on foreign clothes should burn them. If you use khaddar 60 crores of rupees will remain in India. You should spin cotton. You sisters should do three things, viz., assist the temperance movement, use khaddar and do spinning. I have sent my son Manilal for the work, and he will do it. Do not fight in the jail for food but for your self-respect. Patels who have resigned have not yet been relieved by the Government. There is some trick in it. They should hand over the records to the Government or lock the office and hand over the key to the Mamlatdar

Bombay Secret Abstracts, 1930

51. TO THE WOMEN OF INDIA

The impatience of some sisters to join the good fight is to me a healthy sign. It has led to the discovery that however attractive the campaign against the salt tax may be, for them to confine themselves to it would be to change a pound for a penny. They will be lost in the crowd, there will be in it no suffering for which they are thirsting.

In this non-violent warfare, their contribution should be much greater than men’s. To call woman the weaker sex is a libel; it is man’s injustice to woman. If by strength is meant brute strength, then indeed is woman less brute than man. If by strength is meant moral power, then woman is immeasurably man’s superior. Has she not greater intuition, is she not more self-sacrificing has she not greater powers of endurance, has she not greater courage? Without her man could not be. If non-violence is the law of our being, the future is with woman.

I have nursed this thought now for years. When the women of the Ashram insisted on being taken along with men something within me told me that they were destined to do greater work in this struggle than merely breaking salt laws.

I feel that I have now found that work. The picketing of liquor shops and foreign cloth shops by men, though it succeeded beyond expectations up to a point for a time in 1921, failed because violence crept in. If a real impression is to be created, picketing must be resumed. If it remains peaceful to the end, it will be the quickest way of educating the people concerned. It must never be a matter of coercion but conversion, moral suasion. Who can make a more effective appeal to the heart than woman?

Prohibition of intoxicating liquors and drugs and boycott of foreign cloth have ultimately to be by law. But the law will not come till pressure from below is felt in no uncertain manner.

That both are vitally necessary for the nation, nobody will dispute. Drink and drugs sap the moral well-being of those who are given to the habit. Foreign cloth undermines the economic foundations of the nation and throws millions out of employment. The distress in each case is felt in the home and therefore by the women. Only those women who have drunkards as their husbands know what havoc the drink devil works in homes that once were orderly and peace-giving. Millions of women in our hamlets know what unemployment means. Today the Charkha Sangh covers over one hundred thousand women against less than 10,000 men.

Let the women of India take up these two activities, specialize in them; they would contribute more than man to national freedom. They would have an access of power and self-confidence to which they have hitherto been strangers.

Their appeal to the merchants and buyers of foreign cloth and to the liquor dealers and addicts to the habit cannot but melt their hearts. At any rate the women can never be suspected of doing or intending violence to these four classes. Nor can Government long remain supine to an agitation so peaceful and so resistless.

The charm will lie in the agitation being initiated and controlled exclusively by women. They may take and should get as much assistance as they need from men, but the men should be in strict subordination to them.

In this agitation thousands of women, literate and illiterate, can take part.

Highly educated women have in this appeal of mine an opportunity of actively identifying themselves with the masses and helping them both morally and materially.
They will find when they study the subject of foreign-cloth boycott that it is impossible save through khadi. Mill-owners will themselves admit that mills cannot manufacture in the near future enough cloth for Indian requirements. Given a proper atmosphere, khadi can be manufactured in our villages, in our countless homes. Let it be the privilege of the women of India to produce this atmosphere by devoting every available minute to the spinning of yarn. The question of production of khadi is surely a question of spinning enough yarn. During the past ten days of the march under pressure of circumstances I have discovered the potency of the takli which I had not realized before. It is truly a wonder worker. In mere playfulness my companions have without interrupting any other activity spun enough yarn to weave 4 square yards per day of khadi of 12 counts. Khadi as a war measure is not to be beaten. The moral results of the two reforms are obviously great. The political result will be no less great. Prohibition of intoxicating drinks and drugs means the loss of twenty-five crores of revenue. Boycott of foreign cloth means the saving by India’s millions of at least sixty crores. Both these achievements would monetarily be superior to the repeal of the salt tax. It is impossible to evaluate the moral results of the two reforms.

‘But there is no excitement and no adventure in the liquor and foreign-cloth picketing’, some sisters may retort. Well, if they will put their whole heart into this agitation they will find more than enough excitement and adventure. Before they have done with the agitation, they might even find themselves in prison. It is not improbable that they may be insulted and even injured bodily. To suffer such insult and injury would be their pride. Such suffering if it comes to them will hasten the end.

If the women of India will listen and respond to my appeal, they must act quickly. If the all-India work cannot be undertaken at once, let those provinces which can organize themselves do so. Their example will be quickly followed by the other provinces.

Young India, 10-4-1930
52. NOTES

CONGRATULATIONS

Pandit Malaviyaji and the other members of the Assembly who have resigned deserve the heartiest congratulations of the nation for their patriotic resignations. How any self-respecting person can cling to an institution where he cannot preserve his self-respect it would be difficult to understand if we did not know our capacity for self-deception. The Government, instead of telling us, show by their many unmistakable acts that they will do anything but sacrifice the material interest of their principals the British manufacturers and the like who live on India’s exploitation. The legislatures, central and provincial, are like their other institutions, powerful and tempting devices for draining India of whatever she has still left. They would, if they could, leave her only when she has no more left to be plundered.

Pandit Malaviyaji and the others have left the Assembly none too soon. With a faith worthy of a better cause he stuck to the so-called legislatures for a quarter of a century in the teeth of popular opposition. He rendered at critical moments valuable services to the Government. No Indian living has the unbroken record Pandit Malaviyaji has of service rendered with a single-mindedness not often to be found in men. The Government have therefore lost an ally whom they will never be able to replace. I hope that Panditji and his companions will now devote their energy to the popular work that awaits them. They will soon discover as many have done that the real work can only be done outside the legislatures. They will be good only when they are so fashioned as to register real public opinion, not that of certain groups or classes. They are positively harmful when they are so manipulated as merely to give effect to the official will. For the time being, therefore, servants of the nation have to forge sanctions and create a public opinion that will not be flouted.

A Vicious Insinuation

An M. B. writes as follows:¹

… The Lancet, a leading medical journal of London, in its edition dated 8th March 1930 (page 531) has made the following observations: “Whatever political agitators may say and in spite of the growth of medical education in India, that country will need British doctors for a long time to come. Even Mr. Gandhi (who was himself operated by a British surgeon in the I. M. S.) would probably admit the truth of this statement."

¹ Only extracts are reproduced here.

So far as I know you were operated by the Civil Surgeon of Poona while you were a prisoner in jail. But the insinuation seems to be that you preferred to be operated by a British I. M. S. officer, because he was more capable.

The insinuation made by the writer in the Lancet is baseless and vicious. At the time the operation was performed I was certainly a prisoner, but I was given the choice of having my own surgeon to perform the operation. I did not distrust Col. Maddock, the British surgeon referred to, and the late Dr. Dalal and Dr. Jivraj Mehta (my surgeon and physician respectively) not having arrived in time, the operation was performed by Col. Maddock, whose care and attention I have acknowledged more than once. I have never felt the dearth of Indian surgeons or physicians of the highest calibre. Indeed, I have sent several of my European friends to Indian surgeons and physicians and they have derived full benefit from the skill of these Indian medical men. It is in military science alone, thanks to the British policy, that India perhaps stands in need of assistance from European instructors. But, so far as I am aware, in every other department, if the British withdrew India could be self-contained without the slightest difficulty and that in spite of open or veiled obstruction from the ruling caste.

Young India, 10-4-1930

53. THE IMMORAL FOUNDATION

This Indian Empire was conceived in immorality, for it was to perpetuate the exploitation of India’s resources that it was founded. The pages of history written by Englishmen amply prove the assertion that no fraud was considered too much, no force too frightful by Englishmen, to gain the end. There is perhaps not an inch of ground lawfully acquired by or for the British crown in India.

The rule is nurtured by immoral means. English statesmen assure us that it is the British bayonet that keeps the Empire free from attack both from without and within.

It is supported by revenues derived from immoral sources. I have sufficiently demonstrated the hideous immorality, because inhumanity, of the salt tax. The immorality of the drink and drug revenue is self-demonstrated.
The immorality of the land revenue is not self-demonstrated. But those who have followed the Bardoli agitation, who have studied the so-called revenue laws and their administration, cannot fail to perceive the immorality of the system. I call the revenue laws so-called because they give arbitrary powers to revenue officers whose decisions are not subject to judicial control. This land revenue, like the salt tax, presses most heavily upon the poor ryot whether under the ryotwari system or the permanent system. How it oppresses the peasant under the ryotwari system we saw in Bardoli and recently in Matar and Mehemedabad. The permanent settlement crushes the ryot more than those affected by the ryotwari system. That the ryot himself is partly to blame for his woes I have no hesitation in admitting. But that fact is irrelevant to the present consideration. There is no inherent or independent right belonging to the State to tax the land, whether it be considered to be the State property or the individual’s. The State has no more right to exact its toll from land under any circumstance than the owner of an ox has a right to exact work from it irrespective of its capacity. That there is a kind of classification of land and some regulations about remissions, etc., is no answer to the charge here made. The claim here made is that in the vast majority of cases the ryot is wholly unable to pay any tax. In shaping its taxation policy a wise State will always take note of the citizen’s habits, customs and even his weaknesses. This Government had no time for such consideration. It had its fixed minimum to exact anyhow; and so in the words of the late Lord Salisbury the lancet had to be applied where there was yet any blood to be drawn.

So much about some of the visible sources of revenue. The invisible sources are equally tainted if not much more so. The unconsiderable forced inflation of the rupee has by a stroke of the pen drained India of millions. The favoured treatment of British cloth in a variety of unseen ways drains India of sixty crores of rupees annually, leaving behind partial unemployment of the starving millions.

Thus the Government trades upon our vices and exacts payment by questionable methods principally from those who are least able to make it.

There is therefore no way open to the people save to end a system whose very foundations are immoral. Let us therefore pray and work for the destruction of this demonstrably immoral system and for ending it take the boldest risks consistently with the national creed or policy (as the case may be) of non-violence.

Young India, 10-4-1930

Young India, 10-4-1930
54. AN ENGLISH FRIEND’S DIFFICULTY

An English friend writes:¹

To us India is a composite country sharply divided by the caste system, by religious differences, and by semi-independent and loyal kingdoms, which could by no means be left to act together without the most careful safeguards against civil strife or religious persecution, and which, if left alone, would soon be a chaos of conflicting forces. But we are anxious to do the right thing as the Government responsible for the welfare of the land.

A mere political reform is quite useless unless it improves the lot of the people and removes any injustice from which they suffer and it appears to us that the British could do these things far better than a mixed Indian Government.

The question is: What is the injustice from which they suffer?

Are they too heavily taxed? Are the courts of justice unfair?

Do the British rulers act with tyranny?

Are there any monopolies which are unjust?

Are the wages of the workers less than they would be under a native government? Or hours longer? Could such a Government prevent the famines which afflict the country? Or, when they came, relieve them so effectually? . . .

This letter is typical of the average good but ill-informed Englishman.

Take the 4th paragraph. It betrays the false teaching with which Englishmen are fed from their school-going age. It does not occur to the writer that India left to herself will deal with the difficulties pointed out. He does not see that if a century of British rule has not dealt with the difficulties but has, if anything, rather accentuated them, with the progress of time they are not going to be solved or diminished during British occupation. The writer does not know that according to the testimony of English historians the innumerable villages have remained unaffected by the difficulties mentioned by him and many more I can name. It should be remembered that India’s is a predominantly rural civilization. Before the devastating British occupation the seven hundred thousand villages of India were so many self-contained republics. It was left for the marvellous organizing British ability, used not for “the welfare of the land” as the writer imagines, but misused for its systematic exploitation, to disturb the placid and comparatively happy life of the villager. Rulers have before now come and gone leaving these villages untouched and without leaving chaos behind. Why should the disappearance of British rule result in chaos? If the British people play the game, they will be expected to undo the great wrong they have done to India by rendering to free and independent India such assistance as her free Government may need. If they will not play the game what need is there for any Englishman to worry whether there is chaos or concord after the end of British rule? Ruthless exploitation of India is too great a price to pay for securing the so-called orderly Government.

¹ Only extracts are reproduced here.
² The first three paragraphs having been omitted, this refers to the first paragraph of the letter as given here.

I have no difficulty in agreeing with the writer that “a mere political reform is quite useless unless it improves the lot of the people and removes any injustice from which they suffer.” But it is a fatal mistake to suppose that “the British could do these things better than a mixed Indian Government.”

English friends like the writer will better understand the nationalist position by the following answers to the very relevant questions he puts:

1. The people are too heavily taxed as has been maintained elsewhere in this very issue and as can be amply proved from authoritative sources.

2. The courts have been proved to be unfair in political cases and in cases as between Indians and Europeans.

3. British rulers have been known repeatedly to rule with tyranny and almost invariably to act arrogantly and in total disregard of Indian opinion.

4. There are numerous unjust monopolies of which the salt monopoly is a glaring example.

5. If by workers only city labour is meant, it is but a drop in the ocean of Indian humanity. They do not number more than two million in all India, i.e., 150th of the whole population. Moreover these are a British institution. How they will fare under an indigenous Government it is difficult to foresee except that they will be better able to wrest justice from it than from an all-powerful alien Government that can afford to be indifferent. In so far as the vast mass of the workers in the Indian villages are concerned, I maintain, and it has been proved in these pages, that they are worse off now than they ever were.
6. Whenever there is famine in the land it is a famine of money, i.e., incapacity of the people to buy the grain and the cloth they need. Under indigenous Government, therefore, when the spinning-wheel is restored, no one need starve for want of money as they do today because they are unemployed for at least four months in the year.

7. The chief wrongs have been enumerated in my letter¹ to the Viceroy published in these pages.

8. What India wants is independence pure and simple. This need not exclude British help if Great Britain will lend it on India’s terms.

I do not ask the friend to accept the categorical statements made by me. I should be satisfied if my reply stimulates an impartial study of the charges made by me. There is ample literature on the subject. The volumes of Young India will provide instructive reading. Let the Eng-lish friends who will know the truth not summarily reject all Indian evidence. Surely we must know better what we feel and want.

Young India, 10-4-1930

55. SOME CONDITIONS

Securing complete independence is difficult as well as easy. It is difficult if we wish to do nothing. It is easy if the masses understand their duty. We cannot say this about everything. Take for instance the mastery of the Vedas. It is not easy work for everyone. It requires years and years of study. But for swaraj all that is needed is change of heart. For swaraj is our birth-right.

What are the conditions, one may ask for gaining swaraj that everyone can fulfil? Here they are:

1. Everyone can offer civil disobedience of the salt law. For this no training is needed. Men, women, boys and girls of no less than eight villages were able to do this. They had not received any previous training.

2. Everyone can spin on the takli. Everyone of course cannot get a spinning-wheel, for it is a little costly. But taklis can be made in every home even from bamboo. The general public can also buy taklis for a few pice each. If millions of people take to carding and plying the takli we can produce as much khadi as we may need. This work also does not require any elaborate training. Besides, it is work for leisure hours. If people can grasp this, if they undergo a change of heart, millions of men and women, young and old, can take up this work and save sixty crores of rupees every year. Let us boycott all foreign cloth and wear khadi alone. It is the only fit attire for us. If we cannot afford more, we may do with the very minimum of clothing— even a bare langoti.

¹ Vide “Letter to Lord Irwin”, 2-3-1930.

Since this is a struggle for self-purification we must, this very day, give up liquor, opium, tobacco, etc., if we have these vices. There are various other things also which we can do if we want to. I have merely cited an example or two.

For the attainment of swaraj it is also essential that Hindus, Muslims and followers of other religions treat one another as brothers. We should banish the sin of untouchability and love our depressed brothers and sisters. All these, to be sure, are not conditions for securing swaraj. They are part of the definition of swaraj. Today when there is such wonderful awakening in the country every reader must make his contribution to this yajna.

[From Hindi]

_Hindi Navajivan, 10-4-1930_

56. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

_BANDI_,

_April 10, 1930_

BHAI GHANSHYAMDAS,

Your letters of resignation' have filled me with joy. I am writing this at 2 a.m. as some friends have brought the news that I shall be arrested today.

Jamnalalji is ensconced in jail.² I am confident that you will do all you can in connection with salt satyagraha, prohibition and the boycott of foreign cloth.

We shall have good support if Malaviyaji remains firm about this.

The awakening in Gujarat, at least for the present, is beyond words. God alone knows the future.

¹ From the Legislative Council
² Jamnalal Bajaj was arrested at Juhu, Bombay, and sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment.
I see only good coming out of these arrests. The present is shaping as we had anticipated.

What more shall I write?

Yours,

MOHANDAS

From Hindi: C.W. 6183. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

57. MESSAGE TO BOMBAY CITIZENS

DANDI

April 10, 1930

I don’t know whether to trust the citizens of Bombay when Jamnalal Bajaj and Nariman have been jailed and still the citizens of Bombay have not shown sufficient spirit. Bombay should break the salt laws and more particularly they should boycott foreign cloth and thereby break the chain of foreign domination and the leaders of Bombay should work to free the labouring classes from the drink evil.

The Bombay Chronicle, 11-4-1930

58. MESSAGE TO B.P.C.C., BOMBAY

April 10, 1930

I congratulate the Bombay Congress Committee and the people of Bombay on the recent arrest of Abidali and Meherali. It is the duty of every citizen of Bombay to fill the places of those who have been arrested. The arrest of the leaders should not make us falter. The unprecedented enthusiasm which was witnessed during the national week shows that, following the arrest of the leaders, people’s enthusiasm in the whole of India has increased. I hope the recent arrests in Bombay will create similar enthusiasm. We should make salt and use only that salt. We should boycott foreign cloth and eradicate the evil of drinking. I have entrusted the two latter activities to the women of India. If we wish to succeed in the boycott of foreign cloth and exercise control over mills which are purely Indian it is women who can do it. We should carry on propaganda for khadi and this will not be possible until every one of us takes up the takli.

[From Gujarati]

Gujarati, 13-4-1930

1 Given to a deputation of brokers from Bombay
59. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

April 10, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

Your letter. Glad mother out of danger. It may be possible for you to do something in the drink campaign if it ever comes into being. If it comes, it will come naturally. No time for more.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5391. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9625

60. LETTER TO ABBAS TYABJI

DANDI,

April 10, 1930

MY DEAR BHRRR,

Your sweet letter. So being on your mettle, you have evolved a splendid programme. May you never grow old.

Dadubhai’s conduct is a painful surprise. However, Kheda has worked wonders. Fancy Darbar and others being handcuffed, shaved! It is good news one way, it is bad another way. Good because it must nerve the people for greater effort, bad because it hurts one to see human nature so debased. But that’s the system. Let us end it or end ourselves in the attempt.

I have a good letter from Mrs. Abbas.

Yours ever,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 9570
61. LETTER TO TOTARAM HINGORANI

DANDI,

April 10, 1930

DEAR FRIEND,

Anand is proving worthy of you. He is also keeping well. Please do not worry about him.

If Vidya wishes to do public work I am sure you will encourage and bless her. And when she does such work, she cannot observe the purdah. In any case the purdah is now gone.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a microfilm. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand
T. Hingorani

62. LETTER TO ANASUYABEHN SARABHAI

DANDI,

April 10, 1930

CHI. ANASUYABEHN,

Shankerlal and you should carefully study the suggestions I have made to the women and if they appeal to you, take up the work.
Do not do it because I have suggested it, but consult your own desire.
No work once started must be abandoned afterwards.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: G. N. 11548
63. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

April 10, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS,

We cannot smuggle salt even for committing disobedience of the salt law. How can we employ as a means of satyagraha what is in itself wrong?

The contributions from the Surat district were quite big, but they seem to have been passed on to the Provincial Committee.

Talk to Mahadev about this. I am writing to him.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11476

64. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

DANDI,

April 10, 1930

CHI. MAHADEV,

I have your letter. Kalyanji brought news that I was certain to be arrested today, so I have kept awake the whole night. I go to sleep for a while, then get up, write and again go to sleep. That is how it goes.

It appears Devdas has been arrested. That you have still not been arrested is surprising. I see many risks in picketing colleges and courts. I have explained the whole matter to Kaka. Those students who wish to boycott the Matriculation examination may do so on their own, but my advice is that we should not post pickets around the examination pandal. Liquor booths and foreign-cloth shops are a different matter.

I have been thinking how to arrange the dispersal of the batch. Before the 13th, I intend to send away only those who may be needed elsewhere.

I don’t think I have anything more to write today.

Blessings from

BAPU [PS.]

The money coming from other places which was received in the Surat District has also gone to the Provincial Committee. Even now, as I see things, the best thing would be for all the money to remain with Narandas for the present. However, you may do as you think proper. I have explained to Kaka this matter also.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11475

65. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

April 10, 1930

CHI. PREMA,

What do you think about my idea concerning the anti-drink campaign and boycott of foreign cloth?

I did get your letters. You should continue to write to me. Dhurandhar1 seems to be a fine man. I liked Kamaladevi, too, very much. She says that she will stay in the Ashram if the climate agrees with her daughter. You should try and see that she stays on.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 6668. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

1 Assistant Editor, Navakal, a Marathi daily from Bombay. He had joined the Dandi March as a satyagrahi.
66. LETTER TO LILAVATI

April 10, 1930

CHI. LILAVATI,

I got your letter. Your name cannot be chosen for drill, but you will certainly be in the struggle when the time comes. They will accept you. Those who have faith always get opportunities for service. Do not feel anxious. Ask Gangabehn what to take for your constipation and your menstrual trouble.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9316

67. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

DANDI,
April 10, 1930

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I have already replied to your letter. You two must have discussed the matter by now. It is being rumoured that I shall be arrested today, and so I don’t write more. May God bless you both and give you sufficient firmness of mind.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3364
68. LETTER TO RUKMINI BAZAJ

DANDI,
April 10, 1930

CHI. RUKMINI,

I got your two letters. I have no time to write a long letter. I am happy to know that you are happy. I suppose you do get Navajivan, etc., there. Ramdas has been jailed. Devdas has been arrested. Jamnalalji and Kishorelal have also been sentenced to imprisonment. Indeed hundreds have been jailed. There is no limit to people’s enthusiasm.

I am sure that you will mix with the people there as naturally as sugar mixes with milk.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9048

69. LETTER TO JAISUKHLAL GANDHI

DANDI,
April 10, 1930

CHI. JAISUKHLAL,

I was awaiting a letter from you. I don’t think that the diet which has benefited you will benefit others. You should remain where you are and go on organizing the production of khadi. That also is an important task. When I think it necessary to throw you as an offering in the salt yajna, I will not hesitate a moment before doing so. Every day we hear rumours of my arrest being imminent, but the day passes and I am not arrested. It will make no difference whether or not they arrest me. Shivabhai does bring out here a news-sheet named Satyaagraha Samachar. So far as I know, only one copy is prepared and circulated. A summary of its contents always appears in Navajivan. I have had no letter from Umiya after she went to Ajmer. Now that she has got used to the place, probably she does not think it necessary to write to me. Rukhi seems to be happy, too.

Blessings from
BAPU

BHAISHRI JAISUKHLAL GANDHI
KHADI KARYALAYA
CHALALA
KATHIWAR

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U. III/73

70. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

April 10, 1930

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I have your letter. I send herewith a draft of your acceptance letter. I understand about khadi. Krishna would have gained some strength by now. About me, there is a scare daily about the proverbial tiger coming. It kept me awake the whole of last night but the tiger did not come. Let me see when it does.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original S.N. 32853
71. LETTER TO BENARSILAL BAZAJ,

April 10, 1930

CHI. BENARSILAL

I have your two letters. I am immensely glad that you two are happy. May God grant you both long life and the spirit of service.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Hindi: C.W. 9302. Courtesy: Benarsilal Bazaj

72. LETTER TO VIDYA HINGORANI

April 10, 1930

CHI. VIDYA

I have your letter. If you have self-confidence, come out for some voluntary service. They need not hinder you. I have written to Father¹. He will never oppose this. It will be good if you can gain some experience in the Ashram.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Hindi. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

¹ Totaram Hingorani, her father-in-law; vide “Speech at Dandi”, 5-4-1930.
73. SPEECH TO VOLUNTEERS

JALALPUR,
April 10, 1930

Addressing his volunteers this morning, Mahatma Gandhi said that their mettle would soon be put to the test. There should, however, be no impatient hurry to court arrest. They should refuse to be stampeded into hasty action by provocation from police. Should authorities at any place “go mad and terrorize people” they should proceed there and set an example of calm courage and undaunted suffering.

Mahatma Gandhi exhorted them to prefer death to national humiliation of the type perpetrated by General Dyer.

The Bombay Chronicle, 11-4-1930

74. INTERVIEW TO ASSOCIATED PRESS OF INDIA

April 10, 1930

My attention has been drawn to the report in The Times of India of my Aat speech. It is a mischievous distortion of what I said. On seeing a man’s wrist bleeding from a slight injury done to it, whilst the police, four or five against one, were snatching the salt in his possession, I said that the salt picked up by civil resisters was a token of India’s honour, and the civil resisters were expected to defend India’s honour with their lives. People, I said, should hold on to the salt in their possession as long as it was possible for them to bear the force that might be used against them, and that they should not mind even if blood was drawn while the police were delivering their assault upon their defenceless victims. I added that, in resisting this dispossession, people should not bear any malice nor should they be angry nor utter a word of abuse. In order to avoid needless injury, I advised the people to take only a handful of salt which could be contained in their closed fists and invited even women and children, if they had the courage to take part in the battle, and challenged the police to lay their hands upon women and children. If the police laid their hands upon women and children, I said that the whole of India would become inflamed, and resent the insult by inviting suffering of the same kind as they. The manner in which I expected Indians to respond to such an insult was by taking up other methods of civil resistance, and by students boycotting schools and Government servants giving up service by way of protest. There is no departure from my creed of non-violence, and I regard this snatching of salt from the civil resisters as a piece of barbarity. The greater the barbarity of the Government, the greater will be my call for self-suffering.

The Hindu, 11-4-1930

75. INTERVIEW TO “THE HINDU”

JALALPUR,

April 10, 1930

I asked Mahatmaji to define the scope of “defensive non-violent resistance”. A volunteer, Mahatmaji had advised, should not yield his salt to the police until it was wrested from him by superior force. “Is it permissible for the volunteer,” I asked, “to struggle with the police in clinging to it desperately, moving this way and that in his attempts not to yield, and possibly causing hurt to his opponent?” Mahatmaji said:

It is his duty to cling to the salt as though it was his life, provided he was not offering violence to his opponent. Just as a mother would save her child against the attempts of others to deprive her of it, so should a satyagrahi cling to his salt.

Gandhiji, continuing stated that in no civilized country was it considered proper for the police to take the law into their own hands. When a volunteer refused to hand over his salt he would have committed an offence, but on that account, the police should not inflict corporal punishment on him. The police officers had got the right of arresting a volunteer and marching him to the police station and of putting him up for trial.

Asked how a police officer could discharge the duty imposed on him of seizing the salt, Gandhiji said that his quarrel was exactly with that sort of law.

The conversation then turned on Mahatmaji’s statement that if women were touched by the police, the whole country would be inflamed unless people were napunsakas. That passage, I pointed out, had been criticized as a threat against the legitimate arrest of women.

Mahatmaji laughed and said he had deliberately made the statement that the country would, in such a contingency, become inflamed, but not necessarily into committing acts of violence. He continued:

When Sri S. Subramania Aiyer threw away his titles because Dr. Besant had been arrested he had been inflamed, but his feelings involved no violence. It is that kind of inflammation that I had referred to.

Referring to a report circulated by a news agency that his volunteers were revolting against the diet prescribed for them, Mahatmaji pooh-poohed the idea, adding:

There was some difficulty in the choice of diet, but once I decided on it, all accepted it without a murmur.

_The Hindu, 11-4-1930_

76. SPEECH AT PUBLIC MEETING, ABRAMA

April 10, 1930

I was told that last night I was going to be arrested and hence at about 11 o’clock I finished some of my correspondence and did some writing. The night went by but the expected did not happen. I have read in the papers today that the price of salt has fallen by half but my contention is why should there be any price for it?

Gandhiji then stressed the necessity of complete prohibition and promotion of khaddar.

Proceeding, he referred to the reports of his speeches appearing in a distorted form in various papers and especially in the _Times_ and remarked that these Press reporters were doing a definite disservice to the country. He had to contradict a report appearing in _The Times of India_. That report was a sheer distortion of his views. It would be wrong to say that all reporters were so but he had to admit that many were or else they did not understand his village dialect. I did not ask for the reporters but if the papers wanted to send them they should select such as knew his language. Ignorant reporters did harm both to him and the cause. Non-violence was not a new creed with him, he had laid stress on it for at least fifteen years. Nobody should imagine that with the advance of years he had lost his sense to such an extent that he should wish to go to jail by paying the price in blood. Even for going to jail he would not wish harm to anybody. What he had said was that they should not give up salt in their fists even if that might involve serious injury. That was not at all contrary to non-violence. He had received a wire from Delhi that four volunteers were so much battered there that at last they fainted. Government had started the game in which only a beginning was made. That should not come in the way of their duty. It was ashamed that Government were arresting even ladies. He wanted to show to the world that theirs was a fight in which everyone could take part.

_The Bombay Chronicle, 11-4-1930_

---

1 About 5,000 villagers attended the meeting.
77. TELEGRAM TO N. C. KELKAR

April 11, 1930

YOUR WIRE. DELIGHTED BEYOND MEASURE YOUR RESIGNATION DECISION ORGANIZE SATYAGRAHA. REPORT ABOUT HEALTH GROSS EXAGGERATION. TOOK MORNING MASS MEETING SEVEN MILES AWAY TODAY.

GANDHI

The Hindu, 16-4-1930

78. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

DANDI, April 11, 1930

MY DEAR RAIHANA,

I have your letter.

I would like you, Mother and others to attend here on Sunday. I am holding a conference of Gujarat women for the purpose of discussing the propriety and possibility of their tackling the problem of drink and foreign cloth.

Here are the messages you want.

Kamladevi has written a good letter in reply to mine. Here it is. You may destroy it.

There is every hope of Mother capitulating since she is capable of blushing. It is a good sign.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: S.N. 9616

---

1 This was sent in reply to the following telegram from the addressee: “After returning from the Assembly work at Delhi I immediately held conference of Maharashtra National Party and have decided to start and organize Salt Civil Disobedience in Maharashtra. Papers report your ill-health. Kindly relieve anxiety by wire.”

2 This is not traceable.
79. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

DANDI,
April 11, 1930

CHI. MAHADEV,

There was no harm in your having replied to the question about the prize of Rs. 250. But why should we reply, even if we have received the sum? If we are prosecuted for not replying, that would make our path clear.

I should be happy if Saralabehn, Nandubehn and others attend the conference. Ask Ranchhodbhai to send Motibehn and tell him that, if he wishes, he also may accompany her.

Today they have been stopping the cars coming from Navsari. They stop all cars coming from the Gaikawad limits.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11477
80. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

DANDI,
April 11, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS,

I intend to hold a small conference of women in Dandi on the 13th. Send those from among the women there who wish to come and who can be spared to attend it. Meet the expenditure from the Satyagraha Fund. Those who have money with them should come at their own expense. If Khurshidbehn volunteers to come, offer her the fare. Probably she will refuse to accept it. Try if you can press her courteously to accept it. In the conference we are going to think only about propaganda against the drink evil and boycott of foreign cloth. These activities do not seem to have appealed to Khurshidbehn, that is, she does not wish to take them up as specially women’s work. Hence she may not wish to come.

How is Purushottam? How is Kanu? How does he spend his time?

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8098. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi
81. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

DURING DANDI MARCH,
[April 11, 1930]¹

CHI. NARANDAS,

I cannot choose the names. Only those women who wish to take up these two activities and whom you can spare need come. You alone can think and decide in this matter. Prompted by love, everyone may wish to come. That is a different matter. We have no choice but to exercise self-control in this matter.

Brijkrishna and Krishnadas have come here.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8099. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

82. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

Friday, April 11, 1930

CHI. MAHADEV,

I got your letter. It does not matter that you did not show my letter to Narandas. You may, however, do so now as my reply is in any case the proper one. If people do not hide a thing there is no smuggling. There is “smuggling” only when there is an intention to hide. What you are doing, therefore, is all right. The person carrying salt also should declare (at the end) from where he brought it. Is it not permissible for a person to get salt by post?

I understand what you say about lawyers. No purpose will be served by Broker alone giving up practice. I am afraid that lawyers will not give up practice just now. If schoolboys, however, leave their schools, that will be enough. Congratulations to Mridu.

I am no longer enamoured of Dadubhai. Abbas Saheb writes to inform me that Dadubhai asked him to go to Baroda but refused to return. Dadubhai refused even to accompany him. What can a man do after all? Who can successfully fight against his nature? Let us therefore be content with what we get.

¹ From the abrupt introduction of the subject-matter it appears this was written as an afterthought to the preceding item. Besides, this was to reach those wishing to attend the conference on April 13; it could not therefore have been written later than April 11.

Delhi has done very well indeed. Every place presents a different spectacle. It appears that Atul Sen in Bengal has suffered a fracture.

In Delhi at any rate the picketing of foreign-cloth shops by women has started.

The women’s conference at Dandi has now been fixed for Sunday. Read my letter to Narandas on the subject.

See that no mistake occurs in passing on the accompanying letters to the persons concerned.

Take rest from time to time as you work. Entrust to others what they can do.

I have just returned from Matwad.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11478

83. LETTER TO SHIVANAND

DANDI,
April 11, 1930

BHAISHRI SHIVANAND,

I had heard the news about Fulchand and others even before I got your letter. I hope Shardabehn is all right. We should never feel unhappy when we get what we had asked for. If you require any volunteer on that side, tell Mahadev about it and he will then write to me. If he is arrested before that, write directly to me.

Will Shardabehn be ready to join the new activity?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 2841. Courtesy: Fulchand Shah; also G.N. 9203
84. LETTER TO CHIMANLAL

DANDI,
April 11, 1930

CHI. CHIMANLAL,

I had your letter. I was glad to know that your health was all right. What was the cause of the improvement—the air and water of Vijapur or reduced burden of worries or were both these the causes? If the air and water of the place were the cause, you should occasionally go to Vijapur and stay there for some time and improve your health. If you do that, by and by the body will get stronger. You ought not to feel unhappy that you are not among the volunteers with me. We shall have done our duty if we do with single-minded devotion the tasks which may fall to our lot.

For megrim light food and a mud-pack every night as also when the attack comes has proved a successful cure in all cases in which it has been tried. I hope Babu does not get attacks of asthma now.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S. G. 6
85. LETTER TO SARALADEVI SARABHAI

April 11, 1930

DEAR SISTER,

I have your frank letter. It has been arranged to hold a small conference of Gujarati women at Dandi on Sunday. You, Mridula and other women should attend it if possible. We shall talk more about swadeshi. There is no more time left to meet.

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 11132. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

86. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

DANDI,
April 11, 1930

CHI, BRIJKRISHNA.

I have your letter. You must not thus break away from your family. At present you should simply appeal to them. It will be of no use at all if you go there just now. The time for the total boycott of foreign cloth is coming by itself and the people will then of their own accord renounce foreign cloth. You have given no news of your health this time. Come over if there is no work in Vijapur. The climate here is very bracing. As the house faces the sea we have cool breeze day and night. Dandi is situated 10 miles from the Navsari station. You will have no difficulty in staying on even if I am arrested and the camp is shifted.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2379

1 Women’s conference to further anti-drink campaign and boycott of foreign cloth. For Gandhiji’s article on the Conference which took place on April 13, 1930; Vide “Special task before women”, 17-4-1930.

2 To Delhi
87. LETTER TO SITLA SAHAI

DANDI,
April 11, 1930

Bhai Sitla Sahai,

I am late in replying to your letter. Kalakankar’s brother should be instructed to prepare salt even at the risk of imprisonment.¹ The work is proceeding very well at all places. There is no time to write more.

Blessings from
Bapu

Sit. Sitla Sahai
C/O Satyagraha Committee
Rae Bareli, U.P.

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 8684

88. STATEMENT TO ASSOCIATED PRESS OF INDIA

JALALPUR,
April 11, 1930

Embarrassing invitations are being received by me to go to several parts of India on the strength of the unauthorized report in the Press that I would be free to go wherever I wanted. But such is not my intention. So far as possible, I propose to concentrate all my attention upon Gujarat and, health permitting, will next week make myself free to go to those parts of Gujarat where my presence may be required. I may possibly go as far as Bombay but not farther.

The Hindu, 12-4-1930

¹ Kunwar Suresh Singh, brother of Raja Saheb Kalakankar, was arrested in June 1930.
89. MESSAGE TO HANSA MEHTA

[Before April 12, 1930]

Tell Mrs. Hansa Mehta¹ that Bombay women should take up energetically the cause of preventing liquor consumption in the city of Bombay, as their contribution towards the fight for Purna Swaraj. Not only will that save crores of rupees to the poorest workmen in the world, but it will make a constructive step for the successful accomplishment of India’s complete independence. India expects every woman to do her duty at this moment in the fight for freedom.

_The Bombay Chronicle, 12-4-1930_

90. FRAGMENT OF LETTER TO PRESIDENT, B.P.C.C.

[Before April 12, 1930]

I know Bombay is doing extremely well. Indeed the whole country is suffering, surpassing all expectations. But the real heat is still to come. If it can stand that heat without retaliation and without weakening, the way to swaraj is clear. Let us hope we shall end as we have begun.

_The Bombay Chronicle, 12-4-1930_

¹Wife of Dr. Jivraj Mehta, physician and Congress leader of Bombay
91. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

DANDI,
April 12, 1930

CHI. BRIJKRISHNA,

Your wire. I was out visiting the villages in the morning and had instructed Pyarelal to send you a reply telegram but he forgot. I will not send one now at double rates. See my letter of yesterday and decide on the right course. Come here if you wish to or proceed to Delhi if that seems proper.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2380

92. LETTER TO NANUBHAI DAVE

DANDI,
April 12, 1930

BHAISHRI NANUBHAI,

I got your letter. The description which you give is heartrending but I remain unperturbed knowing that our victory lies in enduring all this. If, however, the repression continues, we shall have to think of some form of agitation much more intense than the present one and invite upon ourselves still greater suffering. Write to me from time to time and give me all details. The information which you give should be verifiable. I shall be able to find a solution only with the help of such facts. If you can get the names of the officers who commit such repression, give those names too. Give also the names of those who may have been assaulted and send the results of medical examination as well.

Blessings from
MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 16795
93. ARRESTS AND BRUTAL JUSTICE

Gujarat, it may be said, has saved our honour. Whole villages here have set out to offer civil disobedience. Men, women and children are taking part in it. At many places, we can see fields of salt. Illegal salt has found its way into people’s houses. Gujarat no longer needs Government salt for its use. With a little bit of effort anyone who requires salt can carry away as much readymade salt as he wishes. But how could the Government tolerate this? It started arresting people. From Dholar at one end to Jalalpur taluka at the other there has been an awakening and leaders have been arrested. Amritlal Sheth, Manilal Kothari, Fulchand Kasturchand Shah, Dr. Hariprasadji, Rohit Mehta, Durbar Gopaldas, Gokuldas Talati, Ravishankar Vyas, Raojibhai Man-ibhai Patel, Ashabhai, Dr. Chandulal, Keshubhai Ganeshji, Ramdas Gan-dhi, Chimanlal Pranshankar, Bhikshuk or Darbari Sadhu, Kikubhai, Manubhai and others are gracing prisons with their presence. There are many names which I have omitted. What does it matter whether all the names are mentioned or not? Durbar and his companions are in fetters and their heads have been shaved in prison. All this is good provided Gujarat values it.

The fact that those who at Aat, Ahmedabad and Dholka tried to protect their honour through the medium of salt were beaten is significant and unexpected. I had expected that the Government would not indulge in brutality and that it would send people to prison after duly trying them under laws. My expectations have been belied. How can one change one’s nature all of a sudden? The Government has yet only given us a taste of its bloody claws; we can be sure there is more to come.

Going beyond Gujarat, we find Jamnalalji, Nariman and others have been arrested in Bombay. The cases are proceeding at great speed. But the sentences, it is apparent, will depend upon the whim of the magistrate.

In Delhi, Devdas Gandhi’s companions have been beaten. Devdas and his companions have been arrested.

What reply will the nation give to this now? By the time this article is published, much else will have happened.

I expect still more from the people. A bonfire should be made of foreign cloth, there should be a takli in every hand. Schools and colleges should become empty. Lawyers and doctors can help in various ways. I have written separately regarding women. All aspects of a nation aspiring for freedom should be developed. It is a sign of weakness that Government jobs have not yet lost their fascination.

Weakness and freedom, however, do not go together. We can win swaraj today if we completely do away with weakness and selfishness wherever we find them. We can then open up the prison gates and have the satyagrahi prisoners also released.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 13-4-1930

94. MILL-OWNERS AND KHADI

Shri Ranchhodlal Amritlal, who is himself a mill-owner, writes to say:

It is a distressing tale. I am convinced, however, that as people’s sacrifices increase, the hearts of the mill-owners will melt. I know that the khadi activity has benefited Indian mills. If, however, the latter instead of enjoying the sweet fruit of the tree attempt to eat up its roots, they will find they cannot do so and will even lose the fruit. Let me cite a brief example. Let us suppose that boycott of foreign cloth is successful; let us suppose that spurious khadi is passed off as genuine; and let us suppose that genuine khadi is unable to lift its head. In that case, one of two results could follow. Spurious khadi and other cloth made in mills would not be adequate. As people are not used to khadi they would clamour for foreign cloth and we would be worse off than we previously were, Indian mills would be swept away in the storm, the chain of non-violence would be broken and the enraged public would take to boycotting Indian mills. Or, supposing the goods from Lancashire were totally rejected, since the shield of khadi would not be there, the capitalists from Lancashire might start their mills in this country and Indian mills would suffer as a result of foreign capital and foreign talent establishing themselves here and thereafter swadeshi mills would regard it their duty to join the foreign mills in exploiting the people. Though one cannot yet claim that the sentiment for khadi has taken root in villages, nevertheless it has established itself to the extent that many well-educated persons are prepared to dedicate themselves to the cause of khadi. They will not allow khadi to

1 The letter is not translated here. The correspondent, enclosing samples, had complained that many mills were manufacturing spurious khadi and selling it under the stamp of “pure swadeshi khadi”.

90  THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
die so long as they are themselves alive. If, therefore, mill-owners do not stop producing and selling mill-made cloth as khadi, there is every possibility of a fierce movement being launched against them. It will become our duty to start such a movement.

They ought to save themselves from such a movement. It is in their hands to do so. Here are the terms:

1. Indian mills must not produce cloth which resembles khadi.
2. That which has been already produced should be exported.
3. They should altogether stop using the khadi stamp.
4. They should give up making cloth which could compete with khadi.
5. They should consult with the Charkha Sangh and produce only such cloth as is beyond the scope of khadi.
6. In consultation with the khadi committee, they should fix reasonable prices for mill-made cloth.
7. No foreign yarn should be used in mills even for making borders.
8. Mill-owners and others should totally give up using foreign cloth and wear only khadi as far as possible.
9. They should stock khadi in the shop attached to mills.

During this period of self-purification it is highly essential for the mills to observe the above rules. If they do so the boycott of foreign cloth can be accomplished soon.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 13-4-1930
95. TO THE WOMEN

Last week, writing about prohibition, I had mentioned that there was another activity also which women could and ought to take up. This activity is the boycott of foreign cloth through khadi. This is, or should be, the special field of women. For foreign cloth has ruined millions of homes and taken away from millions of women an employment which sustained them. Foreign cloth has ruined seven lakh villages in India. While on the one hand women have lost employment, on the other they have to pay for cloth which they could have produced in their own villages. People have developed a great liking for foreign cloth and they will not give it up without great effort and great penance. It is the women who embody that penance. Man can never make an impression upon people such as women can.

Besides, amongst those who wear foreign cloth the number of women exceeds that of men. And, in the final analysis, women will create a greater impact upon other women.

Hence it is for women to start picketing in front of shops selling foreign cloth. Men have failed in this task. But there is no reason why women should fail. Moreover, in 1920-21 we did not have the same climate that there is now. It is women alone who can take advantage of this climate.

But there is also another aspect of this work. Supposing everyone was to burn their foreign clothes today, what then would they wear? Indian mills would not be able to produce all the cloth within a short period and perhaps even if they did we would not achieve the purpose that we wish to.

That purpose would be served through khadi alone. Khadi implies the takli or the spinning-wheel. In the latter lies the prosperity of India. It is Annapurna.1 If people in every home work on the spinning-wheel, we can produce today as much khadi as we want. Producing khadi means spinning yarn. Men may well spin, but for generations the profession of spinning has been practised by women and men’s hands do not possess the same skill in this that women’s do. Women alone can bring about this solidarity among their own sex. I would, therefore, advise women to make this their special field of work.2

---

1. Giver of plenty
2. Two paragraphs following this are not translated here. They are covered by paragraphs 11 and 12 of “To the Women of India”, p. 221.
In this non-violent campaign, although our weapons are small they are very powerful since they have in them the power of God. Therefore, all those sisters who have faith in the spinning-wheel and the takli and who wish to devote themselves to saving sixty crores of rupees every year, should take up this work of boycott and the task of propagating spinning.

It should be remembered that those sisters who wish to take up this work have to be prepared to go to the villages.

Sisters who have faith not in both but in only one of these activities should take up only that. I have suggested the two activities through which millions of women can develop themselves and contribute their full share in the yajna of swaraj.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 13-4-1930

96. MESSAGE TO “THE HINDU”

April 13, 1930

I have full faith in Southern India making adequate response to the country’s call for the uttermost sacrifice. I expect that the response is not only in connection with salt tax, but also in regard to intoxicating drinks and boycott of foreign cloth.

No part of India is perhaps better equipped for the boycott of foreign cloth and the promotion of khadi than South India. Civil disobedience with reference to the salt tax should be easy for the Southern people owing to the extensive seaboard near by from almost every part of that country.

The Hindu, 15-4-1930
97. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

DANDL,
April 13, 1930

CHI. MAHADEV,

I have your letter. I have been having a talk with some women who have arrived. The conference itself will not start before 3.30. The reason for calling them here was that Janakibehn and some other women have arrived from Vile Parle and Mrs. Tyabji also has come from Baroda. Consult your own convenience and come on the 16th. There is no need to reach here on the 15th. At the moment, at any rate, I cannot think of any additions to your list. I will write if I have any suggestion to make. Tell Ba that she has been posted to do picketing of liquor booths at Jalalpur and that she should, therefore, come after making all necessary preparations. She will not be in a position to return as Mithubehn is quietly starting the picketing work right from tomorrow. The idea is to begin with three booths, of which only one will be taken up tomorrow. The next will be the one at Olpad and the third at Jalalpur. Kanjibhai and Dr. Sumant will help and advise Mithubehn. As Olpad has Muslim residents, Hamida will work there. Kanjibhai’s daughter is also there. Motibehn will have to be posted there. Probably Surajbehn will also be there. But I shall have to consult Swami. Karsandas, who will be arriving this afternoon, will bring some more news.

Considering all aspects of the matter, and in order that we may have a quiet atmosphere, I think it best to have the meeting of the 16th at Dandi. The women will arrive after breakfast, etc., [by the first Mail]. They will spend the whole day here and be back at their respective places in time for their evening meal. If they wish to have their meal here, arrangements for that can also be made; but the arrangement here is bound to be a little unsatisfactory. Let me know if you have any change to suggest in this. You and Narandas or the women themselves should decide who should come from the Ashram. Khurshedbehn at any rate will not come and do not press her. Only those who have faith in this programme can carry it out.

Mohanlal Pandya, Nanubhai and Ishwarlal Desai, these three from Untadi have been arrested. Now it will be the turn of Kalyanji and others. It seems possible that in the end I shall remain at Dandi enjoying its air and you will remain there with no work to do.

Blessings From

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11479

1 The source here is illegible.
98. SPEECH AT GUJARATI WOMEN'S CONFERENCE, DANDI

April 13, 1930

There are certain activities which are meant only for women. Prohibition and boycott of foreign cloth are such activities; which if you do not take up, will never be accomplished. In 1921 I compelled men to take up these tasks and they did so out of fear, but how long could it last? In the end I had to accept defeat and suspend the activities. I would not have had to do so had I entrusted the work to women. But when I was utterly confused and had been defeated on all sides, God, like in that bhajan of the tortoise couple, made me entrust the work to women. It is no doubt very difficult to picket shops but women had been taking great risks in the past. It is for that reason that the world is still going on. Moreover both these activities required persuasion and change of heart. Women alone can enter the hearts of men and trans-form them. Moreover those women who have come here must be aware of the plight of the families where husbands drink. It is your duty to help your sisters’ families from breaking up. Foreign cloth has taken away from fifteen crores of your sisters the noble profession of plying the spinning-wheel and have rendered crores of villagers unemployed. Khadi activity of ten insignificant years have brought ten lakhs of rupees to the women’s homes. I want you to expand the activity so that crores of rupees are brought in. Once you take up this work, you have to discard foreign clothes—you should burn them. You may say you will wear out whatever you have or that you will pre-serve them. Even a drunkard might say that he would consume whatever liquor he had or keep it. How can we keep a thing which we consider to be a poison even for a day? We should throw it away lest our children by mistake take the poison. You may think that you have thrown that much money into water.

A woman picketer of Vejalpore had asked what the women should do if they were attacked while they were picketing. Gandhiji replied:

There is no danger of such attack. However if that happens or if the police try to disperse you with the help of horses then put up with it quietly. A woman has a remarkable capacity for suffering. Take it from me that the liquor shops will be closed down the day there is such an attack on women. You may be certain he will give up drinking for ever from that day.

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 20-4-1930
99. SPEECH AT DANDI

April 13, 1930

I am happy that you have on your own come here in such large numbers on this last day of the self-purification week, but you will not be happy if I do not say something to you on this occasion.

I have just concluded the women’s conference. You will like to know your place in what I have told the women to do. The women have resolved to picket shops selling foreign cloth as also those who use it, and those who sell liquor as also those who drink it. We men may not interfere in this work. Let us treat this as the special field of women.

The success of this work depends entirely on the self-control of men. The assumption behind this is that men cannot easily control their anger, cannot easily practise non-violence, while women can do so. Renunciation and non-violence come naturally to women. Having been inspired by this idea I have tried to explain it to women. If my assumption is false, my conclusion will also be false to the same degree.

It is the duty of men to make the atmosphere congenial for women to do their work. We men should go to the dealers in liquor and foreign cloth and try to convince them that now that the women of India have come out they should give up trade in these two things.

Confronted by the large groups of women even liquor-booth owners and owners of shops selling foreign cloth will be startled and give up their trade. I know it is not easy to give up one’s trade. But, at a time when the atmosphere is filled with national pride and patriotism, the people’s capacity for renunciation automatically increases. During this week alone this capacity has increased a hundredfold, but it should increase a thousandfold.

Dealers in foreign cloth still seem to be calculating whether to give up their trade. They take a vow for three months or a year. Behind this act there is a lurking belief that they will be able to buy foreign cloth after a year. They do not make the effort that is needed to secure swaraj. This is because they lack the faith. But as this movement makes progress—trading in liquor and foreign cloth cannot but come to an end.

1 Extracts from the speech were also published in Young India, 17-4-1930, under the heading “Men’s Part”.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
When hundreds of thousands of our countrymen have sacrificed their all, even these sceptical traders are bound to develop the strength to make sacrifices.

If women lack funds to continue the work after once starting it, I shall stretch out my hand to you, though at present, by the blessing of God, I am able to get more funds than I need. Only today, about a thousand rupees were collected at the women’s meeting and a lady belonging to the Galiara family of Kathor gave four gold bangles without even being asked.

If we men are not indifferent and begin the work on our own, if, for instance, for want of enough khadi it becomes necessary to wear only a loin-cloth and we start doing so, to that extent we shall have lightened the burden of our womenfolk.

Miss Mayo has accused us saying that many of our men have no consideration for women, that we make them work as drudges, as if they were born to be slaves. The world will be convinced that what Miss Mayo said was not true when women wake up and accomplish the tasks of boycotting foreign cloth and of prohibition.

The stocks of khadi in the country are dwindling and I am therefore asking everyone to spin and wear khadi and I am demonstrating this before you every day by spinning on the takli. Just as we grind and cook cereals which are available in every home we ought to spin the large quantities of cotton which grows in India into some kind of yarn, make cloth from it and then wear that cloth. When spinning becomes a universal activity in the country, you can rest assured that the trade in foreign cloth will come to an end.

Mills can never entirely meet the cloth needs of India and as most mills in India are either wholly or partly foreign, cloth made by only a few of them can be used if the need arises.

Women from good families have come out to take up these activities. Divan Shri Manubhai’s daughter Shrimati Hansa Mehta and some other ladies have only recently issued a circular and begun the work of prohibition in Bombay. If Gujarati women continue to work in this spirit and if the men lend them support this activity will become widespread in India. All these three things are easy. When we have accomplished these three things we shall have saved six crores from the salt-tax, twenty-five crores from prohibition and sixty crores from the boycott of foreign cloth—ninety-one crores in all. We shall have become purer and added to our strength, and then it will not take long for us to secure swaraj.

Finally, we should take care that we do not lose what we have gained during these seven days.

I have just received news that some youths in Calcutta, who were reading out passages from proscribed books at meetings, were dispersed. On seeing the police committing such atrocities, Shri Sen Gupta, the Mayor of Calcutta, also started reading out paragraphs from those banned books and was immediately arrested.

Dr. Suresh Chandra Bannerjee, the able khadi worker of Abhoy Ashram, who at one time received a salary of Rs. 600 a month from the Government, has been sentenced to a term of two and a half years’ rigorous imprisonment for violating the salt law.

Notwithstanding such atrocities, just as we in Gujarat have not become frightened and given in, there too, they are not only not frightened but have become more resolute. Whatever the atrocities perpetrated on us, we do not want to use force on anyone or to insult anyone. A certain gentleman has informed me that in Bombay when they were making bonfires of foreign cloth caps from other people’s heads were forcibly removed and burnt I do not know how far this is true. But if it is true, rest assured that this struggle cannot go on. If force is used, people will not tolerate it; they will start fighting amongst themselves and the Government will take advantage of this situation.

If people do not want swaraj through the boycott of foreign cloth, we cannot make them do good under compulsion. In order to melt their hearts, we must make greater sacrifices and even practise satyagraha against them if it becomes necessary to do so.

What should I do if I was convinced that people were deceiving me, that having decided to boycott foreign cloth through khadi alone they pledged themselves to do so and then broke their pledge?

If I was convinced that I had become purified and wholly compassionate, I should, when the occasion arose, offer satyagraha and go on a fast. What should I do if you should raise your hands every day, say that if there is not enough khadi you will wear lungotis and then it should turn out that not a single sister spins? I might perhaps even at this advanced age have to say the same thing I said when I saw that the labourers of Ahmedabad had broken their pledge, and do what I did at the time of the riots in Bombay. I would do so unwillingly if I felt that we were deceiving God daily. I have faith that the people of Gujarat will never deceive me.

We want to live in peace and win swaraj peacefully. I do not wish to live to see disturbances in the country.

You just came on this day of my fast and I have said simply what I wanted to. You must prevent any use of force whether in Bombay or elsewhere. Whenever I hear of one of our men having abused someone, having been discourteous to someone or having used force against someone I feel deeply hurt and truly my heart begins to thump violently. If a doctor were to examine me at the time he would hear the sound. Despite this, I am able to survive, for at such times I close my eyes for a couple of seconds and repeat Ramanama. If I did not do so, my heart would stop beating there and then. You all may well call me Mahatma, but my task is that of a weak person. Do not, therefore, deceive me, at any time in this struggle. It will be all right if you sit at home, but once you join the campaign work sincerely.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 20-4-1930

100. LETTER TO GULAM RASOOL QURESHI

April 13, 1930

CHI. QURESHI.

I got your letter. Our duty is to do all we can. It is for God to reward our efforts. Every rule should be observed. Meet Muslim friends. Spin on the takli daily and persuade others to do the same.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
The women’s meeting today was good.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 4295. Courtesy: Hamid Qureshi; also G.N. 6650
101. LETTER TO LAKSHMIDAS SHRIKANT

DANDI,
April 13, 1930

BHAISHRI LAKSHMIDAS,

I got your letter today. I only read it just now at 9.30 p.m., Sunday. So there was hardly any time for a message. I always wish you success in your tasks. Keep me informed.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4204

102. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

[Before April 14, 1930]

CHI. MATHURADAS,

I have your letter. Take great care of your health. For that purpose, observe regularity in everything. Go out for walks every morning without fail. Take the morning sun directly on your skin. Let milk and fresh fruit be your principal diet. Do not worry about the expense. If you run short of money, ask from the Ashram. If I have to go away, use this letter.

I like your advice that I should not go to Bombay. Swami insists that I should go. You can stop me from going. Swami can drag me there. Talk it over between the two of you and send me a wire. I have fixed Thursday for going. Until I hear from you, I shall keep Friday and Saturday free. Inform Revashankarbhai if you want to call me. I may forget to write.

Who will now attend to the affairs of the Provincial Committee? Do what you can to see that the money is not squandered away.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

1 The letter reached the addressee on April 15, 1930. Besides, Gandhiji in his letter to Mahadev Desai dated April 14, 1930 (ibid.), mentions a change in his plan of going to Bombay on Thursday.
103. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

[On or before April 14, 1930]

MY DEAR MIRA,

Just one line to acknowledge your long love-letter. It is now nearing 10 p.m. So good night for the time being.

Love.

BAPU

Silence day or night? Silence breaks at midnight.

From the original: C W. 5386. Courtesy: Mirabehn

104. LETTER TO SHANKERLAL G. BANKER

Monday, [On or before April 14, 1930]

DEAR SHANKERLAL,

I can understand your requirement. But I would value even a single minute I may get in Gujarat. I have sent you a telegram only yesterday morning. You would surely have received it. I have sent a telegram to Bhai Khatri also saying that I should be spared.

I am sending herewith a booklet which you should print and sell. I had intended to publish it on Wednesday as a supplement of the Navajivan but now I am sending it to you. Carry on with it. Even then, if you think it necessary, let me know at once so that I could come there on the 16th and return the same night. I think if necessary I should come earlier by a day, instead of on the 17th. You would, of course, come to Surat on the 22nd. Look after your health well.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

From a copy of the Gujarati: S. N. 32708

1 From its placing in Bapu’s Letters to Mira this seems to have been written in April 1930. There was no letter on April 28 (vide “Letter to Mirabehn”, 29-1-1930) and the one of April 21 is available. So this could belong to April 14 or some other Monday before that.

2 From the reference to the “booklet” about which Gandhiji wrote in Hindi Navajivan dated April 17, 1930; vide “Satyagraha Yuddha”, 17-4-1930. The Monday prior to April 17 was April 14. Gandhiji was in Surat for a day on April 22.

3 Satyagraha Yuddha
105. TELEGRAM TO MOTILAL NEHRU

Navsari,
April 14, 1930

Have just heard Jawaharlal arrested. I greet you and Saruprani as happy parents. Jawaharlal has earned the crown of thorns. Who will officiate him?

The Bombay Chronicle, 15-4-1930

106. APPEAL TO THE YOUTH OF INDIA

[April 14, 1930]

Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru’s arrest was what I was hourly expecting. It was impossible for the Government to ignore the young President and an ideal patriot. If I know the country, the response, if it was tenfold after the arrest of the other leaders, will be a hundredfold after this crowning act of the Government. This arrest should cost the Government its existence.

Will the youth of the country realize this hope and now leave their schools and colleges and work solely for the attainment of independence?

No doubt there will be an all-India hartal, though it has little meaning in these times of big action.

The Bombay Chronicle, 16-4-1930
DEAR MOTILALJI,

So Jawahar is to have six months’ rest. He has worked like a Trojan. He needed this rest. If things continue to move with the present velocity, he won’t have even six months’ rest. The Jambusar you saw the other day is different today. Whole villages have turned out. I never expected this phenomenal response. In many villages Government servants can get no service. The removal of some of our picked men has only stiffened the resistance of the people. But enough of this optimism. He will be a wise man who can say what will happen tomorrow. Accounts arriving from Bombay too are most encouraging. I take it you are following the pages of Young India.

How are you keeping?

Yours,

M. K. GANDHI

From the original: C.W. 9285. Courtesy: Allahabad Municipal Museum

CHI. MAHADEV.

I have your letter.

I have arranged to meet all of you on Wednesday at Vejalpur. I shall go there from wherever I happen to be. I shall try to reach the place early in the morning. The headquarters will be mostly at Karadi now. If Swami’s request stands, I shall leave for Bombay on Thursday evening and return from there on Sunday morning. I don’t feel inclined to go to Bombay just now.

Your description of the happenings in Ahmedabad. . . .

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11481

1 The addressee along with Jawaharlal Nehru had visited Jambusar towards the end of March 1930 to see Gandhiji on his way to Dandi.

2 Gandhiji reached Vejalpur on April 16, 1930. Besides, in the “Letter to Mahadev Desai”, 14-4-1930 (p. 260), Gandhiji mentions having written to him in the morning. It is likely this was the letter referred to.

3 The rest of the letter is not available.
109. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

April 14, 1930

CHI. KUSUM,

I have written about the anti-drink campaign and boycott of foreign cloth. Do you think you can do anything in the matter? Do you have the courage to take a leading part in that work?

I got your letters.

What are you doing there?

They told me yesterday that there was definite information that my arrest was imminent and kept me awake the whole night. I am still waiting.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1797

110. LETTER TO MANILAL V. DESAI

DANDI,

April 14, 1930

BHAI MANILAL DESAI,

I got the book about salt which you sent with Keshavram. I am grateful.

Vandemataram from
MOKANDAS GANDHI

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./XXII/8
111. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

Monday [April 14, 1930]¹

CHI. MAHADEV.

I wrote to you one letter in the morning. This is the second. It is 10.30 p.m. Jawahar has also been arrested. Pandya, Ghia and others have been arrested here. It is rumoured that they also intend to arrest Jugatram. All these persons certainly needed rest. They had been working ceaselessly. People seem to have learnt now to work on their own.

I shall not have to go to Bombay this week. Swami writes and tells me that he will invite me to go there next week after more preparation.

Bring Ba fully prepared. She should bring with her whatever things she may want. I have found some work for her.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11480 and 11481

¹Jawaharlal Nehru was arrested on April 13, 1930.
112. TELEGRAM TO MOTILAL NEHRU

NAVSAI,
April 15, 1930

NEHRU

ALLAHABAD

FEEL SURE MY WEARING CROWN UNNECESSARY MAY EVEN BE HARMFUL IF YOU CAN SHOULDER BURDEN YOU SHOULD.¹

GANDHI

113. LETTER TO PRESIDENT, B.P.C.C.

April 15, 1930

Your wire fills me with joy. I wonder what response the youth of Bombay will make to the imprisonment of the President of the Congress. I am hourly needed in Gujarat for consolidating the work but I will come when absolutely needed.

The Bombay Chronicle, 16-4-1930

¹ Motilal Nehru, in his reply dated April 17, said: “Your telegram. Fully appreciate your point. Would have liked personal talk but consider longer interregnum harmful and gladly place my whole-time services such as they are at nation’s disposal under your guidance. Assuming charge today. Issuing statement.”
114. LETTER TO LAKSHMIDAS SHRIKANT

April 15, 1930

. . . There must be a Divine plan even in the fact that the Panchmahals district is waking up late. It would not be surprising if, in this holy war, those who started first fall behind and those who started last take the first rank. There is no limit to the strength of the Panchmahals district. The pity is we often do not realize our own strength. This is the time to realize it. I certainly hope that Pan-chmahals will do so.

MOHANDAS GANDHI

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4206

115. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

DANDI,

April 15, 1930

CHI. MAHAD EV.

I have just heard that you are going to be arrested soon! ! ! So be it. You will get some rest. The wonder is that they left you free even as long as they did. The more the people are tested the better.

“For this once, O Girdhari, save Thou my honour.”

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11482

1 The source does not give the name of the addressee. But in the G.N. collection the letter is listed as addressed to Lakshmidas Shrikant.
116. SPEECH AT UMBER

April 15, 1930

Mr. Gandhi asked the village women gathered there if they knew Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru.

They said, “How can we know?” Gandhiji remarked:

It is not your fault but of us men who have hitherto been satisfied with your being and remaining as house-keepers, cooks, scavengers and drawers of water but now you will no longer remain in that position. If this movement is to succeed, yours will have to be as big a share as men’s if not much bigger.

Referring to Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, Gandhiji said:

He was to all India what Sardar Vallabhbhai was to us in Gujarat. He was wearing himself out in the nation’s service and has been punished because he was the greatest among us all.

Hitherto I have asked you to resist snatching of salt by the police from your closed fists and suffer mutely and meekly whatever injuries the police might inflict upon you. If you have got strength of suffering and faith in your mission I want to go many steps further.

I would like you henceforth to regard yourselves as trustees or guardians not merely of the precious national wealth locked up in your fists but of the whole treasure now being prepared in salt pans. Defend that treasure with your life if that be the price you have to pay for it. When the police come and raid these pans, surround them and do not let the police touch them till they have overpowered you by sheer brute force.

Even if you are beaten you must not lose your temper. I hope that Gujarat has now become courageous to that extent. I am getting my strength from the strength of Gujarat. You must be prepared to endure suffering and keep the peace at any cost. Let them destroy pans but only after they have either arrested you, or beaten you. This is altogether a new experiment and I leave it to you to make more pans wherever possible.¹

From your sufferings will rise into being not only Purna Swaraj but a non-violent army for its defence. Women ought not to take part alongside of men in defence of salt pans. I still give credit to the Government that it will not make war upon our women. It will be wrong on our part to provoke them into so doing. This is men’s fight so long as the Government will confine their attention to men. There will be time enough for women to court assaults when the Government has crossed the limit. Let it not be said of us that men sought shelter behind women, well knowing they would be safe if they took women with them in what may be called, for want of a better name, aggressive non-violence. Women have in the programme I ventured to place before them enough work and to spare and all adventure and risk they may be capable of undertaking. The Labour Association of Ahmedabad has undertaken to picket liquor shops. Selling of contraband salt which was going on in Ahmedabad is now stopped. It will be done in villages by sending batches of volunteers.

¹ This paragraph is taken from a report in The Bombay Chronicle, 16-4-1930.

He said that they must either make their own arrangements for food or must take whatever is cooked for them. They could not maintain kitchens for different tastes. This was a fight for self-purification and therefore they must leave off all bad habits. They must have perfect discipline and strength to suffer hardships. He asked all those who cannot submit themselves to discipline to resign in the beginning. But let them not cheat the community and nation. Even if there were only a few true volunteers the fight would go on. The fight has been well begun, and Gujarat has earned credit for it. Let it not be said that Gujarat lost the fight because of mistakes and lapses.¹

_The Hindu, 16-4-1930_

117. LETTER TO SAROJINI NAIDU

April 16, 1930

MY DEAR MIRABAI,

I have your letter. What advance shall I make? Of course I should greet the friends just as before. But not having any sense of sin, how shall I give them satisfaction by talking? Their grievance is evidently most against me. The only way I can give them satisfaction is by correct conduct. Can you tell me where I have erred?

I often sing to myself, ‘We shall know each other better when the mists have rolled away.’

I am likely to come to Bombay next week.

_Yours_

M. K. GANDHI

From the original: Padmaja Naidu Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

¹ This paragraph is taken from _The Bombay Chronicle_ report.
118. LETTER TO MAHALAKSHMI MADHAVJI THAKKAR
April 16, 1930

CHI. MAHALAKSHMI,

I received your beautiful letter. I am replying rather late. I have no time. I got up today at a quarter past two in the morning.

I will give you sufficient work to do. I have understood the natures of you both. Your resolves are noble.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6795

119. UNTOUCHABILITY

As in the matter of Hindu-Muslim unity so has there been misrepresentation in the matter of untouchability. It has been stated that I am sacrificing the interest of the untouchables for the sake of swaraj. I know that the lacs of untouchables will not believe any such thing of me. For me just as there is no swaraj without communal unity, so is there no swaraj without the removal of untouchability. But what I do feel is that without swaraj there will be neither communal unity nor removal of untouchability. He who runs may see that it is to the interest of the ruling caste to keep up the divisions among us. That caste is no more interested in Hindus and Mussalmans coming together than in the removal of untouchability.

In examining the sources of revenue I endeavoured the other day to show how the Government was built on an immoral foundation. Even so has it built itself upon our weaknesses and our vices.

Take the disgraceful Nasik quarrel. The Government knows that the Sanatanists are in the wrong. But what has it done? Because they represent a powerful interest, the untouchables have been sacrificed. It was open to the authorities to get together the Sanatanists and reason with them. It was open to them to reason with the untouchables and ask them not to precipitate a fight. But this required an impartial mind, disinterestedness. But the Government is not disinterested. It rejoices to see the parties quarrel and then side with the strongest. I know that many good natured but ignorant Englishmen will cavil at this opinion. I can only tell them that it is based on everyday experience. I do not suggest that every time the action is deliberate. ‘Might is right’, ‘divide and rule’, have become the daily routine of the official world.

Such being my deep conviction, I would be wronging the minorities and wrongdoing the untouchables if I stopped the progress towards swaraj by inaction. I hold that as soon as we have realized the power that is lying dormant in every one of us, that very moment we shall be free and we shall feel the glow of real unity and the untouchables will also feel an accession of power.

Let it be understood that everywhere the bands of civil resisters contain Mussalmans, members of other faiths as also untouchables, be these ever so few. The fact is that the foundations of swaraj are being laid by those who regard communal unity, equality of rights and opportunity and removal of untouchability as articles of faith.

Let the untouchable brethren not be lured from the common goal because it was the presence of Englishmen that stimulated Hindu thought and brought to the untouchables a sense of their rights. The fact is there. But the English did not descend upon India with any such benevolent motive. Their civilization or rather the Western civilization does not recognize distinctions in the manner decayed Hinduism does. We could have profited by this excellence of theirs without having the infliction of their rule. My indictment is not against the English as men, it is against Englishmen as the ruling caste. As men they are as good as we. In some respects they are better, in some others they may be worse. But as rulers they are highly undesirable. As rulers they can do, have done, no good to any of us. They have pandered to, and accentuated, our vices. And as we have developed the inferiority complex, their contact demoralizes us. I have watched ourselves acting one way in their presence, another way behind their backs. This is an unmanly and unmanning process; it is unnatural. “The tallest of us,” said Gokhale, “has to bend before them.” When they come to their senses, they too will realize that their rule has no less debased them than us.

Now a word to the untouchables. I have advised them and I repeat the advice that it is wholly unnecessary for them to seek to force entry into the orthodox temples even through the method of satyagraha. It is the duty of the ‘touchable’ Hindus to secure for the untouchables the freedom of the temples. It is for the ‘touchables’ to offer satyagraha when the time is ripe. The untouchables know that the Congress has appointed, with Jamnalalji as the head, a committee for that very purpose. They know that very great progress has been made in the matter of removal of untouchability, they know that all over India are to be found hundreds of well-known believing Hindus who will lay down their lives to remove untouchability. The reformers hold it to be their duty and penance to purge the Hindu society of the evil. Let the untouchables know that the vast majority of them are today engaged in this life-and-death struggle. If they realize the truth of the statements I have made, they will at least suspend the satyagraha pending the struggle even if the whole mass of them will not join it as some of them have already done. The Hindu reformers have undertaken the work not as patrons, not to do the favour to the untouchables, certainly not to exploit them politically. They have undertaken the task because their conception of Hinduism peremptorily demands it. They have either to leave Hinduism or to make good the claim that untouchability is no part of it but that it is an excrescence to be rooted out.

Young India, 17-4-1930

120. THE INHUMAN TAX

Every new experience gained of the incidence of the salt tax shows it to be more inhuman than it appeared at first. Living and moving as I am in the midst of the salt area in Gujarat, I find that villages have been ruined because of the prohibition of salt manufacture by the villagers. The only use the people can make of the land is to extract salt from it which nature deposits in abundance from month to month. This was the poor man’s staple industry in these parts. Now all this land lies fallow. Dandi itself has a tragic history. It is a beautiful seaside place. It takes its name from the fact that it was a place for a _diva dandi_, i.e., a lighthouse. Now it is a deserted village. A European and then Indians tried against nature to reclaim the soil for cultivation. As I walk about the otherwise beautiful peace-giving shore and listen for the heavenly music of the gentle waves, I see about me wasted human effort in the shape of dilapidated embanked fields without a patch of vegetation. These very fields, immediately the hateful salt monopoly is gone, will be valuable salt pans from which villagers will extract fresh, white sparkling salt.
without much labour, and it will give them a living as it did their ancestors.

Mahadev Desai has already shown that the Government communique that this salt is injurious to health is a wicked falsehood. In spite of the inhuman regulations, the people round about this area have used none but the salt that nature provides here in abundance. They do not seem to have felt any the worse for it. Thousands all over this area have been during the past week eating this salt with impunity. I hear that in Konkan people have all these years used what they regard as swadeshi salt in contradistinction to the taxed salt which they regard as sarkari or foreign, although in the first instance it was yielded by India’s earth and seas. The recipe which I publish in this issue has been prepared by two careful men who have graduated in science. According to it every household can prepare its own salt without any expense whatsoever. One boy has merely to fetch a lota-ful of salt water and it has merely to be strained or filtered and put near the fire in a shallow pan and treated in accordance with the recipe and the householders have every day’s supply of salt much cleaner and healthier than the ‘sarkari’ or ‘foreign’ dirty salt to be had in the bazaars. Let the salt satyagrahis (and they are to be counted in their tens of thousands now) not waste a single grain of swadeshi salt. Law or no law, there is now no excuse for anyone to eat the bazaar salt. Swadeshi salt must be introduced even where there are no salt beds. It can be easily transported in small quantities from place to place. Let the Government prosecute tens of thousands of men and women or, if they dare, send their officials to search their persons and brutally force it from them. Let them say: ‘The salt law allows it.’ I have already shown that the salt regulations are as inhuman as the tax itself. If the history of the administration in the early stages of these regulations were known, it would be found that these inhuman regulations were as inhumanely administered in order to deprive the people of their natural calling and compel them to take the bloodstained sarkari salt. Let the reader know that even palanquins bearing purdahnashin' women were searched in order to prevent the transport of illicit salt. If

---

1 Mahadev Desai’s article entitled “A Brazen Lie” was published in Young India, 10-4-1930.
2 A lota is a metal jug.
3 Literally, of the Government
4 Wearing purdah
today we have to bear hardships in the attempt to have this iniquitous tax removed, we are but doing a modicum of penance for our past neglect and shameful submission to the impost. The reader will thus see that it is not merely the tax, heavy as it is, that is offensive. It has not one redeeming feature about it. The revenue it brings is not the only cost to the nation. The cost to the nation is probably twenty crores per year besides the loss of an equal amount of salt which is wantonly destroyed or prevented from being gathered.

Young India, 17-4-1930

121. A SURVEY

The mass manifestation in Gujarat has exceeded all expectations. Bombay and its suburbs have done no less. And the reports slowly coming to me at this out-of-the-way place from all over India are fully encouraging. It is a matter of the keenest joy to me to see Maharashtra united once more and Sjt. N. C. Kelkar and his friends joining the struggle. Sjt. Kelkar’s and Sjt. Aney’s resignations are events of great importance in the struggle. Bengal is the most tempestuous province in all India. It is pulsating with life. Its very factions are symptomatic of its great awakening. If Bengal responds in the right style it is likely to overshadow every other province. I do not know that any province, even Maharashtra, can claim the credit that Bengal can for voluntary sacrifice. If its emotional side is its weakness, it is also its greatest strength. It has the capacity for reckless abandon to non-violence, if such use of language is permissible. Sjt. Sen Gupta’s action in response to the wanton assault on the students’ meeting has evoked the sentiment above expressed. The sentence of Dr. Suresh Bannerji and others pales into insignificance before the possibilities of the move on the part of the Bengal students and the savage counter-move on the part of the police. I know what the Calcutta Commissioner of Police will say if he sees these lines. I hear him saying, ‘But you do not know my Bengal.’ Well, I know his Bengal more than he ever will. His Bengal is the creation of the Government. If the Government will cease to molest Bengal and not keep India from her cherished goal, Bengal will be as gentle as the greatest province of India. If Bengal is seething with the violent spirit, it is because of her sufferings.
But I expect Bengal’s imagination to come to her assistance and to realize that non-violence is the trump-card. All the suffering must be dedicated to the goddess of ahimsa.

Soon after the Jallianwala massacre, I used to express and reiterate the hope that next time in no part of India must people run away on bullets being discharged against them, and that they must receive them in their chests with arms folded and with courageous resignation. That testing time seems to be coming faster than I had expected. And if we are to train ourselves to receive the bullet wounds or bayonet charges in our bare chests, we must accustom ourselves to standing unmoved in the face of cavalry or baton charges. I know that it is easier said than done. Nevertheless, I must say it if we are ever to complete our training in mass non-violence. That mass non-violence is a perfect possibility has been sufficiently demonstrated during the past eight days. Mahadev Desai has given a realistic account of the brutal treatment of volunteers in the Dholera saltbed and the volunteers suffering the brutality with meek heroism. What thousands in Bombay did when the police acted with rashness and harshness if also with comparative considerateness can be studied from a condensed translation published elsewhere of a graphic description sent to me by Pandit Malaviya. His report is in the main corroborated by Dahyabhai, Sardar Vallabhbhai’s son, who was also an eye witness.

Perinbai and her companions as also Kamaladevi acted with rare courage and calmness. But they would allow me to say that they would have done better to remain outside the venue of the men’s fight. For women to be in the midst of such danger as they put themselves in was against the rule of chivalry. Anyway that time is not yet. Let them by all means manufacture salt in their thousands. But they may not remain deliberately in crowds which they know are likely to be charged. I have in all humility suggested to them an exclusive field in which they are at liberty and are expected to show their best qualities. There is in that field enough scope for adventure and heroism.

To revert, if then we are to stand the final heat of the battle, we must learn to stand our ground in the face of cavalry or baton charges and allow ourselves to be trampled under horses’ hoofs or bruised with baton charges. An armed crowd would stand firm and retaliate if there were such charges. We, if we would learn the lesson of non-violence, should show greater courage by standing our ground without anger, without retaliation. Then a reincarnation of Dyer will find us ready for receiving bullets in the bare breast.

People have already begun to defend their salt pans. If we have evolved that sufficient amount of courage, it must be done methodically and regularly. As soon as the police come to charge us and break through the living wall, women should, if the police give the opportunity, stand aside and let their men be wounded. They do so all the world over in armed conflict, let them do so in a conflict in which one party deliberately chooses to remain unarmed.

When there are no men left to fight the battle of free salt, if [they] have courage let them take up the work deserted by men. But I have no doubt that men will give a good account of themselves in this struggle.

I have already examined elsewhere the argument that the police must use force if people will not surrender the contraband salt in their possession. Here I would only remind these critics that even from confirmed thieves they do not take stolen property by force except after they are brought under arrest and then too never if they are not to be brought to trial. The property still remains the thief’s until he is convicted and the court adjudges the property not to be his. That the salt regulations make the policeman the arresting officer, prosecutor and judge all rolled into one is no answer to my charge of barbarity in respect of the procedure adopted by the authorities.

Young India, 17-4-1930

122. PRESIDENT’S REWARD

The President of the Congress has had his laurels cheap. For a telegram just received from Pandit Motilalji tells me that Pandit Jawaharlal has been sentenced to six months’ simple imprisonment. But even a day’s imprisonment of the nation’s first servant is an affront offered to the whole nation. Through this imprisonment the Government have told us to do our worst. And the worst we can do is to invite more suffering upon ourselves. This can only be done by our intensifying the campaign. Great as is the work being done by the youth of the country, I must confess that I am not satisfied with the response from the students. They have not yet got self-confidence. They do not believe that swaraj is coming soon. They do not realize that it is for them to anticipate its advent by simple faith and acting upon it. But faith cannot be given by anybody. It has to come from within. The country will watch the effect of Pandit Jawaharlal’s incarceration upon the thousands of students who are still hankering after degrees and diplomas.

Young India, 17-4-1930

123. SPECIAL TASK BEFORE WOMEN

The conference of women on Sunday last at Dandi became a Congress as I had wanted it to be. Thanks to the Government prohibition against the Baroda territory cars plying between Navsari and Dandi, many had walked the full 12 miles to Dandi. The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

I

This conference of the women of Gujarat assembled at Dandi on 13th April, 1930 having heard Gandhiji, resolves that the women assembled will picket liquor and toddy shops of Gujarat and appeal to the shop-keepers and the shop-goers [to desist] from plying their trade or drinking intoxicating liquors as the case may be, and will similarly picket foreign-cloth shops and appeal to the dealers and the buyers to desist from the practice of dealing in or buying foreign cloth as the case may be.

II

This conference is of opinion that boycott of foreign cloth is possible only through khadi and therefore the women assembled resolve henceforth to use khadi only and will so far as possible spin regularly and will learn all the previous processes and preach the message of khadi among their neighbours, teach them the processes up to spinning and encourage them to spin regularly.

III

This conference appoints the following Executive Committee with power to draw up a constitution and to amend it from time to time and add to their number:¹

1. Mrs. Tyabji (President)
2. Shrimati Mithubehn Petit (Secretary)

¹ These four paragraphs have been taken from “Women in Conference”, Young India, 17-4-1930.
MEMBERS

3. Shrimati Manibehn Patel
4. ,, Rohini Desai
5. ,, Chandubehn

This conference hopes that Gujarati women will welcome this activity and participate in it.

This conference hopes that women all over Gujarat and the other provinces will take up the movement initiated at this conference.

The same resolutions were passed also in Vejalpur; only the first resolution was divided into sections. Two distinct sections dealt with prohibition and the boycott of foreign cloth through khadi, so that women who believed in only one of these causes could vote for that one alone. At the second conference three more names were added:

Shrimati Shardabehn Sumant Mehta
Shrimati Savitabehn Trivedi
Shrimati Surajbehn Manilal

This vote need not be considered as having much value. It is valuable to the extent that not a single resolution was opposed at the meeting, for it shows that even if the women present may not be prepared to put the resolution into practice, nevertheless they approved of its substance. At both these conferences women from villages were present in greater numbers. The struggle this time is of the villages especially. The awakening in the villages is astonishing which is a good sign. Salt, the boycott of foreign cloth and prohibition—all these three are specially meant for villages and the women would benefit especially.

Even if a few women are ready to lay down their lives for the sake of this resolution, they will come forward. If this does not happen the conference will not be deemed to have completed its work. If the number of women present at the conference is any indication, the women would seem to be prepared for work.

The soul of any organization is its executive committee. Hence the success of the work depends upon the enthusiasm, the tapascharya and the skill of the ladies who have given their names for the committee.

1 This paragraph has been taken from Young India.
Mithubehn Petit has started the work with great alacrity. According to her accounts habitual drunkards are enthusiastically breaking earthen jars containing toddy. Thousands of persons in Surat who are given to drinking, have started having resolutions passed by their castes prohibiting drinking.

Once women become self-confident and gain faith, they will find from experience that the fear which they entertain has no basis. Rama and Ravana dwell in every human being. If women would act through the Rama who is in them, the Ravana who dwells in man would be powerless. Rama awakens less readily in men than in women. Who can harm one who is protected by Rama? Who can protect one with whom Rama is displeased?

In the work of prohibition, once the initial fear is shed, things become easy. For all it involves is picketing. Those who drink are not wicked. They are simple folk. Their self-interest is not involved in drinking. Once they are convinced, they will give up liquor. The liquor-booth owners do have their self-interest involved but they realize that this is an immoral trade.

I regard this extension of the swaraj movement as of the highest importance. I need not reiterate the argument already advanced in these pages. Mithubehn has already commenced operations. She is not the woman to let the grass grow under her feet. The idea is for twenty to twenty-five women to go in one batch and plant themselves near each liquor shop and come in personal contact with every visitor to the liquor or toddy shops and wean him from the habit. They will also appeal to the shopkeepers to give up the immoral trade and earn their livelihood through better means.

Foreign-cloth shops are to be treated in the same way as liquor shops as soon as there are enough trained women volunteers. Though the same committee will carry on the two boycotts it will necessarily have two branches. It will be open to any woman to offer her services for only one branch of work, nor is it necessary that every worker should belong to the Congress. Only this must be clearly understood, that the work is part of the Congress programme and has tremendous political results if it has also equally great moral and economic consequences.

1 This and the following two paragraphs have been taken from Young India, 17-4-1930.
Those who will belong to the foreign-cloth boycott branch should realize that without the constructive work of khadi production the mere boycott will be a mischievous activity. Its very success without the production of khadi will prove the ruin of the national movement of independence. For the millions will take it up in simple faith. But they will curse us if they discover that they have no cloth to wear or the cloth they can get is too dear for their purse. The formula therefore is: discard foreign cloth and make your own khadi and wear it. Already there is a dearth of khadi.

The boycott of foreign cloth is, however, a difficult matter. It has two aspects; boycott and khadi production. The boycott does not require much effort Only a few women would suffice for the work. For the production of khadi thousands and even hundreds of thousands would have to be regularly active. Hence it would require organization and planning. However, it is a work needing patience, as it requires intelligence and faith. In the course of it you have to come in contact—directly or indirectly—with crores of women. It requires a pure co-ordination between towns and villages. And, through it all the khadi India needs can be produced in a short time. We have before us all the means to produce it. We have the necessary skill too. All that we lack is workers. It is the sisters who must create these workers. They can do so only when they themselves learn to card and spin and disseminate the art among others. Most of the khadi workers are in the salt campaign. Therefore the production has suffered a temporary check.¹

But there need never be any dearth of cloth the moment the country gets disabused of the superstition that it must buy cloth to cover its nakedness. It would be on a par with someone saying that we must starve if we cannot get Manchester or Delhi biscuits. Even as we cook our food and eat it so can we, if we but will it, make our own cloth and wear it. We did it only a hundred years ago and we can relearn the trick now. All the vital processes are almost too simple to learn. At this supreme crisis, this turning point in the nation’s history, we must not hesitate and nurse idleness. I do not need to restate the argument about our mills. Even if every mill were genuinely swadeshi and even if all became patriotic, they could not supply all our wants. Whichever way we look at it, whether we like it or not, we cannot escape khadi if we are to achieve independence through non-violent means and if we are to achieve the boycott of foreign cloth on which we began concentration in 1920.

¹ The last two sentences and the following two paragraphs have been taken from Young India, 17-4-1930.

Of men’s part in the boycott I have said enough in my speech which I unexpectedly delivered to the men who had come to Dandi. Relevant parts of this speech are reproduced elsewhere.¹ Suffice it here to say that men will damage the movement if they will meddle with women’s picketing wherever it is undertaken by them.

By passing the above two resolutions Gujarati women have taken up the responsibility and Begum Amina Tyabji and their committee have shouldered the responsibility on their behalf.

May God grant them strength!

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 20-4-1930 and Young India, 17-4-1930

124. “SATYAGRAHA YUDDHA”

The Navajivan Publishing House, Ahmedabad, has issued a booklet under the above title. Let everyone read it. Those who are not regular readers of Hindi Navajivan, or those who have to train themselves for the satyagraha campaign will find the booklet especially useful.

[From Hindi]
Hindi Navajivan, 17-4-1930

125. PRESIDENT IN PRISON-HOUSE

Pandit Jawaharlal is in jail. This means that the Government has thrown the whole of India into prison. If we understand this, then our duty becomes clear at once. If we wish to force the jail doors open we must do these things.

1. We should make salt everywhere and distribute it.
2. Women should picket liquor shops, that is, they should humbly plead with the sellers and consumers of liquor to desist from selling and drinking it.
3. Women should similarly dissuade those that sell and those that wear foreign cloth.

¹ Vide “Speech at Dandi”, 20-4-1930.
4. Spinning should be started in every home.
5. Students should leave schools and dedicate themselves to national work.
6. Lawyers should give up their practice and devote all their time to this national yajna.
7. Those in other occupations should also give for these activities as much time as they can.
8. People should leave Government jobs.
9. Under no circumstances should people become disorderly or commit violence.
10. They should not look down upon anyone. They should live at peace with all.

If we did this much our strength would certainly increase and no one would dare deflect us from our path.

[From Hindi]
Hindi Navajivan, 17-4-1930

126. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

April 17, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS,

Yesterday I sent the replies to your questions orally through Gangabehn. They must have been conveyed to you.

What you write about accounts is correct. I intend to write in Navajivan about the matter.

I had sent to you by return of post my reply to your question concerning...¹ Mahadev must have explained to you why you did not get it. If Ramji Sahay wants to go to his own province to work, he may do so. He should pay his own fare if he can.

I have already written to you asking you to send some women. Have you found some work for Keshu?

Think of all possible plans to increase the production of khadi.

Blessings from
BAPU

¹ The name has been omitted.
[PS.]
You will have to send the thing to Malkani, since I had not written to him to say no. Now I do not wish to write.

From Gujarati: C.W. 8100. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

127. INTERVIEW TO FREE PRESS OF INDIA

JALALPUR,
April 17, 1930

It is too early for me to speak with certainty anything about the so-called riots in Calcutta and Karachi. Having become used to grossly exaggerated accounts and distorted versions of things happening before my eyes, I am inclined largely to discount the stories of violence alleged to have been done by people. But be it ever so little, I have no manner of doubt that it harms the struggle, and at the same time the struggle has to go on unchecked. If non-violence has to fight people’s violence in addition to that of Government, it must still perform its arduous task at any cost. I see no escape from it. At the very outset of the campaign I had declared that there was every possibility of some violence breaking out on the part of the people. It seems now to have broken out; and it hurts me, only because it hurts the cause I hold as dear as life itself. But I must say that Government have provoked it in dispersing the meeting where no violence had been done; to prohibit public meetings and processions altogether is a thing calculated to precipitate violence. Government have with utmost deliberation picked up the leaders of the people who were known to be partial to non-violence and to possess controlling influence on the people. It would have been miraculous if this gross interference with popular liberty had not evoked reprisals from easily inflammable people, who were to be found in every community and in all parts of the world. Take Gujarat itself; and in the out-of-the way Dholera and near Viramgam unnameable and indecent atrocities are said to have been committed upon defenceless national workers. Their only crime was that they would not easily yield up the salt in their possession.

In the first place, I do not know that outside India under any civilized government, authority has been given to the police forcibly to take away from people anything unless it is of a dangerous character. I know that Salt Acts do give such powers. That merely illustrates my view. A barbarous act does not become less so by having the authority of law, and the practice of indecent torture is utterly intolerable and calculated to exhaust the patience of any people. The obvious fact is that Government [do not] want peace. I observe that Mr. Jairamdas Doulatram has come in for a bullet wound in the thigh. I am delighted it is Mr. Jairamdas Doulatram rather than some unknown person to have been thus injured. Mr. Jairamdas is one of the greatest persons to be found in all India. If he was in the crowd, he was there not to incite people to violence but to prevent it.

Spilling of such innocent blood will hasten the end, but such casualties will only result in the manifestation of greater response from people. Let me, however, warn those whom my message may reach that if they cannot restrain themselves, they must not interfere with the struggle. If they do, they will only retard the country’s progress towards its goal.

I know, however, that soon my word will cease to reach the people. All instruments I possess will have been snatched away from me, but they cannot snatch away one thing from me and that is my unshakable faith in my cause. A mass movement like the one we see in front of us is regulated not by men but by God. Manifestation has been spontaneous. It has required but little guidance.

If what I have seen happening in Gujarat is an index to what has happened in other provinces of India, the movement has been largely self-directed. I have, therefore, still every hope that at the end of the struggle it would be possible to say of it that even though regrettable violence now and then broke out, it remained predominantly and overwhelmingly non-violent. Not what happens in cities but what happens in villages will decide the fate of India.

_The Bombay Chronicle, 18-4-1930_
128. SPEECH TO VOLUNTEERS, VEJALPUR

April 17, 1930

Gandhiji at the outset said that they had gathered to decide about their future programme. The Government was doing quite the opposite of what he thought would be done. They had belied the expectations of the satyagrahis. He expected that he would be arrested, but he was still free. The Government has miscalculated. The word ‘defeat’ is not to be found in the dictionary of a satyagrahi. There was no defeat for them who were ready to die and suffer. Out of these sufferings mighty strength would be created with which all Government laws could be broken.

They had broken the salt laws successfully. What should they do next? He had heard of riots in Calcutta and Karachi. From what he had read in the newspapers he could find that somewhere there was some mistake on the part of the people and it was regrettable. Though he expected that the people would remain non-violent, he did not think that such occurrences would never happen.

I cannot teach peace and non-violence by stopping the fight. How can one man keep in check crores of people? We must do our duty and the people will understand by themselves. I hope Gujarat has well understood the lesson of non-violence, which is our religion at the present moment. We must suffer till the goal is reached.

Continuing, Gandhiji said that he wanted that all should be prepared to serve as national volunteers till swaraj is attained and asked those who wanted to retain their services under the condition to raise their hands fearlessly. All the volunteers except 48 raised their hands.

Gandhiji congratulated those 48 satyagrahis who did not raise their hands for their courage and assured them that they would be given other work in their own villages.

The question of ration for the national army was then discussed. It was unanimously resolved by the volunteers, at the suggestion of Mahatmaji, that their food should be simple and should not cost more than annas 5 per head per day. But option was given with the permission of the Captain to take meals privately at the volunteers’ own expense. But Gandhiji wanted them to use the option as rarely as possible, as they as national soldiers were expected to behave with self-restraint. He said that in England even Kings had to work as sailors where they got the same food as ordinary sailors.

The resolution regarding smoking by soldiers of the national army evoked keen debate. Gandhiji said that he did not want to dismiss all those who were habituated to smoke, but suggested that they must try to do without smoking.
Concluding the conference, Mahatmaji laid great stress on the fact that they must always be at their post and asked them to observe all the rules they had themselves passed after full deliberation and of their own free will. He asked them to be of good moral character. If they did national work with impure conscience swaraj would go farther away from them. He said he would be glad if he saw his own national soldiers suffering and receiving bullets on their own chests and out of the ashes of these non-violent soldiers of freedom, swaraj would be born.

The Bombay Chronicle, 18-4-1930

129. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

Vejalpur,

April 17, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

I have your two letters.

I can understand how the mishap occurred as to the yarn.

I understand too your natural desire to come. But I am [sure] restraint was better. It is a fine saying “there is no remission of sin except by being born again.”

You know however that you are at liberty to come if you cannot help it. But then you must come plainly to satisfy the natural desire. If you can suppress the desire, so much the better.

Calcutta and Karachi have broken the spell. Somehow I am unmoved. But there is no suspending even if moving violence takes place.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5392. Courtesy: Mirabehn
DEAR BROTHER,

I have your astonishing letter today. The original has not been received. It is now 10.30 p.m. But I may not let your letter go unanswered even for a night.

I had no knowledge of the extent to which I had fallen in your estimation.

If I had lost confidence in you, I should certainly have told you. What I have lost I have told you—confidence in your judgment. Even now I shall defend the Nehru Report.¹ But I own it is useless if it cannot satisfy the Mussalmans or the other minorities. That was why I moved the saving resolution in Calcutta in Motilalji’s absence, but with his full consent and approval. Surely it should be enough for you that the Nehru Report and, with it, the communal scheme are buried. What the scheme shall be in an independent India will be for Mussalmans, Sikhs, other minorities and Hindus to decide. If I erred in endorsing the Nehru Report, I did so with Dr. Ansari. This was enough for me.

Your charge that I did not consult you on embarking on civil disobedience is true. But how could I when I knew there was no meeting ground between us?

Can you not see that, although I may act independently of you, it might not amount to desertion? My conscience is clear. I have deserted neither you nor the Mussalmans. Where is the desertion in fighting against the salt tax and the other inequities and fighting for independence? Lastly, time will prove what no assurance from me can prove.

You are at liberty to publish the whole of the correspondence between us.

I hope that your fears about Mahomed Ali’s eyes will never be ¹ A draft constitution for India prepared by a committee headed by Motilal Nehru.

realized. His eyes are wanted even if it be to fight me. May God bless him and you.

Yours ever,

From a photostat: S.N. 16810

131. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

April 17, 1930

CHI. CHANDRAKANTA,

I have your letter. You are a girl with immense patience. May God always prosper you.

Let Uncle continue giving money to Narandasbhai.

It is now getting on for 11 o’clock in the night.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: Chandrakanta Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

132. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

April 17, 1930

CHI. PRABHUDAS,

I have your letter. Now it is about 11 at night. So, I will not be able to write much.

Give up worrying about the struggle. There are persons to guide you, aren’t there? Do what they say.

You cannot go to Delhi but it is sufficient that Krishna has reached there. Write to him. He is at the Jamia. I hope you know that.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original : S.N. 32945

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
133. ADVICE TO VOLUNTEERS

NAVSARI,
April 17, 1930

A question arose in Mahatma Gandhi’s camp today about volunteers requiring more khadi to replace their torn clothing. Mahatma Gandhi said that the volunteers should dispense with the torn or lost pieces and should be satisfied with mere loin-cloth as the millions in India had to.

The Bombay Chronicle, 19-4-1930

134. TELEGRAM TO MOTILAL NEHRU

April 18, 1930

THANKS. YOU HAVE CONSIDERABLY RELIEVED ME.
MAY GOD GIVE YOU STRENGTH.

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1930. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

1 This was sent on receipt of intimation from the addressee that he had assumed charge of the presidency of the Congress; vide also “Telegram to Motilal Nehru”, 15-4-1930.
135. TELEGRAM TO N. R. MALKANI

NAVSARI,
April 18, 1930

MALKANI, CONGRESS

KARACHI

CONSIDER JAIRAMDAS MOST FORTUNATE. BULLET WOUND
THIGH BETTER THAN PRISON. WOUND HEART BETTER STILL.

BAPU

From a photostat: C.W. 9261. Courtesy: Jairamdas Doulatram

136. LETTER TO RAOJIBHAI N. PATEL

April 18, 1930

CHI. RAOJIBHAI,

I have sent all of you there with great hopes. Mahadev writes and tells me that they are spending money extravagantly in the Kheda district. Put a check on this. One of you should remain with Abbas Saheb, so that no one harasses him for money. There is no one there to act as leader. You should take up the leadership and assume control of things.

The boycott also seems to be turning violent in spirit. Be vigilant about this, too. Meet the Headmen who have resigned and, if any of them are resorting to coercion against others, check them. If any of those who have not resigned are being harassed, that should be stopped. Allay the fears of all who have not resigned. The supply of provisions to such persons ought not to be stopped.

Think carefully about every step you take.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8987
137. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

April 19, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS,

I have written in Navajivan about money falling into the hands of too many people. I have also told Mahadev to take all possible steps.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8101. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

138. LETTER TO K. M. MUNSHI

POST JALALPUR,
April 19, 1930

BHAISHRI MUNSHI,

I have your letter. How can I advise you? After giving up legal practice, one can only go on with the cases which are pending. This is what Motilalji, Das and others had done. You should decide for yourself what you should do.

Have you positively decided to invite me to Bombay? In reply to my letter to him, Swami had wired to say that I should not go till I had heard from him. He must have seen you. I have really no time to go to Bombay just now. I shall be satisfied if things here are properly organized.

It is very good indeed that you have decided to go to Broach.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

From Gujarati: C.W. 7512. Courtesy: K. M. Munshi
139. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

April 19, 1930

CHI. GANGABEHN,

Tell all the women that no one should suppose that I will not call them here. I will call them here soon, but write to me immediately and tell me who must remain there.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original C.W. 8745. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

140. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

Saturday [April 19, 1930]¹

CHI. MATHURADAS,

I have your letter. Sarojini could not carry on without me, so she has come. No harm will come to her as long as she is by my side. When she is away, she cannot help being affected by the surrounding atmosphere. We shall take from her as much service as she can give.

I shall write about mills in Young India². I have not put forward any particular conditions to Ambalalbhai or anyone else. Whatever there are have been mentioned in the Navajivan³. You will see them. No mill has accepted those conditions as yet.

I am not at all in favour of the strike. But I do not know how it can be avoided under the prevailing conditions. Still, I am making all efforts. This time the struggle will be against twofold violence. God’s will be done.

Only you and Swami can deal with the money-grubbing going on in Bombay. The proper thing in my view would be to appoint a trust to which the money should be paid. Otherwise it will be eaten up. In my view some things cannot be stopped.

I shall of course write about that, too.⁴ Why should Hiralal, ¹ The letter reached the addressee on April 21, 1930. The Saturday preceding fell on this date.

² Vide “Our mills and foreign-cloth boycott”, 24-4-1930.
³ Ibid.
⁴ Ibid.
Paramanand, and others not involve themselves in the Provincial Committee? What about Vithaldas Jerajani? I have written to him to come over for a discussion on khadi matters. But he has not yet come

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Munshi’ has been pressing me to go there. I have agreed to go on Friday if something else does not prevent me. I am glad that Swami has not come. Meet Munshi and decide.

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

141. SPEECH AT MEETING OF HEADMEN, VEJALPUR

April 19, 1930

The way of ahimsa by itself is such that it can produce riches out of dust. The Government’s is the way of violence. It mixes earth with salt, while we produce salt out of earth. The Government destroys, we create. It has guns and cannon, we have no such arms. It has huge factories, we have nothing of the kind. Our factory is in our cottage, and our machinery is the takli. For you it is a matter of faith that swaraj hangs by a thread of yarn. It was you who took the pledge to carry out in six months the constructive programme for swaraj. Keep that pledge and justify my faith in you. If you do so, Bardoli can win swaraj for India.

Now that you have given up being Headmen of the Government you should become Headmen of the people. In the villages where you served as Headmen you should now work as true Headmen; in other words you should serve the people of these villages.

There are many ways of serving. But first take up these.

Every man in your village should break the salt law by making salt not only for use in his home, but also some to be stored for people living away from the sea-coast.

But this work is not likely to take the whole of your day. Hence,

1 K. M. Munshi; vide also “Interview to The Bombay Chronicle”, 20-4-1930.
the next item of work for you is to see that foreign cloth is banished from your villages. The right way to do so is to sit in your homes and twirl the takli, which you can make without spending a pie. If you Headmen start spinning on it the other people in the village will follow suit. In numbers is strength, as the saying goes. And by making all people in the village wear khadi you will be able to save the village wealth from being drained away.

Moreover, if all of you take up the work seriously, you can soon get the liquor shops closed, since you have your finger on the pulse of the village.

Then you should provide arbitration in village disputes, which is important work. You are well versed in these matters. Some of you probably are addicted to this kind of work. If they have to remain idle after resigning as Headmen they may regret having resigned. I was myself a practising lawyer. Having left practice I have never had to repent since I found for myself work that kept me occupied even more than legal practice had. The Headmen may very well give up their jobs, but they should have village council meetings in their homes. They should set up boards of arbitration. Being well acquainted with the affairs of the village, these boards will be able to settle disputes in a just and satisfactory manner.

In order that you can do all this work in an organized way I suggest that you establish an association of ex-Headmen. If such an association comes into being, I should like to have regular reports of its work so that I am kept informed about all your activities.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 25-5-1930
Headmen and Talatis are looking frightened. They have a lingering belief that through the present Government they can enjoy prestige and status and plunder the people in the name of the Government. That is why you find it necessary to persuade them to resign and to employ the weapon of social boycott against them. Truly speaking, there should be no need to persuade anyone or to put pressure on anyone in the form of boycott. A person should himself be able to see that his dirty job and soiled power are things to be abjured. And why talk only of the Headmen and Talatis? I do not believe that even others have full faith in this struggle. But we have to build on the courage that has been roused among the people. I want that the Headmen and Talatis who have not yet resigned should do so at once. And those who resign should do so totally.

To keep charge of the village books and to continue waiting on the officers after resigning the post would be deceiving the people. Rather than do so, they should boldly say: “Boycott us if you like. But we do not yet see the need to resign.”

Defying the salt law is only a part of our work. Our aim is to win swaraj. To that end, it is necessary to undertake other items of work also. We should see to it that all the liquor shops are closed down. For the present, a few of our sisters have boldly come forward and taken up the task. It is not necessary for all the women to come out of their homes. They should banish liquor from their own villages. We should not abuse anyone, we should not lift our hand against anyone. Go to the owner of the liquor shop, and entreat him to close his shop. Plead humbly with the drink addicts also. This is easy for women to do. Men should help them in their work of persuasion and cut down the toddy palms for their owners. Both men and women can do all this without leaving their villages.

The third item is the boycott of foreign cloth. That task, too, we have entrusted to our sisters. It may appear to you a difficult job, but to me it seems easy. Or, to the extent that it is difficult, when accomplished it will make the winning of swaraj easy. There is no exaggeration in saying that this Government remains in our country chiefly for its cloth trade. You cannot think of all the other trade that is allied to this direct trade of 66 crores. You will, like the people of Karadi, collect and burn foreign cloth. Brothers and sisters of Bardoli, burn with faith all the foreign cloth you have, but at the same time take a pledge that you will wear khadi. If you do so, you will save so much expenditure on clothes. If you wear fine garments of foreign or mill-made cloth, you will each need a score or more of them. But if you wear khadi a loin-cloth for men and just a sari for women will do. Also, the khadi vow should be a vow to wear khadi woven from yarn spun by oneself. That is not difficult to do. For though you cannot learn weaving in a short time, I can teach you spinning on the takli right away. If you spin the yarn, the ashrams will undertake to weave it into cloth. All the ashrams in the neighbourhood here are devoted to khadi activity. They have done some work though not so much as they might have done.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 25-5-1930

143. FOREWORD TO “PUBLIC FINANCE AND OUR POVERTY”

KARADI,
April 20, 1930

The booklet is a reprint, revised where necessary by the author, of the chapters written by Professor Kumarappa and published in Young India. They examine the economic policy of the British Government and its effect upon the masses. They are therefore very seasonable. The value of the chapters is enhanced by the addition of a very careful and copious index prepared by the author himself. I commend the booklet both to the Indian as also the Western readers.

M. K. GANDHI

Public Finance and Our Poverty; also G.N. 10085
144. MY NOTES

Beware

When a great struggle is on, generous people empty out their pockets and look upon everyone as a public worker. At such times, traitors see their opportunity and rob everyone wherever they can. Any one who wants to sell swadeshi salt; anyone who wants to collect funds. People, being gullible, pay up. At such a time, it is necessary for people to be on their guard. No one should make any contributions unless they know those making collections and never without getting a receipt. The receipt should bear the signature of an office-holder of the Congress and the stamp of that office. The committees should maintain accounts of every pie and publish the names of the donors. The receipt books should be numbered and the rule should be that only these should be used for acknowledging contributions. And then accounts should be maintained accordingly. Despite such care, however, some misappropriation is bound to be there. A thief has a hundred prying eyes; a banker can glance only now and then. Nevertheless, it is the duty of all public institutions to be as much on their guard as possible.

MILL-HANDS OF AHMEDABAD

The mill-hands of Ahmedabad are contributing their share in the yajna of swaraj in an excellent manner. Many of them wear khadi. Their children, if not they themselves, spin and they are picketing the liquor booths. Some have also offered civil disobedience against the salt law. As a result of the movement for prohibition, the income from liquor has greatly diminished. In 1928-29 the average sale of six liquor booths in Ahmedabad was 231 gallons. The sale this year has been 45 gallons. In other words, there has been a decrease of over 81 per cent, that is, only 19 per cent is left. If this movement continues, we may hope that the liquor booths in Ahmedabad, at least, will have to close down. Labourers as well as the organizers deserve to be congratulated on such good results. Labourers alone act as pickets before liquor booths and it may be said that this is done in an ideal manner. Perfect peace has been maintained. If other labourers follow the example of these, their incomes will at once be doubled as money... saved is money earned. Besides there is the added gain that homes will become more peaceful.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 20-4-1930

145. MESSAGE TO PEOPLE OF DHOLELA AND VIRAMGAM

The reports from places around Dholera and Viramgam are becoming intolerable. The barbarous atrocities which are said to have been perpetrated there make one shudder. Those who have sent in the reports should be careful and be prepared to substantiate them. The inhuman atrocities which have been described are not supposed to have been perpetrated secretly but openly in public. I hope the accounts are untrue. However, if they are true, there are satyagrahi measures more severe than the ones that are being adopted at present. Through them these inhuman acts could certainly be prevented. Those on whom these indignities have been inflicted should not be afraid. I am eager to go to that area. And, if these atrocities do not cease, God willing, I shall go and suggest ways of preventing them. I assure them that although I am trying to cope with the work in Surat district, my mind is occupied with the Dholera and Viramgam events.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan 20-4-1930
146. CALCUTTA AND KARACHI

The news from Calcutta and Karachi is shocking. Only time will show how much of it is true. Newspapers contain so much falsehood that it becomes difficult to get at the truth. A regime given to violence always needs to be sustained through villainy. Who does not know that at time of the Bardoli Satyagraha false rumours were spread concerning the activities of satyagrahis? Do I not have experience of the lies that have been spread about me? Nevertheless, there would seem to be some truth in the attack on us. Some Indians, whoever they may be, have caused harm to life and property. They have caused harm to the movement and put me in awkward position. Such incidents stand in the way of the Service which the people expect from me. It is a painful thing. Such incidents agitate me. That is my temperament, so how can I prevent it?

But my path is straight. Whatever happens, I cannot stop the struggle. I cannot gauge my non-violence. I go on working in faith. All will be well if untainted non-violence is at work. Nothing but good will result from the steps which are being taken.

There is only one path and one duty for the readers of Navajivan. They should work for peace wherever they go; they should not say one harsh word to anyone; they should not encourage among the people hatred for the British and for Indian officials. It is our dharma to love even the wrongdoer. We do not wish to injure even a hair on his body. We have to face greater atrocities by undergoing greater suffering.

There is a bit of good news in the reports from Calcutta and Karachi. Jairamdas has received a bullet wound in his thigh. I have not known anyone more pure-hearted than he. The intelligence he possesses and the prestige he enjoys are as great as his purity. He is a member of the Congress Working Committee; he is the secretary of the committee for the boycott of foreign cloth. He is a staunch votary of non-violence. In this struggle, the sacrifice of such persons is expected. So I regard Jairamdas lucky that he was the first to receive a bullet-wound. If there was a riot he surely did not go there to instigate it but rather to try and quell it. It is good that he has been injured.
It is with the blood of such Indians that the temple of swaraj will be built. If we too wish to make the final sacrifice in this yajna, we should cultivate Jairamdas’s purity, simplicity and determination.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 20-4-1930

147. FOREIGN-CLOTH DEALERS

I have just received a telegram from Delhi which says:

“Dealers in foreign cloth want certain conditions to be considered with regard to the round-the-clock picketing of foreign-cloth shops. They want to be given time to cancel orders against which goods have not been received and to sell goods which they have in stock.”

The question is whether such conditions can be conceded. I have sent my opinion as follows:

“Such time certainly cannot be granted. If the traders have the faith they should rest assured that such poor merchants who have suffered a loss will be suitably compensated in swaraj. Those who are well-to-do will get no compensation. They should regard the loss that they incur on account of the goods lying in stock as a token prayashchitta for their past sins.”

I feel that it is essential for swarajists to make things fully clear. The desperate souls who have entered the field will either triumph or perish, but even while perishing they will clarify many matters. There was not in the world a single war in which thousands did not suffer losses.

If, however, this struggle does have a peaceful ending, there would be the minimum loss with the maximum gain. But the satyagrahis must harden themselves to put up with this loss. Why should the boycott which is possible today be postponed? Where would we be if every dealer in foreign cloth asked for time? The strength of the boycott movement would be frittered away and the doors to betrayal would be opened in front, from behind and on the sides. Who would keep watch on which traders? The traders who lack faith but do not wish to practice deceit can act in the following way:
They can keep their goods for the time being. If the people lose and enter into a fresh indenture of slavery, such traders will easily be able to sell their goods. They should make out lists of their goods and hand them to well-known volunteers and get these stamped by the Congress, so that, at the proper time, if it is felt that they should be given compensation, the swaraj Government could do so. Another alternative is for them to export their goods to countries where foreign goods are sold. Anyone who wishes to do something finds many straightforward ways of doing it. But a poor dancer will always find the courtyard uneven.

But why sympathize with the sufferings of traders? What about educated lawyers? With great difficulty we find a person like Kainiyalal Munshi, who saw his way clear and sacrificed his legal practice and his, what in Government circles is called, “career”. Other lawyers are afraid of offering civil disobedience. What if they are disbarred? These good but timid lawyers would see if they reflected a little that if all of them offered civil disobedience, no one would be disbarred. But, what if all of them do not do so? Even then what is there to fear? Why should not a sacrificing lawyer have the conviction that by making his own contribution he will bring swaraj nearer? Why cannot he have the faith that such a mighty struggle cannot but end in swaraj? Then those who were disbarred will again be called back to their practice in honour. Dr. Krause was a famous lawyer in the Transvaal. He was very nearly sent to the gallows. His legal practice was forcibly taken away from him. He, however, reestablished himself with honour and not only did he regain all he had lost but his prestige increased. Many such instances could be cited. Want of faith is the most expensive thing in this struggle. If we have the least bit of self-confidence swaraj is within our grasp. Otherwise we victims of delusion shall be like the woman who is looking all over the village for the child who is in her lap.

What applies to the traders and the lawyers applies also to the students. We do not even have an idea of the full extent of our fall. And so we have not developed sufficient dislike for our miserable plight. Ignorance of our plight stands in our way.
Even so if we maintain our present progress, traders, lawyers, students, doctors and even barbers will gain courage and we shall soon secure the end we desire.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 20-4-1930

148. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

April 20, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS,

I have sent Chhotelal to Ahmedabad today, as I sent away Pyarelal. Retaining both of them in my service encouraged them and me in indulgence and resulted in their services being not fully utilized. I have, therefore, sent Pyarelal to Wadhwan and other places and Chhotelal to Ahmedabad to stay in the Vidyapith and elsewhere and propagate the takli, the spinning-wheel, etc. Let me know which women ought to remain there.

The sum of Rs. 250 which I have sent with Chhotelal was received from a Marwari gentleman. Credit it to the Satyagraha Fund.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C. W. 8102. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi
149. LETTER TO JAMNADAS GANDHI

April 20, 1930

CHI. JAMNADAS,

I had been expecting your letter. You seem to be doing good work. Is your throat all right? It would be very good indeed if Khushalbhai joined the movement. According to me, it is pure dharma to join it. Write to me from time to time and give all the details.

Blessings from
BAPU

CHI. JAMNADAS GANDHI
OPP. MIDDLE SCHOOL
NAVA PARA, RAJKOT
KATHIWAR

From the original in Gujarati: C.W. 9307. Courtesy: Jamnadas Gandhi

150. LETTER TO K. M. MUNSHI

April 20, 1930

BHAISHRI MUNSHI,

I have a letter today which says:

Shri Munshi has produced a good effect by his bold step, but he has issued a circular letter to his lawyer friends telling them that he would be able to attend to work in his chambers from 1 p.m. to 4 p.m.

There is another letter signed by seven persons, which is full of allegations against you. The signatories desire the letter to be published. I have categorically refused to do so. This is merely for your information.

Shri Mukund Malaviya sends a long letter. He says that none of them desires me to go there at present. I have seen the Congress leaders too. They also say the same thing, adding that I might visit the place after they do something which I would welcome.
For the present, therefore, I would ask you to free me from the engagement. The work here does not leave me a moment to spare. There is little need to arouse enthusiasm in Bombay. I am making this suggestion for the sake of the rest and peace that I need. You may come here and bring with you a few Congress leaders. You will spare me for the present, won’t you?

Tell Lilavati that I shall expect her to make her own contribution, and a big one. If it was with her approval that you made a public reference to our old relations, I may say that those bonds were as between a father and his daughter. Imagine what expectations a father who had lost his daughter would have from her when she was found.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

[PS.]

After this was finished, I received a letter of praise also, which I must send to you. Do not return it. Tear it up.

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 7513. Courtesy: K.M. Munshi

151. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

9.30 p.m., April 20, 1930

CHI. MAHADEV,

I have had no letter from you for two days. I am eager to know about what is happening in Viramgam and Dholera. Either write to me yourself or ask someone else to write. There seems to have been an actual revolt in Chittagong. May everything be as Rama wills.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11483
152. INTERVIEW TO “THE BOMBAY CHRONICLE”

JALALPUR,
April 20, 1930

I see that several friends expect me to be in Bombay next week. In reply to Sjt. Munshi’s pressing invitation I said weather permitting I might go to Bombay next week. But I see that my presence in these parts is urgent and letters from several friends in Bombay tell me that I should not move from Gujarat till Bombay is better prepared. Of enthusiasm, so far as newspapers can tell me, there is no lack in Bombay. Of discipline I do not know. At the present moment what we want is the rigidest discipline, more rigid than in an army made to wage bloody warfare, side by side with the utmost defiance of the selected laws and consistently with the principles of non-violence and truth. There must be continued and continuous constructive work as if swaraj was to be established today. How far this is being done in Bombay I do not know. I, therefore, advise friends in Bombay not to be hasty in asking me to come there. If Gujarat alone responds to the work put before the men and women, it would be a great thing and a large step towards swaraj.

I would, therefore, ask friends in Bombay not to build upon my coming there in the near future but I would go there with the greatest pleasure as soon as I can free myself from Gujarat and when Bombay is really ready.

After all the struggle is becoming a mass movement. Nobody’s presence is therefore indispensable. What is most necessary is consolidation of the present phenomenal manifestation into dynamic energy of a purely non-violent type. That is possible. The world has had ample demonstration since the 12th of March last.

The Bombay Chronicle, 21-4-1930
153. ADVICE TO FOREIGN-CLOTH DEALERS

April 20, 1930

Gandhiji said he feared that wherever foreign-cloth boycott can be organized perfectly non-violently, it cannot be suspended upon any undertaking save that of refraining from selling.

This is no time for bargaining. Those who have faith in this and therefore in swaraj coming as the certain result of the present movement and who believe that it is good to stop buying foreign cloth should stop altogether and not for a certain period. But for those who have no faith and would stop selling foreign cloth in obedience to rising public opinion against it, I would make the following suggestion. Instead of asking for suspension of picketing, let them suspend selling of foreign cloth which they will resume if the movement fizzles out. If it succeeds they will find a market for their wares elsewhere. If they suffer loss and are too poor to bear it they should trust the national Government of the future to give them reasonable compensation. I would, however, warn those who would undertake to picket against using the slightest violence either directly or indirectly. That was one of the reasons why I conceived the idea of confining picketing of foreign-cloth shops and liquor shops to women but where women are not ready and men have confidence in their ability to conduct non-violent picketing, they should certainly take it up.

The Bombay Chronicle, 21-4-1930
The past week has not been one of unmixed joy. It has seen disturbances in Calcutta\(^1\) and Karachi. And now comes the sad news from Chittagong. It shows that in spite of the striking demonstration of non-violence all over the country, there is still violence in the air and cities are the storehouses of it. Calcutta and Karachi can be distinguished from Chittagong. The first two appear to have been mad outbursts of the moment. Chittagong seems to be a deliberate planning. Whatever they were, they are most regrettable and interfere with the growth of the movement which is otherwise shaping itself marvellously well and gaining fresh momentum from day to day. I can only appeal to those who believe in violence not to disturb the free flow of the non-violent demonstration. Whether they listen or not, this movement will go on. Violence is bound to impede the progress towards independence. I am unable to demonstrate how it will impede. Those who survive the struggle will know how.

Meanwhile satyagrahis must continue their activity with redoubled vigour. We must deal with the double-edged violence ranged against us. For me popular violence is as much an obstruction in our path as the Government violence. Indeed I can combat the Government violence more successfully than the popular. For one thing, in combating the latter, I should not have the same support as in the former. Then again the motive in the latter being as honourable as that of the satyagrahis, the method to be employed has to be somewhat different from that employed in regard to the Government violence.

I hope that as in Karachi, so in Calcutta and Chittagong, there were satyagrahis attempting to check mob violence. Brave young Dattatreya Mane who is said to have known nothing of satyagraha and being an athlete had merely gone to assist in keeping order, received a fatal bullet wound. Meghraj Revachand, 18 years old, has also succumbed to a bullet wound. Thus did seven men, including \(^1\) There had been disturbances in Calcutta during the hartal observed on April 19 following the arrests of Jawaharlal Nehru and J. M. Sen Gupta.

Jairamdas, receive bullet wounds. Jairamdas’s injury gave me unmixed joy. It is the injury to leaders that would bring relief. The law of sacrifice is uniform throughout the world. To be effective it demands the sacrifice of the bravest and the most spotless. And Jairamdas is of the bravest and the cleanest. I therefore could not help wiring when I heard of Jairamdas’s wound that a wound in the thigh was better than prison and wound in the heart better still.\footnote{Vide “Telegram to N. R. Malkani”, 18-4-1930.}

Whilst therefore I tender my sympathy to the parents of the two brave lads who lost their lives, my inmost desire is to congratulate them for the finished sacrifices of their sons, if they would accept my congratulations. A warrior’s death is never a matter for sorrow, still less that of a satyagrahi warrior. One of the lessons that a nation yearning for freedom needs to learn is to shed several fears; fear of losing title, wealth, position, fear of imprisonment, of bodily injury and lastly death.

Accounts from all over India tell the same tale of growing fearlessness. The Bihar letter published elsewhere makes soul stirring reading.

One thing we must get rid of quickly. Lawless physical violence must be stopped even if it is to be through forcing the Government to use its guns. And this can be done non-violently.

I give only one out of several samples of indecent assaults by the police at Viramgam:

\begin{quote}
STATEMENT OF ANIRUDDHA VYAS, A STUDENT OF DAKSHINAMURTI VIDYARTHI BHAVAN VOLUNTEER NO. 35/3:

I with a number of my companions got down from the 6.30 evening Mail with bags of salt at the Viramgam railway station, when from 8 to 10 policemen surrounded us. To save the salt from being seized I sat down with the bag of salt on the ground, clinging to it with all my might. All efforts of the police to make me get up having failed, one of them thrust apart my legs and squeezed my private parts with his hands so as to compel me to get up. But the weight of my body and the push and the pull of the surrounding police disengaged the parts and I fell down. I was then pulled up again. But I bent double and held the salt bag tight under my crossed arms. A policeman thereupon straightened my back by poking it with his foot which caused me intense pain. Then two policemen gave a violent jerk, twisted my fingers as they liked and loosened my arms and wrested the bag from me. I was \end{quote}
then let go, one officer taking my name and number.

Mahadev Desai tells me that these assaults have stopped for the time being. But there is no knowing that they have stopped for ever and there certainly is not the slightest ground for supposing that they will not occur in other parts of Gujarat or of other provinces. In Broach the things are growing from bad to worse. A bullet wound is any day better than these barbarous, unnecessary, unprovoked assaults. The person of a citizen must be held inviolate. It can only be touched to arrest or to prevent violence, never in the manner being done now. It is a prostitution even of the salt laws to use them against civil resisters. The provisions were designed to deal (even then unjustly as I hold) with surreptitious breaches of its new provisions, never to deal with masses of men openly defying them. If the Government do not stop this brutal violation of the body, they will find the satyagrahis presently compelling them to use the guns against them. I do not want this to happen. But if the Government will have it, I should have no hesitation whatsoever in giving them the opportunity. They must not physically interfere with the bands of civil resisters manufacturing or vending salt, they may arrest every man, woman and child if they wish. If they will neither arrest, nor declare salt free, they will find people marching to be shot rather than be tortured.

It is true that the barbarous interference with the body and the indecent assaults are a heritage of the past. This Government has by its tacit approval given it a currency which it never had before.

As I am writing these notes two volunteers have brought me salt said to have been poisoned. Not only do the authorities wantonly destroy salt and salt pans now, they are said to poison the sources of salt manufacture. If the report is true, the blackness of the regime becomes blacker still. And all this against a people who without hurting anybody are seeking to gain freedom through self-suffering!

Young India, 24-4-1930
155. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

April 21, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

I hate writing letters in pencil. But I am writing this whilst I am waiting at the prayer ground for the others to come. It is just nearing 4.20.

You must speak to Premabai with all the love you can command and she will listen. She is a capable girl and a good girl. She wants to do the best she can. She is aware of her shortcomings. All she needs is gentle helping. I am writing to her too.

How is Reginald getting on now?

I am moving from place to place and concentrating on spinning. Boycott of foreign cloth will be a trap without spinning. And takli is the only thing to make spinning universal. You will therefore do there whatever is possible to manufacture more khadi there.

I am sending you a cutting regarding yourself.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

The ink portion was written after prayer.

From the original: C.W. 5393. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9627

1 Up to here the letter is in pencil.
156. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

Monday Night [April 21, 1930]

CHI. GANGABEHN,

It is 11.15 p.m. now. I will not, therefore, write much. There is a great rush of work these days.

The women who have remained there are also helping the movement. I have often explained that the Ashram activities and this movement are not unconnected with each other. For anyone who has given up fear of jail, it is the same whether they are in jail or at home.
We should avail ourselves of whatever opportunities of service we get unsought. If women’s help is sought for picketing, all the women may come forward. When nobody else remains to carry on the work and fear rules all, let the Ashram women come out and lay down their lives to the last of them. Just now, many many women are coming forward for picketing, you should do whatever work falls to your lot.

I have told Kusum that the inmates of the Ashram cannot be divided into two classes. If she joins as from the Ashram, she must sign the pledge. If she does not sign the pledge and yet wishes to remain in the Ashram, she can observe the other rules and remain there. Hearing this, on the very day on which the women came here she went to consult her mother. I do no know what happened after that.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 8746. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

1 The date is from Bhapuna Patro — 6: G.S. Gangabehnne.
157. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

KARADI,
Midnight, Monday, April 21, 1930

CHI. MAHADEV,

Pyarelal has arrived. Your statement was not found useful, you will see why when you read my article. What is happening in Broach and what has happened in Bihar have overshadowed the incidents in Dholera and Viramgam. Now that the repression at these places has stopped, why rake up the matter? What little you may have mentioned in your weekly account may remain. A part of your statement was, I felt, fit to be dropped, but I have no time just now to explain why. I wrote the whole day, after which I went to the Navsari hospital to see someone who had been seriously injured while cutting toddy-palms and has now only a few breaths left. After my return from there, I have been at the spinning yajna and dictating this. I am sending Pyarelal to Broach. You also seem to have sent someone there. To err on the safe side, I am sending Pyarelal. The services of Chhotelal, who was sent there yesterday, will mainly be utilized for khadi propaganda work. I have explained this to Kaka. However, Chhotelal is known for his ability to attend to a number of jobs at the same time and you may take from him any work you wish to. I have been thinking how to give the last instructions. I am not sure, but I may be able to finalize them in a day or two. Tomorrow afternoon I shall reach Surat and be there till the evening, when I will return.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I am sending all the affidavits. The bundle of papers for Young India has been sent direct. I have included in my article the translation of one affidavit. Pyarelal’s translations are incomplete and faulty I have dropped the idea of sending Pyarelal.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 16824
158. INTERVIEW TO ASSOCIATED PRESS OF INDIA

Navsari,
April 21, 1930

Chittagong news makes sad reading. It shows that there is a large or small body of men in Bengal who do not believe in non-violence whether as a policy or as a creed. That there were such people all over India I knew but I had hoped that they would give non-violence a chance. If Chittagong is an indication and not an isolated act, as I believe Calcutta and Karachi acts to be, it is a serious affair. But, however serious the situation becomes, there can be no suspension of the fight. There can be no retracing. I observe that the Viceroy has answered the Chittagong disturbance with the exercise of his extraordinary powers. That was only to be expected. So long as the British people are determined to impose their rule upon unwilling people, so long must they rule in reality without law. We in India easily delude ourselves into the belief that we have duly constituted legislatures. Presently there will be no one remaining under any such delusion. Civil resisters must, therefore, fight an unequal struggle—the violence of the Government and the violence of those among us who have no faith in non-violence. Satyagrahis, if they are true to their creed, will either come out victorious or will be ground to atoms between the two mills.

The Bombay Chronicle, 22-4-1930
159. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

April 22, 1930

Bhai Satis Babu,

I am not getting from anywhere a true account of what is happening in Bengal. I do not even know how your organization is working. Instruct someone to keep me posted with correct information.

How is your health?

Blessings from

Bapu

[PS.]

After writing this I saw the telegram regarding the fast. I have wired and am awaiting the reply.

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1617

1 Presumably, the Ashram at Sodepur
160. LETTER TO HEMPRABHA DAS GUPTA
April 22, 1930

DEAR SISTER,

There has been no letter from you for several days. I have no idea how long I shall be allowed to remain free. But you must keep writing to me. After I am arrested we shall see.

How is your health now?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1666

161. SPEECH TO HEADMEN, SURAT
April 22, 1930

Remember that you have pledged your services in the cause of the country. Your duty now is to work whole-heartedly for the swaraj “Government”.

If you have resigned your jobs unwillingly I consider that you are doing the greatest disservice to your country. If you have faith in yourselves and, therefore, in swaraj, then alone I invite you to join this fight.

Do not purchase Government salt. Do not wear foreign clothes and shun liquor. You are taking a step towards swaraj.

The Bombay Chronicle, 23-4-1930
162. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

April 22, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS,

What you write about Sharja\(^1\) is correct.
The accompanying letter\(^2\) is for Gangabehn. Read it and give it to her. I have no time to write more. It will be 11.30 p.m. in a few seconds.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8103. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

163. LETTER TO PURUSHOTTAMDAS TRIKAMDAS

10 p. m., April 23, 1930

BHAISHRI PURUSHOTTAM,

I was glad to have your letter, for which thanks. We need as many lawyers as we can get. Bhai Munshi has shown the way to all.\(^3\)

May God give you strength.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

SJT. PURUSHOTTAM TRIKAMDAS
29 D DONGONSI ROAD
MALABAR HILL
BOMBAY

From the Gujarati original: Purushottamdas Trikamdas Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

---

\(^1\) Sharja Apte wanted to live independently of her husband and do some work.

\(^2\) No letter of this date to Gangabehn Vaidya is available. It is likely the reference is to the letter of April 21.

\(^3\) Ibid.
164. LETTER TO HARIBHAU UPADHYAYA

April 23, 1930

Bhai Haribhai,

I have your letter. After all of you are arrested, I will write for Young India and Navajivan if I am not arrested by then. There is some matter even today on which I must write in Navajivan. I will sit down and write out something. Ramnarayan has expressed a desire to go there and I have also given my consent. The movement is certainly gathering momentum. If we can keep up the present tempo, I am confident that we shall be able to gain our object in quite a short time.

I wrote this yesterday and was then called away. I got your wire at Navsari. I got your letter, too. I have used that letter itself and written something for Hindi Navajivan.¹ If I can write something for the next issue of Young India, I will do so. Take care of your health.

Perhaps by next week I shall have been arrested.

Blessings from

Bapu

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 6072. Courtesy: Haribhai Upadhyaya

¹ Vide “Salaaming or Flogging?”, 24-4-1930.
165. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

Karadi,
April 23, 1930

CHI. BRIJKRISHNA,

Your letter. What purpose can be served by calling you here? I know the conditions in Delhi well enough. Do as much as you can. Increase the production of khadi in and around Delhi if possible. Make bamboo taklis, teach others to make them and organize collection of yarn. Meet Nair and do whatever is possible. I see no harm in making the Ashram permanent. But if you have faith in our pledge, you may be sure that the Ashram will automatically become permanent because this struggle is going to be decisive and the Ashram is bound to exist till the establishment of swaraj. And after attaining swaraj all the ashrams will, as a matter of course, become a permanent feature. It is very good that Mother and others have taken to khaddar. How is your health?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2381
166. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

April 23, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS,

Herewith is a cheque, along with its particulars. Send the acknowledgment to Allahabad.

It is 10 p.m. just now.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8104. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

167. LETTER TO VITHALDAS JERAJANI

April 23, 1930

BHAISHRI VITHALDAS JERAJANI,

There have been, from time to time, several changes in the khadi propaganda movement and consequently in your work. In my view, those changes were necessary in the interest of the khadi movement and of Daridranarayana though, at the time those changes were made, they did not immediately appeal to reason. Our experience so far has been that ultimately all those changes stood the test of reason too, and were justified by the results. The change which I am now suggesting may, I think, seem much more risky than the earlier changes. However, I believe that the change is as essential in the interest of khadi as it may seem dangerous to khadi lovers on a superficial view. Anyone who has properly understood the rationale of boycott of foreign cloth will immediately see the necessity for this change. We do not have in stock enough khadi to meet the present demand. The demand is daily increasing and we are not in a position to produce sufficient khadi to meet it. Hence, if we do not somehow increase our capacity to produce khadi, the supply of khadi would be inadequate. It can be proved with mathematical certainty that, if that happens, the boycott of foreign cloth will fail. The new suggestion which I, therefore, wish to make is as under:

As quickly as feasible, that is, immediately in a day or two, you should inform the Bombay public that no one who wishes to buy khadi will get it for money but that it will be sold only against hand-spun yarn. This is the only way to make it clear to people that khadi is not a mere commodity, like foreign cloth, which can be bought for money, but that it is a symbol of the nation’s strength and aspiration. According to the science of khadi, as long as cotton is available there can be no scarcity of khadi. However, this requires that the people should be imbued with a zeal for spinning. Khadi will have no meaning if, at this critical time and when we are about to win swaraj, we cannot make the zeal for spinning universal. Moreover, it is not possible for us at short notice to produce ten million pounds of khadi. Our duty, therefore, is straight and simple. If the people have real love for khadi, they ought to spin. My suggestion is not in fact as extreme as it may appear on a superficial view, since the prospective buyer of khadi is required to produce yarn not spun by himself but by any person. Hence a resident of Bombay may procure hand-spun yarn in any way he chooses. He may spin it himself or get it spun by members of his family or his poor neighbours or by the residents of any village in India. The Bombay man will have to take some trouble, of course. If he does not take even that much of trouble and has in consequence to go without khadi, it would be best for himself, for others and for the cause of khadi that he should go without it. You may think and decide for yourself what the quality of the yarn should be and what articles can still be sold for cash. I hope that the residents of Bombay, who have been making a great contribution to the present struggle, will understand this simple suggestion and take the little trouble they are being asked to, for obtaining the khadi they require.

_Blessings from_
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9772
168. HINDU-MUSLIM UNITY

As so much misrepresentation is being made about my attitude on the communal question, without entering into any argument I would state my position as clearly as my knowledge of the language would enable me to do.

1. The views that I have held for the last 40 years remain unchanged.

2. I hold that there is no swaraj without communal unity as without several other things I have repeatedly mentioned.

3. The present campaign is not designed to establish independence but to arm the people with the power to do so.

4. When the power has been generated and the time has come for the establishment of independence, Mussalmans and all other minorities will have to be placated. If they are not, there must inevitably be civil war. But I live in the hope that if we succeed in generating the power, our differences and distrust will vanish. These are due to our weakness. When we have the power from within we shall shed our weakness.

5. The Nehru Constitution having lapsed the communal solution has naturally lapsed. The Lahore Congress resolution mentions in so many words that the communal solution not having given satisfaction either to the Sikhs or the Mussalmans the question might have to be reconsidered so as to give satisfaction to all the parties concerned.

6. The only non-violent solution I know is for the Hindus to let the minority communities take what they like. I would not hesitate to let the minorities govern the country. This is no academic belief. The solution is attended with no risk. For under a free government the real power will be held by the people. That demonstration is being given now. The mightiest government will be rendered absolutely impotent if the people realizing their power use it in a disciplined manner and for the common good. In Gujarat the people are within reach of success if the strength and cohesion they are showing today are genuine and not derived from blind faith. It must be remembered that only an infinitesimal proportion of the people can hold positions of responsibility and power in a country’s government. Experience all the world over shows that the real power and wealth are possessed by people outside the group that hold the reins of Government. We in India hanker after power, because our people are ignorant and will be exploited. The power wielded today is corrupt to the core. Ind-independence achieved through non-violent power must by its very nature reduce corruption to a minimum. It is thus my practical wisdom which has suggested the solutions. The fact is that we are today unable to visualize anything contrary to our experience present or inherited. Yet what can be clearer than that an independent India must be something quite outside our present experience? It is of course open to the critic to say that both non-violence and inde-pendent India achieved through it exist only in my imagination. My retort then is that, God willing, I shall not be found surviving in an India that remains slave in spite of this struggle or under so-called independence achieved through violent means. I admit that under an independence violently achieved, minorities have to take care of the-mselves. But this, thanks to the existing Government, they do not need much exertion to do. For the Government exists by playing one community against the other or others. The difficulty of my critics arises from their ignoring or doubting my creed. I remain unmoved, because they won’t be able long to ignore or doubt my creed.

7. My so-called inconsistencies are no inconsistencies to those who understand, be it only intellectually, the implications of non-violence.

8. There can be nothing to suspect in resisting the salt tax or the drink and drug devil or the inroads of foreign cloth through khadi. I therefore do not hesitate to invite all to take their due share in the campaign. Those who will not, simply deny to themselves the oppor-tunity of gaining the power of resistance to evil under every con-ceivable circumstance.

9. I have embarked upon civil disobedience without any reservation save that of non-violence for the simple and peremptory reason that non-violence itself was in danger of being worsted in the fight. I could not possibly contemplate such a calamity with equanimity. I saw at once that if non-violence was a potent force, it must be able to make its way even through violence and finally supersede it.

Young India, 24-4-1930
A friend having seen the wonderful manifestation of mass action sends the following extracts from an article by Sir Martin Conway in Commerce and Finance:

What any generation can accomplish in faith and growth is little compared with what has been accomplished for them by the generations that have gone before. This is evident enough; in the case of material possessions and the great treasure of the world’s art, but it is still more true for the world’s ideals. It is those that are the most precious of all its belongings, and for the preservation of these it has, not individuals, however great, but crowds to thank. For let me declare again that it is in crowds that ideals reside. It is they that incorporate them and they that transmit them. An individual may invent an ideal, but unless he can get it incorporated in a crowd it is barren of effect, and dies with him. Rail against the crowd as we may for its intolerance, its pride, its fickleness, its lack of measure and all the other shortcomings of which we are only too easily aware, it yet remains true that upon crowds our spiritual life depends, that from them we draw our enthusiasms, and to them we owe those flames of love and passion and glory which make the life of each individual the splendid opportunity that it is.

A crowd that has never come physically together gains greatly in vigour if it can be in whole or even in part embodied. If it can be seen it will bring to bear on outsiders that attractiveness which every embodied crowd possesses. If it can see itself it will grow hot.

An even more rudimentary application of the principle of crowd-attractiveness is the organization of processions. The longer they can be made the more useful they are, and the more they attract and impose upon the outside. An English movement dates its success from the day when it can fill the Albert Hall with a shouting throng; and it is an obvious fact that one successful, enthusiastic Albert Hall gathering is worth more for purposes of propaganda than a score of smaller gatherings in unimportant halls and chapels.

1 Only extracts are reproduced here.
The use at the present moment of this article consists in the help it gives one in measuring the progress of non-violence. An idea whether good or bad can be said to have gained ground only when it strikes the imagination of masses of men. Whatever crowds do is not necessarily always good. Nor is it true to say, as some have said, that non-violence is necessarily confined to individuals. On the contrary the test of the sincerity of one’s belief in non-violence lies in the measure of its acceptance by masses of men. If non-violence could not affect masses of mankind, it is a waste of effort for individuals to cultivate it. I hold it to be the greatest gift of God. And all God’s gifts are the common heritage of His creation and not a monopoly of cloistered monks or nuns. They may specialize in non-violence, they may teach us its wonderful effects, but if their discoveries and their claims are sound they must be adaptable by masses. If truth be not a monopoly of the few why should non-violence, its counterpart, be otherwise? My reverent study of the scriptures of the world has led me to the belief that all register emphatic and unequivocal testimony in favour of non-violence being practised by all not merely singly but collectively as well. In all humility I have often felt that having no axes to grind and having by nature a detached mind, I give a truer interpretation of the Hindu, Christian, Islamic or other scriptures. For this humble claim I anticipate the forgiveness of Sanatanists, Christians and Mussalmans.

Young India, 24-4-1930
170. NECESSITY OF PURITY IN ACCOUNT-KEEPING

Simple people are in pure faith pouring in their copper, silver and paper coins into the bowls of volunteers who sell salt or otherwise collect money. No unauthorized volunteers should make collections or sell salt at fancy prices. Accounts should be accurately kept and frequently published. Books should be weekly examined by auditors. It will be well if monied men of proved honesty were to constitute themselves treasurers to take charge of and collect funds and work in full co-operation with Congress volunteers. Active workers are being quickly picked up and it may be difficult before long for local organizations to hold funds and keep proper accounts. As it is, the public have everywhere taken over the financing of the movement. Let it be done responsibly and methodically.

Young India, 24-4-1930

171. LIQUOR PICKETING

A Parsi correspondent writes as follows:¹

If there is negligible profit in liquor trade, the Parsis will leave it at once and join you gladly in all your undertakings. Can you find out any means and ways of making this profit of liquor shops negligible? It is a fact that these shop-keepers make a good profit by (a) short sale (b) adulteration, and keep the staff of the Excise Dept. well in hand by paying them their dues.

The only suggestion I can think of for stopping this middleman’s profit is to insist on Government to first introduce the ‘bottle system’, as is introduced in Indore and Gwalior States... The second point is that the liquor now distilled in Nasik is quite unfit for human consumption. They should distil liquor of one uniform strength (say 35° to 45°) and bottle it at Nasik and then distribute it for sale.

The third point I have to suggest is that it is rather difficult to introduce peaceful picketing of liquor shops. Why not open magic lantern shows or cinema shows in every big town and a few big villages and show such pictures to the public pointing out the harm and disadvantages of liquor? Such temperance movements will have better effect. Government cannot stop such shows and this will lead to temperance. . . .

¹ Only extracts are reproduced here.

This is a sincere letter. It is a frank admission that if the Parsis can be persuaded to give up the drink traffic, the solution of the drink problem, at least up to Bombay if not throughout India, becomes simple. But the remedy suggested by the correspondent will not answer the purpose. No matter what is done the traffic all the world over bears an immoral taint. The only true remedy is therefore prohibition. Even as thieving cannot be regulated save by prohibition so may drink traffic not be regulated save by prohibition.

There is no doubt danger of violence in picketing. Hence my appeal to the sisters of India to take charge of it. If only the educated few will shed their fear and disbelief the other sisters are sure to follow.

And as to the Parsi liquor dealers, surely it is not beyond the capacity of Parsi philanthropists to take them in hand and find for them a suitable employment. Parsi leaders can create an atmosphere against the traffic and thus make picketing easy. Anyway I should be surprised if during this wave of self-purification the traffic is not swept away. It needs but a little sustained effort on the part of the sisters. In six canteens of Ahmedabad frequented by the labouring population, thanks to the quiet picketing done by the Labour Union, the traffic has fallen to 19 per cent. Though I have not accurate figures as yet, the traffic in the area covered by Mithubai’s activity has also fallen considerably. And I know that in both these places picketing has been absolutely non-violent. Thousands in Surat are said to have voluntarily come forward to forswear drink.

The mention of Mithubai Petit reminds me of two other Parsis who are working in the same field. Dhanjishah known as Darbari Sadhu or Bhikshu or Sannyasi and who has now gone to jail under the Salt Act has been for years working in the village where I am writing these notes. It was partly in his honour that I decided to shift from Dandi to Karadi. The other is Baheram Mehta, a non-co-operating graduate. He was picked up by the police in Olpad, because he was respected and loved by the people. I need not mention the four grand-daughters of the G.O.M. who have been for years unassumingly serving the cause with a single-mindedness worthy of their noble-hearted grandfather. I can name several other Parsis who are also selflessly helping the cause. I have therefore every hope that the Parsi liquor dealers will themselves not repel the appeal of their sisters. The liquor traffic like the salt tax is doomed.

Young India, 24-4-1930
172. HOW TO DO THE PICKETING

1. At least ten women are required for picketing a liquor or foreign-cloth shop. They must choose a leader from among themselves.

2. They should all first go in a deputation to the dealer and appeal to him to desist from carrying on the traffic and present him with leaflets setting forth facts and figures regarding drink or foreign cloth as the case may be. Needless to say the leaflets should be in the language understood by the dealer.

3. If the dealer refuses to suspend traffic, the volunteers should guard the shop leaving the passage free and make a personal appeal to the would-be purchasers.

4. The volunteers should carry banners or light boards bearing warnings in bold letters against buying foreign cloth or indulging in intoxicating drinks, as the case may be.

5. Volunteers should be as far as possible in uniforms.

6. Volunteers should at frequent intervals sing suitable bhajans bearing on the subject.

7. Volunteers should prevent compulsion or interference by men.

8. On no account should vulgarity, abuse, threat or unbecoming language be used.

9. The appeal must always be to the head and the heart, never to fear of force.

10. Men should on no account congregate near the place of picketing nor block the traffic. But they should carry on propaganda generally through the area against foreign cloth and drink. They should help and organize processions of women to parade through the area carrying the message of temperance and khadi and the necessity of boycott of drink and foreign cloth.

11. There should be at the back of these picketing units a network of organization for spreading the message of the takli and the charkha and thinking out new leaflets and new lines of propaganda.

12. There should be an absolutely accurate and systematic account of all receipts and expenditure. This should be periodically audited. This again should be done by men under the supervision of women. The whole scheme presupposes on the part of men a genuine respect for women and sincere desire for their rise.

Young India, 24-4-1930
173. OUR MILLS AND FOREIGN-CLOTH BOYCOTT

Foreign-cloth boycott is coming, if we will do our duty and tax ourselves to understand its purpose and the conditions of success. I must not at present adduce reasons for the propositions set forth below. They have been often argued in these columns. I am having the figures prepared for reproduction. But for the present I give my conclusions for those who are interested in them. They are arrived at dispassionately and after due consideration of every factor and every argument for and against.

1. It is impossible for the indigenous mills to cope with the deficiency to be created by a complete boycott within the time we expect it to come to fruition.

2. All the mills situated in India are not swadeshi; some of them are as foreign as the foreign Government inasmuch as they drain the wealth of the country away from it. They are close preserves for Europeans only employing Indian labour.

3. The majority of swadeshi mills will not work for the national benefit only or even predominantly.

4. Even when they will, they can be crushed by the Government in a variety of ways.

5. The majority will not resist the temptation to exploit the present favourable times.

6. Many mills use foreign yarn for weaving, especially for borders.

7. We can only use them by not counting upon them to replace the cloth boycotted and by putting them upon their own resources and honour.

8. This last we can do only if we can replace the cloth boycotted through cloth not manufactured in our mills. This can only be khadi.

9. An unlimited quantity of khadi can be manufactured without the slightest difficulty inside of one month if the spirit of khadi and the will to manufacture it can be created.

10. Skilled weavers are to be found all over India. The only problem therefore is that of spinning.

11. Spinning and the antecedent processes can be learnt inside of one week by those who have the will and the industry.
12. India produces more than enough cotton for all her requirements.

13. Therefore all those who work for boycott of foreign cloth should concentrate on khadi production through spinning. This does not mean boycott of swadeshi mill-cloth but it means an intelligent recognition of the fact that the mills do not need any effort for selling their cloth. The boycott movement sufficiently helps them by removing foreign cloth which competes with them and stifles them as it had suppressed the spinning-wheel. To do more for the mills than procure boycott of foreign cloth will be to harm khadi.

Mill-owners can, if they will, help boycott through khadi by publishing the list of those mills which are owned, controlled and managed by Indians, which use no foreign yarn at all in weaving, and which will not manufacture cloth corresponding to khadi, will not use the name khadi or the wheel on their labels and will not inflate prices.

I am convinced that those who merely carry on boycott propaganda without insisting on boycotters contributing towards khadi production by themselves spinning or procuring spinners and who talk loosely of swadeshi, retard the boycott movement if they do not actually harm it. Boycotters must not stray away from their path even though for the moment they are unable to satisfy the demand for khadi. Let them know that that very moment is the one most propitious for khadi production. Necessity is the mother of invention. It knows no law, for it invents new laws. They need not worry if people refuse to give up foreign cloth if they are also called upon to spin. This restraint will truly push forward the boycott movement. It is no empty formula. Just as we want swaraj not to punish Englishmen but because we cannot live without it, so also we need boycott of foreign cloth not to punish Englishmen but to bring work and therefore food through the wheel to the starving millions.

Young India, 24-4-1930
174. BOYCOTT THROUGH TAKLI

Dr. Pattabhi Sitaramayya, having been for years interested in co-operative banking and being a khadi expert in Andhra, may be presumed to know his figures. He makes the calculation that five million charkhas working for five hours daily can spin enough yarn to replace the whole of foreign cloth to be boycotted. He thinks that there are already that number of wheels lying in India’s homes. But we will take some time to unearth these wheels and make them work. New wheels we cannot make fast enough to meet the demand that a spinning atmosphere will create. The wheel will again require some capital, be it ever so little. When we think of crores of people, even the capital of one rupee per head mounts up to crores. We want to work with as little capital as possible. We want to teach spinning to the largest number available as quickly as possible. This can be done only through the takli. If the average output of a wheel be 300 yards per hour, that of the takli will be 100. Therefore to manufacture the amount of yarn that five million wheels will spin, we require taklis to work. And if the workers would spin not five but only fifteen million one hour, we need seventy-five million taklis to work. Seventy-five million is one fourth the total population of India.

Our disbelief makes our heads turn giddy to think of eight crores of people working for one hour per day for the nation. But if there be true national consciousness there is nothing extraordinary about one in every four inhabitants of India giving one hour per day as the price of deliverance.

Be that as it may, let workers take up the takli in faith. Let them not think of the steel takli which was invented by Maganlal Gandhi for the city people. If there was an immediate demand for eight crores of steel taklis, the cost would amount to a respectable sum, and the time required to manufacture so many would also be fairly long. We must therefore dismiss the steel takli from our minds. Taklis can be made from split bamboos and broken tiles or bad coins the size or weight of a half-anna piece. A pointed sharp knife is the only tool absolutely necessary. The point is required to bore a hole. Here are full instructions:

HOW TO MAKE A TAKLI

1. Take a broken Mangalore tile or slate or the like and make out of it a disk the size of a pice. This can be done by gently breaking the edges and rounding them on a rough surface.

2. Punch a straight hole in it, make it slightly larger on one side.

3. Take a well-dried bamboo splinter seven inches in length.
Smooth it round with a knife to the thickness of a pencil. Sharpen it from one end so as to taper it to a point the thickness of a knitting needle. Half an inch from the tapering end, make a little notch to hold the thread.

4. Insert the length so made into the side of the disk with larger circumference to the hole so as to leave half an inch at the thick end.

5. Test the takli by revolving it on a flat surface. If it spins like a top it is true. If it does not, you know that either the hole is not straight or is not in the centre of the disk or the tapering of the splinter is not even. It is easy to detect the error and to correct it.

The highest output of the takli after a week’s practice has been found to be 110 yards per hour. And it takes about half an hour to make such a takli.

This takli-making is a pleasant pastime. Spinning is a positive recreation. It is the solace of the perturbed heart and a mute comppanion. The wheel sings to you and may therefore distract your attention. The takli is eloquent in its very muteness, and in that way is perhaps a fitter representative of the dumb millions. Try it and you will experience the same joy that many of us do. In any case he or she who spins adds to the wealth of the country and hastens the boycott movement and thus brings swaraj nearer.

Young India, 24-4-1930
175. FOREIGN-CLOTH DEALERS

I have given my opinion to the Press representatives on the question of foreign-cloth boycott. The nervousness of the dealers is a symptom of want of faith in the country. Why do they want terms and time if they are sure that swaraj is coming in the near future? Why will they not come in unconditionally and make it a greater certainty? All this uncertainty instead of strengthening the swaraj atmosphere, weakens it and fills peoples’ minds with doubts. This movement is largely based on faith. There is nothing organically wrong with us to make us unfit for swaraj. It is our hallucination that makes us—a nation of three hundred millions—feel helpless and diffident. Let not the foreign-cloth merchants strengthen the hallucination by indefinite statements. Let them rid themselves of it and help others to do likewise. If they cannot do so, let them not ask for terms but bravely say that they will not stop their foreign-cloth trade.

To the weak and the unbelieving I make a tangible suggestion. Let them cancel all unexecuted orders. If swaraj is not attained and if they want to revert to their old occupation, no power can prevent them. Let them lock up their existing stock unless they can sell it outside India and let those who are poor rely upon the swaraj Government giving them such compensation as may be necessary. But they should make an inventory of their stock and have it certified by authorized volunteers. The wealthy merchants may not expect any compensation. The loss they may suffer will be part penance for the sin committed against the nation. Lastly, though the last is a bad suggestion, if they have no faith in the country getting swaraj, let them keep their stock and begin selling it when the popular movement has died of inanition or been suppressed by force. God forbid however that the present enthusiasm is a mere bubble or that it is capable of suppression under the severest repression. I hope therefore that whatever the result of the movement, the foreign-cloth dealers will see clearly that the terms suggested by them are harmful to the cause and that there is ample protection for them without the terms. Let them be patriotic enough to rise to the occasion and render picketing unnecessary by stopping the sale of foreign cloth of their own motion.

Young India, 24-4-1930
176. SALAAMING OR FLOGGING?

Shri Haribhau Upadhyaya writes from Ajmer:

If what Shri Haribhau says is true there is plenty of scope for satyagraha in the jail. Normally it is proper for a prisoner to salaam the jailor, but if a satyagrahi does not salaam he should not be forced. If therefore force is used against someone for not salaaming it may become the duty of others also to refuse to salaam.

It is surprising that the concessions provided in several other jails to satyagrahis have been denied to satyagrahis in this jail. In my opinion of course satyagrahi prisoners should be treated the same as other prisoners. But if a satyagrahi is treated in a particular way all other satyagrahis should be similarly treated. So far as the Congress is concerned there is no difference between Pathikji or Nrisinhdasji and the President. But how can one expect justice and fair play from this Government?

[From Hindi]

_Hindi Navajivan, 24-4-1930_

---

1 The letter is not translated. The correspondent had said that a satyagrahi, Baba Nrisinhdas, had been placed in solitary confinement for refusing to salaam the jail officials and might even be flogged.
177. INTERVIEW TO “THE HINDU”

Karadi,
April 24, 1930

I broke the news of Mr. Prakasam’s arrest and Dr. Pattabhi’s sentence.
Yes, all prominent men are being taken away and the number is increasing.
All of you will remain free outside.
Gandhiji added after a while bursting into laughter once again, referring to Press reporters in general. I pointed out that the Government did not appear intent on touching him at present and therefore he would also be free.
Yes, I am also a journalist. We all journalists will be free.
The conversation turned to the contemplated “No Tax” campaign in Raas. Gandhiji was of the opinion that he must not come in their way if the people were ready and confident about success. He declared:
Of course, they have thought of starting after informing me and I gave my permission but they must be able to conduct the campaign themselves. If they are prepared let them do it.
The Hindu, 25-4-1930

178. LETTER TO REGINALD REYNOLDS

11 p.m., April 24, 1930

MY DEAR REYNOLDS,

Just one line.
How will you fare about Young India now that Mahadev is off?
I hope you are well both in mind and body.
Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: C.W. 4535. Courtesy: Swarthmore College, Philadelphia
179. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

April 24, 1930

CHI. MATHURADAS,

I have received your two letters. Kevalram Bhimji has gone there. He is staying at the Ashram. He is an absolutely pure man. He is honest and frank. He gave up his business and came here. His wife came too. I have now sent him back. He can be used for the accounts. If he has not already met you, please trace him. His address can certainly be ascertained from the Zandu Pharmacy. I shall be at Bardoli on Sunday. Let Nagarajan come there, I shall reach Bardoli in the morning and leave in the evening.

Mahadev had become too active. How could they fail to arrest him? Now he will get some rest.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

When you see Jamnalal, tell him I know that he and others will come out better qualified.

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

---

1 Mahadev Desai was arrested on April 24 at Ahmedabad.
2 Jamnalal Bajaj had been sentenced to two years' rigorous imprisonment.
180. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

[After April 24, 1930]¹

I have your letter only just now with the post that brings me the news about Mahadev.

Yes, you may take up the khadi work with Chhotelal. Ask Balkoba to write to me. He must take milk and fruit.

I am conceiving the last move² that must compel decisive action. But it is all in God’s hands.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5385. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 5385

181. LETTER TO DOROTHY D’SEUA

CAMP KARADI,
April 25, 1930

DEAR LITTLE FRIEND,

Don’t you be afraid of the doings of the processionists. They mean no harm to you whatsoever and if you believe in God why should you fear anything or anybody. However I shall do whatever may be necessary.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

MISS DOROTHY D’SEUA
NO. 47 GOUGH ROAD
AGRA (U. P.)

From a photostat: G.N. 1369

¹ The “news about Mahadev” presumably refers to his arrest on April 24 at Ahmedabad.
² The reference presumably is to the proposed raid on Dharasana Salt Depot; vide “Letter to Viceroy”, 4-5-1930.
182. LETTER TO ABBAS TYABJI

April 25, 1930

MY DEAR WHITE BEARD,

Here is Manibehn also coming to you. This accession must delight your heart and Raojibhai and Co.’s. Let her be used unsparingly to wake up the women of Kheda.

Hamida1 is working wonders in Olpad. She is a chip of the old block. God bless her.

Love.

M. K. G.

From a photostat: S.N. 9571

183. LETTER TO KAZI NIZAMUDDIN AHMED

CAMP KARADI,
April 25, 1930

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter giving me full information about the progress of the campaign in Meerut. I hope all the prisoners are doing well. Please keep me informed from time to time.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

KAZI NIZAMUDDIN AHMED
PRESIDENT
DIST. CONGRESS COMMITTEE
MEERUT

From a photostat: G.N. 10855

1 Grand-daughter of Abbas Tyabji
Of course you have my blessings. Though I see that you had no choice but to get on the lorry, in my view you did commit an error. I am pointing it out in fact for the benefit of others, but let my criticism be for your benefit too. There was no need to forfeit the vehicle. I had thought that you would devise a method of carrying the salt by stages as they used to do in carrying Ganga water, and had very much liked the idea. Suppose that we have a camp of twenty-five men at every five miles or so. A batch of twenty-five, each man starting with five seers, would mean three maunds and five seers. The first batch would hand over the stock at the second camp and stay there. The second batch would deliver the stock at the third camp and return to its camp, after which the first batch would proceed to Dholera. This would have provided very good training and it would have been easy to protect the salt. There was nothing to lose in this arrangement. The method which you followed involved the possibility of losing the cart and the certainty of losing the lorry. Moreover, it required your hiding something, and the success of your plan depended on your ability to do so. We should, of course, have nothing to hide. Any method in which we have to hide something requires the cunning needed in the ordinary kind of war, which we ought not to practise. Moreover, for taking possession of the salt carried in a lorry, the police would be required to use much greater force. We should not needlessly compel them to do so. Hence, though your plan certainly required much courage and no less intelligence, it was not based on perfect non-violence. But in the prevailing atmosphere, I do not think you would have realized this by yourself. Who knows where I myself may be going wrong? All I can say is that I never take a single step without thinking carefully and that I get time to do that. My thinking nowadays takes the form exclusively of prayer. I do not use my reason, but look into my heart.

Swami’s idea of lifting salt from Bhayander would also have involved a similar error. Dharasana is very near from where I am but I do not let anyone approach even that. When it is ultimately decided to attempt to seize the stocks there, a pilgrim party will start for the purpose, after giving public notice of its intention.

Please do not blame yourself or feel sorry for what you have done because of my criticism. I have written this only to help you in jail to think and understand the fine and subtle aspects of non-violence and as guidance for the future to Kaka, Narahari and others. But in any case it is good that you have been arrested. You would have had no opportunity of facing bullets and on account of excessive work you would probably have fallen ill. By the time you come out, some thousands will have lost their lives. What grace of God to the few chosen ones that they will be automatically saved. Those who die and those who survive, both classes of persons should be regarded as equally blessed. We need not believe that he alone is blessed, or more so, who gets killed.

Personally I do feel, after the incidents at Peshawar and Chittagong, that there are bound to be two or more big massacres of innocent people. Or it may be that they would deliberately and firmly put the innocent behind the bars. In Karachi at any rate, only the innocent were killed or wounded. The truth is that even the Government does not know where it stands and what it wants to do. What is happening is something quite new for it and for the whole world. Now take good rest. Make a takli of wood and spin on it as much as you can. Khadi stocks have been exhausted. Ask other prisoners also to spin.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9858
185. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

April 25, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS,

Obtain the salt for the Ashram from the Provincial Committee. Write to me if it is not available there or from any other source in Ahmedabad.

Consult Imam Saheb about selling the salt.

Where has Sharjabehn sent her daughter?

I will write to Khushalbhai. I have received no request from Orissa for women workers. If you cannot send Sonamani and others, let them remain and get more training.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Bhai Bhansali wants work. In any case he wants to be permitted to take up the night watch. Give him any work you think proper. He may do even sanitary work.

From Gujarati: C.W. 8105. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi
186. LETTER TO JAMNADAS GANDHI

April 25, 1930

CHI. JAMNADAS,

I got your letter. It was not necessary to send the wire. I believe that at any rate Khushalbhai will not be arrested. It would be a fine thing if he was accompanied by a batch of men. He should think about one thing. Perhaps they will stop his pension for participating in civil disobedience. Personally I think it would be good if they did so. The more injustice they do, the sooner will it end. If, however, he has not the courage to forgo the encumbrance that this pension is, he should give up the idea of civil disobedience, though I have no doubt at all that, in the present circumstances, civil disobedience has become the supreme religious duty. He should not detrain at Viramgam, but proceed further to Lakhtar or to any other place which has a camp. He may stay there as long as he feels inclined and then return home. He may afterwards offer civil disobedience when an opportunity occurs and, if circumstances arise anywhere, should even go and face bullets. In brief, he should be ready for everything. He should do this only if Devbhabhi agrees. If not, it is enough for me that all of us have his blessings. You may come to see me whenever you wish to.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9308. Courtesy: Jamnadas Gandhi 187. LETTER TO KHUSHALCHAND GANDHI

April 25, 1930

MU. KHUSHALBHAI,

The very old people are also joining this fight. Kashi’s revered mother is eager to join it. Just now, the fight has taken a purely religious form. Even the most eminent persons having faith in ahimsa have joined it and are in jail. Would not both of you, on an occasion like this, make the fullest sacrifice and thereby uphold the principle of ahimsa? If you do so, the place which Tulsidas has had in our family would have been fully justified.

Respectful prostration by

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33923

188. SPEECH AT PANNAR

April 25, 1930

Gandhiji asked villagers to prepare themselves to go to jail but they should remember their fight was non-violent. They should not lift their little finger against the police even if they were assaulted.

Men like Pandit Motilal and his wife, who had grown old in the service of country had plunged into the fight. Why then should they stand back, asked the Mahatma.

Gandhiji referred to the police zulum and cruelties practised in some quarters under the law. The police had no right to use force even against prisoners. He condemned police atrocities and said their action was indefensible. But this should not deter the maintenance of the non-violent character of the struggle.

Gandhiji next exhorted the villagers to spin and weave their own cloth. They should not depend on outside villagers for the supply of cloth.

His message to students was to spin at least a tola of yarn per day. Prohibition, he said, was equally important. Liquor and foreign cloth drained India of 1 Gandhiji read out a letter from Mahadev Desai in which, describing his own arrest, he had written that young Gujarati graduates had courted arrest with him while accompanying lorries of contraband salt.

crores of rupees.

Gandhiji asked if the village Headman had resigned. A khaddar-clad villager got up and said, long ago he had done so. He asked the parents to withdraw students from the Government-aided schools and start a National school. They should have nothing to do with the British Government. The village leader announced that 500 khajur trees had been cut down and the village had declared social boycott of Government officials.

That is good, but you must also boycott foreign cloth vigorously.

_The Bombay Chronicle, 26-4-1930_

189. LETTER TO A. SUBBA RAO

April 26, 1930

DEAR FRIEND,

You should not join C.D.¹ but confine yourself to carding and the spinning-wheel.

Yours,

M. K. GANDHI

SJT. A. SUBBA RAO,

RAZAVARAM ATREYAPURAM

Via KOTHPETI, E. GODAVARI DIST.

From the original: C.W. 9286. Courtesy: A. Subba Rao

190. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

April 26, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS,

I think I shall be arrested in about eight or ten days.

After I know the names of the women who have been selected by Khurshedbehn and who agree to go with her, I will think about the remaining. The more the women who go with Khurshedbehn the better. She is an extremely pure woman. Is Sarojinidevi of any service?

¹ Seeking Gandhiji’s advice the addressee had written that he wanted to join the civil disobedience movement but his aged parents did not allow him to do so.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
I have written to Anjanadevi and told her that she should go with Ramnarayan.

From Gujarati: C.W. 8106. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

191. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI
April 26, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS,

Moulvi Syed Rauf Pasha is a professor in Colombo. He is coming to see the Ashram and may stay there for a few days. Look after him and introduce him to Imam Saheb and Mirabehn.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8107. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

192. LETTER TO MAHALAKSHMI M. THAKKAR
April 26, 1930

CHI. MAHALAKSHMI,

I got your letter. You certainly need not change your diet. You should continue to live on milk and fruit. I only wrote to Tarabehn and told her that if you did not get fruit at the place where it was proposed that you should go, there would be a problem. I therefore dropped the idea of sending you with her. I will certainly put you in circumstances in which you will remain in contact with an experienced woman who can teach you things. Most probably I shall go there tonight, and I will further talk with you then. Do not worry at all.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6796
193. SPEECH AT AMBHETI

April 26, 1930

“Court death: serve your country” was the gist of the Mahatma’s message.

He said he had visited the aged mother of Vithaldas, not to express sorrow but to congratulate her for giving her son to the cause of the country. Every mother must give her son to serve the country. Vithaldas had not really died, but lived in the memory of his country for ever. Many would have to die to liberate India.

The moment they ceased to fear death swaraj was near. They should prepare for death when fighting Government which had resorted to excesses.

He appealed to the people to continue the unfinished work of Vithaldas, by uprooting every khajoor tree in the village and by completely giving up drinking.

The Bombay Chronicle, 28-4-1930

194. SPEECH AT BULSAR

April 26, 1930

I was here at Bulsar only a few days ago. If you had done some special work since and called me here to have a view of it, my visit would have been worth while. But neither you nor the Government has done any such thing. Ramniklal Modi was with me on the Dandi March. The Government conferred upon him the distinction of sending him to jail. You called me here to celebrate the occasion. But what is there to celebrate in that? Only a year for a co-worker of mine! This time we are playing a more serious game. Jail is now a familiar thing to us and its hardships are no hardships. Even women and children ask to go to jail as if it was some tasty dish. In a word, we have given up the fear of jail. People have realized that to go to jail is to share in the struggle for swaraj. I welcome all this, but I attach no value now to jail-going. I feel no exhilaration when I hear that some co-worker of mine was sentenced to one year or two years, or, for that matter, even five years. It would exhilarate me to hear that a co-worker like Jairamdas was shot dead or that another co-worker, of an equally spotless character, had had his skull broken. The Government’s actions so far proclaim to us, ‘We shall break your heads, but will not repeal the salt tax.’ Our answer to the Government is, ‘We are willing to offer you as many heads as you want, but do please remove the salt tax.’ If Ramniklal had made an offering of his head and a patch of Bulsar land had been besmeared with his blood, then you would have been justified in asking me to come. But Ramniklal has displayed no such heroism, nor has the Government. Such heroism is being displayed at Anand and at Dehwan. There volunteers were beaten up in the night and, so that the police might enjoy beating them, lights were put out. If they call me there, I would immediately go. That is an occasion worth celebrating. By all means ask me to come here when you have such an occasion. Whether such an occasion will come is in the hands of you brothers and sisters of Bulsar.

The Headmen of your villages are still clinging to their posts. But I am not interested in their announcing their resignations. Their resigning and their clinging to their posts exposes us to ridicule. If any Headmen are present here, I beseech them to withdraw the resignations rather than expose us to ridicule. If there are none here, the local workers should convey my request to them. The Bulsar Municipality has still not dug a well for the Bhangis of the place. If you do not get a contractor for the work, give me the contract. The people of Bulsar should take a vow that as long as the Bhangis are not given water, they too will draw no water. Entrust the administration of Bulsar to me for a day, and I will show you if this cannot be done. If you cannot do this much, take it from me that you will not win swaraj for Bulsar. This is said to be a civilized town. Toddy worth Rs. 45,000 is sold here. I must admit that this is a mark of civilization. At the same time, let me respectfully submit this also that your civilized town ought not to have invited at such a time a man like me, a man who is impatient to secure swaraj, to get the salt tax abolished and to end the Government’s barbarity.

What have you done to stop the consumption of liquor? At least the women here are civilized, not in the sense I have just mentioned though! They sing in such a sweet voice. If they sang their beautiful bhajans to people given to drinking, it could have an excellent effect. Our sisters in Olpad and Jalalpur talukas and in Surat have in this way brought about very good results. The question which worries the
The owners of liquor booths is how they would live if their business stopped. People should go to them and offer to find for them other trades if the drink trade is given up. At Karadi yesterday, four Parsi brethren came to see me. They said, “Only two months are now left. Permit us to continue our business for that period.” After joking with them for a while I said, “Now when the whole country is swept by a wave of awakening, shall I for the sake of your trade entreat the people not to give up toddy?” They said, “No, but why should there be picketing?” “If picketing makes the drink addicts feel ashamed of themselves and they turn away from the shops, why should I not do it?” I said. Then I asked them if any of the women pickets exercised coercion on them or the addicts. They admitted that they would not say that.

Picketing is done everywhere by women only, and that gives good results. If all the women present here work in that spirit, they can get all liquor shops closed in twenty-four hours. No man, however bad a drunkard, can remain unmoved by the loving appeal of you sisters. Go to the addicts and humbly tell them, ‘Brothers, why do you do this?’ When you appeal to them in this way, the addicts will reform themselves and so too will the owners of the booths. People do not want to be coerced, but, when you bathe them in your love, their love for liquor will dry up. The Bhagavad Gita says that a fasting man’s craving for sense objects diminishes but his instinctive pleasure in them does not disappear. It disappears only when God’s grace descends on him. And your love is that divine grace. I have no doubt that it will dry up the drunkard’s pleasure in drinking. If you do really mean to achieve something positive, see that the liquor and toddy booths in your place are closed and the toddy palms uprooted from everywhere.

I have been told that your city has 100 taklis and 7 spinning-wheels. That is not enough to accomplish the boycott of foreign cloth. The takli should be plying in every home. I cannot of course provide spinning-wheels for you all. Even if some benevolent carpenter of Bulsar came forward, he too would find the task impossible. But taklis you can make for yourselves. If you cannot make a hole in a pice you may use broken pieces of children’s slates, or even potsherds. If you are hoping that I will get you khadi from Bombay and make you wear it, it is not going to happen. Khadi stocks in Bombay are already exhausted. If you want to wear khadi you must ply the takli.

You may break the salt law, but that by itself will not get you swaraj. It will no doubt bring about repeal of the law. But if you want swaraj you will have to die for it—of course not in the way they died at Chittagong. That way swaraj would take four months when it could be won in four days. And I do not know when it will be actually won. But what shall we call this beating of innocent workers at night? Is it goonda raj? It looks as if it was. There is nothing but goondaism in all the accounts that reach me. The mavalis are after all ignorant men, and we may endure their methods, but how can we tolerate this goonda rule? All of you men and women who have gathered here, if you have met to do something and not merely to witness a show, resolve here and now that you will not suffer this goonda reign, that your answer to all laws that offend against morality will be civil disobedience. We do not wish to follow the path that Chittagong took. The more the suffering inflicted on us, the more of it shall we invite.

You are all civilized people and you should take it that though I have said little I have said a good deal. And do kindly act upon it. They have taken from your shores a good man like Ramniklal. He is a good man and given to tapascharya. The imprisonment of such a pure man has indeed brought swaraj a little nearer. Now it is up to you to prove that you deserve workers like Ramniklal, Mohanlal Pandya, Ishwarlal and Nichhabhai.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 4-5-1930
195. SPEECH AT CHHARWADA

April 26, 1930

People have conferred on me the title of salt-thief as a substitute for Mahatma. I like it. But it is no easy thing to be a salt-thief, while it is easy enough to be a Mahatma. If one makes a fuss of eating and drinking and wears a langoti, one can easily acquire the title of Mahatma in this country. In a little while I shall go with you and get some salt from the nearby creek. We shall not get pure salt, as the benign Government has had it all mixed with earth. Anyway, we shall take what we can find. But when can we be called thieves? Only when we are punished for theft. What kind of theft is it which no one even so much as takes notice of? We shall pick up a little dust. It may well be considered theft under the law, but the world will not take it as such nor will the Government. It will be real theft when you have your hands broken in committing it. Though we shall be collecting salt, possibly neither you nor I will have our hands broken.

It will be real theft only when we raid those mounds of salt over there. When I went to Untadi, I saw them from a distance and thought them quite beautiful. Having a near view today, I find them dirty and ugly. Let them be what they are, we shall be real salt-thieves only when we lay hands on them and have our hands and wrists broken or get thrown into jails.

I would even ask you not to confer the dearly bought title of salt-thief on everyone who merely goes to jail. You do not have your ribs smashed in going to jail. Just now I had a letter informing me that in the Kheda district some people were beaten. They were all respected public workers. Those who had beaten them were Government functionaries but they too were our own men. In order that they might enjoy the beating better, they even put out the light. Six or seven men are now in hospital undergoing treatment. None of them is likely to die, but, if anyone should, we would call him a true leader of salt-thieves. You will of course come with me to take salt from the creek here, but you will not thereby earn the title of salt-thieves. Yes, we may be said to be candidates for that title. When we have committed real theft of salt, there will no longer be any salt-thieves at all. For the Government will then say to us: ‘You all refuse to obey the salt law. Very well then. All those salt dunes are your property from now on.’ That property is not worth even seven crores of rupees. That amount we pay direct. If we add to it the expenditure involved in collecting the sum, we save 20 crores. How can the Government persuade itself to forgo such a large amount? At present we have in the country thousands and even hundreds of thousands of volunteers who are ready to steal salt. But would that be enough to make the Government let go such a large income? Before it does so it will wound a good many, even kill some of them. However, after it has done its worst even this tyrannical Government will have no escape from having to give up the income. When that stage is reached, then alone will you have the right to call me a salt-thief and I the right to be so called.

For the present, however, Mahadev has proved himself a greater salt-thief than I. Since Sardar was taken away, he has not had a single moment’s rest. The Police Superintendent on his part was not very eager to arrest him. He saw that so long as he was free he would at least provide the authorities correct information. But what was he to do? Just as men were bringing from Dholera a motor lorry full of salt, Mahadev jumped onto it. But I am unwilling to call even him a salt-thief though he was arrested for the act. I have written to him to say: “It is well that you have been imprisoned, but your duty was to die for the cause.” It was good that at Anand some had their arms and skulls broken. What trouble can there be in jail—and A class at that? What is wanting for the saheb? There is more to eat and drink than at the Ashram. One cooks for you, another fetches water and a third will wash your dhoti for you. Are these the marks of a prisoner? When men like Mahadev and Jairamdas have their heads bleeding and their clothes beautifully splattered with fresh warm blood, then, from some corner or other of the world human pity cannot but spring forth. Surely, there must be God somewhere? When blood flows from heads not only will the salt tax go but many more things will also be washed away into the sea. And then our numerous sins will disappear under the earth as this salt heap before us is covered with it.

You may call me a salt-thief but only when we take possession of the salt-beds of Dharasana. What is there in picking a seer or two of salt from here and there? Even the Government must be wondering what a childish game we are playing. If you mean to play the real game, come out and loot the salt-sheds of Dharasana, or Bhayander, or Kharaghoda. The game we are now playing is, I admit, a children’s game, but from that one day we will proceed to serious business. And on the day the real game begins, I invite you all, brothers and sisters of Chharwada and Dharasana to join me in the fun. But the day is not yet. When an account of the Dharasana raid is being recorded what will you, the immediate neighbours of these salt-beds, have to say about your part? Will you have it recorded that you ran away at the time or that you bared your bosoms and remained? We will not be angry with those who put out the light and beat the volunteers, nor will we abuse them. We want to follow a different rule of justice. Do you remember the saying: “Offer a finger and the wrist is bitten”? If these Government men seize our finger, We will offer the wrist and if they seize the wrist, we will offer the shoulder; and if they seize the shoulder we will offer our very neck. Now that they have started beating our volunteers, let us plan a campaign so that we invite all the beating on our heads.

But whatever we do should be above reproach. I did not like at all what happened in Peshawar. If the reins of Government fall into the hands of such persons, will they not rule in the same way? Will they not break the heads of the poor? I want every head in the country to be well-protected. Even a small girl should be able to move about safely in any part of India. Our struggle is for self-purification and I wish you all to become pure. It is impossible that you should be able to carry out a raid on Dharasana salt-beds wearing those black caps or foreign saris. In any case, for my part at least, I would not let you accompany me. When you all come out for the raid, each should be wearing khadi; if enough khadi is not available, you will wear only a khadi langoti. Today you may all come with me as candidates to be salt-thieves, but when I come again for a raid, I will have with me none who does not wear khadi and who is not plying a takli at the time. I should indeed like all of you to join me. But if you have not carried out the programme of self-purification by then, I shall not hesitate to go alone.

Do not tell me that khadi is not available. Get a takli and spin on it. Send yarn as well as money to pay for the weaving. Then I undertake to supply you khadi. If you do not pay weaving charges you will get so much less khadi. If this is done there will be no shortage of khadi. I have entrusted this work to our sisters. Men, by making salt, will save Rs. 7 crores, but women, if they are proficient in the work, will be able to save Rs. 60 crores.
I have been telling you about the Dharasana raid. Do not think it will be two or three years before the raid takes place. An old man like me, past sixty years of age and nearing death, cannot speak in terms of years. I can speak only in terms of a few months, and, if you give me your co-operation, a few days. But why should I come here if I find that the people of Dharasana are liars, drunkards and debauchees? If I did come even then I would fight for salt with the help of other men, not with your help.

I have made it clear to you that only if you wear khadi and give up liquor will I let you join me in the raid on the Dharasana salt-beds. If you do not fulfil the condition and still insist on coming, I will offer satyagraha against you. I shall offer satyagraha against you as I would offer it against the bayonets of policemen. I do not wish to take possession of Dharasana salt with the help of drunkards or of people who wear foreign cloth. I will do that with the help only of the pure and spotless. The volunteers who are present here should go from house to house and carry this message of mine to the people. I shall be content if people stay at home but I will not tolerate their interfering in my work without fulfilling the conditions I have mentioned. If you do not like that, you are free to abandon me. You may give me no food, not even a glass of water to drink. I know how to carry out the raid on a hungry stomach. I will be here again in a week or two; and if you have not done by that time what I have asked you to do, you may stay away and sing bhajans. Rather, I would shun the bhajans and shouts of ‘Jai’ coming from such people.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 4-5-1930
196. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

[Before April 27, 1930]

CHI. MATHURADAS,

I have your letter. You are right that we should not have any secret dealings. Let them get at the money any time they choose.

I shall write to Taramati about her brother. Let us see what happens about the mills.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

197. MESSAGE TO AMERICA

[Before April 27, 1930]

The national demand is not for immediate establishment of Independence, but is a preliminary step to a conference, that must take place if Independence is to be established peacefully, to remove certain prime grievances, chiefly economic and moral. These are set forth in the clearest possible terms in my letter, miscalled an ultimatum to the Viceroy. Those grievances include the salt tax, which in its incidence falls with equal pressure upon rich as well as poor and is over 1,000 per cent of the cost price. Having been made a monopoly, it has deprived tens of thousands of people of their supplementary occupation and the artificially heavy cost of salt has made it very difficult, if not impossible, for poor people to give enough salt to their cattle and to their land.

This unnatural monopoly is sustained by laws, which are only so-called, but which are a denial of law. They give arbitrary powers to police, known to be corrupt, to lay their hands without warrant on innocent people, to confiscate their property and otherwise molest them in a hundred ways. Civil resistance against the laws has caught the popular imagination as nothing else has within my experience. Hundreds of thousands of people, including women or children from

---

1 From the reference to Gandhiji’s writing to Taramati
2 This appeared in The Sunday Times, 27-4-1930.
many villages, have participated in the open manufacture and sale of contraband salt.

This resistance has been answered by barbarous and unmanly repressions. Instead of arresting people the authorities have violated the persons of people who have refused to part with salt, held generally in their fists. To open their fists, their knuckles have been broken, their necks have been pressed, they have been even indecently assaulted till they have been rendered senseless. Some of these assaults have taken place in the presence of hundreds and thousands of people, who, although well able to protect the victims and retaliate, being under a pledge of non-violence, have not done so. It is true that violence has broken out in Calcutta, Karachi, Chittagong, and now Peshawar. The Calcutta and Karachi events should be isolated from those at Chittagong and Peshawar. The Calcutta and Karachi incidents were an impulsive outburst on the arrest of popular leaders. The Chittagong and Peshawar incidents though also caused for the same reason, seem to have been serious and well-planned affairs, though wholly unconnected with each other, Chittagong being in the extreme east and Peshawar being in the north-west border of India.

These disturbances have so far not affected other parts of India, where civil disobedience has been going on in an organized fashion and on a mass scale since the 6th instant. People in other parts have remained non-violent in spite of great provocation. At the same time, I admit that there is need for caution but I can say without the least hesitation that, consistently with the plan of civil disobedience, every precaution conceivable is being taken to prevent civil disobedience from being used as an occasion for doing violence. It should be noted that in Karachi, 7 wounded persons of whom 2 have died of their wounds, were volunteers engaged in keeping the peace and restraining mob fury. It is the opinion of eye-witnesses that the firing in Karachi was wholly unjustified and that there was no firing in the air or at the legs in the first instance.

In fact, the Government have lost no opportunity of incensing people. Many of the best and purest and the most self-sacrificing leaders have been arrested and imprisoned, in many instances with mock trials. Sentences, though, for the same offence, have varied with the idiosyncrasies of the magistrates. In several instances they have been for more than 12 months with hard labour on well-known citizens. The enthusiasm of the people has up to now increased with every conviction. Thousands of people regard the manufacture of contraband salt as part of their daily routine. In any other part of the world with a Government at all responsible to public opinion, the salt tax would have been repealed long since, but whether now or later, repealed it will be, if the present existing atmosphere of resistance abides as it promises to do.

That this is a movement of self-purification is abundantly proved by the fact that women have come into it in large numbers and are organizing the picketing of liquor shops. Thousands have taken vows to abstain from intoxicating liquor. In Ahmedabad, a strong labour centre, receipts of canteens have dropped to 19 per cent and are still dropping. A similar manifestation is taking place in the district of Surat. Women have also taken up the question of boycott of foreign cloth. It is spreading all over India. People are making bonfires of foreign cloth in their possession. Khadi, i.e., hand-spun cloth, is so much in demand that the existing stock is well-nigh exhausted. The spinning-wheel is much in demand and people are beginning to realize more and more the necessity of reviving hand-spinning in the cottages of 700,000 villages of India. In my humble opinion, a struggle so free from violence has a message far beyond the borders of India. I have no manner of doubt that after all the sacrifice that has already been made since April 6, the spirit of the people will be sustained throughout till India has become independent and free to make her contribution to the progress of humanity.

M. K. GANDHI

_The Modern Review, June 1930_
YOUR EXCELLENCY,

We, the undersigned women of Gujarat, have come to the conclusion that we may not keep ourselves aloof from the great national upheaval that is taking place. We are in full sympathy with the civil disobedience campaign in respect of the salt tax. Our sisters in the villages have already begun the manufacture of contraband salt.

But we feel that we must, as women, find an additional and special field for our activity. We feel the force of Gandhiji’s argument that women are better fitted for dealing with the question of the prohibition of intoxicating drinks and drugs and boycott of foreign cloth. Drink has desolated many a home, and foreign cloth has deprived millions of India’s women of their employment during leisure hours, which amount in the aggregate to no less than four months in the year.

These two are therefore questions that concern the women more than men. And in so far as they can be dealt with through picketing, i.e., an appeal to the hearts of those who traffic in these things and those who are lured to the drink and the drug or the foreign-cloth shops, we feel that we can make a more successful effort than men. And women doing the work must automatically ensure its peaceful nature.

As we embark upon the campaign we should respectfully point out that it is essentially the duty of the State to prohibit traffic in intoxicating drinks and drugs because they ruin both mind and body and homes of those who indulge in them and to prohibit the entry of foreign cloth inasmuch as it has brought about the economic ruin of the villages of this unhappy land.

As to the importation of foreign cloth it might be urged that the argument that applies to foreign cloth applies also partially to the cloth manufactured in Indian mills. Only the output of Indian mills is so far short of the requirements that khadi can have nothing to fear from them.

1 This was drafted by Gandhiji.
2 The draft was ready for signatures on April 27, 1930; vide “Letter to Amina Tyabji”, 27-4-1930.
We wish that we had time enough to canvass the opinion of our sisters in the other provinces. But we know what their opinion is likely to be. After all we are not dealing with new problems. These have already been before the nation through its national organization, the Congress. What we are seeking to do is to dedicate ourselves more to these questions than to the others which along with these are being dealt with in terms of the independence movement.

We are,
Yours faithfully,

SHARDA MEHTA
INDUMATI C. DIVAN
MANORAMA CHINUBHAI
PARVATIBEHN GRIDHARLAL AMRITLAL
VIJAYAGAURI DURGAPRASAD
LASHKARI
MAHALAKSHMI MANSUKHRAM
CHATURLAKSHMI JIVANLAL DIVAN
VIJAYAGAURI BALVANTRAO KANUGA
AMINA KURESHI
LAKSHIMBAI KHARE
MITHUBEHN PETIT
AMINA TYABJI
RAHANA TYABJI
KANCHANGAURI MANGALDAS GIRDHARDAS

Yours faithfully,

SULOCHNA CHINUBHAI
TANUMATI CHINUBHAI M.
RANCHHODAL
SARLADEVI AMBALAL SARABHAI
VASANTGAURI NARSIDAS
MRS. CHIMANLAL NAGINDAS
ANASUYA SARABHAI
MOTIBAI RANCHHODAL
LILAVATI HARILAL DESAI
NIRMALA BAKUBHAI MANSUKHBHAI
SANTOK M. GANDHI
DURGA MAHDEV DESAI
GANGABEHN RANCHHODDAS BHATIA
SAVITA TRIVEDI
MRS. JAYANTILAL AMRITLAL

Young India, 1-5-1930
SISTERS,

Here is a letter to the Viceroy. Please sign it if you feel you can do so. The original letter is in English. This is a translation of it. You will understand the contents carefully and sign it only if you wish to join the movement. If you sign it, please give full particulars: such as your name, address, age, etc. The names will be published in the papers and your signing the letter will mean that you will be ready to join in picketing liquor booths and foreign-cloth shops and to work under the instructions of the self-appointed committee formed by the signatories below.

However, there is also another way in which you may function. Instead of working under this Committee, you may form your own committee and determine your own area of activity. That is, you may picket only those liquor booths or foreign-cloth shops which you may choose. Even if you do so, we shall ultimately come together and work in co-operation with one another. If you wish to join in this sacred work, you should intimate while sending your signatures whether you would form a separate committee or work under this one.

We remain,
INDIA’S WOMEN VOLUNTEERS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 16845

---

1 It is likely this was drafted about the same time as the preceding item.
200. HONOURING THE MEMORY OF VITHALBhai LALLUBhai

This struggle will claim many lives. One must die to go to heaven. Unless thousands die, swaraj, which is dearer than heaven, will not be secured. The purer the men sacrificing themselves in this cause, the earlier shall we get swaraj and the less will be the number of people sacrificed. If everyone realizes and does his duty, there will be no question of dying in the struggle. But this ideal state hardly ever occurs in this world. Sacrifice, therefore, consists in oneself being pure and innocent, but laying down one’s life [as atonement] for another’s evil. If no one committed sin, where would be the need for sacrifice?

Sacrifice does not simply mean accepting the penalty of death at the hands of the Government. It certainly is a sacrifice if one engaged in the struggle undergoes unmerited suffering and dies. It is of course a sacrifice to suffer an accident, while uprooting toddy trees as part of our struggle, and to die on that account.

Such a sacrifice was made by Vithalbhai Lallubhai yesterday. Vithalbhai was a teacher in a national school. Being enthusiastic he had joined as a volunteer. While he was cutting a toddy tree, the axe fell on his leg, he sustained a fracture and thorns pricked his hands. The doctor spared no pains in treating him. But God’s will was otherwise, and on the fourth day Vithalbhai breathed his last.

I saw Vithalbhai on the very day on which he was hurt. I was impressed by his courage. Though it had been a serious operation, he was cheerful. The doctor was all praise for his fortitude. All of us had expected that he would recover. However, having fulfilled his life’s aim, Vithalbhai departed doing his duty and discharging his debt to the motherland fully.

The town of Navsari realized the grave loss in Vithalbhai’s death. People flocked to where he lay, grieving. A great crowd formed into a procession and followed his body to the cremation ground. The procession seemed to be a celebration. Navsari observed a hartal on that day.

Who would not ask for a death so glorious? I regard Vithalbhai’s mother, brother, wife and all others of the family worthy of congratulations on their good fortune.

Why is such a death desirable, one may ask. It is so because it purifies those left behind and awakens a greater spirit of service in them. Has it so happened in this case? If it has, let us fittingly honour his memory. Vithalbhai gave his life in the fight against the drink evil. It behoves us to apply ourselves to the task and even risk our lives in it. Vithalbhai lost his life in Jalalpur taluka. It, therefore, becomes the special duty of this taluka to see that the toddy trees, stained with his blood, are rooted out, that the liquor and toddy shops are closed down and that the addicts give up drinking.

I had been to Bodali yesterday. The people there paid a glowing tribute to the departed soul. On my request a number of leading men of the place granted permission for felling the toddy palm trees owned by them.

As we lost Vithalbhai, so did we lose Dattatreya and Meghraj. These latter offered their lives to bullets at Karachi. For Vithalbhai, who was engaged in ending the drink evil, I suggested a method of honouring his memory befitting the cause he served. As for Dattatreya and Meghraj, let us honour their memory by promoting peacefulness among us. In the measure that disturbances increase, we shall have to suffer more acutely and in larger numbers; and to that extent the winning of swaraj will be delayed. The greater our peacefulness, the less our need of sacrifice. It is not by throwing stones, shouting slogans, attacking offices and other buildings and setting fire to tram-cars that we can win swaraj for the poor.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 27-4-1930
201. THE SPIRIT OF RAAS

I have seen the pledge taken by Raas. The people of Raas should understand that they have taken the pledge on their own responsibility. The Kheda district has been displaying wonderful strength. Abbas Saheb, who has renounced all, has made it his home. He has dedicated his tender daughter Hamida to the abolition of the drink evil. His wife had already dedicated herself for that work. Raihana, poor cripple, spends her days and nights thinking of India only. The old gentleman is himself working in Kheda, and he is not to be intimidated by anybody.

Kheda has the help of a man like him. Some tried workers from the Ashram batch have also been working in this district. And now Kheda has Sardar’s own daughter, who fears none and whom God has endowed with inexhaustible energy for work. So Kheda has all the help it needs.

If Kheda lacks the ability to preserve peace or the tenacity to hold out till the last, it will put both itself and Gujarat to shame in the eyes of the public.

The Government will not tolerate refusal to pay land revenue. We have not yet reached that stage in the programme. However, those who have the courage may certainly withhold payment. Did not Panchia Patel do it all by himself? But those who adopt this course run great risks. They should not be surprised if their goods, chattels and livestock are put up for sale. What happened in Bardoli is no guide to what may happen in Kheda. The Bardoli struggle was in a way limited in scope. It was a fight for securing a right. This is a fight to wrest power from the Government. The one is as far removed from the other as the earth from the sky.

Hence, to be able to stand firm in the step taken by it, Raas should cultivate the requisite purity of spirit and self-sacrifice. Other villages wanting to follow in its footsteps should first take a measure of their own strength quietly. I may say, however, that the district from which they carried off Sardar and then Durbar and in which Mohanlal Pandya and Ravishankar (Maharaj) have their homes, can never do enough.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 27-4-1930
A trader has expressed sorrow at the frequent hartals. I feel that a hartal should not be observed on any and every occasion and on the arrest of every leader. In all matters the middle path is the only right path. Excess is never good in any matter. When in some village a leader is arrested, it may be necessary to observe a day’s hartal in that village. But I personally do not regard it proper to have a hartal all over when a leader with some reputation is arrested somewhere. I hear that it is the intention of some traders to observe a hartal for seven days when I am arrested. I hope that this is not true. If it is true, I wish that those contemplating it will change their mind. Observing a week-long hartal will not bring us swaraj. Only by working for the constructive programme, not merely for seven days but on all days until swaraj is won, shall we get swaraj and set free everyone who is in jail. The present time calls for careful thinking, wisdom and quiet work. Dangers of Picketing A woman correspondent says that picketing may increase friction. So according to her we should be content with pro-pagation of swadeshi. My humble opinion is that both are necessary.

If the picketing is left entirely to women without any men joining there will be no friction. What women need is endurance and patience. Picketing does not mean coercion. It means appeal or request—and a request may be made to all the communities. The picketing programme includes organizing meetings everywhere, takin-gout, processions, caste meetings passing resolutions, going about singing bhajans, etc. In no case does picketing mean that anyone is to be prevented by force. For the rest, if one wants boycott to succeed one must produce khadi. Those sisters who consider picketing risky may card and spin and create an atmosphere for such work.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 27-4-1930
203. IMAM SAHEB

Mahadev has appointed Imam Saheb Abdul Kadir Bawazeer as his successor. The whole of Gujarat is familiar with the name of Imam Saheb. I had kept him buried in the Ashram; he is like my own brother. From being a client of mine, he became a satyagrahi, after becoming a satyagrahi he became an inmate of Phoenix and, not resting at that, he came over to India with a few other inmates of the Ashram. An acquaintance-ship which began in 1902 has lasted until 1930. Hence this relationship of ours is not a recent one.

Imam Saheb is not a reformed Muslim but an orthodox one in the sense that he never misses his prayers or his fasts. His father was the Muezzin of the Juma Musjid of Bombay. He is himself styled Imam because he officiated as priest in several mosques in South Africa.

It was Sardar who brought Imam Saheb out into the public, but Sardar is not a person to do so with a view to flattering Imam Saheb. He realized Imam Saheb’s freedom of spirit and hence brought him out into the open and took him with him wherever he went. Although Imam Saheb may be called illiterate, he is shrewd and well versed in the practical affairs of life. He understands many things from mere hints. It is not for the first time that Imam Saheb is being given an important position. He had often occupied such a position in South Africa. If he is not arrested, those who come into contact with him will soon realize that he is not one to sit in a chair like a dummy. He can guide a meeting and give considered decisions.

I have had no hand whatsoever in the choice of Imam Saheb. I do not recall suggesting his name to Mahadev. Of course I approved his name after it had been suggested by the latter.

The age for having dummies as chairmen is now past. Only those persons who are capable of guiding us, who put into practice the commands of the public or resign if they are unable to do so can become important public servants.

And today? Well, today only a person who will yield up his head with a smile can become the leader. Imam Saheb is such a person. The veteran Abbas Tyabji is another such person. Swami has found such a person in our brother Abdulla. In this choice the Swami has put himself to the test and has set the limits of this struggle. I could not dream of Swami giving the chair to Abdullabhai. I myself could not have made that choice, despite the fact that it was I who first made his acquaintance and brought him over to the Ashram. Swami has chosen a person who has cut off his own head and put it on a platter. Nevertheless, the reason for these three being chosen by Gujaratis is not only because they are Muslims. These selections have not been made in order to please anyone. They have been selected because besides being Muslims they are worthy of the offices for which they have been chosen, because they are prepared to lay down their lives, to make sacrifices and are as sincere Indians as they are Muslims.

This struggle is not one only of Hindus or of Muslims or of any one community. It is of all Indians. And, if we go a step further, this struggle is for freeing the world from the monstrous tyranny of material greed; it is a struggle to prove that money is not God, but that God alone is everything and that nothing else except Him is real.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 27-4-1930

204. KHADI AND BOYCOTT OF FOREIGN CLOTH

Those who believe that boycott of foreign cloth is impossible without progress in khadi know that the boycott can be deemed successful only when and to the extent that khadi is available to replace boycotted cloth, and that then alone shall we be saved from repenting afterwards. Thus production of khadi is at present the most important issue facing us in regard to boycott. If khadi is not available foreign cloth is bound to enter India by the back door if not openly. In this state of things the khadi bhandars should think what they can do.

THE RESIDENTS OF BOMBAY

What in particular should the Khadi Bhandar of Bombay do? The Bombay Khadi Bhandar is the biggest in India. It receives khadi stocks from all around. But everywhere the consumption of khadi has gone up and it is with great difficulty that the Bombay Khadi Bhandar can supply khadi to its customers. If in these conditions this Bhandar does not find a solution, it had better close down. Discussing this question with Shri Vithaldas Jerajani, I told him: “Now you should ask customers to pay for khadi not in cash but with hand-spun yarn. When you do this, those alone will come to buy khadi who wish really to effect the boycott through the use of khadi. In this way, moreover, the use of khadi will become clean. The number of those spinning cotton will go up, and you will get heaps of yarn. When things are properly organized, you will again have a huge stock of khadi. It would be best if the yarn had been spun by the customer himself. However, it may be open to him to offer the yarn spun by members of his family. Some resourceful men may go to villages, get yarn spun there and bring it to you. With a population of tens of millions, it is quite easy to produce yarn. You will have to make immediate arrangements to get the yarn received woven into cloth. There are many weavers in Bombay, and we should see to it that, when boycott of foreign cloth becomes effective, no foreign yarn finds its way into the Indian market. The yarn from Indian mills may be there, but the mills may be persuaded not to compete with hand-spun yarn. Weavers in whom the spirit of patriotism can be aroused will use only hand-spun yarn to make cloth.”

“But what if by adopting this method we estrange people?” — asked Jerajani.

“Those who understand our aim will not be angry. As for others, let them be angry if they must. If they do not wear khadi, they will be the losers. Khadi has nothing to lose.”

If the method I have suggested is adopted, we shall realize the place of khadi in the boycott of foreign cloth. If we are convinced that the boycott cannot be effected unless the use of khadi spreads, why should we be afraid of telling the truth? Our duty is to do the right and have others do it, leaving the fruit to God.

If I know Bombay, however, it will, I am sure, realize the necessity of the method I have suggested. It will not be offended but will help the cause to the best of its power.

Let us all take to the takli as an emergency duty and make handsome taklis from bamboo and potsherds. Let us ourselves card cotton and begin producing yarn. It will be enough if one gives just two hours a day to the work. All employees of khadi bhandars should become takli experts, and teach people coming to the bhandars to make taklis, to card and to determine the count of yarn. After six months of this work, there will be no scarcity of khadi. We should also realize that if the khadi spirit becomes universal, the villages will never be short of khadi, for they will quickly produce what they require.

Everywhere in Bombay one question is likely to be asked: “On the one hand you are advocating mass civil disobedience and, on the other, you are advising people to use the takli. How can a person offering civil disobedience think of plying the takli in the midst of all the excitement?” My reply is: “Breaking a law merely for the sake of breaking it may mean excitement. How can there be excitement in civil disobedience? ‘Civil’ means ‘peaceful’. Peace and excitement are incompatible with each other. If there is true peacefulness in our disobedience, the takli will be plied with all the greater enthusiasm, because it is the very embodiment of peace. Going round volunteer camps, I find that in several places they idle away their time and say, “Give us work or get us arrested.” To get them arrested is not quite in my hands. I can give them work, and that is plying the takli and the carding bow. These thousands of soldiers can certainly produce yarn in thousands of tolas a day. A thousand tolas of yarn means twenty-five seers of it, or not less than seventy-five square yards of khadi. Our requirement of cloth is estimated at one inch and a quarter per head per day. This means that we shall have met the requirement of twenty-one hundred persons for a day. The result thus worked out is enough to astonish any man. But it will be no surprise to those who understand the principle behind “strength from many threads woven together”. A person spinning a tola of yarn supplies the raw material to clothe in khadi himself and 1.25 other persons. It is child’s play for everyone to spin one tola of yarn. And if we are carrying on a peaceful struggle, it is possible to ply the takli even while picketing or facing bullets. We do not wish to protect our persons. Let us suppose that we go to take possession of a salt-water basin owned by the Government, but the officers will not let us have it. Since we continue to confront them they would arrest us, or shoot at us or charge at us with lathis to prevent entry. Until this stage is reached, why could we not peacefully ply our taklis? The takli is the satyagrahi’s weapon. If the opponent has guns, we have our takli, made of bamboo and potsherds. I can think of no sight more magnificent than this. Will not Bombay and other towns or villages welcome this suggestion?

Let us consider this further. Tens of millions won’t come out to face bullets or spend the whole day making salt or join processions. What, however, will women, children and the old do? If they spin, they too will have offered their contribution to the swaraj yajna.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 27-4-1930

205. TESTING ME

The Government has been putting me to a stiff test. It is entitled to do so. The Government perhaps thinks that if it cuts off my hands, I may lose the battle, or, even if I don’t, at least I shall be isolated. It would seem to be the right thing in the eyes of the world. And that is why Mahadev was removed and Swami, too, not to mention other old co-workers and some new ones like Bhai Munshi.

Mahadev and Swami stand for Young India and Navajivan. Though Swami had left Navajivan formally it did not mean that his connection with it was cut off. It is like my connection with the Ashram, which is not broken even though I am no longer among its Trustees. The Navajivan means Swami. Even from Bombay he had been looking after Navajivan. He took great pains to help Jamnalalji in serving the untouchables. The activities at Ville Parle prospered because of his tireless labour in their behalf. And as for Mahadev, the Gujarati people living near Ahmedabad know his recent work better than I from this distance can know it.

But what would it matter even if every one of my co-workers was taken to where Mahadev and Swami have been taken? I do not regard myself isolated at all. God is my only friend, philosopher and guide, call Him what I may. I have not embarked upon the present struggle counting upon the strength of Mahadev, Swami, Sardar or any other person. I remain therefore unconcerned, no matter how many of my co-workers are sent to jail. Why should a weak man worry? The strength of the strong may be destroyed, but who can destroy the strength of the weak?

Though a weak man, I feel I am strong too, but I rely in this struggle on God’s strength. He guides me in what I eat and drink, in what I speak and write. I, therefore, feel no burden at all. I do not feel the arrest of Mahadev, Swami, or Ramniklal. For their part, they will have some rest. They needed it. If I must worry, there are Chittagong and Peshawar to worry about. They touch my heart of course, but they do not cause me worry.

This is a struggle between violence and non-violence. To the extent that I am non-violent in spirit, non-violent remedies will occur to me; and these I shall put before the people so long as I remain free. In my absence also, if the spirit of non-violence has then become general, people will follow non-violent methods. Those who have not come under the spell of non-violence are bound to do so in the end if the true spirit of non-violence comes to prevail among the people.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 27-4-1930

206. LETTER TO AMINA TYABJI

April 27, 1930

DEAR SISTER,

Herewith the letter to the Viceroy. Please sign and give it to bearer to be posted to the Viceroy.

How is Raihana?

Hamida is doing great work in Olpad.

Yours,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 9688

1 Vide “Draft letter to Viceroy”, 27-4-1930.
207. FRAGMENT OF LETTER TO ASAF ALI

April 27, 1930

Personally I am of opinion that picketing may not be suspended anywhere. But if the local Congress has committed itself to a suspension directly or indirectly, it must be carried out in any case and at any cost.

Strict performance of promises is the essence of satyagraha.

A.I.C.C. File No. 182-F, 1930. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

208. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

April 27, 1930

CHI. LILAVATI,

I got your letter. I was glad to read it. If you continue to exercise such intelligent self-control, your restlessness will disappear. I do not think there will be any harm in applying the plaster. If, however, you take hip-baths, menses will certainly start. It would be better if you did not join the drill. If you keep yourself calm and do not work too hard, and if you sleep outside in the open, your fainting fits will stop.

If you do not pass stools easily, you must take enemas. The bowels should not remain uncleared for more than 24 hours.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9562
209. LETTER TO TARAMATI MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

April 27, 1930

CHI. TARAMATI,

Mathuradas has informed me of your brother’s death. The Gita teaches us not to grieve over death. Birth and death are our two friends and both are equal. Let us try each day to be pure and alert in the knowledge that death is certain.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

210. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

[Before April 28, 1930]

CHI. MATHURADAS,

I have written to you about Kevalram. He is very shy. Hence I have sent him this note. He can look after the Congress office. It will be good if both of them join the Congress and work there. I do not know what the situation in the Congress at present is and so I am sending you this note. Kevalram has lived in the Ashram. I have known him for many years. His father is the Dewan of Vadhwan. Nirmala is the daughter of the late renowned Kevalram Dave of Kathiawar. At one time there was a plan for me to undertake the responsibility of bringing her up in S.A. But just then Bhai passed away and I lost his son. Similarly Nirmala and others were also lost to me, and Kevalrambhai’s aspiration remained unfulfilled. Bhai’s sons could not be recovered but the lady, it would seem, can now be reached. This is the reason I have been cultivating her and Kevalrambhai for some years now. I have written this so that you know with whom you have to deal.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

1 The addressee got the letter on April 28, 1930.
2 Vide “Extracts from speeches in Surat District”, 6-4-1930.
BHAI RAMESHWARDAJII.

I have your letter. I know your love for khadi. That is why I hesitate to offer comments on your scheme. However, I must tell you that your scheme is not workable because the mill-owners will not give up their interests.

For many matters Government aid is essential; it will never be available for the boycott [of foreign cloth].

If the boycott can be successfully implemented by the efforts of the mill-owners only, khadi need have no place in it. But I am confident that boycott will be successful only with khadi.

This does not mean that mills have no place in the scheme at all. The mills can take their proper place only by recognizing the worth of khadi. According to the doctrine that various individual deities are included in God, we destroy them by worshipping them separately because they have no independent existence, and we do not reach God either.

For all these reasons, the prosperity of the mills and the success of foreign-cloth boycott lie in spreading the love of khadi and increasing its production. Verb Sap.

Hope you will not find any difficulty in deciphering my handwriting.

Yours,

MOHANDAS

From Hindi: C.W. 6184. Courtesy: G. D. Birla
212. LETTER TO NARAHARI PARIKH

April [28]\', 1930

BHAIR NARAHARI,

I have just heard that Kaka has been arrested. In a way it is good if he insists on being supplied the food which he requires, such as milk, etc., and even fights for that purpose. Let me know what you intend to do now.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I have explained to Khurshedbehn what to do in regard to that Parsi liquor-booth owner. Women should undertake to picket his booth. They should go to him in a procession. They should even pass a resolution at a meeting. All this if Anasuyabehn approves.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9047

213. INTERVIEW TO “THE BOMBAY CHRONICLE”

JALALPUR,

April 28, 1930

A raid on Government salt depots was inevitable, but the plan of action was incomplete.

Asked if a raid on Dharasana salt depot was finally decided upon, Mahatmaji said:

I have taken no final decision. I am praying for light.

In reply to a question if he would send intimation of the raid to the Viceroy, Gandhiji observed:

I shall certainly not take the step without due intimation. If the raid comes at all it will come very soon.

Asked how he proposed to carry out the raid if the police barred the entrance to the salt pans. Gandhiji replied:

I do not know; but I shall know the way when the block stares me in the face. When I talk about the raid I simply think audibly, as is my wont. But so far as I can see the raid is inevitable.

The Bombay Chronicle, 29-4-1930

\(^1\) Kaka Kalelkar was arrested on this date.
214. LETTER TO NARAHARI PARIKH

April 29, 1930

CHI. NARAHARI,

Why do you even entertain the suspicion that it is because you are unfit to go there that I do not take you with me to Dharasana? Just now, however, we will be exercising self-control if, instead of laying down our lives in an attempt to seize the Dharasana [stocks of salt], we refrain from such self-sacrifice and quietly do the task which has fallen to our lot. At present your duty is to wait quietly by Imam Saheb’s side. All the same, if I require you or think it necessary, I will call you. If occasion demands, you may sacrifice yourself too as Kaka has done.

Did you get my letter regarding Mahadev’s work? In it I have analysed his action in great detail.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9048

215. SPEECH AT BILIMORA

April 29, 1930

Gandhiji addressing the meeting said he did not want to put the Indian States in an awkward position either by making speeches or breaking the Salt Act. Let us first of all settle everything with the British and everything that is to be done in the States will be done later.

I would not ask you to break the salt law but I would certainly appeal to you to adopt khaddar and carry on a vigorous campaign against liquor. You could participate in the two items of boycott of foreign cloth and liquor shops. Liquor trade has ruined our labour class and it is the duty of every citizen, be he a State subject or a British subject, to save them and ladies alone can successfully bring about that change of heart among the drunkards, which is so essential.

There is an impression in certain circles that I am starting picketing against Parsi owners of liquor shops only but that is not a fact. Picketing is to be against liquor-shop owners of all communities:
Hindus, Muslims, Sikhs and others. Parsis are like my brothers.

I would like to picket even Englishmen’s liquor shops, but at present I am afraid to do so. They would not like to be our brothers but would prefer to be our masters.

We will not get swaraj by non-violent means if we do not drive away the evil of drinking from amongst us. We do not want a drunkard as our President during swaraj nor do we want him as a voter. We must destroy that cup of Satan wherever it is found.

In the end Gandhiji asked them to settle their disputes by arbitration.

_The Bombay Chronicle, 30-4-1930_

216. VEILED MARTIAL LAW

[BILIMORA, April 29, 1930]

The revival in the form of an ordinance of the Press Act that was supposed to be dead was only to be expected, and I observe that in its new form the Act contains additional provisions making the whole piece more deadly than before. Whether we realize it or not, for some days past we have been living under a veiled form of martial law. After all, what is martial law if it is not the will of the commanding officer for the time being? The Viceroy is that officer, and wherever he considers it desirable he supersedes the whole of the law, both common and statute, and imposes ordinances on a people too submissive to resent or resist him. I hope, however, that the time for tame submission to the dictation from British rulers is gone for ever. I hope that the people will not be frightened by this ordinance. The Press men, if they are worthy representatives of public opinion, will not be frightened by the ordinance. Let us realize the wise dictum of Thoreau that it is difficult under tyrannical rule for honest men to be wealthy. And if we have decided to hand over our bodies without a murmur to the authorities let us also be equally ready to hand over our property to them and not sell our souls. I would, therefore, urge

---

1 This formed the basis of an interview to _The Bombay Chronicle_ and was published with the following note: “Below is given the full text of Gandhiji’s statement on the Press Act that has already appeared in a more or less mutilated form in the various English Papers.”
Press men and publishers to refuse to furnish securities, and if they are called upon to do so, either to cease publication or to challenge the authorities to confiscate whatever they like. When freedom is actually knocking at our door and when for the sake of wooing it thousands have suffered tortures, let it not be said of the Press representatives that they were weighed and found wanting. They may confiscate type and machinery, they will not confiscate pen and still less speech, but I recognize that they can succeed in confiscating even these last two. But what they will never succeed in suppressing and what is after all the thing that matters is the thought of the nation and at the present moment there is hardly a man or woman breathing in India who with every breath does not breathe in disaffection, sedition, disloyalty and whatever other term one may use to describe the mentality of the nation which has set its mind on destroying the existing system of Government.

Young India, 8-5-1930

217. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

April 29, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

I was unable yesterday to send you anything though I fully intended. But I worked till midnight to finish Y. I. Now these lines whilst I am in the train.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5394. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9628
218. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

April 29, 1930

BHAI SATIS BABU,

Your letter caused me much pain. Today I have had a letter from Krishnadas too. I am enclosing it with this. He seems to be somewhat lacking in sense. I had never thought Krishnadas could harbour deliberate malice. Look him up and have a talk. I have written to him too. Is it not a part of our struggle to try to overcome our differences? Write in English if you find any difficulty in expressing yourself in Hindi. At present it is essential that we understand each other well. If Hindi is not adequate we must make do with English. If you have sufficient time then write both in English and Hindi.

Do you feel any after-effects of the fast? Please ask Hemprabha Devi to write to me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1618

219. INTERVIEW TO “THE LEADER”

BILIMORA,

April 29, 1930

I need hardly say I join the chorus of congratulations that has been showered upon Mr. Vithalbhai Patel on his resignation which was daily expected by many of us, especially after the deliberate withdrawal by perhaps the oldest living servant of the nation, I mean Pandit Malaviyaji, who, braving hostile criticism, had stood by Government even during the sunniest days of non-co-operation in 1921 and refused to leave the Legislative Assembly.

The Leader, 2-5-1930
220. MESSAGE TO C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

[On or before April 30, 1930]

It is good that our hands and feet are tied so that we sing with joy, ‘God is the help of the helpless’.

The Illustrated Weekly of India, September 24-30, 1978, p. 39

221. STATEMENT ON POISONING OF SALT-BED

JALALPUR,

April 30, 1930

Since the repudiation, after further and careful investigation my informant sticks to the statement that he made to me. I had the samples analysed, and the result of all my investigation is that there certainly was some tampering with the salt-bed in question. Whether the substance added rendered the salt poisonous or not I am unable to say, but it certainly contaminated it. The sudden change in the complexion of the bed and the colour of the water are absolutely beyond question. What then remains to be proved is, whether this change happened through human agency or a superhuman one, and if through a human agency, whether it happened through that of the Government or some other. Seeing that Government officials have been tampering with salt-beds, destroying them by mixing mud in them and otherwise, the burden of proof rests on their shoulders that there was no contamination produced so as to render the salt unfit for human use.

The Hindu, 4-5-1930

---

1. In reply to the addressee’s letter regarding the order of the Madras Government permitting the collector of Tanjore to prosecute the satyagrahis breaking the salt law in the South.
2. The addressee had been arrested on April 30, 1930, during the Vedaranyam Salt Satyagraha.
3. A Tamil proverb, written in the Tamil script by Gandhiji.
222. CONGRATULATIONS TO DELHI JOURNALISTS

NAVSARI,
April 30, 1930

I am delighted at the brave gesture of the Delhi newspapers,¹ which have been served with peremptory orders under the Press Ordinance to furnish security. It would have been terrible if on the very first application of the Ordinance important newspapers had weakly submitted to the insult embodied in the Ordinance. I hope that the refusal to conduct their newspapers under security is permanent and that other newspapers will follow the courageous example set by the Delhi editors and publishers.

The Bombay Chronicle, 1-5-1930

223. LETTER TO NARAHARI PARikh

April 30, 1930

CHI. NARAHARI,

Qureshi is required in Chikhli only in order to work among the Muslims. You can send him after a few days.

It would not be wise just now to start disobedience of the mahura law. The three things which we have taken up are enough. And now the Government’s Press Act will provide further opportunities. Chhotelal is going there. Use his services.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9049

¹ They had decided to suspend publication as a mark of protest.
224. LETTER TO NARAHARI PARIKH

April 30, 1930

CHI. NARAHARI,

As Imam Saheb is ill, you should not call him to the office. Let him remain in the Ashram and give his decisions from there. When it is absolutely necessary for him to go to the city, he should go in a car. You should save his energy in other ways, too. We can make no change now till he becomes altogether incapable of work. Have you all considered what you should do in that contingency? It seems to me that you yourself will have to assume charge of the affairs. But I cannot judge. How can I know the present circumstances there? Do what all of you think proper. What about Balubhai?

Maganbhai will meet you and give you the message about Navajivan. Hence I do not write about it here. If I am arrested, Mohanlal should become both the Editor and the Publisher. How is Kamalnayan?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9050

225. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

April 30, 1930

CHI. GANGABEHN,

Kaka writes to say that with his arrest you may become more fidgety. It is his considered view that for you sacrifice consists in remaining behind in the Ashram. I agree with him. Bear everything in patience. To preserve one’s peace of mind even in the midst of a conflagration is also an art, it is a form of sadhana.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 8748. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

1 Spiritual effort
226. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

April 30, 1930

CHI. GANGABEHN,

I will not mind your living on gram and puffed rice, if you can keep fit on that diet. But do not deceive yourself. Give the body the food it requires and keep it fit for service.

If you wish to come and bring with you the girls and the women who have not visited me, you may certainly come. Not that your coming will do any good, for you will have to run back as soon as you come.

Relationships depending on the body are noxious. They are as transitory as a mirage. Why should we be blindly attached to them? Through physical life, we should cultivate a relationship of the soul and know that it never ends, that it alone can be pure and free from ignorant attachment.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 8747. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya
227. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

[April 30, 1930]

CHI. VASUMATI,

I was in fact expecting a letter from you. It is 10 p.m. now. I will not, therefore, write more. Kamalabehn also should write. It will be at least a week before we start on the march. Come before that.

Blessings from
BAPU
SMT. VASUMATIBEHN
SATYAGRAHA CAMP, BHIMRAD
Via SURAT

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 544. Courtesy: Vasumati Pandit; also S.N. 9280

228. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL

[April 1930]

CHI. MANI,

I have your letter. Yesterday I could not after all write the note you had asked for. Now you will surely go. I enclose the note although it is unnecessary.

See that you act in a manner worthy of yourself, of Father and of me. Try to read and understand the Gita as well as some Gujarati books.

Write to me regularly. Inquire into the report about the poisoning of salt-beds in Kheda and let me know.

Blessings from
BAPU
CHI. MANIBEHN PATEL
NADIAD

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro — 4: Manibehn Patelné, p. 70

1 From the postmark
2 From the reference to poisoning of salt-beds it appears the letter was written in April 1930.
229. LETTER TO JAMNADAS GANDHI

April 30, 1930

CHI. JAMNADAS,

I have your letter. You need not have given your name. I think they will not arrest Khushalbhai'. It will be befitting if he is accompanied by a batch of volunteers. He should consider this. They may stop his pension for participating in civil disobedience. In my view it would be good if they did. The greater their tyranny the sooner they will go. If, however, he does not have the courage to forgo the pension, he should give up the idea of joining civil disobedience. For the rest, at the present moment civil disobedience has come to be the supreme duty for everyone. I have no doubt about it. If he is not arrested when he gets down at Viramgam, he may as convenient to him go to Lakhtar or any other place where there is a satyagraha camp, and then return home. When another occasion arises he may again offer civil disobedience and may even face bullets if occasion arises. In other words, he should be ready for everything. He may, however, do all this only if Dev Bhabhi² is agreeable. In any case we all have his blessings and that is sufficient. You may come any time you wish.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati; Chhaganlal Gandhi Papers. Courtesy: Sabarmati Sangrahalaya

¹ Addressee’s father
² Dev Kunvar, addressee’s mother

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
230 LETTER TO HARIBHAU UPADHYAYA

KARADI

April 30, 1930

BHAI HARIBHAUJI,

Bapu has received your letter. He has asked me to write that Kashinathji may well join you if Ramnarayanji can conduct the Hindi Navajivan by himself. So please write to him. It is very likely that Ramnarayanji may have to share some work of Young India and Navajivan on account of Mahadevbhai’s arrest. Maybe he will be unable to manage all the work by himself.

Respects from

KANTI

From the Hindi Original: Haribhau Upadhyaya Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

231. PLEDGE FOR SWARAJ WORKERS

[April 1930]

We, the undersigned, join in the fight for Purna Swaraj and, till it is won, we will not take up any work other than what is assigned to us.

From Gujarati: C.W. 8108. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

1 In Bapuna Patro-9: Shri Narandas Gandhine this is placed between letters of 26-4-1930 and 3-5-1930.
232. LETTER TO AMINA QURESHI

10.30 p.m., Thursday [On or before May 1, 1930]

CHI. AMINA,

You know very well the reason why I have not asked you to go out and work. Do not worry. You may do whatever you can staying at home. You may freely write to me anything you wish to. Imam Saheb will soon be in jail. He will probably get there earlier than I do. May it be so.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 4294. Courtesy: Hamid Qureshi; also G.N. 6649

233. MAHADEV DESAI AND HIS SUCCESSOR

I have hardly time to notice arrests and imprisonments even of eminent Indians. I do not even come to know of them immediately. Being constantly on the move and living in a village, often twenty-four hours elapse before I know some of the important events. Happily it is unnecessary for me to know them. When many important persons act as one man and undergo suffering and when many important events take place at the same time, both become common things and it is a happy sign. We take no notice of the myriads of sunbeams each as important as the sun itself. We pay homage to each when we worship the sun which is the crowning act of the simultaneous action of the beams. Even so do we worship daily the ever-waxing sun of India’s freedom which is in the process of formation.

But I must take notice of Mahadev’s conviction. In the midst of

---

1 This was the last Thursday before Gandhiji was arrested on May 5.
chaos going under the false name of Government, Mahadev’s arrest was a courteous and reluctant business on the part of the authorities. Though he set ablaze the whole of Gujarat from Viramgam and Dholera to Ahmedabad, the authorities recognized that it was a life-giving fire, that they were safer under Mahadev’s rule than their own and that he was well able to control the forces he had brought into being.

But Mahadev made it impossible for the authorities to keep him free. He had managed to “smuggle in” a lorry load of salt from Dholera. The authorities were wide awake. They intercepted the lorry. They had hoped not to find Mahadev in it. But when he saw that the lorry was to be arrested together with its precious load, he got out of the car in which he was following and jumped into the lorry. And so if they were to arrest the lorry they could not help arresting him. Nor could Mahadev help jumping into the lorry in the circumstances. With him was a youth who was to have appeared for his final L.L.B. the following day; two were young men from the Gujarat College and two were sons of wealthy men. The lorry was given by Sjt. Ranchhodlal, a mill-owner who, when warned what might befall the lorry, said, “What fear about the loss of the lorry when I am prepared to lose all for swaraj?”

Mahadev has got his well-deserved rest. For hundreds of strenuous workers the jail has become a resting house. Mahadev yearned as he says after “a better fate but evidently had not yet deserved it”.

He has appointed as his successor Imam Saheb Abdul Kadir Bawazeer, a comrade from South Africa and Vice-Chairman of the Ashram Committee and one of its trustees. Imam Saheb is an elderly man hardly capable of strenuous labours. He may be said to be illiterate. But he is a seasoned soldier and son of a devoted Muslim who was till the time of his death muezzin of the Juma Musjid of Bombay. He is himself styled Imam because he officiated as priest in several mosques in South Africa. He is an orthodox Mussalman in the sense that he never misses his prayers or his fasts. But he is also most liberal-minded or he could not have lived with me in the closest contact in the midst of all sorts of people for an unbroken period of nearly twenty years.

But the swaraj of my—our—dream recognizes no race or religious distinctions. Nor is it to be the monopoly of lettered persons nor yet of moneyed men. Swaraj is to be for all, including the former, but emphatically including the maimed, the blind, the starving toiling millions. A stout-hearted, honest, sane, illiterate man may well be the first servant of the nation as Imam Saheb has become in Gujarat and another still less known friend, by name Abdullabhais, has become in Ville Parle. He is the successor of Swami Anand who by his inexhaustible energy and amazing self-denial made Navajivan Karyalaya, though a purely philanthropic institution, also a sound business proposition which has been bringing to the doors of the Gujaratis the truest gems of Gujarati literature understandable by the masses. But these are not rare instances. These are typical of what the struggle has thrown up all over India. The Government is making its last desperate effort to retain India as the milch cow of the White Islanders in the far off West. But selfless servants of the nation will no longer permit the rape of the cow at the expense of her three hundred million children.

Young India, 1-5-1930
234. TO CORRESPONDENTS

My correspondence accumulates daily. I have purposely deprived myself of much assistance. Seasoned workers have been better occupied. It is therefore impossible for me to cope with the correspondence from day to day. I have invited co-workers whom I have sent away to different parts of the country to keep me duly informed of their doings. They naturally expect at least an acknowledgment. I find however that I am unable even to do that. The fact is that I should be regarded as a half prisoner permitted to receive letters but prevented from writing in reply except occasionally. Presently I shall be a full prisoner if not something higher. Therefore when fellow-workers and others do not receive letters from me they should know that I have had no time to write to them.

Young India, 1-5-1930

235. GOONDA RAJ

If what is going on in Gujarat is any indication of what is going on in other parts of India, even Dyerism pales into insignificance. This may appear to be an exaggerated statement. But it is meant to be literally true. The massacre of Jallianwala was a clean sweep. It created an impression both in the intended and the unintended sense.

The death by inches that is being dealt out in Gujarat is unimpressive either way, and may, if care is not taken, prove utterly demoralizing. It may weaken the victims and decidedly debases the tyrants.

If I have the time I shall summarize the events of the past week for these columns. In any case the reader will find the whole of the evidence in the daily press.

Mahadev Desai had hugged the belief that after the efforts he made by going there himself and sending lawyer friends, the barbarous torture had ceased at Viramgam. But it was not to be. A volunteer was for a few minutes isolated from his company, and this gave the representatives of law and order an opportunity of falling upon their victim and treating him as his predecessors had been treated at Viramgam.

This is what Dr. Narsinhbhai Mehta, a retired Chief Medical Officer of Junagadh, who at the age of 66 was enthused with the spirit of satyagraha, saw with his own eyes:

I brought a party of about 120 satyagrahis, each with a bag of ten lb. of contraband salt from Wadhvan Camp this evening.

As I led the party, I was the first to meet the inspecting party consisting of one European officer, two Indian officers and about 4 or 5 police constables. Over and above this there were about fifty spare constables watching the entrance of the staircase.

I was asked what I had got in the bag under my armpit. I replied, “Ten lb. of contraband salt.” “All right, old doctor, you can go,” they said. I said, “I am leading a party of about 120 satyagrahis, each with a bag of such salt. So I want to see personally how you deal with them, or whether you allow them to go freely just like other passengers.” He said, “All right, you stand apart on one side, and watch.” One by one the satyagrahis were made to pass through the said inspecting party and immediately all the seven or eight of them, including the European officer, caught hold of each resister and snatched the bag from the hands of the satyagrahi, handling the resister most roughly. Almost every satyagrahi was treated likewise. It was a disgraceful proceeding. I had a very high opinion of Englishmen all throughout my life. This was the first experience of the kind during sixty-six years.

When I could bear the treatment no longer and expostulated, the officer said: “Speak to the public outside about this and write to the papers!” And the whole performance went on as before.

Mark the callousness with which Dr. Mehta’s entreaty was met. It was a jolly performance for the British officer and his fellow-loyalists to indulge in the sport of dispossessing young men of their precious possession. It was no use telling them that the victims were not running away nor hiding anything. The law had to be respected without any waiting for the law’s delay on the part of its administrators.

But even this was nothing compared to the scenes enacted in the Kheda district. I own that the brave sons and daughters of Kheda have carried out fairly successfully the legitimate boycott of officials who are no longer able to impose their will upon the people. They have brutally struck a graduate and professor of the Gujarat Vidyapith who had committed no offence, but who had gone simply to see what was happening when he heard the beating. In the same district near Borsad a few police supported by a local Thakore and his minions armed with long armed sickles without notice put out the lights at a meeting and mercilessly fell upon their victims. The audience consisted of Patidars and Rajputs who were fully able to defend themselves. But not a stone was thrown, not a word was uttered. For the sake of discipline they suffered. One man narrowly escaped death. Seven are still lying in a hospital. Altogether thirty-five have been traced as having been injured. This was a cowardly edition of Jallianwala.

Then take Ahmedabad. A liquor dealer finding his till empty from day to day got so exasperated that he savagely attacked the pickets one of whom lay senseless. The picketing was of the most peaceful as acknowledged by everybody. There was not even any demonstration. Only the names of those who visited this were taken down by the pickets who knew them. The success of the picketing lies in this case in moving the caste machinery which still works fairly among the labouring classes.

Have the administrators of law and order done anything to prevent this savagery? No. They have secretly enjoyed it. They are welcome to the joy of it. Only let this be not called ‘law and order’. Let it be called Goonda Raj.

The duty before the people is clear. They must answer this organized hooliganism with great suffering. If they have the will and the power, freedom is assured. Freedom is a fruit of suffering, licence is born of violence. What we are all pining for is freedom that imposes restraints upon itself for the sake of society. Licence imposes suffering upon society so that it may enjoy exclusive privileges. This is a Government of unbridled licence because it is a Government whose chief, if not sole, aim is to exploit Indian society.

PS. Since writing the above I have almost identical pictures from Balasore and Mathura. I reproduce them in full. Authorized hooliganism is evidently India-wide or fast becoming so.

_Young India, 1-5-1930_
236. NOTES

THE SPEAKER’S RESIGNATION

Vithalbhai Patel’s resignation does not come as a surprise upon us. It would have been surprising if he had not resigned. By his courage combined with impartiality, he won the affection of Congressmen and commanded the admiration of opponents. I am glad he recognizes that the way to serve the country is not through the Assembly. The legislatures are but a pawn in the game of exploitation. Ostrich-like we hide our heads in the sand and refuse to see what is plain as a pikestaff to the onlooker. Vithalbhai Patel’s resignation is a severe blow to the prestige of the Government. His firmness in the Chair was undoubtedly embarrassing to the Government; his vacating it in the manner he has done is still more so.

FRONTIER PROVINCES

When I marched to Dandi, friends in the Frontier Provinces had offered to send some volunteers to help me. I sent them thanks in appreciation of their offer but did not avail myself of it. How nice perhaps it would have been if they had not actively participated in the movement. Those who, not being sure of perfect non-violence being observed, do not take an active part in the struggle are most assuredly helping it. Those who wanting to serve take part in it and violence results, as happened at Peshawar, are as assuredly harming the movement. That the people in Peshawar meant well I have no doubt. They are perhaps more impatient (if such a thing were possible) than I am to win freedom. But nobody can get freedom today in this land except through non-violence. We cannot get India’s freedom through the way of violence; we are within reach of it if we would but keep up non-violence to the end. The way lies not through the burning of armoured cars and taking the lives of administrators of the Government machinery; it lies through disciplined organized self-suffering. I deeply regret the occurrences in Peshawar. Brave lives have been thrown away without the cause itself being served.

NECESSITY OF FULFILMENT

There is a great deal of bartering among us. The position taken... up by foreign cloth merchants is but a symptom of that spirit. They want to give up foreign cloth trade only if they can do so without suffering any loss. But patriotism does not admit of barter. People are expected like Dattatreya to face death, like Kachalia in South Africa to face compulsory insolvency, like the late Gopabandhu Das and others, not known to fame, to face poverty and like the widow of Vithalbhai of Ambheti to suffer the death of nearest and dearest ones. Therefore the reluctance of foreign cloth merchants to suffer losses, in my opinion, betrays want of real patriotism.

But the Delhi merchants contend that the local Congress Committee has bound itself to stop picketing under certain conditions. If that be so, the promise has to be fulfilled at any cost. If the word of a Congressman or a Congress organization cannot be relied upon, we shall ultimately lose the battle. Satyagraha means insistence on Truth. Breach of promise is a base surrender of truth. I have therefore advised the parties, if they cannot agree as to the text of the promise, if any, to refer the matter to arbitration.

I understand too that in Delhi, they have resorted to mixed picketing. I have suggested that it should be confined only to women. It does not matter if picketing is suspended for want of sufficient women pickets. Every occasion for violence must be avoided. Men can produce by careful propaganda and production of khadi an irresistible atmosphere for the boycott. But picketing wherever it is done must be confined to women.

Rashtriya Stree Sabha

This body has now formed a sub-association whose sole object is to do the work of the two boycotts—liquor and foreign cloth. It has made a public appeal for funds. I have no doubt that it will receive greater public support than hitherto. The public should know that the ceaseless workers in this association are the G.O.M.’s grand-daughters. His spirit is watching over their devotion and India’s work with pride and satisfaction.

From Overseas

I have had cables from Mexico, the Philippines, South Africa, East Africa and elsewhere wishing the cause success. I have purposely refrained from publishing them, not out of ungratefulness, but because I know that valuable as the wishes of other people are, what will decide the issue will be our own wishes and consequent action. If our action is correct the good wishes of the whole world will be with us if they are not already. Nevertheless I must reproduce the two following messages as they are from English friends. It is the conversion of England that civil resisters are aiming at. I have enough criticism from England, some of which I have published in these pages. It gives me pleasure therefore to publish good wishes of some English friends.

DEAR MAHATMA GANDHI,

We the undersigned members of the Executive of the War Resisters’ International are watching with intense interest the progress of your campaign in India. In accordance with the principles of the War Resisters’ International we believe in the possibility of overthrowing imperialism by pacifist means and we rejoice that you are relying upon the method of non-violence.

We send you our love and sympathy in the hardships and difficulties which you will undoubtedly have to face and assure you that we will do our best, by propaganda in whatever circles may be open to us, to assist you in your fight for truth and justice.

Yours sincerely,

A. Fenner Brockway
Harold F. Bing
Martha Steinitz
Stephen J. Thorne
H. Runham Brown

May non-violence achieve success.

WOMEN’S INTERNATIONAL LEAGUE FOR PEACE AND FREEDOM

WOMEN’S APPEAL TO THE VICE ROY

The appeal of the women of Gujarat made to the Viceroy, printed elsewhere,1 deserves world-wide attention. The appeal has been promoted by the Gujarati women only. For an all-India appeal much time would have been required. But it is to be hoped that the action of the Gujarati sisters will be copied by all the other provinces with such changes as may be necessary. The organization has to grow naturally. Therefore a variety may be invited. It would not matter, so long as the central facts are allowed to remain intact. They are (1) no mixed picketing, (2) Boycott of foreign cloth, not merely British cloth, and this through khaddar.

1 Vide “Draft letter to Viceroy”, 27-4-1930.

Young India, 1-5-1930

237. QUESTIONS ANSWERED

Professor Syed Rauf Pasha caught hold of me when last I was in Bulsar1 and asked me some pertinent questions on Hindu-Muslim unity. At my request he reduced the questions in writing so that I could give precise answers. The reader will find the questions and the answers below:

Q. 1. You say that the present campaign is intended only to create the necessary strength among the people to gain independence rather than to establish independence. If you feel that Dominion Status on the basis of the Nehru Report will create that strength, will you accept it when the Muslims feel that it would be only Hindu strength rather than National strength that would be gained thereby?

A. I should never feel that any grant can give us strength. In no case could the Nehru scheme be revived or accepted if only because the communal solution suggested therein does not satisfy those concerned in it and also because it does not stipulate for Independence as it obviously could not at the time.

Q. 2. Do you consider the Ali Brothers to be sincere in differing from you over the time of starting the disobedience of the salt law and over the question of participation in the Round Table Conference; and that they were in no way influenced by the British Government in the adoption of such an attitude?

A. I certainly consider the Ali Brothers to be sincere in what they say. If I believed them to be insincere or capable of being influenced by the British Government, I should never hope of their being weaned from what to me appears to be a grievous error as my action appears to them to be.

1 On April 26, 1930
Q. 3. Do you realize or not that the Ali Brothers still have a great following among the Muslim masses throughout India and who would swell your ranks tomorrow if only the Ali Brothers assure them that such a step will not be detrimental to their interests?

Further, don’t you think that even the Ali Brothers with all their influence were and still are powerless to dispel their suspicion of the Mahasabha Hindus just as you were and still are powerless to carry the Hindu community with you in the settlement of the communal question although your leadership in other matters is not questioned?

A. How can it be otherwise? Their record of service will always secure for the Ali Brothers a following among the Muslim masses. There is no doubt therefore that their coming would mean additional strength to the cause.

Deep-rooted suspicions cannot be dispelled by leaders however influential they may be.

Q. 4. Do you think that Muslims specially of the N.W.F. Province and Malabar are sufficiently trained for non-violent fight as the Hindus specially of Gujarat are; and do not past recent occurrences in these provinces impress on you the necessity of stopping such unprepared provinces from immediate participation until such organization is complete and that otherwise there would be an unnecessary loss of Muslim life?

A. I have repeatedly warned those provinces that are unprepared for strict non-violence against participation in the struggle. It is quite enough if they can give their sympathy.

Young India, 1-5-1930
238. LIQUOR AND PARSIS

Several Parsi friends seem to be under the apprehension that liquor picketing is to be confined only to Parsi liquor dealers. This is wholly a misconception. Picketing is now going on all over India in a more or less organized fashion. And in the parts other than Gujarat there are more Hindu dealers than Parsis. Even in Gujarat the thousands of toddy trees that are being uprooted belong overwhelmingly to Hindus. Toddy booths owned by Hindus are certainly to be picketed on a most extensive scale. Organized picketing, it should be remembered, has only just commenced. In my speeches I have made a pointed appeal to Parsis because there is an indissoluble bond between them and me and because they are the most advanced and organized community in all India and therefore more readily amenable to reason. They read newspapers. Parsi liquor dealers attend my meetings, whereas Hindu dealers are too ignorant to do so. The latter can only be reached by personal visits made to them in their own booths or homes. Indeed the response I am getting from Parsi friends is quite encouraging, though not yet adequate. It is a Parsi sister—Mithubai Petit—who, assisted among others by a Parsi pleader, is organizing picketing in the Surat district. Behram Mehta and Dhanjisha Darbari have gone to jail in the same cause. They were ostensibly arrested for breach of salt laws, but I have a suspicion that they were arrested for the possibility of their undoubted influence spreading among liquor dealers. Anyway, they were engaged in the anti-drink work as much as the Salt Satyagraha. It was a matter of joy to me too that some Parsi liquor dealers who came to me the other day went away satisfied to find that I had fully the intention of picketing toddy booths just as much as liquor shops. One complaint was that we were leaving alone the liquor shops in the adjacent Baroda territory. The charge is true. But I am hoping that the Baroda State people will organize the picketing of Baroda canteens. Prohibition is first and foremost a moral reform. The Indian States are as much interested in it as the rest of India. The States’ people may take up this reform, and ought to do so.

The friends who saw me raised also the question of their living. It is here that the Parsis as a community have to step in to find a solution. Parsi associations can prepare statistics and organize bureaux for the employment of those who would need relief when the only source of their income is gone, as it ought to have long ago. It cannot be a matter of pride that this great community has so many of its members living on an immoral traffic.

Young India, 1-5-1930

239. ‘TRIUMPH OF NON-VIOLENCE’

Who does not know Shri Rajendra Prasad? He writes from Patna: ¹

The more I become aware of the present trend in the country the more I am convinced that people have fully learnt the lesson of peace. There is still something lacking to be sure. But if people are peaceful and fearless to the end swaraj is not far away.

There are three prerequisites for swaraj: purity, fearlessness and work. Giving up of liquor and other intoxicating things is a sign of purity. Through civil disobedience of the salt law people are learning the lesson of fearlessness. When the charkha or the takli has become universal one can say that people have become industrious. The economic gain from these things is of course there. Giving up of liquor, etc., will save us Rs. 25 crores. Abolition of the salt tax will save at least Rs. 6 crores and the takli through the manufacture of khadi, Rs. 60 crores.

May God grant the people of this country strength to do all this.

[From Hindi]

Hindi Navajivan, 1-5-1930

¹ The letter is not translated here. Rajendra Prasad had described how events in Patna had ended in a procession of about 15,000 being taken out on April 23 and how in the face of police violence the huge assembly had remained wholly peaceful and disciplined. He had called it a triumph of non-violence.
240. LETTER TO ABBAS TYABJI

May 1, 1930

MY DEAR WHITE BEARD,

I had your letter. Kheda has become the storm centre. It is there that the danger exists. You will please keep the boycott clean and absolutely free of any compulsion. The little underlings ought not to be molested in any way. And I feel that you should transfer yourself to where the Thakore of Dehvan is residing. If you are satisfied about the atrocities, let me have a brief statement for publication. Try to see the Thakore if it is at all possible. Who is this Foujdar Munshi?

I am writing this in a moving train. Going to Hamida’s seat of action and looking forward to seeing her.

Love.

Yours,

M. K. G.

From a photostat: S.N. 9572

241. LETTER TO NARAHARI PARikh

Unrevised

May 1, 1930

CHI. NARAHARI,

Getting used to ‘Chi.’ will take me some time.¹

1 There should be no boycott of petty police officials. Provisions, etc., should be freely supplied to them.

2. But they should be disobeyed when they come as policemen. Any services demanded by them as policemen should be refused.

3. Big officers should not be asked to vacate the houses in which they may be living.

4. In spite of the boycott, our relations with those boycotted should be happy. If they become bitter, take it that there is hatred in the boycott.

It is not the officials, but their authority that we boycott. We boycott not Dyer, but Dyerism. We should examine our attitude by putting ourselves this question: “How would I behave with the officer

¹ Gandhiji first wrote “Bhaishri 5” and then struck it off.
if he were my own brother?” For example, how do I behave with Harilal? This will enable you to understand your attitude a little more clearly.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9051

242. EXTRACTS FROM SPEECH AT OLPAD

May 1, 1930

The Government has been testing us thoroughly by taking away our leaders from us one by one. It believes that, deprived of our leaders, we shall either hide ourselves in our homes or become violent. What can be better for the Government than if we hide? If we do not raise our heads, if we go on paying the land revenue year after year, continue drinking liquor, buy salt at a rupee and a quarter a maund and wear foreign cloth, the Government will want nothing more. On the other hand, if we resort to violence it can stand it since the consumption of ammunition will then go up, the industry in England will stand to gain, and its generals, captains and soldiers will have honours and awards conferred on them. There is just one thing the Government cannot put up with, and that is that we should refuse to obey its laws and to submit to its authority.

We have not been true to our salt. That is why we disregard the cloth made by the hands of our poor and virtuous brothers and sisters and import cloth from abroad. Islam had a Caliph who was the greatest among all the Caliphs. What did he tell the great governors from Baghdad who had come dressed in silken robes? “Your Prophet wore only coarse cloth. Where did you learn to wear such soft garments?” Holy men in those days had such power that people trembled before them. And this they did, not because they brandished the sword, but because they wielded spiritual power. Now people, whether Hindus or Muslims, tell me that they find khadi too coarse. I laugh when I hear that, though, in truth, I ought to weep.

I have been told that in Surat when some of our sisters were on their round, the owners of toddy booths behaved badly. Some even threw clods of earth at them. I was ashamed to hear this. A man should die before he insults such women or swears at them or lifts a stone against them. What though the person behaving thus be a drunkard? Haven’t drunkards their mothers and sisters? These women do not go and abuse them. They only humbly entreat them. Is it a crime to do so? Every man in this country should have the spirit in him not to tolerate women being insulted. This does not mean that one should lose one’s temper with the person who abuses them. But how can any man have the audacity to abuse a woman or lift a stone against her? He ought rather to pray: O God, may my hand come unstuck before I commit such a crime.

Against whom can you raise your hand? Perhaps against a man who attacks you, though even that is at present forbidden. To raise one’s hand against a woman is cowardly. It is unthinkable. I hope no Indian is behind these incidents. I hope the clod of earth fell accidentally on some sister. I had believed that though there might be wicked Indians, even they would observe some decorum. However, even if a few women have their heads smashed as some men have had theirs, we will not give up what we have undertaken in the name of God. If it is the fate of our sisters to be beaten they will be beaten. But let those who drink as well as those who sell liquor note that drinking will soon be a matter of the past.

The way of the Raghbus it has been ever,
Life may fail but a pledge never.

We all brothers and sisters have now learnt to recite this quatrain and we are no actors in a play who only sing and do not act. Just as we know that the salt law is as good as abolished, let us also have the faith that the drink evil, too, will be gone.

Remember my humble prayer. I also want you to carry my message—the message of an old man—to all concerned and to the liquor-booth owners of Surat.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 11-5-1930
243. SPEECH AT RANDEL

May 1, 1930

I appeal to Muslim friends to realize that at present we have embarked upon a movement of self-purification. The time has not yet come to divide the gains among ourselves. When that time comes, we shall decide the share of each. If it is our misfortune to fight then, we shall fight it out. But personally I believe that when that day comes, there will be no need for us to fight. There will be no cause then for mutual distrust or fear. At present our fight is directed mainly against the salt tax. Such a tax is forbidden in Islam. Salt is a necessity for all. The majority of Hindus and Muslims are poor people and the burden of the tax falls on them. In Rander, however, we have millionaires and multi-millionaires. They can see the facts if only they go with me into villages.

Our second task is to banish foreign cloth. Everyone can see from the accounts of the Spinners’ Association that because of this movement we pay thousands of rupees to Muslim women and weavers. The large number of women in Vijapur who earn a living through this work and bless me are all Muslims. These poor women have often wept when my workers could not supply them enough slivers.

The third task is eradication of the drink evil. In which religion is drinking not forbidden? In the course of my life I have mixed a great deal with Muslims and attended many dinners given by Muslim hosts. Muslims cannot but join the movement for banishing liquor and other intoxicants from the country. Are those mill workers not Muslims who picket liquor booths in Ahmedabad and plead with proprietors and drink-addicts, patiently submitting to assaults and abuses?

This is God’s work. He alone can do it who is ready to sacrifice his life for it. Only he who is ready to dive into the sea can bring up pearls from it. I only beg of my Muslim clients and other Muslims to realize that this movement of self-purification is not a monopoly of any community, and wish that all people should heartily join it. We will see afterwards how to share the gains when the Government asks us what we want. My prophecy about that day, however, is that we shall then no longer think it necessary to fight, that one brother will invite another to take anything he wants. We shall then have nobility among us and the bargaining spirit will have disappeared. We have to do this work in God’s name, in the name of the poor. Let all the communities help in it and let the town of Rander, too, give all the help it can and bring glory to its fair name.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 11-5-1930

244. LETTER TO SUSHILA GANDHI

[After May 1, 1930]

CHI. SUSHILA,

I have your letter. What is the name of the lady who is angry with me? Send her here. Are all of you concerned with substance or with unimportant details? I maintain good weight and sufficient energy; what does it matter, then, whether or not I eat fruit? I have kept a way open to permit me to start eating it again if it becomes necessary to do so for my health. I have not taken a vow not to eat fruit. But why should I if there is no need? I had read in a paper that you go out to picket liquor booths.

To you all,

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 1184. Courtesy: Sushila Gandhi; also G.N. 4772

1 According to Navajivan, 11-5-1930, picketing of liquor booths by Ahmedabad women started from this date.
245. LETTER TO PURUSHOTTAM GANDHI

May 2, 1930

CHI. PURUSHOTTAM,

I was in fact expecting a letter from you when I got one. If you keep good health in the Ashram, you should stay either there or in Vijapur. If you have overcome the fear of death, you should be equally contented in all circumstances and go on doing the work which may fall to your lot. I do not feel inclined at present to call up here any of those who are left behind. If, however, you wish otherwise, let me know.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 898. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

246. LETTER TO VITHALDAS JERAJANI

May 2, 1930

BHAISHRI VITHALDAS,

I got your letter. You have asked for someone to help you. Maganbhai is going there. He is a very exact man in all matters. He will prove very useful to you. I wish you all success.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9773
247. LETTER TO RADHA GANDHI

May 2, 1930

CHI. RADHA.

Mithubehn told me that you were eager to work with her. She intends to entrust you with a responsible task. If you really wish to work with her, I will not dissuade you. But Khurshedbehn also told me that you wished to work with her. If you gave her your word first you should work with her.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 8682. Courtesy: Radhabehn Chaudhri

248. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

May 2, 1930

CHI. KUSUM.

I have still not received the letter which you said in your hurriedly-written last letter you would write.

I keep with this the two letters received from you.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1798
249. LETTER TO JANAKIDEVI BAJAJ

May 2, 1930

CHI. JANAKIBEHN,

I got Madalasa’s letter today. I do not remember to have received any from you. Why should I get angry? You seem to have plunged into work there. I am glad that you are working with Perinbehn.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2886

250. LETTER TO NARAHARI PARikh

May 2, 1930

CHI. NARAHARI,

I do not know all the facts about the Headman. But why should he try to defend himself? If he has the necessary strength, he should suffer whatever is done to him. But otherwise he may by all means defend himself. I can conceive of only one situation in which a person may defend himself, and that is when a false allegation is made against him. Then he may, if he wishes, defend himself. In such cases, however, only those who are on the spot can decide what is right.

Bhagavati tells me that there will be darkness there after you go. There is no one, he tells me, who will give all his time to the work. Think about this and let me know your view.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9052
251. LETTER TO SARALADEVI SARABHAI

May 2, 1930

DEAR SISTER,

I was very happy to see your signature on the letters about the meetings. You know how much I value your signature.¹

Shankerlal told me about your activities and I was glad to hear it.

Ask Mridu to give me a report of her work.

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11133. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

252. MESSAGE TO SAHU SABHA, BOMBAY

KARADI, May 2, 1930

I hope that the Sahu Sabha will receive support from all patriotic non-Brahmins. The present struggle is intended to bring relief to millions and not to any particular class or caste.

The Bombay Chronicle, 3-5-1930

¹ Vide also “Draft letter to Viceroy”, 27-4-1930.
253. LETTER TO J. C. KUMARAPPA

May 3, 1930

MY DEAR K.,

Publish in the I.S.R. only. You are doing bravely. If I.S.R. refuses, let me know.

BAPU

SJR. J. C. KUMARAPPA
GUJARAT VIDYAPITH
AHMEDABAD

From a photostat: S.N. 10086 and 10087

254. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

May 3, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS

Bhai Sundaram was formerly an inmate of the Ashram. He has the virtues suggested by his name. He had left the Benares University and come to us. He will stay there for a few days. Cultivate his acquaintance and introduce him to the others. I shall write about other things after I get the mail.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8109. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

---

1 Indian Social Reformer
2 This sentence is not in Gandhiji’s hand but has been retained out of the four alternatives typed on the postcard.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
255. LETTER TO OCHCHHAVLAL PANDYA

May 3, 1930

BHAIOCHCHHAVLAL,

Bhai Kamalashankar is very keen to join the struggle. Earlier you have encouraged your brother to take part in such activities. I should like you to do the same now. Every family should take part in this struggle.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: Kamalashankar Pandya Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

256. CERTIFICATE TO V. A. SUNDARAM

[About May 3, 1930]

V. A. Sundaram has been in touch with me since 1915 and was in the Satyagraha Ashram for a long time from its foundation. He has left the Benares Hindu University with Pandit Malaviyaji’s blessings to join the Struggle. The best use that can be made of him and his wife¹, who is also with him in his decision heart and soul, is for both to go to Tamil Nad and there to break the salt laws, to assist in organizing, especially in his own district of Coimbatore, boycott of foreign cloth through the takli and boycott of intoxicating drinks.

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 3207

¹ The original bears no title. The G.N. register however, describes it as a certificate.
² It appears, this was written about the same time as the preceding item, in which Gandhiji wrote to the same effect.
³ Savitri
257. TO THE PEOPLE OF KHEDA

In Gujarat at present the Kheda district seems to have become the centre of our struggle. Nowhere else in Gujarat do we find the same repression as in that district. There they arrest or release whom they like, beat up or abuse all and sundry. People may be said to have remained fairly quiet and peaceful in spite of provocation. But Kaka- saheb observed some shortcomings also. People submit to the repression but in their severe boycott of the Government men there is anger and ill will and hence violence. They harass the Government officials in petty ways and call them names. This is not the way to success. We may denounce bureaucracy to our heart’s content, but not the men in office. The poor officer is like any of us. Time was when, if not we, our own kinsmen wanted to be Headmen or Mamlatdars and we flattered the Mamlatdars. Now that our love of office is gone, how can we expect that theirs too should go? It is true that it should go. We should humbly try to cure them of their infatuation, and show them the evil that is there in the office of Mamlatdar or Sub-Inspector of police, but in no way should we vent our anger on a Mamlatdar or a Sub-Inspector of police. No matter how severe our boycott, it should be full of sweetness and courtesy. If it is not so, some day even a riot may break out. The Mamlatdar or the Sub-Inspector may cross the limits of decency. One might say that the Sub-Inspectors of Police have already crossed the limits, for I know that one of them insulted a person like Maganbhai Desai and manhandled him. Would it be surprising, then, if people should similarly cross the limits? If some regard it decent not to go beyond abusive speech, how can they blame others who draw the line at slapping the former? And once violent hands are laid on another, where will it all end? As things are still under control, it is time for the Kheda people to take heed and change things wherever necessary. Within the limits I have laid down, they are free to continue the different boycotts they have put into effect. Let me mention those limits. The reader should go through and understand Kaka saheb’s article along with this. Let us take a Headman as an example.

If the Headman belongs to the village, he cannot be deprived of his place of residence or denied provisions. The boycott should be confined to his duties as Headman. That is, his orders should not be carried out, not a drop of water demanded by virtue of his authority should be given and no provisions demanded by him for the visiting officials should be supplied. Should he, however, fall ill, we ought to serve him lovingly. If we lack the power or the love to help him thus we should give up the boycott altogether. Take it as gospel truth that if any boycott proceeds from a feeling of malice or enmity it will bring us no good, at any rate in our present struggle.

Some may say that this non-violence is a difficult thing. That is true. And still non-violence is as easy as it is difficult. It is easy for those who understand it. For others it is more difficult than even flying in the air. It was because I was fully aware of this that I did not include in our programme the boycott of officials. As the people themselves took it up, I have let it go on and even encouraged it in my speeches. But I have always mentioned the limits within which it should be practised. Nothing will be lost and it is still not too late, if the boycott is given up because the limits of non-violent boycott cannot in practice be observed.

I ought to admit that I am unconcerned with defeat or success. For I know that victory will come only with non-violence and that, whatever the good results violent methods may seem to promise, ultimately they will bring defeat. The ruddy cheeks of a tuberculous patient are not a sign of health, but a portent of imminent death. This, however, is not my whole story.

It does not surprise me that people cannot digest the non-violence that requires them to suffer beatings without demur. And yet that is what our original pledge contains. People have on occasion done quite well. I know that when the Thakore of Dehvan in complicity with the police made an attack on the people, the people could have fought back but did not. There have been several other occasions of the same kind, but people proved their fortitude by remaining quite peaceful. They deserve to be congratulated on their conduct. However, if they do not regard peaceful conduct as their duty but remain peaceful reluctantly, such peace will not last long. People will either begin to run away or fight back in self-defence, and both these are forbidden in our present struggle. People can neither run away nor fight back. The present struggle is one which requires us to learn the secret of living by dying.

No one has ever said so far that there is no victory in store for those prepared to face death. Some there are who doubt whether the people have the capacity to die, but many no longer have that doubt. It is possible to take the figures for the last World War and show that our loss in men and money during the four weeks of this struggle is only a fraction compared to that borne by each State participating in the terrible war in Europe. And, moreover, we have advanced. If our present struggle remains non-violent to the very last, we shall win swaraj without having incurred, during our whole struggle, the loss in men and money incurred in a single day of the European War. After this there should be no room for doubt. And if doubt goes, the necessary climate of public spirit is certain to build up.

So much for social boycott.

Now about discipline.

If the volunteers lack the sense of discipline, we shall find ourselves in a difficult position. In war discipline is everything. At the time of the Crimean War, the officers of the British army committed such blunders that vast numbers of soldiers were killed. The poor soldiers went on obeying the orders given and met their death. The stupidity of the officers has been forgotten, but the bravery of the soldiers has been immortalized in the golden words of a famous poem by Tennyson. This is how he enumerates the virtues of true soldiers:

- Theirs not to make reply,
- Theirs not to reason why,
- Theirs but to do and die.

I feel that this is as it should be. It does not mean that the true soldier suppresses his reason. Before a man enlists in the army he should fully use his power of reason, know his commander and study the rules of service. After this, if he discusses at every step the sub-rules as and when they are framed, and if he weighs the pros and cons of the orders issued, his time would be wasted in thinking and arguing and the progress of work will be hindered. If every soldier claims for himself the right to argue with the commander, the battle might be lost. Therefore a soldier, having enlisted himself, should suspend his reason. If after enlisting oneself as a soldier, one gives free rein to one’s reason and indulges in arguments on the subject of one’s duties, one’s reason will lose steadiness of purpose. That would be misuse of reason.

Everyone in Kheda who understands this should carefully observe our rules of discipline.

Carding and spinning are essential aspects of this discipline. The volunteers who do not card and spin should leave this movement for swaraj. Our motto is: ‘Swaraj through the thread of yarn.’ To those who have accepted the motto, it is no longer a subject of discussion, but a duty to be practised. No matter if spinning does not seem necessary as part of the Salt Satyagraha; it is essential as part of the swaraj movement. True the salt tax has not been removed; our struggle, however, is not merely for its abolition but for winning our freedom.

Just as carding and spinning are essential, so is being clad in khadi from head to foot. This goes without saying.

The people of Kheda have been evincing boundless enthusiasm. If that enthusiasm is pure and non-violent, the peaceful activity of spinning is both its sign and its food. Quiet enthusiasm is always constructive, and its opposite begins and ends only as a wave of excitement.

I have one thing in particular to add. Not only Raas, but other villages also have taken the pledge of non-payment of land revenue. I like this pledge. Those who keep it will make a name in Indian history as heroes. But the consequences of the pledge need to be considered.

The person taking the pledge should be ready to let go his land, his homestead and his cattle, and do it without resorting to violence himself or through others. He who has faith that we shall get swaraj will not let anything disturb him. He is prepared to lose his land and his homestead. Even if he loses them now, he will have them returned to him. The Government can never appropriate them for all time. But those who lack such faith should at present take no risk at all of non-payment of the land revenue. In the Congress programme at present there is no mention whatever of non-payment of revenue, and hence one who pays up the tax has nothing to be ashamed of. However, the man who has self-confidence, who has the power to endure suffering, who can make sacrifices for his country or his commander, such a person will, on his own responsibility, refuse to pay land revenue. He has the right not to pay it.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 4-5-1930
I have never minced words in criticizing lawyers. Mahadev, during his short reign, castigated them to his heart’s content. But the lawyers did not misunderstand him. They saw that the shafts he aimed at them were shafts of love. Though the lawyers deserve criticism, their contribution to the fight for freedom is no mean one. Pherozeshah Mehta, the uncrowned king of Bombay, was an eminent lawyer. The Lokamanya was a lawyer. Manmohan Ghosh, Lalmohan Ghosh and Lalaji, the Lion of the Punjab, all of them were lawyers. Deshbandhu, who sacrificed lakhs in the service of the country, was also a lawyer. Motilalji, Malaviyaji, Vithalbhai Patel, Sardar, Jairamdas, Rajagopalachari, Prakasam, Venkatapayya, Santhanam, Munshi, Kamdar, Purushottamdas Trikumdas and Broker, all these are lawyers, and the President of the Congress himself is a lawyer. This list is not exhaustive. I have mentioned only the names which occur to me at the moment, but many others can be mentioned.

The lawyers have, therefore, no reason to feel ashamed of their contribution, but there is none to feel elated either. If despite the sacrifices of all these lawyers people speak ill of lawyers—even I have done so—there is reason for that.

People expect every lawyer to be a patriot, as they expect every Brahmin to possess spiritual knowledge. A lawyer, by his very profession, is an advocate of people’s rights, an expert in law and politics and one who saves the victims of oppression by the State. When, therefore, a class of people who should regard service of the country as their profession give themselves up to the pursuit of self-interest, lead a life of self-indulgence or have no other aim than making money by encouraging litigation, people naturally speak ill of them. Though, taken absolutely, the number of patriotic lawyers named above will not appear insignificant, if we have regard to the total number of lawyers and the magnitude of their task, it will appear small indeed.

Lawyers have not remained untouched by the present awakening. The sacrifices of Shri Munshi and other lawyers stem from the present struggle. I see that lawyers who dare not or cannot give up practice, still wish to do some service. I hear that many lawyers in Bombay have stopped wearing hats and foreign clothes. Some lawyers in Gujarat have come forward to investigate the cases of those against whom atrocities are being committed. All this is welcome indeed. But, leaving aside the question of their giving up practice, the important thing is that they should come forward in large numbers to offer civil disobedience and remain undeterred if the courts cancel their sanads. They cannot betray the country for the sake of their sanads. If in consequence of their doing national work they lose their sanads, they should welcome this as if they had been cleansed of dirt. If lawyers thus become fearless they can help the people of their districts in many ways. If they shed fear, lawyers can

1. keep accounts of public funds;
2. explain legal intricacies to the people;
3. enquire into civil disobedience cases which have been arbitrarily dealt with and bring them to light;
4. be present at places where there is fear of violence;
5. explain to the people all cases of arbitrary use of authority;
6. enquire into injustices being perpetrated at present and point out to the public the Government’s misdeeds;
7. help in manufacturing khadi;
8. help the women in bringing about boycott of foreign cloth;
9. since in every province almost all the prominent leaders have been arrested, lawyers can lead the people and encourage the present spirit of fearlessness.

I have suggested these items only by way of illustration. Those who are keen on doing service will think up many fields in which they may do it.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 4-5-1930
Picketing

The proprietor of a liquor booth in Ahmedabad thrashed innocent labourers who had committed no crime. In Surat, foul abuses were hurled at women and clods of earth thrown at them. In Jalalpur, they have started using filthy language towards women. The women who endured all this deserve to be complimented. But what about men? When women are abused, it is not necessary for any man to come forward to fight on their behalf. One should not fall into a panic when abused by a drunkard or the proprietor of a liquor booth. All the same, men cannot remain idle in such circumstances. They should go and meet the proprietor, plead with him courteously, collect people’s signatures on statements condemning such conduct and publish them. The proprietors of liquor booths should also realize that they ought not to insult women. I am convinced that, if every case of such misconduct is brought to people’s notice in courteous language and public feeling in this regard is explained to the proprietors, the latter will certainly desist from such misconduct. They should wisely give up on their own a business which is becoming less and less paying.

Gift from a Parsi Girl

I reproduce below, without any change, the letter which a Parsi girl has written to me.¹

In just the same manner, Parsi children in Vapi gave Rs. 300 and one little girl among them asked whether she might join the struggle. When such innocent children show a desire for service, who can help believing that they are prompted by God? I see no insincerity in these girls.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 4-5-1930

¹ The letter is not translated here. The girl, aged 7, had said she was sending Rs. 10 as her contribution to the cause.
I hope that no one will be frightened by the sword which the Viceroy has hung over the printing-presses.

It is the duty of the people to criticize the bureaucracy. It is our duty to wish that it be destroyed, to commit civil disobedience, to persuade Government servants to give up their jobs and the recruits to leave the army, and to persuade the people to refuse to pay taxes when they have the strength to do that. And yet, under the Government’s law, every one of these acts is an offence. The new Ordinance notifies that the Government can seize any press which is guilty of any one of these offences. Every editor and printer of a newspaper should regard it as a sin to obey such a law. If at the present time, when the people have shed fear and are committing civil disobedience of immoral laws, editors of newspapers show weakness, they are bound to harm the cause of the country.

Any press, therefore, which is served with a notice to furnish security should refuse to do so and prefer to close down the paper instead. If all the presses act in this manner, the Government’s Ordinance will remain unenforced.

In this struggle full advantage is being taken of the help which newspapers can give, but it does not at all depend on such help. People have realized their strength and know what they should do. So there is little at present which newspapers can give them. We may not get some news of distant places, but we can do without it. I hope, therefore, that no press will furnish security. If people observe this measure of self-restraint, they will find that the new Ordinance does not remain in force for long.

Newspapers can be brought out hand-written and, if people now feel a burning desire to work for the welfare of the country, countless such newspapers can be brought out every day. If people really wish, they can make thousands of copies of hand-written papers. For instance, I may dictate the contents of one issue to fifty men at a time and distribute the copies to fifty persons. The latter should then produce fifty copies each with the help of their friends. We shall thus have 2,500 copies. If these 2,500 copies repeat the process once again, how many copies would we get? The poor at any rate would not object to doing this. All that is necessary is to create such zeal in them.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 4-5-1930
261. CAUTION ABOUT KHADI

At the present time, when khadi is not easily available in the market, traders who love neither their country nor their own good name and whose only aim is to make money anyhow wish to secure khadi of some sort from any source, and do not hesitate to pass off mill-cloth as khadi, charging eight rupees for stuff worth two rupees. Shri Shankerlal Banker writes as under so that khadi-wearers may save themselves from such traders.¹

I wholly agree with these views and I hope that no one will buy cloth sold as khadi from any store not certified by the Spinners’ Association. Those who have fully understood the process by which boycott of foreign cloth is to be brought about and know that the boycott cannot succeed unless we produce khadi, should wait if khadi is not available and should not, in their haste, let themselves be deceived and wear as khadi cloth which is not really khadi.

An effort is being made to stock khadi in khadi bhandars approved by the Spinners’ Association. If people follow the new method which I have suggested, we shall have a huge pile of khadi in a few days. Those who wear khadi should spin and persuade others to spin. Those who are required to spin should not buy yarn from known sources in the market, but should increase the number of spinners. That is, they

1. should spin themselves;
2. should persuade their relations to spin;
3. should persuade their neighbours to spin;
4. should introduce new spinning-wheels in the neighbouring villages or persuade the residents to spin on the takli;
5. should induce pupils and teachers in schools under their influence to spin.

I have merely mentioned a few of the possible fields in which they can work. In this country of thirty crores, one can think of countless methods of inducing people to card and spin, and I have no doubt that if all men and women who have some experience of this work exert themselves, they will change the face of the country.

¹ The letter is not translated here.

I appeal to greedy traders to exclude khadi from the sphere of their operations. They should not sell khadi at all; or, if they sell it, they should sell only pure khadi and be upright in their dealings. Let it not be said of khadi that when it becomes scarce its price goes up. When khadi has won its rightful place, there will be no scarcity of it. Cotton will be grown in one’s own fields and the skill will be supplied by the family; how, then, will there be any scarcity of khadi? Today we do a business which cannot but ruin us. We have cotton in our homes but we sell it away to foreign countries and, though we can manufacture khadi with our own hands, we let the hands remain idle and wear cloth imported from foreign countries. Let us, at this time of national awakening and self-purification, give up our lethargy, work hard and, with the help of khadi, make a perfect success of the programme of foreign-cloth boycott.

[From Gujarati]

*_Navajivan, 4-5-1930*_
262. KAKASAHEB

Kakasaheb has now followed Mahadev and it can be said, therefore, that Navajivan has made a good contribution to the struggle. Kaka, however, was connected recently more with the Vidyapith than with Navajivan. He was its Principal, and so his imprisonment brings credit to the Vidyapith. The Vidyapith’s Chancellor is in jail, its Principal is in jail; its graduates, its students and teachers are candidates for imprisonment or for something better even than that. Can there be any better measure than this of the worth of the Vidyapith?

But a time is now coming when imprisonment, instead of earning praise, will earn ridicule. When a thing becomes common, it no longer requires compliments. That it is necessary to praise something is not a good sign. We desire that what we praise should become common and, when it becomes so, we cease praising it. There was a time when imprisonment was looked upon as deserving praise. Now praise is given to people who are beaten by the police or who face bullets. It is, therefore, probable that in a very short time people who are imprisoned will be regarded with suspicion. They will say: ‘So and so was afraid of bullets and, therefore, courted imprisonment.’ We can sense such an attitude in the cases of Mahadev and Kaka, and it is natural.

In truth we can go much further than this. No one should wish to go to jail or be beaten or hanged. We should be ready to face all that and more, if there is any ‘more’. If a man to whom being hanged and being garlanded are the same does national work in his home, his doing so has the same value as—or even greater value than—his being hanged. There is great honour in being hanged. But ordinarily no one honours a person who is busy writing day after day, his head bent low, keeping accounts or courteously listening to people’s complaints and helping them with advice. But often such work can have greater value than facing death.

Kaka’s statement teaches something else too. The description of the atrocities being committed in the Kheda district is honest testimony. It gives us some idea of the goonda rule which prevails there. Kakasaheb was pained, and rightly, that some people ran away when assaulted. If no one runs away in the face of a police assault, such assaults will stop automatically. When we get such strength, we shall soon get the strength to face bullets.

In his statement, Kaka has drawn our attention to one more fact. Though there is an atmosphere of non-violence in the Kheda district, everybody has not been able to assimilate the spirit of non-violence. Kaka has drawn up the rules laying down the limits of social boycott after observing the conditions in Kheda. Everyone should read them, understand them and abide by them. There can be no malice or anger in satyagrahi boycott.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 4-5-1930

263. TELEGRAM TO MOTILAL NEHRU

JALALPUR, May 4, 1930

I suggest 10th or 13th as the day for the meeting of the working committee, the 12th being Monday, the day of my silence. No doubt the earlier date would be better and I suggest Jalalpur as the venue.

The Hindu, 6-5-1930
DEAR FRIEND,

God willing, it is my intention on . . . to set out for Dharasana and reach there with my companions on . . . and demand possession of the Salt Works. The public have been told that Dharasana is private property. This is mere camouflage. It is as effectively under Government control as the Viceroy’s House. Not a pinch of salt can be removed without the previous sanction of the authorities.

It is possible for you to prevent this raid, as it has been playfully and mischievously called, in three ways:

1. by removing the salt tax;
2. by arresting me and my party unless the country can, as I hope it will, replace everyone taken away;
3. by sheer goondaism unless every head broken is replaced, as I hope it will.

It is not without hesitation that the step has been decided upon. I had hoped that the Government would fight the civil resisters in a civilized manner. I could have had nothing to say if in dealing with the civil resisters the Government had satisfied itself with applying the ordinary processes of law. Instead, whilst the known leaders have been dealt with more or less according to the legal formality, the rank and file has been often savagely and in some cases even indecently assaulted. Had these been isolated cases, they might have been overlooked. But accounts have come to me from Bengal, Bihar, Utkal, U.P., Delhi and Bombay confirming the experiences of Gujarat of which I have ample evidence at my disposal. In Karachi, Peshawar and Madras the firing would appear to have been unprovoked and unnecessary. Bones have been broken, private parts have been squeezed for the purpose of making volunteers give up, to the Government valueless, to the volunteers precious salt. At Mathura an Assistant Magistrate is said to have snatched the national flag from a ten-year old boy. The crowd that demanded restoration of the flag thus illegally seized is reported to have been mercilessly beaten back. That the flag was subsequently restored betrayed a guilty conscience. In Bengal there seem to have been only a few prosecutions and assaults about salt, but unthinkable cruelties are said to have been practised in the act of snatching flags from volunteers. Paddy fields are reported to have been burnt, eatables forcibly taken. A vegetable market in Gujarat has been raided because the dealers would not sell vegetables to officials. These acts have taken place in front of crowds who, for the sake of Congress mandate have submitted without retaliation. I ask you to believe the accounts given by men pledged to truth. Repudiation even by high officials has, as in the Bardoli case, often proved false. The officials, I regret to have to say, have not hesitated to publish falsehoods to the people even during the last five weeks. I take the following samples from Government notices issued from Collectors’ offices in Gujarat:

---

1 The letter was drafted on the eve of Gandhiji’s arrest. He was arrested at 12.45 a.m. on May 5.

1. Adults use five pounds of salt per year, therefore pay three annas per year as tax. . . . If Government removed the monopoly people will have to pay higher prices and in addition make good to the Government the loss sustained by the removal of the monopoly. . . . The salt you take from the seashore is not eatable, therefore the Government destroys it.

2. Mr. Gandhi says that Government has destroyed hand-spinning in this country, whereas everybody knows that this is not true, because throughout the country, there is not a village where hand-spinning of cotton is not going on. Moreover in every province cotton spinners are shown superior methods and are provided with better instruments at less price and are thus helped by Government.

3. Out of every five rupees of the debt that the Government has incurred rupees four have been beneficially spent.

I have taken these three sets of statements from three different leaflets. I venture to suggest that every one of these statements is demonstrably false. The daily consumption of salt by an adult is three times the amount stated and therefore the poll tax that the salt tax undoubtedly is at least 9 annas per head per year. And this tax is levied from man, woman, child and domestic cattle irrespective of age and health.

It is a wicked falsehood to say that every village has a spinning-wheel, and that the spinning movement is in any shape or form encouraged or supported by the Government. Financiers can better dispose of the falsehood that four out of every five rupees of the public debt is used for the benefit of the public. But those falsehoods are mere samples of what people know is going on in everyday contact with the Government. Only the other day a Gujarati poet, a brave man, was convicted on perjured official evidence in spite of his emphatic statement that at the time mentioned he was sleeping soundly in another place.

Now for instances of official inactivities. Liquor dealers have assaulted pickets admitted by officials to have been peaceful and sold liquor in contravention of regulations. The officials have taken no notice either of the assaults or the illegal sales of liquor. As to the assaults, though they are known to everybody, they may take shelter under the plea that they have received no complaints.

And now you have sprung upon the country a Press Ordinance surpassing any hitherto known in India. You have found a short cut through the law’s delay in the matter of the trial of Bhagat Singh and others by doing away with the ordinary procedure. Is it any wonder if I call all these official activities and inactivities a veiled form of Martial Law? Yet this is only the fifth week of the struggle!

Before, then, the reign of terrorism that has just begun overwhelms India, I feel that I must take a bolder step, and if possible divert your wrath in a cleaner if more drastic channel. You may not know the things that I have described. You may not even now believe in them. I can but invite your serious attention to them.

Anyway I feel that it would be cowardly on my part not to invite you to disclose to the full the leonine paws of authority so that the people who are suffering tortures and destruction of their property may not feel that I, who had perhaps been the chief party inspiring them to action that has brought to light the Government in its true colours, had left any stone unturned to work out the satyagraha programme as fully as it was possible under given circumstances.

For, according to the science of satyagraha, the greater the repression and lawlessness on the part of authority, the greater should be the suffering courted by the victims. Success is the certain result of suffering of the extremest character, voluntarily undergone.

I know the dangers attendant upon the methods adopted by me. But the country is not likely to mistake my meaning. I say what I mean and think. And I have been saying for the last fifteen years in India and outside for twenty years more and repeat now that the only way to conquer violence is through non-violence pure and undefiled. I have said also that every violent act, word and even thought interferes with the progress of non-violent action. If in spite of such repeated warnings people will resort to violence, I must disown responsibility save such as inevitably attaches to every human being for the acts of every other human being. But the question of responsibility apart, I dare not postpone action on any cause whatsoever, if non-violence is the force the seers of the world have claimed it to be and if I am not to belie my own extensive experience of its working.

But I would fain avoid the further step. I would therefore ask you to remove the tax which many of your illustrious countrymen have condemned in unmeasured terms and which, as you could not have failed to observe, has evoked universal protest and resentment expressed in civil disobedience. You may condemn civil disobedience as much as you like. Will you prefer violent revolt to civil disobedience? If you say, as you have said, that the civil disobedience must end in violence, history will pronounce the verdict that the British Government, not bearing because not understanding non-violence, goaded human nature to violence which it could understand and deal with. But in spite of the goading I shall hope that God will give the people of India wisdom and strength to withstand every temptation and provocation to violence.

If, therefore, you cannot see your way to remove the salt tax, and remove the prohibition on private salt-making, I must reluctantly commence the march adumbrated in the opening paragraph of my letter.

I am,
Your sincere friend,
M. K. GANDHI

Young India, 8-5-1930

265. LETTER TO DR. SYED MAHMUD

P. O. JALALPUR,
May 4, 1930

DEAR DR. MAHMUD,

I was delighted to receive your frank letter. I would have been disappointed if you had concealed your opinion.

I do not plead guilty. I was not indifferent. I was most considerate to every Mussalman who came to me. I spent hours with several who had come to see me. This is no matter to parade about. I simply acted according to my wont. There was nothing special about it. But with you I stood on no ceremony. I felt that it was no business of mine to pay attention to you. I expected you to tackle me on any and every point that called for criticism or alteration. You may not know that to those who know me and whom I know and work with I am most inattentive. In no other way can I possibly go through the work before me. I wonder if I have made my point clear and given you satisfaction. If not, please tackle me again.

I have not yet got your appeal which you said you were sending. But I have seen a reference to it. Nevertheless I am concocting some formula and if I succeed I shall publish it in Y. I.

I expect to see you at W.C.' meeting if I am still free.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

[PS.]
This was written at three places: at the camp, in the train and finally at Surat.

From a photostat: G.N. 5082

266. LETTER TO PADMAVATI

May 4, 1930

CHI. PADMAVATI,

I was very glad to read your letter. I do remember our conversation. Keep the pledge which you have taken. Give yourself wholly to the work there. Go outside and work fearlessly. If you do so other women will also come out. Forget the difference between Gujaratis, Madrasis, etc. Like Draupadi, have trust in God and give up all fear.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4587
267. LETTER TO SURAJBHAN AGRAWAL

KARADI,
May 4, 1930

BHAI SURAJBHAN,

I have your letter. You all have my blessings of course. Keep writing to me. Where is Yashoda Devi? What work are the ladies doing? No doubt there are difficulties. But endeavour and God’s grace will overcome them.

It does not surprise me that Lala Dunichand’s wife is engaged in work.

Blessings from

BAPU

SATURAJBHAN AGRAWAL
SATYAGRAHA CAMP
ROHTAK (PUNJAB)

From a photostat of the Hindi: Sumangal Prakash Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

268. INTERVIEW TO J. B. KRIPALANI

May 4, 1930

Mahatma had anticipated the situation which had arisen today. He had fully expected that his lieutenants would be taken from him and he was glad to observe that the younger folks had kept up their spirits and were yearning for more work. He was, however, most anxious that this energy should be harnessed to the utmost in constructive work. If the Government did not arrest the volunteers, Mahatma felt they should engage themselves in constructive work, such as producing more yarn and carrying on intensive propaganda to popularize the charkha and the takli. He also wanted them to learn to live the camp life, and to live like soldiers. The soldiers did their own cleaning and polishing and engaged in mock fights and other healthy sports and the volunteers also should do so. Volunteers should not lose sight of drilling. Discipline, Mahatma felt, would be half the battle won.

1 On hearing of the arrest of Lala ShamlaI of Rohtak, the addressee with Gandhiji’s permission, had gone to Punjab in April; vide also. “Letter to Lala Dunichand”, 6-4-1930.

2 Based on a report of the interview. J. B. Kripalani had met Gandhiji a few hours before the latter’s arrest.
Mahatmaji felt that it was the Government game not to arrest the rank and file of law-breakers but to tire them out. He wanted the volunteers not to play into the Government’s hands by losing their patience. He wanted them to carry on the work in every branch of national regeneration, namely, production of khaddar and more khaddar to replace foreign cloth. He also wanted the volunteers to engage themselves in an intensive prohibition programme by propaganda, picketing and felling of date trees. It was not necessary that women alone should do all this, especially in the United Provinces and Bihar, where there are very few women. In provinces like Bihar and U.P., Mahatmaji wanted that women should be helped by men. He felt that the initiative in these provinces should be taken by men.

. . . Mahatmaji also felt that the people could select other laws also to break wherever they could conveniently do so without prejudice to the salt laws. Mahatmaji also felt that this should be the case particularly in the provinces in which salt could not be produced on an economic basis, or where there were no facilities to manufacture salt. Mahatmaji had in view in this connection, the Chaukidari Tax in Bihar and the Forest Laws in the Central Provinces.

Mahatmaji also felt . . . that Dharasana would supply many volunteers with work, as volunteers from other parts of the country might be required if the Government were to effect the arrest of the “raiders”. Mahatmaji saw the possibility of another Gurukabag at Dharasana. He also felt that the stage had come when those who could do constructive work need not court jail. If the present enthusiasm were to be utilized for the lasting good of the country, it must be directed into constructive channels even as the electric current generated by a dynamo.

Regarding picketing, Acharya Kripalani said that he had narrated to Mahatmaji his experiences of picketing of shops, which contained both foreign and swadeshi cloth. He explained how some merchants dumped on the market mill-cloth as khaddar. In reply, Mahatmaji said that he had expected that picketing would not be quite effective but it was necessary to create an atmosphere for swadeshi, which could succeed only by the production of khaddar on a mass scale. Will agents, he said, could help if they co-operated with the political workers, and themselves helped in the production of khaddar by refraining from producing cloth below a particular count, which could be left to hand-spinning.

In this connection, Mahatmaji said he had many talks with Seth Ambalal Sarabhai and Mr. Birla. Mr. Birla had understood his point of view, and had decided to open a khadi organization near his village in Marwar under his own supervision. Seth Ambalal Sarabhai also had very nearly understood his point; but it looked as if other mill-owners only wanted to use him (Gandhiji) as their advertising agent. Mahatmaji was apprehensive that unless there was extensive spinning taken on hand at once the swadeshi movement would fail in the absence of production and it would be possible for merchants to cheat the public. When once the public discerned that they were paying higher prices for doubtful stuff, their confidence in the national workers would be so shaken that they would cease to listen to them and even would fight them.
Therefore, the only possible way for the mill-owners to fight Lancashire and Japan was to co-operate with the nationalist workers by refusing to spin yarn below a particular count and, what was also equally important, by controlling the prices.

_The Hindu, 14-5-1930_

269. SPEECH AT SURAT

May 4, 1930

It is not by means of the power of intellect that people are able to observe vows they take.1 There must be a thorough change of heart and faith in God, which alone could give them the necessary strength. I have been defeated in prohibition campaign as a man and therefore I have asked women to help the movement. If anybody could melt the heart of drunkards it is woman. I have often asked Ministers in charge of Excise Department to put a stop to drink traffic. They have replied that I must find out for them new sources of revenue. I have told them to stop giving education to boys but they would not adopt the suggestion. If in swaraj we have liquor traffic, our President will have to face a similar problem afterwards. We are also not as adventurous as Americans, who are successfully making America dry. We have become emasculated and therefore I appeal to you to tackle this question first.

The present time is the most opportune and auspicious. I appeal to you with all earnestness to observe the vows you have taken. Do not deceive me; if you are unable to give up drinking, say so openly; I will congratulate you even then. My own son confesses honestly that he is not able to give up the drinking habit, and I congratulate him on his truthfulness. Even so you must be truthful so that I may not miscalculate. God alone will help him, my son, and you, who are unable to give up drink. If you deceive me, you deceive your community and the whole country.

Referring to the insult offered to some women picketers at some places Gandhiji said that if they had not considered women as low creatures working for men and as objects of their lust then nobody could have dared to raise a finger against them.

But even if they will stone them, they will continue picketing. “Pussyfoot” lost his eye in anti-drink propaganda to make America dry, but did not give up his campaign. India will have to answer for every insult offered to women. This is my last throw; and I am out to lose my all. But all this I do for the liberation of India. If one district

---

1 Panchayats of Surat city had passed resolutions asking members of their respective communities not to drink liquor.
is ready, we will surely have swaraj. You must purify yourself, you must be industrious; there is no other way for achieving swaraj.

_The Bombay Chronicle, 6-5-1930_

270. THE PROBLEM OF MINORITIES

[Before May 5, 1930]

Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru sent the following note to Mahadev Desai on March 16th. Mahadev Desai being too busy was unable to attend to it. It has now been forwarded to me, and I have no hesitation in presenting to the public the President’s views on the vexed question of minorities. It derives added significance from the fact of his incarceration.

_Young India, 15-5-1930_

271. NOTE ON J. B. PENNINGTON’S LETTER

[Before May 5, 1930]

Mr. Pennington’s argument cannot appeal to one like me who has experience. A mountain of argument is dissolved before one touch of experience. Great as is my regard for the late Sir T. Madhav Rao, I must be pardoned for not endorsing his encomium of British rule. I shared the deceased statesman’s views myself at one time. But bitter experience corrected them. Every one of the arguments advanced by Mr. Pennington has been answered in these pages.

_Young India, 8-5-1930_

---

1 This was evidently written before Gandhiji’s arrest on May 5.
2 Vide Appendix III.
3 The letter is not reproduced here.
Friends from Bombay have been to me asking me to lead a raiding party from there instead of from Karadi, assuming of course that a raid is to be decided upon. I should be proud and consider it a privilege to lead it provided that certain preliminary conditions are fulfilled. I observe that there is a great deal of misunderstanding about this contemplated raid. It has arisen because of the use of the word “raid”. Now all my speeches in Gujarat are invariably delivered in Gujarati. The word “raid” therefore is not the one I had used. I admit, however, that it is a legitimate translation of the original. But my audience knew the original word “dhad” used to alliterate with “dhar” in “Dharasana”, was used playfully. Fortunately or unfortunately even for a non-violent war military expressions have got to be used. But even as nobody is deceived by the use of such military expressions, no one need be perturbed over the use of the word “raid” when it is to be civil, non-violent or satyagrahi. The use of that potent adjective alters the whole colour of the transaction. But however innocent the raid, if it ever comes into being, may be, it will be fraught with consequences perhaps far more serious than those flowing from a violent raid. Those, therefore, who would join the contemplated raid have to satisfy some test, and since the battle is meant not merely for the removal of the salt tax but for establishing Purna Swaraj, the conditions have to be in keeping with the objective. They are three: 1. Observance of complete discipline. 2. Complete abstention from drink under a permanent pledge. 3. Wearing of hand-spun khaddar also under a permanent pledge and actual spinning on the takli for one hour per day except when spinning is made impossible through want of time or capacity. If Bombay produces a hundred thousand such men I should lead them without the slightest hesitation. I know that the citizens of Bombay will not laugh at my conditions nor will they consider them impossible of fulfilment. The only difficulty they might feel will be about the takli. Surely if a hundred thousand men in Bombay have the will takli spinning is child’s play. Sustained work from day to day may be a task for easy-going citizens of Bombay but Freedom’s battle has never been won by easy going people. No one need be irritated against me for maintaining these conditions because they are not in any sense obligatory; they are meant to be a consideration in a voluntary contract. It is open to the citizens of Bombay to reject my terms and do as they please. Rejection then of terms will not make them less Congressmen than they are today.

The Bombay Chronicle, 5-5-1930

273. ARREST AT MIDNIGHT

KARADI,

MAY 5, 1930

The Magistrate proceeded to Gandhiji’s hut and woke him up.¹ “I have a warrant for your arrest, Mr. Gandhi,” said the Magistrate. Gandhiji asked politely:

I am not surprised, but will you read out the warrant to me?

The Magistrate complied with this request and read the following which was signed by Sir Frederick Sykes, Governor of Bombay.

“Whereas the Government view with alarm the activities of Mr. M. K. Gandhi, they direct that he should be placed under restraint under Regulation 25 of 1827 and suffer imprisonment during the pleasure of the Government and be immediately removed to the Yeravda Central Jail.”

Gandhiji was smiling when the warrant was being read. He said:

I am prepared to accompany you, but will you allow me to have a wash and clean my teeth?

“With pleasure,” said the Magistrate.

In the meantime, the whole Ashram was up, and everyone was anxious to have a parting ‘darshan’ of Gandhiji. Having finished his wash, Gandhiji came out of the cottage to say his prayers. The whole Ashram knelt down to recite the prayers while the police officers watched. Gandhiji himself led the chorus. He then collected his papers and gave them in charge of a volunteer whom he had chosen as Captain during his incarceration.

The Bombay Chronicle, 6-5-1930

¹ The District Magistrate accompanied by the Superintendent of Police and a party of 20 armed constables arrived at Gandhiji’s camp at 12.45 a.m., when Gandhiji was asleep.
274. INTERVIEW TO “THE DAILY TELEGRAPH”

BORIVLI,
May 5, 1930

Gandhi seemed surprised when he saw my companion and myself, for both of us were known to him. He greeted us in the most friendly manner.

“Have you a farewell message you would like to give, Mr. Gandhi?” I asked. He replied:

Shall I give it now or shall I wait?
“You had better give it now,” I replied.
He paused, seeming to be at a loss for words and somewhat dazed by events. Then he answered:

Tell the people of America to study the issues closely and to judge them on their merits.

“Have you any bitterness or ill will towards anyone?” I asked.
None whatsoever; I had long expected to be arrested.

Do you think your arrest will lead to great disturbances throughout India?
No, I do not; in any case I can honestly say that I have taken every possible precaution to avert disturbances.

Then you anticipate no troubles?
The Mahatma hesitated for a moment and then replied:
I hope not; I have done my best to prevent them.

At this point the law intervened. Inspector Gordon stepped forward, saying; “Now, Mr. Gandhi, if you are ready, please.” Only one person accompanied Gandhi from the train, a doctor of the Indian Medical Service, who remained silent in the background. He now took his seat alongside the prophet, with Inspector Gordon sitting by the chauffeur. . . .

The Hindu, 27-5-1930

1 Gandhiji was escorted in a train to Borivli, a suburban station of Bombay, and from there taken by car to Yeravda. Vide “Extracts from The Daily Telegraph report”, 27-5-1930.
275. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL ROHTAGI

May 6, 1930

DEAR DR. JAWAHARLAL,

Sjt. Ramratan Gupta has been to see me regarding foreign-cloth picketing. I have given it as my opinion that picketing once begun cannot be easily suspended. But I do feel that it should be done methodically and by women even if they are few. It is suggested there will be no picketing in Delhi and none in Calcutta. I do not know what is happening at the two places.¹ But I feel sure that Cawnpore alone should not be singled out for picketing. But of course what I am saying is to be taken for what it is worth. Not knowing all the facts, I am unable to say anything about the particular Cawnpore case. I can therefore suggest a general formula which I have done.²

Yours,

M. K. GANDHI

From a facsimile: Dr. Jawaharlal Rohtagi Abhinandan Granth, between pp. 176-7

¹ Vide also “Notes”, 1-5-1930.
² Ibid.
DEAR MAJOR DOYLE,

Having thought over our conversation, I have come to the conclusion that I must avoid, as much as possible, the special privileges offered to me by the Government!

Books and newspapers I do not want through the Government. Of newspapers, I would send for these if permitted:

- The Bombay Chronicle,
- The Times of India,
- Indian Social Reformer,
- Modern Review,
- Young India and Navajivan (Hindi and Gujarati).

If these are allowed, I take it that they will not be mutilated.

The Government have suggested Rs. 100 as monthly allowance. I hope I shall need nothing near it. I know that my food is a costly affair. It grieves me, but it has become a physical necessity with me.

Neither you nor the Government will, I hope, consider me ungrateful for not accepting all the facilities offered to me. It is an obsession (if it is to be so called) with me that we are all living at the expense of the toiling semi-starved millions. I know too that the saving caused by my economy can but be an infinitesimal drop in the limitless ocean of waste I see going on round me, whether in prison or outside of it—much more out of it. I admit nevertheless it is given to man only to do very little. He dare not omit to do that little.

Again, I hold radical views about prison treatment.

I have never taken kindly to the classification recently made. I hold that a murderer is just as much entitled to have his needs supplied as any other prisoner. What is therefore needed is not a mechanical makeshift, but a human adjustment.

---

1 The text of this was communicated by Doyle to the Home Department on May
One thing I must mention. I do feel the necessity of contact with the satyagrahi prisoners who are in this jail. It is wholly unnecessary, it is cruel, to isolate me from them.

Yours truly,

M. K. GANDHI

Bombay Secret Abstracts, 750(5)-A; also S.N. 19971

277. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

YERAVDA,
May 12, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

Yours is the first letter I take up to write from the jail and that on the silence day.

I have been quite happy and have been making up for arrears of rest. The nights here are cool and as I am permitted to sleep right under the sky, I have refreshing sleep. About the change made in the manner of taking the diet, you will learn from my general letter.

It was a great treat to receive the wheel so thoughtfully sent and with things so carefully packed in it. The carding-bow, the Superintendent tells me, was lost on the way by the friends who brought it. I am in no hurry for it as you have sent me a liberal quantity of slivers.

I do not know who sent me the books. They are not what I wanted. They were to be sent back to the library. The list of books that were to be sent to me when I was arrested was given by me to Kusum. But I suppose she left the Ashram without giving instructions to anybody as to what was to be sent or, if she did, she gave wrong instructions. However this mistake does not matter much as I do not miss the books just now. I am giving as much time as I can to the takli. I find that I have no speed on it at all. I hardly get thirty rounds in one hour. For the first day I gave nearly seven hours to nearly reach 160 rounds. I was washed out at the end of the performances. I must learn the trick of getting more speed. I am therefore in no hurry to go to the books.

1This was actually posted on May 16; vide “Letter to Miraben”, 18-5-1930.
I hope you had good news from mother about her health and otherwise.

The prison officials are all kind and attentive.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

I believe it will be possible for me to receive the Ashram post. You may therefore send a weekly letter together with the Ashram post.

From the original: C.W. 5395. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9629

278. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

[May 12, 1930]

CHI. NARANDAS,

Show this letter to all, so that I need not write about the same things to everyone.

Most probably I shall be able to write to you and you will be able to send a reply once a week.

I keep excellent health. I get up in the morning and go through the routine according to the Ashram rules. There is a light in the room so that, according to my rule, I can read chapters from the Gita. I have been resting after many days of fatigue and, therefore, must be sleeping for probably two or three hours during the day. Generally I sleep at eight in the morning and twelve at noon. I have resumed eating oranges, which I had given up during the march. On the first day I took cold milk, and I have continued it for the time being. I take about three seers. Probably I shall have to reduce the quantity a little. Or I may have some of it made into curds. In the morning, too, I drink cold water instead of hot water. This I do only as an experiment. The authorities have of course supplied the facilities for heating water, etc. If, however, I can preserve my health with cold water, why should I go to the trouble of heating it? I have given up honey. Even for bathing I have been using cold water, but I intend to change over to hot water from tomorrow. The goat is brought before me and milked in my presence, so that the milk is as clean as I would like it to be. If cold milk does not suit me, I will certainly heat it. They have given me

1From Bapuna Patro — 9: Shri Narandas Gandhine, Part I one person to clean the utensils and do other work. The diet includes dates and raisins too. No one need worry in the least about my food. Write to Jamnabehn and tell her that no one need take the trouble to send me any fruit. I shall get from here everything I may require. Tell Anasuyabehn that she need not pay any money here, as she used to do on the previous occasion. It is not at all necessary to do so. We have no time, ought to have none, to take unnecessary care of anyone. We have no money, ought to have none, to throw away.

The air here is considered to be good. I sleep in the open as I used to do there.

If you have still not received the money from Gordhanbhai Patel, remind him to send it.

I do spinning regularly. I make a skein of what I spin each day and get someone to spray water over it. Send me Vanatshastra and Takli-shikshak along with other books. I never ascertained my speed with the takli when I was outside. I tried to ascertain it here and found that I hardly spin 30 rounds in one hour. I ought to be ashamed of this speed. It means that I went on spinning but did not learn the secret of doing it well. I can now master it only by experimenting. I, therefore, give plenty of time to the work. I practise on a bamboo takli. It is necessary for everyone of us to acquire complete control over the takli. It is easy to do so if there is someone to teach us. I saw children in Karadi who could draw out thread with playful ease. All that is necessary is that they should feel interest in the work. In Wardha there are persons who have reached the speed of 80 rounds in half an hour. Kanti Parekh told me that he spun that many. The people there who have learnt to spin on the takli should ascertain their speed; let me know what it is in each case.

How is Purushottam? How is Kanu?

Give me news about Khushalbhai. I had written to him.

Is Mathew at peace?

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8110. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi
279. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

YERAVDA,
Silence Day, May 12, 1930

CHI. PREMA,

You had stopped writing to me. But I knew that you did not write because you wished to save my time and also because you yourself had no time. Nevertheless, I regularly enquired after you and got news of you. I like your self-restraint very much. I had not expected it from you. You should now write to me every week without fail.

You will get news about me from my letter to Narandas.

To whom did Kusum hand over my things when she left the Ashram? Did she entrust to you the books which were to be sent to me in prison if I was arrested? Among them were the Ramayana, the Koran, etc. Inquire about the matter and if you find the books easily, send them to me. I am in no hurry to get them.

Write to me and tell me who remain in the Ashram and what work they are doing. What is your own special work?

No one should worry about me.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Who is in charge of the library?

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 6669. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak
280. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

YERAVDA,

Silence Day, May 12, 1930

CHI. GANGABEHN,

I hope you do not worry. I often think about you. Write to me. Did Nath pay a visit there? For how many persons do you have to cook now? I am not writing today to the other women.

You will get news about me from my letter to Narandas. Inquire from Narahari and let me know how Kamalnayan, who lives in the Vidyapith, is faring.

Who has been specially asked to look after Hari and Vimala? How is Lakshmi? The manner in which we look after Hari and Vimala will be a test of our love.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3083
281. LETTER TO ASHRAM CHILDREN

YERAVDA PALACE,

Silence Day [May 12, 1930]

BIRDS,

Birds are real birds when they can fly without wings. With wings any creature can fly. If you, who have no wings, can fly, you will feel no fear at all. I will teach you how to fly in this manner. See, I have no wings and still I fly every day and come to you, for in my mind I am in your midst. There is Vimla, and here are Hari, Manu and Dharmakumar. You also can fly with your minds and feel that you are with me. A child who can think does not require much help from a teacher. A teacher may guide us, but cannot give us thoughts. Thoughts arise in our own minds. A child that behaves well will always have good thoughts. Who, amongst you, does not pray properly with Prabhubbhai? Write a letter to me, signed by all of you. Any child who cannot sign may draw a swastika.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati Ashram Samachar, 18-5-1930: S.N. 16834-a

---

1 The Monday before May 18, 1930, the date of the source
2 The name is omitted in the source. This is taken from Young India, 22-5-1930, where Mirabehn has translated this letter.
282. LETTER TO BALBHADRA

[On or after May 12, 1930]

CHI. BUDDHICHAKRA.

It seems the name Buddhichakra has clung to you. It is not a bad name. One whose buddhi\(^3\) is like a chakra\(^4\) may also be a person of perfect character, for a circle is a perfect thing. It has no beginning and no end as a straight line has. Moreover, he who lives with his mind turned inward should be regarded as a person whose intellect is like a circle. That is the true intellect which turns our mind inward.

_Blessings from_ BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati _Ashram Samachar_, 18-5-1930: S.N. 16834-a

283. LETTER TO KASTURBA GANDHI

[On or after May 12, 1930]

Take this letter as meant for all. How good it was that I met you all on Sunday evening and accompanied you back as far as your camp? I was very happy that I did so. God is showering His grace on me. Let all the women write to me. All the letters should be put in one envelope. Most likely I shall get those letters. If I don’t get them, it will not matter. Do not feel nervous, any of you. All the verses in the section of women’s prayer were purposely selected. The very first verse teaches us a great deal. The last three verses of the _Gita_ which have been included sum up the whole prayer. They are like the kalasha on the top of a temple which adds lustre to the temple and completes its beauty. I hope the verses in this prayer are recited every morning with careful attention to their meaning.

_Blessings from_ BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati _Ashram Samachar_, 18-5-1930: S.N. 16834-a

---

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to Balbhadra”, 11-9-1930.

\(^2\) Gandhiji started writing letters from jail on May 12, 1930.

\(^3\) Intellect

\(^4\) Wheel

\(^5\) The source does not mention the addressee, but Mirabehn, writing _Young India_, 22-5-1930, says that this was addressed to Kasturba Gandhi.
284. EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS TO ASHRAM INMATES

[On or after May 12, 1930]

1

This letter is for all the girls. Do all of you live as you should? Do you work? Do you think Gangabehn would give you a certificate? Have you kept up the habit of rising early? If you have given it up, resume it.

Blessings from

BAPU

2

CHI.

I was often told that you were impatient to go outside the Ashram and work. You are now of an age when you can understand things. We should do with the fullest sense of responsibility any work which falls to our lot. What difference does it make whether you go outside to work or remain in the Ashram?

Blessings from

BAPU

3

CHI.

I hope you had calmed down soon afterwards. I had not thought that you were such a nervous type. But do not worry. Are Kasturbehn and you still together or have you separated? You should not feel it necessary to remain with her all the time. One should learn to be independent and take up responsibility on oneself.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati Ashram Samachar, 18-5-1930: S.N. 16834-a 1 Addressees are not known.

285. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
[On or after May 12, 1930]

CHI. KUSUM (SENIOR),

Does your being senior mean that you are counterfeit or genuine? You have left the Ashram but do not forsake the path of service. You can write to me. May God bless you.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1799

286. LETTER TO RAMABEHN JOSHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
Silence Day [On or after May 12, 1930]¹

CHI. RAMA,

I used to be happy to see you. I had not thought that you would show such courage and fortitude. How is Mahalakshmi? How are the two Dahibehns?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5321

¹The year is given in Bapuna Patro—7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshine.
287. EXTRACT FROM LETTER TO DEVDAS GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
May 13, 1930

CHI.

Since I do not know where you are, I write to you at the Ashram address. There is God to worry for us all and we need not, therefore, worry on account of one another. You know about me, that ultimately I never come to harm. God always clears my path. Where else in the world would you find a sweeper like Him? If he did not always purify us of our mental uncleanness the world would have become unbearably filthy long ago. Outward filth is only a sign of the uncleanness in our minds. If the inner uncleanness remains, what does it help however completely we wash away the outward filth? I at any rate derive much strength from this thought. . . .

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati Ashram Samachar, 18-5-1930: S.N. 16834-a

---

1 Mirabein, in Young India, 22-5-1930, says that this was addressed to Devdas Gandhi.

2 As in the source
H. E. THE VICEROY OF INDIA

DEAR FRIEND,

The authorities having permitted the use of newspapers, I am able somewhat to follow the course of events in the country. I should fail in my duty if I did not express my opinion on your latest statement.¹

You seem to ignore the simple fact that disobedience ceases to be such immediately masses of people resort to it. Do you not see that hundreds of men who have been known for their peaceful nature, who have an unbroken record of service to their credit and whose integrity is beyond suspicion are imprisoned? They are no law-breakers; they are no haters of the English. And what of the most peaceful demonstration of thousands of simple villagers who are by instinct the most law-abiding? To describe the movement of such men and women as lawlessness is, in my opinion, doing violence to the language. The very motive which is the essence of crime is lacking. It is the noblest of motives which takes away men like the hoary-headed Abbas Tyabji from their soft ease to court the hardships of a jail life.²

You protest your affection for India. I believe in your profession. But I deny the correctness of your diagnosis of India’s disease. The best constitution that can be devised will fail to bring real contentment and peace unless the grievances on which public attention is concentrated are immediately removed. The salt tax cannot remain. The liquor revenue must go. The foreign cloth importation which has produced a partial paralysis of the village life must be stopped. Have you not noted the strength of popular feeling in these matters? Or are the hundreds of thousands of men and women...

¹ The letter was drafted on May 12, finalized on May 18 and handed to the Superintendent, Major Martin, the following day.
² On May 12, announcing that steps were being taken to hold the Round Table Conference in October, the Viceroy had declared: “Neither my Government nor His Majesty’s Government will be deflected by these unhappy events from our firm determination to abide by the policy I was privileged to announce in November last.”
³ The draft did not have the words: “to their credit”.
⁴ The draft has “that”.
⁵ Abbas Tyabji was arrested on May 12.
women who are taking part in the movement wicked-minded or misled or fools and the English officials the best judges of what is good for India?

If I am not mistaken, you will find the spirit of the people to be proof against repression, no matter how severe it may be. You will not coerce millions of people into subjection for all time. India must not live for England. She must live for herself, so as to enable her to make her contribution to the world’s progress. As a slave nation she is a mere burden on earth because it is a false life. No Round Table Conference can therefore be of any avail, unless you see things from our standpoint and, leaving coercion, rely simply on carrying conviction. Even those who you think are with you are with the Congressmen so far as wants are concerned.

I remain,

Your sincere friend,

M. K. GANDHI

Bombay Secret Abstracts, 750(34), pp. 41-2; also S.N. 19972

289. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

Unrevised May 18, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

You must be in possession of my last silence day letter. It was posted only on Friday I fear. This should go earlier. It is now after 8 p.m. Sunday. I take silence at 3 p.m. on Sundays as a rule. Of my life here you will learn from my general letter. I have more than doubled the quantity of yarn spun. It is nearly 400 rounds on the wheel and 55 to 60 on the takli. It is all well moistened and properly packed. For the wheel yarn it is 5 strands of 75 C.A. put together daily. The takli yarn is one strand of nearly 160 rounds. It will be interesting to know what strength I am spinning. The whole performance takes up 6 hours daily. I do not grudge the time. I am not doing much reading this time nor do I want to collect a lot of books as I did last time. I should like to perfect my spinning if I can. Presently I shall have to card. I observe I have still 10 days’ supply of slivers. All this news is not given in the letter to N.

1 The draft here has “however severe”.
2 The letter as published in Bapu’s Letter’s to Mira here has “rounds”.
And how is Reynolds getting on? How is he taking the heat? My love to him. In your weekly letter you may give all the news that is not political.

I think I told you last time that I had started translating the verses and hymns in the hymn book. I am nearing the end of the morning verses.

I hope you are keeping perfect health. You will not overstrain yourself on any account.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5396. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9630

290. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

May 18, 1930

CHI. PRABHUDAS,

Hope you are keeping well. What have you ultimately decided about Vijapur? Write to me in detail. Do the children now pay attention to the prayers? Has the heat affected you adversely?

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32947
291. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIIDYA

Silence Day [May 19, 1930]¹

CHI. GANGABEHN,

I remember every day all the women and the children, but I do not worry about anything. Here, too, I keep myself busy and do not remain unoccupied even for a minute. That way alone can I have peace of mind. I can see God only through work. The Lord says that He is ever working without taking a moment’s rest. How else, then, can we know Him except through work?

If you do not read the translation of the Gita and if you have time, read it. If, however, you have no time, you need not read it. Devotion to duty is the living Gita; the other one is merely a book.

I have written to as many persons as I could. But I do think of even those men and women to whom I have not written. How can I possibly write to all? I write to those who I feel specially need some words of comfort from me.

How is your son-in-law?

Does Nath visit the Ashram? When you write to him, tell him that I often remember him. He ought to visit the Ashram occasionally.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 8749. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

¹From Bapuna Patro — 6: G. S. Gangabehnne
292. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL

May 19, 1930

CHI. MANI,

God will be your shepherd. I remember you daily. I hope you are no longer depressed.

Blessings from

BAPU

CHI. MANIBEHN PATEL
NADIAD

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro — 4: Manibehn Patelne, p. 71

293. LETTER TO NARAHARI PARIKH

May 20, 1930

CHI. NARAHARI,

I do not know if your tongue dances, but I see that your pen has been dancing. How many benefits flow from my living in the jail palace?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9053
294. LETTER TO PREMLILA THACKERSEY

YERAVDA JAIL,
May 20, 1930

DEAR SISTER,

I can do a little sewing on the machine. While I have time here, I wish to learn it well. The authorities have permitted me to secure a machine. Since you are helping some women to earn their livelihood, I believe that you will certainly have some machines, and hence I trouble you with this request. If you have them and if you can spare one, kindly send it. If you don’t have any, please let me know. I shall get your letter.

Vandemataram from Mohanadas

LADY PREMLILA VITHALDAS THACKERSEY

POONA

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 4813. Courtesy: Premlila Thackersey; also G.N. 71

295. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

May 20, 1930

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

What shall I say to comfort you? God will assuredly protect you. You can write to me. I should indeed like you to do so. Tell Kamalabehn1 to take care of her health. Convey my respectful greetings to Swarup Rani2. My blessings to Sarup3, Krishna4. If Jayaprakash is outside convey my blessings to him. Write to me at the Ashram address. I keep fine health. I eat the same food here that I did outside.

Do not worry about me.

Blessings from
Bapu

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3388

1 Wife of Jawaharlal Nehru
2 Wife of Motilal Nehru
3 Vijayalakshmi Pandit
4 Krishna Hutheesingh
296. INTERVIEW TO "DAILY HERALD" 1

May 20, 1930

Our conversation began with a general exchange of ideas on British and Indian politics. I then asked him to explain frankly what he meant by Independence. Did he demand Independence as ultimately implied in Dominion Status? Or did he insist on separation from the British Commonwealth?

I have always heard that in England Dominion Status is understood to mean Independence, but by the Indian authorities it is not so understood. Therefore when Independence is resisted by them in contradistinction to Dominion Status we naturally asked for Independence.

When I asked him if he thought that Canada and South Africa were not in all essential respects independent, he acknowledged they were. He added significantly:

But we are not offered a status like theirs.

I asked him if he had calculated all the perils involved in his campaign of civil disobedience. He replied that he had:

I have taken what has been called a mad risk. But it is a justifiable risk. No great end has been achieved without incurring danger.

Nevertheless he was gravely alarmed at the violence said to have been committed at Sholapur. He grieved at the death of two policemen killed there, but he was convinced the violence had not come from the civil resisters. They had, he said, been ordered to suffer everything, even violence, without offering resistance.

I asked if he thought that in a struggle between law-breakers and the authorities Government could acknowledge defeat, and Gandhi smiled. He said:

I am an optimist. In forty years of struggle I have frequently been told I was attempting the impossible, but invariably I proved the contrary.

Nevertheless he did not refuse to negotiate.

My life has been nothing but a record of settlements. If the Government is in earnest in its desire to satisfy India it should grant the eleven points demanded in my last letter to the Viceroy.

1 The interviewer was George Slocombe.
I can only judge the tree by its fruits. Until we get satisfaction we shall fight on until the end, and give our lives if need be in the cause of Indian freedom. We shall fill all the jails in India with our passive resisters and our breakers of the salt laws, and we shall make all administration impossible by our opposition.

Mr. Gandhi admitted, however, that even in the remote event of victory negotiation would still be necessary, and he was prepared to do anything to avoid bloodshed and suffering if the essential cause of Indian nationalism did not lose thereby.

From our subsequent conversation I gathered that even at this critical hour a settlement is possible and that Mr. Gandhi is prepared to recommend to Congress the suspension of the Civil Disobedience Movement and co-operation in the Round Table Conference on the following terms:

(1) The terms of reference of the Round Table Conference to include the framing of a Constitution giving India “the substance of independence”.

(2) Satisfaction to be granted to Mr. Gandhi’s demands for the repeal of the salt tax, the prohibition of liquor, and a ban on foreign cloth.

(3) An amnesty for prisoners convicted of political offences to coincide with the end of the Civil Disobedience campaign.

(4) The remaining seven points raised in Mr. Gandhi’s letter to the Viceroy to be left for future discussion.

The Bombay Chronicle, 23-5-1930
297. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
May 18/21, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS,

The letter I wrote to you last Monday seems to have been posted as late as Friday. That is what a jail is, after all.

See that my letters are not published.

Write to Thakkar Bapa and inquire whether the work on wells for Antyajas is proceeding. If he is short of funds, give him some money from what is lying with us, that is, from the money which we have handed over to Jamnalalji.

My hours are divided as follows:

- Brushing the teeth, lavatory, bath: 2 hours
- Prayers, twice: 1 hour
- Nap during day-time: 1 hour
- Meals and preparation for them: 3 hours
- Repairing the spinning-wheel, blowing and spraying the yarn, etc.: 3 hours
- Spinning on the takli: 2 hours
- Walking in the yard: 1 hour
- Reading, meeting the Jailor: 2 hours
- From 4 a.m. to 9 p.m.: 17 hours

I discovered from experience that oranges were not necessary. I have, therefore, given them up for the present. This means that my diet consists of dates, raisins, milk and curds, and sour lime and soda bicarb. If I find it necessary to do so, I will include oranges. I found today that by adding a fairly good quantity of curd to unboiled milk, we get well-formed curd. Yesterday I had mixed curd in unboiled milk. I still take unboiled milk. I keep good health. I was weighed again and I found that I had lost no weight.

I am at present reading Edwin Arnold’s The Light of Asia. I do not get a newspaper. It is the Times. I shall now be supplied the Chronicle.

1The Times of India
too. I have been permitted to get Young India, Navajivan, The Modern Review and Indian Social Reformer. If I want, I can get some others too.

I think I wrote to you that I had started bathing in hot water.

You need not worry about me at all. This time going to jail is enjoying oneself.

I was very glad to read Kumarappa’s name in Young India. He is certainly a worthy man.

You can write a letter giving general information and send with it as many others of the same type as you like.

I cannot give any political message. You can give information about everyone.

Does Rukhi write to you? How is she? Do you hear from Umiya? Tell Kusum junior that she has not replied to my special letter. She is a cunning girl. Navin and Dhiru must be doing fine. Boys, girls, all of them can write to me.

How is Dr. Kanuga, the person for whom vegetables are sent from the Ashram?

You must have made arrangements for Amina’s confinement. Where is Imam Saheb? How is he?

Who were the four boys who were let off as being too young? Where are they? Which are the places the women have spread themselves over?

How is the work going on in the dairy, the tannery and on the farm? How many looms are working?

The well near the office was to be cleaned. If it has not been cleaned and if it can be, get it cleaned. Is Keshu contented? How is his health?

Tell Radha to write to me. I do not write separately to her. I feel like writing to many others, but how can I do that?¹

Blessings from

BAPU

¹ This was written on May 18 and 19. The postscripts were written on May 21.
I do not regard the experiment of making curds from unboiled milk to have succeeded completely. On the first day, I thought it was all right. I do not know whether the quantity of curd mixed in the milk was not correct, but the next sample was not well formed. The experiment is continuing.

BAPU

Prabhavati’s address: A.I.C.C. Office, Allahabad.

From Gujarati: C.W. 8111. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

298. LETTER TO REGINALD REYNOLDS

May 22, 1930

MY DEAR REYNOLDS,

I have your love-letter as also news about you from Mira. By all means go. If you feel like coming and seeing me before you leave, do come. There will be no difficulty about your seeing me.

God be with you wherever you may be.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

I wanted to write to your fiancee but it was not to be. But if you send me her address, I would still write. Tell her I received her letter the day of my arrest.

From a photostat: C.W. 4536. Courtesy: Swarthmore College, Philadelphia
299. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

YERAVDA PLEASURE HOUSE,
May 25, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

Again I commence this on Sunday after the silence and after the evening prayer.

When you came time seemed to be running against us. I therefore simply allowed you all to talk instead of myself talking and asking a lot of questions. You were not at all looking well. You seemed to have been pulled down. That won’t do. You must take proper exercise and proper food. You must take all the fruit you may need and keep yourself fit.

I realize now as never before how careless I was not to have mastered the details about arranging the large bow. As I have some mechanical ability, I have suspended it and have already begun working at it since Thursday last and have a fair stock of punis but there is something wrong about it. The long cord hangs from the roof. There are two strings hanging from the bamboo. I have joined the two and I pass the thin cord over the joined strings thus:

The bamboo work does not stand steady but is inclined to turn round and round. Of course, the wall prevents it. But I fancy that it should not turn at all even if there was no wall preventing it. If you have understood what I have described and if there is any flaw, you will tell me.

Your takli is well made but it [is] too heavy for fine spinning. I have no doubt that the bamboo is the thing. My speed is better now. I have done 65 rounds today in 1_ hours—not bad for me. I would do better when I shed my nervousness and draw the thread without fearing to break it.

My translation of one verse per day from the prayer-book continues. I wish I could do more. But the spinning and carding won’t leave me any more time. And now I must make time for the sewing-machine. I was glad you came.

Love.

BAPU

1 Slivers
How do you make rigid the little wheel on the spindle when it gets loose?

From the original: C.W. 5397. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9631

300. LETTER TO SARALADEVI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
May 25, 1930

DEAR SISTER,

I have received the fruit sent by you. I am asked to write to you not to send them hereafter. Any fruit I require is given to me here. Mangoes and oranges are given to the Jailor to eat. When there has been conflagration on all sides how can I eat mangoes? I took oranges for two or four days and [then] gave them up. I do not see any necessity for them. [If] I require I shall indeed take them. I shall ever cherish the love behind the idea of sending fruit. I hope the children are all right.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

This is a translation. The original letter is not available.
DEAR CHANDRASHANKAR,

The Jail Superintendent has shown me your letter. For the present I will not ask for any book. The books already here are lying [unread]. The whole of the spare time is spent in spinning and carding. Some time is devoted to reading.

I hope your health is all right. If it is not so, improve it. You must have forgotten the pang [of separation]. You must be seeing Kaka. Where is Kamalnayan? If he is there, ask him to write.

Blessings from

BAPU

CHI. SUSHILA,

What kind of a husband have I given you? But no, you cannot say that I gave him to you. He was your own choice. You cannot, therefore, blame me. I hope you do remember how much I had cautioned you. In any case, you can go one better than he; so how can you or I complain? I hope Sita alias Dhairyabala is quite happy.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 1180. Courtesy: Sushila Gandhi; also G.N. 4768

1This is a translation. The original letter is not available.
YERAVDA MANDIR,
May 26, 1930

CHI, NARANDAS,

Gujarati letters were received here last week, but they have not yet been given to me. I got Mirabehn’s and Mathew’s letters because they were in English. That is how it is! But this will not go on for many days—if God wills.

My weight is practically the same; perhaps it has gone up by half a pound.

The diet, too, continues to be the same. Now I get perfect curds from unboiled milk. The milk forms into curd in 24 hours. I had mixed a fairly good quantity of curd with the milk.

I have finished reading two books: The Light of Asia and The Saints of Islam. I am now reading a book on prisons written by an Inspector-General of Prisons of the Punjab, which was sent to me by a friend. I simply get no time for reading. Seven hours are taken up by the spinning-wheel, the taksi and carding. On some days, when the wheel requires no repair, it is less than seven hours, and on some other days it is more. I am not unhappy about this. I love work. My skill in the work increases because I have to do everything myself, and I discover very small faults. The yarn which I spin on the taksi has improved very much in quality. The speed, too, has gone up.

I think very little about things outside. I am so busy with work that I get no time to think about them. I fix my eyes on the central teaching of the Gita, and so enjoy peace of mind. If I did not do that, though I am supplied newspapers, reading about all that happens would have made it difficult for me to experience peace. The prayers twice a day and the daily reading of the Gita have proved a great support to me.

Is there any news about Krishna Nair, Surajbhan and Jayanti Prakash? How is Satis Babu? Write to all to whom you send letters and tell them that they are not to be published. Friends may certainly read them.

How is Jamna’s health?

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8112. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi
304. LETTER TO JANAKIDEVI BAJAJ

YERAVDA MANDIR,
Silence Day [May 26, 1930]

DEAR JANAKIBEHN,

How are you? I hope you have not lost your courage. How is Madalasa? Do not be anxious about Kamalnayan. Have you not learnt this much by hearing Gita from Vinoba that we need not be anxious about anything?

Blessings from

BAPU

305. LETTER TO JAMNABEHN GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
Silence Day [May 26, 1930]

DEAR JAMNABEHN,

This is to tell you this much that no women should be anxious about me. I remember you all daily. Get a letter written to me and send it through the Ashram.

Blessings from

BAPU

---

1 This is a translation. The original letter is not available.
2 The date has been inferred from the placing of the item in the source.
3 This is a translation. The original letter is not available.
4 The date has been inferred from the placing of the item in the source.
306. LETTER TO NIRMALA GANDHI

Silence Day [May 26, 1930]

DEAR NIMU,

I hear from Ba that both you and your mother have returned to the Ashram. It was good. But what about your complaint about constipation? Are you not brave? How is Savitri? Is she called by this name or any other?

Blessings from

BAPU

307 LETTER TO RADHA GANDHI

Silence Day [May 26, 1930]

DEAR RADHA,

Your letter must be in the post which I have not received. If you have not written to me any letter, write to me one giving all the news. Where is Rukhi? How is she?

In great haste.

Blessings from

BAPU

---

1 This is a translation. The original letter is not available.
2 The date has been inferred from the placing of the item in the source.
3 This seems to be a slip for “Sumitra”, daughter of the addressee.
4 This is a translation. The original letter is not available.
5 The date has been inferred from the placing of the item in the source.
308. LETTER TO MAITRI GIRI

Silence Day [May 26, 1930]

DEAR MAITRI,

Have you become wise? Be a credit to the name of your father. How is Krishnamaiya Devi? Write to me a letter.

Blessings from

BAPU

309. LETTER TO GANGABEHN JHAVERI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

Silence Day [May 26, 1930]

DEAR GANGABEHN JHAVERI,

[I hope] you and Nanibehn are all right. Now can you stay alone? I do not write more as it is dark.

Blessings from

BAPU

---

1 This is a translation. The original letter is not available.
2 The date has been inferred from the placing of the item in the source.
3 This is a translation. The original letter is not available.
4 The date has been inferred from the placing of the item in the source.
310. LETTER TO GOMATI MASHRUWALA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
Silence Day [May 26, 1930]

DEAR GOMATI,

I hear that Kishorelal is keeping good health. Write to me in detail. How is your health? Where is Tari? If she is there ask her to write. Where is Nathu? How is he? Does he go to the Ashram? Which sisters are there?

Blessings from

BAPU

311. LETTER TO MOTIBEHN

Silence Day [May 26, 1930]

DEAR MOTIBEHN,

Ba told me that you were melancholy. How is that? One who studies Gita cannot have melancholia. How can one be melancholy who is daily in meditation with God and believes that He resides in the heart? Drive out melancholia.

Blessings from

BAPU

---

1. This is a translation. The original letter is not available.
2. The date has been inferred from the placing of the item in the source.
3. This is a translation. The original letter is not available.
4. The date has been inferred from the placing of the item in the source.
5. Wife of Mathuradas Purushottam
312. LETTER TO DR. PRANJIVANDAS MEHTA\(^1\)

YERAVDA MANDIR,

May 26, 1930

DEAR BROTHER PRANJIVAN,

I remember you many times in the jail. You must be in good health. Do not worry about me.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

313. LETTER TO RATILAL MEHTA\(^2\)

May 26, 1930

DEAR RATILAL,

How do you and Champa fare? What work do you do? Do you write letters to Bapu\(^3\)?

Blessings from

BAPU

---

\(^1\) This is a translation. The original letter is not available.

\(^2\) ibid

\(^3\) Addressee’s father, Dr. Pranjivan Mehta
314. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PARIKH

May 26, 1930

DEAR MANIBEHN,

Narahari did after all go to jail. He received beating also. He is doubly fortunate. Are you completely courageous? Take care of your health.

Blessings from

BAPU

315. LETTER TO MITHUBEHN PETIT

YERAVDA MANDIR,

May 26, 1930

DEAR MITHUBEHN,

May God protect you.

Blessings from

BAPU

1 This is a translation. The original letter is not available.

2 ibid
316. LETTER TO AMINA QURESH ¹

May 26, 1930

DEAR AMINA,

At last Imam Saheb has after all gone to the jail palace. Perhaps Qureshi may have also gone. Is your health good? What arrangements have been made about confinement? How do children fare?

Blessings from

BAPU

317. LETTER TO SHANTA ²

Silence Day [May 26, 1930] ³

DEAR SHANTA,

How do you fare? Is your mind absolutely calm? Perhaps there might be a letter from you in the post which I have not received. If you have not written to me any letter, write to me.

Blessings from

BAPU

¹ This is a translation. The original letter is not available.
² ibid
³ The date has been inferred from the placing of the item in the source.
318. LETTER TO SONAMANI ¹

Silence Day [May 26, 1930]²

DEAR SONAMANI,

How are both you sisters? Have you learnt Hindi well? Write me all news.

Blessings from

BAPU

319. LETTER TO KALAVATI TRIVEDI ³

Silence Day [May 26, 1930]⁴

DEAR KALAVATI,

I await a letter from you. How is the state of your mind at present? What are you doing? Write to me your account.

Blessings from

BAPU

¹This is a translation. The original letter is not available.
²The date has been inferred from the placing of the item in the source.
³This is a translation. The original letter is not available.
⁴The date has been inferred from the placing of the item in the source.
320. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

Dear Gangabehn (Elder),

I remembered you when I was reading Ch. XII and XIII. I have written at the top of the translation of Ch. XII, which is short, that it is worthy of being committed to memory by all, if not in Sanskrit, at least in Gujarati. It is easy to understand it in Gujarati. When we know the line of devotion shown therein, we have finished all. You must have undoubtedly written a letter, but it has not yet come to my hands.

Blessings from

BAPU

321. LETTER TO P. G. MATHEW

May 26, 1930

My dear Mathew,

I was glad to have your note. If you have patience God will give you light and peace.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1552

---

1 This is a translation. The original letter is not available.
2 The date has been inferred from the placing of the item in the source.
3 In Anasaktyoga; vide “Anasaktyoga”.
322. LETTER TO PATRICK QUINN

May 27, 1930

DEAR MR. QUINN,

Will you please order raisins 2 lb., kishmish 1 lb. and send me some common writing paper or a scribbling pad?

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

323. LETTER TO MOHANLAL BHATT

Tuesday [May 27, 1930]

DEAR BROTHER MOHANLAL,

You are indeed doing well. Some two mistakes have been observed in the [translation of] Gita. I shall rewrite. Please send Indian Social Reformer and The Modern Review to me. We [used to] receive both of them. If they are not received please write to Messrs Natarajan and Ramananda Babu.

Blessings from

BAPU

---

1 Superintendent, Yeravda Central Prison
2 This is a translation. The original letter is not available.
3 The date has been inferred from the placing of the item in the source.
324. LETTER TO E. E. DOYLE

YERAVDA CENTRAL PRISON,
May 30, 1930

DEAR MAJOR DOYLE,

Today four visitors came to see me. Among these were Mrs. Captain and Mr. Reginald Reynolds. The other two were Miss Slade (Mirabai) and Mr. Mathuradas Trikumjee. The last two were admitted. As the Superintendent could not admit the other two, I had to decline to see Miss Slade and Mr. Mathuradas. At our very first conversation, you will recollect, I made it clear to you that I recognized no distinction between blood relations and others and that if the Government wanted me to meet my blood relations they should appreciate my viewpoint and let me also see those who like Mrs. Captain and Mr. Reynolds are as good as blood relations. I thought you had agreed to the position. But I may have misunderstood you. I want to blame nobody. I want no special privileges. I simply wish [you] to understand my position and would like the Government to know my viewpoint though they may not endorse it. I may not see my relatives if I may not see the others. This is no new attitude with me. I took it up in 1922 also and at that time there was no difficulty about my seeing those who were not blood relations. Of course, it is understood all along that there can be no political messages received or sent by me.

There are, too, my weekly letters hanging fire. These too I wrote as per our understanding, as I thought it was, namely, that non-political affairs written to my Ashram friends in one envelope would count as one letter.

I would appreciate an early clearance of both these issues.

I am,

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Bombay Secret Abstracts, 750(5) A, p. 65; also S.N. 19973

1 The draft (S.N. 19973) here has “letters”.
325. LETTER TO EDITOR, “WORLD FEDERATION”

May, 1930

DEAR FRIEND,

Just a line to thank you for your letter. I am too preoccupied to say more just now. I know that you are doing all you can for the country.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a copy: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

326. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

[May-June, 1930]¹

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I get your letters regularly now. I have already written to you about my health. Mirabehn wrote saying that she would give you some work where you are. If she has not done so, and if Jayaprakash is willing and Kamalabehn permits you may certainly go and join Ba. There is much to learn there these days. My weight is normal. You can write to me about anything you wish to do.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

What is Mrityunjai² doing? How is Grandmother³? How does Vidyavati keep? Write to Father and tell him that I often think of him.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 3307

¹ From the contents the letter appears to have been written some time in May-June, 1930 when Prabhavati was staying with Kamala Nehru; vide “Letter to Prabhavati”, 20-5-1930 and “Letter to Prabhavati”, 29-6-1930.
² Son of Rajendra Prasad and husband of Vidyavati, addressee’s sister
³ Rajendra Prasad’s wife
327. LETTER TO PATRICK QUINN

June 4, 1930

DEAR MR. QUINN,

Could you please send a jailor inspector if only for half an hour at the outside?

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

328. LETTER TO R. V. MARTIN

YERAVDA CENTRAL PRISON,

June 11, 1930¹

DEAR MAJOR MARTIN,

You have told me that the Government will permit seven of my blood relations to see me twice per week and the others only by their special permission. This means that my wife, who is not a blood relative, and naturally her brothers and other relatives, have to obtain special permission. I am sure this is a mere slip. But what is obviously contemplated is that those who are not related to me by blood or through marriage can, except Shrimati Mirabai Slade,² see me only by special permission of the Government. If this decision is not revised, I fear I must not see my relatives. I have in the Ashram and outside many widows, girls, boys and men, who are perhaps more to me than many a blood relative. If they may not see me on the same terms as relatives, to be just to the former, I must not see the latter.³

¹ The letter was delivered to R. V. Martin, the Jail Superintendent, the next day.
² The words “except Shrimati Mirabai Slade” do not appear in the draft available under S.N. 19974.
³ Regarding the privileges to be allowed to Gandhiji, the Secretary of the Home Department on June 17 wrote to the Inspector General of Prisons: “. . . I am directed to state that the word ‘relations’ should be substituted for the words ‘blood relations’ . . . . It was of course not intended to exclude Mr. Gandhi’s wife, or his brother-in-law and the like. I am further to say that if Mr. Gandhi refuses to see his relations, the only thing that can be done is to treat them like strangers and interviews regulated accordingly. . . .”
Although it is now a fortnight, I do not know what has happened to the Ashram letters that were received and those that I wrote. You told me that you had sent them to the I.G.

There is one more matter. I see Sjt. Kalelkar is to be brought here as companion for me. He is an esteemed co-worker, but if I conveyed the impression that I would like him to be brought here to keep me company, I am sorry. I would not like him to be torn from so many companions with whom he is placed at the Sabarmati Jail and come here to share my isolation. If he could mix freely with the other satyagrahi prisoners and keep company with me, I would naturally value his company, but I have no desire to have the joy of his company at his expense. What I would desire is naturally to be able to see all my satyagrahi friends who are in this jail. I repeat what I have told you so often: I do not desire special privileges. But if an ordinary prisoner may have the company of his fellows who may chance to be in the same prison, it may be lawful for me to entertain such a desire.

I am,

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original: C.W. 9316; also S.N. 19974

329. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

YERAVDA MANDIR,

Silence Day [On or before June 16, 1930]²

CHI. PREMA,

It seems it is your letter the authorities have held back. I am sure it was entirely innocent. But what can we do? If every letter were to be received a jail would have no meaning. Write again.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 6676. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

1 The draft has “both”.
2 In Bapuna Patro—5: Ku. Premabehn Kantakne it is suggested that this might have been written between May 12 and June 23.
330. LETTER TO RAMANANDA CHATTERJEE

YERAVDA CENTRAL PRISON,
June 18, 1930

DEAR RAMANANDA BABU,

Your letter of 25th May was given to me three days ago. I thank you for all you say in it. I was glad to learn that my brief account of Kavi Rajchandra was safely in your hands.\(^1\) I was wondering whether it had reached you or not.

I have permission to receive The Modern Review among other magazines. Will you please send me copies from the May number? I asked the Young India office some time ago to send me the magazine but somehow I have not received the copies. I did not write directly.

I hope to see your contribution in Young India before long.

Please remember me to Pandit Benarsidas Chaturvedi.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

SIT. RAMANANDA CHATTERJEE
120-2 UPPER CIRCULAR ROAD
CALCUTTA

From the original: C.W. 9314. Courtesy: Sita Devi

\(^1\) Vide “A great seer”, 18-3-1930.
331. LETTER TO PATRICK QUINN

June 18, 1930

DEAR MR. QUINN,
Will you please order:
Raisins 2 lb.
Dates 2 lb.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

332. LETTER TO KASHI GANDHI

June 18, 1930

CHI. KASHI,

I hope you are keeping well. I take it that you are at Vijapur. I will not write separately to Krishnadas. He should write to me a detailed letter. Who are the other persons with you there?

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33084
333. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

June 22, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

After many weeks I take up the pen to write Ashram letters again. The batch I sent you last I knew was held up and so was the batch from the Ashram. In the circumstances, I did not want to write. The way now seems to be fairly clear though I have not yet got all the weekly letters and I know that some have been withheld. They are from children. I am trying to secure them. I must have some reminders now and then at least of prison life.

No visits can be entertained so long as the difficulty remains, as it does, unremoved. If visits cannot be had on honourable terms, we must be content with writing letters if they can be honourably continued. If, therefore, you do not hear from me regularly, know that I am a prisoner. If I am really ill, walls will speak. The authorities will themselves proclaim it as they did last time and you could always inquire from them whenever you hear rumours, and I expect they will promptly give you the information. But I am hoping that there will be plain sailing so far as letter-writing is concerned. Just at present there is nothing wrong with me save for a trifling constipation. There is no cause for any anxiety whatsoever.

I have your latest letter, i.e., of the 9th instant. Nothing since. The instructions you give about the bow are quite good and quite enough. Yet I have hung it up the wrong way up but it has worked with perfect smoothness. The bow itself has not required any attention. I have finished carding all the cotton I had. The gut has not given in at all as yet. I used not neem leaves but leaves of some other tree resembling the tamarind. They are quite serviceable. You may send two pounds of cotton per anyone who may be going to Poona. There is no hurry. I have slivers enough to last till 15th July at least. I need not touch the bow till then. When I do, I shall rearrange the apparatus in accordance with your instructions.

About adjusting the wheel on the spindle too I understand. But here again nature has been kind to me. I adjusted the wheel in my own way and it has remained quite fixed. If there is trouble I shall try your prescription.

I note all you say about your own work. You shall act just as God leads you and your strength permits. May God bless you. More from the general letter.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5398. Courtesy: Mirabein; also G.N. 9632

334. LETTER TO PATRICK QUINN

June 22, 1930

DEAR MR. QUINN,

(1) Will you please order 2 lb. dates?
(2) My companion did not get vegetables and salt yesterday.
(3) He is still without the commode-pot, he has the box.
(4) He has not got his utensils, charts, etc., returned to him.

I am obliged to write for him because he has been brought here for my sake. His discomfort therefore becomes my discomfort. I therefore write about him quite selfishly.

And of course the eternal letters!!!

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

335. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
June 22/23, 1930

CHI NARANDAS,

I get your letters one by one. You will read about this from my letter to Mirabehn. I got three letters of yours, of 19th and 26th May and 10th June, one after another during the last six days. Other letters sent by you must be passing from hand to hand. I think I have still to receive two letters, of June 2 or 3 and of June 16. In future give me in your letters the names of those whose letters you may have forwarded. This is because some of them have not been given to me.

Do everything you can to please Ratilal. I am writing to him.

Please give the Japanese friend who wants to translate My Experiments with Truth the permission to do so. With this is a letter for the Bengali women. Rasjibhai and Shivabhai must have completely recovered now.

What work is Jagannath doing?

The experiment of making curds from unboiled milk has proved completely successful. Mostly I take curds instead of milk. Hence my present diet is curds, raisins or dates and juice of a lemon once a day. I still do not take any hot drink. Once only, when I had to take castor oil, I had taken hot water, lemon juice and salt twice. I drank milk on that day, but it was unboiled. This diet has had no harmful effects. I think, therefore, that I shall keep to this diet for the present. The weight is practically steady. It fluctuates by a pound. It is 105 at present.

Kakasaheb was brought here four days ago. He is keeping very fit. His diet is milk, bread, ghee and some fruit from what is allowed to me. He has made a request for vegetables, which will probably be granted.

I have added sewing to my daily work. I had asked for a sewing-machine from Lady Vithaldas and it has now arrived. I sew jail caps at present. I give to this work three-quarters to one hour daily.

My rate of spinning is 375 rounds minimum. The average would be 400. Spinning on the takli is also going on. I also spend considerable time in making my takli. I am trying to spin fine yarn.
The hand has set well and I spin with greater ease every day. I discover new virtues in the takli daily. Even more than the spinning-wheel it may prove to be the support of people in want, though, of course, both give peace of mind. I compared them today with the sewing-machine and clearly realized the moral value of manual work. Though I look upon the sewing-machine as an invaluable benefit, I do not regard it as a source of peace. When you work on it, you naturally wish to increase the speed and in the end the brain is bound to get tired. But once a person has acquired control over the takli, time passes more peacefully for him as he works on it than for the driver of a bullock-cart. This is my experience, though I have not become an expert spinner as yet I must wait and see what experience I have when I have acquired perfect control over the takli. Kak-asahbe, too, spins on it, but he has not discovered its secret yet.

These things are difficult for him to master. He knows that they are for our good and, therefore, is trying to love them. He does not want to start the spinning-wheel at present. He wishes to master the takli first.

I read only after I have performed the spinning yajna. I look upon sewing as a part of this sacrifice. I had received, and welcomed, the suggestion sent by Mathuradas. I implement it whenever I get an opportunity. Since Kaka is here, I am quite eager now. I started Marathi yesterday. I would be happy if I make at least some progress in it. If I advise everyone to commit the verses of the Gita to memory, should not I, too, do that? The attempt is like fixing the shape of a pot after it is baked. If at all it is worth making, however, this is the right place. I, therefore, started learning the verses eight days ago. I have learnt by heart Chapter XII and have now started Chapter XIII. Kaka’s coming has naturally interrupted the progress. I will do nothing by stealing time from the hours apart for the spinning yajna. I, therefore, do these things in spare moments in the course of other work or in the “library”¹, etc. Let no one be shocked to read that I try to learn the verses of the Gita by heart in the “library”. We have learnt from childhood that there is no spot where He is not present. We should, therefore, feel no qualms in taking His name or doing His work there. Yes, this certainly means that our “libraries” should be as clean as the buildings in which books are stored. Mine at any rate is.

¹ Lavatory
For here in the jail everyone has to do all the things in the cell itself. They have given me three cells. That does not mean that the position is different. In jail I, too, have done all the things in the same cell, whether in South Africa or here. I have had to do that. Both of us felt that your long letter of 26th May was none the less short, or rather not too long. It did not contain one superfluous word. If anything was left out, the letter was short to that extent, but we did not feel at all that anything was left out. I got this letter of the 26th after I had received that of June 10th. In fact I got it only yesterday.

I shall not write more now. I think I have replied to all your questions.

In the letters which you write in future, mention the names of those whose letters you may enclose.

I have written this letter in two sittings. The first part was written yesterday evening. I suppose it is Purushottam who attends on Khushalbhai at present.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

If Mirabehn is not there, or if she is too busy otherwise to find time, you should, when you can, carry out the suggestion about sending cotton. I will reply to Balkrishna next time.

From Gujarati: C.W. 8113. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi
336. LETTER TO PREMA BEH N KANTAK

YERAVDA MANDIR,
June 23, 1930

CHI. PREMA,

I got your beautiful letter. If I were not eager to get your letters, I would not merely out of courtesy ask you to write.

I like Dhurandhar and Kamala very much. I do not know when I shall meet the other lady.

You should not stop eating uncooked vegetables. You can certainly eat bitter gourds uncooked. I have done so. You should take some tender ones, mash them and mix lemon juice with the pulp. If, however, you get no vegetables on some day, you should do without. You may eat raisins instead. Your health has improved and you should not spoil it again. If you feel more hungry than before, you may increase the quantity of milk or curds. Do not worry about the expense. Write to me and tell me what you finally decide.

If I have left out any point in my reply ask me again.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 6671. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak
337. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

Y.M.,

June 24, 1930

CHI. KANTA,

You must know Gujarati by now. I am writing in Devanagari today, but later on, when you are willing, I shall write in the Gujarati script. I have not received your letter. Write again. Give me news of your parents.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: Chandrakanta Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

338. LETTER TO SUMANGAL PRAKASH

YERAVDA MANDIR,

June 24, 1930

CHI. SUMANGAL PRAKASH,

I have your letter. It is good you have arrived. Please keep writing to me.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: Sumangal Prakash Papers. Courtesy Nehru Memorial Museum and Library
339. LETTER TO KALAVATI TRIVEDI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
June 24, 1930

CHI. KALAVATI,

You must be following Gujarati well enough by now. Write to me and tell me all your thoughts. Is your mind at peace? How do you occupy yourself?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 5245

340. LETTER TO PATRICK QUINN

June 26, 1930

DEAR MR. QUINN,

I hope you have ordered dates.

Please send salt and commode-pot.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

341. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

June 27, 1930

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

You must now be getting my letters regularly. You should assume that as long as I am permitted to write from here I will regularly write to you. My weight is satisfactory. It is a little above 103, and so there is no cause for worry. It is indeed welcome news that Father’s health is improving. You have lost much weight. How is that?

Take special care and improve your health. You should take milk or curds and fruit, and also have exercise. A letter for Jayaprasak is enclosed.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3360

342. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

June 29, 1930

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I got your letter. My letter-writing had stopped, and so how could you get any letter from me? Probably I shall be able to write regularly now. I keep fairly good health. My diet consists of milk or curds, raisins or dates and lemons; this seems enough. Even milk, I have been taking unboiled. That has done me no harm. They have been keeping Kakasaheb with me since about a week ago.

How do you two manage about your food? Do you have a servant or do you cook for yourself? Do you read anything? I had sent you a copy of Anasaktiyoga\(^1\); did you get it? Have you read it? Did you understand it?

Write to Father and tell him that I often remember them all.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3392

\(^1\) A Gujarati translation of the Bhagavad Gita by Gandhiji.
343. LETTER TO RUKMINI BAZAJ

YERAVDA MANDIR,
June 29, 1930

CHI. RUKMINI,

I got your letter. You must have gone to the Ashram by now. Your first duty is to make your body strong. You have no excuse now to neglect doing that. Now that you are married and live with your husband’s family, you ought not to fall ill. If you do, will not the elders in the family lose face in society?

Write to me and tell me about your experiences in your husband’s family. Do not be restrained by a false sense of shame when writing.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9049

344. LETTER TO KALAVATI TRIVEDI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
[June 29, 1930]¹

CHI. KALAVATI,

Your letter. The earlier one was not given to me. It is good that Shantabehn has come. She must be quite well by now. Improve your handwriting.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 5244

¹ The source has “29-3-1930”, which seems to be a slip.
345. LETTER TO BENARSILAL BAZAJ

YERAVDA MANDIR,

June 29, 1930

CHI. BENARSILAL,

I heard something about you. I hope you are happy with Chi.
Rukmini. Write to me frankly.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 9050; also C.W. 9303

346. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

June 30, 1930

MY DEAR RAIHANA,

I do hope you left your bed long ago. Tell me how you are faring. Have you seen Father? Please remember me to Mother.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: S.N. 9617
CHI. MIRA,

I have your letter.

I think the Ashram letters will be now regularly received by me and mine by you all. The condition is that no politics can be discussed on either side. But if you find again an interruption, you will infer that some hitch has occurred.

I am glad you are keeping fit. Only your weight must not go below a minimum which for your build must be 116 lb.

Yes, I am doing some sewing regularly. Of course, it is all jail work. When Mathuradas suggested it for cheapening khadi, I was attracted to the suggestion. I thought I would practise on the machine here. The machine has been sent by Lady Vithaldas who was for some time in the Ashram, if you can recall her.

As I am not likely to have visitors now, it would [be] better to send me 3 lb. of cotton. I said 2 in my last letter¹ but perhaps it is as well to send me 3. Kakasaheb too will need slivers. You may pack the cotton in paper and then sew it up in sacking. This suggestion is made to save khadi.

I told you all about the bow in my last letter. Though the way I have fixed it works all right, I shall try your way when I get the cotton.

My love to all the friends.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

If you cannot attend to cotton, let someone else do it.

From the original: C.W. 5399. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9633

¹ Vide "Letter to Mirabehn", 22-6-1930.
348. LETTER TO PURUSHOTTAM GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
Silence Day, June 30, 1930

CHI. PURUSHOTTAM,

I have had no letter from you. Send me your diary. What is your weight? Do you still take medicine? My respectful greetings to the elders.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 899. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

349. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

YERAVDA MANDIR,
June 30, 1930

CHI. LILAVATI,

I have your letter. From here I cannot send you a letter in a sealed envelope. But what is there to hide for one who has a pure heart? You should throw away the letter you have received. After having once given up the thought of marriage, why think about the matter again? Moreover, for you now true marriage lies in clinging to the duty to which you have wedded yourself. It is only in such marriage that true happiness is found. It gives rise to no problems and there is no possibility of widowhood in it. So you should dismiss the thought altogether from your mind. Meditate on the last portion of the second chapter of the Gita which we daily recite. If this does not help you to feel at peace you may write to me again and you should have no hesitation in writing freely. Forget the past. Take care of the present, and the future will then take care of itself. This is the meaning, plain and simple, of non-attachment. If we do our duty today, we shall automatically know our duty tomorrow.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9563
350. LETTER TO MUNNALAL

YERAVDA MANDIR

June 30, 1930

BHAI MUNNALAL,

I am both surprised and pained to know that you have fled. As long as we live in the body, how can we run away from work? Even if it is right for some persons to refrain from physical activity altogether, that cannot be so for you or me. One who has attained perfection can perhaps become free from the duty of working. I have already drawn your attention to your unsettled state of mind. Wake up and start working.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 6648. Courtesy: Munnalal; also G.N. 8648

351. LETTER TO SUSHILA GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

June 30, 1930

CHI. SUSHILA,

I got your letter. How can you deny that you are a Parsi lady? If you were not one, you would not write anadharya¹. Vanias pronounce the word with a palatal na. You seem, however, to be better than even a Parsi lady. It seems you have given up all fear. It is because you know that Manilal is not a body but a soul that you expressed sentiments which befit a brave woman. My choice has been fully justified. May God grant you a long life.

Convey my blessings to Father and Mother.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 1181. Courtesy: Sushilaben Gandhi; also G.N. 4769

¹ Literally, ‘unexpected’. She had spelt the word the way Parsis usually pronounce it.
352. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
June 30, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS,

I have now received all your letters.

We have thought long about the trouble being given by the Bharwads. To me our dharma is plain. It is the same towards the entire world. We should win over the Bharwads by love, and at the same time try to protect what it is our duty to protect. That can be done only by giving our lives to the Bharwads. In other words, we should lay down our lives in protecting our things but should never attack the Bharwads in doing so. However, I do not wish to blame anyone for what has happened. We can follow dharma only within the limits of our capacity, otherwise we would be guilty of artificiality. We should, therefore, do what the impulse of the moment dictates. That impulse is the measure of our strength. As for the future, I have no doubt that our dharma is what I have stated it to be. But before and after adopting that course for protecting our things, we should discharge two other duties. I have been observing and saying for the last fifteen years that we have not mixed with our neighbours. What pains me is that I myself did not follow that path. I tried to persuade Maganlal to follow it. Some kind of a start was made. There were, however, difficulties in the way and the attempt was abandoned. We are now paying for our indifference. But recalling the past is of no value except for drawing lessons from it. Let us look to the present. Just now, therefore, we should discuss the problem with the Bharwads. We should ourselves try to plead with them in the presence of persons who know them. We should also tell them what we wish. If they want to graze their cattle [on our land], they should pay us something. If, however, we have no land we should explain that to them. We should also appeal to our neighbours to plead with the Bharwads. We should render them whatever other service we can, and should continue to do so irrespective of their behaviour. We should explain to them why the Ashram has been established and what it aims at doing. Even if we do all this, it is possible that they will occasionally raid the Ashram. If they do, those of us who can, may lay down their lives and let the Bharwads take away what they will after killing them. If we do not have the will and the strength for this, you may do what seems best to all of you. I have only explained the duty, as I understand it, that is proper to an Ashram. You should, however, put out of consideration what I may write, for beyond expressing my views I can do nothing. Moreover, an opinion expressed from a distance is likely to be erroneous. What I might think if I were present there may very well be different from what I think from here. Moreover, no matter with what detachment a prisoner tries to think, his conclusions are likely to be based on incomplete data. You need not, therefore, attach much weight to my view. I shall be satisfied if it helps you to come to your own decision. In any case it was good that afterwards you treated the Bharwads for injuries.

I am writing to Bhansali; read that letter. Your decisions about Chandrakanta and Giriraj seem all right.

I am getting on well. These days I am also trying to learn by heart verses from the Gita. I have completed Chapter XII and done half of Chapter XIII. Does man know what he wants? I liked Kaka’s coming, but I also see that it has turned out to be an obstacle. Since his coming my daily study has fallen behind. Without him I would have proceeded faster with the Gita. Actually, I tried to prevent his coming, but failed. My reason for doing that was quite different. I did not like that he, too, should be confined within four walls as I was. But the Government had made up its mind to provide me company and did so. I, therefore, tolerate Kaka. And he has to bear separation from the large company at Sabarmati. Thus we find the situation a mixture of all sentiments—there are at least the pathetic, the humorous and the heroic. However, if I have relaxed in one field of my daily study, I have started Marathi. I would have become proud if I had become altogether self-reliant. Now that I have been receiving invisible services from Kakasaheb, they will help me in reminding me of my right place. Besides, the exercise which my reason gets in sweet discussions about the Gita and other works is an additional benefit. Thus I get an opportunity of another kind for self-examination. I can, therefore, say that I would have been content if Kaka had not come, and am also content now that he has come. Who can weigh and decide whether his coming is a gain or a loss to me? To him who believes that anything he gets unasked comes from God, every such thing is a benefit—is a gift of His grace. Kaka’s coming, therefore, is such a gift. It does not matter if the study of the Gita has slowed down.

Convey my greetings to Vallabhbhai. The question of Kaka’s diet has been settled. He gets two pounds of cow’s milk, ten tolas of butter, twenty tolas of fresh, uncooked vegetables and twenty tolas of chapati. He turns the milk into curds. He is getting on quite well. His weight has increased by one pound. By way of vegetables, he gets brinjals and radishes by turn during the week. He cooks the brinjals and eats the radishes raw.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8114. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

353. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
Silence Day [June 30, 1930]¹

CHI. GANGABEHN,

All of us are far away from our ideal and will remain so. Our duty lies in striving to reach it. Man’s ideal grows from day to day and that is why it ever recedes from him. You are ever striving and that is all that you can do. Our effort should be pure and unremitting.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I do not write separately about Kaka, because the long letter contains all the news.

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 8751. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

¹ From the reference to news about Kaka Kalelkar; vide the preceding item.
CHI. KANTA

I have your letter of May 26th. They did not give me the previous one. Do you follow my Gujarati? Did you get my Gujarati letter of last week?

It seems quite proper that you went and stayed with Mother. She must have left by now. Your good lies in the attitude you have now adopted. It is to one’s good to abide by the advice of a person whom one has willingly accepted as one’s guardian. It makes for peace of mind at least. Keep perfectly cheerful and remain engrossed in your duty. I have high expectations of you. Write to me frankly about everything.

I am very happy to learn that Krishna Kumari feels at home.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: Chandrakanta Papers. Courtesy, Gandhi National Museum and Library
355. LETTER TO NIRMALA GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

June 30, 1930

CHI. NIMU,

I got your letter. Nobody will object to your experimenting with juwar in order to improve your health. Try it once and if it does not agree with you, give it up. Moreover, when our dear ones are in jail, we may certainly eat what they do, provided it is possible for us to do so. You may stay wherever you like. Blessings to Ba. You seem to be quite engrossed in your work. ‘Sumitra’ is a good enough name for the baby.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

What is Navanit doing?

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

---

1 A variety of millet
356. LETTER TO KAMALA NEHRU

June 30, 1930

CHI. KAMALA,

I was very happy to have your letter. You must not let your body become weak. It has to render much service. How is Indu keeping now? Has she grown up a little?

My pranam to Mother and blessings to Sarup and Krishna.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Hindi]

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1930. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

357. LETTER TO AMINA QURESHI

YERAVDA MANDIR, 1
Tuesday [July 1, 1930] 2

CHI. AMINA,

I think of you every day. Your confinement must be over by now.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6670

---

1 Gandhiji was arrested on May 5, 1930, and placed in Yeravda Central Prison, Poona.
2 In his letter to the addressee dated July 6, 1930, Gandhiji mentions the addressee having had a baby. Presumably this letter was written on the preceding Tuesday.
DEAR SISTER,

How is your state of mind now? And your health? When did you see Satis Babu last? How is he? Who are all at Sodepur? What do you study and what is your daily routine? Keep this in mind:

Who rejoices not, neither frets nor grieves, who covets not, who abandons both good and evil—that devotee of Mine is dear to Me. ²

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Write to me care of the Ashram.

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1667

---

CHI. GANGABEHN JHAVERI,

The letters received in May were handed over to me only a short while ago. I have faith in your strength and devotion to God. He will certainly give you wisdom. Take care of your health.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Give my Vandemataram to Chhotubhai.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3101

---

¹ Satis Chandra Das Gupta had been arrested and sentenced to one year’s rigorous imprisonment on a charge of sedition in connection with the publication of Satyagraha Bulletins.
² Bhagavad Gita, XII. 17
360. LETTER TO NANIBEHN JHAVERI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 3, 1930

CHI. NANIBEHN (JHAVERI).

I got your letter of May 27, 1930 only a little while ago, more than a month after it was received here. This is what being a prisoner means. It was their kindness that I got it at all.

If you can digest cereals and pulses, by all means eat them. But don’t eat them for the pleasure of the palate. Your body will become strong only if you live on milk and curds. Give up all worries. Meditate on the verses which we used to recite daily. Read the *Anasaktiyoga*¹ over and over again, reflect over its teaching and follow it in practice.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3100

361. LETTER TO MANU GANDHI²

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 3, 1930

CHI. MANUDI,

So Balibehn³ has turned you away. Never mind. Only learn now to behave like a grown-up girl. Do household work. Spin and card as much as you can, and write to me.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 1502. Courtesy: Manubehn Mashruwala

---

¹ A Gujarati translation of the Bhagavad Gita by Gandhiji; vide “Anasaktiyoga”.
² Daughter of Harilal Gandhi
³ Balibehn Vora, addresssee’s maternal aunt
362. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 3, 1930

CHI. VASUMATI,

After I started addressing Ramdas, Devdas and others in the second person singular, I don’t feel at ease addressing you in the plural. And now I simply cannot bring myself to do that. From today, therefore, I have started using the singular form of the pronoun, which is the right one. Ever since I came to know you, you have held a daughter’s place in my heart. And you have shown yourself fully worthy of that place. Need I say more? Show yourself worthier still. I don’t know when I shall be a worthy father to the many daughters whom I have adopted. Don’t regard this merely as the language of modesty. Let this be enough for today. I am all right. Kakasaheb1 has been placed with me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9276

363. LETTER TO LAKSHMIBEHN KHARE

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 5, 1930

CHI. LAKSHMIBAI,

It was in July that I was given your letter of May. There is little we can do about this. It would be enough if I could write Marathi as well as you write Gujarati. I am of course learning it from Kakasaheb.

Always look upon all children of Vasant’s age as if they were Vasant himself.

Write to me regularly.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 285. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn Khare

1 D. B. Kalelkar
364. LETTER TO MOTIBEHN

YERAVDA MANDIR,

July 5, 1930

CHI. MOTIBEHN,

The letter which you wrote to me long ago was handed to me just now. You must have received the letters which I wrote to you. Read Chapter XII over and over again and reflect on it. I am sure you get news about the children regularly from Cochin. Don’t grieve about Meghji at all. He rests in peace. He who dies uttering Ramanama with devotion, what evil can he meet with?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3737

365. LETTER TO AMINA QURESHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

July 6, 1930

CHI. AMINA,

I was very happy to read your letter. I was glad to know that you had a baby. May God grant him long life and may he be as brave as Qureshi and you. Do the girls remember me? I trust you keep good health.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6656

---

1 Of Bhagavad Gita
366. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 6, 1930

CHI. PREMA,

They gave me your letter of July 1. It is good that you get fruit with your meals.

I took in Dhurandhar because I saw that he was scrupulous in observing rules. I also liked his frankness. This should not be published at present.

Give my love to the flower plants and trees. Here, too, I see their brothers and sisters. Shouldn’t I be satisfied with that?

In all, I got only two letters from you. I didn’t get the one in English.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10224; also C.W. 6672. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

367. LETTER TO DAHIBEHN PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 6, 1930

CHI. DAHIBEHN (RAOJIBHAI),

You should write to me. I often remember you two Dahibehns.

I hope you never get fainting fits now. My blessings to all the women who may be with you.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9204
368. LETTER TO MAHALAKSHMI THAKKAR

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 6, 1930

CHI. MAHALAKSHMI,

I got your letter. I was happy to learn that all the women were doing their work well. Please tell Ramabehn that I got her letter. I am not writing to her this time. The women to whom I don’t write must not think that I have forgotten them. I write to as many as I can. But when I write to one, the letter should be regarded as meant for all. I note what you say about the children. I was pained by their going away. I get news about Madhavji from time to time.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6826

369. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 7, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

I have your letter given to me intact and in good time. There is not likely to be any difficulty now in the early delivery of letters on either side.

I am glad you have good news from London. It was evidently a thoroughly successful operation.¹ The West has always commanded my admiration [for] its surgical inventions and all-round progress in that direction.

In your menu you do not tell me how much ghee you are taking and whether you are taking oranges or not. Ghee you need and so also oranges. I would like you not to cut off or reduce these two things.

If you have not sent cotton as yet it should now be sent at once. I have told you 15th July is the last day.

I am keeping well. I find the doing of 375 rounds somewhat of ¹ The addressee’s mother had undergone an operation.

a strain nowadays. I am trying to probe the cause. That being so the takli practice has slowed down considerably.

I have complaints about the non-appearance of extracts from my letters. You may, therefore, resume publishing extracts of a general character. I have discussed this with the Superintendent. The people will be intensely dissatisfied if they see nothing from my letters.

Nothing yet settled about interviews.¹

My love to all those to whom I do not write but of whom I constantly think.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5400. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9634

370. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 7, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS,

What does Bhansali write about Lilabehn²? Has she left the Ashram?

This time I got your letter of July 2 soon after it was received here. I had received the wire about Revashankerbhai and replied to him direct.

I suppose Ratilal is quiet now.

Some portions of my letters can certainly be published. I have suggested the limits in my letter to Mirabehn.

Amina, I hope, is all right now. If necessary, you can write to me at any time. Most probably I shall get the letter immediately.

Where was Shambhu beaten up?

You are being put to a good test. You had no choice but to endure the wild behaviour of the sadhu; not because he was a sadhu,

¹ Gandhiji had refused to see anyone in Yeravda prison till permission as of right was given to him to see close friends as well as blood relations; vide “Letter to R.V.Martin”, 8-7-1930; also “Letter to R.V.Martin”, 11-6-1930.
² Bhansali’s widowed sister-in-law who lived in the Ashram with her three children.
for to us a sadhu and an emperor are the same. Would we not treat an emperor in the same manner if he created similar nuisance? If we could and had the time to do so, we would try to come into closer contact with the mischief-makers and to teach them to be civil. We would go and see them at their places and plead with them. We would try to discover their disease and observe their way of living. I know that all this is difficult. But that is the only way. What would we do if such a sadhu were our own brother? Would we not spend on him as much time as we could spare and plead with him? The next thing is that we should learn from such experiences to reduce our possessions. This of course cannot be done in regard to milk,¹ for we have regarded running the dairy as our duty and done that duty. We cannot, therefore, stop it. The only thing for us to do is to think out methods of protecting it which would be worthy of the Ashram. I have written this only by way of discussion. You may take from it what is practicable.

The problem of the thieves, whom you are not able to catch, is more difficult than that of the mendicant. Its only solution is that we should mix with the people of the villages in our neighbourhood. These are external remedies, and necessary ones. In the last resort, and even as the first, we have prayer. “So long as the elephant depended on his own strength, nothing availed him; if a weak person cries out for help to Rama, He will come the moment His name is uttered.” This is a great truth. It is realized in experience in the measure we have faith in it.

Do write and inform me about every harassment. Such things give me spiritual exercise. I get an opportunity to think what my mind would prompt me to do in such circumstances.

Keep me informed about the results of Prabhudas’s experiments with the spinning-wheel.

If they want to translate the _Anasaktiyoga_ into Urdu, permit them to do so.

The article on _brahmacharya_ is kept in a safe place—only Pyarelal or Kusum can say where. You will find it nowhere but among the papers which are kept duly arranged.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

¹ The sadhu had been wasting the milk in the dairy.
[PS.]

There are 47 letters today. I don’t see Kanu’s and Sharja’s letters which you have mentioned in your list.

If you have not sent cotton, send it by return of post. Today I am short of time and, therefore, a few things are left out.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I

371. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI PANDYA

July 7, 1930

CHI. BHAGWANJI,

I have your letter. Please do not feel miserable. Since you have not given up effort I have no doubt all will end well. The body is under our control and therefore we ought to check it and restrain our feelings. One who makes a show of physical self-control but indulges in all manner of pleasures mentally is a hypocrite, a double-dealer. One who controls one’s body and also endeavours to always restrain one’s mind is an active aspirant; one whose mind as well as body are fully under control is God [Himself]. It is enough if we are or [try to] become active aspirants of the middling category. We should never let our minds remain unclean. An evil thought should be thrown out no sooner than it occurs. We should know that our mind is like our body, which gets soiled every day and which we clean every day. The fact that we are obliged to accommodate Shankarbhai’s father or others like him is a help to us in preserving our dharma. Non-violence means being strict towards one’s self and liberal towards others; this is the sign of tolerance. Those who do not observe the rules, etc., deserve to be pitied, never to be hated. That we have given up tea, etc., that we abide by the rules is because we like it; if some do not, how can it be an excuse for us to swerve from our own stand? On the contrary let us hope that having observed our humble yet firm conduct people like Shankarbhai’s father would be touched and give up their undesirable habits.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 320. Courtesy: Bhagwanji Purushottam Pandya
DEAR MAJOR MARTIN,

With further reference to my letter about interviews, I enclose herewith a trial list to show what I mean when I say that I can see Mrs. Gandhi and others of my family only if on the same terms I can see those who are like blood relations to me, as those in the list are.

The alternative proposed by the Government is unacceptable to me for the simple reason that I do not wish to expose my wife and children to the indignity of having to apply to the Government for permission each time they may desire to see me.¹ I recognize that the Government need not let anybody see me. But if they do let me see anybody, I must refuse to avail myself of such permission if it is bereft of grace as, in my opinion, the present position about interviews is.

I know the Government’s preoccupations and it pains me to have to take up their time over what is for them comparatively a trivial matter. I have reverted to it only because I had a talk with you about it and because I would like it finally decided one way or other.

If the list is approved, I reserve the right to submit a further list. It is impossible for me to recall at once the names of all who are intimately connected with me and are not known to political fame. I may observe that such names I have purposely omitted. A large number are boys and girls under 16. I have also omitted the names of relatives as they are already allowed and I have omitted those who to my knowledge are already imprisoned.

I am,
Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

¹ Vide “Letter to R.V.Martin”, 11-6-1930.
[Enclosure]

Trial list referred to in the letter to which this is the enclosure.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Relationship</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Damodardas and his wife</td>
<td>Harihar Sharma</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Manibai Galiara and her</td>
<td>Begum Tyabji</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>children</td>
<td>Raihana Tyabji</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lakhmidas Asar</td>
<td>Hamida Tyabji</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vellabai Asar</td>
<td>Pyar Ali</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laxmibehn Bar</td>
<td>Noorbanu</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Motibehn Choksi</td>
<td>Abdullabhai</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mani Asar</td>
<td>Gomatibai Mashruwala</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lilavati Asar</td>
<td>Naoroji Sisters</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Amina Qureshi</td>
<td>Kambhatta</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mathuradas Purushottam</td>
<td>Tehmina Kambhatta</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Motibai Mathuradas</td>
<td>Mithubai Petit</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jankibai</td>
<td>Gangabehn Senior</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laxmibai Khare</td>
<td>Gangabehn Jhaveri</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rambhau</td>
<td>Manilal Jhaveri</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chhaganlal Joshi</td>
<td>Gulabehn Manilal</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ramabai Joshi</td>
<td>Ratilal Mehta</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Motibai Ranchhodlal</td>
<td>Champabehn Mehta</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ramabehn Ranchhodlal</td>
<td>Nanibehn Jhaveri</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sarla Devi Ambalal</td>
<td>Nanibehn Budhabhai</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nirmalabai</td>
<td>Bhansali</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ambalal Sarabhai girls and boys</td>
<td>Mathew</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ansuyabai Sarabhai</td>
<td>Kumarappa</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shankerlal Banker</td>
<td>Chandrashekha Shukla</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vinoba</td>
<td>Manibehn Parikh</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Gopalrao</td>
<td>Manibehn Patel</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Balkrishna</td>
<td>Nandabehn Kanuga</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shardabehn Mehta</td>
<td>Lalita</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dahibehn Patel</td>
<td>Lilabehn</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Dahibehn Somabhai</td>
<td>Shantabai</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kamalabehn Patel</td>
<td>Shantabehn</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Name</td>
<td>Title</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>-----------------------------</td>
<td>------------------------------------------</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kamala Haridas</td>
<td>Jankibai Bajaj and children</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vasumatibehn</td>
<td>Kamalnayan</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kusum Desai</td>
<td>Nathji</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jethalal Gandhi</td>
<td>Kunverji Patel</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maganbhai Patel</td>
<td>Pundit Sukhlal</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kapilrai</td>
<td>Bechardas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mahavir</td>
<td>V. Sundaram</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maitri</td>
<td>Emma Harker</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Durga</td>
<td>Padmaja Naidu</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Krishnamaiya Devi</td>
<td>Krishnabai Santanam</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sarojini Devi</td>
<td>Laxmi Rajgopalachari</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Satyavati</td>
<td>Dahyabhai Patel</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kantabehn</td>
<td>Narmada Dahyabhai</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Krishna Kumari</td>
<td>Shanti Kumar Narottamdas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kasturbehn</td>
<td>Narsimha Prasad</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Pritthuraj</td>
<td>Mama Phadke</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Laxmi Dadabhai</td>
<td>Haribhai Phatak</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Lalji</td>
<td>Dilkhush Divanji</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vithal</td>
<td>Nandlal Shah</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jethalal Bhatia</td>
<td>Punjabhai</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Babalbhai</td>
<td>Budhabhai</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Kevalram</td>
<td>Karasandas Chitalia</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Nirmala Kevalram</td>
<td>Surajbhehn Manilal</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Godse</td>
<td>Gangabhehn Ramji</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Somabhai</td>
<td>Motibhehn Ramji</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Hasmukhrai</td>
<td>Chelibhehn Shah</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Giriraj</td>
<td>Keshavrao Deshpande</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mannalal</td>
<td>Ramibai Kamdar</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jagannath</td>
<td>Lady Vithaldas</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shambhu</td>
<td>Kamalabai</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ishvarlal</td>
<td>Vithaldas Jerajani</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Tapu</td>
<td>Chhotelal</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shivabhai Patel</td>
<td>Kikibhehn Lalvani</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Rowjibhai Patel</td>
<td>Girdhar</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
373. LETTER TO KAPILRAI MEHTA

YERAVDA MANDIR,

July 8, 1930

CHI. KAPILRAI,

Whence this illness again? It is the duty of every student to shake off illness forthwith. It is a crime to fall ill.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3973; also C.W. 19595. Courtesy: Kapilrai Mehta

M.K.G.

From a photostat: G.N. 3850; also S.N. 19975
374. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 8, 1930

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

How is it that there is no letter from you? How are you?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3389

375. LETTER TO ISHVARLAL JOSHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 8, 1930

CHI. ISHVARLAL,

How are things with you? What progress have you made? Have you kept up your study of English? Is Lakshmidasbhai satisfied with your progress?

Is Indu there? How is she? Ask her to write to me.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the original in Gujarati: C.W. 9311. Courtesy: Ishvarlal Joshi
376. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

July 8, 1930

CHI. GANGABEHN,

I got your letter. How is Kaka? What news of Ramibai?

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-6: G. S. Gangabehnne, p. 39; also C.W. 8752. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

377. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

YERAVDA MANDIR,

Silence Day, July 9, 1930

CHI. SHARDA (BABU), ¹

Is it any wonder that we who are housed in the Mandir are in fine spirit? But why should you be suffering from asthma? Is it not due to their own fault that children or grown-ups fall ill? If this is true, you must find out where your fault lay and should not repeat it. Once you have recovered, your asthma would not visit you again if you follow a regular course of deepbreathing exercises, sun-bathing, massage, etc., and if you observe restraint in food, etc.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9885. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

¹ Daughter of Chimanlal and Shakaribehn
378. LETTER TO WILFRED WELLOCK

YERAVDA CENTRAL PRISON,
July 11, 1930

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter. From a prison cell it would not be proper for me to enter into any argument. But you may depend upon my not missing a single real opportunity for co-operation. But I confess that I see no sign as yet in the midst of fraud, falsehood and force that appear to me to surround so many of the acts of the powers that be.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Bombay Secret Abstracts, 750(34), p. 117

379. LETTER TO KASHINATH TRIVEDI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 11, 1930

CHI. KASHINATH,

I got your letter. It is good that you poured out your heart in it. I have known very few persons who have been free from the evil which you have described. The environment in which we live is so demoralizing that most young men are unable to save themselves from that evil. But, now, instead of repenting for the past, take proper care of the present, and leave nothing wanting in the attempt. By all means, take Kalavati to a doctor. Let that lady doctor examine her. A note from me is not necessary, and it would be improper to send one from here. If you require any, a note from Narandas will serve the purpose. She is a kind-hearted lady.

I understand what you say about the Gita. I will try to read the Calcutta translation. I am sending a letter to Mahavir Prasad along with this. Read it. You did the right thing in showing it to Vinoba.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5247

1 Member of Parliament, Birmingham
380. LETTER TO KALAVATI TRIVEDI

July 11, 1930

CHI. KALAVATI,

Your letter.

The only desire you may keep should be that for service. In or out of the Ashram, all service should be the same to you. It is no service if we find joy in doing those things only that suit us. It will mean self-satisfaction not service. We must never indulge in that. Kashinath has written about your pain. You need hipbaths and certainly purity of heart. Try to keep your mind calm.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 5246

381. LETTER TO KAMALNAYAN BAJAJ

YERAVDA MANDIR,

July 12, 1930

CHI. KAMALNAYAN,

I have your letter. Just now your duty is to make your body strong. Your diet is all right. Take proper exercise. Do as much khadi work as you can. Write to me regularly. How is Kamala? And Madalasa? Ask Janakibehn to write to me. What does Father eat? How much do you spin daily? Do you get time to do any reading?

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Kakasaheb sends you his blessings.¹

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3043

¹ This is in Hindi.
382. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

Y.M.,
July 12, 1930

CHI. KANTA,

I have your letter. Only the woman who controls her desires and finds joy only in doing her duty can truly serve. There is always a conflict going on in our minds between the good and the desirable. To be truly human one must choose the good and find it desirable. We are not always certain what should be regarded as good. Hence, in the course of one’s striving it is necessary to have faith in one’s superiors and in the received word and to act accordingly. Of course, it will always be well with you.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

What is Brother doing? Give him my blessings.

From a photostat of the Hindi: Chandrakanta Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

383. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 13, 1930

CHI. VASUMATI,

I got your letter. What does work mean? Is not spinning and carding work? All work done sincerely has equal value. True soldiership or devotion to God or spiritual living consists in being content with the duty which falls to our lot. Absorption in the work of service which has come to us unasked is the only true samadhi. It is quite true that attaining this state of mind is a slow process. All that one can do, therefore, is to go on striving. The result lies in God’s hands. We are both in good health. I will give more information on this subject in the common letter for the Ashram.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 3283
CHI. PREMA,

I have your letter. Nirmala’s letters reveal the beautiful influence of her Hindi and yours that of Marathi. For instance, bet rahit karyo. I like a language being enriched in this manner. I hope in a short time to be able to follow Marathi very well. I am at it every day.

I have finally given up hope of getting the English letter.

I know about Krishnan Nair.

Your handwriting in Gujarati seems to be improving.

Idealism sometimes causes pain but a human being without idealism is like a brute. Our highest duty is to see that our idealism takes the right direction.

You should try once to eat bitter gourds uncooked.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10225; also C.W. 6673. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak
385. LETTER TO MATHURADAS PURUSHOTTAM

YEYAVDA MANDIR,

July 13, 1930

CHI. MATHURADAS,

I got your letters. I was glad that you wrote out and sent me the instructions for improving the method of carding. How can I expect to get copies of the Navajivan here? I have no copy of the saptapadi\(^1\) pledge with me. If you send one, I will try to revise and improve it with Kakasaheb's help.

As for the book on non-violence, I am at present trying to live it. The book will have real value only if I can practise the idea in my own life. What I write will become a dead letter one day. What I live will ever grow. And haven’t I written enough on the subject in short articles from time to time? What can I say now which I have not said already? Even if I try, I cannot think of anything new to say. However, the request which you have made has been made by some others too. If, therefore, I feel an urge within me in future, I may write one. Cease grieving over Meghji’s death. We have countless Meghjis with us.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3739.

---

\(^1\) Vide “With bare religious rites”, 7-3-1926.
386. LETTER TO SHANKERLAL BANKER

Y.M.,
July 13, 1930

CHI. SHANKERLAL,

I have your letter. One who understands the meaning of ahimsa must realize the importance of the takli and the charkha. It becomes clearer each day that they are visible manifestations of ahimsa.

Take care of your health. Did Gulzarilal receive my letter? Ask him to write to me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: G.N. 11549

387. LETTER TO ANASUYABEHN SARABHAI

Y. M.,
July 13, 1930

CHI. ANASUYABEHN,

I was pleased to read your letter. The weaving school students are doing credit to the name and the work of their Ashram. I am getting along well. Take care of your health.

What more need I write?

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: G.N. 11550
388. LETTER TO DURGA GIRI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 13, 1930

CHI. DURGA,

Your letter is good. The handwriting too is good. Will you test me in sewing or shall I test you? Over there you are learning cutting too. Who can teach me all this here? But I shall see who surpasses, my walking sticks or I? I have praised your handwriting in the hope that you would further improve it. You girls have an example in Radhabehn’s handwriting. Mistakes due to oversight can be corrected by revising the letter.¹

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Hindi]
Bapuki Virat Vatsalata, p. 30

389. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

UNREVISED,
July 14, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

I have your letter. I am likely now to get the Ashram post regularly.

Your taking cold baths I do not mind so long as the body reacts immediately. There should be no chill felt. The full benefit of a cold bath according to the Indian style is dependent upon vigorous rubbing as the water is being poured. This is followed by equally vigorous rubbing with a dry towel till all the parts are thoroughly dry. But please do not try unboiled water. My case here is different. I get the same water, which is strained and stored in a separate earthen pot. The whole water supply for the jail is filtered.

¹ Daughter of Dalbahadur Giri who, along with her brothers, sisters and widowed mother, was residing in the Ashram
² Girls on whose shoulders Gandhiji leaned while walking
³ The original letter was in Gujarati.
My constipation has almost altogether abated. This was due to my having reverted to milk in the morning instead of curds. If I find the heating of milk or hot water necessary, I shall not hesitate to take either or both. But I am hoping that it will not be necessary. Fresh fruit does not appear to be necessary for me. I am not losing weight. Last week it was between 103 and 104 lb. I do not consider this a bad weight. You will thus see that there is no cause for anxiety on my account.

You ask for the Gita translation. I should love to do it. But just now what little time I do get is given to the translation of the Bhajanavali also undertaken for you. I am going at a snail’s pace. I therefore do not know when that will be finished. The Gita translation is a big task. You will agree I may not suspend the spinning for it. For the spinning is applied translation of the Gita if one may coin that expression. But if I have long enough of this quiet, I shall certainly undertake the translation.

We cannot have at the Ashram the worship of the kind you refer to. Of course, we have the little samadhi near Magan Kutir. But nobody save a few look at it. The inmates of the Ashram have no living faith in that kind of worship. For the worship of the invisible, the intellect is ready but the heart does not respond. We have, however, to plod in that direction. As pointed out in the 12th chapter, that way is undoubtedly hard to tread but it is not impossible. It will come. Everyone is subconsciously recognizing the worth of the Ashram prayer. It has been the sole solace of many. Those that attend it are not scoffers. They are not wittingly irreverent either. The spirit is willing, the flesh is weak. They are all striving. And no one who has honestly striven has ever been known to have failed. Ours is, you should remember, a somewhat original attempt. We have no solemn-looking building for prayer. We have simply the open space. But it is a sound thing especially as we represent the famishing millions. For us the sky must be an all-sufficing roof and the four directions our limitless walls. But we shall take time before we outgrow habits handed down from generations, if not ages. And yet, if we are to break through all bonds of race, class and creed, we can have but the openest of house of prayer and in the way we are having it. Am I clear?

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5401. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9635

1 Vide “Ashram Bhajanavali”, the last item in this volume.
390. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 14, 1930

CHI. KUSUM (SENIOR),

I have a letter from you after many days. You have joined a good place. Ultimately, you will have to return to the Ashram. Do not ruin your health. Write to me from time to time. Don’t take up sewing before you have acquired mastery over carding and spinning on the wheel and the takli. It is easy to learn sewing. Nor is it absolutely necessary. I would be satisfied if your spinning could become perfect. Is Purani still out?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1800

391. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 14, 1930

CHI. MANI (PATEL),

Well done. No sooner did you meet the real father\(^1\) than you forgot the adopted father. And now you are a speaker at public meetings and thus all the more likely to forget me. How are you in body, and in mind? Did you get my letters?

How is Dahyabhai? And how is Yashoda? Has she recovered completely?

Blessings from
BAPU

CHI. MANIBEHN PATEL
DR. KANUGA’S BUNGALOW
ELLIS BRIDGE
AHMEDABAD

[From Gujarati]

_Bapuna Patro-4: Manibehn Patelne_, p. 71

\(^1\) Vallabhbhai Patel, who was released from jail on June 26, 1930.
392. LETTER TO HARIPRASAD

YERAVDA MANDIR,

July 14, 1930

CHI. HARIPRASAD,

It is good that you have returned. Now tell me your routine and also your thoughts.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2549

393. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

July 13/15, 1930¹

CHI. NARANDAS,

This time all the letters were delivered to me as soon as they were received, and probably that is what they will do in future too.

Last time I wrote 47 letters and then added two at the last moment, but could not change the figure which I had mentioned in your letter. For the Jail Superintendent arrived then and I handed over the packet to him after inserting into it those two slips of paper.

My speed has not increased to 400 rounds, or even yards, and it is not likely to do so. I believe that my body simply does not have the capacity for that. Formerly I used to spin 160 rounds during the day; instead, I now spin 375 rounds. But to spin that takes on an average four hours. Even on days on which everything goes well, I take not less than three hours. The average probably comes to 400 rounds a day. The speed used to be 160, which has now risen to 200 rounds, but that only on the day on which I have sufficient energy and the materials are well arranged. Make this correction. I have become slack about the takli these days. I get pretty tired working on the spinning-wheel. Ever since my illness I have lost the strength to sit up for four hours at a stretch. I, therefore, find it difficult to accustom the body to that. But this is my only spiritual discipline at present and hence I cling to it. Of course I take care of the body. The weight is steady, so I don’t believe any harm is being done. I have good sleep. I of course give some time to the takli. I cannot yet make a very good takli with my own hands and, for want of time, I do not try to learn to do so by constant practice. I give primary importance to spinning, as I should like to spin as much yarn as I can. Sewing is going on all right. The hand has set well on the machine. I still do not know its intricacies, for there is no one here to teach them to me. You will read more about these matters in my letters to Mirabehn.

¹ This letter written on different days is placed under the date on which it was completed. Similar letters to Narandas Gandhi and Mirabehn are placed accordingly.

Kakasaheb is in excellent health. After his coming here his weight has increased by two pounds. He walks for about two and a half hours daily, in addition to the walking he has to do in connection with work. He takes all the milk in the form of curds, so that the milk he consumes is easily digested. He toasts bread. Ordinarily he gets the vegetables by turns. He gets radishes and brinjals, and sometimes turiya or guvar. He does not cook the radishes. He digests ten tolas of butter. He still spins on the takli only. A Gandiva spinning-wheel arrived from Surat only recently and Kakasaheb has started to learn spinning on it from today. He continues to teach me Marathi. It is he, again, who puts the fruit into water for me or washes it and also washes the utensils in the evening. Besides these, I accept many other small services from him.

You need not worry about either of us.

I am happy that the problem of the Bharwads has been solved.

I have not received any cotton from there till today. I am writing this on Saturday night. If no cotton has been sent up to the time that you get this letter, post some immediately. I think there will be no difficulty if I get it by return of post in reply to this letter. I do hope, indeed, that since I have given the time-limit up to the 15th, I shall get the cotton on or before Tuesday. As days pass, I have certainly become a little impatient.

I did not see Sharja’s letter. Kanu’s I got this time.

Give me news about Punjabhai. How is he? Where does he live? How does he spend his time?
July 14, 1930

One of the boys asks me in his letter why I use slips of paper. The reply is that a prisoner should consume the minimum of everything. Secondly, he who observes the vow of non-possession is a trustee of all property and, therefore, I must use the property of this prison, too, like a miser. Thirdly, isn’t this property really ours? With whose money have these things been bought? Fourthly, in this poor country the less the consumption of such things the better. Fifthly, it hurts me to use anything extravagantly at a time like this.

I hear today that there is a railway receipt in the office, which means that the cotton is likely to have arrived. If I cannot mention the total number of letters, I am sure you will see the serial number on the last letter.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

It is now 5.30 a.m. on Tuesday. I stop writing the letters. In all there are 52. If there are people to whom I have omitted to write and if they expect letters from me, send me their names. How is a man with a large family to decide whom he would write to and whom he may omit? Where is Subbiah?

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U/I

1 July 15
394. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 15, 1930

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

The last two packets from the Ashram contained no letter from you. Since as a rule you write regularly, the absence of a letter from you worries me. How is Father? What is Jayaprakash engaged in at present? I am all right.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3390.

395. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 15, 1930

CHI. PRABHUDAS,

Because I do not write to you every week, it does not follow that you need not do so either. I can know about the state of your health and your group's only if you write and tell me every week. You may write whatever else you wish to.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
Send me the names of all the children in the Bal Mandir.

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33012
396. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 15, 1930

CHI. BRIJKRISHNA,

Give me an account of your health and your mental state. You can write care of the Ashram. Do you see Devdas? Where is Krishnan Nair?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2382

397. LETTER TO H. S. L. POLAK

YERAVDA CENTRAL PRISON,
July 16, 1930

MY DEAR HENRY,

Your cable was given to me only yesterday. As a prisoner, I may not write to you as fully as I would like. All therefore I can say is that if you knew the circumstances as much as I do, you would not press me to go to the R.T.C. I should be perfectly useless there. I see nothing in the Viceregal statement to give me any cause for hope. The fact is swaraj is for us to take. It cannot come by way of donation.

My love to Millie, Celic, Leon and all those we knew. Where is Maud nowadays? With my love to Andrews tell him I had his cable just after my imprisonment.

Yours,
Bhai

---

1 Devdas Gandhi had been arrested and sentenced in Delhi early in April for offering civil disobedience.
398. LETTER TO GOVIND PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 17, 1930

CHI. GOVIND,

I was glad to see your letter written in a beautiful hand. Now write to me regularly in future. I had altogether forgotten you. Probably all persons with a large family find themselves in such a plight. Out of sight, out of mind.

I am very happy to learn that your health has improved. I have no doubt at all that you will always do your work carefully. May God give you a long life and make you a true servant.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3944

399. NOTE TO MIRABEHN

[July 18, 1930]1

CHI. MIRA,

It hurts me but I must deny myself this pleasure, if I am to be consistent with myself.2 Please leave the wheel, etc., and I shall manage the best way I can. It is on such occasions that we test ourselves. God be with you.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5402. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9636

1 According to a note by Mirabehn in Young India, 24-7-1930, she took the wheel to Gandhiji on Friday, which was July 18. Vide also “The final test”, 9-3-1930.

2 The following note by Mirabehn appears along with this letter in Bapu’s Letters to Mira, p. 101: “I had prepared a wheel on the Bihar pattern and taken it to Yeravda Jail, as I knew it would be difficult for Bapu to understand the method of fitting it if I did not explain it personally. But this proved not to be possible, and Bapu sent me the following note in the Superintendent’s office.”
400. LETTER TO RAOJIBHAI PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 18, 1930

CHI. RAOJIBHAI,

I have your letter. To be ready for jail is a duty. To wish to go to jail is ignorant attachment. We should have only one wish, and that is to serve. Any condition in which we can serve should be welcomed.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8988

401. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 18, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got the bag of this week’s love letters yesterday evening. I will reply to most of them on the Silence Day. I write this just to tell you that you should either put the letters in an envelope lined with cloth or secure the packet with a string on all sides. The letters were about to fall out of the packet. I got the cotton on the 16th.

Blessings from
BAPU

CHI. NARANDAS GANDHI
SABARMATI ASHRAM
B.B. [&] C.I. RLY.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U. /I
402. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 18, 1930

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I had a letter from you after many weeks. I was relieved.
I keep good health. The weight remains at about 103-104.
The diet consists of milk, curds, raisins, dates and lemons. Do not worry on my account. I spin 375 rounds daily. I have learnt sewing on the machine. Kakasaheb is with me.
You may write anything you wish to.
Does Father tour in villages?
My blessings to Jayaprakash.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3365

403. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 18, 1930

CHI. PRABHUDAS,

I got your letter. Stop worrying about your health. It will be as God has ordained. Worrying about health will not improve it. We may try our best. This is my emphatic advice. You should go away purely for the sake of your health to some hill station where you can stay comfortably. You may do there whatever khadi work in cotton or wool you can. Live as if the fight1 was not going on at all.

If this advice does not appeal to you or is rejected by Chhaganlal or Kashi, do as they advise you. You should not decide on your own because just now, it is beyond your capacity to do so.
You may, if you wish, consult the Vaidyaraj at Morbi. I insist on one thing only. I cannot order you from here. Do as Chhaganlal and Kashi advise you after reading this letter. Regard their advice as an

1 That is, the civil disobedience movement which was then in progress order. If Narandas has any suggestion to make in this matter, listen to him. I have not shown this to Kakasaheb. If his view is different from mine, I will include it in this letter.

Kakasaheb has not yet gone through what you have written about the Ramayana. I will let you know his opinion after he has done so. Go on doing what you have been doing by yourself.

What you say about prayer is quite right. All our undertakings are in the experimental stage. None among us is omniscient. All of us are blind, but some of us who have more knowledge than the others, are trying to find remedies for the blindness and to employ them. That being so, how can it be otherwise than that our prayer should be imperfect? If Narandas has the time to do so, I have suggested to him to introduce whatever reforms are possible. The prayer ultimately is a matter of faith. We have to bring ourselves to take sufficient interest in prayer to keep up that faith. After all, if you go in the mornings and join the prayer group in that spirit, it will be sufficient prayer for you, no matter in what language the prayer is offered. The practice of collective silent prayer also is prevalent in the world. Devout men and women among the Roman Catholics can sit for hours together, absorbed in silent prayer. Our aim is somehow to find peace of mind. You need to cultivate the habit of reading with proper attention whatever you read. It can be cultivated by practice. Even in this, however, if thinking too much confuses your mind, then give up the effort to think. Do not be overeager in this matter either. We have clung to the practice of prayer all these years with a pure motive. We are therefore sure to discover the right key some day. Till then, be content with the fact that the people have begun coming. For some things, time is the only remedy. The more we think about it, the worse the thing gets but if we wait in patience, we will discover the remedy. This is not likely to give much satisfaction to one like you. But just now I cannot think of anything more satisfying than this. It is therefore best to endure what cannot be cured.

I understand what you say about the spinning-wheel. Insist that all the girls who are carrying on the experiment, clean their spinning-wheels properly. Banish from your mind the thought that the girls will never do or cannot do this work.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32998
404. LETTER TO SHIVABHAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 19, 1930

CHI. SHIVABHAI,

I got your letter. The Lord has stated it as a law, to which there is no exception, that everyone gets what he seeks with devotion. We seek the spirit of disinterested service which would require us to sacrifice our all. If, therefore, we fail to cultivate such a spirit, the Lord’s words would be proved untrue or maybe our aspiration is not sincere. We should, therefore, have faith and pursue with single-minded devotion the task to which we have dedicated ourselves.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9499

405. LETTER TO DUDHIBEHN DESAI

July 19, 1930

CHI. DUDHIBEHN,

I have your letter. You must have returned to the Ashram now. Do you go and see Valji? How is he? When you meet him next, tell him that I often think of him. Take care of your health.

How are Hari-ichchha and the others?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7404. Courtesy: V. G. Desai
406. LETTER TO AMINA QURESHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 19, 1930

CHI. AMINA,

I have your letter. Father and Qureshi are in jail. You wish to be there and, moreover, you live in the Ashram. You should, therefore, believe that you are in the struggle too. It is more than enough if we are content to live where and in the condition that God wills. Do not give up your study of Urdu. Giriraj will be able to teach you. Tell Father or Qureshi, whoever it is you see, that I cannot forget either of them.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6657

407. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 19, 1930

CHI. GANGABEHN (SENIOR),

I have your letter. It seems Kaka is getting useful experience. Write to Ramibai and ask her to write to me. I often remember her and Kamdar¹.

What you said to Shankerlal was quite correct. We should certainly take in any Antyajas who may wish to join.

Don’t be anxious to economize on fruit at the cost of your health.

You must have read about Kakasaheb’s diet. If you wish to suggest any change in it, do so. He does indeed keep good health.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-6: G. S. Gangabehnne, p. 39; also C.W. 8753. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

¹ Ramibai’s husband
408. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 19, 1930

CHI. PREMA,

I got your humorous letter crammed with news. Continue to write in this manner. I do hope that I shall not fall ill here. How can I have here Prema and Vasumati who would remain by my side whenever I seemed to be passing through a difficult time, fearing that something must have happened to me? Don’t believe the rumour about my having lost weight. My health is indeed good.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10226; also C.W. 6674. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

409. LETTER TO LALJI PARMAR

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 19, 1930

CHI. LALJI,

Kakasaheb and I were pleased to read your long letter. In future, write in ink. Work very hard. Never swerve from truth or forsake self-restraint and modesty. As far as you are concerned, you should form the habit of getting up regularly at four. You will realize in future the great benefit of such a habit.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Ask Mamasaherb to write to me

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3294
410. LETTER TO MATHURADAS PURUSHOTTAM

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 19, 1930

CHI. MATHURADAS,

Both of us have gone through your glossary of technical terms. I should like to suggest one change. For baithak, it is not enough merely to sit on the floor with the right leg drawn in. It is necessary to sit with the toes of the right foot pressed, under the left thigh. If this is not done, the leg may at times brush against the string or the rod. Think over this. If I can do so, I will think about the other definitions too. I like your zeal for perfection very much.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3740

411. LETTER TO RAMABEHN JOSHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 19, 1930

CHI. RAMA,

I have your letter. It is beautiful. You have taken upon yourself a big responsibility, but I know that it is not beyond your strength. Haven’t we, moreover, learnt that verse which tells us that the Lord takes upon Himself the burden of the prosperity and welfare of those who think of Him with single-minded devotion?¹ Why then should we worry? You have done quite right in changing the time of the prayer.

My blessings to all the women.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5322

¹ Bhagavad Gita, IX. 22.
412. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

Y. M.,

July 19, 1930

CHI. KANTA,

I have your letter. I have received Brother’s also. Has not the Lord said in Ch. XII [of the Gita] that if we cannot absorb ourselves in this service, that is, in the service of His creation, we shall be able to do so by practice and yoga? By “practice” we should here understand effort. Very few persons are inclined by nature towards service, but everyone can make an effort. Sincere effort makes it natural in the end and then it becomes a thing of joy. Do you follow this? Should I continue to write in the Devanagari script or may I change that also to Gujarati?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: Chandrakanta Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library
413. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

UNREVISED

July 20, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

It pained me to have to refuse to see you.¹ But the proof of my having done the right thing came the next morning. The Government have rejected my offer and therefore there can be no interviews now. It would be unbecoming for me to press my view-point. They are entitled to refuse every facility to prisoners as was done all the world over only a century ago or even much later. It is enough that the exchange of letters is permitted. But you will recognize that even this is a precarious thing. Any moment they may stop the correspondence or impose unacceptable conditions. We can only gain by self-denial. Therefore, there need be no heartburning over this stoppage of interviews. It is better that spirit meets spirit. No power on earth can stop that blessed contact.

Now for the gifts you left. I note the extraordinary care over the smallest detail. I began the use of the new wheel immediately. This, therefore, was the second day of use. Today is Sunday after the commencement of silence. But whilst this love is deep, it is not as wise as it might be. Your wheel has not lessened the strain. As I explained to Mathuradas, the strain was in the having to sit out for five hours in practically one posture. If I could reduce the hours and get the same amount of production, it would be another matter. That the new wheel is not likely to do. As it is, the strain on the left arm is felt in using the new wheel. For in this you have to move the arm away from you and raise it too, where [-as] in the box wheel, the arm is in a horizontal position and moves towards oneself. Moreover, you could ill afford to give time to a matter like this and take up that of skilled workmen unless it is required by me. I must be allowed to be capable of looking after myself and expressing my wants. Thirdly, I have not yet been able to draw as fine a thread as on the box wheel. The result is the use of 50 per cent more slivers—a national waste! Enough however of criticism. I am not going, lightly, to leave aside a thing that has come charged with so much love. I am, therefore, going to continue the use of the wheel and report to you from time to time. What oil do you use for the holders and the axle? How often do you apply the resin to the mal? The taklis I have tried. They are not as good as the one I have made here. The discs are too large, the bamboo not well polished. There seems to be a proportion between the thickness of the rod and the circumference of the disc. If weight is wanting, it must be made up by making the disc thicker. Next time you make a takli, you will consider these points and let me know your opinion.

¹ Vide “Note to Mirabehn”, 18-7-1930.

There is nothing new to report about my health. The weight keeps steady.

You will please take no liberties with your body during the tour.

I am putting in more time for the translation of the bhajans. I have now finished the Sanskrit verses and am now on the bhajans.

Give my love to Hariprasad.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5403. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9637
414. LETTER TO PATRICK QUINN\textsuperscript{1}

July 20, 1930

DEAR MR. QUINN,

Will you please post the enclosed p.c. which you will see is a mere acknowledgment? Did you order the irrigator?

\textit{Yours sincerely,}

M. K. \textsc{Gandhi}

415. LETTER TO PATRICK QUINN

[July 20, 1930]\textsuperscript{2}

DEAR MR. QUINN,

Will you please send for dates 2 lb., raisins 2 lb.?

\textit{Yours sincerely,}

M. K. \textsc{Gandhi}

\textsuperscript{1} Superintendent, Yeravda Central Prison

\textsuperscript{2} The date has been inferred from the placing of the item in the source.
July 20, 1930

BHAISHRI RATILAL,

I have your letter. The event is sad but it is the kind of thing that is going on all the time. I have come to the conclusion that we needlessly regard death as a matter for sorrow. Like all other natural processes, death is also a necessary and beneficial phenomenon. Hence even to a person denying the existence of the soul or its attributes, it is no cause for fear, and it is much less so for one who believes in the soul and its immortality. We should not regard it as a cause for grief that Behn Zabak left the body that had outlived its utility.

As for books, I have not come across many which deserve to be read carefully and pondered. For me, the Gita and Tulsidas suffice, and, among modern writings those of Raychandbhai. However, if you wish to read anything recent you may read Kishorelal’s Jivanshodhan.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7164; also C.W. 4658. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi
417. LETTER TO PURUSHOTTAM D. SARAIYA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 20, 1930

CHI. KAKU,

I hope you have not taken a vow not to write to me. Or probably you are waiting for a letter from me before writing yourself. You had escaped very cleverly indeed. But it must have been God’s will to reserve you for a greater task. We shall have done our duty if we do our work with single-minded devotion. Do write to me. Both Kakasaheb and I shall be pleased.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 2805. Courtesy: P.D. Saraiya

418. LETTER TO RAMESHWARDAS PODDAR

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 20, 1930

BHAU RAMESHWARDAS,

We got the letter addressed to us both. You are serving to the best of your ability and that is enough. This will give you strength to do more. If you let Ramanama sink from the lips into the heart, your discontent will disappear.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 217
419. LETTER TO J. C. KUMARAPPA

YERAVDA MANDIR,

July 21, 1930

MY DEAR KUMARAPPA,

Your note. When your brother returns he must first come to the Vidyapith and see things for himself. Then, but not till then, he is free to make his choice. You had my previous letter sent from Karadi about him, had you not? Give my love to him when he comes. And remember me to your sister when you write to her.

‘Thodsow’ is a Tamil corruption of ‘Dodhso’ nks<1ks-

Love from us both.

Yours,

BAPU

[PS.]

Yes, your book was duly received, thanks.

From a photostat: G.N. 10087

420. LETTER TO MANSHANKAR J. TRIVEDI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

July 21, 1930

CHI. MANU (TRIVEDI).

Maganbhai has given detailed news about you. We were both happy to read it. May God grant you good health and increase your zeal for service from day to day. I have certainly not forgotten that you used to bring fresh grapes for me. When you write to Father, tell him that I have many sweet memories of him.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7758
DEAR SISTER,

I got your two letters together.

Some of the devotees are tried very severely. God is testing you thus. But that He grants strength to endure is also His blessing. How is Arun\(^1\) now? Is any improvement noticed in Tarini and Charu’s health? How many people are working at Sodepur? By the grace of God Kshitish Bapu\(^2\) is with you and has been blessed with a sound constitution and a stout heart. You have also the support of Dr. Ray. Convey my best wishes to both.

Does Satis Babu get milk, etc.? Has he proper facilities for sleeping and resting?

Give me all the news.

May God grant you health, peace and patience.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1668

\(^1\) Addressee’s youngest and the only surviving child
\(^2\) Younger brother of Satis Chandra Das Gupta
422. CABLE TO V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI

[YERAVDA CENTRAL PRISON,
July 22, 1930]¹

THANKS CABLE. DEPEND UPON DOING MY BEST.
AM PRAYING FOR LIGHT. LOVE.

Bombay Secret Abstracts, 750(56), p. 21

423. LETTER TO G. A. NATESAN

YERAVDA CENTRAL PRISON,
July 22, 1930

DEAR FRIEND,

I have been given your letter with enclosures. Many thanks. You may depend upon my doing my best. I had a cable from Shastriar. I am praying for light, but as yet I do not see a ray in this impenetrable darkness.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

SJT. G. A. NATESAN
“INDIAN REVIEW”
GEORGE TOWN, MADRAS

From a photostat: G.N. 2236

¹ Srinivasa Sastri had cabled to Gandhiji “to receive the proposals of Sapru and Jayakar with sympathy”.
² According to a note just below the cable, the covering letter from Major Doyle with which this was forwarded was dated July 22, 1930; vide also the following item.
424. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

July 18/22, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got your packet yesterday. So many letters cannot be carried safely in an envelope of ordinary paper. It was quite torn when it arrived. You should either use envelopes lined with cloth or even though the cover is treated as a letter for purposes of postage, you should secure it strongly with a string on all sides so that the letters cannot slip out unless the string is broken.

I got the cotton as late as on the 16th. But I was put to no difficulty. Prabhudas and Munnalal speak in their letters about the prayers being dull. Does not Balkrishna lead bhajans? Would not you or somebody else speak something about the Gita or on some other subject? Balkrishna can do so if he decides. If we cannot do anything besides reciting Sanskrit verses, we may be content with that, but if we can we must introduce something more. Or start reading something in Gujarati. Discuss the matter with Prabhudas and Munnalal, then have a talk with Balkrishna and do what you think proper. I know that you cannot spare time even to think about a matter like this. Even then I make the suggestion. Do what is possible.

We should make an attempt to mix with the Bharwads and make them feel one with us.

July 19, 1930

Much of what I write in these letters is meant for the whole of our group there and so I don’t mention those things in the letters to others. One such thing is Kakasaheb’s blessings. Let everyone know that the letter to him or her carries them. Kakasaheb receives greetings from all the persons there, for he reads all the letters which they write and his name is mentioned in every one of them. Both of us are glad to know this and to realize that the members of our group have humility.

Thinking about the diary, I feel that it is of priceless value to me. For a person who has dedicated himself to the pursuit of truth, it serves as a means of keeping watch over himself, for such a person is determined to write in it nothing but the truth. If he has idled away his time or has done less work than usual, he must mention that. Thus a diary helps in many ways. It is, therefore, necessary that everyone there should realize its value. Once we start keeping a diary regularly, we know automatically what to write and how to write it. Yes, there is one condition, namely, that we should aim at being truthful. If that is not so, a diary will be like a false coin. If it contains nothing but the truth, it is of greater value than a gold mohur.

Letter No. 60 is for Mrs. Zaulinger; read that. Try to find out from her what her difficulty is.

I see that it is a hardship for you to have to make a list of the letters. If that takes too much of your time, you may stop doing it. It will suffice if you merely give the total number. You may make a list if you can do so without inconvenience.

I must now write off visits. You will know the reason from my letter to Mirabehn. I don’t write about it again in this letter. What would I do if I could not even write? I should give up doing that, too, if I cannot preserve my self-respect while writing. The path of bhakti is a difficult one. But we have no other before us.

Do not worry if the number of letters goes on increasing. Let anyone who wants to write do so freely. It will be enough if they observe the restrictions imposed by jail rules. Political questions should not be discussed, nor can I write anything about them. There is, and should be, no objection to giving news about everyone.

Tell Dr. Haribhai that I often remember him. Has Dr Kanuga completely recovered now?

After morning prayers, July 22, 1930

There is a suggestion in Vishvanath’s letter that every week I should write and send a discourse to be read out at prayer time. I thought about the request and felt that it deserved to be complied with. Treat these discourses as my contribution to the attempt to make the prayers more alive. I am considering with Kakasaheb if we can send anything for the other six days as well. Here is something for this week.¹

¹ This and the other discourses on the Ashram vows contained in the letters to
I deal first with truth, as the Satyagraha Ashram owes its very existence to the pursuit and the attempted practice of truth.

The word ‘satya’ is derived from sat, which means that which is. Satya means a state of being. Nothing is or exists in reality except Truth. That is why sat or satya is the right name for God. In fact it is more correct to say that Truth is God than to say that God is Truth. But as we cannot do without a ruler or general, the name God is and will remain more current. On deeper thinking, however, it will be realized that sat or satya is the only correct and fully significant name for God.

And where there is Truth, there also is knowledge which is true. Where there is no Truth, there can be no true knowledge. That is why the word chit or knowledge is associated with the name of God. And where there is true knowledge, there is always ananda, bliss. There sorrow has no place. And even as Truth is eternal, so is the bliss derived from it. Hence we know God as Sat-chit-ananda, one who combines in Himself Truth, knowledge and bliss.

Devotion to this Truth is the sole justification for our existence. All our activities should be centred in truth. Truth should be the very breath of our life. When once this stage in the pilgrim’s progress is reached, all other rules of correct living will come without effort and obedience to them will be instinctive. But without Truth it is impossible to observe any principles or rules in life.

Generally speaking, [observance of the law of] Truth is understood merely to mean that we must speak the truth. But we in the Ashram should understand the word satya or Truth in a much wider sense. There should be Truth in thought, Truth in speech and Truth in action. To the man who has realized this Truth in its fullness, nothing else remains to be known, because, as we have seen above, all knowledge is necessarily included in it. What is not included in it is not Truth, and so not true knowledge; and there can be no real bliss without true knowledge. If we once learn how to apply this never-failing test of Truth, we will at once be able to find out what is worth doing, what is worth seeing, what is worth reading.

But how is one to realize this Truth, which may be likened to the Narandas Gandhi first appeared in book form under the title Mangal Prabhat (Tuesday Morning). The translation is reproduced from From Yeravda Mandir, with a few changes to bring it into conformity with the Gujarati. Gandhiji states in the preface to the booklet that he had gone through it carefully and revised the translation in places.

philosopher’s stone or the cow of plenty? By abhyasa, single-minded devotion, and vairagya, indifference to all other interests in life—replies the Bhagavad Gita. Even so, what may appear as truth to one person will often appear as untruth to another person. But that need not worry the seeker. Where there is honest effort, it will be realized that what appear to be different truths are like the countless and apparently different leaves of the same tree. Does not God Himself appear to different individuals in different aspects? Yet we know that He is one. But Truth is the right designation of God. Hence there is nothing wrong in every man following Truth according to his lights. Indeed it is his duty to do so. Then if there is a mistake on the part of anyone so following Truth, it will be automatically set right. For the quest of Truth involves tapascharya, self-suffering, sometimes even unto death. There can be no place in it for even a trace of self-interest. In such selfless search for Truth, nobody can lose his bearings for long. Directly he takes to the wrong path he stumbles, and is thus redirected to the right path. Therefore the pursuit of Truth is true bhakti, devotion. Such bhakti is “a bargain in which one risks one’s very life”. It is the path that leads to God. There is no place in it for cowardice, no place for defeat. It is the talisman by which death itself becomes the portal to life eternal.

But now we have come to the border-line beyond which lies ahimsa. We shall discuss it next week.

In this connection, it would be well to ponder over the lives and examples of Harishchandra, Prahlad, Ramachandra, Imam Hasan and Imam Husain, the Christian saints, etc. How beautiful it would be if all of us, young and old, men and women, meditated, till next week, on these thoughts at all hours of the day, whether working, eating, drinking or playing, and were rewarded with innocent sleep?

God as Truth has been for me, at any rate, a treasure beyond price. May He be so to every one of us.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

[PS.]

There are 66 letters. If you do not read all the letters before handing them over to the persons concerned, do so henceforth. Some of the accompanying letters contain suggestions to those to whom they are addressed.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I
425. NOTE TO NEHRUS

YERAVDA CENTRAL PRISON,
July 23, 1930

CONSTITUTIONAL ISSUE

1. So far as this question is concerned, my personal position is that if the Round Table Conference is restricted to a discussion of safeguards that may be necessary in connection with full Self Government during the period of transition, I should have no objection, it being understood that the question of independence should not be ruled out if anybody raises it. I should be satisfied before I could endorse the idea of the Congress attending the Conference about its whole composition.

CIVIL DISOBEDIENCE AND ITS CALLING OFF

2. If the Congress is satisfied as to the Round Table Conference, naturally civil disobedience would be called off, that is to say, disobedience of certain laws for the sake of disobedience, but peaceful picketing of foreign cloth and liquor will be continued unless the Government themselves can enforce prohibition of liquor and foreign cloth. But manufacture of salt by the populace will have to be continued and the penal clauses of the Salt Act should not be enforced. There will be no raids on Government Salt Depots or private depots. I will agree even if this clause is not made a clause in these terms, but is accepted as an understanding in writing.

3 (a) Simultaneously with the calling off of the civil disobedience, all satyagrahi prisoners and other political prisoners convicted or under-trial, who have not been guilty of violence or incitement to violence should be ordered to be released, and

(b) properties confiscated under the Salt Act and Press Act and

---

1 With a view to restoring normal conditions and ameliorating “the present situation by discussing the question” Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and M. R. Jayakar wrote to the Viceroy on July 13 seeking his permission to interview Gandhiji in Yeravda and Motilal Nehru and Jawaharlal Nehru in Naini Jail. On July 23 and 24 they met Gandhiji who gave them this note to be delivered to Motilal Nehru and Jawaharlal Nehru.

2 These sub-headings are in Gandhiji’s hand in S.N. 19976.

3 ibid
Revenue Act and the like should be restored, and
(c) fines and securities taken from convicted satyagrahis—or under the Press Act should be refunded.
(d) All officers including village officers who have resigned or who may have been dismissed during the civil disobedience movement and who may desire to rejoin Government service should be restored.

N.B. The foregoing should refer also to the non-co-operation period.
(e) Viceregal ordinances should be repealed.¹

This opinion of mine is purely provisional, because I consider that a prisoner has no right to pronounce any opinion upon political activities of which he cannot possibly have a full grasp while he is shut out of personal contact. I therefore feel that my opinion is not entitled to the weight I should claim for it if I was in touch with the movement.

Mr. Jayakar and Dr. Sapru may show this to Pandit Motilal Nehru, Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, Mr. Vallabhbhai Patel and those who are in charge of the movement. Nothing to appear in the Press.

This is not to be shown to the Viceroy at this stage.

Even if the foregoing terms are accepted I should not care to attend the Conference unless, in the event of going out of the prison, I gained self-confidence which I have not at present and unless among those Indians who would be invited there was a preliminary conversation and an agreement as to the minimum by which they should stand under all circumstances.

I reserve to myself the liberty, when the occasion arises, of testing every swaraj scheme by its ability to satisfy the object underlying the eleven points² mentioned in my letter to the Viceroy.³

M. K. GANDHI

Gandhi-Sapru Correspondence. Courtesy: P.N. Sapru; also S.N. 19976

¹ These clauses were incorporated in the joint letter to T. B. Sapru and M. R. Jayakar, pp. 81-4.
² Vide “Clearing the issue”, 30-1-1930.
³ This note was handed to Sapru and Jayakar along with the covering letter, vide the following item.
DEAR MOTILALJI,

My position is essentially awkward. Being temperamentally so built, I cannot give a decisive opinion on matters happening outside the prison walls. What I have therefore given to our friends is the roughest draft of what is likely to satisfy me personally. You may not know that I was disinclined to give anything to Slocombe and wanted him to discuss things with you. But I could not resist his appeal and let him publish the interview1 before seeing you.

At the same time I do not want to stand in the way of an honourable settlement, if the time for it is ripe. I have grave doubts about it. But after all, Jawaharlal’s must be the final voice. You and I can only give our advice to him. What I have said in my memorandum given to Sir Tej Bahadur and Mr. Jayakar is the utmost limit to which I can go. But Jawahar and, for that matter, also you may consider my position to be inconsistent with the intrinsic Congress policy or the present temper of the people. I should have no hesitation in supporting any stronger position up to the letter of the Lahore resolution. You need therefore attach no weight to my memorandum unless it finds an echo in the hearts of you both.

I know that neither you nor Jawahar were enamoured of the eleven points brought out in my first letter to the Viceroy. I do not know whether you still have the same opinion. My own mind is quite clear about them. They are to me the substance of independence. I should have nothing to do with anything that would not give the nation the power to give immediate effect to them. In restricting myself to the three only in the memorandum, I have not waived the other eight. But the three are now brought out to deal with civil disobedience. I would be no party to any truce which would undo the 1 Vide “Interview to Daily Herald”, 20-5-1930.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

Gandhi-Sapru Correspondence. Courtesy: P. N. Sapru; also S.N. 19976

427. LETTER TO HARI-ICHCHHA DESAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

July 26, 1930

CHI. HARI-ICHCHHA,

I often think about you, of course, but I have been prompted to write this on seeing your name mentioned in Haribhai’s letter. I trust that you and all your sisters keep good health. What work do you do these days? If you are permitted to go to the Ashram, and if you yourself wish to do so, I should certainly like to tempt you to join it. If you feel tempted, take the step. Write to me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7464

428. LETTER TO BALI AND KUMI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

July 26, 1930

CHI. BALI, KUMI,

I got Bali’s letter. Kumi also should write. I don’t mind your having taken away Manu. Anything which pleases you two sisters pleases me. Your love for these children sometimes brings tears of joy to my eyes. I used to restrain you lest your love should become blind attachment. I caution you both against it from time to time. But, knowing your nature, I hesitate to do even that. How can I ever hurt you? Are the relations of you two sisters happy?

1 With this letter and the note to Nehrus, Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and M. R. Jayakar met Motilal Nehru and Jawaharlal Nehru on July 27 and 28. For the text of joint note from them and a letter from Jawaharlal Nehru, vide “Note from Nehrus”, 28-7-1930 & “Letter from Jawaharlal Nehru”, 28-7-1930.
I was happy to know that Tulsidas had recovered.
Kusum must be perfectly all right now.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 5060. Courtesy: Surendra Mashruwala

429. LETTER TO RAMI GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

July 26, 1930

CHI. RAMI,

I got your letter. Ba had written to me about you. How did it happen that Kusum fell ill so seriously? Ask Kunvarji to write to me. I don’t write a separate letter to him. Write to me from time to time.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 5061. Courtesy: Surendra Mashruwala

430. LETTER TO MANU GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

July 26, 1930

CHI. MANUDI,

I have your letter. Even if, as you say, you went away of your own accord, I don’t mind. I only wish that you should become a real worker and that your body should become strong. In future write in ink.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 1503. Courtesy: Manubehn Mashruwala
431. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI PANDYA

July 26, 1930

CHI. BHAGWANJI,

I have your letter. What you did in the case of Manibehn is quite correct. In the case of a lady whom we have accommodated we would have done our duty after having pointed out her faults dispassionately. In this case too you should do the same. You should explain to her that your suspicion will not be removed by [her] undertaking a fast. Why should she undertake a fast if she has committed no fault? If she has, fasting is no cure. She should confess it and resolve never to do it again. If she refuses to be persuaded in spite of all this, let events take their own course. But tell Manibehn on my behalf that fasting without my permission is forbidden. She should therefore give up her fast if she hasn’t already done so.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 321. Courtesy: Bhagwanji Purushottam Pandya
432. LETTER TO BALIBEHN M. ADALAJA

[After July 26, 1930]

CHI. BALI,

Your letter has come after a long time. I can understand that Harilal’s behaviour pains you. But what else do we have to learn in the world except facing happy as well as unhappy times?

It is true that even though I have regarded you sisters as daughters. I have not been able to do anything. Nor has Ramdas been able to do anything. But at present, do I have anything except good feelings for my kith and kin? My way of life is unusual. If you can understand that while serving a miserable untouchable I am also serving you, then you will forgive me; but if you do not understand, you are bound to be angry. I must put up with it. I asked you to live with me and absorb yourselves with my work, but you have not done it. Hence, far that I am, what more can I do except wish you well? You have started giving ornaments to Manu. I have just heard that you have pierced her ears. I was pained to hear that. By doing that, you have broken your agreement with me. I do not wish to hurt your feelings. But let us not make Manu a shuttle-cock between us. If you are agreeable to my request, bring her up according to my wishes. If you insist on not listening, then what can I say to you? I am not able to tell you anything and I am not able to bear such an act on your part. Write and explain.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 5050. Courtesy: Surendra Mashruwala

---

1 From the contents; vide “Letter to Bali and Kumi”, 26-7-1930.

2 Manu Gandhi, addressee’s niece
433. LETTER TO RAMI GANDHI AND MANU GANDHI

[After July 26, 1930]¹

CHL. RAMI AND MANU,

It is not nice that both of you have written the letter as Bali Masi dictated. I can understand if Manudi does not realize this. But what should I say about Rami? I have not the faintest memory of having turned back Rami from Amreli. Of course, I was not in favour of giving more money for meeting Manilal. I had asked Manilal to spend the money if he had something on him. But surely he did not have. Kunvarji is a poor man and how can he be made to spend? And what money can I have? After all, public money cannot be used indiscriminately. I would certainly wish that Rami should remember this much teaching. Bali Masi is an elder, her ideas are great, her capacity is great. You cannot imitate her.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Manu should have taken my permission before she had her nose and ears pierced.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S. N. 9704

¹ Vide the preceding item which has reference to piercing of Manu’s ears.
July 26, 1930

CHI. PRABHUDAS,

I have your letter. Do not at all hesitate to write to me a long letter. I like your letters and for you that is a kind of consolation. I have already written to you about your health last week. It is better for you to go somewhere on the hills. Your decision regarding Chandradutt and Devidutt is correct. Pampering them is a sin. If we let them go, they will learn and when they get tired, they will come back. At that time, we should welcome them.

I do not think there is any responsibility on you and if there is, it is only one of improving your health. However, you should not consider that as a responsibility. Do what you easily can. Kakasaheb will not be able to send your writing as early as you expect.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original : S.N. 32939
435. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

[About July 26, 1930]¹

CHI. PRABHUDAS,

It seems that you have come to the Ashram to fall ill. Only yesterday I came to know from Krishnadas’s letter that your health has again deteriorated. So far, I have not received a telegram from you and therefore believe that the illness is not serious. Why did you leave Ranavav? If your health is not improving there, would not it be better to return to Ranavav? I am waiting for more details. I am all right.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32936

436. LETTER TO GANGABEHN JHAVERI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 27, 1930

CHI. GANGABEHN (JHAVERI),

I have your letter. I trust that you take proper care of your health. Kanjibhai’s self-sacrifice is great indeed. My blessings to him, to all the members of his family and to the women who live with you.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3102

¹ From the reference to addressee’s ill health, this letter appears to have been written about the same time as the preceding one. Also, references in Vive “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 7-7-1930 and 18/22-1930 confirm that the addressee was at the Ashram in July 1930 as indicated in the first sentence above.
437. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 27, 1930

CHI. VASUMATI,

I have your letter. How many women live with you? Have they learnt the prayers? Do you get time to read the Anasakti-yoga? Is your mind at peace? I am all right.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9277

438. LETTER TO KALAVATI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 27, 1930

CHI. KALAVATI,

I have your letter. Since you are learning Gujarati, I write this letter in Gujarati. If you ask me not to write in Gujarati in future, I shall write in Hindi. You, in any case, should write in Hindi. Improve your handwriting. Now that you have started spinning on Prabhubhai’s spinning-wheel, put your whole heart into the work. Learn how to clean and repair the wheel. Whatever you do, you should do with proper care and as well as you can do it. Working in this manner develops both the intellect and the heart. Get Shantabehn examined by a doctor.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5242
439. LETTER TO KASHINATH TRIVEDI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 27, 1930

CHI. KASHINATH,

I have your letter. What I said in my last letter regarding prayers must have partly answered the questions which you ask in your letter. Regarding image-worship, we don’t forbid anyone to use an image. But we cannot have one in our common prayer.

I have suggested that Shantabehn should be examined by a doctor. But I can offer no proper guidance from this distance.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

I get no time to attend to the Hindi translation.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5243

440. LETTER TO JANAKIDEVI BAJAJ

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 27, 1930

CHI. JANAKIBEHN,

I have your letter. It would be strange if you did not feel cheerful now. You make speeches and your name appears in newspapers. As I frequently see the name Janakibai Bajaj in papers, what else should I think but that it was good that Jamnalal and I were arrested and that we had better remain in prison. I was sure that there was confidence behind your seeming diffidence. May God increase it. Kamalnayan need not be in a hurry. Let him remain occupied in khadi production work. When the batch comes forward, he may write to Valjibhai.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2888
441. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

CHI. MATHURADAS (TREASURER),

July 27, 1930

YERAVDA MANDIR,

Have you understood me regarding the interviews? The Government has found my list too long. Now I shall not get into further argument. Let us be content with exchange of letters.

You must take Tara Mashruwala, who was injured while picketing liquor shops, to Dr. Jivraj and have her examined for head injury. I hope it has not left any permanent damage.

Tell Hansabehn: ‘Congratulations. May you live long.’

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

442. LETTER TO VITHALDAS JERAJANI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

July 27, 1930

BHAII VITHALDAS,

I got the figures for April, May and June. I see from them that no one yet gives yarn in sufficiently large quantity. You can write to me a detailed letter on this subject.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9775

---

1 An extract from this letter appears in Vide “Letter to Mathuradas Trikumji”, 16-11-1936
2 Nanabhai Mashruwala’s daughter
3 Hansa Mehta, wife of Dr. Jivraj Mehta, who had begun the work of prohibition in Bombay in April with a band of Gujarati women
443. LETTER TO HEMPRABHA DAS GUPTA

YERAVDA MANDIR,

July 27, 1930

DEAR SISTER,

I have your two letters. They are a boon for me. It gives me great joy to note that your self-confidence is growing day by day. May God increase it further. What can I write about Satis Babu? I have been watching him grow for quite a time.

You have such faith in khadi that God will provide you with the required assistance. The sacred text goes: to each according to his faith. It cannot prove false.

May God grant some peace to Charu. Where is Arun?
Convey my blessings to Satis Babu and also to Charu, Arun and Tarini.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]
You can write everything in connection with khadi.

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1669
444. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

[July 28, 1930]¹

CHI. MIRA,

I have your letter. I am sticking to your wheel. It is now causing less strain. The mal has not given any trouble at all. In that respect yours is a better wheel. I have still difficulty in getting the required fineness. Anyway, I shall not easily let it go. The speed is still poor. Today for the first time I got 154 rounds in 65 minutes. This was encouraging for me. On the travelling wheel I had reached 200 rounds per hour when the machine went on without a break.

In translating the hymns for you I am giving myself much joy. Have I not expressed my love oftener in storms than in gentle soothing showers of affection? The memory of these storms adds to the pleasure of this exclusive translation for you. But it is a long affair. I did the 10th hymn today. The verses took me a long time. The hymn I am doing one per day. And I have still nearly 170 to do! There is, therefore, not much likelihood of my reaching the Gita just yet.

Your fever is disturbing. You are still sensitive to changes. Do please take care of yourself and do not hesitate to travel 2nd if you find it at all necessary. I am looking forward to this week’s letter.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5404. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9638

¹ The 10th hymn referred to in the letter was translated on this date, vide “Ashram Bhajanavali”, 15-12-1930. The letter, however, bears the date “27th July 1930” in Mirabehn’s handwriting.
445. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
Silence Day [July 28, 1930]

CHI. GANGABEHN (SENIOR),

I am glad to see that you are completely at peace. In being content with opportunities of service which come to us unsought lies the growth of the soul; that is the only way in which we can realize it.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-6: G. S. Gangabehnne, p. 40; also C.W. 8754. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

446. LETTER TO PREMAEHN KANTAK

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 28, 1930

CHI. PREMA.

It is no trouble to me to write to you. Your diagnosis is correct. We should feel more interest in solving the problems of the Ashram, especially of the women in it; than we do in solving the problems of the country. For the solution of these problems contains the key to the solution of bigger problems. “As in the body, so in the universe.” Trying to know the universe we would lose our way, but the body is in our hands.

The infant class seems to be getting well organized. Shila must have recovered now.
I have deliberately advised you to try bitter gourds.
Idealism can follow the right path. To lead it along that path is 1 From the printed source.

paramartha\textsuperscript{1}. The word ‘purushartha\textsuperscript{2}’ is one-sided in its connotation. Can you think of a neutral word?

Dhurandhar may certainly translate Anasaktiyoga.

\textit{Blessings from}

\textbf{BAPU}

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10227; also C.W. 6675. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

\textbf{447. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA}

\textbf{YERAVDA MANDIR,}

\textit{July 28, 1930}

\textbf{CHI. GANGABEHN (SENIOR),}

I have your letter. The family seems to be increasing. That is as it should be. So long as we have the spirit of service in us, people will continue to come.

How serious was Nath’s eczema?

\textit{Blessings from}

\textbf{BAPU}

\textbf{[From Gujarati]}

\textit{Bapuna Patro-6: G. S. Gangabehnne, p. 40; also C.W. 8755. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya}

\textsuperscript{1} The highest end
\textsuperscript{2} Human effort; the goal or purpose of human life, the four traditionally accepted ones being dharma, artha, kama and moksha
448. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 28, 1930

CHI PRABHAVATI,

I have your letter. Where does Mrityunjaya live? What are his present activities? Does Mataji feel the separation from Rajendra Babu? How is Vidyavati’s health?

My diet continues to be the same. The weight remains steady at 103-104. That is not bad.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3391

449. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 28, 1930

CHI. RAIHANA,

Bismillah

Khuda Hafiz

I was filled with joy to see your letter in Gujarati. Your handwriting also was fairly good, and the language simply could not be improved upon. Even the prayers of the pure in heart serve the cause as well as, or even better than, public work. Hence, what does it matter if you cannot work actively? Don’t feel unhappy about that. How did you find Father’s health? Is he happy and cheerful? How is Mrs. Lukmani now? The Tyabji family has indeed given a wonderful account of itself. Tell Mother that her smiling and modest face comes before me every day.

1 Wife of Rajendra Prasad
2 These expressions are in Urdu.
3 Ibid
Write to me again.
If you experience any difficulty in reading this, let me know.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9618

450. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 28, 1930

CHI. MANI (PATEL),

It is after many a week that you have favoured me with a letter. I know you are busy and doing good work in a field of your own choice, but I want you to write all the same.

Live long and serve the country to the best of your ability.

Blessings from
BAPU

CHI. MANIBEHN PATEL
SHRIRAM MANSION
SANDHURST ROAD, BOMBAY

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro–4: Manibehn Patelne, p. 72
451. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

Y.M.,
July 28, 1930

CHI. KANTA,

I got your letter. Get your teeth examined by Haribhai immediately. Kaka Saheb says that he has been advised by a competent doctor that saline gargle repeated ten or twelve times a day helps the teeth. He has also suggested gargling with coconut oil. Both things can be done side by side, though not at the same time. Even while trying this remedy, you must consult a doctor. There is no need at all to worry. The jaw must be healing. You of course did well to write to me.
Write and give my blessings to Brother.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: Chandrakanta Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi
National Museum and Library

452. LETTER TO ANASUYABEHN SARABHAI

Y.M.,
July 28, 1930

CHI. ANASUYABEHN,

I have your and shankerlal’s letters. I am observing all the work and see God’s grace in it.
Do keep writing to me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: G. N. 11551
453. LETTER TO SHOORJI VALLABHDAS

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 29, 1930

BHAISHRI SHOORJI VALLABHDAS,

I got your English letter and the book. I have still not got the Gujarati letter. The Superintendent has definitely no authority to permit me to send a Foreword from here. He must write to the Government, and the latter will never give such permission. If you think it proper to write to the Government yourself, you may do so.

Blessings from
MHOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4094

454. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
July 29, 1930

BHAIGHANSHYAMDASJI,

Your letter. Now I am given almost all the letters. Still, you did well in writing in English. It was good that you did not come to Poona. I cannot see anybody. The conditions placed on receiving visitors are not acceptable to me; I have therefore had only one visit so far. There is no possibility of a second. It causes me no pain. In fact a prisoner has no rights at all. Incarceration is a kind of moral death, it can mean only that.

I had a good laugh over your account of the dream. That dream is a sign of love. We do not dream of strangers.

I am keeping well. The water here is somewhat constipating. But it causes me no trouble.

If you are plying the takli now and then, why not ply it regularly? My experience is that the worth of a job done irregularly increases at least fourfold if performed regularly. The whole world is governed by order. Such experiences have given rise to the saying: To disordered minds even blessing comes as a calamity.

Your description of the trend for khadi gave me joy. Your son must have fully recovered by now.
How is your health? What do you eat? My diet consists of milk, curds, raisins, dates and lemons. I take the lime juice with soda or hot water and salt.

Tell Bhai Manmohan Gandhi that I have received his book as also his letter. There is very little time for reading books. Almost all my energy is devoted to spinning and carding.

Yours,
MOHANDAS

From Hindi: C.W. 6186. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

455. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

July 28/31, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got your letter. Kakasaheb remarks that the ink and the paper which you use are such that the ink comes out on the other side of the sheet, and hence it will not do to write on both sides. What he says is correct. In such a case, it is desirable to write on one side only.

This time the letters were properly packed. I preserve the envelopes and will use them when I need them. I have already told you in my previous letter that I had received the cotton. I could card some of it only today. The air was very moist because of the rains. It is not the spinning which tires me out, but the sitting for long hours. I shall discover some way by and by. I will not readily accept defeat. There is nothing in this which need cause you concern. Even when I was out of jail, did I ever sit at the spinning-wheel for four or five hours at a stretch?

The injury to Keshu’s finger must have healed by now. Can Balkrishna’s body stand the strain of night watch? He should not do anything beyond his strength.

Both of us keep good health. On a spring balance Kakasaheb weighed 109 lb. He must be walking about 8 miles a day, including the walking he does for exercise and during work. The exertion of spinning is in addition to this. His diet is still the same.

If there are any men or women to whom I have not written and who expect letters from me, let me know their names. I should have had a letter from Ramabehn (Ranchhodbhai’s). She must have received mine.

Now about ahimsa.
Tuesday morning

The commencement of this discourse is both comic and painful. We two had a discussion on how to economize in the use of cloth-lined envelopes and save the same envelopes for use again and again. The question was whether to paste a blank sheet on the whole side of the envelope or paste only slips over portions where something was written. This was a futile discussion. We wasted on it 15 minutes of beautiful time after prayers, demonstrating our foolishness thereby. In doing this we violated truth and ahimsa and displayed lack of discrimination. Truth was violated, because the discussion was not inspired by an ardent desire for its search. Ahimsa was shamed, because I, who ought to give every moment of my time to discover the sufferings of the people and in thinking about the ways of ending them, wasted 15 priceless minutes in a futile discussion. We displayed lack of discrimination, because if we had thought about the utility of the discussion, it would not have lasted even a minute. After we had stolen 15 minutes from people’s time, we realized our foolishness and thanked God for opening our eyes.

I have purposely given this introduction.

The path of Truth is as narrow as it is straight. Even so is that of ahimsa. It is like balancing oneself on the edge of a sword. By concentration an acrobat can walk on a rope. But the concentration required to tread the path of Truth and ahimsa is far greater. The slightest inattention brings one tumbling to the ground. One can realize Truth and ahimsa only by ceaseless striving.

But it is impossible for us to realize perfect truth so long as we are imprisoned in this mortal frame. We can only visualize it in our imagination. We cannot, through the instrumentality of this ephemeral body, see face to face truth which is eternal. That is why in the last resort we must depend on faith.

It appears that the impossibility of full realization of truth in this mortal body led some ancient seeker after truth to the appreciation of ahimsa. The question which confronted him was: “Shall I bear with those who create difficulties for me, or shall I destroy them?” The seeker realized that he who went on destroying others did not make headway but simply stayed where he was, while the man who suffered those who created difficulties marched ahead and at times even took the others with him. The first act of destruction taught him that the truth which was the object of his quest was not outside himself but within. Hence the more he took to violence, the more he receded from truth. For in fighting the imagined enemy without, he neglected the enemy within.

We punish thieves because we think they harass us. They may leave us alone; but they will only transfer their attentions to another victim. This other victim, however, is also a human being, ourselves in a different form, and so we are caught in a vicious circle. The trouble from thieves continues to increase, as they think it is their business to steal. In the end we see that it is better to tolerate the thieves than to punish them. The forbearance may even bring them to their senses. By tolerating them we realize that thieves are not different from ourselves, they are our brethren, our friends, and may not be punished. But whilst we may bear with the thieves, we may not endure the infliction. That would only induce cowardice. So we realize a further duty. Since we regard the thieves as our kith and kin, they must be made to realize the kinship. And so we must take pains to devise ways and means of winning them over. This is the path of ahimsa. It may entail continuous suffering and the cultivating of endless patience. Given these two conditions, the thief is bound in the end to turn away from his evil ways and we shall get a clearer vision of truth. Thus step by step we learn how to make friends with all the world; we realize the greatness of God, of Truth. Our peace of mind increases in spite of suffering; we become braver and more enterprising; we understand more clearly the difference between what is everlasting and what is not; we learn how to distinguish between what is our duty and what is not. Our pride melts away and we become humble. Our worldly attachments diminish and likewise the evil within us diminishes from day to day.

Ahimsa is not the crude thing it has been made to appear. Not to hurt any living thing is no doubt a part of ahimsa. But it is its least expression. The principle of ahimsa is hurt by every evil thought, by undue haste, by lying, by hatred, by wishing ill of anybody. It is also violated by our holding on to what the world needs. But the world needs even what we eat day by day. In the place where we stand there are millions of micro-organisms to whom the place belongs and who are hurt by our presence there. What should we do then? Should we commit suicide? Even that is no solution, if we believe, as we do, that so long as the spirit is attached to the flesh, on every destruction of the body it weaves for itself another. The body will cease to be only when we give up all attachment to it. This freedom from all attachment is the realization of God as Truth. Such realization cannot be attained in a hurry. Realizing that this body does not belong to us, that it is a trust handed over to our charge, we should make the right use of it and progress towards our goal.

I wished to write something which would be easy for all to understand, but I find that I have written a difficult discourse. However, no one who has thought even a little about ahimsa should find any difficulty in understanding what I have written.

It is perhaps clear from the foregoing that without ahimsa it is not possible to seek and find Truth. Ahimsa and Truth are so intertwined that it is practically impossible to disentangle and separate them. They are like the two sides of a coin, or rather of a smooth unstamped metallic disc. Who can say which is the obverse and which is the reverse? Nevertheless, ahimsa is the means and Truth is the end. Means to be means must always be within our reach, and so ahimsa becomes our supreme duty and Truth becomes God for us. If we take care of the means, we are bound to reach the end sooner or later. If we resolve to do this, we shall have won the battle. Whatever difficulties we encounter, whatever apparent reverses we sustain, we should not lose faith but should ever repeat one mantra: “Truth exists, it alone exists. It is the only God and there is but one way of realizing it; there is but one means and that is ahimsa. I will never give it up. May the God that is Truth, in whose name I have taken this pledge, give me the strength to keep it.”

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

There are 57 letters.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I
456. LETTER TO GOVIND PATEL

Wednesday [July, 1930]

CHI. GOVIND,

I was happy to read your letter. Your handwriting is beautiful and your spelling is better than mine. You could certainly have given me news of your health. Do so in your next letter. How did Rambhau fall ill? How is Jayanti now? How do you spend your day? What do you eat? Where do you live, and what is your weight?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 3947

457. NOTE TO M. R. JAYAKAR

August 2, 1930

(1) No constitutional scheme would be acceptable to Mr. Gandhi which did not contain a clause allowing India the right to secede from the Empire at her desire and another clause which gave the right and power to India to deal satisfactorily with his eleven points.

(2) The Viceroy should be made aware of this position of Mr. Gandhi in order that the Viceroy should not consider later that these views of Mr. Gandhi had taken him by surprise when they were urged at the Round Table Conference. The Viceroy should also be made aware that Mr. Gandhi would insist at the Round Table Conference on a clause giving India the right to have examined by an independent tribunal all the British claims and concessions given to Britishers in the past.

The Hindu, 5-9-1930

1 From the contents; vide “Letter to Govind Patel”, 17-7-1930.

2 On July 31, August 1 and August 2, M. R. Jayakar again saw Gandhiji who dictated this note which was to form the basis of negotiations with the Viceroy.
458. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 2, 1930

CHI. VASUMATI,

I got your letter. When we are required to assume leadership only for service, we should do even that and carry on the work. It may be that faith begins as faith in the doer but it should be transformed into faith in his work. Only then can we feel satisfied. The doer lives for a while and is no more; he is only an instrument. Actions live for ever. Where is Harishchandra now? But truth has always been, and is and will be. Harishchandra’s immortality is the result of his action in the service of truth. Truth existed even before he was born. He served only as an instrument. Fix this thought in your mind with the help of other examples; the goblin of despair will then run away from you.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9298

459. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 2, 1930

CHI. PREMA,

In order to get dreamless sleep one’s thoughts and conduct during waking hours should be pure. The state of sleep is a mirror reflecting one’s condition during the waking state. All of us have the strength to prevent our idealism from following the wrong path. That is the supreme end. There is no question of defeat in such striving.

In what does Krishnakumari differ from Kamalabehn?

Here we have been seeing clouds in the sky for the last one and a half months, but there has been very little rain, though not less than the average in Ahmedabad.

Convey my blessings to Krishnan Nair and tell him that it is my understanding with the authorities that I should not write to prisoners. I have great hopes of him.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10228; also C.W. 6676. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

460. LETTER TO KAMALNAYAN BAJAJ

YERAVDA MANDIR, August 2, 1930

CHL KAMALNAYAN,

I got your letter. Can you read my handwriting in Gujarati? If you cannot read it, I will write in Hindi. Write to me often in the same way that you have done this time. Anyone who goes to visit Father should tell him that he should come out with added weight.

You should write a neat and clear handwriting. Improve your health as much as you can.

Kakasaheb sends you his blessings.

Where is Om? Tell Madalasa that she should write to me. Ask Kamala and Rameshwar also to write.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Where is Radhakisan? How is he?

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3044
461. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

Y. M.,
August 2, 1930

CHI. KANTA,

All right, here is a letter in Devanagari. You will have fully recovered. I can understand Mother’s continuing to worry. You should write to her politely but firmly. If you do so, she will calm down. Have faith that all will be well with you.

I hope Brother is now keeping good health. How many persons are there with him in the Ashram? How many women? My blessings to him.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: Chandrakanta Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

462. LETTER TO SHARDA G. SHAH

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 3, 1930

CHI. SHARDA (BABU),

I receive your letters fairly regularly. You must make it a habit to revise whatever you may write. No letter should be regarded as completed unless you have revised it. Ask Chimanlal to write to me. I hope you are having no more asthma.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9886. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala
463. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

August 3, 1930

CHI. KUSUM (SENIOR),

I got your letter. No one inspired by a noble idea has ever laboured in vain. You are the first to give me precise information about Indulal. I am glad.

I see that you are keeping up a fairly good correspondence with all friends. Do you write to Sushila (the Punjabi)? If you know her address, ask her to write to me. What does she do?

My regards to all.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1801

464. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI PANDYA

August 3, 1930

CHI. BHAGWANJI,

I have your letter. We cannot ask Manibehn to leave so long as she observes the rules as far as her conduct goes. You are needlessly worrying. No matter how she has fallen, you are equally responsible for it. You should realize this and hold your patience. [I say] you were equally responsible because you had not given up your conjugal relationship. As long as a man continues his carnal relationship with his wife it should be regarded as pardonable if the wife is drawn by such passion even towards other quarters, just as a wife tolerates such weakness in her husband.

After such relationship has ceased, if a woman commits adultery the man may be separated from her and support her if necessary.

Please calm down. The bhajan is nice.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 322. Courtesy: Bhagwanji Purushottam Pandya

1 Indulal Yajnik
465. LETTER TO NIRMALA GANDHI
YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 3, 1930

CHI. NIMU,

I got a letter from you after so many weeks. Do not be tardy in writing to me. I hope Sumitra has completely recovered by now. Do not worry about Ramdas. Rama will protect him. He has always enjoyed Rama’s blessings. You may stay where and as you like.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original : Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy : Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

466. LETTER TO MIRABEHN
YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 4, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

I want to be brief this week. There is no special reason for it. As a matter of fact the general letter is long enough.

I do hope your health has kept quite good throughout the travel.1 I am glad you met Parasram. I wonder if he had received my note.

The wheel has worked better. I reached today more than 160 rounds in an hour. I have rearranged the bow and it works better. I realize more and more that good slivers are indispensable for gaining speed in spinning. It is wonderful how attention to every detail counts.

Health keeps all right.
Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5405. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9639

1 The addressee had set out on “an extensive khadi tour”.

VOL.49 :3 APRIL, 1930 -22 AUGUST, 1930 415
467. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 4, 1930

CHI. GANGABEHN (SENIOR),

Your handwriting is improving. Just as you may be said to have spun only if you have done it well, so also about handwriting. You may write only one line, but it should be neatly written. If we have resolved that every breath of ours will be for the love of God, then even the least important work which we do should be done well.

I have written to Bal and told him that most probably he will be able to see Kakasaheb.

I have received the clothes sent by you.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro-6: G. S. Gangabehnne, p. 40; also C.W. 8756. Courtesy:
Gangabehn Vaidya

468. LETTER TO MANSHANKAR TRIVEDI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 4, 1930

CHI. MANU,

Both of us liked your letter. You do everything with determination and you will, therefore, do well whatever you attempt.
Don’t be eager to do anything beyond your strength. When Shankar is released, tell him that I expect a detailed letter from him.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7759
469. LETTER TO RUKMINI BAZAJ

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 4, 1930

CHI. RUKMINI,

How is it that though you have come to the Ashram, you have not been able to find time to write two lines to me? Do you have peace of mind and are you contented and happy? I shall be satisfied if you tell me this.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9312. Courtesy: Benarsilal Bazaj

470. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 4, 1930

CHI. BRIJKRISHNA,

I was awaiting your letter. It has been hinted that I should not write to Devdas, Krishnan Nair and other prisoners. Give my blessings to all.

Never lose cheerfulness. Take up whatever duties come your way. Keep your body healthy and of course it will help if you give up worrying.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2383
471. LETTER TO AN ASHRAM INMATE

[Before August 5, 1930]

...It is our duty to be ready for jail, but it is ignorant attachment to wish to go to jail. . . . Work is becoming slack; try to put life into it. Anyone who does not do his best is a thief, and we have taken a vow not to steal. Those who work but without proper care, are also thieves. If we are really sincere in what we profess, we should, at long last, start working. We should daily pray to God, as we rise in the morning and go to bed at night, that our laziness may leave us, that He may make us sincere and give us the strength to be good.

From a copy of the Gujarati: S.N. 16865

472. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 3/5, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS.

You need not have written the letter despite the pain in your hand; or you should have dictated it to Radha or somebody else. It is God’s grace that even in this condition you could go on with the yajna of spinning. How did the hand slip? It must be completely all right by now.

Ask the person who bakes our bread to write to me and explain the process. How does he make the yeast? How much does he add to a given quantity of flour? When does he knead the flour, and after kneading it how long does he let it remain? Let him give all these details. There is a bakery adjoining our cells. They make quite good bread from maida but cannot produce fermentation in whole-wheat flour like that which we use. So they were asking me. This need not be published.

The fact that Mirabehn got her letter late indicates my subject

---

1 From the Ashram Patrika, 5-8-1930
2 Omissions as in the source
3 Ibid
4 White flour

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
state. I will play on the pipe as long as I can.¹ You should not, therefore, be surprised if my letters stop. I will go on writing them as long as I can with self-respect. Can a prisoner write letters at all? He and his relations and friends should know that he has no rights with regard to the outside world. Be that as it may, both of us are doing fine.

The . . . behn’s² affair was a painful one. I am not at all surprised by such occurrences now. Our experiment does carry with it such risks. Since you will be reading my letter to . . . behn and others, I need not write more here. In such situations we should show the utmost charity. God is the only witness of secret sins. We should never persecute those whose sins become known. We may explain to such persons their duty as we understand it and leave them to God. You did right in not giving . . . behn the permission asked for. I do hope that both . . . behn and . . .³ will see their error one day.

If Amidas has confidence in himself and knows how to make the experiments, you need not interfere with him. Personally I feel that 72 lb. weight is too little. Dates are not enough. I think there will be no harm if he takes curds or milk at the same time. Show this to him. If he has no experience in this matter, he should be guided by my advice. If he feels cold, he should not be obstinate and avoid using a covering. If he does, not feel cold, there will be no harm in keeping the body uncovered. Ask him to write to me.

If Damodardas continues to spit blood, he must go to a place like Panchgani. He may return after he is all right. It is my experience that persons who suffer from such a disease do not get well in the air on the banks of Sabarmati. Instead of going to Panchgani or some such place when it is too late for recovery, if he goes now when the disease is under control he will get well in a short time and return to Sabarmati.

In my letter to Giriraj, read what I have written concerning him.

Write to Jamnalalji, Kishoreji and others that there is an understanding [with the Government] that I cannot write to other prisoners. I got Kishorelal’s letter. If his experiment in diet succeeds, I would envy him. Ramniklal’s matter is settled quite satisfactorily now. I cannot write to him either. Write to Narahari and tell him that he enjoys the fullest grace of God, otherwise he would not again and again get such opportunities for service.

¹ A Gujarati saying
² The names have been omitted.
³ ibid
It is not likely to help me even if you send me a spinning-wheel made of bamboo. I am a lame duck in so far as spinning is concerned. I love it, I work hard and pay great attention to it but the speed simply does not increase. How can I blame the spinning-wheel which I use? I have not been able to see where my stupidity lies. When I was out of jail, no one took the courage to explain it to me. I was satisfied with drawing 160 rounds and did not pay sufficient attention to increasing the speed. I see my error now. But every fool has the words ‘too late’ inscribed on his forehead. If now I let you send a bamboo spinning-wheel, that would be our illustration of the saying “a dull student needs a lot of pens to use”. I don’t want that. I must suffer the consequences of my folly. I am patiently observing, and improving my method wherever improvement is possible. Moreover, I can increase the speed if my physical strength improves. If it does not, I shall be content to live as Rama wills. Ultimately, the blame will be His. If I do my best, He cannot blame me. His law ever prevails without exception, and since He is the first to obey His law, and does that perfectly, we need have no fear. Being as great as He is, if He were to act wilfully, wouldn’t we be utterly destroyed?

Tuesday morning

Next among our observances comes brahmacharya. As a matter of fact all observances are deducible from Truth and are meant to subserve it. The man who is wedded to Truth and worships Truth alone proves unfaithful to it if he applies his talents to anything else. How then can he minister to the senses? A man, whose activities are wholly consecrated to the realization of Truth, which requires utter selflessness, can have no time for the selfish purpose of begetting children and running a household. Realization of Truth through self-gratification should, after what has been said before, appear a contradiction in terms.

If we look at it from the standpoint of ahimsa, we find that the fulfilment of ahimsa is impossible without perfect brahmacharya. Ahimsa means universal love. If a man gives his love to one woman, or a woman to one man, what is there left for all the world besides? It simply means, “we two first, and the devil take all the rest of them.” As a faithful wife must be prepared to sacrifice her all for the sake of her husband, and a faithful husband for the sake of his wife, it is clear that such persons cannot rise to the height of universal love, or look upon all mankind as kith and kin. For they have created a boundary wall or one has been created round their love. The larger their family, the farther are they from universal love. We see this in the whole world. Hence one who would obey the law of ahimsa cannot marry, not to speak of gratification outside the marital bond.

Then what about people who are already married? Will they never be able to realize Truth? Can they never offer their all at the altar of humanity? There is a way out for them. They can behave as if they were not married. On this path I have known nothing as beautiful as such a relationship. Those who have enjoyed this happy condition will be able to bear me out. Many have to my knowledge successfully tried the experiment. If the married couple can think of each other as brother and sister, they are freed for universal service. The very thought that all the women in the world are his sisters, mothers or daughters will at once ennoble a man and snap his chains. The husband and wife do not lose anything here, but only add to their resources and even to their family. Their love becomes free from the impurity of lust and so grows stronger. With the disappearance of this impurity, they can serve each other better, and the occasions for quarrelling become fewer. There are more occasions for quarrelling where the love is selfish and bounded.

If the foregoing argument is appreciated, a consideration of the physical benefits of chastity becomes a matter of secondary importance. How foolish it is intentionally to dissipate vital energy in sensual enjoyment! It is a grave misuse to fritter away for physical gratification that which is given to man and woman for the full development of their bodily and mental powers. Such misuse is the root cause of many a disease.

Brahmacharya like all other observances must be expressed in thought, word and deed. We are told in the Gita, and experience will corroborate the statement, that the foolish man who appears to control his body but is nursing evil thoughts in his mind makes a futile effort.\(^1\) It may be harmful to suppress the body, if the mind is at the same time allowed to go astray. Where the mind wanders, the body must follow sooner or later. It is necessary here to appreciate a distinction. It is one thing to allow the mind to harbour impure thoughts; it is a different thing altogether if it strays among them in spite of ourselves. Victory will be ours in the end if we non-co-operate with the mind in its evil.

\(^1\) III. 6
wanderings. We experience every moment of our lives that often while the body is subject to our control the mind is not. This physical control should never be relaxed, and in addition we must put forth a constant endeavour to bring the mind under control. We can do nothing more, nothing less. If we give way to the mind, the body and the mind will pull in different ways and we shall be false to ourselves. Body and mind may be said to go together so long as we continue to resist the approach of every evil thought.

The observance of such brahmacharya has been believed to be very difficult, almost impossible. In trying to find a reason for this belief, we see that the term brahmacharya has been taken in a narrow sense. Mere control of animal passion has been thought to be tantamount to observing brahmacharya. I feel that this conception is incomplete and wrong. Brahmacharya means control of all the organs of sense. He who attempts to control only one organ and allows all the others free play is bound to find his effort futile. To hear suggestive stories with the ears, to see suggestive sights with the eyes, to taste stimulating food with the tongue, to touch exciting things with the hands, and yet at the same time to expect to control the generative organ is like putting one’s hands in the fire and expecting to escape being burnt. He, therefore, who is resolved to control the one must be likewise determined to control the rest. I have always felt that much harm has been done by the narrow definition of brahmacharya. If we practise simultaneous self-control in all directions, the attempt will soon be possible of success; nay, only then will it be possible. Perhaps the palate is the chief sinner. That is why in the Ashram we have assigned the control of the palate a separate place among our observances. We shall discuss it next time.

Let us remember the root meaning of ‘brahmacharya’ ‘Charya’ means course of conduct; ‘brahmacharya’, conduct adapted to the search of Brahman, i.e., Truth. From this etymological meaning arises the special meaning, viz., control of all the senses. We must entirely forget the incomplete definition which restricts itself to the sexual aspect only.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

There are 45 letters.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U/I
473. LETTER TO J. C. KUMARAPPA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 5, 1930

MY DEAR KUMARAPPA,

I have read your essay¹. It is very good.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 10088

474. LETTER TO RADHA GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 8, 1930

CHI. RADHIKA,

I got your letter written in a hand as neat as print. I wish I could write like that. Don’t think that one can never practise truth as I have defined it.

Write to me and tell me, if you know, about Rukmini’s mental condition.

I had completely forgotten about the poems. After you have read and fully understood Gray’s Elegy, Horatius and the Psalms of David, I may suggest other poems. The three are different kinds of works and are among the best. You will be able to understand them.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 8683. Courtesy: Radhabehn Chaudhri

¹ Not available
475. LETTER TO BALIBEHN VOHRA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 8, 1930

CHI. BALI,

I got the letters of you two sisters, and also Manudi’s. I read the news about Rami having delivered. I hope the baby is growing well. You two sisters are excellent nurses, and so I need not worry about Rami at all. No one can equal you in serving those whom you love.

I was very happy indeed to know that there is nothing but love between you two.

I don’t write to Manudi this time. I have many other letters to write.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 5059. Courtesy: Surendra Mashruwala

476. LETTER TO MAITRI GIRI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 8, 1930

CHL. MAITRI,

I have your letter. Don’t mind if you make mistakes. You should go on writing to me, with proper care. I was very happy to learn that your health had improved.

You are perfectly right when you say that, as moderation in eating is good, so is moderation in providing food to the mind. Prabhubhai is very well qualified to teach you; learn from him.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6216
477. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 8, 1930

CHI. PREMA,

I remember last year's Rakshabandhan\(^1\) as also everyone's surprise. The fact that you, too, became bound with it need not be recalled, for that bond between us continues. Your privilege will be exercised by Kakasaheb this time. Will not he, too, become bound then? But, then, why should he fear that, being already bound? There will be, therefore, no difficulty in the matter. The position is all right from the point of view of the person who lets his wrist be tied with it.

I like your paying such attention to the library. Shila's health ought to improve.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10229; also C.W. 6677. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

478. LETTER TO RUKMINI BAZAJ

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 8, 1930

CHI. RUKMINI,

At last I have a letter from you. Take immediate steps to make your body strong. Let there be no weight on your mind. Occupy yourself with any work or reading you can take up. I shall be happy if you write to me and open your heart. What does the doctor say now?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 9313. Courtesy: Benarsilal Bazaj

\(^1\) A festival during which sisters tie wrist-bands on brothers as token of securing their protection
479. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

Y.M.,
August 8, 1930

CHI. KANTA,

I have your letter. True, I have written to you about saline gargle, but you should still have your teeth examined by the dentist. Visit him again. You must improve your impaired health at once. It is said that a disease should be tackled at its incipient stage.

Your jaw will have healed by now.
Keep writing to Krishna Kumari.
Blessings to Brother. Let him not feel disappointed because women’s work cannot be done at present.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Read the discourse on truth and non-violence over and over again.¹

From a photostat of the Gujarati: Chandrakanta Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

¹ Vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 28/31-7-1930.
480. LETTER TO MANGALA S. PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 8, 1930

CHI, MANGALA,

Are you a walking-stick or a spoilt girl or both? I did not write to you because I wanted to save time. Do you get letters from Kamala’? I hope you are not neglecting spinning?

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 11087. Courtesy : Pushpa Naik

481. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 9, 1930

CHI. SHARDA (BABU),

I received your delightful letter. If we sing bhajans in our dreams, come face to face with God or meet saintly people, our dreams are innocent. If we pamper our palate, cheat people, get angry and have impure thoughts, our dreams are sinful.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9887. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

1 Addressee’s sister
482. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 9, 1930

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I have your letter. I can’t understand why you did not get my letter. I don’t remember to have missed a single post in writing to you. If, however, you do not occasionally get a letter from me, you should know that I am not a free man. Generally all the letters are now dispatched from here. Don’t worry about me. Take care and see that you do not become weak. Replies to your other questions were given in my last letter. How shall I admire Father? Though ill in bed, he has the energy and courage of a lion. That you are born his daughter is bound to show itself. God will make you a lioness.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Kakasaheb is doing fine. He asks me to convey his blessings to you.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N: 3366
483. LETTER TO SATYADEVI GIRI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 9, 1930

CHI. SATYADEVI,

I have your letter. You have drawn the trees well. Now you should have real trees as your models so that your drawing may give an impression of reality. You must practise your letters well before you start giving them curves. You like learning good things that is why I ask you to learn correct spelling even from now. Do not slacken about spinning.¹

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Hindi]
Bapuki Virat Vatsalata, pp. 33-4

484. LETTER TO HEMPRABHA DAS GUPTA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 9, 1930

DEAR SISTER,

The account of Satis Babu’s daily routine gives me great pleasure. If a man spins 1,000 yards of yarn on the takli in one day, what would be his output for an hour? This speed is beyond me. Who is looking after the children of the lady who has been arrested?

Have you any news of Krishnadas? Do you have any letters from him?

Give my blessings to Tarini. Where is Arun? Is Charu with you?

My blessings to both,

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1670

¹ The original was in Gujarati.
485. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 10, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

I have your love letter from Patna. Your experiences are valuable.
I hope that the symptoms of dysentery have disappeared altogether.

I am sticking to the new wheel. The speed is still the same. But I am not going to give it up. It is a precious possession.

The translation of the hymns is going on with clock-work regularity but I have not been able to give them more time; the time-limit therefore remains as I said in one of my letters.

When you write to Mr. Hassan Imam remember me to him and tell him I was delighted to learn that he recalled the conversation of ten years ago.

My weight has gone down by 2 lb., but there is nothing to worry over. The obstinate constipation necessitated reduction in the quantity of milk. I shall pick up if I can revert to the original quantity. It is better to lose weight than to lose health. Energy remains the same. This news is not for publication. I have given it to you for the sake of truth.
I am bound to tell you about my health and I may not suppress the fact of the loss of weight.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5406. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9640
486. LETTER TO SHIVABHAI PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 10, 1930

CHI. SHIVABHAI,

I don’t remember if I got the letter you posted to me separately. What had you written in it?

One method of overcoming one’s weaknesses is this. Pick up any verse you like from the chapter of the Gita read on the particular day and go on reciting it while doing any work during the whole day. This will keep away other harmful thoughts from your mind. I have tried this method. I know that Raychandbhai used to do this. Many others too have had the same experience.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9500

487. LETTER TO HARI-ICHCHHA DESAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 10, 1930

CHI. HARI-ICHCHHA,

I was very happy to read your letter. Why was the handwriting so poor? There are some *ovis*¹ of Ramdas Swami² on how to acquire a good handwriting. I have sent a translation to the Ashram. Ask Haribhai to send you a copy of it.

See that in the spinning competition one of the women wins. How did you become ill? I thought that you were quite strong. Get rid of your fever. How is your eye? I should be happy if all of you immediately went to the Ashram. Chandan, Tara and Vasant should also write to me. Kakasaheb sends his blessings.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7465

¹ Stanzas
² Seventeenth-century saint poet of Maharashtra
CHI. KASHINATH,

August 10, 1930

I have your letter. I hope it is not necessary for you to leave the Ashram. I think, however, that you have not realized the importance of sacrificial work and the necessity of keeping a diary. It is at a time like the present that discipline proves to be the fabled wish-fulfilling tree. All persons cannot realize the value of a thing equally well. The best course, therefore, is to obey blindly all the rules of an institution of which we are members. It would not matter if the entries in the diary were the same every day. The importance of the diary lies in this very fact, provided the entries are a faithful record. Anyone who can truthfully record that his days pass with the unvarying movement of the planets of the solar system would be truly blessed. I would, therefore, advise you to do, with full faith, everything which Narandas may ask you to do. I have the utmost confidence in his decisions.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5248
489. LETTER TO LAKSHMIBEHN KHARE

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 11, 1930

CHI. LAKSHMIBEHN (KHARE),

Chhaganlal has written to me about your adventures. May God give you all strength and a long life.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 275. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn Khare

490. LETTER TO V. G. DESAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 11, 1930

BHAISHRI VALJI,

This letter is meant for the whole batch. Write to me and tell me how many of you have been released and how everyone is. What did you all do [while in jail]? How did you keep there? Have you improved your health and become stronger?

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Anyone who wishes to write to me may do so.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7405. Courtesy: V. G. Desai
I got your letter. Kakasaheb has liked your translation of the sthitaprajna. I had expected something different. I cannot of course make any corrections from here and send the thing back to you. For the present, therefore, the translation will remain with me. Your effort is certainly very good. Continue learning in that manner. It will be good if now you go to Almora as early as possible. Let me caution you somewhat regarding your model of the spinning-wheel. I am of no use and you may take it that Kakasaheb is of no use either, nor Vinoba. Our reasons for desiring that you should study the matter, are different from one another’s. But from your point of view, it is sufficient that we are useless for your purpose. Your reasoning does not seem to be correct. The experiences which you have gathered through others, convincingly show that there will not be much increase in speed, nor will the yarn spun be even. The fact is that your model of the spinning-wheel follows the model in use at present, that is, it is not purely a machine. A machine is that which requires no intelligence or dexterity. Plying the spinning-wheel is an art and it can, therefore, be mastered only by one who has the required skill. You should copy the Singer [sewing-machine] or the spinning-jenny but you are not such an expert mechanic. It seems that a spinning-wheel on which the speed can be increased only with great difficulty and which moreover is costly, has no place in our programme. Have I been able to make this quite clear to you? If not, write to me again. It will be a different matter if, though you have understood what I have said, you think that my reasoning is faulty. I have not written all this to dishearten you, but only to suggest that you should not lose your head over this particular model of the spinning-wheel. You have many other things to do in that

---

1 Presumably the verses 54 to 72, chapter II of the Bhagavad Gita which describe the characteristics of a sthitaprajna, i.e., of one who is firmly established in spiritual wisdom.

2 In Yeravda Prison direction.

Try to understand what I have been saying about the takli. I do not propose the takli as a substitute for the spinning-wheel but the takli can enter a field where the spinning-wheel cannot. The whole plan of spinning depends upon the number of people who take it up. If merely a handful of us had occupied this vast country, spinning would have had no place here. If a small number of people occupy a large area, that small number has to be violent by nature. Of what use is the takli or the spinning-wheel to them as a symbol of ahimsa? The takli or the spinning-wheel is a tool to man as man destroys the very basis of competition. We must not think of either of them from the present day commercial point of view. Rather, they imply the transformation of the commercial point of view itself. In Almora, therefore, you should pursue your work in regard to wool from this point of view and not from the point of view of Kashmir. If you give more and more importance to the principle that one should wear cloth made from yarn spun by oneself, you will have no cause to be disappointed, and will readily appreciate the great value of the takli. Yes, if you can make suitable changes in the spinning-wheel so that wool can be spun on it, do so. That is done even in this jail. With but a few changes, even the spinning-wheels in current use will permit the spinning of wool and will produce more yarn than the takli. However, for the roaming tribes of cowherds and shepherds, etc., the takli will certainly remain. In that way, on the whole, the takli will be found superior from the point of view of numbers. If you have still not followed all this, ask me again. Belief in the usefulness of the takli is a matter not of faith but purely of reason. In such a matter, to depend on faith may be a sign of indolence.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33018
492. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

Tuesday morning,
August 12, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS.

Control of the palate: Control of palate is very closely connected with the observance of brahmacharya. I have found from experience that the observance of celibacy becomes comparatively easy if one acquires mastery over the palate. This does not figure among the observances of time-honoured recognition. Could it be because even great sages found it difficult to achieve? In the Satyagraha Ashram we have elevated it to the rank of an independent observance, and must therefore consider it by itself.

Aswad means not to enjoy savour; savour means pleasure. Food has to be taken as we take medicine, that is, without thinking whether it is palatable or otherwise and only in quantities limited to the needs of the body. Food means everything we eat. Hence milk and fruit are also included in it. Just as medicine taken in too small a dose does not act or acts only partially, and as too large a dose injures the system, so it is with food. It is, therefore, a breach of this observance to take anything just for its pleasant taste. It is equally a breach to take too much of what one finds to one’s taste. From this it follows that to put salt in one’s food in order to increase or modify its taste or in order to cure its insipidity is a breach of the observance. But the addition is not a breach if it is considered necessary for health to have a certain proportion of salt with food. Of course it would be sheer hypocrisy to add salt or any other thing to our food, deluding ourselves that it is necessary for the system if as a matter of fact it is not.

Reasoning along these lines, we find we have to give up many things that we have been enjoying, as they are not needed for nutrition. And one who thus gives up a multitude of eatables will acquire self-control in the natural course of things. The proverbs “one cooking vessel expects thirteen different ingredients”, “the stomach makes one submit to forced labour”, “the stomach makes one a flatterer”, etc., are full of meaning. This subject has received such scant attention that choice of food with this observance in view is a very difficult matter. Parents, out of false affection, give their children a variety of foods, ruin their constitutions and create in them artificial tastes. When they grow up, they have diseased bodies and perverted tastes. The evil consequences of this early indulgence dog us at every step; we waste much money and fall an easy prey to the medicine man.
Most of us, instead of keeping the organs of sense under control, become their slaves. An experienced physician once observed that he had never seen a healthy man. The body is injured every time that one overeats, and the injury can be partially repaired only by fasting.

No one need take fright at my observations or give up the effort in despair. The taking of a vow does not mean that we are able to observe it completely from the very beginning; it does mean constant and honest effort in thought; word and deed with a view to its fulfilment. We must not practise self-deception by resorting to some make-believe. To degrade or cheapen an ideal for our convenience is to practise untruth and to lower ourselves. To understand an ideal and then to make a Herculean effort to reach it, no matter how difficult it is, this is purushartha, manly endeavour. (The word ‘purusha’ should be interpreted in its etymological sense, and, not merely to mean a man.
That which dwells in the pura, the body, is purusha. If we interpret the word ‘purushartha’ in this sense, it can be used equally for men and women.) One who at all times fulfils the key observances in their perfection has nothing else left for him to do in this world, he is Bhagavan, perfect man; he is a yogi. We are but humble creatures, aspiring after moksha and seeking knowledge, determined to follow Truth and dedicated to its quest. As taught in the Gita, therefore, we should keep on struggling humbly but vigilantly. If we do so, one day we shall be fit for God’s grace and then all our pleasures in objects of sense will disappear.

If we have realized the importance of this observance, we should make fresh effort to practise it. For that, it is not necessary to think about food all the hours of the day. The only thing needful is perpetual vigilance, which will help us to find out very soon when we eat for self-indulgence and when in order only to sustain the body.
This being discovered, we must resolutely set our faces against mere indulgence. A common kitchen where this principle is observed is very helpful, as it relieves us from the necessity of thinking out the menu for each day, and provides us with acceptable food of which we may take only a limited quantity with a contented and thankful mind. By eating thus we are able to observe without any difficulty the vow of controlling the palate. The authorities of a common kitchen lighten our burden and serve as watch-dogs of our observance. They will not pamper us, they will cook only such food as helps us to keep the body a fit instrument for service. In ideal conditions we should require the use of fire but rarely or not at all. We should find our food from what the great fire, the sun, cooks. If we look at the matter from this point of view, it becomes clear to us that man is purely a herbivorous creature. But here we need not go so deep into the matter. All that is necessary for us to consider here is the nature of the vow of controlling the palate, the difficulties involved in its observance and its close connection with the observance of brahmacharya. Having understood this, let everyone make an honest effort to observe the vow to the best of his or her ability.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

_Bapuna Patro—9: Shri Narandas Gandhine_, Part I, pp. 102-4; also C.W. 8121. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

493. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

[August 12, 1930]¹

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got the packet sent by you in time. If you have there the guide book to the Singer sewing machine, send it here. Kakasaheb has got interested in the machine and wants to know all about it.

As regards Hasmukhrai, read my letters to him, to Lilabehn and to Bhansali. I like your suggestion. Do serve Lilabehn so long as you can. If she decides to marry, she certainly cannot stay.

The English translation of my discourses² is not good. What I read in the _Bo[mbay] Chro[nicle]_ is not at all good. I think the practice

¹ The discourse on ‘Control of Palate’ with which this letter concludes is already included in Vol. XLIV, pp. 79-81 and bears the date August 12, 1930. It is therefore not being reproduced here.

² On the Ashram vows written every Thursday morning and therefore called “Mangal Prabhat” in Gujarat, the phrase meaning ‘Auspicious Morning’. The discourses commenced with the letter to the addressee dated July 22.
of translating the discourses should be stopped, or, the translations should be really good. There is no need at present to give the people the translation of the discourses. Draw Kumarappa’s attention to this, or Premabehn’s if she has done the translation. The quality of the English also does not do us credit. Keshu’s health is bad and causes concern. If he needs change of air, arrange for it. Sheela and Rambhau must have again got back on their feet. Read the letter to Kashinath.
You do get problems to solve but you are quite upto the task, and so I do not worry. Consider all this as no more than my ideas and opinions and do what you-yourself wish. Go on doing fearlessly what you can and what your conscience permits you to do. I have no right whatever to guide you from here. You have wakened up Somabhai, Vithal and the others very well indeed. The letters meant for Kakasaheb should not be put into the packet meant for me. If there are any letters which he should see, they should be addressed separately to him. Everyone has Kakasaheb’s blessings of course. I have not written separately to each of you. Kakasaheb keeps quite good health. This time, too, there is some increase in his weight. It has increased at least by one pound.
This increase should be considered solid since it has taken place in spite of his doing exercise. He can digest about two and a half \textit{seer}$^1$ of curd. He takes less of butter. At present, he is living on fruit. I am unable to report improvement in my health. There is some information in the letter to Mirabehn. There is nothing to worry over.

I have been reading with Kakasaheb, Vinayak Ode—the third Marathi book. It contains some fine stanzas by Ramdas Swami in the \\textit{ovi} meter. I give below for you all an extract on how to write a translation which has been seen by Kakasaheb.

\textbf{How To Write?}

The characters should be round, easy to read, well-formed and as black as if written with lamp-black. The lines should be so pleasing in appearance as if the characters forming a line were so many pearls smoothly moving forward. All the characters should be of uniform size, clear, neither too large nor too small, and there should be \footnote{A measure of weight current before the introduction of the metric system, approximately equivalent to two pounds} sufficient space between two characters. The kana’, the matra’, the ref’, and the veiaali’ (the sign for ‘e’) also should be clearly formed. All the characters from the beginning of a book to its end, should be so formed that they appear to be written with the same nib. The blackness of the characters, the thickness, the bent and the corners of the nibs used, also should be of uniform quality. The lines should not touch each other. The ref and the matra should not be so marked that either might be higher than the other. The line below a vertically long character, should not touch its lower end. A line should be drawn with a pencil across the sheet and then the characters should be written along that line. The space between the lines should not be uneven. There should be no corrections anywhere. If examined, not a single error should be found . . . .

Kakasaheb cannot understand the exact meaning of this ovi. If Balkrishna, Shripatrao or anybody else knows its meaning, let me have it. One should be very careful in childhood when learning to form the characters. They should be so formed as to be pleasing to the people. When one is young, one should not form the characters so small that when one has grown old, one cannot decipher them at all. One should cultivate the habit of forming medium-sized characters. One should leave blank spaces as margins on both sides of a line and form clearly visible characters between them. Let the sheet of paper used for writing crumble into pieces when it will, the characters should remain as clear as when they were formed.

RAMDAS

It is not as if we did not know all this. My purpose in reproducing it here is to show the great importance Ramdas Swami attached to the subject that he composed ovis on it. Good characters are like an ornament to one. Our ancestors wrote pearl-like characters. The art of printing had not been invented then and writing was a fine worldly accomplishment. It should be so even today. I stress all this because I myself painfully suffer [because of my deficiency in this respect]. I made no effort at all to improve my handwriting, and now I

1 A vertical line after a letter as a sign of the long ‘a’ sound
2 A bent above a letter as a sign of the sound ‘e’ as in ‘hen’
3 A circular mark ‘c’ as a sign of an indistinctly pronounced ‘r’
4 A verticle line half bent at the top as a sign of either the ‘i’ or ‘ee’ vowel sound feel reluctant to spare time necessary for the effort. It seems to me that I cannot at present afford to expend the necessary energy for that. Let everyone take a lesson from my miserable deficiency in this respect and try to improve his or her handwriting as much as he or she can, while they have the time to do so.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

There are 52 letters in all.

From the Gujarati original : S N. 33961

494. LETTER TO T. B. SAPRU AND M. R. JAYAKAR

YERAVDA CENTRAL PRISON,
August 15, 1930

DEAR FRIENDS,

We are deeply grateful to you for having undertaken the duty of trying to effect a peaceful settlement between the British Government and the Congress. After having perused the correspondence between yourselves and His Excellency the Viceroy and having had the benefit of protracted talks with you and having discussed among ourselves, we have come to the conclusion that the time is not yet ripe for securing a settlement honourable for our country. Marvellous as has been the massawakening during the past five months and great as has been the sufferings of the people among all grades and classes representing the different creeds, we feel that the sufferings have been neither sustained enough nor large enough for the immediate attainment of the end. Needless to mention we do not in any way share your view or the Viceroy’s that civil disobedience has harmed the country or that it is ill-timed or unconstitutional. English history teems with instances of bloody revolts whose praises Englishmen have sung unstintingly and taught us to do likewise. It therefore ill becomes the Viceroy or any intelligent Englishman to condemn a revolt that is in intention and that has overwhelmingly remained in execution peaceful, but we have no desire to quarrel with condemnation, whether official or unofficial, of the present civil disobedience campaign. The wonderful mass response to the movement is, we hold, its sufficient justification. What is, however, the point here is the fact that we gladly make common cause with you in wishing, if it is at all possible, to stop or suspend civil disobedience. It can be no pleasure to us needlessly to expose the men, women and even the children of our country to imprisonment, lathi charges and worse. You will, therefore, believe us when we assure you and through you the Viceroy that we would leave no stone unturned to explore any and every channel for honourable peace, but we are free to confess as yet we see no such sign on the horizon. We notice no symptom of conversion of the English official world to the view that it is India’s men and women who must decide what is best for India. We distrust the pious declarations of the good intentions, often well meant, of officials. The age-long exploitation by the English of the people of this ancient land has rendered them almost incapable of seeing the ruin, moral, economic and political, of our country which this exploitation has brought about. They cannot persuade themselves to see that one thing needful for them to do is to get off our backs and do some reparation for the past wrongs, by helping us to grow out of the dwarfing process that has gone on for a century of British domination, but we know you and some of our learned countrymen think differently. You believe a conversion has taken place, at any rate, sufficient to warrant participation in the proposed Conference. In spite, therefore, of the limitation we are labouring under, we would gladly co-operate with you to the extent of our ability.

1 A joint interview took place in the Yeravda Jail on August 14 and 15 between Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and M. R. Jayakar on the one hand and Gandhiji, Motilal Nehru, Jawaharlal Nehru, Vallabhbai Patel, Dr. Syed Mahmud, Jairamdas Doulatram and Sarojini Naidu on the other. After the discussions this letter was given to Sapru and Jayakar with permission to show it to the Viceroy. For Sapru and Jayakar’s reply, vide “Letter from T.B.Sapru and M.R.Jayakar to congress leaders”, 16-8-1930.

The following is the utmost response it is possible for us, circumstanced as we are, to make to your friendly endeavour.

We feel the language used by the Viceroy in the reply given to your letter about the proposed Conference is too vague to enable us to assess its value in terms of the National Demand framed last year in Lahore nor are we in a position to say anything authoritative without reference to a properly constituted meeting of the Working Committee of the Congress and if necessary to the A.I.C.C., but we can say that for us individually no solution will be satisfactory unless (a) it recognizes in as many words the right of India to secede at will from the British Empire, (b) it gives to India complete national Government responsible to her people including the control of defence forces and economic control and covers all the eleven points raised in Gandhiji’s letter to the Viceroy and (c) it gives to India the right to refer if necessary to an independent tribunal such British claims, concessions and the like including the so-called public debt of India as may seem to the national Government to be unjust or not in the interest of the people of India.

NOTE. Such adjustments as may be necessitated in the interests of India during the transference of power to be determined by India’s chosen representatives.

(2) If the foregoing appears to be feasible to the British Government and a satisfactory declaration is made to that effect, we should recommend to the Working Committee the advisability of calling off civil disobedience, that is to say, disobedience of certain laws for the sake of disobedience but peaceful picketing of foreign cloth and liquor will be continued unless Government themselves can enforce prohibition of liquor and foreign cloth. The manufacture of salt by the people will have to be continued and the penal clauses of the Salt Act should not be enforced. There will be no raids on Government or private salt depots.

(3) Simultaneously with the calling off of civil disobedience (a) all the satyagrahi prisoners and other political prisoners convicted or under trial who have not been guilty of violence or incitement to violence should be ordered to be released, (b) properties confiscated under the Salt Act, the Press Act, the Revenue Act and the like should be restored, (c) fines and securities taken from convicted satyagrahis or under the Press Act should be refunded, (d) all the officers including village officers who have resigned or who may have been dismissed during the civil disobedience movement and who may desire to rejoin Government service should be reinstated.

NOTE. The foregoing sub-clauses refer also to the Non-cooperation period.

(e) All the Viceregal Ordinances should be repealed.
(4) The question of the composition of the proposed Conference and of the Congress being represented at it can only be decided after the foregoing preliminaries are satisfactorily settled.¹

Yours sincerely,

MOTILAL NEHRU
M. K. GANDHI
SAROJINI NAIDU
VALLABHBHAI PATEL
JAI RAMDAS
DOULATRAM
SYED MAHMHUD
JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

The Hindu, 5-9-1930

495. LETTER TO RADHABEHN GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 18, 1930

CHI. RADHIKA,

I have your letter. How much milk do you drink and what fruits do you eat? Do you feel constipated? If you drink enough milk, I am sure you will not feel tired.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 8684. Courtesy: Radhabehn Chaudhri

¹ With this letter Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and M. R. Jayakar met Lord Irwin at Simla between August 21 and 28.
496. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 18, 1930

CHI. PREMA,

You should not lose patience. It is not easy to control the mind. But you should have faith that, with proper effort, it can be done. What effect did the eating of bitter gourds have on your health? It is not necessary to squeeze out the juice from them. If you crush or mash them, you can eat the pulp after adding lemon juice and salt. The necessity of prayers is a matter of universal experience. If you have faith in them, you will feel interest in them. I am in a great hurry.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10230; also C.W. 6678. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

497. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 18, 1930

CHI. VASUMATI,

I have your letter. We should learn to preserve peace of mind in all circumstances. Today I could get a little time only at the end to write letters.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9285
498. LETTER TO RUKMINI BAZAJ

August 18, 1930

CHI. RUKMINI,

I have your letter. Who reads everyone’s letters? Those which are marked “not to be read” should certainly not be read. Make your health absolutely all right.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9051

---

499. LETTER TO KUNVARJI PAREKH

August 18, 1930

CHI. KUNVARJI,

I have your letter. Let me know what ultimately happened about the cap. Write to me from time to time.

Convey my compliments to Bhai Hirji.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9716
500. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 18, 1930

CHI. RAIHANA,
Khuda Hafiz,

Your Gujarati letters are wonderful. Do continue to write to me. It is fine indeed that you taught prayer songs to Mrs. Lukmani’s monkey-army. Take care of your health in everything you do. I have not seen your card and public letter.

Which Sirat is Father translating? Convey my Vandemataram to Mother, as also to other members of the family who may be there.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9619

501. LETTER TO ROHINI KANAIYALAL DESAI

August 18, 1930

CHI. ROHINI,

I have your letter. I was very glad. When you get an opportunity, teach Hamidabehn Gujarati. May God grant long life to every one of you and make her a sincere worker.

Blessings from.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2651

1 In Urdu.
502. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 18, 1930

CHI. MANI (PATEL),

I have your letter. Father was brought here and stayed with me for four or five days. I got news of you. God will see that it is all well with you. Do write to me, and ask Dahyabhai also to write.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro—4: Manibehn Patelne, p. 72

503. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 18, 1930

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I have your letter. With the conditions prevailing in the country I do not feel like taking dry fruit unless necessary. I have no time to write more today.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3427
504. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

Y. M.,
August 18, 1930

CHI. KANTA,

I have your letter. If you take to Premabehn’s diet your blood may show improvement. Do you go for walks? Are Your periods regular? Your body must become as hard as steel. Blessings to Brother.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: Chandrakanta Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi
National Museum and Library

505. LETTER TO JAYAPRAKASH NARAYAN

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 18, 1930

CHI. JAYAPRAKASH,

Your letter. I am glad to note that you are calm. These days Jawaharlal is with me. I hope you are both keeping good health.

Keep writing to me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 3428
506. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 18, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

I must be briefer even than last week. It is just striking 10 p.m. — very unusual for me. And this is the last night, if I am to keep time as I must. But there is nothing much to say either.

Yesterday I went back to the travelling wheel. The strain was at once reduced and the output greater for the same time— though not much. But I know that I shall get a greater output on it. I saw that it was a wrong expression of love to persist in using your charkha if it did not fulfil the purpose for which you sent it. Only I did not want to give it up without a full trial. My health is all right but the weight is still on the downgrade. But that is nothing. As soon as constipation is under control, it will go up. I expect a rise this week.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5408. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9642

507. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

Unrevised

YERAVDA MANDIR,
Tuesday morning, August 19, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS.

We now come to the observance of non-stealing. On deeper reflection we see that all observances are implicit in Truth and ahimsa or truth alone. This can be expressed thus:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Truth</th>
<th>Truth</th>
<th>Ahimsa</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Ahimsa or</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Brahmacharya</th>
<th>Control of</th>
<th>Non-</th>
<th>Non-</th>
<th>Fearlessness</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>the Palate</td>
<td>Non-</td>
<td>Non-</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td></td>
<td>stealing</td>
<td>possession</td>
<td>and so on</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

450

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
Ahimsa may be deduced from Truth, or may be paired with Truth. Truth and ahimsa are one and the same thing. I am partial to Truth, however. In the final analysis there can only be a single reality. The highest Truth stands by itself. Truth is the end, ahimsa is the means thereto. We know what ahimsa or non-violence is, although we find it difficult to follow the law of love. But as for Truth, we know only a fraction of it. Perfect knowledge of Truth is difficult of attainment for man even like the perfect practice of non-violence.

Asteya means non-stealing.

It is impossible that a person should steal and simultaneously claim to know Truth or cherish love. Yet every one of us is consciously or unconsciously, more or less, guilty of theft. We may steal not only what belongs to others, but also what belongs to ourselves, as is done, for instance, by a father who eats something secretly, keeping his children in the dark about it. The Ashram kitchen stores are our common property, but one who secretly removes a single crystal of sugar from it stamps himself a thief. A child who takes another’s pen steals. It is theft to take anything belonging to another without his permission, even if it be with his knowledge. It is equally theft to take something in the belief that it is nobody’s property. Things found on the roadside belong to the ruler or the local authority. Anything found near the Ashram must be handed over to the secretary, who in his turn will pass it on to the police if it is not Ashram property. Thus far, it is pretty smooth sailing. But the observance of non-stealing goes very much farther. It is theft to take something from another even with his permission if we have no real need of it. We should not receive any single thing that we do not need. Theft of this description generally has food for its object. It is theft for me to take any fruit that I do not need, or to take it in a larger quantity than is necessary. We are not always aware of our real needs, and most of us improperly multiply our wants and thus unconsciously make thieves of ourselves. If we devote some thought to the subject we shall find that we can get rid of quite a number of our wants. One who follows the observance of non-stealing will bring about a progressive reduction of his wants. Much of the distressing poverty in this world has arisen out of breaches of the principle of non-stealing.

Theft thus far considered may be termed external or physical theft. There is, besides, another kind of theft, subtler and far more degrading to the human spirit. It is theft mentally to desire acquisition of anything belonging to others, or to cast a greedy eye on it. It is mental theft if anyone, whether a grown-up person or a child, feels tempted by the sight of an attractive thing. One who takes no food, physically speaking, is generally said to be fasting, but he is guilty of theft as well as a breach of his fast if he gives himself up to a mental contemplation of pleasure when he sees others taking their meals. He is similarly guilty if, during his fast, he is continually planning the varied menu he will have after breaking the fast. One who observes the principle of non-stealing will refuse to bother himself about things to be acquired in future. This evil anxiety for the future will be found at the root of many a theft. Today we only desire possession of a thing; tomorrow we shall begin to adopt measures, straight if possible, crooked when thought necessary, to acquire its possession. Ideas may be stolen no less than material things. One who egotistically claims to have originated some good idea, which, really speaking, did not originate with him, is guilty of a theft of ideas. Many learned men have committed such theft in the course of world history, and plagiarism is by no means uncommon even today. Supposing, for instance, that I see a new type of spinning-wheel in Andhra and manufacture a similar wheel in the Ashram, passing it off as my own invention, I practise untruth and am clearly guilty of stealing another’s invention.

One who takes up the observance of non-stealing has, therefore, to be humble, thoughtful, vigilant and in habits simple. I have written the Ashram letters today under much pressure of time. Motilalji and others are here and I spent practically the whole of the last week in discussions with them. Even now I must give some time to them. I could, therefore, take up writing letters only yesterday evening after the prayers and started writing this after the morning prayers today. There are, therefore, the fewest letters this time and I have made them as short as I could. You will read about...behn' in my letters to Ganganbehn and Bhansali. Be firm and go on doing what you think proper. My immediate reaction is that, if...behn’s mind has become steady and recovered its purity, we can condone her violation of the pledge to go away and live outside the Ashram. The chief thing to consider now is how to help her to overcome her passion and, on the other hand, to safeguard her freedom. Women have been so completely suppressed that in their helplessness they cannot even think. The Ashram,

---

1 The name has been omitted.
therefore, should adopt a very liberal attitude towards them. This involves many risks. We should take them if we wish to serve women. Act upon this view within the limits of your capacity. When I see . . . behn’s face in my mind’s eye, I see nothing but innocence and fear on it. She is not the cause of her fall. After hearing about this misconduct, I can see the signs of impurity on the face of . . . .1 I cannot see such signs on the face of . . . behn. What I see on her face is simplicity. And ignorance, of course. She can almost be compared to Rishyashringa. There is of course this important difference that . . . behn has had the experience of passion, whereas Rishyashringa had never had such experience. The poet, however, has described him as if he was only waiting for a touch. That is the condition of countless seemingly innocent men and women today. “Desire is aroused by coming together.” Hence we have no right to condemn anyone. Our duty, plainly, is to show love and to exercise more vigilance in regard to ourselves. I have written enough today.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

There are 30 letters in all.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U/I

508. LETTER TO RAMABEHN JOSHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

August 21, 1930

CHI. RAMABEHN.

I have a letter from you after a long time. I was indeed eager for one. I never feel concerned about Dhiru and Vimu. I have observed that children who are troublesome like them afterwards become very quiet. You have done well in restraining your desire to go and see them. You have done well in restraining your desire to go and see them. Look upon any children who may come to you as Dhiru and Vimu and show them love. Then in course of time your love for

---

1 The name has been omitted.
Dhiru and Vimu will become pure and help them to become good.
My blessings to all the women.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5332

509. LETTER TO MANSHANKAR J. TRIVEDI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 21, 1930

CHI. MANU,

I don’t mind your having written a “long” letter. I don’t think it was “long”. My advice to you is that, till Kakasaheb arrives there, you should do what work you can staying where you are. That will be true self-dedication on your part and will also be a test for you. A public worker should also learn to keep patience. It is for the leader to think in what way any worker can serve best. If we do with perfect devotion the work assigned to us, we shall have done our true dharma. Only through experience can one know what is beyond one’s strength. If we are free from ignorant attachment to anything, it is easy enough for us to discover the limits of our strength. I have given this advice after discussing the matter with Kakasaheb. If you still do not feel peace of mind, write to me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7760
510. LETTER TO NARAYAN M. KHARE

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 21, 1930

BHAJJI,

Both of us felt happy after reading your letter. I had heard that your health had suffered. Since you have brought no disease with you, you will recover your former strength by and by. Take care of your health. Rambhau’s and Mathuri’s do write to me occasionally. I read in one or two letters that Lakshmibehn had displayed great courage and fortitude. Her face itself reveals her courage. Your voice as you used to sing at the time of prayers haunts me every day. Neither of us can sing bhajans, as you know. We content ourselves with Ramadhan.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 231. Courtesy: Lakshmibai Khare

511. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 21, 1930

CHI. VASUMATI,

I have your letter. After some time, we get used to working for a public cause under anyone’s leadership and don’t feel hurt. We can claim to have become true servants only if we learn to do so. When the sense of ‘I’ has vanished, we cease to feel that we are subject to anyone’s authority. He who feels himself to be a cipher experiences peace in all conditions of life. Such a state of mind is not easy to attain, but it is certainly possible for everyone who strives for it. I have no doubt at all that you, at any rate, will attain it one day.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9284

1 Addressee’s son and daughter
2 ibid
512. LETTER TO MATHURADAS PURUSHOTTAM

YERAVIDA MANDIR,
August 21, 1930

CHI.MATHURADAS,

I have your letter and the chapter on carding. The oil has not arrived yet. Have you tried the use of kerosene? It also helps to keep away mosquitoes. If the spot where they often settle is besmeared with kerosene, they keep away from it. I did not know about cotton-seed oil. As we are permitted to sleep in the open here, we are not harassed.

I like all your articles on carding. In some places the language seems to be unduly emphatic. My experience is that there can be no guarantee that yarn will be evenly drawn if the cotton has been well carded. Though I am a very careful spinner, the yarn is not always even, even if the carding has been of the highest quality. The drawing of even yarn is also an art by itself and depends on dexterity in using one’s fingers. Anyone whose fingers have become inert, so to say, will certainly find difficulty in drawing even yarn. I have seen spinners with quick fingers drawing even yarn from badly carded cotton. I do not say this to minimize the importance of carding. I only wish to make it clear that good carding does not solve all the difficulties of the spinner.

The art of spinning, as I have said, includes all activities from the plucking of cotton from the pods to the making of hanks, and a spinner should have acquired mastery over all of them. If even one of these processes has not been efficiently carried out, careful spinning by itself will not compensate for the deficiency. We should not assert anything if we are not perfectly sure about it. Ask Lakshmidas to go through your articles before publishing them. It will be good if you show them to some other person also who is an expert in the craft. Perhaps Shankerlal will help you. It is desirable that the book should be as perfect as possible. Once again, I find Motibehn’s letters have stopped coming. How is she now?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3742
513. LETTER TO MATHURADAS PURUSHOTTAM

[After August 21, 1930]

CHI. MATHURADAS.

I have your letter. You have taken much care about the book. I have not yet been able to read the last portion. Spinning leaves me very little time for anything else. Most of what remains is taken up in writing letters. See that you do not harm your eyes. If necessary, get them examined by Dr. Haribhai. He has very good knowledge of the subject. The parcel of cotton-seed oil has arrived in the office. Motibehn has not yet replied to my last letter.

About saptapadi, in my next letter.¹

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3743

514. LETTER TO RADHABEHN GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 22, 1930

CHI. RADHIKA.

I shall wait for your letter. I can’t bear the thought of Keshu’s remaining ill all the time. You should take special care of his health. How did he again get fever? What food does he eat? Give me all details.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I have just received your letter. I understand.

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 8685. Courtesy: Radhabehn Chaudhri

¹ From the reference to cotton-seed oil it appears this was written some time after the preceding item.

² The rest of the letter is not available.
515. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 22, 1930

CHI. MANI (PATEL).

You have given a good report of your experiences. I now know you met Father. But he has not met me [since then]. Write to me regularly. When in Bombay, meet Perinbehn [Captain] and Lilavati [Munshi].

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro-4: Manibehn Patelne, p. 73

516. LETTER TO MAHAVIR GIRI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 22, 1930

CHI. MAHAVIR.

I have your letter. Dhanurdhari’s batch will be a fine sight. We should acquire the utmost proficiency in the work which falls to our share and feel satisfied. If you try and make an effort, you will be able to improve your handwriting. What vows did you take on the Janmashtami¹ day? Don’t neglect to write the diary through laziness.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6217

¹ Krishna’s birthday, observed on the 8th day of the dark fortnight of Bhadrapada (Shravan in Gujarat) corresponding to August-September.
517. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

CHI. KUSUM (DESAI),

I have your letter. You see that I am never behind in replying to any of your letters. Learn from Sushila all that you can. But do you get any time for reading? Do you write the diary? Have you kept up prayers? I keep good health.

How many women work there? Is there any news from Kapadwanj?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1802

518. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

CHI. PREMA,

I have your letter. Kaka tied the sacred string on my wrist on the Balev day and also bowed to me on your behalf.

Panditji’s patience and capacity for self-sacrifice are as great as you describe them to be. He has also displayed forbearance of a high order.

Henceforth, you should not delay your going to bed or prevent someone from doing so till ten. The moment it strikes nine, we should be in bed.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10231; also C.W. 6679. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

1 Rakshabandhan
519. LETTER TO KAPILRAI MEHTA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 22, 1930

CHI. KAPIL,

I don’t mind your staying at Vile Parle. Who else are there? How is Abdulla Sheth? Improve your health and make it robust. Kakasaheb keeps good health.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Kakasaheb sends his blessings.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3974

520. LETTER TO SATYADEVI GIRI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 22, 1930

CHI. SATYADEVI,

It is better you correct the mistakes in your letter then and there than that I should read it making the corrections. The benefit is twofold. You will notice your own errors and I will have no corrections to make. Isn’t it good?

Tell Mother¹ to write to me describing her present activities.²

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Hindi]

Bapuki Virat Vatsalata, p. 34

¹ Krishnamaiya Devi.
² The original was in Gujarati.
APPENDICES

APPENDIX I

PERSONS WHO ACCOMPANIED GANDHIJI ON THE DANDI MARCH

SIND, 1: 71. Anand Hingorani.

NEPAL, 1: 72. Mahavir.

TAMILNAD, 1: 73. Tapan Nair.

ANDHRA, 1: 74. Subrahmany.

UTKAL, 1: 75. Motibasdas.

KARNATAK, 1: 76. Mahadev Martanda.

BIHAR, 1: 77. Girivardhari Chaudhari.

BENGAL, 1: 78. Durgesh Chandra Das.

Young India, 12-3-1930

1 Vide “Speech at prayer meeting, Sabarmati ashram”, 12-3-1930.
APPENDIX II

JAWAHARLAL NEHRU’S NOTE ON MINORITIES

The curtain has gone up again on the Indian stage and all the world is witness to our struggle for freedom. It is a strange struggle and our methods are novel. But it is also a grim struggle and the pledge that India took on Independence Day, January 26th, will not be forgotten. The spark that was lit by our leader on the banks of the Sabarmati is already spreading like a prairie fire throughout the country, and soon the whole land will try to redeem that pledge. Many a tragic scene will be enacted and many an actor on this vast stage will suffer torment before the curtain rings down finally on a free India.

But even when the fight is fiercest and consumes all our energies we must remember that the true solution of our difficulties can come only when we have won over and given satisfaction to our minorities. Today it is unfortunately the fact that some of them fear the majority and for fear of it keep apart from the struggle for freedom. It is sad that some who were our comrades-in-arms ten years ago are not with us today. None of us who had the privilege of marching shoulder to shoulder with them then can forget the brave part they took and the sacrifices they made. We cherish that memory and we are assured that when the fight thickens they must take their rightful place in the forefront.

The history of India and of many of the countries of Europe has demonstrated that there can be no stable equilibrium in any country so long as an attempt is made to crush a minority or to force it to conform to the ways of the majority. There is no surer method of rousing the resentment of the minority and keeping it apart from the rest of the nation than to make it feel that it has not got the freedom to stick to its own ways. Repression and coercion can never succeed in coercing a minority. They but make it more self-conscious and more determined to value and hold fast to what it considers its very own. It matters little whether logic is on its side or whether its own particular brand of culture is worth while or not. The mere fear of losing it makes it dear. Freedom to keep it would itself lessen its value. The new Russia has gone a long way in solving its minorities’ problem by giving each one of them the fullest cultural, educational and linguistic freedom.

Therefore we in India must make it clear to all that our policy is based on granting this freedom to the minorities and that under no circumstances will any coercion or repression of them be tolerated. There is hardly any likelihood of economic questions affecting the minorities as such, but should they do so we can also lay down as our deliberate policy that there shall be no unfair treatment of any minority. Indeed we should go further and state that it will be the business of the State to give favoured treatment to minority and backward communities.

1 Vide “The Problem of Minorities”, 5-5-1930.

In a free India political representation can only be on national lines. I would like this representation to be on an economic basis which would fit in with modern conditions far more than territorial representation and would also automatically do away with the lines of demarcation along communal lines. With religious and cultural and linguistic freedom granted, the principal questions that will arise in our legislatures will be economic ones and divisions on them cannot be on communal lines. But whatever the method of representation adopted may be, it must be such as to carry the goodwill of the minorities.

If these principles are accepted and adhered to, I do not think any minority can have a grievance or feel that it is ignored. It is possible however that, while agreeing to these principles, the minority may doubt the bona fides of the majority in giving effect to them. To that the only effective answer can be the translation of these principles into action. Unfortunately the ability to translate them into action can only come with the conquest of power in the State. If the bona fides of the majority are doubted, as they might well be, then even pacts and agreements are of little value. A general and countrywide adoption of certain broad principles can create a public opinion strong enough to prevent even an aggressive and evil-intentioned majority from going astray. But temporary pacts between individuals or even representatives cannot have the same value.

These principles should apply to all minority groups. To the Muslims who really are in such large numbers in India that it is inconceivable that any majority can coerce them; to the Sikhs who, although small in number, are a powerful and well-knit group; to the Parsis; to the Anglo-Indians or Eurasians who are gradually drifting to nationalism; and to all other minorities.

What is the present position of the Congress on this vital question? The Nehru Report has lapsed, but surely the non-controversial parts of the report remain. The Fundamental Rights, as stated there, included religious, cultural, linguistic and educational freedom. This declaration must remain, and it removes at once the major fears of a minority. So far as other matters are concerned, minorities as such will hardly be affected, and the Lahore Congress has declared that in an Independent India such questions should be solved on strictly national lines. It has gone further. It has assured the Muslims, the Sikhs and other minorities that if any solution of any communal problem is proposed in future, it will not be accepted by the Congress unless it gives full satisfaction to the parties concerned. A more complete guarantee could not have been given, and if the Congress remains true to its word no minority need have the least fear.

Thus the Congress has endeavoured to give effect to the principles that should govern the treatment of minorities. If in the eyes of some it is still suspect, it is not because of what it has done but because of want of trust and unjustified fear. The Congress, I trust, will remain true to these principles and will demonstrate to the country that in communal matters it will not deviate to the right or the left and will hold the centre impartially. It will, I hope, prove to the minority communities that in Independent India, for which we strive, theirs will be an honoured and a favoured place. And by its sacrifices and its determined courage in the fight for freedom it will convince all of its bona fides.

Young India, 15-5-1930

APPENDIX III

EXTRACTS FROM “THE DAILY TELEGRAPH” REPORT

The prophet is no longer at large, and he is now safely interned at Yeravda, close to Poona, in the most comfortable prison in the presidency, writes Mr. Ashmead Bartlett, the special correspondent of The Daily Telegraph in its issue of 6th instant.

Gandhi will be charged with no specific offence as his followers have been: he will be interned under Ordinance 25 of 1827, without trial in Bombay.

This Ordinance is framed in such general terms that it enables the Government to intern almost anyone on any charge which can possibly be construed as a menace to public order, or for stopping internal commotion. It was last employed in the year 1906 for the detention of the Natu brothers after the Rand murder.

The arrest itself was carried out with the utmost quietude at dead of night.

The Mahatma was fast asleep in his camp at Karadi, near Surat, when about 1 a.m. the District Police Superintendent with the District Magistrate and a score of armed police, entered his room. They turned a flash lamp on him and he awoke at once.

Gandhi took matters very coolly, and merely asked that the warrant be read to him, and that he be allowed to clean his teeth, which is with the Hindus an invariable religious rite on getting up.

\(^1\) Vide “Interview to The Daily Telegraph”, 5-5-1930.

Both requests were complied with, and shortly afterwards he was taken to a motor lorry, which, accompanied by police, was driven off to the railway station. There he and his guards entered a special saloon attached to the Ahmedabad-Bombay Express, en route for Borivli, whence he was to be taken by motor to the Yeravda prison. On arrival at the jail he appeared to be in excellent health and spirits, and expressed gratitude for the manner in which his journey had been arranged.

It was generally known throughout Bombay yesterday that Gandhi’s arrest was imminent, and in the afternoon details of the Government plan of operations were made known to foreign correspondents, but not a word was allowed to be cabled, a strict censorship having been in force for the past three days.

The main object of the Government has been to put Gandhi safely under lock and key, before the news became known to the public, so as to avoid any demonstrations leading to riots and bloodshed in the course of his journey to Poona. The mere fact of handing in despatches to the cable office containing the news would at once have made known the Government’s plans all over Bombay.

Gandhi’s arrest was finally decided upon at the Council of State held in Simla a few days ago, and was originally planned for May 4, but the change was decided upon to avoid Sunday, and 1 a.m. on Monday (Indian time) was therefore named as the “zero hour” for his apprehension in Surat.

Mr. Hotson kindly informed me of his programme, which was to take Gandhi from the train at a small wayside station called Borivli, thirteen miles from Bombay, and from there to send him by car to Poona.

The Hindu, 27-5-1930
APPENDIX IV (A)

NOTE FROM NEHRUS

CENTRAL PRISON,
NAINI, ALLAHABAD,
July 28, 1930

We have had a long conversation with Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and Mr. Jayakar and they have informed us of the various events which led to their seeking interviews with Gandhiji and with us in our respective prisons in order, if possible, to terminate or suspend the present hostilities between the people of India and the British Government. We appreciate their earnest desire for peace and would gladly explore all avenues which might lead to it provided such a peace was an honourable one for the people of India who have already sacrificed so much in the national struggle and want freedom for our country. As representatives of the Congress we have no authority to alter in any material particular its resolutions, but we might be prepared under certain circumstances to recommend variation in details provided the fundamental position taken up by the Congress was accepted. We are, however, faced with initial difficulty. Both of us are in prison and for some time past have been cut off from the outside world and the national movement. One of us for nearly three months was not allowed any daily newspaper. Gandhiji has also been in prison for several months. Indeed almost all our colleagues of the original Working Committee of the Congress are in prison and the Committee itself has been declared an illegal organization. Of the 360 members of the All-India Congress Committee which is the final authority in the National Congress organization subject only to a full session of the Congress, probably 75 per cent are in prison. Cut off as we are from the national movement, we cannot take upon ourselves the responsibility of taking a definite step without the fullest consultation with our colleagues and especially Gandhiji. As regards the Round Table Conference we feel unlikely to achieve anything unless an agreement on all vital matters is previously arrived at. We attach great importance to such an agreement which must be definite and there must be no room for misunderstanding or misinterpretation. Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and Mr. Jayakar have made very clear and Lord Irwin has also stated in his published letter to them that they are acting on their own behalf and cannot commit him or his Government. It is, however, possible they may succeed in paving way to such an agreement between the Congress and the British Government. As we are unable to suggest any definite terms for truce without consulting Gandhiji and other colleagues, we refrain from discussing the suggestions made by Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and Mr. Jayakar and by Gandhiji in the note of his dated 23rd July which has been shown to us. We might, however, agree generally with Gandhiji's 2nd and 3rd points, but we should like the details of these points and specially his point (I) to discuss with him and others before we can finally make our suggestions. We suggest this note of ours be treated confidential and be shown only to such persons as see Gandhiji's note dated 23-7-1930.

The Hindu, 5-9-1930

APPENDIX IV (B)

LETTER FROM JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

CENTRAL PRISON, NAINI,

July 28, 1930

MY DEAR BAPUJI,

It is a delight to write you again after a long interval even though it be from one prison to another. I would like to write at length, but I am afraid I cannot do so at present. I shall, therefore, confine myself to the matter in issue. Dr. Sapru and Mr. Jayakar came yesterday and had a long interview with father and me. Today they are coming again. As they have already put us in possession of all facts and shown us your note and letter, we felt we could discuss the matter between us two and arrive at some decision even without waiting for a second interview. Of course if anything new turns up at the second interview we are prepared to vary any previously-formed opinion. Our conclusions for the time being are given in the note which we are giving to Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and Mr. Jayakar. This is more or less brief but it will, I hope, give you some idea of how our minds are working. I might add that father and I are in full agreement in regard to what our attitude should be. I might confess your point (1) regarding the constitutional issue has not won me over nor does father fancy it. I do not see how it fits in with our position or our pledges or with the realities of today. Father and I entirely agree with you that we can be “no parties to any truce which would undo the position at which we have arrived today”. It is because of this that fullest consideration is essential before any final decision is arrived at. I must confess I do not see an appreciable advance yet from the other side and I greatly fear a false or weak move on our part. I am expressing myself moderately. For myself I delight in warfare. It makes me feel that I am alive. Events of the last four months in India have gladdened my heart and have made me prouder of Indian men, women and even children than I had ever been, but I realize that most people are not warlike and like peace and so I try hard to suppress myself and take a peaceful view. May I congratulate you on the new India you have created by your magic touch! What the future will bring I know not, but the past has made life worth living and our prosaic existence has developed something of epic greatness in it. Sitting here in Naini Jail I have pondered on the wonderful efficacy of non-violence as a weapon and have become a greater convert with the response of a convert to it than ever before. I hope you are not dissatisfied with the response of the country to the non-violence creed. Despite occasional lapses, the country has stuck to it wonderfully, certainly far more grimly than I had expected. I am afraid I am still somewhat of a protestant regarding your eleven points. Not that I disagree with any one of them. Indeed they are important. Yet I do not think that they take the place of independence. But I certainly agree with you that we should have “nothing to do with anything that would not give the nation power to give immediate effect to them”. Father has been unwell the last eight days ever since he took an injection. He has grown very weak. This long interview last evening tired him out.

---

JAWAHARLAL

Please do not be anxious about me. It is only a passing trouble and I hope to get over it in two or three days. Love.

MOTILAL NEHRU

PS.

We have had another talk with Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and Mr. Jayakar. At their desire we have made some alterations in our note, but they do not make any vital difference. Our position is quite clear and I have no doubt whatever about it. I hope you will appreciate it.

The Hindu, 5-9-1930
APPENDIX V

LETTER FROM T. B. SAPRU AND M. R. JAYAKAR TO CONGRESS LEADERS 1

WINTER ROAD, MALABAR HILL,
BOMBAY,
August 16, 1930

DEAR FRIENDS,

We desire to express our thanks to you all for the courteous and patient hearing which you have been good enough to give us, on the several occasions on which we have visited you either at Poona or at Allahabad. We regret that we should have caused you so much inconvenience by these prolonged conversations, and we are particularly sorry that Pandit Motilal Nehru should have been put to the trouble of coming down to Poona, at a time when his health was so bad.

We beg formally to acknowledge receipt of the letter which you have handed to us and in which you state the terms on which you are prepared to recommend to the Congress the calling off of Civil Disobedience and participation in the Round Table Conference.

As we have informed you, we took up this work of mediation on the basis of (1) the terms of an interview given by Pandit Motilal, the then Acting President of the Congress, to Mr. Slocombe in Bombay on 20th June 1930, and particularly (2) the terms of the statement submitted by Mr. Slocombe to Pandit Motilal Nehru in Bombay on 25th June, 1930, and approved by him (Pandit Motilal Nehru) as the basis of informal approach to the Viceroy by us.

Mr. Slocombe forwarded both the documents to us, and we thereupon approached His Excellency the Viceroy for permission to interview Mahatma Gandhi, Pandits Motilal Nehru and Jawaharlal Nehru, in order to explore the possibilities of a settlement. A copy of the second document referred to above has been taken by you from us.

We now find that the terms embodied in the letter you gave us on the 14th instant are such that, as agreed between us, it must be submitted to His Excellency the Viceroy for his consideration, and we have to await his decision.

We note your desire that the material documents relating to these peace negotiations including your said letter to us should be published, and we shall proceed to do so after His Excellency the Viceroy has considered your letter.

Before we conclude, you will permit us to say that we had reasons to believe, as we told you, that with the actual calling off of the Civil Disobedience Movement, the general situation would largely improve, non-violent political prisoners would be released, all Ordinances, with the exception of those affecting Chittagong and the Lahore Conspiracy cases would be recalled, and the Congress would get a representation at the Round Table Conference, larger than that of any other single political party. We need scarcely add that we emphasized also that, in our opinion, there was substantially no difference between the point of view adopted by Pandit Motilal Nehru in his 'interview' and the statement sent to us by Mr. Slocombe with Pandit Motilal’s approval and His Excellency the Viceroy's letter to us.

Yours sincerely,
T. B. Sapru
M. R. Jayakar

Gandhi-Sapru Correspondence. Courtesy: P. N. Sapru
1. LETTER TO ANAND T. HINGORANI

Y. M.,
August 23, 1930

MY DEAR ANAND,

I have your delightful letter. You do not tell me how you fared physically. I have already written to you. I am glad Vidya is with you and has seen a little of the Ashram life. Tell me how you are in mind and body.

Love.

BAPU

From a microfilm. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

2. LETTER TO KASHINATH TRIVEDI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 23, 1930

CHI. KASHINATH,

I have your letter. After Shanta and Kalavati have tried the medicine given by the doctor, write to me and tell me what effect it has. If the latter has taken a pledge to join the struggle, I think she cannot leave. But you have already written to Father. You should both do as your hearts bid you.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5249

3. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

Y. M.,
August 23, 1930

CHI. KANTA,

I have your letter. If any questions arise with regard to the vow of not indulging the palate, ask me.¹ You have not mentioned anything about your health in your letter this time. I therefore assume ¹ For Gandhi’s observations on the control of the palate, vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 12-8-1930.

that you are well. Do you go for a walk every day? Physical exercise is necessary.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
Blessings to Brother. When you write to Mother and Father, say that I often think of them.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: Chandrakanta Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

4. LETTER TO VIDYA HINGORANI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 23, 1930

CHI. VIDYA,

I have your letter. Look upon the Ashram as your home. Try to improve your Hindi handwriting still further.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Hindi. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

5. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 24, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

I have your love letter written during your journey to Madras. I am hoping that this strain will not prove too much for you. Your descriptions are all valuable. Yes, I had a strenuous time during the Nehrus’ visit. It was with difficulty that I was able to spin 375 rounds without doing which I should feel most unhappy. The box wheel is working very well and undoubtedly causes less strain. It gives more satisfactory work now that I have put on it the thin mal you sent me. The thick mal was causing trouble. The carding-bow is working to perfection. It imposes no strain on me. Kakasaheb rolls the slivers. He has yet to learn carding which he proposes to begin shortly. The translation of the bhajans continues as before regularly but slowly and I see no immediate chance of greater output. I am keeping well. The weight fluctuates. Last week I regained one pound out of two or three I seemed to have lost. There has been no loss of energy. The water here is hard and therefore constipation requires a little handling.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

You will be glad to know that the tant has not once broken.

From the original: C.W. 5409. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9643

6. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 24, 1930

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I didn’t see any letter from you in the mail this week. You must have received my letters to Jayaprakash and to you. My weight, which was going down, has again increased by one pound. What is your daily programme of work these days? Vallabhbhai told me that Jayaprakash was not in good health. How is that?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3367

7. LETTER TO SUSHILA GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 24, 1930

CHI. SUSHILA (MANILAL),

You seem to have dried up? Is it out of compassion for me or through laziness? If you had compassion for me, you would write to me. How is Sita? Why does she fall ill so often? I hope you are not being miserly about fruit. What is the condition of your ears? How do you keep generally? How is Tara? How is Nanabhai’s health? Think about other similar questions yourself. I hope you, always find Manilal with a smile on his face and joking. Does he read anything in jail?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4770
8. LETTER TO RASIK DESAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 24, 1930

CHI. RASIK (DESAI),

Did you uphold my honour? Did you keep the vows which you had taken? Give me all the details. How did you spend the time? Were you lazy? Were you talkative? Did you keep good health? Reply to these and many other similar questions. What friends did you make?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6617

9. LETTER TO MRIDULA SARABHAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 24, 1930

CHI. MRIDU,

I have preserved your last letter. I did not reply to it. But after reading about your heroism I cannot help writing. Deal patiently with the situation. I would advise you not to do anything on an impulse. Does it need mentioning that pure sacrifice calls for careful thought, a sense of discrimination, restraint and patience? Since Khurshedbehn was with you, I felt reassured and satisfied.

Blessings from both of us.

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 11109. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation
10. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 24/26, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS,

This time I got the letters earlier than usual, that is, on Wednesday instead of on Thursday. Among the letters is one for Satis Babu. He is Krishnadas’s guru, Satis Mukherjee. His address is Harra Road, Calcutta. I have forgotten the number of the flat. You will find it somewhere in my papers. Surendra is likely to know it. Or you will get it in the Ashram office itself. How is Devdas’s health? Tell him that I often think of him. Has Ramdas’s health recovered? I have before now asked for the names of those who have been released. It would be better if against each name the quantity of carding and spinning done by the person is also mentioned. If, when you do not get a cloth-lined envelope, the ordinary envelope is tightly secured by a string, like a packet sent as book post, there will be no risk afterwards. Keshu seems to have lost health again. Take immediate and effective measures to help him to recover. Giriraj’s illness has lasted quite long. His blood must be impure. I have not received the guide to Singer’s. If you find it difficult to secure a copy, give up the attempt. I understand what you write about Hasmukhrai. Give him the letters if and when you think you may. Read the letter to Zaulinger before giving it to her. Hence I don’t write about her in this letter. You must have sent an acknowledgment to Dhangopal. How is Jamnadas? Do the authorities let you visit him occasionally?

Tuesday morning, August 26, 1930

Non-possession is allied to non-stealing. A thing not originally stolen must nevertheless be classified as stolen property if we possess it without needing it. Possession implies provision for the future. A seeker after truth, a follower of the law of love, cannot hold anything against tomorrow. God never stores for the morrow; He never creates more than what is strictly needed for the moment. If, therefore, we repose faith in His providence, we should be assured that He will give us every day our daily bread, meaning everything we require. Saints and men of faith have always found justification for it from their experience. Our ignorance or negligence of the Divine Law, which gives to man from day to day his daily bread and no more, has given rise to inequalities with all the miseries attendant upon them. The rich have a superfluous store of things which they do not need, and which are therefore neglected and wasted; while millions starve to death for want of sustenance. If each retained possession only of what he needed, no one would be in want and all would live in contentment. As it is, the rich are discontented no less than the poor. The poor man would fain become a millionaire, and the millionaire a multi-millionaire. The poor are not content if they get their daily needs. They have a right, however, to get enough for their daily needs and it is the duty of society to help them to satisfy them. The rich should take the initiative in dispossession with a view to universal diffusion of the spirit of contentment. If only they keep their own property within moderate limits, the starving will be easily fed and will learn the lesson of contentment along with the rich. Perfect fulfilment of the ideal of non-possession requires that man should, like the birds, have no roof over his head, no clothing and no stock of food for the morrow. He will indeed need his daily bread, but it will be God’s business, and not his, to provide it. Only very very few, if any at all, can reach this ideal. We ordinary seekers may not be repelled by the seeming impossibility. But we must keep the ideal constantly before us, and in the light thereof critically examine our possessions and try to reduce them. Civilization, in the real sense of the term, consists not in the multiplication, but in the deliberate and voluntary reduction of wants. This alone promotes real happiness and contentment and increases the capacity for service. Judging by this criterion, we find that in the Ashram we possess many things the necessity for which cannot be proved, and we thus tempt our neighbours to steal. If people try, they can reduce their wants and, as the latter diminish, they become happier, more peaceful and healthier. From the standpoint of pure truth, the body, too, is a possession. It has been truly said that desire for enjoyment creates bodies for the soul and sustains them. When this desire vanishes, there remains no further need for the body and man is free from the vicious cycle of births and deaths. The soul is omnipresent; why should she care to be confined within the cage-like body, or do evil and even kill for the sake of that cage? We thus arrive at the ideal of total renunciation and learn the use of the body for the purposes of service so long as it exists, so much so that service, and not bread, becomes for us the staff of life. We eat and drink, sleep and wake, for service alone. Such an attitude of mind brings us real happiness and the beatific vision in the fulness of time. Let us all examine ourselves from this standpoint.

We should remember that non-possession is a principle applicable to thoughts as well as to things. A man who fills his brain with useless knowledge violates that inestimable principle. Thoughts which turn us away from God or do not turn us towards Him are unnecessary possessions and constitute impediments in our way. In this connection we may consider the definition of knowledge contained in Chapter XIII of the Gita. We are there told that humility, amanitvam, etc., constitute knowledge and that all the rest is ignorance. If this is true—and there is no doubt that it is true—much that we hug today as knowledge is ignorance pure and simple, and therefore only does us harm instead of conferring any benefit. It makes the mind wander and even reduces it to a vacuity, and discontent flourishes in endless ramifications of evil. Needless to say, this is not a plea for inertia. Every moment of our life should be filled with mental or physical activity, but that activity should be sattvik, tending towards truth. One who has consecrated his-life to service cannot be idle for a single moment. But we have to learn to distinguish between good activity and evil activity. This discernment goes naturally with a single-minded devotion to service.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

[PS.]
Kakasaheb’s weight has again increased by one pound, and his cheerfulness has also increased. I have regained one pound from what I had lost. For the past three days, I have been taking boiled vegetables in addition to curds. You will see that today’s letters are put into one of the envelopes received from you, fresh slips of paper being pasted on it. You can use the envelope again.

_BAPU_

[PPS.]
There are 53 letters.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U/I
11. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

CHL. PREMA,

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 29, 1930

I got your letter. No one should be amused at my writing on slips of paper or be angry with me for that reason. That is the proper thing for me to do. Though I write on such slips, I try to make each letter as interesting as I can in the time I get.

Why are you alarmed by the suspicion that you have got some disease in your body? What would it matter even if you had a disease and that too a grave one? “The body may live or perish, what should endure is one’s devotion to God.” We have learnt at least this in the Ashram, if nothing more. If you fast for a few days, the body will be cleansed. You require Kuhne baths, hip-baths and particularly friction sitz-baths. If you do not know about them, ask Kanta or Radha. I think they know. You may also read about them in Kuhne’s book. Whenever women suffer from any disease, it becomes necessary to know the facts about their monthly periods. Are they normal with you? Are they regular in appearance and duration? Are they painful? If necessary, consult a doctor.

I have not read Arvind Babu’s book. I alone know how limited is my reading. My main interest is in reading the book of nature. I shall never finish reading it.

You should have enough sleep. You should observe the rule of sleeping from 9 to 4.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10232; also C.W. 6680. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

1 From the Marathi saint Namdev
12. LETTER TO MAHALAKSHMI MADHAVJI THAKKAR

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 29, 1930

CHI. MAHALAKSHMI,

Was there any letter to which I did not reply? I do think every day about you and all other sisters. I would have been happy, too, if you had spent a few months with me. However, both of you have so trained yourselves, though you lived away from me, that I don’t know what more you would have gained if you had stayed with me. It is good that the children still live on fruit, etc., and that you have started on it again. Why has not Dahibehn written to me? My blessings to all sisters.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6797

13. LETTER TO MANSANKAR J. TRIVEDI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 29, 1930

CHI. MANU (TRIVEDI),

Gangabehn writes and tells me that you have become impatient to go out [for work]. This was before you got my letter. I hope that my letter has overcome your restlessness. Can a soldier ever ask why? He goes on doing, silently and cheerfully, the work assigned to him. Let Kakasaheb’s condition be fulfilled. It is not long now before he will be released. If you are still not satisfied let me know.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7761
14. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 29, 1930

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I have your letter. If Kamalabehn willingly lets you go and there is an opportunity for work in Bihar, it is your first duty to take it up. I hope Jayaprakash is keeping good health. Take care of your health. I got Mrityunjay’s letter.

I am more or less all right. I have at present substituted fresh vegetables for raisins and dates in my diet. I shall watch the effect of the change. Don’t worry about me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3368

15. LETTER TO MAITRI GIRI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 29, 1930

CHI. MAITRI,

You should write regularly to me. I feel happy to hear from Gangabehn that she is satisfied with you. I hope you keep good health.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6218
16. LETTER TO MANGALA S. PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 29, 1930

CHI. MANGALA,

I have your letter. Your handwriting is tolerable but there is much scope for improvement. You should see Radhabehn’s handwriting. In seeking to tie up Narandasbhai, you girls are yourselves properly tied up. While I bathe I shall have to test you in Ch. XVIII. Is your pronunciation correct? You must write out that chapter from memory a couple of times in neat handwriting.

Why did you fall ill?

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 11088. Courtesy: Pushpa Naik

17. LETTER TO RANI VIDYAVATI

Y. M.,
August 29, 1930

CHI. VIDYAVATI,

Narandas has given me news of you. I hope you are well in body and mind. What is Laxmi Devi doing? Both of you should write to me. It is good that jang Bahadurji has gone to jail. My blessings to him.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Hindi original: Rani Vidyavati papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

1 Radhabehn Gandhi
2 Of the Bhagavad Gita
18. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 29, 1930

CHI. PRABHUDAS,

I have your letter. Both of us feel that you should take with you both Dhiru and Rambhau if they are willing to go. In each other’s company, they will stay there longer and you will have less to worry about. With either Dhiru or Rambhau alone, you will have to go out of way to give him company. At present, I would not like you to be in that predicament.

I had forgotten about Damodardas and therefore wrote nothing about him. I would not have seen any harm if he had come, and you had accompanied him. But I like the present arrangement more.

I understand what you say about the spinning-wheel. My argument was altogether different. I appreciate that it does not bother you. May your faith be rewarded. You have mentioned the right shlokas. If you have the self-confidence demanded by the shloka, if you are hard-working and if your idealism is based on reality, you will certainly find the rest of the means and will also acquire the required knowledge. So, I have no objection at all if you intend to persist in your efforts. The only condition is that you are not to do it at the cost of your health. If your health had reached beyond recovery stage, I would not have allowed you to go to the hills. This time you are going with the blessings of Kashi and Chhaganlal. No doubt blessings from both of us are always with you.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original S.N. 32962

---

1 Rambhau Khare, son of Narayan Moreshwar Khare
19. LETTER TO GULAM RASOOL QURESHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 30, 1930

CHI. QURESHI,

I was happy to read your letter. You did a good thing in studying the Koran. Get hold of The Mystics of Islam and read it. You may write to me anything you wish to. Regular inclusion of curds in your diet will probably benefit you. Take moderate and regular exercise. When you visit Imam Saheb next time, tell him that both of us think of him with great love, and his name frequently comes up in our conversation. Ask Amina to write to me. Blessings from us both to both of you.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6651

20. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 31, 1930

CHI. SHARDA,

Your letters come quite regularly. If one’s mind indulges in thoughts of pleasure, one might as well get it done with the body. But when the mind itself does not want it, it would indeed be better if one works away at something with concentration. In matters like these, children cannot be forced to do anything. If you are feeling too lazy for udyoga\(^1\) the feeling can by persistent effort be got out of the system. You must realize the necessity of work.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9888. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala.

\(^1\) Industry; here the Ashram activities like spinning, etc.
21. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

Y. M.,
August 31, 1930

CHI. KANTA,

I got your letter. It would be well to try out Premabehn’s diet. I think it is necessary to resume regular sitz-baths. It can easily be done in my bathroom. It also has sunlight filtering through the thatched roof. You should have your periods regularly. If you do not you must immediately take remedial measures. When the date is due it would help if you took a steam-bath once or twice. I think Radhabehn knows how it is done. They follow your suggestions in making the bread here. They say there is still some defect. I have conveyed to them the improvement suggested by Gangabehn.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
Are there any letters from Krishna?

From a photostat of the Gujarati: Chandrakanta papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

22. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
August 31, 1930

CHI. BRIJKRISHNA,

Your letter. Do go to Almora if there is an opportunity. How is your mental state? Convey my blessings to Krishnan Nair. Continue writing to me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2384
23. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

[About August 31, 1930]

CHI. MIRA,

Your letter though written in a shaky train was wonderfully legible. If you had not drawn my attention, I should not have noticed any difference at all.

I think I have got my control over the travelling wheel and I hope to gain greater speed than now. As it is I am saving about an hour and there is much less fatigue. But your labour has not gone in vain. Kakasaheb was using the Gandiv. But it did not give him satisfaction. And he was not able always even to do one unit, i.e., 160 rounds. On your wheel he has no difficulty in making one unit in two hours which is the least he has vowed to give to the charkha.

You did the right thing in transferring to the 2nd class. There can be no harm and certainly no shame in going 2nd class, when the 3rd is clearly impossible or next to it.

I am glad you had a quiet 36 hours with Miss Petersen. Is not your sister somewhere in Madras?

Send my love to Andrews, Reginald and those others who may be thinking of me.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5407. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9641

24. LETTER TO AMRITLAL THAKKAR

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 1, 1930

Bhai Thakkar Bapa,

Why should you think that because you have done no work for me you cannot write to me? Really speaking, is there any work which is mine? All of us should do God’s work to the best of our ability and 1 From the reference to the travelling wheel it appears this was written some time after August 18; vide “Letter to Mirabehn”, 18-8-1930. In another letter to her of October 5, Gandhiji says he did not miss a week in writing to her. Since no letter dated between August 24 and September 7 is available, it is likely this was written on or about August 31, 1930.

according to our lights. And you are doing that every moment of your life. Kaka and I often talk about you. If there is anything about which you think you should write to me, please do so. I don’t ask you, and I do not wish, that you should write to me merely for the sake of writing. I know that you keep, and would be ready to give, an account of every minute of your time.

BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Kanya Ashram Rajat Jayanti Smritigranth, p. 16

25. LETTER TO MOTIBEHN

Silence Day [September 1, 1930]

CHI. MOTIBEHN,

Ba told me that you feel depressed. Why should you? One who reads the Gita and reflects over its teaching should never feel depressed. How can that man or woman who daily meditates on God and believes that He always dwells in our hearts ever feel depressed? Try and get rid of your depression.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3736

26. LETTER TO GANGABEHN JHAVERI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 1, 1930

CHI. GANGABEHN (JHAVERI),

I have an impression that Nanibehn and you owe me a reply to one letter of mine. There is nothing particular to write about this time, and I write this letter only to tell you that I think about all of you every day. I know that you devote all your time to work. That is the right thing to do and is sure to give proper results in course of time. Devotion to duty is the fabled wish-fulfilling tree.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3101

1 The original letter has a remark, in a different hand, “about 1-9-30”. Monday fell on September 1.
27. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

September [1, 1930]1

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

You are too greedy. However long my letter, you will think it too short. I send between 50 and 60 letters to the Ashram every week, and I must write them during whatever time I can spare from spinning. Hence, and also because I don’t have much to write about from here every time, I write short letters in which, however, I say all that I wish to say. If I had to write only one or two letters, I could fill them with long description of conditions here. The letter meant for the whole Ashram is always long. Since Mirabehn cannot read Gujarati, I write a long letter to her. All other letters are short and to the point. Look; I have filled half this letter explaining why I write short letters. Kakasaheb and I were weighed on Friday; my weight came to 104 and Kakasaheb’s to 114. This is a fairly good increase. We pray regularly every day. The Gita is also read daily. Recently I have given up raisins and dates and, instead, eat boiled vegetables. Generally I eat sweet potatoes and uncooked tomatoes every day or some other vegetable like cabbage. This diet has done me no harm. The weight has increased and constipation has been relieved. You must have read the reports about the negotiations with the Government. There was no truth in them at all. Let me know your future programme, and also Jayaprakash’s. Has your mother-in-law recovered now? I am sure you will nurse her with the utmost love.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3370

---

1 The source has only September, as the original seems to have been damaged here. However Bapuna Patro-10: Shri Prabhavatibehn, pp. 33-4, gives this date.
28. LETTER TO DURGA GIRI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 1, 1930

CHI. DURGA,
Are you cross with me? You don’t even write to me and yet will be cross. What sort of justice is this? Is this the way of the Ashram or that of the hills? Or are you simply shirking letter-writing by pretending to be cross? How much do you spin daily? What other work do you have? Do you regularly get up in the morning? How many chapters have you memorized?

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Hindi]
Bapuki Virat Vatsalata, p. 31

29. LETTER TO V. G. DESAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 2, 1930

BHAISHRI VALJI,
I got your letter. If it is only your gums which bleed, you should gargle with salt water three or four times a day and in the morning massage them with a finger using pure, finely-powdered salt, taking care not to spit out the saliva meanwhile. You may use coconut oil instead of salt. You should also gargle with some potassium permanganate solution. If the bleeding does not stop with this, you should consult a dentist. Sometimes such bleeding is brought about even by indigestion. You should eat daily a little quantity of uncooked green vegetables.

Were you forced to eat rotlas of bajra and jowar or did you eat them to keep company with the other prisoners? I have seen you refusing to take advantage of the shade even when sitting under a green tree. I should like to get, if available, an account of the carding and spinning done by everyone.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7406. Courtesy: V. G. Desai

1 The original was written in Gujarati.
30. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

[September 2, 1930]

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got the Ashram packet on Thursday. If you get the discourses printed, send one or two copies here. It would help if I had with me a copy of the previous discourse. Send me also the set of Ashram rules. If Surendra, Madhavji and Madhavlal have still not written to me, ask them to write. Others, too, should write. Kusum’s hand must be all right. Has Mrs. Zaulinger calmed down a little? Try to win her over.

I remember to have written to someone and given permission for a translation of the Autobiography in Swedish. Accept the sum of £11 and credit it in whichever account you think proper.

You utilized the occasion of Rakshabandhan very well. Take care of Lilavati. If she gets fainting fits, she should come over to the Ashram and rest. If you come to know Devdas’s weight, mention it in your letter. In that place he should improve. You can get a garland made from yarn spun by Jamnalalji. The spinning-wheel gives me no difficulty now. The speed has not increased much, but it is good enough. This is a portable spinning-wheel and it required a thin mal. If anyone knows a simple method of making a mal, he should write to me. Abbas had explained it to me, but I have forgotten it. One packet of cotton has been exhausted. Together with what I can make from the second one, I shall have enough slivers to last a month. But someone is bound to visit Kakasaheb. Send one packet with him. Vallabhbhai, too, has a visitor once a week or fortnight. You may send the packet with one of the persons. If neither course is possible, send some cotton by post as you did previously. There is no hurry at all. Along with it, send some pieces of leather for repairing the heels of my sandals. If no such pieces are available and if you can find my pair of sandals, send that. There was an extra pair during the march. Kanti will probably know about it. There was one in the Ashram too. Kusum may know about it, or the person to whom she has handed over charge of these things.

1 As in the printed source.
FEARLESSNESS. As every reader of the Gita knows fearlessness heads the list of the divine attributes enumerated in Chapter XVI. Whether this is merely due to the exigencies of metre or whether the pride of place has been deliberately yielded to fearlessness, is more than I can say. In my opinion, however, fearlessness richly deserves the first rank assigned to it. For it is indispensable for the growth of the other noble qualities. How can one seek Truth or cherish love without fearlessness? As Pritam says: “The path of Hari is the path of the brave, not of cowards.” Hari here means Truth. And the brave are those armed with fearlessness, not with the sword, the rifle and the like. These are taken up only by those who are possessed by fear.

Fearlessness connotes freedom from all external fear, fear of disease, bodily injury and death, of dispossession, of losing one’s nearest and dearest, of losing reputation or giving offence, and so on. One who overcomes the fear of death does not surmount all other fears, as is commonly but erroneously supposed. Some of us do not fear death, but flee from the minor ills of life. Some are ready to die themselves, but cannot bear their loved ones being taken away from them. Some misers will put up with all this, will part even with their lives, but not their property; others will do any number of black deeds in order to uphold their supposed prestige. Some will swerve from the straight and narrow path which lies clear before them, simply because they are afraid of incurring the world’s odium. The seeker after Truth must conquer all these fears. He should be ready to sacrifice his all in the quest of Truth, even as Harishchandra did. The story of Harishchandra may be only a parable; but every seeker will bear witness to its truth from his personal experience and, therefore, that story is as precious as any historical fact.

Perfect fearlessness is almost impossible to cultivate. It can be attained only by him who has realized the Supreme, as it implies freedom from delusion. One can always progress towards this goal by determined and constant endeavour and by cultivating self-confidence.

As I have stated at the very outset, we must give up all external fears. But the internal foes we must always fear. We are rightly afraid of animal passion, anger and the like. External fears cease of their own accord when once we have conquered these traitors within the camp. All such fears revolve round the body as the centre, and will therefore disappear as soon as we get rid of attachment for the body. We thus find that all external fear is the baseless fabric of our own vision. Fear has no place in our hearts when we have shaken off attachment for wealth, for family and for the body. “Enjoy the things of the earth by renouncing them” is the sovereign precept. Wealth, family and the body will be there just the same; we have only to change our attitude towards them. All these are not ours, but God’s. Nothing whatever in this world is ours. Even we ourselves are His. Why then should we entertain any fear? The Upanishad, therefore, directs us to give up attachment for things while we enjoy them. That is to say, we must be interested in them not as proprietors but only as trustees. He on whose behalf we hold them will give us the strength and the weapons requisite for defending them against all usurpers. When we thus cease to be masters and reduce ourselves to the rank of servants, humbler than the very dust under our feet, all fears will roll away like mists; we shall attain ineffable peace and see Satyanarayana, the God of Truth, face to face.

Kakasaheb had not so far taken a categorical vow of spinning; he has done so now. The vow is that he will spin for not less than two hours and not less than 160 yards daily. He has also started carding. He spends most of his time in physical activities. He maintains good strength. For the last four days or so I have given up raisins and dates and eat instead boiled vegetables, raw tomatoes, etc. If this diet does not meet my needs, I shall add fruit. I have made the change in order to overcome constipation. If the change proves economical, so much the better. I will not be obstinate about any item.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
There are 58 letters.

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 8123. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi; also Bapuna Patro-9: Shri Narandas Gandhine, Pt. I, pp. 112-5

1 Ishopanishad, v. 1
31. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

YERAVDA MANDIR,

September 3, 1930

CHI. VASUMATI,

I got both your letters together. Which other women are with you at Sarbhon? Only God is completely free from the pride of the ego. Everyone among us, however, should strive daily to get rid of such pride.

“The brave never run away from a battle; fight against lust and anger, pride and greed.” Only yesterday I was trying to translate this bhajan.¹ I then felt its beauty more powerfully than I had done before. For us that is the only real battle. If we fight on, we are bound to win in the end.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 531. Courtesy: Vasumati Pandit; also S.N. 9286

32. FRAGMENT OF A LETTER

September 3, 1930

We may claim our experiment to have succeeded only if the Ashram women can swim across even in a storm. We need not worry if we stumble. Whenever we try to climb, there is always a risk of falling. We must take that risk. We may not knowingly take such a risk, but we should not turn back if circumstances force us to take it. We should learn to adopt towards women the same liberal attitude that we do towards men. Will not Lord Krishna protect our honour? We sing a bhajan which says that He will. Let us show that faith in our actions.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6798

¹ For Gandhiji’s translation of this bhajan by Kabir, vide “Ashram Bhajanavali”, 15-12-1930 under the date 5-9-1930.
September 5, 1930

Dear Friends,

We have very carefully gone through the letter, written to you by H. E. the Viceroy, dated 28-8-1930. You have kindly supplemented it with a record of your conversations with the Viceroy on points not covered by the letter. We have equally carefully gone through the Note signed by Pandit Motilal Nehru, Dr. Syed Mahmud and Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, and sent by them through you. This note embodies their considered opinion on the said letter and the conversation.

We gave two anxious nights to these papers and we had the benefit of a full and free discussion with you on all the points arising out of these papers. And as we have told you, we have all arrived at the definite conclusion that we see no meeting ground between the Government and the Indian National Congress so far as we can speak for the latter, being out of touch with the outside world. We unreservedly associate ourselves with the opinion contained in the Note sent by the distinguished prisoners in the Naini Central Prison, but these friends expect us to give in our own words our view of the position finally reached in the negotiations for peace, which you, with patriotic motives, have carried on during the past two months at considerable sacrifice of your own time and no less inconvenience to yourselves. We shall therefore allude as briefly as possible to the fundamental difficulties that have stood in the way of peace being achieved.

1 After meeting Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and M. R. Jayakar the Viceroy addressed a letter to Sapru on August 28, vide Appendix Viceroy’s letter to Sir T.B. Sapru”, 28-8-1930. Sapru and Jayakar then met Motilal Nehru, Jawaharlal Nehru and Dr. Syed Mahmud at Naini Jail on August 30 and 31 and showed them the Viceroy’s letter as also notes of conversation with him, vide Appendix “Notes of Conversations with Viceroy’s”, 5-9-1930. The Nehrus then gave them their final note addressed to Gandhiji, vide Appendix “Note From Nehrus”, 31-8-1930. With these documents Sapru and Jayakar saw Gandhiji and other leaders at Yeravda Jail on September 3, 4 and 5. A draft of this Statement available in Gandhiji’s hand in S.N. 1927 bears some changes and additions in a handwriting other than Gandhiji’s.
The Viceroy’s letter, dated July 16, 1930, is, we have taken, intended to satisfy, so far as may be, the terms of the interview Pandit Motilal Nehru gave to Mr. George Slocombe on June 20th, and the statement submitted by Mr. Slocombe to him on June 25, and approved by him. We are unable to read in the Viceroy’s language in his letter of July 16 anything like satisfaction of the terms of the interview or the said statement. Here are the relevant parts of the interview and the statement.

In the interview it was stated: “If the terms of the Round Table Conference are to be left open and we are expected to go to London to argue the case for Dominion Status, I should decline. If it was made clear, however, that the Conference would meet to frame a constitution for a Free India subject to such adjustments of our mutual relations as are required by the special needs and conditions of India and our past association, I for one would be disposed to recommend to the Congress to accept the invitation to participate in the Conference. We must be masters in our household, but we are ready to agree to reasonable terms for the period of transfer of power from a British administration in India to a responsible Indian Government. The Conference must be to meet British people to discuss these terms as nation to nation and on an equal footing.”

The statement contained the following:

“The Government would give private assurance that they would support the demand for full responsible Government for India subject to such mutual adjustments and terms of transfer as are required by the special needs and conditions of India and by her long association with Great Britain and as may be decided by the Round Table Conference.”

Here is the relevant part of the Viceroy’s letter:

It remains my earnest desire, as it is that of my Government—and I have no doubt also that of His Majesty’s Government—to do everything we can in our respective spheres to assist the people of India to obtain as large a degree of management of their own affairs as can be shown to be consistent with making provision for those matters in regard to which they are not at present in a position to assume responsibility. What those matters may be, and what provisions may best be made for them, will engage the attention of the Conference, but I have never believed that, with

\[1\] The draft did not have this paragraph.

\[2\] The draft did not have these paragraphs.
mutual confidence, on both sides, it should be impossible to reach an agreement.¹

We feel that there is a vast difference between the two positions. Where Pandit Motilalji visualizes a Free India enjoying a status different in kind from the present as a result of the deliberations of the proposed Round Table Conference, the Viceroy’s letter merely-committing him and his Government and the British Cabinet to an earnest desire² to assist the people of ‘India to obtain’ as large a degree of the management of their own affairs as can be shown³ to be consistent with making provision for those matters in regard to which they are not at present in a position to assume responsibility. In other words, the prospect held out by the Viceroy’s letter is one of getting, at the most, something more along the lines of reforms commencing with those known to us as the Lansdowne Reforms.

As we had the fear that our interpretation was correct in our letter of 15-8-1930 signed also by Pandit Motilal Nehru, Dr. Syed Mahmud and Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, we put our position negatively and said what would not in our opinion satisfy the Congress. The letter you have now brought from H.E. the Viceroy reiterates the original position taken up by him in his first letter, and, we are grieved to say, contemptuously dismisses our letter as unworthy of consideration and regards discussion on the basis of the proposals contained in the letter as impossible.

You have thrown further light on the question by telling us that “if Mr. Gandhi definitely faced the Government of India with such a question”, i.e., the right of secession from the Empire at India’s will, the Viceroy would say, that “they were not prepared to treat it as an open question”. We, on the other hand regard the question as the central point in any constitution that India is to secure and one which ought not to need any argument. If India is now to attain full ¹ The draft did not have these paragraphs.

² This word is added in the draft.
³ The draft has “a desire”.
⁴ The words “the people of”, not found in The Hindu version, were added in the draft.
⁵ The draft has “get”.
⁶ The draft has “her”.
⁷ The words following this do not appear in the draft. Gandhiji simply wrote “take” indicating that the remaining part of the sentence, quoted from the Viceroy’s letter, was to be copied here.
Responsible Government or full Self-Government or whatever other term it is to be known by, it can be only on an absolutely voluntary basis, leaving each party to sever the partnership or association at will. If India is to remain no longer a part of the Empire but is to become an equal and free partner in the Commonwealth, she must feel the want and warmth of that association and never otherwise. You will please observe this position is clearly brought out in the interview already alluded to by us. So long, therefore, as the British Government or the British people regard this position as impossible or untenable, the Congress must, in our opinion, continue the fight for freedom.

The attitude taken up by the Viceroy over the very mild proposal made by us regarding the salt tax affords a further painful insight into the Government’s mentality. It is as plain as daylight to us that, from the dizzy heights of Simla, the rulers of India are unable to understand or appreciate the difficulties of the starving millions living in the plains whose incessant toil makes Government from such a giddy height at all possible.

If the blood of innocent people spilt during the past five months to sustain the monopoly of a gift of nature next in importance to poor people only to air and water has not brought home to the Government the conviction of its utter immorality, no Conference of Indian leaders as suggested by the Viceroy can possibly do so. The suggestion that those who ask for the repeal of the monopoly should show a source of equivalent revenue adds insult to injury. This attitude is an indication that if Government can help it the existing crushingly-expensive system shall continue to the end of time. We venture further to point out that not only does the Government here, but Governments all the world over, openly condone breaches of measures which have become unpopular but which for technical or other reasons cannot straightway be repealed.

We need not now deal with many other important matters in which too there is no adequate advance from the Viceroy to the popular position set forth by us. We hope we have brought out sufficient weighty matters in which there appears at present to be an unbridgeable gulf between the British Government and the Congress.

1 The draft here reads: “starving millions living in the plains of India who make”.
2 The draft has “substance” which was changed to “gift of nature”.
3 Added in the draft
There need, however, be no disappointment for the apparent failure of the peace negotiations. The Congress is engaged in a grim struggle for freedom. The nation has resorted to a weapon which the rulers being unused to it will take time to understand and appreciate. We are not surprised that a few months’ suffering has not converted them.

The Congress desires to harm no single legitimate interest by whomsoever acquired. It has no quarrel with Englishmen as such, but it resents and will resent with all the moral strength at its command the intolerable British domination. Non-violence being assured to the end, we are certain of the early fulfilment of the national aspiration. This we say in spite of the bitter and often insulting language used by the powers-that-be in regard to Civil Disobedience.

Lastly, we once more thank you for the great pains you have taken to bring about peace, but we suggest that the time has not arrived when any further peace negotiations should be carried on with those in charge of the Congress organization. As prisoners, we labour under an obvious handicap. Our opinion is based, as it must be, on second-hand evidence and runs the risk of being faulty. It would be naturally open to those in charge of the Congress organization to see any of us. In that case, and when the Government itself is equally desirous for peace, they should have no difficulty in having access to us.

M. K. GANDHI

SAROJINI NAIDU
VALLABHBHAI PATEL
JAIRAMDAS DOULATRAM

_The Hindu, 5-9-1930_

---

1 The draft has “Government”.
2 _The Hindu_ version here has “the”, evidently a misprint.
3 The draft has “a tremendous”.
4 The draft here reads: “is more likely to be faulty.”
5 The draft here reads: “It is another matter if those in charge of the Congress organization desire to see any of us.”
34. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI PANDYA

September 5, 1930

CHI. BHAGWANJI,

I have your painful letter. . . behn¹ appears to be a most sinful woman. We shall however now win her over by kindness, if we can. Your dharma is clear. At least for the present you should leave her company altogether. You should neither serve her nor accept service from her. I have written a letter to her which Narandas will read to her. You should read it. A man or a woman susceptible to mutual passion has no right to accept help from or offer it to each other. You have ceased to be man and wife, but even when the relationship exists the husband who is susceptible to carnal desire can never render pure service to his wife. Know this to have been proved by experience. Therefore, forget, at any rate for some time, that a person named . . . behn lives in the Ashram. That alone will do you good. If . . . behn finds this an impossible situation she will go. And if she goes indeed, let her leave with pleasure. Ask me if you have not understood all this.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 323. Courtesy: Bhagwanji Purushottam Pandya

35. LETTER TO PUNJABHAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

September 5, 1930

CHI. PUNJABHAI,

I got your letter. We should certainly feel ashamed if we fall ill. But very often illness comes to us without our knowing how it comes. Knowing this, we should be tranquil and humble and have greater faith in God. This is a good way of utilizing an illness. What remedies are you trying? Who is your physician?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4015

¹ The name has been omitted.
36. LETTER TO JAI SUKH LAL GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 5, 1930

CHI. JAI SUKH LAL,

Narandas tells me in his letter that I have not written to you. But I do remember that I wrote to you. Do you remember any letter of yours to which I did not reply? Send me a report of the activities on that side. How is Kasumba? Why did Yukti come away? If she can write, she should write to me. How is your health?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./III

37. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 6, 1930

CHI. SHARDA (BABU),

I do receive all your letters. It is true that I do not write to you every week. I realize that what I have been writing about non-stealing and the other vows is rather complicated and it does not interest you. It is not the language that is difficult, but the ideas are difficult to grasp and they are stated tersely. That is the way of explaining a lot in a few words. Now, if you understood those things from Chimanlal or Premabehn and read them again, you would get interested. You can definitely understand it if you have the desire. I hope you are not having the asthma trouble now.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9889. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala
38. LETTER TO PREMABHEn KANTAK

YERAvDA MANDIR,
September 6, 1930

CHI. PREMA,

I hope you have stopped worrying about your health. Why did Jamnadas' refuse to see visitors? If you have more news, let me know.

Has anyone ascertained how many volumes in each language the library contains? How much time do you have to give to it? What about the harassment by thieves? I suppose the rains have stopped now. The rainfall here has been very little. It is raining hard today. It was badly needed.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10233; also C.W. 6681. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

39. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

YERAvDA MANDIR,
September 6, 1930

CHI. LILAVATI (ASAR),

I got your letter. Narandas tells me in his letter that your fainting fits have become more frequent. In such a case you require rest. Spend a few days in the Ashram or at any other place where you think you will feel happy. But you can do this only with Khurshedbehn’s permission. You should write pure truth in your diary. Don’t mind who reads it. It is to our good to appear to the world exactly as we are. There is in this no humiliation at all.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9564

1 Jamnadas Gandhi, then in Rajkot jail
40. LETTER TO BECHARDAS DOSHI

September 6, 1930

BHAJI BECHARDAS,

I have your letter. Really speaking Kakasaheb should reply to it. But just now I reply as he can write only a limited number of letters. Take it that the view expressed here is that of us both. I will say nothing about the method of giving the etymology. If Kakasaheb wishes, he will write about it later. After discussing the matter with him, I understand that your main work is to translate the Agamas. Shri Punjabhai has given the money for that work, and it is our duty, therefore, to carry out the object of the grant as quickly as possible. You should not mind it if in devoting your time to that work you have to postpone or delay work on etymology; or you may get it done through somebody else if that can be conveniently arranged. The idea in placing Bhakti Prasad at your disposal was not that he might do original work on his own, but that he might work under you and help you, and might, if he was persevering, acquire proficiency in the work.

As for your eyes I think you should lay down a limit. You should be satisfied with whatever help is available in Gujarat. Dr. Haribhai is a specialist in eye diseases. If he cannot help you, you should assume that nobody else will be able to and rest content. There should be a self-imposed limit like this for anyone who has decided to live a simple life. Do the countless poor have the benefit of help even from a Dr. Haribhai? This of course is my personal view. I can say that Kakasaheb now agrees with this view. But this is a delicate matter. Everyone should lay down the limit for himself according to his own lights and his own wish. The limits accepted by one person cannot, in such a matter, apply to all.

BAPU

[PS.]

My reason for using “now” and saying that “Kakasaheb now agrees” is that, as he tells me, he himself had formerly advised you to consult one or two other doctors. He now thinks that my view is right.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1340

1 In the Gujarati dictionary under preparation then in the Gujarat Vidyapith

2 Jain scriptures.
41. LETTER TO KAMALNAYAN BAJAJ

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 6, 1930

CHI. KAMALNAYAN,

I have your letter. It is well written. If you have enough work there I do not see any need of your going to Ajmer. But someone must go if the need in Ajmer is urgent. It is difficult to give a decisive opinion from here. What has Mother to say? Only the leader of the batch can take a policy decision. Ask Surendraji who is there these days.

As yet it is well-nigh impossible for me to write letters in Marathi. I get very little time even to read. Tell Janakibehn to write to us.

Blessings from Kakasaheb.

[From Hindi]
Blessings from BAPU

Panchyen Putrako Bapuke Ashrivad, pp. 276-7

42. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 7, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

Your letter from Tirupur. You now know all about our peace talks. I have regained the weight I had lost here. I weighed 104 lb. last Friday. I have dropped the dried fruit also. The sour limes remain. I take vegetables in the place of dried fruit. Sweet potatoes and raw tomatoes are standing vegetables. The former are roasted. A green vegetable is boiled—generally it is cabbage or marrow or the like. This change accounts for the restoration of the weight and constipation no longer worries me. If the change proves successful in the long run, the cost is considerably reduced. Let us see. I have made no hard and fast rule about the avoidance of fruit. But just now it is no deprivation whatsoever and possibly a gain in health.
My mastery over the wheel is increasing. The fatigue is no longer felt. I see that if you concentrate on the puni end whilst the thread is drawing, then on the point of the spindle when the thread is being shifted to the cone and then on the cone when it is brought there, you avoid breakage if the puni is sound. I hope shortly to increase the speed appreciably. It is better even now. But there is much room for improvement. Anyway, just now it is the wheel that absorbs my attention to the exclusion of other studies. Kaka is still at your wheel. He is getting on slowly. The carding-bow is quite all right. I have no difficulty in adjusting it. Ever since it has been with me the gut broke only once and that too after Kaka too began to work on it. He is absolutely new to it but is an extremely careful worker. Then too I deliberately cut it where I saw it had worn out. Kaka had devised a new catch for holding the spindle whilst unwinding. It is fixed to the box. The spindle is mounted on it and the thread is held between the left hand fingers. The result is that it winds tightly on the winder. There is saving in time too. On your wheel of course the spindle remains on the holders whilst the unwinding is done. The catch was wanted for the box.

I hope you have had some rest somewhere. Do not rush.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5410. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9644

43. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,

September 7, 1930

CHI. MANI (PATEL),

I have your letter. Once again Father and Jairamdas were with me for a couple of days. Your letter to me was received at the same time and was read by Father. He also gave me your letter to him to read.

Your sketch of Mother is moving. Such indeed were most mothers of old; hence I found nothing unusual in your description.
Maternal affection however is so luminous that, although mixed with infatuation, it is ever fresh. Do not break the rule about writing to me. It would be different if you were in prison.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

[From Gujarati]
_Bapuna Patro-4: Manibehn Patelne_, pp. 73-4

44. LETTER TO SUSHILA GANDHI

_YERAVDA MANDIR,_
_September 7, 1930_

CHI. SUSHILA,

I have a letter from you after a long time. But you blame me, like a thief turning round on the policeman. You must have got my previous letter. Sita’s illness has lasted too long. Are you not able to discover the cause? As I have not seen her myself, I do not have the courage to say anything in the matter. But I make this suggestion. It would be advisable to keep her chiefly on milk, curds and fruit instead of giving her a variety of things to eat. If she is given toast, it should be of brown bread. I see no need to give her porridge. If you wish, you may give her cod-liver oil. I myself would never think of giving it to anyone. But you should attach no importance to this view. How is your ear? Write to me every week. And write in ink.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4771

45. LETTER TO MANSHTANKAR J. TRIVEDI

_YERAVDA MANDIR,_
_September 7, 1930_

CHI. MANU (TRIVEDI),

Have you calmed down? If you are still not satisfied, you should continue to struggle against me. I don’t wish to force you to be virtuous. No one in the world has ever been made so through force. In any case, your desire is good in itself and I don’t want to force you to remain against your wish.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7762

46. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

September 7, 1930

CHI. RAIHANA,

I got your letter. Because my letters are short, don’t make yours also short. You know why mine are short. Into which language is Father translating the Sirat? During my first imprisonment, I had read that book and Asva-e-Sahaba and found them extremely interesting. But now my Urdu has become rusty, and in any case this time spinning leaves me no time to read.

We have no choice but to trust in God to restore your health. “What God, World Teacher and Master, has willed for the day, it is futile to grieve over”. Bhrrr to Father and Vandemataram to Mother. To your sisters, Khuda Hafiz.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9620

47. LETTER TO TARAMATI MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

September 7, 1930

I hope Mathuradas’s imprisonment has not upset you. Where do you live at present? How is your health and Dilip’s? What does Mathuradas say in his letters? Does he feel any hardship? How do you spend your time? Do you take any part in public activities? Do you get any visitors? Do you visit any friends?

[From Gujarati]

Bapuni Prasadi, p. 102

---

1 This is in Urdu.
48. LETTER TO SARALADEVI SARABHAI

September 7, 1930

SARALABEHN,

May God grant you increasing strength.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 11134. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

49. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

Y. M.,
September 7, 1930

CHI. KANTA,

I have your letter.

You can write to me as long letters as you please. If Father visits you there, you may tell him: ‘I am here with your consent. You have entrusted me to Bapuji. It is therefore my duty to do as he says. Please do not insist on taking me away. Dasharatha was prompted by his ignorant love to suggest to Rama that he ignore his pledge. But Rama refused to do so and saved Dashratha’s honour and upheld the sanctity of dharma. Let me do the same, and bless me that I may remain firm in observing the vow taken by you and me.’

You may show this letter to Father. It is good that you are learning English. Improve your health. For controlling your mind, try giving up the extra salt in your food. Pleasure of the palate also is a mental habit. You do have strength of will. I am writing a separate letter to Brother.

Are you able to understand this letter?

Blessings from
BAPU

50. LETTER TO SUMANGAL PRAKASH

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 7, 1930

CHI. SUMANGAL,

I have necessarily to think of you every day, because I have with me your translations of the Hindi Bhajans of the Bhajanavali; Kakasaheb had asked for them. I am translating them into English with his help. We both find your translation inaccurate at places. It is certainly hasty. Still, as a whole it can be considered satisfactory. We are both well. Write to me in detail about the work going on there. Kakasaheb sends his blessings.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Sumangal Prakash Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

51. LETTER TO KALAVATI TRIVEDI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 7, 1930

CHI. KALAVATI,

Your letter reached me belatedly. Go if you must to serve your mother-in-law. Most probably this letter will reach you there. Observe the rules well. Be very strict regarding your diet also.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 5250

---

1 The work of translation was begun on May 6, 1930 and the last hymn was translated on December 15. For Gandhi’s version of the Ashram Bhajanavali, vide “Ashram Bhajanvali”, 15-12-1930.
52. LETTER TO J. C. KUMARAPPA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 8, 1930

MY DEAR KUMARAPPA,

Have not yet got the pamphlet sent by you. There is a thrill that is sattvik and one that is rajasik. What category would your writings fall in? We expect to hear more about the American lady. I hope the Ashram life will not prove too trying for her. Our joint congratulations to Mrs. Appasamy on her introduction of the wheel and the takli in her school.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 10090

53. LETTER TO P. G. MATHEW

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 8, 1930

MY DEAR MATHEW,

Human speech is inadequate to express the reality. The soul is unborn and indestructible. The personality perishes, must perish. Individuality is and is not even as each drop in the ocean is an individual and is not. It is not because apart from the ocean it has no existence. It is because the ocean has no existence, if the drop has not, i.e., has no individuality. They are beautifully interdependent. And if this is true of the physical, how much more so of the spiritual world!

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1554
54. LETTER TO MOTIBEHN CHOKSI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

September 8, 1930

CHI. MOTI,

I am happy that you have gone to the Ashram. I hope you will live in peace now. If you don’t receive any money even from Broach, how do you meet your expenses? Did Najuklal save anything?

Ask Lakshmi to write to me. Where is Jivandas, and what does he do at present? Where is Jethalal? Is there any news about Mani? What does she do in Bombay? Does Gokibehn take any part in public service? What is your daily programme of work? Vallabhbhai told me that Lakshmidas had fever. Is that true? They have now removed Vallabhbhai from me. He was brought here only for two or three days. That is what a prison is.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 12147

55. LETTER TO SHANTIKUMAR MORARJEE

YERAVDA MANDIR,

September 8, 1930

CHI. SHANTIKUMAR,

Your regards have been conveyed to me. You are in my thoughts every day. As usual, I have the watch before me as a constant reminder. You can write to me. Are you out of the wood? My regards to Grandmother. May God give you peace of mind.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 4719. Courtesy: Shantikumar Morarjee
56. LETTER TO KASHINATH TRIVEDI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 8, 1930

CHI. KASHINATH,

One should not think too much about one’s mental condition. We should keep ourselves absorbed in our appointed work and be cheerful. When impure thoughts trouble the mind, we should drive them out with good thoughts and remain peaceful. If we remain firm in our decisions, we automatically acquire self-confidence.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5251

57. LETTER TO MATHURADAS PURUSHOTTAM

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 8, 1930

CHI. MATHURADAS,

I have your letter, but see none from Motibehn.

In regard to degrees, after discussing the matter Kakasaheb and I have both come to the conclusion that there should not be more than three stages and that for each stage the name of the diploma or the degree should be the same for all subjects, whether craft or industry or art or letters or philosophy. At present there are three diplomas or degrees, Vineet, Visharad and Pundit, in the Vidyapith. Vineet (Matriculation, Entrance) is one who has acquired general knowledge in a subject. Visharad (Graduate) is one who has acquired proficiency in his subject to the extent of being able to teach it to others also. And Pundit is one who can do research in the subject and write dissertations and articles concerning it. Having regard to this, we should for the present, award the degree of Pundit to no one, we may award the diploma of Dhanur-Vineet or of Dhanur-Visharad. If you award the degrees or diplomas, see that you do not make them cheap. Appoint examiners and give the degree or the diploma only to those who pass according to a prescribed standard.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3744
58. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

September 5/9, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS,

I again got the packet of letters on Wednesday. Read the letters to Manibehn and Bhagwanji. Read out yourself to Manibehn the letter meant for her. If you read both the letters, everything will be clear to you. I need not, therefore, give you any other instructions. I had not thought that you would have to attend to such duties too, but I should have known. It is God’s kindness that you are capable of attending to them. The problem of Keshu seems to be difficult. Be careful and carry on as well as you may. What made him break with Navin? The two used to get on very well with each other. You may send me letters received from abroad, if there are any which you think should be sent to me. If a letter is very important, make a copy and send me the letter or the copy. If Dudabhai is eager to have Lakshmi with him and if the latter wishes to go, do not stop her. She is sufficiently obstinate, but watch if you have a different experience of her now.

September 8, 1930

There is barely sufficient cotton for carding to last me up to the 20th. If you have not sent any so far, send some immediately. It will be all right if you send 4 lb. Since slivers have to be made for both of us, a good deal of cotton is consumed. Kakasaheb has started only recently. He is likely to spin more as time passes. I have already written to you about the sandals.

Read about our weight and the changes in my diet, etc., in the letter to Mirabehn.

Tuesday morning, September 9, 1930

REMOVAL OF UNTOUCHABILITY

This, too, is a new observance, like control of the palate, and may even appear a little strange. But it is of vital importance. Untouchability means pollution by the touch of certain persons by reason of their birth in a particular caste or family. In the words of Akha, it is an excrescence. In the guise of religion, it is always in the way and corrupts religion. None can be born untouchable as all are sparks of one and the same Fire. It is wrong to treat certain human beings as untouchables from birth. It is also wrong to entertain false scruples about touching a dead body, which should be an object of compassion and respect. It is only out of considerations of health that we bathe after touching a dead body or after an application of oil, or after a shave. A man who does not bathe in such cases may be looked upon as dirty, but surely not as a sinner. A mother may be “untouchable” so long as she has not bathed or washed her hands and feet after cleaning up her child’s dirt, but if a child happened to touch her, it would not be polluted by the touch. But Bhangis, Dheds, Chamars and the like are contemptuously looked down upon as untouchables from birth. They may bathe for years with any amount of soap, dress well and wear the marks of Vaishnavas, read the Gita every day and follow a learned profession, and yet they remain untouchables! This is rank irreligion fit only to be destroyed. By treating removal of untouchability as an Ashram observance, we assert our belief that untouchability is not only not a part and parcel of Hinduism, but that it is a plague, which it is the bounden duty of every Hindu to combat. Every Hindu, therefore, who considers it a sin should atone for it by fraternizing with untouchables, associating with them in a spirit of love and service, deeming himself purified by such acts, redressing their grievances, helping them patiently to overcome ignorance and other evils due to the slavery of ages, and inspiring other Hindus to do likewise. When one visualizes the removal of untouchability from this spiritual standpoint, its material and political results sink into insignificance and we befriend the so-called untouchables regardless of such results. Seekers after Truth will never waste a thought on the material consequences of their quest, which is not a matter of policy with them, but something interwoven with the very texture of their lives. Similar is the case of those who have vowed to remove untouchability. When we have realized the supreme importance of this observance, we shall discover that the evil it seeks to combat is not restricted in its operation to the suppressed classes. Evil, no bigger than a mustard seed in the first instance, soon assumes gigantic proportions and in the long run destroys that upon which it settles. Thus this evil has now assailed all departments of life. We practise untouchability against followers of other religions than our own, against those who belong to other sects than our own within the Hindu fold and even against members of our own sect, so much so that, ever busy observing untouchability, we become a burden on the earth. We have hardly enough time even to look after ourselves, thanks to the never-ending ablutions and exclusive preparation of food necessitated by false notions of untouchability. While pretending to pray to God, we offer worship not to God but to ourselves. This observance, therefore, is not fulfilled merely by our making friends with untouchables but by loving all life as our own selves. Removal of untouchability means love for and service of the whole world and thus merges into ahimsa. Removal of untouchability spells the breaking down of barriers between man and man, and between the various orders of beings. We find such barriers erected everywhere in the world; but here we have been mainly concerned with the untouchability which has received religious sanction in India and reduced lakhs and crores of human beings to a state bordering on slavery.

Blessings from
BAPU

PS.

One Kantu Gajiwala is a resident of Surat and lives in Khapatia Chakla. I think he gave me Rs. 5 during the march. I had given instructions to make a khadi-bound diary from the handmade paper which we have and send it to him. Because of my arrest, the matter could not be pursued further. Now get a small diary, of a hundred or more pages, bound by anyone who knows the art and send it to Gajiwala. And write to me when you do so. In any case drop a postcard to him immediately.

BAPU

[PS.]

There are 53 letters.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U/I

59. LETTER TO MAHALAKSHMI MADHAVJI THAKKAR

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 10, 1930

CHI. MAHALAKSHMI,

I got your letter. As your work increases, your handwriting improves. You should improve it still further. You should not try to give a flourish to the characters. For instance, the sign for the sound “u” should be written thus—é and not thus—ə. If you form the habit of writing each letter of the alphabet as it is printed, your handwriting will appear very beautiful. I wish to see you and all other women perfect in every respect. I do not exaggerate when I say that I have put all my hopes in you women. I strongly feel that the ultimate victory of non-violence depends wholly on women.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6799
60. LETTER TO MOTIBEHN

[About September 10, 1930]¹

CHI. MOTIBEHN,

I hope you have overcome your grief now. The Gita is the medicine for your grief. Read the Gujarati translation every day and read it over and over again. Get Shantu examined by Dr. Haribhai and take the necessary measures about his teeth. Read a little every day.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3738

61. LETTER TO RAMABEHN JOSHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

September 11, 1930

CHI. RAMA (JOSHI),

I have your fine letter. I see that Mahalakshmi copies you. There is no difference even in the handwriting of you two. This is good. But, then, does not this increase your responsibility? You should, therefore, go on rising higher in all respects. God has given you the strength to do so. He has now provided even the circumstances in which you can rise as high as you wish to. “Go forward”— that is my prayer and my blessing. I had seen even in Wardha those virtues in Mahalakshmi which you describe.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5324

¹ The source bears this date though not in Gandhiji’s hand.
62. LETTER TO ROHINI KANAIYALAL DESAI

September 11, 1930

CHI. ROHINI,

I have your letter. I was very glad to read in Hamidabehn’s letter about the courage which you displayed. It is but natural that Kanjibhai’s daughter should be so brave. On reading about your courage, I was reminded of a parable in one of the Upanishads. It compares our senses to horses. The human soul is described as the charioteer and that which can control these horses, the senses, is described as a conqueror. That [soul] which lets itself be carried away by the horses is said to be defeated by them. As you could stop that horse by the power of your courage, so you and other young women there ought to ride the senses and control them. If you succeed in doing so we shall live in Ramarajya, no matter what the outward circumstances are. Show this to Hamidabehn and explain the idea to her. May God grant you still greater strength and courage. Teach Gujarati to Hamidabehn.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2652

63. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

September 11, 1930

CHI. PREMA,

I have your letter. You must have recovered completely by now. You must observe the rule for the night. Reduce your work during day time, or keep aside your reading, etc., for the time being. If you have as much sleep as you need, you will feel fresher and be able to do the same amount of work in less time. Irrespective of whether this happens, you should let your mind rest between 9 and 4 and lie down to sleep. Start doing this immediately. I should be happy if you wouldn’t argue about this. You may argue as much as you like about matters in which there is room for argument, but not on this matter.

Have you cultivated friendship with Kamalabehn Lundy?
Tell Dhurandhar that Prof. Limaye has translated Anasaktiyoga and that the translation will be soon published.
‘Bheek’ in Marathi is ‘beek’ in Gujarati.¹

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10234; also C.W. 6682. Courtesy:
Premabehn Kantak

64. LETTER TO NIRMALA DESAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 11, 1930

CHI. NIRMALA (AUNT),

Your imprisonment is real and ours not so. But it is in your power to get out of your prison, and it is not in our power to get out of ours. You need not get frightened by the bone growth. You should take sun-bath only in the early morning at the time of sunrise. At least that part of the body where there is bone growth should be exposed to the sun’s rays. You will benefit more if you expose the whole body. If you eat simple food, you will certainly be able to digest it. Apart from this, do whatever else Haribhai advises.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9456

65. LETTER TO BALBHADRA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 11, 1930

CHI. BALBHADRA (OR BUDDHICHAKRA),

Narandas is full of praise for you. You have done quite a good deal of carding. How nice it would be if you thus worked regularly!
Why don’t you write to me?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9210

¹ ‘Bheek’ (Marathi) means alms; ‘beek’ (Gujarati) means fear.
66. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 11, 1930

CHI. LILAVATI (ASAR),

I got your letter. Take some rest now before you resume work. See that your handwriting does not become worse. Compare yours with Radhabehn’s. With a little effort, you will be able to improve it. Once it has improved, it will not become worse again even if you write fast.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9565

67. LETTER TO NARAYAN MORESHWAR KHARE

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 11, 1930

CHL. PANDITJI,

‘Chi.’ does not seem to go well with ‘Panditji’. I use this form very freely these days. Sometimes I even tremble when using it. One should be fit to claim to be anybody’s father. I frequently examine myself to see if I feel the love and sympathy which a father should feel and am as vigilant as a father should be, and sometimes I tremble as I do so. I can only state truthfully that I sincerely strive to cultivate these, and console myself with that thought. I certainly know that whenever I address anyone as ‘Chi.’, my responsibility increases to that extent. I hope God will make me worthy of that responsibility.

The early morning processions can produce much strength. I am sure that you can make a big contribution in organizing them properly. Please do so.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 212. Courtesy: Lakshmibai Khare
68. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 11, 1930

CHI. GANGABEHN (SENIOR),

How is it that there has been no letter from you? You must write every week. Do you write to, and keep yourself in touch with, all the women who are engaged in picketing work outside the Ashram? If you are not doing so, start writing to them. Remember that you are in the position of a mother to many of them. You have no dearth of sons and daughters. We know that all those daughters are doing work which involves danger to their persons. It is but our duty to undertake such work. We may not seek it, but when it comes to us unsought, we should welcome it and pray for God’s help to succeed in it. Those women alone who, though outside the Ashram, observe the vows will be said to have succeeded in the struggle.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro–6: G. S. Gangabehnne, p. 41; also C.W. 8757. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

69. LETTER TO MANSHANKAR J. TRIVEDI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 11, 1930

CHI. MANU (TRIVEDI),

I got your letter. Both of us were relieved. We should be happy, rather than feel sorry, that others of our age do better work than we. “What God, World Teacher and Master, has willed for the day, it is futile to grieve over.” We can work only as much as the body which has been given us permits us to do. He who shirks work and does less than what he is capable of has cause to feel ashamed. A person like you has no such cause at all.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7763
70. LETTER TO BENARSILAL BAZAJ

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 11, 1930

CHI. BENARSI,

I have your letter. You were arrested and released too! I am confident that in all that you do you will be calm, truthful and non-violent. I have, therefore, no worry.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Hindi: C.W. 9304. Courtesy: Benarsilal Bazaj

71. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 12, 1930

CHI. VASUMATI,

I have your letter. Give me details about the work being done at Sarbhon. Where are you staying? Are there any men or is everything managed by women? To which place does the old lady belong? How old is she? What work does she do?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9287

72. LETTER TO RUKMINI BAZAJ

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 12, 1930

CHI. RUKMINI,

I have your letter. I was in fact waiting for a letter from you. How is your health now? Didn’t Vijapur agree with you? I hope you do not worry at all about Benarsi. He is a careful man. And ultimately it is only God who protects us.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9052
73. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 12, 1930

CHI. KUSUM (DESAI),

I got your letter. I was waiting for one in the hope that it might give me news about Pyarelal. I knew that Pyarelal was here only when I accidentally saw your wire with the jailor. Afterwards, I got a letter from Chhaganlal [Joshi] giving me news about his bad health. Here they tell me that he is all right. I shall know the truth now from your next letter.

Do not neglect your work. Have faith. Faith is required when reason fails you. Isn’t that so? Have no hesitation in telling me about anything you fail to do through lethargy or any other cause. Even your writing to me will protect you, for the very thought that you will have to tell me will prompt you to be regular.

What can I do about Ba from here? You yourself should complain to Mithubehn. She certainly cannot act independently. She has gone there to work under the leadership of Mithubehn and ought to submit to it.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1803

74. LETTER TO MADHAVDAS

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 12, 1930

CHI. MADHAVDAS,

I read in the letter from the Ashram that you went and visited Ramdas and others. I was glad. How are you? How is Krishna? Has she recovered her health now? Can you two do any work in the present movement? Where do you live?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./XXII
75. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

Y. M.,

September 12, 1930

CHI. KANTA,

I got you letter. I will of course write to you regularly. It will be another matter if I have to stop writing letters altogether. You too may go on writing as you please. By all means eat boiled vegetables instead of raw. When the vegetable for the day is radish, gourd, pumpkin, tomato, etc., make a habit of eating a little of it raw. If you cannot digest it, you may discontinue it.

Make only such changes as suit your body. When you get time, improve your arithmetic. Is there no letter from Krishna at all?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: Chandrakanta Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

76. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PARIKH

September 13, 1930

CHI. MANIBEHN (PARIKH).

Please write to me and tell me if you know now the cause of Narahari’s bone growth. I trust you keep good health. How are the children? Do they study and learn anything? How do you spend the day? Write to me giving all details. Our being able to write to each other is quite an uncertain matter. Nobody knows when we may have to stop. There are no such signs just now, but after all a prison is a prison. A prisoner has no personal rights.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Mohan’s getting jaundice means some error in regard to his food.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5960
77. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 13, 1930

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I have your letter. I have not missed a single post. But it may be that letters are not dispatched from here in time. I hope Jayaprakash has recovered now. How is it you don’t get any newspapers there? They get a good many in the Ashram, and can send you some. Mother-in-law must have recovered by now.

I have already informed you about my weight. Both of us are keeping fine? Can you go out for a daily walk there? Do the people also pray daily? How do you spend the day? What is the approximate population of the place? What are Jayaprakash’s plans now? Will he be able to earn anything? Does he worry about anything? Even if you write directly to me, most probably I shall get your letters. At present, at any rate, I get such letters. I myself cannot write many letters direct.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3369

78. LETTER TO RANI VIDYAVATI

Y. M.,
September 13, 1930

CHI. VIDYAVATI,

I shall not use the formal ‘aap’ in addressing you. But can love be expressed through words? Love is related to the heart and can be recognized through the heart. When words come from the heart, they do have some meaning. Tara’s 1 is a sad story. If Tara is firm, if she has humility, courage and tolerance, she can leave the house of her in-laws and live with you in the Ashram. You alone can know if you can give her refuge. Through humility, Tara will be able to win over her

1 Addressee’s daughter relatives in the end. That is the certain result of satyagraha. For this result, there should be sincere love even for the oppressor. Just as fire is always extinguished by water, anger is also calmed down by love.

How is your health? How is Laxmi Devi? We should have known about her. How is Jang Bahadur?

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I have just seen Laxmi Devi’s handwriting. My blessings to her.

---

RANI VIDYA DEVI
SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM
HARDOI

From the Hindi original: Rani Vidyavati papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

79. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 14, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

Your Coimbatore letter before me. It is remarkable how well you have kept on the whole in the midst of the tremendous rush. It is a sign of mental calm I expect.

Keshu did offer to send me a bamboo charkha. I would not let him. The fault was mine in that I did not master the detailed working of it when there was ample opportunity for so doing. I am now doing penance by mastering it by making mistakes. I see that the mal and its proper adjustment have much to do both with speed and efficient working. I am getting on. I am by no means despondent. The extraordinary fatigue is gone. There need be no anxiety therefore about the wheel. Kaka is at your wheel. He can’t yet get more than 80 rounds per hour.

I am sorry about Mrs. Asher’s miscarriage. The chief thing they should do is to impose restraint upon their carnal desires for at least three years if they expect a full-grown healthy baby and Mrs. Asher is to become a strong and healthy mother. To this end they should live separately if need be. Of course this restraint is in addition to simple diet, open-air life and plenty of gentle exercise. It would do her a world of good if she would take Kuhne baths both hip and sitz I am sure that if she follows the course for three years and has patience she will be a new woman. You may pass this on to Mrs. Asher if you like.

My walks must still be confined. But I am keeping quite well. The wheel and thinking about it make the time fly. And at the end of the day I get good sleep which to me means more than food. I have finished translating the 65th bhajan. But there is yet a long distance to cover. I rarely get time to do more than one and I have not yet failed to do one per day. Though therefore the progress is steady, it is undoubtedly slow.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5411. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9645

Y. M., September 14, 1930

MY DEAR ANAND,

I am glad you are feeling well in both body and mind. The greater your moral progress the greater will be Father’s reconciliation and happiness. The only way to serve elders and for that matter anybody else is to do the right thing without ostentation and never to feel irritated. I know this is more easily said than done. But it has got to be done.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

I am quite well.

From a microfilm. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani
81. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 14, 1930

CHI. MANI (PATEL).

I write this as you wanted me to write. But goodness knows if it will reach its destination. They allowed me to send your letter to me for Father to read. Write if you get the necessary permission. Make full use of the enforced rest you have got. That too I consider a part of our service. Take good care of your health. Draw up a regular programme of work. Let me know what food you get.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-4: Manibehn Patelnne, p. 74

82. FRAGMENT OF LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

[September 14,] 1930

I smell mental violence even from here. People have not much appreciated non-violence as a religious principle, but even the fact that they have adopted it as a policy is evidence of a great change. From this they will one day appreciate it as a religious principle. If we could make ourselves living embodiments of non-violence, we would, when the atmosphere was unfavourable to it, be twice as vigilant and do twice as much tapashcharya as when the atmosphere might be favourable.

We don’t pay much attention to the danger concerning women which you mention, since we always condone men’s misdeeds. It is good indeed that women have come out. About those who come out successful from the test, we will say that they have really observed the Ashram vows and have understood the meaning of dharma. If any woman falls despite her striving, she will strive again and rise. If a woman had been secretly nursing gross desires and, having an opportunity now, gratifies them, we should know that she did not

1 The addressee was put in the Arthur Road Prison, Bombay.
2 Vide the following item. The year has been supplied by the addressee.
really observe the vows and that her hypocrisy has been exposed. We should welcome that too.

Have no fear, therefore, and don’t worry on their account. Let each of us take care of himself or herself. It is for God to look after all. If even a few of us remain pure, they will save those who stray from the path. Personally I am confident that a good many of us will remain pure. I don’t like the present state of affairs in which the two classes have become a mixed crowd. But it is inevitable.

So long as I can write with self-respect, my effort through letters will continue. I strive through prayers too; no one can prevent me from doing that.

[From Gujarati]

_Bapuna Patro-7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshi_. pp. 204-5

83. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

September 14/16, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS.

I got your letter. I follow your hint concerning the women. Read my letter to Chhaganlal Joshi. You or Gangabehn should keep in correspondence with the women who have settled down for work in different places outside the Ashram. If it seems necessary and if she can find time, Gangabehn should even pay visits to some of those places. Lapses will occur in some of them, but we need not be afraid about them. We should remain, and see that others, too, remain, sufficiently vigilant and leave the result to God. What indeed is our _tapashcharya_ in comparison to the degree of self-control we expect from and wish to see in others? Whatever that is, we wish to follow no other path. We wish to uphold the fullest freedom for women. It does not matter if we miss the path on our way, if we stumble, are pricked by thorns or fall down. I gave the letter on Tuesday as usual, but it must have been posted late by the office here either deliberately or through negligence. I have not complained. You should, of course, write to me whenever you do not get the letters in time. It is good that Punjabhai has returned. Have you appointed anyone from the Ashram to look after him? I am writing to Manibhai\(^1\) about the money for honouring the memory of the poet\(^2\) which is lying with Reva-shankerbhai.

Tell Mrs. Zaulinger that I am awaiting her reply. She may write to me anything she wishes to without any hesitation. You have acted rightly in regard to Kamalabehn Lundy. For the present it is best that she should say or write nothing. There is plenty of silent service she can do. Balbhadra has done fine work indeed in carding. This shows that, if we refuse to regard a person as too dull-minded for a particular thing and go on encouraging him, the result is bound to be good.

I am getting on all right just now. As usual I take milk and curds. Instead of raisins and dates, I eat daily seven or eight tomatoes, four or five big-sized, baked sweet potatoes and about six spoons of cabbage or any other vegetable that is available. This helps me in passing stools. I drink at 7.30 in the morning the juice of one lemon with hot water and salt. In the afternoon, I take the juice of one lemon with soda bicarb. If this regimen suits me, it will solve the problem of constipation and effect considerable economy. I get the vegetables from what grows in the garden here. If we count the expenditure, I don’t think it exceeds two annas daily, whereas raisins and dates probably cost every day not less than six annas. Those who suffer from constipation may try this diet. I cannot say that it will benefit all. About myself, too, I cannot yet say that the good effect will last. If this experiment is followed, any other food should be avoided. The baked sweet potatoes should be eaten by themselves and chewed well. They should not be dipped in milk or curds. Probably it will do no harm if one eats the skin. I do eat some. Because of my delicate stomach I am afraid to eat all. Anybody else who has a similar stomach and who tries this experiment should also avoid the skin. I would be really happy if you could find my sandals. Kusum is bound to know about them. She may have entrusted them to Premabehn. If you have not yet sent the cotton send it even by post in the last resort. Both the belts, one of six strings and the other of eight strings, were found to be too thin. They come off the pulley and go on revolving without

\(^{1}\) Manibhai Revashanker Zaveri

\(^{2}\) Rajchandra moving the latter. Do not send me new ones in their place. Some are ready with me and I will somehow manage to make others. I asked you to let me know a simpler method because such a method would save my time.

September 15, 1930

My silence ended a little while ago and Kakasaheb read out to me Ramdas’s letter to him. Ramdas says in it that he wrote a letter to me which I have not received. I was very happy that Ramdas gave in the letter to Kakasaheb detailed information about his health and studies. When he is released from jail, we shall be able to write to each other. I shall then get any letter written by him if I can keep up this correspondence. I send you the letters in cloth-lined envelopes now. I have with me only the envelopes received from you. I retain their size when returning them, so that you may be able to use them again.
Otherwise I could have made them smaller and used them.

Tuesday morning, September 16, 1930

I read in papers about Ba having been harassed in Surat by the police. Is there any truth in the report?

The law, that to live man must work, first came home to me upon reading Tolstoy’s writings on bread labour. But even before that I had begun to pay homage to it after reading Ruskin’s Unto This Last. The phrase ‘jatmahenat’ is a translation of the English expression ‘bread labour’. Literally it means labour for roti. The divine law that man must earn his bread by labouring with his own hands was first stressed, not by Tolstoy but by an obscure Russian writer named T. M. Bondoref. Tolstoy took it from him and gave it wider publicity when he accepted it. In my view, the same principle has been set forth in Chapter III of the Gita where we are told that he who eats without offering sacrifice eats stolen food. Sacrifice here can only mean bread labour. Be that as it may, that verse is the origin of our observance.

Reason, too, leads us to an identical conclusion. How can a man who does not do body labour have the right to eat? “In the sweat of thy brow shalt thou eat thy bread,” says the Bible. A millionaire cannot carry on for long, and will soon get tired of his life, if he rolls in his bed all day long and is even helped to his food. He, therefore, induces hunger by exercise and helps himself to the food he eats. If everyone, whether rich or poor, has thus to take exercise in some shape or form, why should it not assume the form of productive labour, i.e., bread labour? No one asks the cultivator to inhale fresh air, or to use his muscles. And more than nine-tenths of humanity lives by tilling the soil. How much happier, healthier and more peaceful would the world become if the remaining tenth followed the example of the overwhelming majority at least to the extent of labouring enough for their food. And many hardships connected with agriculture would be easily redressed if such people took a hand in it. Again, invidious distinctions of rank would be abolished if everyone without exception acknowledged the obligation of bread labour. At present these distinctions have invaded even the varna system in which there was not a trace of it originally. There is a world-wide conflict between capital and labour, and the poor envy the rich. If all worked for their bread, distinctions of rank would be obliterated; the rich would still be there, but they would deem themselves only trustees of their property and would use it mainly in the public interest. Bread labour is a veritable blessing to one who would observe non-violence, worship Truth and make the observance of brahmacharya a natural act. This labour can truly be related to agriculture alone. But at present at any rate everybody is not in a position to take to it. A person can, therefore, spin or weave, or take up carpentry or smithery, instead of tilling the soil, always regarding agriculture, however, to be the ideal. Everyone must be his own scavenger. Evacuation is as necessary as eating; and the best thing would be for everyone to dispose of his own waste. If this is impossible, each family should see to its own scavenging. I have felt for years that there must be something radically wrong where scavenging has been made the concern of a separate class in society. We have no historical record of the man who first assigned the lowest status to this essential sanitary service. Whoever he was, he did us no good. We should, from our very childhood, have the idea impressed upon our minds that we are all scavengers, and the easiest way of doing so is for everyone who has realized this to commence bread labour as a scavenger. Scavenging, thus intelligently taken up, will help one to understand religion in a different and truer light. If children, the old and those disabled by illness do not do bread labour, that should not be regarded as violation of the law of bread labour.
The child is, as it were, included in the mother. If nature’s laws were not violated, the old would not be disabled and there would be no disease.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
Tell Khurshedbehn that, if she requires money, she should have no hesitation in obtaining it from the Ashram. If she got it from any other source, it would pain me.

There are 55 letters.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U/I

84. LETTER TO PATRICK QUINN
September 18, 1930

DEAR MR. QUINN,

We both waited for you last evening in accordance with your message.

(1) Please send yesterday’s Chronicle.
(2) Could you not arrange to have it sent at the regular hour daily?
(3) Please send also the Ashram post. It was due yesterday.
(4) I expect a parcel from the Ashram containing sandals and cotton.
(5) Any other parcels of books and magazines. I have of [sic] a pamphlet called Caesar or Christ and there should be Hindu of Madras.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

85. LETTER TO GULAM RASOOL QURESHI

September 18, 1930

CHI. QURESHI,

I got your letter. You did well in paying a visit to Bombay. Sultana would never come near me when I was there. No wonder she remembers me now. Whenever she saw me, she would run away. Since Manilal is there with Imam Saheb to look after him, I am perfectly easy in my mind about him. Amina’s courage is boundless. Though I don’t mind her having given her name as a volunteer, how will she be able to keep the children in jail with her if she is imprisoned? It would be all right if she did whatever she could remaining at home. It is enough that she is ready to go to jail if it becomes necessary.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6652

86. LETTER TO KAMALA NEVATIA

YERAVDA MANDIR,

September 18, 1930

CHI. KAMALA (RAMESH WARDAS),

I got a letter from you at last. So you understood the suggestion in my letter that you should write to me. Don’t be lazy in future. How is your health? Write to me from time to time. If you do so, even that will help you to shake off your laziness. Did you meet Kikibehn¹, Gangabehn² and others in Karachi?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3042

¹ J. B. Kripalani’s sister
² A. T. Gidwani’s wife
87. LETTER TO RALIATBEHN VRINDAVANDAS

September 18, 1930

DEAR SISTER,

Mani tells me in her letter that you sometimes think about me. It is but natural that you should. On my part, I think about you quite often. I see your face in my mind and remember Narottamdas, for your face resembles his. May God give you and Mother peace of mind.

_Jai Shrikrishna from_

MOHANDAS

SMT. GOKIBEHN
BOMBAY

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9810

88. LETTER TO ANASUYABEHN SARABHAI

Y. M.,

September 18, 1930

CHI. ANASUYABEHN,

If I were free you would be the first visitor I would be seeing in the morning tomorrow¹. It has been many days since I last saw your handwriting. Do keep writing to me. Is your health all right? Tell Nirmalabehn that I have not forgotten her. Her innocent face often swims in my ken. What is Indu doing?

_Blessings from_

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: G. N. 11553

¹Gandhiji’s birthday according to the Vikram calendar fell on September 19.
89. LETTER TO RAMESHWARDAS PODDAR

September 18, 1930

BHAI RAMESHWARDAS (DHULIA).

Your letter. As you have survived the snake-bite, God will certainly exact more service from you. What treatment did you have? Was the snake poisonous? God will give you peace. Be certain that Ramanama is the kalpadruma¹ for us.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 175

90. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

September 20, 1930

CHI. SHARDA (BABU),

You seem to have grown really wise. From now on, so long as I receive your letters, you will receive my letters too. So, you have now become a store-keeperess². You must become very strong in body. Punjabhai is older than I am but he considers me his elder. Even if a nephew is older than his uncle, it is the custom, is it not, that only the uncle can bless the nephew. Do you understand me now?

If Anandi is missing me, all of you must keep her in good cheer.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9890. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

¹ A mythical tree which grants all wishes
² Gandhiji uses an arbitrary feminine form in Gujarati.
91. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

September 20, 1930

CHI. PREMA,

I got your long letter. Since your health is good, I need make no suggestion. Do you cultivate contacts with those two European ladies? If you have not been doing so, do so now. At present it seems that God has given over your whole life to me. This will remain true till the end.¹

To which part of the country does Sushila belong who sends me her good wishes in English? The name is Gujarati or Marathi. It is certainly not Tamil. If she is a Tamil, she may be excused. If not, she should send her good wishes in her mother tongue.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10235; also C.W. 6683. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

92. LETTER TO LAKSHMIBEHN KHARE

YERAVDA MANDIR,

September 20, 1930

CHI. LAKSHMIBEHN (KHARE),

Your joining the picketing will prove a shield for the other women. As these are all novel experiences some are likely to get hurt. Still we should not retrace our steps. You have inexhaustible strength. Put it to good use and bring credit to yourself as well as to the Ashram.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati: C.W. 276. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn Khare

¹ On the occasion of Gandhiji’s birthday the addressee had offered to dedicate her life to him.
DEAR MAJOR MARTIN,

I must now unburden myself of my second difficulty. I do not doubt a word of what you have told me about the charges of alleged ill-treatment in this prison. Yet I cannot dispel from my mind all the reports that have appeared in the Press. The writers could not have deliberately lied about everything. I am sure that some of the statements are gross exaggerations. I hope that most are, and I should like to believe that all are false. But my mind is disturbed. There may be things you do not know; there must be things which you look at from one angle and the prisoners concerned from another.

My duty in the circumstances seems to be plain. I must ask to be allowed to see them occasionally, if I may not be permitted to live with them. I have told you I desire no privileges. What comforts are allowed to me may be taken away from me. If I am isolated for the sake of the comforts, they mean little to me, whereas isolation means everything to me. I desire no comforts that may not be allowed to the other prisoners suffering from the same physical disabilities as I. I do not believe in classification which, in my opinion, is degrading. If I permit myself comforts which the other prisoners like me do not enjoy, I do so because of my physical needs. But I would fain sacrifice health if it has to be purchased by the sacrifice of the privilege of serving my companions, many of whom I know and none of whom I consider to be in any way inferior to me.

I was able to bear the separation so long as I was under the impression that all was well. But the knowledge that young Ratilal is no more, that Pyarelal who is like a son to me has been suffering, that the elderly Narsinhabhai was near death’s door and the persistent complaints in the Press have awakened me to a sense of my duty, viz., that I should strive to the utmost of my ability to establish touch with them.

1 From the draft available in S.N. 19980. In the source the word is obli-terated.
I know that it is not in your or the I. G. P.’s power to grant me the permission requested. I would therefore ask you please to place this letter before the Government and secure an early reply. I am aware as prisoner I have no rights and no choice as to the disposal of my body. But I know also that the upkeep of my body requires my co-operation. I should no longer be interested in the preservation of a body that cannot be used for the service that the dweller within yearns after. I am human. Even as a prisoner I cannot divest myself of the human in me.

I need not give the assurance, perhaps you will be able to give it, if any be required, that my presence among my companions will not be used to subvert discipline but on the contrary, it is highly likely to promote it. The moral code of a civil resister requires him willingly to submit to all prison discipline that is not in conflict with self-respect.

Lastly I would like to draw the Government’s attention to the fact that when a somewhat similar incident occurred in 1923 in this very prison, I was allowed to see two prisoners with the result that what promised to be a grave tragedy was averted. The present Inspector General of Police is aware of the facts of the case.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 3852; also Bombay Secret Abstract, 750(5)/A, p. 207

94. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

September 21, 1930

CHI. LILAVATI,

I got your letter. If you do not become impatient, you are bound to get the strength to put your ideals into practice. As we get indigestion if we start eating all at once, so also we fail in our attempt if we try to put anything in practice without first judging our capacity and this gives rise to despair. If we ourselves cannot judge our capacity we should follow the advice of some person in whose judgment we have faith and who has given the advice after considering our capacity. It will be enough if, after pouring out your heart before Gangabehn, you do what she asks you to do.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9566

95. LETTER TO AMINA QURESHI

September 21, 1930

CHI. AMINA,

I got your letter. Many kisses to Mian Abdul Majid. As for Sultana, she would not even let me touch her. How is your health now? Take proper care about food.

Have you kept up your study of Urdu?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6658

96. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

YERAVDA MANDIR,

September 21, 1930

CHI. VASUMATI,

I got your letter. God has given us wings, no doubt, but we don’t use them. If we forget the body, can’t we fly as if we had wings? We are where our mind is. Don’t we sometimes feel that while our body is in one place, our mind is in another? Where is the mind of a person who is dead? I know it is easy to say this, but difficult to live in that spirit. But, as you had mentioned wings, I have poured out this wisdom. You may follow it only to the extent that you can.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9288
97. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 21, 1930

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

It is rather strange that you don’t get my letters. I am writing to Narandas about this. I have not let a single week pass without writing to you. I keep good health. The weight is 103. Instead of raisins, I eat gourd or some other vegetable. Milk and curds remain of course. Kakasaheb, too, is in good health. He gains one pound every week. Don’t worry about us at all. How is Mrityunjaya?

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
Do you go out for a daily walk there?

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3371

98. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

September 21, 1930

CHI. KUSUM (DESAI),

I got your letter. I hear that you yourself are ill. How is that? If there are mosquitoes, you should ignore what others say and use a mosquito-net. If you cannot fix one, you may rub kerosene [on your body]. I cannot straightway request the authorities to keep Pyarelal with me. I had not made such a request even for Kaka. It is the authorities who transferred him. I am, however, trying to see Pyarelal. I made a request to be permitted to see him as soon as I heard that he was suffering from diarrhoea. He is better now. You should remember that I do not know who are lodged in this jail. You should assume that I am confined in a cage. You should have written to me as soon as you knew.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1804
99. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI PANDYA

September 21, 1930

CHI. BHAGWANJI,

I read your letter. Overcome your resentment of Manibehn. Forget that she is your wife. Regard her as one of the countless women. Also forget the children that are with her. Regard them as not yours. Since you are susceptible to carnal urge, you should understand that you have no right to [accept] service from Manibehn even as a sister. You should not call to mind whom you have to forget; leave, therefore, all worry on her account and shake the burden off your mind. Show this letter to Gangabehn who will help you to act on this. Give up jaggery. I would recommend milk even if you could take only half a seer of it.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 324. Courtesy: Bhagwanji Purushottam Pandya

100. LETTER TO MANSHANKAR J. TRIVEDI

September 21, 1930

CHI. MANU,

Both of us feel easy in mind now that you have calmed down. When a student has grown up and can think for himself, only that which he is persuaded to do willingly will bear fruit. How much time did you take to spin 1,000 rounds? What was the count of the yarn? What was its strength and degree of evenness? Write to me and give me these details.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7764
101. LETTER TO JANAKIDEVI BAJAJ

September 21, 1930

CHI. JANAKIBEHN,

You seem to be very clever. You try to evade writing to me under one pretext or another. And if from making speeches you become a dictator; a person like me would have to live in constant fear of you. Jamnalal seems to have established his business well in Nasik. I had thought he would. No one can escape him. Formerly Madu used to write to me, but now she has become lethargic like you. If she remains as lethargic as she is, I shall have to issue an order to separate her from you. How is her health now? Is Om as mischievous as ever?

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Panchven Putrako Bapuke Ashirvad, p. 72

102. LETTER TO SATYADEVI GIRI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 21, 1930

CHI. SATYADEVI,

I have your letter. You must get your Gujarati corrected by someone. Are you keeping up the drawing? Don’t you find any improvement now and then? Is Dharmakumar\(^1\) naughty?\(^2\)

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Hindi]
Bapuki Virat Vatsalata, p. 34

---

\(^1\) Younger brother of the addressee
\(^2\) The original was in Gujarati.
103. LETTER TO MRIDULA SARABHAI

September 21, 1930

CHI. MRIDU,

I was happy to read your letter containing your account of the events. I have not reproached you at all. What right have I to reproach you from here? I have only warned you. A volunteer, man or woman, who is not cautious, gets defeated. Knowing your nature, I merely warned you. Those whose means are truth and non-violence, have as their guide God who is known as Truth. That is the gist of the last stanza of the last chapter of the Gita. Adhering to it as if clinging to a tree, leap as far as you can. God will protect you.

Blessings from
MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 11177. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

104. LETTER TO BHARATI SARABHAI

September 21, 1930

CHI. BHARATI¹,

I was very happy to have your letter written in such a beautiful hand. You have a perfect right to write to me. I should like it very much if you wrote to all your brothers and sisters. My circle of young friends is vast and I am constantly adding to it. Some jealous young men in order to denigrate the old, have made fun of them, treating them as children. If the old really become as innocent as children, the denigration will be turned into praise. I cherish the hope of getting such a certificate and so continue to enlarge my circle of young friends. All you brothers and sisters should join that circle and keep writing to me.

Your handwriting is good. You must devote a little more attention to I], k and r.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 11274. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

¹ Daughter of Ambalal Sarabhai
105. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

September 21, 1930

CHI. KANTA,

I have your letter. It is well that you have sought our Kamalabehn's company. Try to understand her. Do learn from her the art of nursing. You may if you wish add salt to the curd, but do not forget that adding salt only changes the sour taste of curd, it does not neutralize the acidity. I therefore suggest that when the curd tastes sour you should add soda to it. Soda neutralizes the acid in the curd. The acid combines with the soda and evaporates in the form of carbolic acid gas, leaving the curd sweet.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: Chandrakanta papers. courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

106. LETTER TO J. C. KUMARAPPA

September 22, 1930

MY DEAR KUMARAPPA,

Let me point out a flaw in your calculation. If you “return the compliment”, you should find out the love notes I send every week. So if love may be measured arithmetically your notes must be as many times long as all my notes put together. But thank God! Love ignores and falsifies both arithmetic and geometry. Yes, Kamalabehn is doing very well indeed.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 10091

1 Kamalabehn Lundy
107. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 22, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

I have your Calcutta letter. You are having a variety of experiences. Seekers after Truth turn every one of these to good account. I hope the little illness you had was but a passing thing and that you were yourself again quickly. I hope you had the rest you wanted. I am daily making slight improvements in the travelling wheel and it gives me less and less trouble. It is wonderful what a number of details you have to attend to when you have not a perfected machine but a contrivance to help the cunning of your hands. But the greater the mastery over the wheel, the greater is the pleasure of spinning and the less the fatigue. Kaka is still struggling with your wheel. He has much past neglect to make up for. He says, he has become a spinner only here. Before, he was spinning but he was no spinner. You know what I mean. A man can make a table without being a cabinet-maker. The change to vegetables persists. There is no setback nor is there visible further progress. I want to give this experiment a full trial. Dr. Mehta sent word that perhaps sweet potatoes might induce constipation. I have therefore dropped them today. Tomatoes are a daily adjunct and a green vegetable.

You will give my love to friends wherever you are.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5412. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9646

---

1 On her arrival at Howrah Mirabehn was forbidden from joining a women’s procession which was to take her round the city. Nevertheless she proceeded to join the procession which was lathi-charged. She was taken to a police station and later allowed to leave. Some university students who shouted at the police for being rough with the women were mercilessly beaten. The incidents which led to a hartal the next day are described, in some detail by Mirabehn in her autobiography The Spirit’s Pilgrimage, pp. 115-7.
108. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

September 22, 1930

CHI. GANGABEHN (SENIOR),

When I don’t get a letter from you, I cannot help feeling that something is wrong. Why should you feel depressed? Whenever you feel so, you should immediately pass on your depression to me. Whatever your age, from the very first day that I met you I have regarded you as a dear daughter. I can be both a father and a mother. You should, therefore, immediately let me share your depression and then be at peace.

If you feel like coming to see Kaka, take the plunge some time.

. . . behn' is certainly guilty of one mistake, that she went to test Bhagwanji. Nevertheless, as long as she is eager to remain in the Ashram and struggle for self-improvement, we should let her remain. Our experiments are certainly dangerous. God will see us through them all, if we have but faith in Him.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—6: G. S. Gangabehnne, pp. 41-2; also C.W. 8758. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

109. LETTER TO KAMALNAYAN BAJAJ

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 22, 1930

CHI. KAMALNAYAN,

I have your letter. You should write a clear hand. Your letters are well formed but not clear. They will not improve later if you do not take the trouble now. By all means go to Ajmer. Do write regularly from there too. Do not neglect your health.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Panchven Putrako Bapuke Ashirwad, p. 277

1 The name has been omitted.
110. LETTER TO NARAYAN MORESHWAR KHARE

September 22, 1930

CHI. PANDITJI

It is with a little effort that I can bring myself to put ‘Chi.’ before your name. I do feel for you the love which ‘Chi.’ would suggest, but I may not have always shown it outwardly. I got your letter. Learn carding quickly. As for spinning, set apart, if possible, a fixed time for it. The absence of love of khadi which you notice around you is but a reflection of some deficiency in us. We are the centre of the khadi movement. Just as if the sun shines with less heat the temperature around is bound to go down, so also if we “shine with less heat”, that is, if we are lukewarm ourselves about khadi, what wonder that there should be a lack of warmth outside? But love is not acquired from outside; it must spring from within. If we strive for such love to spring from within us, good results are bound to follow. It was very good indeed that Rambhau\' went to Almora.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 213. Courtesy: Lakshmibai Khare

111. LETTER TO ABBAS

YERAVDA MANDIR,

September 22, 1930

CHI. ABBAS.

I got your letter. What you have said about the mal is clear enough, but I think I shall understand it fully only when I read the letter a second time. I have preserved the letter. Describe to me your experiences in jail. What did you read, how much did you spin and card and in what spirit did you observe the prison rules? How was your health? If you have any views to express about the method of carding which Mathuradasbhai is persuading people to adopt, please do so.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6303

1 Adveree’s son
112. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

YEAVDA MANDIR,
Silence Day [September]
22, 1930

CHI. GANGABEHN (SENIOR).

I got your letter. Your son-in-law is released from earthly bonds. We have taught ourselves to regard Death as a friend. What would we have done if there were no Death?

You can bring into the Ashram as many children as you wish.

I understand what you say about Kaku. Everyone will get an opportunity.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—6: G. S. Gangabehnne, p. 38; also C.W. 8750. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

113. LETTER TO SHANKERLAL BANKER

September 22, 1930

CHI. SHANKERLAL,

On the 18th I had a letter ready for Behn. On the 19th I got a wire signed by you three. These days I am taken up by the idea of a book on spinning. Many problems come up which a book should help us to solve. I shall write more about this if you feel that my suggestion can be carried out.

Do keep writing to me. I do not know how long the present arrangement of writing and receiving letters will last. how is your health?

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: G. N. 11554

1 The source gives the date as “22nd Monday ’30”. In 1930 Monday fell on 22nd in September and December. This letter, however, appears to belong to September; vide letters to Gangabehn Vaidya, 22-9-1930.
114. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

September 21/23, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS,

Where is Kamala Gandhi at present? I feel worried about her because I have had no letter from her for a long time. Where is Haridas? What is he doing? Prabhavati complains, in her letters of the last two weeks, that she gets no letters from me. I have been writing to her regularly. Has she given her correct address to you? The name of the place is Sitaldiara. As regards Harilal Desai, read the letter I have written to him. He is likely to be an asset to us. Pay him between Rs. 60 and Rs. 65 for his family and Rs. 40 for his own expenses. In all, the amount may come to Rs. 100 a month. As for the training, it will be best to adopt the method I have suggested. During the time that he is in the Ashram, I think his expenses will be less. They will, I believe, go up to Rs. 40 when he goes outside the Ashram for studying. Explain further details and make the position clear as you may think fit. Is my suggestion all right? I suppose Valjibhai knows all this.

If Giriraj does not recover his calm there, I think it would be best to let him go to Wardha. However, do what you think proper.

Read the letter to Nanibehn (Budhabhai’s). Read the letter to Budhabhai, too, and, if Nanibehn agrees, make the arrangements suggested by him. If, however, she feels hurt, do not interfere. Read the letter to Manibehn before you give it to her to read. Let Gangabehn, too, read it. And also read the letter to Zainu. If he does not understand the position even after this explanation, remember that he is a guest and tolerate his absence. Read the letter to Bhagwanji, too. I think the only medicine for him is the one I have suggested. You have done quite right in sending Balkrishna to Vinoba. You also did well in offering to send others.

It fills me with great joy to know that the boys and girls have taken charge of the prayers. And, moreover, no light is required! My effort to memorize [the Gita verses] is in abeyance for the time being. I simply do not get the necessary time. What work can a prisoner have to keep him so busy? But that is how it is. I have to be careful about every minute. I read a little by snatching a few minutes from other work. I agree with your opinion about mixed picketing. Read the letter to Joshi. I got the cotton and the leather, and Kakasaheb his sandals. I got mine repaired and they should now last me for at least two or three months. I accept your namaskars on your birthday. May God strengthen your soul and grant you a long life.

Tuesday morning, September 23, 1930

EQUALITY OF RELIGIONS. This is the new name we have given to the Ashram observance which we know as ‘Tolerance’. ‘Sahishnuta’ is a translation of the English word ‘Tolerance’. I did not like that word, but could not think of a better one. Kakasaheb, too, did not like that word. He suggested ‘Respect for all religions’. I didn’t like that phrase either. Tolerance may imply a gratuitous assumption of the inferiority of other faiths to one’s own and respect suggests a sense of patronizing whereas ahimsa teaches us to entertain the same respect for the religious faiths of others as we accord to our own, thus admitting the imperfection of the latter. This admission will be readily made by a seeker of Truth, who follows the law of Love. If we had attained the full vision of Truth, we would no longer be mere seekers, but would have become one with God, for Truth is God. But being only seekers, we prosecute our quest, and are conscious of our imperfection. And if we are imperfect ourselves, religion as conceived by us must also be imperfect. We have not realized religion in its perfection, even as we have not realized God. Religion of our conception, being thus imperfect, is always subject to a process of evolution and re-interpretation. Progress towards Truth, towards God, is possible only because of such evolution. And if all faiths outlined by men are imperfect, the question of comparative merit does not arise. All faiths constitute a revelation of Truth, but all are imperfect and liable to error. Reverence for other faiths need not blind us to their faults. We must be keenly alive to the defects of our own faith also, yet not leave it on that account, but try to overcome those defects. Looking at all religions with an equal eye, we would not only not hesitate, but would think it our duty, to blend into our faith every acceptable feature of other faiths.

The question then arises: why should there be so many different faiths? The soul is one, but the bodies which she animates are many. We cannot reduce the number of bodies; yet we recognize the unity of the soul. Even as a tree has a single trunk, but many branches and leaves, so is there one true and perfect Religion, but it becomes many as it passes through the human medium.
All religions are divinely inspired, but they are imperfect because they are products of the human mind and taught by human beings. The one Religion is beyond all speech. Imperfect men put it into such language as they can command and their words are interpreted by other men equally imperfect. Whose interpretation is to be held to be the right one? Everybody is right from his own standpoint, but it is not impossible that everybody may be wrong. Hence the necessity for tolerance, which does not mean indifference towards one’s own faith, but a more intelligent and purer love for it. Tolerance gives us spiritual insight, which is as far from fanaticism as the north pole is from the south. True knowledge of religion breaks down the barriers between faith and faith. Cultivation of tolerance for other faiths will impart to us a truer understanding of our own.

Tolerance obviously does not disturb the distinction between right and wrong, or good and evil. The reference here throughout is naturally to the principal faiths of the world. They are all based on common fundamentals. They have all produced great saints. There is some difference between tolerance towards other religions and tolerance towards their followers. We should have equal regard for all human beings—for the wicked as for the saintly, for the impious as for the pious—but we should never tolerate irreligion.

This idea may need elaboration. If you do not follow it easily, ask me.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
If you have not followed the discourse fully, it would be best not to translate it. I will certainly try myself to translate it.

There are 86 letters today.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U/I

115. LETTER TO V. G. DESAI
September 23, 1930

BHAISHRI VALJI,

You must be aware that formerly I used to write dates according to our calendar. Later I realized that this insistence was wrong. Everywhere outside India they use dates [according to the Gregorian calendar]. We must recognize this fact. Besides there is no single calendar accepted throughout India. Different regions follow different calendars. Surely we are not going to reject everything foreign. There are other arguments too. But this would do for the present. Let me know what you think is the right thing to do. What are your activities just now?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7407. Courtesy: V. G. Desai

116. LETTER TO MOTIBEHN

YERAVDA MANDIR,
Tuesday [September 23, 1930]

CHI. MOTIBEHN,

Here’s a short reply to your long letter. Instead of brooding over the past, we should think of what lies ahead of us. Look upon all the inmates of the Ashram as Meghji and shower sweet love on them.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3741

117. LETTER TO VINOD KUMAR

Y. M.,
September 24, 1930

CHI. VINOD KUMAR,

I got your letter. congratulations to the Sena. How old are you? You have done well in adopting Madalasa as your sister. She is a very good and simple-hearted girl. I like your decision to observe brahm-charya. Simple food is very essential for that. But it is equally important to cultivate simplicity in everything else. You should never let impure thoughts enter your mind. For that you must always think good thoughts and try to live according to them. He whose mind and body are engaged in good thoughts and useful work will never have impure thoughts. To achieve this it is necessary constantly to think of God.

1 The original letter has a remark in a hand other than Gandhiji’s, “About 25-9-1930”. The nearest Tuesday was on this date.

Your must improve your handwriting.

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 10618. Courtesy: Madalasa Shrimannarayan

118. LETTER TO P. G. MATHEW

September 26, 1930

MY DEAR MATHEW,

The things you write about are ultimately decided by faith. Reason can take us only a little distance. Man is a person, God is not in the same sense. Man sins because he has the sense of right and wrong. Our difficulty arises through our effort to measure God by our little selves. And He eludes all measure.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1553

119. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

September 26, 1930

CHI. KUSUM (DESAI),

I got your letter. I wrote to you about Pyarelal in my last letter. I have not yet been able to see him, but I can get news about him now. I shall of course be able to see him. Whether he will be kept with me rests on God’s will. In any case, we shall meet when I am released and he will live with me then. But who knows what the future holds? Kakasaheb will be released at the end of November. I suppose Pyarelal’s term will also have expired by then. At last, he now finds support in the Gita and the Ramayana and I feel greatly relieved. I could not understand why they did not help him till now. You yourself admit that you can be safe only if you write to me. Well, then, give me full details whenever you write.

I did not ask for my old pair of sandals. There was a new pair about which you seem to have forgotten. But at present I carry on with the one I have.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1805

120. LETTER TO PANNALAL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 27, 1930

CHI. PANNALAL,

I have your letter. I hope you know that some persons in Wardha can spin on the takli 200 rounds an hour. I was amazed to read this. Write to someone in Wardha and find out how one may acquire such speed. Chhotelal did give me the details.

Don’t let despair come near you. It means lack of faith in God. Faith in God means hope. How is your health?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3105

121. LETTER TO YUKTI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 27, 1930

CHI. YUKTI,

Why did you write in pencil? As far as possible, children should not use a pencil. Write to me regularly now.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./III
122. LETTER TO VINODBALA

September 27, 1930

CHI. VINODBALA,

Why do you suppose that, because you do not write to me, I don’t think about you? Nor should you believe that I don’t think about those to whom I do not write. I think about many such persons every day. Your letter was very good. I had sent to the Ashram a translation of a poem by Ramdas Swami about handwriting. If you have not read it get it from there and read it. Write to me regularly now. And be a very good girl.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.] Give my blessings to Mother. Has she now recovered peace of mind?

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./III

123. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 27, 1930

CHI. MANI (PATEL),

You ask me to write to you every week. But will the prison authorities allow you so many letters? I also doubt whether you will be able to write to me. Preserve your health. Make good use of every minute and keep a record of your work.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—4: Manibein Patelne, p. 74
124. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

YErvada Mandir,
September 27, 1930

Ch. Lilavati (Asar),

I have your letter. I think it best for you that till you have sufficiently recovered you should remain in the Ashram and serve there. If Khurshedbehn calls you, Narandas will not stop you from going. A volunteer should be happy to work anywhere, doing any work she is asked to do. Surely, you have not remained behind in the Ashram because you wanted it or because you were lazy? Moreover, what is the Ashram if not a place of service?

Blessings from
Bapu

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9567

125. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PARIKH

September 27, 1930

Ch. Manibehn,

Narahari and Ramniklal seem to be flourishing in jail. How did Mohan get the fever? Do you keep a proper check on what he eats?

Blessings from
Bapu

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5961

126. LETTER TO NARAYAN MORESHWAR KHARE

September 27, 1930

Ch. Panditji,

It would be wise for me to climb step by step; otherwise I shall fall. Moreover, if I start writing “Narayan” and also address you as “Narayan” when speaking to you, I may attain my moksha. What then?
If you have to address public meetings, that also is a good experience. All the workers are having various useful experiences. If you get any news about Rambhau, write to me and let me know. I have not heard from any of the three after they left the Ashram.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 211. Courtesy: Lakshmibai Khare

127. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

_YERAVDA MANDIR_,
_Sepembber 27, 1930_

CHI. VASUMATI,

I got your letter. If we smile and remain happy even when we are alone or no one speaks or listens to us and instead people abuse us, then that is true happiness. We should never let the praise or the censure of the world affect our soul. That is what is meant by the _Gita_ verses describing the character of the _sthita-prajna_, which we daily recite. If we go on reciting them every day, with sincere devotion in our hearts, some day we shall be able to live in that spirit.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9289

128. LETTER TO GANGABEHN JHAVERI AND NANIBEHN JHAVERI

_Sepembber 27, 1930_

CHI. GANGABEHN AND NANIBEHN,

I have letters from you both. I do remember you once every week, but afterwards give up the thought of writing to you. In a sense I look upon you as an ideal pair. You don’t seem to be mother-in-law and daughter-in-law, but are more than sisters to each other. It is true that Pannalal has had a share in bringing this about; but what could he have done if you two did not have such a quality in your nature? We have to rise much higher still. You three do have the capacity so to rise. Tell Bhai Panachand that I got his wire.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3104

129. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIHYA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 27, 1930

CHI. GANGABEHN (SENIOR),

The responsibility on you is great. God will give you the strength to shoulder the burden.

Ambalal¹ wrote to Kakasaheb. The latter is in excellent health. He spins and cards. He walks at regular hours and eats normal food.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Ramibai has got what she wanted.² It becomes her well indeed.

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—6: G.S. Gangabehnne, p. 42; also C.W. 8759. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

130. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

September 27, 1930

CHI. RAIHANA,

I have your letter. I am glad to learn that your health has improved a little. Tell Kamaladevi when you write to her that I often think of her. Tell Father that a translation of the whole of the Sirat would not be fully appreciated, but it would be a valuable book if he translates its most important portions. Maulana Shibli wrote the Sirat

¹ Ambalal Chaturbhai Patel, then Kalekar’s student
² She had been arrested.

86 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI with Muslims in view and the book is all right for them, but the general public would not read the translation of so big a book. We already have the works of Amir Ali, Maulvi Mohammed Ali Kadiyani, Washington Irving and Carlyle. It would be a good addition to them to get a small book giving a translation of some portions of Maulana Shibli’s volume. Ramdas writes and tells me that Father is becoming younger day by day, for he puts in six hours’ labour of writing and his memory has improved. If so, what does it matter that his beard has turned grey? And, moreover, he teaches Mahadev French! Who would not envy him? You daughter and mother have done fine work indeed in the Kheda district, and Hamida there has been rousing the Surat district.

_Khuda Hafiz._

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

[PS.]

Do you find it difficult to read my handwriting?

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9621

131. LETTER TO MANGALA S. PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 27, 1930

CHI. MANGALA,

Are you a walking-stick or a spoilt girl or both? You have tried to improve your handwriting. Your must try harder. Learn the second chapter by heart and pull Pushpa’s’ nose for me.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 11089. Courtesy: Pushpa Naik

1 Addressee’s sister
132. LETTER TO JAYAPRAKASH NARAYAN

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 27, 1930

CHI. JAYAPRAKASH,

Prabhavati writes that you are not keeping well. After acquiring so much learning, why can’t you keep your body perfectly healthy? It is essential to make an effort in this direction. What are you doing now?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 3374

133. LETTER TO KALAVATI TRIVEDI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 27, 1930

CHI. KALAVATI,

I was glad to get your letter. Be firm as you are in observing the rules. Ignore those who criticize. Do not even be angry with them, but love them.

There is much scope for improvement in your handwriting. With some effort you can improve it.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 5252

134. LETTER TO KASHINATH TRIVEDI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 27, 1930

CHI. KASHINATH,

I have both your letters. Kalavati is showing very good progress.

You have done well in deciding to keep to the policy of self-sufficiency in khaddar. Spare diet, physical and mental labour are the remedies for nocturnal emissions. Benefits of concentration while doing physical work are twofold: the performance improves and passions automatically remain under control.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 5253

135. LETTER TO TULSI MAHER

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 27, 1930

CHI. TULSI MAHER,

It is well that your letter came. I think of you a good deal. Mirabehn had written; it is good that your letter has also come.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 6538

136. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

September 28, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

I have your letter.

You did not get or take even the full four days’ rest at Muzaffarpur. Next time I should stick to such promises. Why should rest not be taken in the spirit of service? Of course, it can be easily abused and often is. But that is no reason why honest people may not honestly give themselves rest so as to enable them to keep fit for further service. I regard it as self-delusion if not worse when a person says he is wearing himself away in service. Is such service preferred by God to service steadily and detachedly performed? Body is like a machine requiring to be well kept for full service. Enough however of sermonizing from a safe retreat. Only I do feel that I have not felt ashamed to take the required rest. That people about me have thought otherwise is because of their ignorance of the laws of rest. Rest properly and in due time taken is like the proverbial timely stitch.
Kaka has had to give up your wheel. He could not pull more than 70 rounds on it per hour. He uses the box wheel. Yesterday was the third day and he pulled 119 in one hour. He expects to do much better. I am making daily progress and do not know what fatigue is on that wheel. It runs with perfect smoothness. It will do still better when I have myself made the mal of the required thickness. The carding gives real music. Vithal wrote saying that we should use a candle for dressing the gut instead of leaves. This change has made the gut give much better results. I wish those who have new experiences will pass them on to me. Whatever are feasible here, I shall certainly try. I want to reach a high standard both in spinning and carding. There is no reason why I should stop at 160 rounds per hour. I have now confidence that I should do better. For me it is God’s work. If He wills it, He will give me the strength and the ability.

Narandas tells me you are not hitting it off with Kumarappa. Charity is our talisman. I should let him do as he pleases. But of course I know nothing of the differences. N. gives only one or two lines in his letter. My weight is between 103 and 104, the food about the same.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5413. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9647

137. LETTER TO KASUMBA GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 28, 1930

CHI. KASUMBA.

You did a very good thing in going over to Chalala. You should live as you agreed to do during our talk. Give up the idea of being polluted by anyone’s touch. I trust Umiya is happy. Take interest in all the activities of Jaisukhlal. I was pleased by the virtue of firmness which I observed in you. I should like you to use it in serving others.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./III
138. LETTER TO JAISUKHLAL GANDHI

September 28, 1930

CHI. JAISUKHLAL,

I got your detailed letter. I was glad that you wrote. It was only from your letter that I learnt that Umiya is expecting a baby. Now I understand the cause of the pain which she suffers. Is she as happy still as she was at first?

While strictly adhering to your principles, see that you do not hurt Kasumba. She has the same freedom of conduct which we claim for ourselves. If you get angry with her, she will only suppress her real feelings. I have made that mistake myself and I tell you this from experience. I have observed some fine qualities in Kasumba. But why should it matter even if she does not have any? She should not obstruct you in your way of life and you should not obstruct her in hers. Write to me from time to time.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

What you write about capitalists is true. Them too we will win over with love.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./III

139. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

YERAVDA MANDIR,

September 28, 1930

CHI. PREMA,

I have your letter. How am I likely to forget that, when covering me with rugs, you often made mistakes about their order? What an excellent father he must be who tolerated the same mistake being made day after day?

In the 84th bhajan in the Ashram Bhajavali, the third line runs thus: “Kamal myane mot bandhi.” If you know the meaning of 1 This was translated on September 27, 1930.

this line, tell me what it is. If you do not know it, learn it from Valjibhai or Totaramji or somebody else who knows it and write to me, or ask any person who knows it to write to me and let me know.

You have done well in making friends with Kamala. See that she does not feel uncomfortable there. Have you become a friend of Zaulinger too? If you have not, try now. She has some doubts regarding the Ashram rules and if she wants to discuss them with you let her and do satisfy her.

How are you now?

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10236; also C.W. 6684. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

140. LETTER TO RADHAEBHN GANDHI

September 28, 1930

CHI. RADHIKA.

I have separate letters from you all. Since you post your letters separately they do give them to me. But the understanding is that ordinarily all letters should be included in one packet.

Your leg seems to be taking a long time to improve. Probably the general weakness of your body is partly responsible for the slow recovery. Narandas complains that none of you join in prayers, etc. Is this true? Tell me clearly what the position is.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 8686. Courtesy: Radhabehn Chaudhri
141. LETTER TO VENILAL GANDHI

September 28, 1930

CHI. VENILAL GANDHI,

I have your letter. For your two-year-old illness the proper remedy is not a vaid’s medicine but change of air and diet or, if necessary, a long fast. Hundreds recover their health in this manner.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 916. Courtesy: Venilal Gandhi

142. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

September 28, 1930

CHI. KANTA,

Do not worry about letters from me. I will continue to write to you every week so long as I am able to write letters. How are you now? What are you reading in English? How much are you able to read every day? Have you learnt to starch the yarn? Do you weave on the flying-shuttle loom or on the small loom?

Blessings to brother.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: Chandrakanta papers. Courtesy: Gandhi national Museum and Library
143. LETTER TO BALBHADRA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 29, 1930

CHI. BALBHADRA,

I got your letter. It was a good one. You can write one still better. What is the cause of your losing weight? Do you chew your food properly? Are you suffering from any disease? How much milk do you drink? Your weight must improve. Show this letter to Narandas and follow his advice. Let me know what you do.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9211

144. LETTER TO MAHALAKSHMI MADHAVJI THAKKAR

YERAVDA MANDIR,
September 29, 1930

CHI. MAHALAKSHMI,

Was there any letter of yours which remained unanswered? Of course I do remember all of you women every day. I too would have been glad if you could have spent a few months with me. But both of you have made such progress, even while you were away from me, that I cannot imagine what you could have achieved if you had been all the time with me. It is good that the children still live on fruit and so on and that you have come back to it. Why has Dahibehn not written? Blessings to all the women.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6797
145. LETTER TO PUNJABHAI

September 29, 1930

CHL. PUNJABHAI (JUNIOR, BARODA),

I got your letter. Your illness has lasted too long. That is always the way of the body. It is more brittle even than a glass bangle. We should, therefore, take care of it only in order that we may be able to serve others. Get well soon. Write to me from time to time.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4016

146. LETTER TO HEMPRABHA DAS GUPTA

September 29, 1930

DEAR SISTER,

I have your two letters to answer. First, Satis Babu’s question. The literal interpretation of the battle in Chapter II of the Gita may certainly be physical conflict. But I have not a shadow of doubt that the spirit of the Gita inclines us to interpret it as mental conflict. The moment this is doubted, the Gita will cease to be sacred scripture for me.

I hope you are well. After consulting Vinoba, do send the boys desirous of learning Sanskrit to Wardha. Chhotelal is now in jail. I am very glad to note even the slight improvement in Tarini. Give my blessings to Tarini, Charu, Arun and others. The tapovanas like those of ancient India can exist even now, it all depends upon our tapashcharya. Certainly their form may be different. Our duty lies in going a step ahead of the achievements of our ancestors.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1671

1 Sylvan hermitages
DEAR MAJOR MARTIN,

It was on 21st instant that I sent you my letter requesting that I should be permitted to establish touch with the civil resistance prisoners in this jail. I made the request about seeing my secretary and co-worker Pyarelal even earlier. I must now press for an early answer. I know the Government’s preoccupations and, as a prisoner, I should like to spare them all the trouble I can on my behalf. But the request I have made is a peremptory call of my fundamental being. I can no longer restrain myself now. The deprivation of touch with these fellow-prisoners is unbearable for me. Unless, therefore, I get satisfaction by Saturday noon next, I must begin to withdraw my co-operation as to the upkeep of my body. To what extent I shall carry the non-co-operation, I am unable to say at present. It will be determined, as the days proceed, by the inner urge and my courage and strength. The commencement will be made with my refusing all food except the ordinary convict diet, i.e., such of it as I can religiously take. I can take only five natural ingredients in addition to salt. Therefore so far as I can see, I can take only kanji and bajari and juwari chapati. I may not take dal or vegetables as they contain more than five ingredients. The kanji and chapati I shall take on the responsibility of and at the desire of the authorities. I am not sure that after years of abstention from them, my system can cope with either. I have arrived at this compromise to start with, because I am anxious to cause as little embarrassment as I can. I would like the Government not to regard this letter as a threat but consider it as an act of courtesy and consideration. My desire is not to take the Government unawares in any serious steps I may take in order to vindicate what is to me a human right.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 3853; also Bombay Secret Abstracts, 750(5)/A, p. 207
CHI. NARANDAS,

This time I start with your letter. Last week I ran short of time and had to be very brief about some points. Write and tell me, if you know, all about the persons who live in Rajagopalachari’s Ashram, where Subbiah and his wife are and so on.

Punjabhai must now endure his suffering and pass his days in peace. If you can, have a further discussion with Mrs. Zaulinger. She seems to be a wise and good lady, but she takes time to understand our point of view in everything. I don’t see anything wrong in letting her join the night-watch, if she feels so inclined. Her argument is correct. Indian sisters may not be ready to move as freely as she is ready to do; if, however, anyone wishes to join her, she may. I have merely expressed a view from here without knowing all the circumstances there. Do what you yourself think proper.

What shall I say about Keshu and others? Read the letter which I shall write to them this time and give it to them. Keshu is an upright young man. He will probably understand his dharma in the course of time, and so I don’t feel like writing anything to him. You, for your part, should be bold and tell him what you think right. This time, of course, I will write to him.

My diet consists of three pounds of milk turned into curds and taken at two meals, and milk once. Then nine tomatoes, small or big as supplied and the required quantity of boiled vegetables such as cabbage, pumpkin, etc. I add salt afterwards if I require. I gave up sweet potatoes four days ago. Dr. Jivraj visited Kakasaheb and he thought that it would cause constipation. I had again found it necessary to take enemas. I, therefore, decided to see the effect of giving up sweet potatoes. I observe no change. If I keep up my strength, I will not resume sweet potatoes. I didn’t think they were doing me any harm. It is the water of this place which seems to cause constipation to a person of my constitution. There is, however, no cause for worry at all. I shall be weighed this evening and will mention the weight in this letter. Enemas are nothing new to me, but I should certainly like to do without them if possible. I wish to carry on without fresh fruit as long as I can. If by eating vegetables I do not succeed in getting rid of enemas and if I feel weak in the slightest degree, I will resume dates and raisins. No one should worry on my account.

My spinning is improving. The speed seems to be increasing. At any rate, I don’t feel tired now. I will not be too eager for the present to increase the output. I feel a little unhappy that I have had to abandon the effort to memorize the Gita verses. But I am waiting for an opportunity to resume it. In the beginning, I used to try to memorize them while spinning. But I saw that that interfered with the spinning. I realize every day the necessity for ever more concentration for good spinning. I see that there is a great difference between mere spinning and the art of spinning. I wish to learn the art. Maybe I shall not succeed in acquiring it during this life. I will be satisfied if I am not slack in my effort. I realized that my eagerness to learn the Gita verses by heart while spinning was a sign of my slackness. That was against the teaching of the Gita. I wish to memorize the Gita verses if I can do that and at the same time acquire proficiency in spinning, but I would be false to the teaching of the Gita as I understand it if I tried to learn its verses by heart at the cost of my spinning. Plead with Amidas. I am writing to him. How can we ask a person like him to leave the Ashram?

I shall not be able to send two discourses. Perhaps I will continue the discourse on equality of religions. I feel inclined to omit the subject of swadeshi. I feel that by writing on it I may violate to some extent my resolution to make no reference to political subjects.
Even if I write about swadeshi from a spiritual standpoint, I am bound to include in the discourse something which would have an indirect connection with politics. If I feel that I can write on the subject without touching on politics, I will try. Let me see if I can do so.

There is no point in forcing Giriraj to stay there against his wishes. If Balkrishna invites him to go to Wardha, what harm do you see in his going? He is a good man, but he cannot think clearly.
Balkrishna’s company is likely to benefit him. Since you have written to Vinoba offering to send more persons, why not Giriraj? If he feels happy, he will certainly work. It does not seem right to me to abandon him. But, I again seem to be meddling with what I should leave alone.
Don’t, therefore, attach much weight to what I have said. Treat this merely as a suggestion intended to help you to come to a decision. It is possible that I may have formed my opinion without knowing all the facts of the case. I have so much confidence in your decisions that, when my reason does not accept any of them, I feel that that must be so because of my ignorance of some facts. And now I reply to your questions:

1. There is no question of asking him to leave the Ashram, but I would not ask him to stay on either if he decided to leave.

2. He should not go to Wardha without the consent of the Ashram authorities.

3. If he does anything against the wishes of the Ashram authorities and forfeits their confidence, the Ashram cannot support his children.

4. If the Ashram is not in a position to look after Kato and Vimu, I cannot think where we can send them. If at present Giriraj has no share in looking after them, the Ashram may, if it can, look after them in case he goes to some other place with the consent of the Ashram authorities. If, however, the children have become unmanageable, Giriraj should be told so.

5. I think the Ashram should give Giriraj the necessary financial help to enable him to make some other arrangement. The amount of such help should be fixed by the Ashram. I think I have now replied to all your questions.

Read my letter to Giriraj.

I do not have the necessary data to enable me to decide about Manibehn. But from what I have understood I feel that she should be permitted to go to her place if she is very keen on doing so. It is a question not of what Bhagwanji wishes, but of what Manibehn wishes. If she wants to stay on, she should be welcome to do so, on this condition, however, that she should forget Bhagwanji. She should not wish or hope to see him. She should submit to the Ashram rules as the other women do. If she is not willing to do this, she should leave.

I understand what you say about Mirabehn and Kumarappa. Your decision seems right. I am writing to Mirabehn.

Where is Jethalal at present? The names of the fruits which you said would be on display in our exhibition gave me a pleasant surprise. I didn’t even know that you had planted grapes.

You need not send my worn sandals. There was a new pair. If Kanti does not know about it, that is the end of the matter. As I told you in my letter, I have been able to manage for the present. We shall see later what we should do if you do not succeed in finding the new pair. Why shouldn’t a pair from the stock of sandals in the Ashram do for me? A pair like the one you sent for Kakasaheb will be all right for me. I would like the sandals better without the dalia such as Kakasaheb’s pair has. Do send the money for Pyarelal’s living expenses. You can adopt no other course in his case. He ought to have drawn money even earlier, which he did not do. The Ashram is all that he has in the world, call it his friend or anything you will. What you have done about Gokibehn is worthy of you. Of course, nothing could have been sent to her from the Ashram. You could have approached Dr. Mehta, but I liked it very much that you gave the sum from your own resources. I am sure she needed it. I went through the figures of spinning on *Rentia Barash*¹. They are very good indeed. I think Khurshedbehn wants some more women. Find out exactly what she wants and send someone if you can. If you cannot, give her convincing reasons why you cannot. As far as I can see, no mature woman worker is now left there who can go and join her.

September 26, 1930

I was weighed today. The weight is a little above 103, which means that there has been some improvement. Kakasaheb weighed a little below 115. That means that there has been no improvement during the past week. It may not be unusual for him to lose half a pound or a quarter of a pound occasionally.

You did the right thing in not sending me B. J.’s leaflet. You cannot send it.

September 27, 1930

Lilavati has again become impatient to go and join Khurshedbehn. If the latter knows her condition and still calls her, I think it may be best to let her go. Rather than that she should remain in the Ashram and feel restless, it is better that she should go and return wiser from experience. Do what you think best. Satis Babu had made a balance costing 3 annas for weighing slivers, etc.; if you can find that or any other similar balance, send it with someone who may be coming here. Do you have any news about Anna who was spreading Hindi in Madras?

¹ The twelfth day of the dark half of Bhadrapad, which was Gandhiji’s birthday according to Vikram Calendar

September 28, 1930

Did you get the yarn which Kakasaheb had sent through Bal for the Goseva Sangh? He had sent, through Shankar, 8,500 yards for the Charkha Sangh. Will it be delivered to you there or will it be delivered at Ahmedabad? Read what I have written about Miss A. in my letter to Mirabehn.

Tuesday morning, September 30, 1930

As I told you in my letter last week, I have translated into English the discourse on Equality of Religions and send the translation herewith. If Valjibhai has translated it and if his translation has already been printed, he should read the translation which I am sending. Anybody else who wishes to read it may do so and the last person should hand it over to Mirabehn. If Valjibhai’s translation has not been printed, he should carefully go through my translation and then publish whichever he likes. Do you intend to publish the discourses in Gujarati only or their English translations also?

This subject is so important that I dwell a little further on it. My meaning will perhaps become clearer if I describe here some of my experiences. In Phoenix we had our daily prayers in the same way as in Sabarmati, and Mussalmans as well as Christians attended them along with Hindus. The late Sheth Rustomji and his children too attended the prayer meetings. Rustomji Sheth very much liked the Gujarati bhajan. “Dear, dear to me is the name of Rama.” If my memory serves me right, Maganlal or Kashi was once leading us in singing this hymn, when Rustomji Sheth exclaimed joyously “Say the name of Hormazd instead of the name of Rama”. His suggestion was readily taken up, and after that whenever the Sheth was present, and sometimes even when he was not, we put in the name of Hormazd in place of Rama. The late Husain, son of Daud Sheth, often stayed at the Phoenix Ashram, and enthusiastically joined our prayers. To the accompaniment of an organ, he used to sing in a very sweet voice the song “Hai bahare bagh”, “The garden of this world has only a momentary bloom”. He taught us all this song, which we also sang at prayers. Its inclusion in our Bhajanavali is a tribute to truth-loving Husain’s memory. I have never met a young man who practised Truth more devotedly than Husain. Joseph Royeppen often came to Phoenix. He was a Christian, and his favourite hymn was “Vaishnava “jana”. He loved music and once sang this hymn saying “Christian” in place of “vaishnava”. The others accepted his reading with alacrity, and I observed that this filled Joseph’s heart with joy.

When I was turning over the pages of the sacred books of different faiths for my own satisfaction, I became sufficiently familiar for my purpose with Christianity, Islam, Zoroastrianism, Judaism and Hinduism. In reading these texts, I can say that I felt the same regard for all these faiths although, perhaps, I was not then conscious of it. Reviving my memory of those days, I do not find I ever had the slightest desire to criticize any of those religions merely because they were not my own, but read each sacred book in a spirit of reverence and found the same fundamental morality in each. Some things I did not understand then, as I did not in Hindu scriptures. I do not understand those things even now, but experience has taught me that it is a mistake hastily to imagine that anything that we cannot understand is necessarily wrong. Some things which I did not understand first have since become as clear as daylight. Equimindedness helps us to solve many difficulties and even when we criticize anything, we express ourselves with a humility and courtesy which leave no sting behind them.

One difficulty still remains. As I stated last time, the acceptance of the doctrine of Equality of Religions does not abolish the distinction between religion and irreligion. We do not propose to cultivate tolerance for irreligion. That being so, some people might object that there would be no room left for equimindedness, if everyone took his own decision as to what was religion and what was irreligion. Such a question may be raised and one may even make a mistake in deciding what is religion and what is irreligion. If, however, we follow the law of love, we shall not bear any hatred towards the irreligious brother. On the contrary, though we see that he follows irreligion, we shall love him and, therefore, either we shall bring him to see the error of his ways or he will convince us of our error, or each will tolerate the other’s difference of opinion. If the other party does not observe the law of love, he may be violent to us. If, however, we cherish real love for him, it will overcome his bitterness in the end. All obstacles in our path will vanish, if only we observe the golden rule that we must not be impatient with those whom we may consider to be in error, but must be prepared, if need be, to suffer in our own person.
As I have stated earlier in this letter, I think I will omit the subject of swadeshi. I have yet to think on what subject I shall write next.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

[PS.]
There are 70 letters.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U/I

149. LETTER TO R. V. MARTIN

_October 2, 1930_

DEAR MAJOR MARTIN,

Mr. Quinn has been having a chat with me about my letter of 30th ultimo. If you are authorized to let me see periodically in the yard where I am kept, those of my friends whom I may find it necessary to see for the sake of service, I should be quite satisfied. Of course, I would not discuss politics with them nor send any political message, nor say or suggest anything calculated to subvert prison discipline. As I told you this morning, my object in wanting to see these friends is to serve them and, if you would believe it, assist the jail authorities wherever it may be possible even as I did in 1923.

From a photostat: S.N. 19982

150. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

_YERAVDA MANDIR,_

_October 2, 1930_

CHI. SHARDA (BABU),

Your letter. The beauty of trees and plants surpasses that of electric lights as the beauty of real tomatoes surpasses that of clay ones. Have you ever heard any one’s hunger being satisfied by clay tomatoes?

_Blessings from_

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9891. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala
If you wish, you may certainly keep the wooden sandals. But what will you do with those bits of wood? Keep them if you think that they will add an inch or two to your stature. I would condemn your action as smacking of idolatry. I used to keep with me a photograph of my father. I had hung his photographs in the drawing-room and the bedroom when I was in South Africa. When I used to wear a chain, it had a locket which contained small photographs of my father and elder brother. I have now put them away. That does not mean that I feel less reverence for them now. In fact they are more deeply engraved in my heart today. I think of their virtues and try to cultivate them. I can worship countless gods in this manner. If I tried to keep with me photographs of them all, I would have no room to put them in. And if I tried to keep their wooden sandals, I should have to acquire a piece of land for the purpose. As a man of experience, I advise you, therefore, to follow me when I am walking on the right path. That will be a thousand times better than keeping my wooden sandals, and if anybody follows your example, I would welcome that. On the contrary, if anybody saw the sandals with you and followed your example blindly, would he not fall into a pit? Think on this and then do what you wish.

He who understands and does his duty, his cravings have already left him. A person whose cravings have not left him has no sense of duty. Our cravings are like a huge mountain which no man can cross over by climbing. The only course for us is to raze the mountain to the ground. To give up our cravings is to become conscious of our duty. Suppose that I wish to go to Kashi. I even know the path which I should follow to reach it. What other craving, then, will force me to stray from that path? I have no other craving but to reach Kashi, and that is satisfied. What more do I want then? You have an opportunity for service which has come to you unsought. You should get fullest satisfaction in doing that service with single-minded devotion. Whatever opportunities for human company and for reading you get while doing that duty, may be availed of. Apart from that, you should desire nothing. This, according to me is yoga, “skill in works”, “equimindedness” and samadhi.

If, however, all this seems idle preaching to you and you thirst for reading, by all means satisfy your craving. Reduce the burden of work on you and take rest. How you may do this, you can decide only in consultation with Narandas. He is a man of profound understanding, patience and goodness. He will certainly help you. What more can I say to cheer you? A person like me can only suggest the direction which you should follow. It is on oneself, however, that you and everyone else should depend for peace of mind.

I understand what you say about Sushila. In future, let her send her good wishes in Marathi. My blessings to her.

I understand that after having enjoyed Panditji’s music, a person like you will not enjoy music by anybody else. But why should you not, yourself, lead the bhajans? If you have the courage to do so, ask them to let you do it. If you wish, I will write. You certainly know how to sing. I have not forgotten that you used to sing bhajans almost every night. How are your tonsils? Did you get them examined by Dr. Haribhai?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10237; also C.W. 6685. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

152. LETTER TO RAOJIBHAI M. PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 2, 1930

CHI. RAOJIBHAI.

As advised by the doctor, do take a full month’s rest. The work of service will never end. If you become stronger, you will be able to work better. Moreover, our programme is such that wherever we are, we can do some work. Write to me regularly.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8989
153. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 2, 1930

CHI. GANGABEHN (SENIOR),

I have your letter.

If you think you are not worthy of being a daughter, how much more fit should I become to be a worthy mother and father to you? If I who claim to be both, am slack in my effort to be so, I shall have no place anywhere in the three worlds. Let us, therefore, not argue who is worthy and who is not. If a son or daughter is unworthy, the parents bear no small responsibility for that.

I understand the reason for your depression. Instead of thinking that you have to do this, that or the other thing, you should think that God does all that and uses you as His instrument. If you think thus, you will feel no burden at all. It is God who carries the burden, and His shoulders are so broad that however heavy the burden we place on them He does not feel it even as much as we would a speck of dust on our hand. We should, therefore, forget ‘I’ and ‘Mine’. “It is I who do this— that is our ignorance, like that of the dog who thinks he draws the cart”: this line by Narasinh Mehta expresses his own experience. ‘Shakat’ in this line means a cart. If we believe that the dog who walks under a moving cart draws it, then we may believe that the burden of our tasks is on us; but anyone who works for the love of God will never find his task a heavier burden than he can carry. He does not have to take upon himself anything. Tasks come to him unsought. He goes on working cheerfully, with God’s name upon his lips. You sing with sincere emotion: “Make me your servant.” Think over the meaning of that bhajan. Also think over the meaning of the two verses which we have added to the prayers for women. It is the Lord’s assurance to those who surrender themselves to Him that He will carry the burden of their happiness and welfare. Why, then, should we worry? This is looking at the matter philosophically.

But even if you and I feel agitated, what escape is there for us? Our relationship with the Ashram is like the Hindu marriage bond. The tie can never be loosened. Instead of thinking whether others are half-hearted or firm in their attitude, you should ask yourself whether you are half-hearted or firm, and that is all that is necessary. Certainly seek what comfort Nath can give you. Talk with Narandas and pour out your heart every week to me. If you can free yourself for a few days and pay a visit to Kakasaheb, that, too, will give you some comfort.

Do not work so hard that you get exhausted. One should always preserve a sense of proportion in undertaking work in the spirit of service. We can do that only if we have cultivated the attitude of non-attachment. Non-attachment means freedom from the sense of ‘I’ and ‘Mine’. The saying that while sleeping one should stretch out one’s limbs according to the length of the covering has great wisdom behind it.

Read this letter again and again, think over it and overcome your depression and put your heart in the bhajan when you sing “Make me your servant”.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—6: G. S. Gangabehnne, pp. 42-4; also C.W. 8760. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

154. LETTER TO BALVIR SINGH

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 2/3\(^1\), 1930

BHAI BALVIR SINGH,

Your letter. The work at Khadi Bhandar constitutes not only proper work but also excellent work. Performance of yajna implies spinning for half an hour at least. These jobs cannot be evaluated on a comparative basis as both are part of your duty. Hence you have to find time for spinning just as you have to find time for meals. It takes only one day to prepare enough slivers to last for a month. Fewer slivers will be required if you spin to the fineness of 20 or 30 instead of 10. Talk it over with Mahavirprasadji. Kakasaheb sends you his blessings.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 10538

\(^1\) Not quite legible

VOL.50: 23 AUGUST, 1930 - 5 JANUARY, 1931 107
155. LETTER TO MAJOR MARTIN

YERAVDA CENTRAL PRISON,
October 3, 1930

DEAR MAJOR MARTIN,

With reference to our conversations, by ‘friends’ I mean those civil resistance prisoners whom I know. I should want to meet only those who may be reported to be suffering from illness or ill-treatment or might have been reported to have so suffered. This right too, I should exercise with as much restraint as possible. If it is necessary to explain my meaning further, you will please let me know. I want to have no mental reservations.

As for postponing the enforcement of my resolution, I am sorry I must not do it, if satisfaction cannot be had in time. But it need cause no immediate worry as in the initial stages, I should be eating such ordinary convict food as I can religiously take.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 3854; also S.N. 19983

156. LETTER TO MOTILAL ROY

October 3, 1930

DEAR MOTI BAPU,

I have replied to your wire. I must not exert myself to give you a long reply to your loving letter of 15th instant. I appreciate your deep love and know that the Sangh is with me in all acts of love.

Sardar and Mahadev join me in sending you love.

Yours,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G. N. 11037
157. LETTER TO PARASRAM MEHROTRA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 3, 1930

CHI. PARASRAM,

Your letter. Do as Shankerlalji says. You must go on with your task despite the world’s ridicule. Do not picket the dealers in mill-made slivers, but persuade them with love. On no account give up truth and non-violence. You will then automatically acquire mental strength.

Continue to write to me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Hindi: C.W. 4965. Courtesy: Parasram Mehrotra

158. LETTER TO MATHURADAS PURUSHOTTAM

October 4, 1930

CHI. MATHURADAS,

I have your letter. What you write about weavers is true. There is a special class of workers in Ahmedabad who starch yarn. We see such workers elsewhere too. Cannot we supply starched warp to weavers? If you ask Ramjibhai and the others, they also will come and help. They will have to do the work entrusted to them by Chhaganbhai or Surendra. If, however, you feel that I should write to them, write to me again. I have had no letter yet from Motibehn.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3745
159. LETTER TO RAMESHWARDAS PODDAR

October 4, 1930

BHAI RAMESHWARDAS (DHULIA).

Your letter. Do not take it so much to heart. Recite Ramanama and be cheerful. Bear whatever pain there is after taking the necessary treatment and do whatever service you can. No reason to worry if you cannot get up [early] in the morning.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 177

160. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 5, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

I am writing this after taking silence. Have just seen your portrait in a group published in the Times Illustrated Weekly. You are spinning on the takli and looking fit. Then I saw in the columns of The Bombay Chronicle that you were in the women’s procession and spoke at their meeting. So you are again near my lodgings and probably this will be in your hands at the Ashram.

Yes, S. Aiengar’s daughter is a very good woman but she was hysterical even when we were travelling from Mysore. When you write to her please give my love to her and tell her I often think of her. It is a sad thing—her father’s case. It is the same thing with him as with the daughter. He can be hardly considered responsible for many of his strange acts. Did you see him at all? Where did you stay whilst in Madras?

Last week, Kaka having been given my wheel, I thought I would finish my quota on yours. I tried hard but I could not make it work. The spindle won’t turn. Whether the resin was ineffective or what the cause was, I could not divine. But there it was refusing to turn. Then I thought of the Gandiv of Surat. I found it to be an extraordinarily effective thing. For the last two days I have been finishing the whole of my quota on it and that in very good time and without the slightest fatigue. It has captivated me and I want you to try it. It is essentially a poor man’s wheel. The inventor is no mechanic. How it has come to him, I do not know. But every part of it, in my opinion, shows solicitude for the starving. It costs Rs. 1½, but it can be made for only 8 annas, I am sure. It is the lightest wheel going in India. It requires the least attention. It occupies the smallest space of all the wheels I know. A little child can work at it. Thousands of these wheels can be manufactured in a day if the discs and spindles are kept in stock. Its mechanism is simplicity personified. You naturally draw a fine thread. The very first I drew was over 30 counts. And I fancy that it can compete with any in giving speed. It admits of certain improvements, which can be made without adding a pice to the cost. I have made two and this reduces the cost. The original has noisy wooden holders. I have discarded them and put on coir rope picked up from rubbish. I have broken up the jingling glass bars on the spindle and wound a few turns of yarn to hold the spindle in position. This has made it absolutely noiseless. Such is the opinion of a new convert, who has tried it only for the last four days. It may, therefore, need modification. But it is undoubtedly a case for believers to give it a fair trial. I am writing to the inventor suggesting certain improvements and am writing to Keshu too to examine, try and if my preliminary observation is at all sound, to improve it. There are other merits I must not describe, as I have many more letters yet to write. If you can think of the reason that has prevented the spindle on your wheel from turning, please tell me.

How did you find Brajkishore Babu? Is he better? Did you see Prabhavati? She is much reduced and her latest letter says she had high fever.

And your health? You must not break down at the Ashram. You will have met Kamalabehn Lundy. Of course you will befriend her. She appears to be a very good woman.

Both of us are keeping excellent health. My weight, if anything, shows a slight increase. The vegetable experiment seems to have proved a success and it gives me joy to know that the disappearance of even dried fruit reduces the cost very materially. In vegetables, for the last two days, I have been taking spinach which has moved the bowels automatically. I take sweet potatoes off and on. I hope you have by now got all my letters. I have missed no week.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5414. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9648
161 LETTER TO ANAND T. HINGORANI

Y. M.,

October 5, 1930

MY DEAR ANAND,

I have your letters. Of course you are in your place being there. If you are uniformly gentle, you will win Father over completely.

You must not damage your health by denying yourself the food you may need. You may not accept furniture that you do not need from Father but you should ask him to send you something that it will please him to send you and that you may need. You should have no hesitation in asking Father for gifts and should not take it ill if he refuses to give them.

Love to you and Vidya.

BAPU

From a microfilm. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

162. LETTER TO MANSHPANKAR J. TRIVEDI

October 5, 1930

CHI. MANU.

How did you get fever? Ordinarily you would deserve a prize for the way you take care of your health. You have succeeded, by your own efforts, in building up a strong body. It is for you now to preserve your improved health. When Kakasaheb is released, let him find you a trained worker in a fit condition.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7765
163. LETTER TO DUDHIBEHN DESAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 5, 1930

CHI. DUDHIBEHN,

I have your letter. I am very glad that you teach in the class. Give your whole-hearted devotion to the work and cultivate the utmost interest in it. Love all children as you do Manu. A letter from you will not increase my burden in any way. Write to me from time to time and ask me any question you wish to. How is your health now? What do you think has been the effect of the fast on the whole?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7454. Courtesy: V. G. Desai

164. LETTER TO GOVIND PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 6, 1930

CHI. GOVIND,

I have your letter written in a beautiful hand. Write to me from time to time about your activities. Do you read anything? What is your weight now?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3945

165. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 6, 1930

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

You must have received my letter posted directly to you. I am expecting a wire from you. Why should you become ill? See that you do not harm your health. If you cannot improve your health there, go and live in the Ashram. No one will oppose your going there for the sake of your health. Since you are in Patna, you can give me news about everyone there. I am quite all right. Kakasaheb’s health keeps improving.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3375

166. LETTER TO SHANTA SHANKARBHAI PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 6, 1930

CHI. SHANTA (PATEL),

I have your letter. You have given much information, but the handwriting has not yet improved. If you make an effort to improve it, you will certainly succeed. If you don’t improve it at this age, it will for ever remain bad, as mine has remained. I hope you do understand that we commit violence in writing to anyone in a bad hand.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4054

167. LETTER TO BALBHADRA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 6, 1930

CHI. BALBHADRA,

I have your letter. If Mathuradasbhai is really ready to take you with him and if Narandasbhai permits you to go, I see no harm in your going. Improve your handwriting. And increase your weight.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9212

114
168. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI PANDYA

October 6, 1930

CHI. BHAGWANJI,

I have gone through your letters. Your opinion is not likely to be free from faults because it is in your nature to suspect rather too much. Your duty just the same is to guard your own self. Your duty is to keep quiet after having promptly informed Narandas about whatever evil you happen to notice. Only in this way will you be able to make some progress. Do not regard the Ashram as forsaken so long as there is even a single votary of the vows of truth, etc.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 325. Courtesy: Bhagwanji Purushottam Pandya

169. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

October 2/7, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got the Ashram packet yesterday. Mostly the packets are handed over to me on the very day on which they arrive.

Read the letter which I am writing to Harilal Desai. I have nothing to write about Giriraj this time. Do what you think best. I was glad to read about Zainu. I am writing to Bhagwanji. His letter will have no effect on me. I know his nature. I felt after reading Madhu’s letter that she was a very innocent girl. I am sure Navin and others will learn simplicity by and by. I am happy that you trust others. No one who does so has ever lost anything in the world. The suspicious gain nothing; on the contrary, they often lose something and exchange worry for peace of mind. Take care about three things in regard to all who have got malaria. They should see to it that they clear their bowels. If they do not do that in the natural course, they should take either a purgative or an enema. Even after the fever has come down, they should take 5 grains of quinine daily for a week, dissolving the quinine in lime juice and adding 10 to 15 grains of soda bicarb to the mixture, drinking it as they would soda water. There will be, and ought to be, effervescence, when the mixture is prepared. Further, for at least one week after the fever has gone they should live on milk and black dried grapes or boiled vegetables. Those who have had no attack of malaria should, if they sleep where there are mosquitoes, rub kerosene over the exposed parts of the body before going to bed. In any case everyone should keep his stomach light. Amidas does cause me worry. I should be happy if my letter has had any effect and he has started taking milk.

Punjabhai may follow his inclinations and live as he wishes. If Jamna is treated by the Udasi Vaid who treats Chandrasankar, she may also benefit. Chandrasankar is all praise for him. Go and see him once. Read my letter to Gangabeen. Give her some time and console her. If she comes to Poona even on the excuse of visiting Kakasaheb, she will have change of air for three days. Keep urging Nathji. His presence, too, may give peace to Gangabeen. Tell Mahadev’s mother that you are glad she has come, and that she should not think of returning to Dihen in the immediate future. If possible, she should stay on permanently in the Ashram. Read my letter to Chhaganlal. You will see from it what restraints should be observed by those who write to me. If in any letter they are not observed, it should be kept back. Khadag Bahadur’s letter did not observe them. Premabehn, too, seems worried. Read the letter to her and console her. Read my letter to Kamalabehn Lundi. Some of her suggestions deserve to be welcomed.

October 4, 1930

Read my letter to Chhaganlal Joshi. Everyone who writes to me should observe the restraints which I have mentioned in it. Any letters which violate them should be kept back. Khadag Bahadur’s letter was of that type.¹ I don’t want to burden you with the responsibility of reading all letters. But you may glance through a letter by anyone who is writing for the first time. Letters by the women never contain anything objectionable. You will, therefore, need to read only a few of them. I certainly feel sometimes that I should put in a separate packet the letters which I write to people there. Perhaps the task of redirecting the other letters is much too heavy a burden on you. I cannot think what I should do to reduce it. Since those letters are not such as I need not write, I continue to burden you with the task of redirecting them.

¹ Repetition of the four preceding sentences seems to be inadvertent.

Read my letter to Harilal Desai, so that you may bear in mind the suggestion I have made in it. I have recently started spinning on the Gandiv spinning-wheel. I like it. I can spin on it with almost the same speed as on the portable spinning-wheel. I hope to increase the speed. With a few improvements, this wheel can perhaps be made a perfect model. Read what I have written about it in my letter to Ishwarlal Vimawala. Read what I propose to write about it in my letter to Mirabehn too. I should like someone in the Ashram to try it. You, too, may examine it. I have suggested to Ishwarlal that he should send two or three wheels. I have seen quite a number of models, but at the moment I think that among them all this is the only one worth trial and examination. I will write further about it after I have had more experience of it.

Tuesday morning, October 7, 1930

I got the cotton and the yarn belt. The cotton was particularly welcome, as Vallabhbhai is being supplied with slivers from here. I am awaiting the scale, but there is no urgency about it.

Humility cannot be an observance by itself. For it does not lend itself to being deliberately practised. It is, however, an indispensable test of ahimsa. In one who has ahimsa in him it becomes part of his very nature. A preliminary draft of the rules and regulations of the Satyagraha Ashram was circulated among friends, including the late Sir Gurudas Banerji. He suggested that humility should be accorded a place among the observances. This suggestion could not then be accepted for the reason that I have just mentioned. But although humility is not one of the observances, it is certainly as essential as, and perhaps even more essential than any of them. Only it has never come to anyone by practice. Truth can be cultivated as well as Love. But to cultivate humility is tantamount to cultivating hypocrisy. Humility must not be here confounded with mere manners or etiquette. One man will sometimes prostrate himself before another although his heart is full of bitterness against him. This is not humility, but cunning. A man may chant Ramanama or tell his beads all day long, and move in society like a sage; but if he is selfish at heart, he is not meek but only hypocritical. A humble person is not himself conscious of his humility. Truth and the like perhaps admit of measurement, but not humility. Inborn humility can never remain hidden, and yet the possessor is unaware of its existence. The story of Vashishtha and Vishwamitra furnishes a very good case in point. Humility should make the possessor realize that he is as nothing. Directly we imagine ourselves to be something, there is egotism. If a man who keeps observances is proud of keeping them, they will lose much, if not all, of their value. And a man who is proud of his virtue often becomes a curse to society. Society will not appreciate it, and he himself will fail to reap any benefit from it. Even a little thought will suffice to convince us that all creatures are nothing more than a mere atom in this universe. Our existence as embodied beings is purely momentary. What are a hundred years in eternity? But if we shatter the chains of egotism and melt into the ocean of humanity, we share its dignity. To feel that we are something is to set up a barrier between God and ourselves; to cease feeling that we are something is to become one with God. A drop in the ocean partakes of the greatness of its parent, although it is unconscious of it. But it is dried up as soon as it enters upon an existence independent of the ocean. We do not exaggerate when we say that life on earth is a mere bubble. How is it possible to cultivate such utter humility? It develops of itself if we understand the spirit of our observances. Can one who aspires to follow truth ever be a proud man? A life of service must be one of humility. He who would sacrifice his life for others has hardly time to reserve for himself a place in the sun. Inertia must not be mistaken for humility, as it has been in Hinduism. Because it has been so mistaken, lethargy and hypocrisy have often flourished in its name. True humility means most strenuous and constant endeavour entirely directed towards the service of humanity. God is continuously in action without resting a single moment. If we would serve Him or become one with Him, our activity must be as unwearied as His. There may be momentary rest in store for the drop which is separated from the ocean, but not for the drop in the ocean, which knows no rest. The same is the case with ourselves. As soon as we become one with the ocean, in the shape of God, there is no more rest for us, nor indeed do we need rest any longer. Our very sleep is action. For we sleep with the thought of God in our hearts. This restlessness constitutes true rest. This never-ceasing agitation holds the key to peace ineffable. True humility, therefore, requires us to dedicate ourselves to the service of all living creatures. When we have surrendered our all in this manner, no day in the week is a day of rest for us. This supreme state of total surrender is difficult to describe, but not beyond the bounds of human experience. It has been attained by many dedicated souls, and may be attained by ourselves as well. This is the goal which we of the Satyagraha Ashram have set before ourselves; all our observances and activities are calculated to assist us in reaching it. We shall reach it some day all unawares if we have truth in us. It is unattainable if we consciously strive for it.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
There are 61 letters today.
Some women from the Ashram should go and see Khurshedbehn. If you have some news about Manibehn, let me have it.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I

170. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 7, 1930

CHI. KUSUM (DESAI),

I was able to see Pyarelal last week. They had permitted very little time for the meeting. He had certainly become weaker, but is better now. He gets milk, etc. He is well looked after. I hope that I shall be able to see him several times again.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1806

171. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 10, 1930

CHI. SHARDA (BABU),

I have Your letter. One reason why you do not like to spin is that you are not fully aware of the fact that through spinning you can serve millions, or, maybe you are not as much interested in serving them. If that is the case you should correct your attitude.
Another reason may be that you have still not mastered the art of spinning. Interest is bound to develop if you could spin fine yarn, the thread does not snap and the spinning-wheel hums along without a jarring sound. Have you ever seen the Andhra women spinning at an exhibition? Who would not be interested in spinning if he could spin like them. The same applies in the case of the Gita. You will like it if you realize its worth.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 10023. Courtesy: Sharda G. Chokhawala

172. LETTER TO HARI-ICHCHHA DESAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 10, 1930

CHI. HARI-ICHCHHA.

I have your letter. My congratulations to Chandan. You also should give your name for the competition. If you get the prize, you may use the money for helping somebody. Those who do not require any incentive such as a competition provides, should none the less join one for the sake of other people. My blessings to Chandan, Tara and Vasant.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7466

173. LETTER TO KAPILRAI MEHTA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 10, 1930

CHI. KAPIL,

They got your letter at Vile Parle. Although one’s home may be near, one should not go there for the sake of the comforts one may get there or for the love of one’s relations. But there can be no objection to a worker going to his home to get proper nursing during illness, with the willing consent of his co-workers and in order to lessen the burden on them. It depends on one’s attitude. You should take care of your health and improve it. How can you let it become delicate at this young age? Sun-bath, pranayam, shavasan and eating less help considerably in asthma.

Kakasaheb is quite well. He sends his blessings.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3975

174. LETTER TO ANASUYABEHN SARABHAI

Y. M.,
October 10, 1930

CHI. ANASUYABEHN,

I have your letter. I got the tomatoes, lemons and papayas sent by you and Nirmalabehn. It irks me that you should spend the least bit of time or money on such things. You have surely gone beyond the stage where you needed to give outward expression to your love.
One may incur such expense if it is necessary—here it is not. We both keep good health. The exhibition seems to have gone off very well. I have also received the booklet containing quotations about swadeshi.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: G. N. 11555

1 Deep breathing
2 Lying still on one’s back
175. LETTER TO MANGALA S. PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 10, 1930

CHI. MANGALA,

Your handwriting is gradually improving. I can see from your letters that you are trying. Learn well by heart the chapters of the Gita. Be particular about the pronunciation. Is Pushpa learning anything by heart?

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C. W. 11090. Courtesy: Pushpa Naik

176. LETTER TO NARAYAN MORESHWAR KHARE

October 11, 1930

CHI. PANDITJI,

I have your letter. I hope your fever has completely left you. I approve of your idea of reading the Ramayana among the village people and cultivating contacts with them by that means. But do not let the opportunity for contacts with them be your motive for reading the Ramayana. If you read the Ramayana among them, it should be only in order that they may learn wisdom. If you incidentally get an opportunity of coming into contact with the villagers, that should of course be welcome. That is, you should start reading the Ramayana with the intention of keeping up the practice. Or you may read it occasionally as a means of cultivating contact with the people, as you do many other things for the same purpose; that would, then, be a different thing. Understand the distinction between the two points of view. I don’t think I shall be able to write the reminiscences of Gokhale. My preoccupation with spinning will let me do nothing else.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 240. Courtesy: Lakshmibai Khare
177. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 11, 1930

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I have your letter. The postcard addressed to you at Patna does not seem to have reached you, for I had asked you in it to send me a wire but I did not get any. I now learn from the letter that your mother-in-law has passed away and that both Jayaparakash and you have been a good deal shaken. Why should we ever grieve over death, which no one can escape? Moreover, the lady was quite ill. She has been released from her suffering. Hence, those whom she has left behind suffer because of their selfishness. Your duty now is to see that you get strong quickly. I don’t think your disease has yet left you. For some time, you may also write directly to me. This in addition to the letters which you should continue to send through the Ashram. May God grant patience in suffering to you all. I keep good health. The weight is 104. I think that is quite good.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3372

178. LETTER TO MOTIBEHN

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 11, 1930

CHI. MOTIBEHN,

At last you have written to me, after having kept me without a letter for a long time. Treat all children who are put under your care as your own. If you learn by heart some chapters of the Gita, you will find that you feel more peaceful in mind. If not more, learn only one verse at a time. Try to memorize a verse after you have understood its meaning and learn to pronounce each word in it correctly. Vithal, Mahavir and some others can do it.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3746
179. LETTER TO MAHAVIR GIRI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 11, 1930

CHI. MAHAVIR,

I got your letter. Who else is there with you in Siddhapur? Wherever you go, write to me regularly and give me all news, whether important or unimportant.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6219

180. LETTER TO VITHALDAS JERAJANI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 11, 1930

BHAI VITHALDAS,

I have received your letter, along with the figures sent by you. I know that stocks of khadi are again accumulating. Do not lose heart. According to me, the flood has not reached full tide yet. If we have faith, it is bound to do so.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9774

181. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

Y. M.,
October 11, 1930

CHI. KANTA,

I have your letter. You are greedy. It is of course good to be greedy when you are young. But while being greedy one should also exercise restraint. Hence, of all the things you may wish to learn you should first learn what will be more useful for service. Another restraint is that whatever you learn you must do thoroughly and not leave half way. Do learn sewing. But do not be hasty. One reason why you do not enjoy weaving is that you do not yet know it well. In the beginning all efforts at learning seem uninteresting. Many people do not like arithmetic because they find it difficult to learn. But those who know it can enjoy it as much as they would a novel. Another reason is that you do not still have enough love for the poor. How can a person who realizes that every yard of khadi that he produces will help to cover the back of a poor man fail to take pleasure in producing it? A mother does with joy for her child and God for his bhakta what other people would find a boring task. The truth is that we do not as yet feel real love of service. A servant should find equal pleasure in all forms of service. All service given sincerely is of equal worth. Ponder over the verse “He who offers me with devotion a leaf, a flower, or fruit or water. . .” Ask me if you still do not understand.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
Write to Brother and give him my blessings and tell him that the books sent by him have been received. Of course you both have Kakasaheb’s blessings.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: Chandrakanta Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

182. LETTER TO RAMABEHN JOSHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 12, 1930

CHI. RAMABEHN,

I have your letter. I received it after a long interval. But it is a perfect one. I believe that the strength which women possess is given them by God. Hence they are bound to succeed in whatever they undertake. It is very good indeed that Hamidabehn is with you. Though a girl, she strikes me as a mature and saintly woman. Ba, it seems, is doing some good running about. I see that all the women will have to shoulder a still heavier responsibility than they are doing. But let us bear constantly in mind those three verses from Chapters IX and X, which we have recently learnt to recite, and remain unconcerned.

1 Bhagavad Gita, IX, 26

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5325

183. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI PANDYA

YERAVDA MANDIR,

October 12, 1930

CHI. BHAGWANJI,

The Ashram is for the men of ordinary category. It cannot be said that the Ashram is curt towards Girirajji if he has reached the height you regard him to have reached, but that his great soul can no more be accommodated there. The decision taken by Narandas is spiritual. The spiritual point of view is to act as guided by whatever ideals we have accepted for the Ashram. Personally I think Giriraj has fallen into delusion. I would not engage myself or involve another in the regimen undertaken by us if it is not going to help us realize the atman. It is possible that God might live in the house of a scavenger and He may not be found in that of a Vedantin. Our action should accord with our lofty sentiments. Giriraj is a noble person, he is humble too; he will therefore come round after his ramblings. The credit will go to the Ashram even if we were to learn from him in case he proves our way to be wrong. Please remain calm.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 326. Courtesy: Bhagwanji Purushottam Pandya

---

1 Of Bhagavad Gita
CHI. KASHINATH,

I have your letter. There is not the slightest reason to be grieved by the death of friends. None ever dies before his time. The notion of untimely death is a delusion. Even the death of a day-old baby is not an untimely one. It only means that the actions to be performed through that body had been performed. We feel pained by death only because of our ignorance and selfishness. We feel agitated over the death of friends or others because of our ignorance of the soul’s attributes and because we do not wish ourselves to die. Yes, we owe a duty to the widows. If they come and can observe the rules, in my view at any rate there should be no objection to admitting them. However, as the responsibility lies on Narandas and Gangabehn, you should discuss the matter with them. Show this letter to them.

Though Kalavati is indeed in a hard plight, she will be fully tried and the strength of her mind tested. I am writing to her. I have received the Hindi translation of Kumarappa’s speech. Mahavir Prasad’s zeal is beyond praise. He has already started working for the third edition of the Gita.

You ought to get over your depression now. If any depressing thoughts or impure desires arise in your mind, note them every time and drive them out. Do not let your mind dwell on them; do not even debate within your mind how they occurred, but keep the mind engaged in good thoughts. The golden means of doing which is that the mind, too, should be kept fully occupied in some external activity, so that it may have no time at all to wander.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 5254
185. LETTER TO MAHALAKSHMI MADHAVJI THAKKAR

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 12, 1930

CHI. MAHALAKSHMI,

I have your letter. We can easily get rid of any habit when we begin to dislike it. And a woman with your strong resolve should experience no difficulty at all in doing so. You are doing well in clinging to the diet which you have adopted. As we observe others becoming more indifferent towards or losing faith in the programme of picketing liquor-booths, etc., we should become more vigilant ourselves and let our faith shine more brightly. That is bound to produce an effect.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6800

186. LETTER TO ROHINI KANAIYALAL DESAI

YERAVDA MANDIR
October 12, 1930

CHI. ROHINI,

I have your beautiful letter. If Hamida learns Gujarati well, surely the credit will go to you. It is because picketing of liquor-booths is a difficult job that it has been entrusted to women. It requires the utmost purity of character and the deepest faith. Women possess both in greater measure than men.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2653
187. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 12, 1930

CHI. VASUMATI,

You need not spare me the trouble of reading a letter. A father is always eager to get a letter from his son or daughter. For about ten or fifteen days, I lived only on, vegetables, milk and curds; that is, I had stopped eating even raisins and dates. I have started taking these again from today. After some time, I will go back to vegetables. In that way I shall discover what suits me best. If I can do with vegetables, that will save money too. But I will not persist [too long in the experiment]. The present weight of 104 lb. is quite good. How is your health?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9290

188. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIIDYA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 12, 1930

CHI. GANGABEHN,

I have your letter. You should certainly write to me and let me know your thoughts on Manibehn’s departure, as also all that you think about other matters. Your last letter was all right. Let the world see us as we are. We should especially show ourselves as we are to those whom we love. No one can immediately put into practice his or her ideals. But everyone can strive to do so. This you do everyday. Hence the end is bound to be good.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

_Bapuna Patro—6: G. S. Gangabehne_, p. 44; also C.W. 8761. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya
189. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 12, 1930

CHI. PREMA,

Both the interpretations are good. The one suggested by Nathji, however, is likely to be more authoritative.

It is our good fortune that you have recovered your peace of mind.

Enter Sarojinidevi’s heart. She needs the warmth of human sympathy. Try to find some free time for such tasks. You will have to undertake much more responsible tasks in future.

Are you now free from worry about your health? Do you feel all right? What do you eat?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10238; also C.W. 6686. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

190. LETTER TO DURGA GIRI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 12, 1930

CHI. DURGA,

Got your letter. I am never late in replying. In fact, you don’t write and therefore feel that my letter reaches you late. If the postscript to your letter is in Satyadevi’s hand, her handwriting is as good as yours. Therefore she should surpass you in a short while.¹

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Hindi]

Bapuki Virat Vatsalata, p. 31

¹ The original was in Gujarati.
191. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

[October 13, 1930]

CHI. MIRA,

I hope you have got the straying letters. I am sure they have not been intercepted, but have been delayed in transit from place to place.

It is evident, my ‘scolding’ as you call it, was well deserved, for you have returned in a dilapidated condition. On the top of that, you had a bad accident. Now you would be as good as your word and take full rest. I was much relieved to understand that you had been visiting the Sardar. That showed that you were well enough to travel.

I am still at the Gandiv wheel, and my rapture continues, if anything it has increased. I am spinning scientifically now, i.e., with a yard measure underneath the track of the yarn as it is drawn. I can draw 8 threads in one minute and I pull at least two feet to each draw. This means 240 rounds or 300 yards per hour. But of course, I do nothing of the sort in an hour but that is not because of any defect in the Gandiv. The less output is due to breakages and consequent waste of time. But since adopting the method of concentration, breakages have very considerably reduced. I therefore often reach 200 yards per hour which for me is very good. You will publish nothing just yet of my views about the Gandiv. I want the report of those who may try at the Ashram. Most of all I want your report, if you have the leisure and the inclination to give it a trial. I know that you all have not the time that I have for these experiments. You will therefore do whatever is possible and if you think it necessary. I, having nothing else to do, may easily exaggerate the merits of a thing which I may have disregarded before as I did and which now gives comparative satisfaction.

1 The 100th hymn, referred to in the postscript, was translated on this date; Vide “Ashram Bhajanavali”, 15-12-1930. The letter however bears the date “12-10-1930” in Mirabehn’s handwriting.
For the past two days I have gone back to raisins and dates just to see if the cold I have had anything to do with the vegetables. Whether it is a coincidence or what, it is as good as gone today. In any event health is quite good. Weight 104.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

Today I have finished the 100th hymn. Only two remain to be translated of the Hindustani hymns. This means I am nearly half through with this work.

From the original: C.W. 5415. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9649

192. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

October 13, 1930

CHI. RAMDAS,

As long as you are free, I must get a letter from you every week. How is your health? Do you digest food properly? Do you still take medicine? What work have you taken up? How is Nimu? And Sumitra? What happened about the khadi implements centre? The real test will be now. But there is nothing which we did not expect.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6860

193. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

October 13, 1930

CHI. PRABHUDAS,

I have your letter. Inspire Dhiru and Rambhau to write to me. Walk slowly. Do not take upon yourself much work. I liked your having gone away from Almora. Do not take upon yourself any big responsibility. Teach those who come. Remain satisfied with what the three of you can do. Who are the persons now in Almora whom I know?

Is Mrs. Cook there? Where is Mohan Joshi? Has Shantilal recovered completely? What do you do about milk there? What is the expense incurred? Write to me regularly. For the time being, Kakasaheb has suggested Savyasachi as the name for your spinning-wheel and it seems to be good. The only fault perhaps may be that it is a Sanskrit word. There is no harm if you stop thinking about yourself. ‘Enjoy today, who has seen tomorrow’.

There is food for Abha, too, in this.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32938

194. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

October 9/14, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS,

Your packet was given to me late last evening. I will certainly inquire why you got the post late. But that will often happen and you should not, therefore, worry if you do not get the post on the day expected. You should, however, be regular in posting the letters at your end.

Both of us were weighed today. We are weighed every Thursday. Kakasaheb’s weight is between 115 and 116, which means that there is some improvement. My weight came to 104. I have discontinued taking enema since four days ago. I eat tandalja and that has had a beneficial effect. I have not given up ratalu altogether. I intend to take it twice or thrice in a week. On the other days I will eat patakalu or some other vegetable. I still continue tomatoes. So far, I have not felt the need for fruits. If the weight remains steady, I intend to continue as I am doing. My promise that I will take care of my health in whatever experiments I make should reassure all of you.

I do not feel that your letters are too long. I should certainly like to see that the burden on you does not increase. Your work is to see the letters which I write, to distribute them to the addressees and to write to me. I think your having to send letters written by others is an extra duty. It is so because really speaking it is not right for me to express opinions from here. It is a mere accident that we are able to send and receive letters.

I got Radha’s long reply. She writes in it about . . . ¹ having stolen something and other such matters. She says that Keshu was upset when he knew about the thing. What are the facts? Read the letter I shall write to . . . ².

I have nothing to say about your decision regarding Giriraj. I think it is perfectly correct. You alone know all the facts. I hope to know by and by what has been done about the children. What can one say about Amidas? His courage inspires nothing but respect. I feel unhappy in so far as I was responsible for his vow of not taking milk.

Now that his father is there, I don’t worry any more about him. We should do all we can to look after him. It is God who will protect him.

I suppose Bhagwanji will accept responsibility for Manibehn’s expenses. I saw Pyarelal. No harm has been done to his health. It is weak, though. I believe I shall now be able to see him frequently. He gets bread and milk at present.

I didn’t see any letter from Chitalia. I don’t remember at the moment the sum which he requires as help. I think I did ask someone to note it. His letter is likely to be in one of the files. Shivabhai and Chhaganlal will probably know about it. Perhaps Raojibhai, too, may know. Chitalia himself will be able to tell you. Has he asked for Rs. 1,500 for the building? Ascertain the position and do what you think best. If necessary, you may write to me again about the matter. Read the letter I have written to him.

October 13, 1930

I read the new ordinance. You, too, will have to think about the matter. I myself wish to say nothing from here. Discuss the matter with the person who is the leader there and go on doing what you think right. I am not surprised by the ordinance. I did expect some such measure.

¹ The names have been omitted.
² ibid
In this series, I have dealt cursorily with the importance of vows, but it is perhaps necessary to consider at some length their bearing on a godly life. Now that I have discussed all our vows except that of swadeshi, let us consider the necessity of vows. There is a powerful school of thinkers who concede the propriety of observing certain rules but do not acknowledge the necessity of vows. They go even so far as to suggest that vows are a sign of weakness and may even be harmful. Again they say that, if a rule is subsequently discovered to be inconvenient or sinful, to adhere to it after such discovery would be positively wrong. They say: “It is a good thing to abstain from liquor, but what harm is there in taking it occasionally, say on medical grounds? A pledge of total abstinence would be a needless handicap; and as with liquor, so with other things. Why may we not even speak an untruth for a good end?” This argument does not convince me. A vow means unflinching determination, and helps us against temptations. Determination is worth nothing if it bends before discomfort. The universal experience of humanity supports the view that progress is impossible without inflexible determination. There cannot be a vow to commit a sin. Such a vow represents a wicked nature. In the case of a vow first thought to be meritorious but later found to be sinful, there arises a clear necessity to give it up. But no one takes, or ought to take, vows about dubious matters. Vows can be taken only on points of universally recognized principles, which, however, we do not habitually act upon. The possibility of sin in such a case is more or less imaginary. A devotee of Truth cannot stop to consider if someone will not be injured by his telling the truth, for he believes that truth can never do harm. So also about total abstinence. The abstainer will either make an exception as regards medicine, or will be prepared to risk his life in fulfilment of his full vow. What does it matter if we happen to lose our lives through a pledge of total abstinence? There can be no guarantee that our lives will be prolonged by liquor, and even if life is thus prolonged for a moment, it may be ended the very next through some other agency. On the other hand, the example of a man who gives up his life rather than his pledge is likely to wean drunkards from liquor and thus become a great power for good in the world. Only they can hope some time to see God who have nobly determined to bear witness to the faith that is in them even at the cost of life itself.

Taking vows is not a sign of weakness but of strength. To do at any cost what one ought to do constitutes a vow. It becomes a bulwark of strength. It makes no difference whether such a resolve is called a vow or known by some other name. A man, who says that he will do something “as far as possible” betrays either his pride or his weakness, though he himself may attribute it to his humility. There is, in fact, not a trace of humility in such an attitude of mind. I have noticed in my own case, as well as in that of others, that the limitation “as far as possible” provides a fatal loophole. To do something “as far as possible” is to succumb to the very first temptation. There is no sense in saying that we will observe truth “as far as possible”. Even as no businessman will look at a note in which a man promises to pay a certain amount on a certain date “as far as possible”, so will God refuse to accept a promissory note drawn by a man who will observe truth “as far as possible”.

God is the very image of the vow. God would cease to be God if He swerved from His own laws even by a hair’s breadth. The sun is a great keeper of observances; hence the possibility of measuring time and publishing almanacs. He has created in us the faith that he always rises and will for ever continue to rise, and thereby given us a sense of security. All business depends upon men fulfilling their promises. There could be no commerce if merchants did not regard themselves as bound by their word to one another. We thus see that keeping a vow is a universal practice. Are such promises less necessary in character building or self-realization? We should, therefore, never doubt the necessity of vows for the purpose of self-purification and self-realization.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

About the Gandiv spinning-wheel and about my diet you will get some news in my letter to Mirabehn.

There are 63 letters today.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U/I
DEAR FRIEND,

I see your name among the senders of the telegram of birthday greetings from London. I send my thanks to you and the other friends through you, as I do not know the Secretary’s address.

I hope there is no after effect left of the wretched accident you had near Madras.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

196. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 15, 1930

BHAI GHANSHYAMDASJI,

I have your letter. Mirabehn too had made some reference.

No one is perfect in this world. Our duty is to rid ourselves of the imperfections and that is what human effort is for. Despair has no place as long as we put in our own efforts. In spiritual matters we need infinitely greater courage than what we need in worldly matters. One should never give up self-confidence. Faith can make everything possible.

I too hold that Pujya Malaviyaji will not fall ill. In fact, I believe that he will have true rest and peace in the jail. He very much needed both for many years. God has thus granted him both.

2 Madan Mohan Malaviya was arrested a second time on August 27 while attending the meeting of the Congress Working Committee. He was sentenced to six months’ simple imprisonment.
Give an account of your health in the next letter.
I hope you will have no apprehension if khadi accumulates. Are you making an experiment in regard to the dairy?

Yours,

MOHANDAS

From Hindi: C.W. 6187. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

197. LETTER TO ANAND T. HINGORANI

Y. M.,
October 16, 1930

MY DEAR ANAND,

The authorities have given me your greetings wire. it shows that Vidya is now with you. I am glad. I hope she is keeping well.

Love to you both.

BAPU

[PS.]

I hope you got my previous letter.

From a microfilm. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

198. LETTER TO LILAVATI

October 16, 1930

CHI. LILAVATI,

I have your letter. I was glad to know that you have remained calm. What was the cause of your fasting for three days? Don’t forget that you are only a child. A child should not take upon itself the burden of the whole world. Really speaking, all of us are children. There is only one grown up being, God. He shoulders the burden of all. Why, then, need we worry? All that we should do is to serve Him as His slaves.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9317
199. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI PANDYA

October 16, 1930

CHI. BHAGWANJI,

I have your letter. Your intentions are no doubt pure but one should never be content with one’s purity of motive[alone]. The necessity of knowledge has been accepted for the reason that one may not commit an error in spite of a pure motive. This also you should know for certain that as you achieve purity the Ashram too becomes pure to that extent. The purity of the Ashram is not different from that of any Ashramite. As far as the Ashram goes, there is no one who can surpass Narandas in the matter of rendering help in spiritual difficulties. Totaramji can also help.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 327. Courtesy: Bhagwanji Purushottam Pandya

200. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

Thursday evening [October 16, 1930]¹

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got the letters sent by you. I write this letter specially regarding Amidas. It will, therefore, be immediately cleared. Will Amidas agree to take raw eggs? There are two kinds of eggs, one to which exception may be taken and the other unexceptionable. The former are those which ultimately produce chicken, and the unexceptionable are those which produce no life. Hens lay such eggs without their having been inseminated by cocks. This is a well known fact. Parnerkar will probably know about it. Such eggs are available in the market. Mostly Europeans look after the production of such eggs. There is a farm for this purpose near Miraj. You will find some correspondence on this subject in my file. You need not, however, search for it. Many Parsis in Ahmedabad will be able to give you information about where such eggs are available. Personally I believe that eggs of this kind are less objectionable than milk. In eating them, we do not deprive any creature of its food, as we do by taking milk.

¹ As in the printed source

If Amidas agrees, obtain such eggs immediately. They are to be used in this manner. Break an unfertilised egg, mix its contents with eight ounces of water and keep the mixture in a bottle. Give him an ounce of this mixture every hour. He will soon gain strength. The mixture will completely serve the purpose of milk. I can say that Manu’s life was saved by this mixture. Such eggs are a hundred times better than cod-liver oil. Tell Amidas that if there is any sin in acting upon this advice, I take it upon myself. I have not publicly advocated the use of such eggs because, when self-indulgence is on the increase and all kinds of medicines are being consumed without hesitation, I did not think it proper to add one more to the list. Amidas’s case is quite different. I hope Parnerkar has recovered.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

[PS.]
Please reply to this soon.

201. LETTER TO SUSHILA GANDHI

[Before October 17, 1930]¹

CHI. SUSHILA,

This time your letter gave detailed information. If Sita is given enough fruit to eat, she need have no vegetables at all. For the present, I think fresh milk, fruit and curds, which should not be sour, will be all right for her. If her teeth are strong enough, she may be allowed to chew a few hard biscuits or pieces of _khakhara_ during the day. She should learn to chew properly what she eats. Madhavjibhai’s two children are being brought up on this diet, and they have radiant health. Have you consulted a doctor for your ears? I think Manilal informed me that you intended to consult somebody. If you once get them examined by a doctor whom you know and understand the nature of the trouble, you will stop worrying. Go on writing to me regularly. I have forgotten the name of that friend of mine—the lady who had become very friendly with me at the time of your wedding. Give my blessings to all.

¹ From the reference to the forgotten friend, it appears this was written before the letter to the addressee dated October 17, 1930.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4781

202. LETTER TO PATRICK QUINN

October 17, 1930

DEAR MR. QUINN,

The accompanying is a letter about a friend who is on his death-bed at the Ashram. If necessary will you please refer to Major Martin and post the letter immediately. It may then reach even tomorrow morning and who knows may be instrumental in saving a life!

Have you sent the Social Reformer to Sardar Vallabhbhai? Here is a letter for him to see regarding a common sick friend. And have you referred his daughter’s letter to him?

If you ordered the dates yesterday, they have not yet been delivered to me.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

N.B.

The Ashram people have been complaining for the past two weeks that they get the post two or three days late.

203. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 17, 1930

CHI. SHARDA,

Your letter. But how did you fall ill? Was there any mistake about your diet? As far as your asthma is concerned you must treat it so ruthlessly that it does not visit you again. You will succeed if you are firm. Do you take sun-bath? Do you massage your chest? Do you keep your bowels clean? After the morning prayers you must do deep-breathing on an empty stomach. This would clear the lungs. We must take deep breaths so that the oxygen may clear our lungs. You must understand this point from Chimanlal.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9892. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

204. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 17, 1930

CHI. CHHAGANLAL (JOSHI),

I have your two letters. It is not likely now that you will get this. Don’t take your worries with you to the jail. We have learnt from the Gita that God takes upon Himself our cares. Remember, moreover, that when our thoughts are waiting for an opportunity to show themselves in action, they become more powerful than action. Those, therefore, who are ever ready for work, their thoughts, too, bear fruit. You should not mind if you get rest and the others outside are tested.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5495
205. LETTER TO GOKIBEHN

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 17, 1930

DEAR SISTER,

I was very glad to have your letter. Death is a highway which all of us must tread, whether we wish or no. And though countless travellers tread it, it ever seems deserted. Hence this is also the path of supreme peace. He who is afraid to take it, feels agitated; he who remains fearless enjoys the bliss of peace.

Jai Shrikrishna from
MOHANDAS

SMT. GOKIBEHN

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9811

206. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 17, 1930

CHI. VASUMATI,

I have your letter. I have never believed anything against Dahibehn. I have seen no sign of impurity in her conduct or in her eyes. I think she has done well in refusing to leave the place. I had a letter from Raojibhai.

The time seems to have come now for the women to shoulder a heavy responsibility. God will help them to do so.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9291
207. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

October 17, 1930

CHI. KUSUM (DESAI),

I have your letter. I shall expect letters from you from time to time. For the present, you should write regularly. Do not get disheartened. I saw Pyarelal again. I shall see him once more. He has no complaint now. I read in the papers about the Government having taken possession of the Sevashram hospitals too.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1807

208. LETTER TO RATILAL SHETH

YERAVDA MANDIR,

October 17, 1930

BHAI RATILAL,

I have your letter. You may send me the valkal¹. In the past also someone had sent a garment like that from Africa. I think it was given away to some person at his request.

I hope all your difficulties in your business are over. Vandemataram to Narbheram and other friends.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7165

¹ Garment made from tree bark
209. LETTER TO PUNJABHAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 17, 1930

CHI. PUNJABHAI,

I have your letter. I am sure you will not be left free for many days. When you are back in jail, try not to fall ill. If you have discovered the cause of your illness, remove it.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4017

210. LETTER TO SUSHILA GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 17, 1930

CHI. SUSHILA,

I got your letter. I must apologize to Bharati. She can certainly ask what sort of a friend I must be if, after having been such a friend, I forget even her name! But won’t she show regard for the infirmities of old age and forgive me? If she doesn’t mind, ask her to write to me.
Personally I believe that the only remedy for your ear complaint is better general health. Since you also believe so, you should take Kuhne-baths and sun-baths as I have advised you to do. You should also do sufficient exercise. You should go out for a walk in the early morning. What is the condition of Tara’s head? I was pleased to see Nanabhai’s handwriting. Tara should send my blessings to them both.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Did Manilal lose 40 lb.? It could not be. Inquire again.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4773
211. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 17, 1930

CHI. RAMDAS,

I got your letter. Why pine over what you do not get? Formerly, prisoners were not allowed to receive any visitors. Now they have relaxed the rule somewhat. For the present, therefore, I receive visitors. Is it not our principle that once we are in prison, we must not mind if we are not permitted to receive visitors? Rather, that is a matter of honour for a prisoner. If we think this way, we would not feel hurt. Does Sumitra still suffer from constipation? She must get over it. I have already asked you concerning Nimu. Now that you have fallen in love with reading, do not leave it off. Read a little of whatever you like, even if you get only ten minutes for it. When you go again, try to improve your arithmetic.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarat; original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy : Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

212. LETTER TO DURGA GIRI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 17, 1930

CHI. DURGA,

I am not satisfied with your letter so far. Tell me your daily routine. When you start writing regularly, you may merit a different adjective. Your handwriting is good this time. I was glad to see Maitri’s handwriting at the end of your letter. I shall await her full letter.¹

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Hindi]

Bapuki Virat Vatsalata, p. 32

¹ The original was in Gujarati.
213. LETTER TO KALAVATI TRIVEDI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 17, 1930

CHI. KALAVATI,

I have your letter after a long time. We should form the habit of being indifferent to what pleases or does not. Wherever we may have to stay by way of duty should be agreeable to us. What is like or dislike to one desirous of serving! Do not fear people’s talk. Stick to your decision. That woman alone who does not waver from her resolve even at the gallows truly observes dharma.

Write to me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 5256

214. LETTER TO RADHABEHN GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 18, 1930

CHI. RADHIKA,

I have your letter. In your previous letter I saw no impropriety. You had only poured out in it the thoughts which agitated your mind and you had a right to do so.

Humility cannot be learnt through formal training, but it grows of itself as one cultivates the spirit of non-violence. Outward humility of behaviour, which we find in royal families, can be learnt in a formal manner. It is, however, not true humility, but is only a part of cultured manners. In the humility which I advise, one has to forget the sense of ‘I’ and become a mere cipher. Can that be learnt through any lessons? But one who has realized the body’s transitoriness and has in some measure become aware of the self soon becomes humble. What fine humility would it be on your part if, even though I should speak in anger to you, you merely listened with lowered eyes like those of a poor cow and did not even feel angry with me? Such humility comes... only when you have learnt true self-respect. If you have not understood my meaning, ask me again and again. I shall not get tired of explaining it. Have you completely recovered now?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 8687. Courtesy: Radhabehn Chaudhri

215. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 18, 1930

CHI. PREMA,

I have your letter. Describe to me your experience in Bombay. You are not well advised in refusing to get your throat examined by a doctor. A disease must be nipped in the bud. A stitch in time saves nine. This saying is completely true.

I interpret image-worship in two senses. In one form of image-worship, the person who contemplates the image becomes absorbed in the contemplation of the qualities for which it stands. This is image-worship in its wholesome form. In the other form of it, the person who contemplates the image does not think about the qualities but looks upon the image itself as the primary thing. This is idolatry and is an evil.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10239; also C.W. 6687. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak
216. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 18, 1930

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I got your wire, but very late. Did you get my letter afterwards? Both of you must have recovered your peace of mind now. I see from your wire that now your health at any rate is all right. The weakness must disappear. Do you go out for a walk daily? What does Jayaprakash intend to do?

My health is good. I have again started eating dates and raisins.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3373

217. LETTER TO MAHALAKSHMI MADHAVJI THAKKAR

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 18, 1930

CHI. MAHALAKSHMI,

I got your letter. From others’ letters I see that you had fever. How is that? I hope no one there will fall ill. The time for real work seems to be approaching now. Even when working the hardest, we should never feel worried within. It is God who does everything and we are only instruments in His hands. If this truth sinks into our heart, we shall never feel worried.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6801
DEAR SISTER,

God is testing you in every way and so far you have emerged successful. Why should we grieve when Tarini died discharging his duty? Because Tarini was performing much service we may grieve out of selfishness, but from an unselfish point of view Tarini’s death was preferable. Such a frail body caused his soul much pain. We may believe for certain that a dutiful soul like his is bound to be reincarnated and serve even more.

I have received Satis Babu’s translation. I am tempted to brush up my Bengali in order to understand it well but the thought of charkha deters me. See the annotation on the tenth shloka for “Better is knowledge than practice.” The meaning will then be clear. But if you have doubts still, write to me. How are Charu and Arun? Give my love to all brothers and sisters.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1672

---

1 Presumably of Anasaktiyoga; vide “Letter to Hemprabha Das Gupta”, 14-12-1930.

2 Of Bhagavad Gita, Chapter XII, which reads: “If thou art also unequal to this method of constant practice, concentrate on service for Me; even thus serving Me thou shalt attain perfection.”

3 Bhagavad Gita, XII. 12
219. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

CHI. MIRA,

October 19, 1930

I have your letter from Bombay.

I was glad to learn that you were feeling better. You must not let the mind get into the state described by you. If you work with detachment, you will refuse to be rushed and you will refuse to let anything get on your nerves. Having put one’s whole heart into a thing entrusted or undertaken, one can leave the result to God. Then there can be no rush and no worry. You know the story of King Janak. He was Duty personified. His capital was in flames. He knew it. But some busybody reported it to him. His answer was, “What care I whether my capital is reduced to ashes or remains intact!” He had done all he could to save it. His going to the scene of operations and fussing would have distracted the attention of the fire-brigade and others and made matters worse. He was but an agent of providence. As such he had done his part and was therefore ‘quits’ and at ease. So may, must, we be, if we have done our best, whether our work flourishes or perishes.

The Gandiv still gives me joy and satisfaction. Nothing has yet broken down. Whereas I took five hours before, I now finish well within 3 hours. The afternoon is now free for other work except for the takli. So on your travels you may take the Gandiv if it gives you as much satisfaction as it gives to me. The cost of the pattern that I have is one rupee including the spindle and a box scooped in the platform and an incredibly simple device for keeping the spindle on one side of the platform. For price and simplicity this wheel has no match. I have discarded the bamboo holders and the wretched glass cylinders. I think I told you this. And it works without any foreign sound at all.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5416. Courtesy: Mirabehn
220. LETTER TO RAMABEHN JOSHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 19, 1930

CHI. RAMABEHN.

I hope you have not been overcome with fear. Chhaganlal will have some peace now and the people will be tested. For the women, too, the time of testing is approaching. My faith is becoming stronger. We should become all the more resolute and vigilant, and be ever filled with joy in our hearts.

You should write to me more regularly now. God will assuredly bless us.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Whenever there is further news about Dhiru and Vimu, let me have it. Where is Kevalram? And Nirmala? Ask them to write to me.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5326

221. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 19, 1930

CHI. RAIHANA.

You seem to be a very clever girl. After writing two or three letters in Gujarati, the poor girl now writes to me in Urdu! But how is it love which asks for a return? All the same, I will do my duty and make the return. I found no difficulty in reading the letter since you have written it in such a clear and legible hand and the words you have chosen are so simple. Now onwards you may write half your letter in Urdu. It will help me since it will brush up my Urdu, and I may even write to you in Urdu provided all of you do not laugh at me among yourselves. If I do that, will you not then consider it a full return?
And you are as jealous as you are cunning, and jealous of no other than Father. But no matter; now that he is becoming younger day after day, he will ask you to give him an account of your work. I could not decipher one or two words in your letter. I have kept the letter with me, and I will read it again and decipher those words; at any rate I will try to do so. The letter paper is full now, and there is no space to apply a third adjective to you. About that some other time.

Khuda Hafiz.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9622

222. LETTER TO KASUMBA GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 19, 1930

CHI. KASUMBA,

I see that there is still no harmony between Jaisukhlal and you. Having come to know you better, I don’t feel inclined to lay the blame on you. It is only that you two have different natures and, therefore, cannot live in harmony with each other. In these circumstances, it is best that you should now live apart from each other. God has blessed you with a large family. You ought not to feel unhappy that you have no son. We make no difference between a son and a daughter. A daughter is the same to us as a son. Moreover, all the girls are wise. You should, therefore, live perfectly contented. Jaisukhlal will meet your expenses. Be devoted to each other, though living apart. Don’t feel unhappy in any way. Neither of you is following an improper path. When you can forget yourself and feel one with Jaisukhlal, you may certainly go back and live with him. If you encourage the girls to go and live in the Ashram, they will be happier in life.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.] Write to me a full letter.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U /III
223. LETTER TO KASHINATH TRIVEDI

Y. M.,

October 19, 1930

CHI. KASHINATH,

I have your letter. I had also received the previous one. I have already written separately to Kalavati. I am now writing to Benarsidas. You did well to inform me. Behn Shanta must have fully recovered now. She requires hip-baths and friction-baths. Consults Kuhne’s book for a description of both. It is the experience of women that friction-bath brings quick and significant benefit. You seem to have had a fair measure of success in stopping funeral feasts. If pure-minded people make a sustained effort they are bound to succeed sooner or later. The difficulties experienced in sending Kalavati home should have been anticipated. That is what the world has come to. When the times are changing people of older generation are bound to feel some of the things of the new age irksome. If the new age bears with their displeasure while firmly going its way, it will prevail without much noise.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 5290

2 Benarsidas Chaturvedi, who had lost his wife
3 Addressee’s younger sister, residing in the Ashram at this time
4 Dr. Louis Kuhne
224. LETTER TO BANARASIDAS CHATURVEDI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 19, 1930

BHAI BANARASIDAS,

Bhai Kashinath has given me the news of your wife’s death. A great calamity has befallen you. We have given up the fear of death, but we grieve out of selfishness. I understand you have children of tender age. But why grieve over that too? Such things do happen in the world. All such events are moments of trial to us. Only such an occasion can prove if all our assiduously acquired knowledge is truly assimilated. May God grant you peace.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2525

225. LETTER TO AJITENDU DE

October 20, 1930

DEAR FRIEND,

I have carefully gone through your letter. It is difficult to advise you without coming in personal contact with you. But generally I can say that if you hear the clean voice of conscience you should follow it at any cost. If you have the slightest doubt, you should obey your parents’ wishes.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

SIT. AJITENDU DE
8 HARI PAL’S LANE
BEADEN STR. P. O.
CALCUTTA

From a photostat: G. N. 10515
226. LETTER TO H.S.L. POLAK

October 20, 1930

MY DEAR HENRY,

I had your and Millie’s loving message. You are never absent from my mind. How is Leon?

My love to you all,

BHAI

PROPERTY OF H.S.L. POLAK
265 STRAND
LONDON, W.C.R.

From the original: Gandhi-Polak Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

227. LETTER TO BEHRAMJI KHAMBHATTA

YERAVDA MANDIR,

October 20, 1930

BHAISHRI KHAMBHATTA,

I felt happy on reading your letter. I keep good health. How is your health? I have no doubt at all that you two will always use your gifts in the service of noble causes. Do you intend to stay in Poona for the present?

To you both,

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6596
DEAR SISTER,

I was very glad to read your letter. I very well remember all that we talked about. I am pleased to see your name in the papers occasionally. I would have been surprised [only] if you did not work as much as you do. I had observed your capacity in our very first meeting.

Please write to me regularly.

How is Bhai Godrej’s health? How is his farm work getting along? Please convey my Vandemataram to him.

Blessings from

Mohanandas

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 114

229. TELEGRAM TO MOTILAL NEHRU

YERAVDA CENTRAL PRISON, POONA,
[On or before October 21, 1930]¹

PANDITJI NEHRU
MUSSOORIE
PRESS REPORTS HEALTH DISTURBING. PLEASE WIRE FULLY. SUGGEST ISSUING DAILY BULLETIN. LOVE.

Gandhi

Bombay Secret Abstracts, (34) 750, Pt. I, p. 269

¹ Younger sister of Ardeshir Godrej who had donated Rs. 100,000 for the cause of temperance and untouchability, and had in consequence lost his Government contracts.

² As a speaker at meetings on temperance and untouchability

³ This was forwarded by Major R. V. Martin to G. F. S. Collins, Secretary to the Government of Bombay, with the following note on October 21, 1930:

“Gandhi wishes to send the attached telegram to Motilal Nehru. Will you please let me know if there is any objection to its dispatch?”
230. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

October 16/21, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS.

I have your letter. The occasional delay in your getting my letters can’t be helped. “Make the best of today, for who knows what tomorrow will bring?” This is true of our present circumstances too. If the men in charge of the factory at Bardoli have not been arrested, what about the goods in factory? I read in newspapers that they, too, were confiscated.

It was a matter of surprise that the Ashram had remained free from malaria. At last it could remain so no longer. I think it can be kept free from it. In the malarial season, one should take care and see that one’s stomach is light. Starchy and other indigestible foods, like pulses, should be avoided. If those who have escaped malaria so far take care, they will be able to preserve their health. The water in the well should be disinfected with potassium permanganate or chlorine. I think these can also be added in the water fetched from the river. If a few drops of the solution are poured into the river water where it is stored, it will acquire a light rose colour. After a while, the colour will settle at the bottom. You should consult a doctor for more information about this. I will write a separate letter about Amidas,¹ which is likely to be posted only tomorrow. Inform me on what day you get it.

Inform Jamnalalji that I do not request the authorities to bring anyone here. I did not do that even for Kakasaheb. Jamnalalji or anybody else who wishes to come may do so by trying on their own or through Government’s kindness. I have been able to arrange that Pyarelal should see me from time to time. There is an element of selfishness in requesting to be provided with a companion and, therefore, I do not make such a request. What I should like is to be kept with all the others. But how can I expect such good fortune? Somebody who came to visit Kaka told him that Mathuradas, too, had made a similar request. I have already written to you about Giriraj. I don’t feel that your decision is wrong.

Write to Rajaji and tell him that generally I do not write to eminent leaders and, therefore, I will not write to him either. But I remember him every day.

Ask him to give me news about Lakshmi and Subbiah’s wife. What state of health has he brought with him?

October 19, 1930

I see Prabhavati’s name in your list of letters, but I don’t find her letter. I don’t think they have kept it back here. Either it must have been left out there or her name came to be included this time just because she writes every week. Anyway I had a wire from her giving me news about her health. She seems to be all right.

In Wardha they have been spinning on the takli very regularly. You must have read a description of their work in Balkrishna’s letter. Bhau’s speed is 132 rounds for half an hour. This is wonderful. You should find out how such speed can be acquired and publish a detailed description. My satisfaction in regard to the Gandiv spinning-wheel remains what it was; if anything, it has increased. Read my letters to Mirabehn and Ishwarlal Vimawala on the subject. The latter has written to me saying that he will send one more wheel to me too. Pay him for it and for the wheels which may be received in the Ashram. Send me your conclusions after you have tested the model. Also send me the figures of the count, strength and evenness of Kakasaheb’s yarn received there.

Read what I have written in my letter to Maganbhai about the spindle-bearer in use in Bardoli. My own experience is that it is superior to the type fitted to the spinning-wheel in use in the Ashram and in all other models. If this is true, we should fit our spinning-wheels with the same type of spindle-bearer as they use in Bardoli. If my judgment is wrong, I should be corrected. If anyone prefers the type being used in the Ashram and if he has had experience of that being used in Bardoli, he may write to me about this matter. It is my belief that even from the point of view of speed the Bardoli spindle-bearer would ultimately be found superior to the others. If I get the necessary facility, I will try to fit even the Gandiv spinning-wheel with that type.
I wrote to you last Friday about Amidas. You must have received the letter. I may even get your reply before this letter is posted. Send me a wire if you have not received that letter. I will then discuss the matter again.

October 20, 1930

Read my letter about Kanta. It seems she wants to go out for a few days at least. Think about the matter. From here, what I feel is that she may go for a few days wherever she likes. She is both truthful and brave. She will be able to look after herself. She will also keep any promise she makes. This is my own experience, however. You should do what you think best. Find out what she wishes.

Tuesday morning, Diwali,
October 21, 1930

My blessings to all the friends there. My Vandemataram and due regards to everyone. May we be filled with greater spirit of service during the next year, and become fitter instruments and more awake to our duty in that regard.

We make frequent use of the word ‘yajna’. We have raised spinning to the rank of a daily mahayajna. It is therefore necessary to think out the various implications of the term ‘yajna’. ‘Yajna’ means an act directed to the welfare of others, done without desiring any return for it, whether of a temporal or spiritual nature. ‘Act’ here must be taken in its widest sense, and includes thought and word, as well as deed. ‘Others’ embraces not only humanity, but all life. Therefore, and also from the standpoint of ahimsa, it is not a yajna to sacrifice lower animals even with a view to serving humanity. It does not matter that animal sacrifice is supposed to find a place in the Vedas. It is enough for us that such sacrifice cannot stand the fundamental tests of Truth and Non-violence. I readily admit my incompetence in Vedic scholarship. But the incompetence, so far as this subject is concerned, does not worry me because, even if the practice of animal sacrifice be proved to have been a feature of Vedic society, it can form no precedent for a votary of ahimsa.

From this definition of yajna it follows that a primary sacrifice must be an act which conduces the most to the welfare of the greatest number in the widest area, and which can be performed by the largest number of men and women with the least trouble. It will not, therefore, be a yajna, much less a mahayajna, to wish or to do ill to anyone else even in order to serve a so-called higher interest. And the Gita teaches, and experience testifies, that all action that cannot come under the category of yajna promotes bondage.

The world cannot subsist for a single moment without yajna in this sense and, therefore, the Gita, after having dealt with true wisdom in the second chapter, takes up in the third the means of attaining it and declares in so many words that yajna came with Creation itself. This body, therefore, has been given us only inorder that we may serve all Creation with it. And therefore, says the Gita, he who eats without offering yajna eats stolen food. Every single act of one who would lead a life of purity should be in the nature of yajna. Yajna having come to us with our birth, we are debtors all our lives and thus for ever bound to serve the universe. And even as a bondsleve receives food, clothing and so on from the master whom he serves, so should we gratefully accept such gifts as may be assigned to us by the Lord of the universe. What we receive must be called a gift; for as debtors we are entitled to no consideration for the discharge of our obligations. Therefore we may not blame the Master if we fail to get it. Our body is His to be cherished or cast away according to His will. This is not a matter for complaint or even pity; on the contrary, it is a natural and even a pleasant and desirable state, if only we realize our proper place in God’s scheme. We do indeed need strong faith, if we would experience this supreme bliss. “Do not worry in the least about yourself, leave all worry to God,”—this appears to be the commandment in all religions. This need not frighten anyone. He who devotes himself to service with a clear conscience will day by day grasp the necessity for it in greater measure and will continually grow richer in faith. The path of service can hardly be trodden by one who is not prepared to renounce self-interest and to recognize the conditions of his birth. Any service rendered by such a person will be tainted by selfishness. But, then, men of such utter selfishness are rare in this world. Consciously or unconsciously, every one of us does render some service or other. If we cultivate the habit of doing this service deliberately, our desire for service will steadily grow stronger and will make not only for our own happiness but also for that of the world at large.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

[PS.]
There are 58 letters today.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I
231. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 23, 1930

CHI. SHARDA,

There is no question of jealousy when it comes to learning from somebody. Who says it is jealousy? Don’t again let asthma come anywhere near you. Your handwriting is not bad at all. It will no doubt improve gradually. Where is Shakaribehn? Tell her or write to her that she should write to me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9893. Courtesy: Shardabehn G. Chokhawala

232. LETTER TO PURUSHOTTAM D. SARAIYA

October 23, 1930

CHI. KAKU,

You wrote in a really beautiful handwriting. But your letter was a blank sheet of paper, so to say. You didn’t even tell me what work you had in Bombay. Where do you live? Kakasaheb sends his blessings.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

Do you pray? Do you understand the Gita correctly?

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 2806. Courtesy: Purushottam D. Saraiya
233. LETTER TO PADMA

October 23, 1930

CHI. PADMA.

So you blame me! You yourself never write, but expect letters from me. What is the nature of the tumour in the throat? You should get that ascertained immediately. Did you show it to Gangabehn? Do you spin daily on Prabhuhbai’s spinning-wheel? I should be happy if you do. How fine it would be if you spin that number of rounds every day! How is Sharda’s health? What do you read? What food do you take? Do you go to bed daily exactly at nine? What work did you do in the U.P.? Whom did you meet while there?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6113

234. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIYDA

YERAVDA MANDIR,

October 23, 1930

CHI. GANGABEHN (SENIOR),

I have your letter. It is the opinion of an experienced doctor that to guard against rheumatism in old age one must regularly take soda bicarb. You probably know that I must be taking nearly 20 grains of soda every day in one form or another. Plaster may help a little. The cause of the disease is inside the system. This pain is a warning to you not to mind expense on fruit. You should live mainly on milk and fruit. If you let the rays of the sun fall on the knees, that will help you. Eight in the morning is excellent time for doing that.

Kaku does not tell me in his letter what work he has taken up.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 8762. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya; also Bapuna Patro-6: G. S. Gangabehne, p. 44

1 Daughter of Sitala Sahai
235. LETTER TO MANGALA S. PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 23, 1930

CHI. MANGALA,

I have your letter. Does your mind wander while you are reading the Gita? Do you follow the meaning of the verses? Tell Pushpa that if she insists on not learning anything, I shall have to pull her long nose and make it longer.

Your hand must be all right now. Does Kamala write to you occasionally? Ask her to write to me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 11091. Courtesy: Pushpa Naik

236. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

October 23, 1930

CHI. RAMDAS,

I have had no letter from you. I have asked you to write to me at least once a week so long as you are free. Reply to my questions.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy : Nehru Memorial Museum and Library
237. LETTER TO HEMPRABHA DAS GUPTA

YERAVDA MANDIR,

October 23, 1930

DEAR SISTER,

Your letter. Why should Satis Babu mourn the loss of Tarini? We all have to reach the same destination to which Tarini has gone. We must not grieve even out of selfishness. Tarini did not run the Pratishthan nor do you. God does it, we are merely the instruments. If we accept this, what does it matter if God transfers us from one assignment to another?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1673

238. LETTER TO ANAND T. HINGORANI

Y. M.,

October 24, 1930

MY DEAR ANAND,

Your letter. The best way you can return Mother’s love is to deny yourself the joy of her company and personal service to her. Till Father wants you under his roof, you are better away from home. I am sure mother will feel happy in the thought that you are doing well in body and mind. At the same time you should shed all irritation against Father. Do not count against him every remark he may make about you. You must cultivate a big heart. And then you will find that Father will be reconciled to you the sooner for your broad-mindedness.

My love to you and Vidya.

BAPU

From a microfilm. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani
239. LETTER TO SHANKERLAL BANKER

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 24, 1930

CHI. SHANKERLAL,

It was a very happy coincidence that you went to Mussoorie and were able to meet everyone. I have found Nandlal’s booklet about spinning quite satisfactory. There are of course mistakes in it. I have pointed out some of them. I am still corresponding with him. He may be able to write if he makes more effort. I do not think Prabhudas can write. Krishna would be able to write better than him. Prabhudas has not worked much with his hands. Kaka (Kalelkar) would be arriving there within a month. It is being arranged that he should make a major contribution to it. The book must be made perfect.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S. N. 32733

240. LETTER TO BALBHADRA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 24, 1930

CHI. BALBHADRA,

This time your letter was good. There is no reason why your weight should not increase now. If you take exercise, keep your mind cheerful and masticate your food properly, it is bound to increase. Never despair. When you go out for a walk, run for some time. While you do so, keep your mouth shut and breathe through nostrils.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9213

1 D. B. Kalelkar was released on November 29, 1930.
241. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI PANDYA

October 24, 1930

CHI. BHAGWANJI,

You ought to understand that one whose [own] mind is not integrated cannot weigh the merit or demerit of others. I for one know Giriraj well. He has lofty ideas but his strength to live up to them is very inadequate. Yet I have hopes for him because he is always striving. The aim of the Ashram is to insist on truth and on conduct conforming to truth. Everything is organized with Truth as the focal point. There are not many ideals in the world and there ought not to be. The apparent manifold is only a golden lid hiding the Truth.¹ When it is removed we will see the One alone.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 328. Courtesy: Bhagwanji Purushottam Pandya

242. LETTER TO MATHURADAS PURUSHOTTAM

October 24, 1930

CHI. MATHURADAS,

In fact I had intended to write to you last week, but I just forgot to do so. I have gone through the whole of the manuscript of your proposed book. I liked it very much indeed. I felt in it your overflowing love for the carding-bow. I was spell-bound by the work and could not read it critically. Now I shall get only a printed copy. I will then read it critically and make suggestions, if I have any. You advise rubbing [the string] with leaves even after it has been rubbed with candle-wax. Vithal says in his letter that if it has been rubbed with candle-wax, nothing more is necessary. Please clarify who is right.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3747

¹ Ishopanishad, v. 15
243. LETTER TO RADHABEHN GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 24, 1930

CHI. RADHIKA,

I have your letter. Write to Rukhi and ask her to write to me. What will Benarsi do in Kashi? As the climate there is said to be very good, Rukhi is bound to keep good health there. I have a letter from Navin, in which he declares his innocence. See him and speak to him gently; tell him firmly what you know and of the truth of which you are convinced. If Navin proves himself innocent and you find that you or Keshu had mistakenly thought him guilty, we should feel happy. Investigate the matter in a perfectly detached spirit. The matter is not light and should not be dropped. Nor should you let your mind be exclusively occupied with it. Your handwriting seems to me like a beautiful picture to look at. This time your margin is not quite straight, and draws attention to itself, in contrast to the beauty of your handwriting, as a black particle of dust floating in milk does.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 8688. Courtesy: Radhabehn Chaudhri

244. LETTER TO DURGA GIRI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 24, 1930

CHI. DURGA,

Why do you say: “What more can I write?” So many things happen within the span of one week! You must be capable of describing them. A multitude of thoughts arise in the mind of a girl of your age. The thoughts can be written down, but on one condition—one must have the zeal and the concentration of mind for it. If you maintain diary and note down everything, you can find from it the topics to write upon.1

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Hindi]

Bapuki Virat Vatsalata, p. 32

1 The original was in Gujarati.
245. LETTER TO NARAYAN DESAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 25, 1930

SHRI NARAYANRAO,

Or should I address you as Bablo? You have drawn beautiful lines and curves indeed. But, instead of scribbling such marks, learn to make every letter in a word as beautiful as a picture. I believe you must be full of fun now because Mahadev has returned. Don’t send him back immediately.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9474

246. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 26, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

Your letter as also your detailed directions about the working of the Bihar wheel. I attended to all the matters as you have put except the point where the mal should cross. I do not know whether it crossed nearest the platform or away from it. However I shall make another effort to see whether it works at all or not. It ought at least to work.

Meanwhile the Gandiv continues to give much satisfaction. It has not yet caused any trouble and did I tell you that it did not require the removal of the spindle after each day’s work. After the work, it is hung up on the wall. It thus requires no attention every morning as all the other wheels do. And the more I work it, the greater becomes the conviction that it is capable of giving as much output as any single wheel. I have got the scales now. I seem to spin 24 counts and over and my highest speed is 200 rounds, very considerable improvement on the box wheel. Only once do I remember having attained that

1 A baby boy
2 The word is illegible here.
speed on it. However I know that my opinion is worth nothing unless more efficient spinners confirm it from their own.

I am glad you are not going to tour just now. You should build up your body anew. We are both keeping good health. I weighed last Thursday 105 and Kaka 117. I have considerably reduced the vegetables and gone back to dates. There will be still variations.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5417. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9651

247. LETTER TO MAHENDRA V. DESAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 26, 1930

SHRI MANSINH¹,

Decide whether I should address you as ‘Desai’ or ‘Chi. Manu’ and let me know in a letter written in beautiful handwriting. Do your President and Secretary still play childish pranks, or, now that they are office-bearers, have they become serious-minded?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7408. Courtesy: V. G. Desai

248. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 26, 1930

CHI. PREMA,

I have your letter written from Nasik. Do you remember that I wrote to you about Dhurandhar’s translation? It is all right if he has translated the book, but, now that Limaye has also translated it, we shall have to consider whether we should publish Dhurandhar’s

¹ Son of Valji G. Desai; Gandhiji lovingly called Mahendra “Mansinh” translation. The fact that with rest you feel better shows that you always carry the burden of work on your head. The virtue of non-attachment consists in doing the work but not feeling its burden.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10240; also C.W. 6688. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

249. LETTER TO GANGABEHN JHAVERI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 26, 1930

CHI. GANGABEHN (JHAVERI),

After many weeks I have a letter from you. It seems Nanibehn is not with you. How did you fall ill? Whenever you have no appetite, you should fast. It does not matter if you feel weaker. That weakness will not be real. If you cannot fast completely, you may eat fresh fruits like grapes, oranges, etc., but nothing else, and take an enema every day to clear the bowels. You should take care and preserve your health. It would be advisable to drink only boiled water. Write to me regularly. There is still much work to be done by women. Who is the other woman worker with you? My blessings to Bhai Panachand.

Blessings from
BAPU

PS.

Both of us are in good health.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3106
250. LETTER TO KUNVERJI MEHTA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 26, 1930

BHAII KUNVERJI,

I have your letter. If you have not yet become a beloved guest of the Government, you will get this letter. Lakshmidas having gone, let me know what new arrangement is made. When you meet the inmates of the temple\(^1\), give my blessings to them. After all these years of work, people should be able to devise means on their own.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2687

251. LETTER TO LAKSHMIBEHN KHARE

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 26, 1930

CHI. LAKSHMIBEHN,

Though the letter is from Panditji I am writing to you. I always wish to write to anyone who is unwell. Why should you fall ill while serving? But illness always comes like a thief, however watchful one may be. I hope you have driven out the intruder. Do not neglect your health. Does Mathuri still feel weak? Some children become sturdier after an attack of smallpox. This happened in Manilal’s case. Write to me in detail.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 277. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn Khare

\(^1\) Prison
252. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

October 26, 1930

CHI. KANTA,

Tell brother that he should now leave only after improving his health. It is possible to serve even while remaining in the Ashram. Blessings to him from us both. Doing a thing intelligently is bound to give joy. Such work becomes artistic. And true art always gives joy. One may even say that art means joy.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: Chandrakanta papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

253. LETTER TO KALAVATI TRIVEDI

October 26, 1930

CHI. KALAVATI,

Kashinath sends some extracts from your letters. I see from them that you are extremely disturbed. There is nothing like perturbation for those who are devoted to duty in a detached manner. One who has consecrated all to God has no occasion for agitation. There is no possibility of any harm resulting from Jiji’s exertions due to grinding.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 5255

¹ Presumably the addressee’s mother-in-law
254. LETTER TO SHANTA

October 26, 1930

CHI. SHANTA,

Kashinath writes that you are expecting a letter from me. I had no idea that any letter was still unanswered. I am glad to learn that you are keeping well and devoting your time to various tasks. All are conscious of the gains directly derived from the Ashram, but the devotees of Truth know that their unseen gain is immensely greater than what is obvious. I wish you could realize this.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 5257

255. TELEGRAM TO JAISHANKAR TRIVEDI

POONA,

[October 27, 1930]¹

PROFESSOR TRIVEDI
VIDYAPITH
AHMEDABAD

BOTH GRIEVED LEARN MANU’S ILLNESS. WIRE CONDITION. WE PRAY FOR RECOVERY.

GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 1000

¹ Younger sister of Kashinath Trivedi, residing in the Ashram at this time
² From the postmark
256. LETTER TO V. A. SUNDARAM

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 27, 1930

MY DEAR SUNDARAM,

I am glad you are giving yourself rest. Hope Savitri\(^1\) and children are well. Please thank Prof. Radhakrishnan\(^2\) for the book and the paper.

Love to you all.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 3186

257. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

October 27, 1930

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

You have become very nervous. But you have no reason for it. If now the burden of running the home has fallen on you, you are strong enough for that. If the responsibility is yours, you ought to have the corresponding rights too. You can manage your home as it seems best to you. Jayaprakash will certainly help you in that. You may talk about everything with your father-in-law with the freedom of a daughter. At first he will feel embarrassed but by and by you will see that he, too, will talk freely with you and remove the difficulties from your path. Moreover, you have servants to help you. You should take due care of your health while looking after the affairs of the home. Do not work beyond your strength. Save some time for reading, for going out for a walk and resting, and make yours a model home. It will be a problem for you only if you do not have full authority to do what you wish to do. But I simply cannot believe at the moment that you will not get such authority. Have confidence in yourself. Learn to be firm. God will save you and lead you. In any

\(^1\) Addressee's wife
\(^2\) Dr. S. Radhakrishnan donot be cast down by grief. You may write to me more often if you wish to. You can write to me even directly, without thinking whether or not I shall get your letters. May God protect you.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3376

258. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI ANUPCHAND MEHTA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 27, 1930

BHAISHRI BHAGWANJI,

I got your letter. I felt unhappy on reading the news about Bhai Revashanker. His simplicity was indeed as you describe it to be. I have no doubt that his soul rests in peace.

I send with this a letter to Devchandbhai in regard to Sudarshan, but what more can I do from here in this matter?

I am very much pained to know what you say about Bhai Narbheram. It would give me a great shock to believe that he could be dishonest. My advice regarding him is that you should suggest to him to let an arbitrator examine the claim against him and give his decision. If he does not agree, you should put up with the loss. I would not advise you to take the matter to a court of law. The prestige which the Bank of England enjoys in London, or rather in the whole world, is enjoyed by Kars [anj] Moolchand in our small world of Rajkot. In their respective spheres, they enjoy equal prestige. I should very much like that prestige to be re-established. You should certainly not fight [in a court]. Money is not the only important thing in life.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5813
259. LETTER TO JAISHANKAR TRIVEDI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 27, 1930

BHAI TRIVEDI,

You two, husband and wife, your relations and your friends have again cause for worry about Manu. I shall know tomorrow whether you got the wire which I have sent today on behalf of us both. I know that you have a strong mind and I need not, therefore, try to give you courage. Such illnesses also test us. We should not think that we shall always be happy because we believe in God. However, both Kakasaheb and I feel sure that Manu is safe. It is God’s will that he should serve Him in this very body. As long as the illness remains serious, send me news daily. I believe it will be possible to arrange so that I get your message every day.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 999

260. LETTER TO MANSHANKAR J. TRIVEDI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 27, 1930

CHI. MANU,

So you are ill again! But you enjoy God’s grace. Since you possess great strength of mind, both of us believe that by the time you get this letter you will be out of danger. You have surely learnt to remain calm and patient in all circumstances. Take complete rest and fully recover your health.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7766
261. LETTER TO TARAMATI MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

October 27, [1930]\(^1\)

I got your letter. I felt very happy to read it. Dilip must be looking big now. I have never seen him after I met him in Deolali. If you go and mix with friends from time to time, your mind will remain peaceful. Pyarelal is in this prison, but he is not kept with me. I do see him occasionally, however. If you have cultivated no love for reading, I would advise you to do so. There are many books published by the Navajivan Karyalaya which are worth reading and which you can easily understand.

[From Gujarati]
Bapuni Prasadi, p. 102

262. LETTER TO LILAVATI ASAR

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 27, 1930

CHI. LILAVATI,

I liked your letter because I found it to be sincere. Read over and over again what I have written about yajna.\(^2\) It is possible you will find in it the key to understanding the spirit of service. This time too I am going to elaborate on the same theme. Think seriously about it. Be patient. God will protect you. Keep writing to me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

---

\(^1\) According to the source the addressee started writing to Gandhiji in 1930 when her husband fell ill in the prison.

\(^2\) Vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 21-10-1930
263. LETTER TO SHANKERLAL BANKER

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 27, 1930

CHI. SHANKERLAL,

I have received your letter; also Anasuyabehn’s. We do not know when our real New Year starts. Or shall we say that it has started on the 12th March? For the time being, I am spinning on a takli. But I do not like such a slow speed. In Wardha they spin 132 rounds in half an hour. 80 rounds are quite common. if you have people who are experts in spinning on the takli, let them write to me about that art of spinning. I have of course asked for the instructions from Wardha. Instructions from two or three places would be more than sufficient. I have acquired good speed in spinning on the charkha. I think I can still improve.

This is the second urgent letter to you. Harjivandas writes from Amreli that he is not getting certificate for [his] khadi.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S. N. 32729

264. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

October 23/28, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS,

Your packet was given to me on Wednesday (yesterday) in two parts. It was divided into two parts by the authorities here. Let me know when and in what condition you received the packet which was dispatched from here on the 21st. It is enough for me that you do not feel it as a burden to have to handle my correspondence. So long as they let me, I shall continue to write as I have been doing. Give me whatever news you get about Amidas. If you have any comments to make about my views concerning eggs, please do. I know definitely that Pyarelal has not been transferred to Nasik. We shall meet again in a day or two. Ascertain the position about Chitalia and pay him any sum you think proper. We should not refuse to help him to face his difficulties. Did you ask Chhaganlal Joshi? He may, perhaps, have kept a note somewhere. Does he not live next to you? Also let me know how he is. I am glad that Mirabehn has for the present dropped her idea of going out of the Ashram. I have had no letter from Devdas, whether long or short. Did he send it directly from jail, or in some other manner? I will inquire about it here after I hear from you. Ask Jivarambhai to write to me.

There was a note by Chandrakanta to the effect that a letter by Kumarappa was included, but there was no such letter. Instead, there was a letter from the Rev. Holmes. It is addressed C/o Kumarappa. Kakasaheb thinks that that made Kanta say that there was a letter from Kumarappa. Manilal has asked me for suggestions for reading. I must have gone to sleep with this thought in my mind, and so I had the following dream. My advice for reading is as in the dream which I am narrating. I dreamt that Manilal was standing by my side and that Devdas, a child, had climbed on to my lap and had fallen asleep. Manilal told me that he had wasted many years of his life without reading anything and that the desire for reading had now awakened in him. He, therefore, asked me to guide him. I expressed my regret that I had not been able to do much for my children’s education. I then wrote down as follows for Manilal: “Study the whole of Gokhale’s book on arithmetic. Study his books on algebra and geometry too, if you get time. You should learn the history and geography of India in some detail, and of the world in outline. You should read Tolstoy’s The Kingdom of God Is within You, for Sanskrit Bhandarkar’s books and the Gita, in Gujarati Navajivanmala and K’s Jivanshodhan, and finally Tulsidas’s Ramayana and a text on arithmetic, both in Gujarati. You should get the books through Maganbhai.” At this point I woke up from the dream. There was something more still, but I do not recollect it. That is, I had forgotten it even when I woke up at 3.30 a.m. I like the advice I gave in my dream. Manilal may read what he can, and what he finds interesting, from the above. Or, rather, it is Mahadev who has awakened Manilal’s interest in reading. He should, therefore, be guided by Mahadev. I should not hold on to an opinion expressed in a dream; and, moreover, I cannot at present think out a reading list for Manilal. I would give the same advice to Ramdas. I attach no importance at all to the dream. Manilal’s problem was in my mind. I had also been thinking about Devdas’s letter. It is not, therefore, surprising that, owing to some disturbance in the stomach, I got such a happy dream. Write to Brijkrishna and tell him that the understanding is that, as far as possible, I should not write to prisoners and hence I do not write to him. I think about him every day, all the same. Tell him that he should take the utmost care of his health. He should make the best use of every minute and keep note of how he spends his time. Let him take this as a letter to him. And he should continue to write to me.

1 K. G. Mashruwala’s

Tuesday morning, October 28, 1930

I wrote about yajna last week, but feel like writing more about it. It will perhaps be worthwhile further to consider a principle which has been created along with mankind. Yajna is duty to be performed, or service to be rendered, all the twenty-four hours of the day, and hence a maxim like “The powers of the good are always exercised for a benevolent purpose” is inappropriate, if benevolence has any taste of favour about it. To serve without desire is to favour not others, but ourselves even as in discharging a debt we serve only ourselves, lighten our burden and fulfil our duty. Again, not only the good, but all of us are bound to place our resources at the disposal of humanity. And if such is the law, as evidently it is, indulgence ceases to hold a place in life and gives way to renunciation. For human beings renunciation itself is enjoyment. This is what differentiates man from the beast. Some object that life thus understood becomes dull and devoid of art, and leaves no room for the householder. But I think in saying this they misinterpret the word ‘renunciation’. Renunciation here does not mean abandoning the world and retiring into the forest. The spirit of renunciation, should rule all the activities of life. A householder does not cease to be one if he regards life as a duty rather than as an indulgence. A cobbler, a cultivator, a tradesman or a barber may be inspired in their work or activities either by the spirit of renunciation or merely by the desire for self-indulgence. A merchant who carries on his business in a spirit of sacrifice will have crores passing through his hands, but he will, if he follows the law, use his abilities for service. He will, therefore, not cheat or speculate, will lead a simple life, will not injure a living soul and will lose millions rather than harm anybody. Let no one run away with the idea that this type of merchant exists only in my imagination. Fortunately for the world, he does exist in the West as well as in the East. It is true such merchants may be counted on one’s fingers but the type ceases to be imaginary as soon as even one living specimen can be found to answer to it. All of us know of a philanthropic tailor in Wadhwan. I know of one such barber. Everyone of us knows of such a weaver.\(^1\) And if we go deeply into the matter, we shall come across men in every walk of life who lead dedicated lives.

No doubt these sacrificers obtain their livelihood by their work. But livelihood is not their objective, but only a by-product of their vocation. Motilal was a tailor at first, and continued as a tailor afterwards. But his spirit was changed and his work was transmuted into worship. He began to think about the welfare of others and his life became artistic in the real sense of the term.

A life of sacrifice is the pinnacle of art and is full of true joy. Such life is the source of ever fresh springs of joy which never dry up and never satiate. \textit{Yajna} is not \textit{yajna} if one feels it to be burdensome or annoying. Self-indulgence leads to destruction and renunciation to immortality. Joy has no independent existence. It depends upon our attitude to life. One man will enjoy theatrical scenery, another the ever new scenes which unfold themselves in the sky. Joy, therefore, is a matter of education. We shall delight in things which we have been taught to delight in as children. And illustrations can be easily cited of different national tastes.

Again, many sacrificers imagine that they are free to receive from the people everything they need and many things they do not need, because they are rendering disinterested service. Directly this idea sways a man, he ceases to be a servant and becomes a tyrant over the people. One who would serve others will not waste a thought upon his own comforts, which he leaves to be attended to or neglected by his Master on high. He will not, therefore, encumber himself with everything that comes his way; he will take only what he strictly needs and leave the rest. He will be calm, free from anger and unruffled in mind even if he finds himself inconvenienced. His service, like virtue, is its own reward, and he will rest content with it.

Again, one dare not be negligent in service or be behindhand with it. He who thinks that he must be diligent only in his personal business and unpaid public business may be done in any way and at any time he chooses, has still to learn the very rudiments of the science of sacrifice. Voluntary service of others demands the best of which one is capable, and must take precedence over service of self. In fact, the pure devotee consecrates himself to the service of humanity without any reservation whatever.

\(^1\) The allusion probably is to Kabir.

Blessings from
Bapu

[PS.]

The person in the Ashram who spins best on the takli should write to me and explain how he spins, how he imparts spinning motion to the takli, what is the length of the thread which he draws out at one time, etc. I feel unhappy that I cannot go beyond 44 rounds per hour. Prof. Trivedi has sent me a pair of scales, and, therefore, you need not send one from there.

There are 72 letters.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U/I

265. LETTER TO PREMLILA THACKERSEY

YERAVDA MANDIR,
October 28, 1930

DEAR SISTER,

The stock of uncarded cotton with me is about to be exhausted. Till now, I used to get it from the Ashram. This time may I trouble you? My hope in making this request is that, if you do not keep a stock of such cotton, you will start doing so. The cotton should have been ginned by hand. It is difficult to card with hand the cotton from the bales prepared in a ginning press, and the yarn spun from such cotton is not of good quality. If you do not keep a stock of such cotton ginned by hand, you may obtain some from the Ashram or from Vithaldas Jerajani. It may also be available in the Khadi Karyalaya. I make this request so that you may take all this trouble.

Kakasaheb and I have been making the fullest use of your sewing-machine.

Blessings from
Mohandas

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 4814. Courtesy: Premlila Thackersey
266. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

October 28, 1930

Bhai Ghanshyamdasi.

Your spiritual restlessness is in a way to my liking. True peace will emerge out of it. Bhai Mahavir Prasad may continue to do the khadi work and you need not worry about it. But I am confident that you will gain some peace by putting not only money but your heart too in some noble work. I can understand that you have to devote a great deal of your time to your business, but being engrossed in it all the time will neither profit the business nor bring you peace of mind. Read carefully what I have written during this week about yajna. Be that as it may, I believe that your efforts are so determined and your heart so pure that you will surely gain peace and discover your true way.

Yours,

Mohandas

[PS.]

Where is the lady I met in Mussoorie and how is she? My blessings to her.

From Hindi: C.W. 6188. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

267. LETTER TO PREMLILA THACKERSEY

Yeravda Mandir,

October 30, 1930

Dear Sister,

You sent me the cotton by return of post! It is of very good quality indeed. I had forgotten to mention the quantity required. You guessed it correctly. When it is exhausted, I will certainly trouble you again. I hope you did suppose that my motive in persuading you to stock hand-ginned cotton could not be merely that you may have a stock of such cotton with you. I take it that spinning is being done in your "cottage". But in case you secure the slivers from elsewhere or have been using the cotton of pressed bales, I thought that you

1 Punning on the word “Parnakuti” alsomight, if required to send me hand-ginned cotton, start stocking and using such cotton for your own spinning. I did get, on the 12th of Bhadrapada, a tin jar and three glass bottles containing dried grapes and other fruit, but I was told that they were sent by Sundaram. It is only from your letter that I learn that you also had sent fruit, whether it was the same that I have mentioned above or different from that. Otherwise I would have certainly written to you to acknowledge receipt of the gift. If you give me more details about it, I will make inquiries here.

Blessings from

BAPU

LADY VITHALDAS TH ACKERSEY
“PARNAKUTI”
YERAVDA HILL

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 4815. Courtesy: Premlila Thackersey

268. LETTER TO UPTON SINCLAIR

YERAVDA CENTRAL PRISON,
October 30, 1930

DEAR FRIEND,

I read your Mammonart[1] with absorbing interest and Mental Radio[2] with curiosity. The former has given me much to think, the latter did not interest me. Nobody in India would, I think, doubt the possibility of telepathy but most would doubt the wisdom of its material use.

I will now avail myself of your kind offer and ask you to send me your other volumes or such as you think I should read.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

UPTON SINCLAIR, ESQ.
STATIONA P., PASADENA
CALIFORNIA

From a photostat: G.N. 2552

---

[1] Books by the author, published in 1925 and 1930, respectively
269. LETTER TO JOHN HAYNES HOLMES

YERAVDA,
October 30, 1930

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your warm letter of 9th Sept. last. I may not say anything beyond thanking you for the letter.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

REV. J. H. HOLMES

From a photostat of the original : C. W. 113520. Courtesy : Robert D. Berman. New York

270. LETTER TO J. C. KUMARAPPA

October 31, 1930

MY DEAR KUMARAPPA,

I am glad you have expressed yourself freely on the question of ‘vows’.

You seem to me to misunderstand my meaning. No fault of yours. You have not the original before you. I have not seen the translation. The word ‘vow’ is also an unsuitable equivalent for the original ‘ozr’. But the best thing for me is to explain what I mean and then leave you to find the exact word if you endorse my position. If you contest it, you should continue the correspondence till we have thrashed the subject out.

You seem to think of vows publicly administered to audiences. This may or may not be good. The ‘vow’ I am thinking of is a promise made by one to oneself. We have to deal with two dwellers within: Rama and Ravana, God and Satan, Ormuzd and Ahriman1. The one binds us to make us really free, the other only appears to free us so as to bind us tight within his grip. A ‘vow’ is a promise made to Rama to do or not to do a certain thing which, if good, we want to do,

1 The letter was written while Gandhiji was in custody and not able to speak his mind.
2 The holy and the evil spirits according to Zoroastrian scriptures
3 ibid
but have not the strength unless we are tied down, and which, if bad, we would avoid, but have not the strength to avoid unless similarly tied down. This I hold to be a condition indispensable [to]\(^1\) growth. I grant that we are higher than the sun, how much more necessary for us to be at least as true and faithful as the sun if not truer and more faithful? If in matters of commerce, a man who vacillates is useless, why should he fare otherwise in matters spiritual which carry with them infinitely greater consequences? If you hold that I must speak and do the right thing at any cost, you grant my whole position and so you also do if you grant that, at the peril of my life, I should be faithful to my wife or friend. You can easily multiply such instances. For me Jesus was pre-eminently a man of unshakable resolution, i.e., vows. His yea was yea for ever. A life of vow is like marriage, a sacrament. It is marriage with God indissoluble for all time. Come let us marry Him. Verb Sap.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 10081

271. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

YERAVDA MANDIR,

October 31, 1930

CHI. VASUMATI,

I have been wondering why there is no letter from you. I hope you have not come away from Sarbhon defeated or tired. It does not matter even if that is so. Can anybody rise above his or her nature? Our duty lies in trying to go as far as our nature will permit us to do. The rest is in God’s hands. We should be satisfied if our conscience tells us that we have spared no effort. I suppose I shall know by and by what you intend to do now.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9292

\(^1\) The original has “of”.

VOL.50 : 23 AUGUST, 1930 - 5 JANUARY, 1931 187
272. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 1, 1930

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I have both your letters, the one which you wrote directly and the one which you sent through the Ashram. All this nervousness doesn’t become you. Learn to endure the misfortune which has befallen you. If your health does not recover there you must go to the Ashram. After your health has improved, you may again assume the responsibility of running the home. With weak health, what can you do even if you remain there? I simply cannot understand why you should get fainting fits. It seems you fret too much. Stop doing so. Have faith in God. Let His will be done. We are mere puppets in His hands. For some time, you should drop me a postcard every day. I shall always get it. I have written to Jayaprakash. If he shows the letter to you and wishes to discuss the matter with you, advise him as you think proper. Give up all worries. You may freely write to me anything you wish to. I don’t know why you did not get my postcard. I hope you will get these letters without delay.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3377

273. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 1, 1930

BHAJ GHANSHYAMDASJI,

This letter concerns Bhai Jayaprakash Narayan. He belongs to a respectable family of Bihar and he is also the son-in-law of Brijkishore Babu, the noble worker of Bihar. Till now he was with Jawaharlal in the Congress office. He has studied in America for seven years. Now, after his mother’s death, he feels the necessity of earning some money. He needs Rs. 300 per mensem. In my opinion, Bhai Jayaprakash is a worthy young man. If possible, absorb him somewhere and pay him his requirements. Bhai Jayaprakash will himself give you further details about his antecedents.¹ I know Babu Brijkishore’s daughter² very well. She has lived in the Ashram for a considerable time. I have rarely seen a girl like her, resolute and utterly devoted to duty.

Yours,

MOHANDAS

From Hindi: C.W. 6189. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

274. LETTER TO JAYAPRAKASH NARAYAN

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 1, 1930

CHI. JAYAPRAKASH,

I have your letter. I am glad. You are entitled to write as you do. Your grief moves me. Your love for your mother³ is commendable and becomes you. I enclose a letter to G.D. Birla.⁴ Take it to him and see him. However, I must caution you. I myself have drunk deep from the fountain of motherly love. I was devoted to my parents; I worshipped them. And yet in your love for your mother I see attachment. Your love should be informed with knowledge. Your mother has died in the body. Her spirit has not perished. The body had to perish one day. Your love should now undergo a transformation. Our true mother is the motherland. Your filial love should be transformed into love of the motherland and to make it endure you should dedicate yourself to the service of the motherland. You must not distress yourself that an expert doctor was not called. Millions of mothers get no medical assistance. And I cannot admit that they are thereby necessarily the losers. Even the best of doctors cannot confer immortality on anyone. Therefore, in my view you and everyone else should give expression to your filial love by dwelling on the virtues of the departed and emulating them and you should devote all your energies for the cause of the motherland. Please ¹ The letter from Jayaprakash Narayan was enclosed with this letter.

² Prabhavati, wife of Jayaprakash Narayan
³ Who had passed away in early October; vide “Letter to Narayan Moreshwar Khare”, 11-10-1930.
⁴ ibid

VOL.50 : 23 AUGUST, 1930 - 5 JANUARY, 1931 189
discuss this With your father. If what I say appeals to you show this to your father and seek his consent for dedicating yourself to the work of service. Of course you had already made such a dedication. But the death of your mother has created a new situation and reconsideration may be the duty. However, if my advice does not appeal to you, you may use the letter to Ghanshyamdasji and earnestly try to earn a livelihood. I shall not be distressed thereby. Consult Prabhavati also. Keep writing to me and if at any time you need my help let me know. If it is not beyond my power I will help you.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Hindi original: Jayaprakash Narayan Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

275. LETTER TO KASHINATH TRIVEDI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 2, 1930

CHI. KASHINATH,

I got your letter. If Shanta has been trying the bath cure, let me know the effect it has. We had two copies of Kuhne’s book. I think there is a Gujarati translation also. Kalavati had good experience of life at home and it is also to the good that she is now returning of her own accord.

Rukmini’s suicide excites deep pity. I think that there must have been some other cause also behind this suicide. Has anybody investigated the matter further? Has not the women’s group discussed it? As the place is near Godhra, Mama is likely to know something. If the report is correct, there should be widespread public agitation about the case. If you get time, inquire further and let me know the result. Who is the writer of the original letter? You cannot send me the Kashi newspaper. But is it not clear enough, what he must have stated?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5258
276. LETTER TO RADHABEHN GANDHI

November 2, 1930

CHI. RADHIKA,

I have your letter. Read mine over and over and go on asking me about what you do not understand in it. I preserve both my self-respect and humility if, when someone kicks me and tries to force me to salute him, I suffer the kicks but do not get angry and wish well of the person kicking me, do not utter even one word in reply and still refuse to salute him. Once a person kicked me and tried to force me to sit at his feet, but I said nothing to him, never wished him ill even in a dream, and yet refused to sit at his feet. I believe I had preserved both self-respect and humility. When the incident took place, I was not at all conscious that I was being humble or anything of the sort. I narrate it now only in order to explain my meaning. You can think of many similar situations. You may even recall some from your own life, and it would be very good indeed if one formed the habit, and learnt the art, of reflecting on such incidents in one’s own life rather than in another’s. In doing so, one should not search for incidents in one’s life which show one’s own virtues. Our virtues are for others to see. We should try to discover our shortcomings.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

It is also humility to see one’s own shortcomings.

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 8689. Courtesy: Radhabehn Chaudhri
277. LETTER TO MAHALAKSHMI MADHAVJI THAKKAR

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 2, 1930

CHI. MAHALAKSHMI,

You are doing fine work indeed and winning credit for yourself and for the cause. You at any rate should keep illness at arm’s length. Ramabehn must have arrived there now. If the children have arrived, and if they can write, let them write to me. Ramabehn should write and tell me what she saw in Bombay. Have the children returned with improved health? My blessings to all the brothers and sisters.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6802

278. LETTER TO HEMPRABHA DAS GUPTA

November 2, 1930

DEAR SISTER,

I am very glad to receive your letter. Those who regard even death as God’s favour ultimately stand to gain. You too are benefiting thus. There is no end to your progress. Today you are doing more than a man could do. And I expect this from all women. Woman’s capacity is in no way inferior to man’s for God’s work, but, in ahimsa and the like, it is definitely superior. The description of Tarini’s shraddha is enlightening. When is Satis Babu to be released? I hope Arun and Charu are well. My blessings to all the Ashram inmates.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1674
279. LETTER TO RAMACHANDRA TRivedi

Yeravda Mandir,
November 2, 1930

Ch. Ramachandra 1.

I was glad to have your letter. Boys of your age spin with proficiency, recite the Gita and understand the Ramayana. What do you study? How much do you spin in an hour and what is the count?

Blessings from

Bapu

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 5259

280. LETTER TO JAISHANKAR TRivedi

November 3, 1930

Bhai Trivedi,

We have received the letter you sent us. The telegram also reached me. I am relieved. Manu has survived a real danger to his life. From this we should believe that he is destined for some great achievement. At any rate such are the qualities of character we observe in him at present. After consulting a doctor . . . 2 I do feel that it would be good if he becomes fit enough to be taken . . . 3 to Almora or some other place like that. Revashankerbhai’s Dhiru benefited much by such a visit. His bone disease was even more serious than Manu’s. Prabhudas also improved by staying there. Some defect seems to have been left still in the ribs, etc. If it disappears completely, we may perhaps rest somewhat free from fear.

Blessings from

Bapu

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7767

1 Seven-year old brother of Kashinath Trivedi who was then residing in the Ashram
2 Here a line is missing in the source.
3 ibid

VOL. 50 : 23 AUGUST, 1930 - 5 JANUARY, 1931
281. LETTER TO MANSHANKAR J. TRIVEDI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 3, 1930

CHI. MANU,

Both of us were very happy to read Father’s wire about you. Do not be in a hurry to resume work. It would help you very much if, after you have regained strength, you were to go to Almora or some other place like that and stay there for some time. When you have recovered your normal strength, write and tell me how you got such a serious illness.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I got your letter after I had finished the letter. We were very happy. Kakasaheb had written to you and advised you to go to Poona after discussing the matter with me. Do go there. But you see that I am looking beyond the immediate present. May God protect you.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7768

282. LETTER TO PANNALAL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 3, 1930

CHI. PANNALAL,

It is a good question you have raised. Exactly the same question was raised formerly regarding Andhra. The decision arrived at in the end was that we at any rate should try to produce in Gujarat the khadi required for Gujarat. The same thing applies in the case of the Punjab. The principle of local production is the very basis of the khadi movement. Every province, every district and in fact every village should produce the khadi which it needs. In the final analysis, the difference in price between khadi and other cloth does not count. Khadi will be dearer than mill cloth if people, though they understand the principles of economics, do not spin to meet their own requirements; if, none the less, they wear it for the sake of the poor, they would find khadi cheaper in the long run than other cloth. Think over my definition of swadeshi. We have only one way open to us to meet the difficulties which we now experience, and that is, to decide the principle and then cling to it. For all that, private dealers are sure to order khadi from the Punjab or other places. We will not obstruct them. If you do not understand why this is the right course, you may ask me again.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3107

283. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 3, 1930

CHI. KUSUM (DESAI),

Write to Sushila and tell her that I had seen Pyarelal on Saturday. He has now completely recovered. He has got back his original weight. He drinks three pounds of milk and eats one pound of bread. When he wants, he eats vegetables too.

What shall I say about your irregularity?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1808

284. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 3, 1930

CHI. PREMA,

If you have symptoms of jaundice and get acid eructations, I am sure what you should do is to fast for at least seven days. While you are fasting, you should drink every day at least four pounds of water, mixing soda bicarb and/or salt with it. You should break the fast with fruit juice and then start whey and rice in required quantities. During the fast, see that you take an enema and Kuhne bath daily. I am sure that you will not become bed-ridden with a seven-day fast. You may even be able to do a little work every day. In any case the fast will do you no harm.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 6689. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

285. LETTER TO JAMNA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 3, 1930

CHI. JAMNA,

You did very well in going to Bombay. If you keep good health there, don’t be in a hurry to return. My blessings to Kalyandas, Dharamdas, Premkunvar and other men and women whom I met but whose names I forget. What occupations do Kalyandas and Dharamdas follow at present?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 545. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

286. LETTER TO SHANTA SHANKARBHAI PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 3, 1930

CHI. SHANTA (SHANKARBHAI),

You were restless when you wrote your letter. You have said thrice in your short letter, “I can’t think what to write.” If you write slowly, as if you were practising in a copy-book, you would certainly be able to write a good hand. You who have some work or other to do during the whole day, why can’t you think of anything to write about? It is natural that you wish to meet me. We shall meet when God wills, and till then should keep patience.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4055
287. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

Y. M.,
November 3, 1930

CHI. KANTA,

I have your letter. Since you have not said anything about your health recently I conclude that it is all right. Do you go for walks? Blessings to Brother from both of us.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: Chandrakanta Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

288. LETTER TO NIRMALA GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 3, 1930

CHI. NIMU,

I had a letter from you after so many days. It seems nowadays you have become Ba’s secretary. How is your health? Is Sumitra all right? Does she still suffer from constipation? So long as one can get ink, one must never write with a pencil.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

289. LETTER TO DURGA GIRI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 3, 1930

CHI. DURGA,

This letter of yours is good. Some errors in expression there are, but they do not matter. You must cultivate the habit of revising the letter. Some errors can thus be corrected. It is preferable to brush the teeth before prayers. What are you learning in sewing? Tell me how much can you spin on the takli and the charkha in an hour and of what count? If you have not noted the speed, please do and inform me. Do you know how to ascertain the count? It is a very good habit to recite Ramanama while going to bed.¹

VOL. 50 : 23 AUGUST, 1930 - 5 JANUARY, 1931 197

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Hindi]
Bapuki Virat Vatsalata, pp. 32-3

290. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

October 30/ November 4, 1930

CHI. NARANDAS,

I got your packet today. The piece of leather which you sent for the sandals was not good enough for repairing the soles. It is hardly a month since the repair was done but the soles have again worn out. The hard leather required for soles and heels is made from hide of a particular part of the body, generally of a buffalo. If you get such a piece, send it to me. In the alternative, you may send another pair of the same number as, or of a number higher than, the one you sent for Kakasaheb.

I think I wrote to you that you need not send the pair of scales. If I did not, please understand from this that I don’t need it. Trivedi came and gave me one.

I know your attitude. So long as Mahadev is outside, you will not take upon yourself the burden of making a final decision, and you are right in that. I had a long letter from Keshu. He seems to have been deeply hurt. He has bitterly complained against you, but his letter has had no effect on me. You should, however, take him into confidence and ask him to tell you all that he feels. I know that he is impulsive by nature. But he is a sincere youth and very eager to do service. He is, however, impatient to increase his knowledge and do original work. I may be wrong in my judgment about him. You should, however, call him and hear all that he has to say. Afterwards write to me and give me the impression you form. I know that he spends money rather freely. But I have observed that, in spite of that, he is simple in habits. He adheres to his charge against . . . and it is a serious one.

¹ The original was in Gujarati.

We need have no fears about Kanta and Sumangal. They are close relations. They are first cousins and have grown up together. Despite this, I, too, had a suspicion and expressed it to them. But I felt that they were innocent. Sumangal was Kanta’s teacher once and she has great faith in him. And, moreover, if we suspect brothers and sisters, where would we end? We have adopted an attitude of full trust in the women. If we burn our fingers as a result of that, we will endure our misfortune. Unless we are prepared to take some risks, we shall fail to do our duty towards women. The Hindu man is under a heavy debt to the Hindu woman.

October 31, 1930

The clock struck nine when I wrote the last sentence and I laid down the pen. We have resolved not to work after nine, as far as possible.

I got your letter about Amidas. I am satisfied now. His firmness will be rewarded. I felt that it was my duty to tell him what I knew. If you want me to decide about Chitalia, I suggest that you should send him Rs. 1,500. I think my speech referred to the past but made no reference to the future. He cannot claim any money on the basis of that speech. But I do not have sufficient data to come to a decision on the point. I trust Karsandas and, since he has asked for the sum, I think it is our duty to pay it. In future, however, he may draw what he needs with Jamnalalji’s or Kishorelal’s consent; that seems all right to me. Copy out this part of the letter and send it to Karsandas when you remit the money to him. He should give his opinion whether or not he agrees with me.

November 1, 1930

Along with this you will find letters to Prabhavati and Jayaprakash and one to Ghanshyamdas about them. Put all the three in the same envelope and dispatch them immediately. The couple is passing through extremely difficult circumstances just now owing to the death of Jayaprakash’s mother. Do the persons in the Ashram who spin weigh the quantity of waste yarn? If they do not, they should start weighing it every day. If anyone has been doing this, let me know the quantity of yarn he or she wastes. What is the highest average speed per hour attained by anyone in spinning? A person may, after careful preparation, attain excellent speed on one occasion; but that does not give the same value as the average speed maintained by someone who has kept a record for a year. In calculating this, the time spent in replacing a broken belt or in cleaning a belt should also be taken into account. Don’t you agree that the figures given by a person would be correct only if he has included in them the time spent thus?

1 The name has been omitted.

Tuesday morning, November 4, 1930

We have discussed the Ashram observances, their necessity and the meaning of yajna. I propose now to discuss the meaning of the book, as I have understood it, on which we meditate daily and from which we recite some portion every day so as to complete all the chapters in a week, the book which we have accepted as our spiritual lighthouse. A letter which I had once received had suggested this to me, but Govindji’s letter received last week made me decide to take up the subject. He says that he tries to read the Anasaktiyoga but finds it very difficult to understand. Though I have tried to explain the meaning of the verses in a language which everyone can understand, a literal rendering is bound to present difficulties to the reader. If the subject itself is difficult, how much can simplicity of language help? I, therefore, intend here to present the subject itself in a manner easy to follow. A book which we want to consult in every activity of our life and with whose help we try to solve all our spiritual problems—if we try again and again to understand the meaning of this book from all possible points of view and meditate over it constantly, we shall ultimately come to be filled with its spirit. In all my spiritual difficulties I run to mother Gita and to this day she has never failed to comfort me. It is, therefore, not impossible that others who seek similar comfort from her may, if they know what new light I get from it every day, receive further help or see some altogether new meaning in the work.

I propose today to give the substance of Chapter XII which deals with bhakti. Whenever there is a wedding in the Ashram, we ask the couple to learn by heart and ponder over this Chapter as one of the five sacrifices they have to offer. Knowledge and action in the absence of devotion are dry as dust and are likely to make us confirmed bondslaves. Let us therefore commence this study of the Gita with a heart full of devotion.¹

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
There are 62 letters.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I

291. LETTER TO BEHRAMJI KHAMBHATTA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 4, 1930

Bhai Khambhatta,

I got both your letters and the Jivan spinning-wheel. It is not clear from either of your letters whether you got the letter I wrote to you at your Poona address. I will take care of the Jivan spinning-wheel and ultimately return it to you. I will also let you know my experience of it after I have tried it. Both of you should take care of your health. Your minds, of course, are pure. Kakasaheb is quite well. He will be released on the 28th at the latest.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6597

¹ The discourses, like those on the Ashram vows which preceded them, were intended to be read out at the Ashram prayer meetings; vide "Letter to Narandas Gandhi", 22-7-1930. They were later published under the title Gitabodh and an English translation appeared under the title Discourses on the Gita. For the text of these discourses, vide "Letters on the Gita", 21-2-1932.
CHI. MIRA,

Your letter. I do not think there is anything special about the Gandiv I got. It gave all the trouble, you had, to Kaka. I found out the cause of the trouble, removed it and it has never once given trouble. The second mal must be as thin as possible. I am using what Narandas sent from the Ashram. I think 6 threads. For the moving wheel the mal knot should be from the outside. Neither need be too tight. The wheel must move without any jerk. It may be that the metal rings are not rigidly fixed in the wheels or the axles are not straight or in a straight line. To me its beauty lies in its smooth working and less liability to go out of order. But as I have said in my last letter, you need not divert your attention for the sake of the wheel. I suppose it is true about wheels as it is true about most things that what suits one does not therefore suit all others. Experts have to adjust values of different types. We workers must be satisfied with that which will give the maximum of work with the minimum of trouble. If I had the requisite mechanical training or was a genius in the art, I should love to become an expert in carding and spinning and judging bows, wheels and taklis. But I must treat it as a forbidden ambition, though I do not leave off the search. The search for me here is duty Lo/keZ-

Long or short, I hope to do at least one bhajan daily. The Marathi I finished with Kaka’s assistance. The Bengali too I began but on learning from K. that they were all translated by the Poet himself or under his supervision, I left off, thinking it a profanation even to attempt. I have now, therefore, only 42 bhajans to do. Marathi being very short, I was able to do sometimes even three per night. I hope to finish before 42 days are out.

One question in your letter just now stares me about the Gandiv. I mount the wheel end on a beam of wood nearly 3 inches high and I fix it on to the beam with 2 movable pins. It thus lies slanting from top downward. It can be even mounted on a box to lie flat. K. tied it to the cane bottom of a chair and worked seated in a chair. I am glad you saw Alexander. He wrote to me directly. The letter was given to me about 10 days after its receipt. I knew from him that he was able quite by accident to see you. When you write to him please give him my love and tell him I had his letter. I must not attempt to write separately to him. Sufficient unto the day is the good thereof.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5418. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9653

293. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 7, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

Your letter. I am glad you are feeling yourself again. Please do not feel bound to try the Gandiv wheel. I know you have many things to attend to and with a regularly going wheel, you might be able to finish your sacrificial spinning without any bother.

Give Andrews my love. I can write a formal letter to him. But I do not want to write a mere formal letter to him. I would far rather let my silence speak to him. The pen is often a superfluity, if not a hindrance, to heart’s flow.

Mahadeo must not overstrain himself. I have written to him strongly about him, but you should pull him up whenever he is reckless about his health. My cold had disappeared altogether and, therefore, I did not even think of it when I wrote to you last week. Yes, just now it is a combination of dates and vegetables, the latter sparingly. But for the cold, I was getting on all right with the vegetables. I may not give you more time this week.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

I hope to finish the hymns earlier than I had expected.

From the original: C.W. 5419. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9652
294. LETTER TO PADMA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 7, 1930

CHI. PADMA,

I got your letter. The tumour must be cured. Do not neglect it. If Gangabehn were not with you, I would have certainly felt worried because of your having gone out of the Ashram. But since she is with you, I feel easy in my mind. Write to me regularly. You should write your letters in a bold and clear hand.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6114

295. LETTER TO SUSHILA GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 7, 1930

CHI. SUSHILA,

I have your letter. Though Manilal has lost 40 lb., he seems to have preserved his strength, for he has asked my advice about what to read. Pragji’s request regarding the Phoenix Ashram seems reasonable to me. However, it is for Manilal and you to decide about the matter. Moreover, I do not have even enough facts to arrive at a decision. Secondly, it is the common experience that, in such matters, only the person who held charge last can give the right decision. Even if Bharati’s handwriting is bad, she should write. Why should one feel ashamed to write to a friend? I must ask Krishnakant to forgive me. I don’t even remember his face. I have of course heard his name from you and read it in your letters. Won’t he forgive me if I send him heaps of blessings? Ask him. If he does not forgive me, plead on my behalf. Can you say that Sita has now become as strong as she was in South Africa? Do you give her fruit to eat? Convey my blessings to Pragji and write to him and tell him that service lies in doing the duty which comes to us unsought. Who are now with Gomati? What food do they get? Give me all the news you have about her.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4774
296. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI PANDYA

YERAVDA MANDIR, November 7, 1930

CHI. BHAGWANJI,

I have your letter. You will realize truth more and more as you will stop observing what others do and concentrate on your work. Nor should you plunge too much into thinking. Of course one has to think up to a point. After that one should depend only on faith. The mind too like the body suffers from indigestion when overstuffed. Like the body the mind too needs to be put at rest. That is why there has been enjoined constant repetition of Ramanama and other mantras. They instantly put the mind to rest. Now the meaning: The higher and the lower [para and apara] means, so to say, the unmanifest and the manifest. The Gita often discusses them. Let us understand it briefly as the Lord (Ishwar) or Brahman or even Truth. Self-evident truth is the higher and the other realized by an individual is therefore finite: [i.e.,] lower. A person who has a glimpse of (this aspect of) the Lord in His higher form is relieved from the good or bad fruit of his actions and all his problems and misgivings disappear. The Gita II. 59, viz., ‘the yearning too departs when he beholds the Supreme’ also conveys the same sense. A person who becomes engrossed in discharging whatever duty naturally comes to his lot, has as good as realized the para and this ought to put an end to his problems. He who cannot experience it has not [yet] identified himself with his duty. I have here tried to put it across so that you may understand it fully, but do ask me if you cannot, in spite of this.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 329. Courtesy: Bhagwanji Purushottam Pandya

---

1 The source has apara which is obviously a slip.
297. LETTER TO BALIBEHN VORA

YERAVDA MANDIR,

November 7, 1930

CHI. BALI,

I got a letter from you after many days. You may keep Manu with you and let her live as you wish and as may please Ba. I don’t wish at all to hurt you and your sister, and at any rate I would not do so from here. I know the great love that you two have for the children. Do not worry about Kanti. He is a brave boy and God, the Lord of us all, protects everyone. You may see him whenever you get an opportunity and you should afterwards write to me and give me news about him. I do occasionally have news about him, of course, from other sources.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 5058. Courtesy: Surendra Mashruwala

298. LETTER TO KRISHNAMAIYADEVI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

November 7, 1930

CHI. KRISHNAMAIYA,

I don’t remember any letter of yours to which I did not reply. If I have omitted to reply to any question, ask it again.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6220
299. LETTER TO TARAMATI MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

November 7, 1930

I got your letter. I was happy to read it. Besides rota, what else does Mathuradas eat? Does he take milk, fruit, etc.? Does he get any food from outside or does he eat only what he gets in jail? Is there space where he can walk a little? Does he have the strength to do it? Does he have any companion with him? Get all this information and write to me. Pyarelal is quite well. I also had a letter from Shankaran. When he comes to see you next, tell him that I had replied to his letter. Does Dilip get sufficient exercise? Do you take regular walks, too? If you do not, you should. If you have started reading anything, let me know what it is.

[From Gujarati]

Bapuni Prasadi: p. 103

300. LETTER TO MANSHANKAR J. TRIVEDI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

November 8, 1930

CHI. MANU,

I got Father’s last letter. I do not write a separate letter to him. You will now rapidly recover your normal health. It may also have happened that, during this illness, you got rid of the toxins in your body. I suppose all of you are in Poona now. This letter, therefore, will have wandered about a bit before you get it.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7769
301. LETTER TO DUDHIBEHN VALJI DESAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 8, 1930

CHI. DUDHIBEHN,

I have had no letter from you recently. I am writing this because Valji has gone back to the temple. Do you feel nervous? We shall win true swaraj only through the sacrifices of men of his sincerity and purity. We should, therefore, rejoice at his self-sacrifice, and not at all feel unhappy. God protects everyone. Write to me about all your circumstances.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7409. Courtesy: V. G. Desai

302. LETTER TO NANABHAI I. MASHRUWALA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 8, 1930

BHAI NANABHAI,

I read your remarks below Tara’s letter. What you have been doing is enough. If a person three feet in height feels unhappy because he cannot reach with his hand as high as a man six-foot tall can do, he condemns the Creator of the world. He who does his duty with love and devotion for God and to the best of his ability, discharges his debt fully. I believe that you do this. Why, then, should you feel discontented or unhappy? You should, of course, try and find out why your body is so weak. But it seems that all of you brothers have weak constitutions from your birth. You should discover the cause and if, in your own case, there is no remedy, you should remove it in respect of persons under your care.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati. G.N. 4776
303. LETTER TO TARA MASHRUWALA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 8, 1930

CHI. TARA (OF AKOLA),

I have your letter. (After how many months did I get one?) You say nothing about the headache from which you suffered after the injury to your head. Give me one day’s sample from your diary. You can teach Sita a little Sanskrit even as she plays with you. She should of course sing Jhanda Uncha Rahe Hamara, but likewise she should also keep murmuring some easy verse from the Gita.

Give my blessings to Mother.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4775

304. LETTER TO ROHINI KANAIYALAL DESAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 8, 1930

CHI. ROHINI,

I wrote to you even before I got your letter, after reading in the papers about Kanjibhai’s arrest. How fortunate all of you are? To what term has your father been sentenced? How old is he? And you cannot say that only you have been left out. It was no ordinary courage you displayed when you held the horse a prisoner. God inspired you with such strength at that moment. Win many similar triumphs in future.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2654

1 “May Our flag fly high”
305. LETTER TO LALITA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 8, 1930

CHI. LALITA,

I have your letter. You have done all right in going with Gangabehn. Work sincerely now and be brave. For your age, the handwriting is bad and the language also is not quite correct. Make an effort and improve both. You can do that even while you stay there. What you will require for the effort is not time but perseverance. Progressing slowly, you can improve quite a lot.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9218

306. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

Y. M.,
November 8, 1930

CHI. KANTA

I have your letter. It is well that you have gone with Gangabehn. Serve her with care and be brave. You have the capacity. You have the desire. You now have an opportunity. May God give you good health. Promise me that you will never do anything shameful. Gangabehn also has great faith in you.

May God bless you. Do write to me in detail from time to time.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: Chandrakanta Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library
307. LETTER TO GOVIND PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 9, 1930

CHI. GOVIND,

I have your letter. If your eyes are weak, it is right that you should not read much. How many chapters of the Gita have you learnt by heart? If you learn the whole of the Gita by heart, you will have plenty of material for reflection when your mind is not occupied otherwise. Then it will not be necessary for you to read anything else. You should, of course, fully understand what you learn by heart.

Is the yarn which you spin sufficiently strong? Is it even? Who makes the slivers?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3943

308. LETTER TO JUGATRAM DAVE

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 9, 1930

BHAI JUGATRAM,

Your letter is full of information. So far, everything seems to be going as it should. We are being tested well in every respect. As long as you are free, write to me regularly. The fact that all the activities are going on normally is a sign of great efficiency.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2686
309. LETTER TO RAMCHANDRA KHARE

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 9, 1930

CHI. RAMBHAI.

I have your nice letter. Your handwriting too is good. It is all right that you draw lines. I do not remember having not replied to any of your letters.

It is good that with the advance of winter you are also gaining weight. If you take enough exercise you will beat the cold instead of the cold beating you.

Do you write to Lakshmibehn from time to time? It is good that you are learning bhajans by heart. You have to preserve and enhance the prestige of Panditji’s position. That will happen only when you outshine him. Panditji never had the opportunity that you have at your age.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 286. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn Khare

310. LETTER TO SHANKERLAL BANKER

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 9, 1930

CHI. SHANKERLAL,

I have your letter. It would be nice if Prabhudas wrote about the science of weaving. I cannot suggest anything right now about spinning, etc. Discuss it with Kaka when he is released. I have talked to him mainly about these subjects. He has become quite familiar with the difficulties faced by the spinners.

Have you come across any spinning-wheels that deserve to be given a prize at first sight? If so, we must appoint an examiner and finish that work. Amubhai and Mathuradas are qualified for it. You have to be connected with it of course. I suggest that Purushottam and Kesu of Jeevan-chakra should be taken as advisers. If Annada Babu has studied the science of the spinning-wheel, he too should be taken as an examiner. I cannot think of other names at the moment.
Prabha Devi wrote to me about Tarini. Satis Babu has been rendered helpless without him.

I had also read in the newspapers about Brailsford’s visit. I also read his commendation of the work. What are Manhar and Prabodh doing?

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S. N. 32731

311. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

November 9, 1930

CHI. PRABHUDAS,

I have your letter. Go and see Devakinandan’s spinning-wheel. The name Savyasachi is of course too high-sounding for your spinning-wheel. ‘Bharat’ will not do either. Since, however, you reminded me of Maganlal, I have suggested his name for your spinning-wheel. It was he who transformed spinning-work into a science. That name, therefore, is not improper for your spinning-wheel. ‘Magan’ means ‘roominess’ and also ‘pleasure’. It is your claim that your spinning-wheel gives people pleasure. And finally, Maganlal had the virtues of Bharat and Bharat was his ideal. Your purpose also will therefore be served. After this, you may adopt whatever name you like. If Bhavanidutta is a fit person, you should take him in. You should not say ‘such a one’ with reference to any person. If Bhavanidutta does come, you should provide him food and drink at least.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33009

1 Hemprabha Das Gupta
3 H. N. Brailsford, English journalist, author of Rebel India (1932)
4 ‘Savyasachi’ was one of the names of Arjuna, who could shoot arrows with both the right and the left hand. Here, it would mean a spinning-wheel which could be turned with either hand.
5 Presumably, by his inventive skill
6 Rama’s devoted brother in the Ramayana
7 Prabhudas’s desire to name his spinning-wheel ‘Bharati’
312. LETTER TO BUDHABHAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 9, 1930

Bhai Budhabhai,

I received your letter. Practice writing with ink. Writing with a pencil is a form of violence to the reader. Of course, when writing with a pencil cannot be avoided, one is helpless.

A fast is not a substitute for eating less. A fast by itself sometimes involves eating too much. The right way of ensuring that you eat less is that at every meal, you should ask them to serve you only once, and that too, only in a small quantity. Never eat so much that your hunger may be fully satisfied. Stop eating as soon as you feel that you have eaten so much as would permit you to eat the same quantity again. As long as you have not accustomed yourself to eating sparingly, it would be desirable not to insist on eating only five articles of food at one meal. Eating sparingly will by itself mean that you eat only a few articles of food at a time. You may take salt in reasonable quantity. If you settle down at one place, why should you not grow in the yard some vegetables which would take only a short time to grow? For instance, you could grow fenugreek leaves.

Blessings from
Bapu

[PS.]

Firmly cling to your resolution not to be alone with Parvati.

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33122
313. LETTER TO KUNVARJI MEHTA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 10, 1930

BHAI KUNVARJI,

I got your cheerful letter. I am very happy to know that you have regained health. I have often observed that people who enthusiastically respond to a call for service and plunge into the work improve in health.

Write to Pragji and tell him that his living in exile is also a form of service. When the Ruler of our destinies requires him in India, He will certainly bring him here.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2688

314. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 10, 1930

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I have your letter. You must have received my detailed letters. I will arrange that you get a Gujarati newspaper. I remember that you had written to me about it some time ago, but I forgot the matter altogether. What a careless fellow I am! I want you soon to recover your calm. I hope my letter to Jayaprakash comforted him. You may also write a separate letter and post it directly to me, whenever you wish.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3378
315. FRAGMENT OF LETTER TO MAHALAKSHMI MADHAVJI THAKKAR

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 10, 1930

... will not remain backward. Both the positions are acceptable to us. Having shed fear, why should we worry about anything? My blessings to all the women.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6803

316. LETTER TO BULAKHIDAS

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 10, 1930

BHAI BULAKHIDAS,

I have your letter. It is only through sacrifices such as yours and your wife’s that the drink evil will end. I hope that your wife has now fully recovered. Give my compliments and blessings to her.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3138

317. LETTER TO ABBAS

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 10, 1930

CHI. ABBAS,

I got your letter. I have hit upon a simple method of ascertaining the count of yarn, and it is this: the number of rounds in the quantity of yarn equal to the weight of one anna should be taken

---

1 The addressee cannot be identified. However, the letter is listed in the G.N. Register among those addressed to Mahalakshmi Madhavji Thakkar.
as its count. I understand what you say about the rest.
I hope you keep good health.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6304

318. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIIDYA

November 10, 1930

CHI. GANGABEHN,

I have your long letter. But it was not too long for me. You should not worry about your spellings when writing to me. Your aim should be to explain your meaning, and I follow what you say.

You have undertaken a heavy responsibility. But the Lord protects you. He has rewarded your work with success in the past and will do so in future as well.

I am writing to Lilabehn. How can we help her if she herself does not keep up courage? We have resolved to solve the problem of women. In fact it is being solved. They have submitted themselves to a fine test. The whole world has its eyes on the women of India. Write in detail to me from time to time. If you don’t get time to write, ask somebody else to do so. You should make someone your secretary.

I have received no letter for Kakasaheb yet.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—6: G.S. Gangabehnne, p. 45; also C.W. 8761. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

319. LETTER TO MANU GANDHI

November 10, 1930

CHI. MANUDI,

Your letter was very good. And the handwriting was fine, too. You should make further progress. I see that your rate of spinning per hour is greater than mine. Do you spin 306 rounds or yards? I hope you know that there is a difference between the two. A round=4 ft., and a yard=3 ft. On which type of wheel do you spin, and what is the count of the yarn? Nobody, including myself, knows when I shall be released. Even the Government doesn’t know. But why should we think about the matter? What difference does it make whether or not I am released? You ask me to send you a picture. But how can I get one in jail? We can’t get such things in a jail. If, however, I come across any, I will preserve it for you.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 1505. Courtesy: Manubehn Mashruwala

320. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

November 10, 1930

Khuda Hafiz

DEAR DAUGHTER RAIHANA,

I have your letter. I was very glad.¹

Shouldn’t you regard this much Urdu enough for the day? If, even after your second lesson I do not write a few lines in Urdu, you might give me up as an unteachable pupil. What should I do then? If you don’t have to spend too much time and take too much trouble in writing Urdu so neatly, continue to write to me in Urdu. That would help me to keep up some Urdu without special effort. You are all free to laugh as much as you wish at my bad handwriting and at spelling that is still worse. But please don’t give me up as unteachable.

But I must say that there is no limit to your cunning. I don’t know where you learnt it. I certainly do not remember to have taught that. The poor girl! As soon as I permit her to write in Urdu, she goes further and asks me to write in Urdu. But, having adopted you, how can I get away from the fact? Vandemataram to Mother. Embrace Father on my behalf, and pull his beard hard.

Blessings from

BAPU

SMT. RAIHANABEHN

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9623

¹ The letter so far is in Urdu. The rest is in Gujarati.
321. LETTER TO JAISUKHLAL GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 10, 1930

CHI. JAISUKHLAL,

I have your letter. If you keep good health without milk, I don’t wish to press you to drink it. Don’t wait till your health has completely gone down before you start drinking it.

For some time, write to me regularly. About Chalala, do what is possible after discussing the matter with Shankerlal. How are Ramjibhai and Jivanlal? Convey my blessings to both.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./III

322. LETTER TO SHANTA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 10, 1930

CHI. SHANTA,

Your letter. Kashinath writes that you have fever again. How is it? You must be careful in everything. It is well you have gone with Gangabehn. You can come back if the climate there does not suit you.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 5260

323. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

[November 11, 1930]\(^1\)

CHI. NARANDAS,

This time, too, I got your packet in two parts, first the English letters and then on the next day the others. There was also a previous occasion when this happened. They open the packet and look into the letters, hurriedly or carefully as they feel inclined before they hand them over to me. They are of course required to read the letters. The

\(^1\) The letter was evidently begun earlier and completed on this date.
letters are given to me in two parts so that I may get some of them at any rate as early as possible.

I had again a long letter from Keshu. I find much substance in what he says. He has gone deep into the matter. I have formed the impression that . . . is hiding something. Read my letter to Keshu and to . . . 1 before you pass them on. I have asked him what he thinks about Keshu. I think his unpunctuality and other shortcomings are such as we can tolerate. Being sincere, he does not want to make a false show. He refuses to do anything which is beyond his capacity or which does not appeal to him. But he has certainly the spirit of service in him. Since he is pure at heart, I think it is our duty to bear his minor faults. But Mahadev is there now and he says that he will abide by Mahadev’s decision. If Mahadev cannot settle the matter, in the last resort I will do so.

What you say about Hari-ichchha is correct. If you cannot stop the marriage from taking place in the Ashram, put up with the event. I had indeed guessed about it and that is why I put that question to Harilal in my letter to him.

Did you read the further details about speed in spinning on the takli which Balkrishna gave in his letter this time? It is increasing there. I count the attainment of this speed a very important achievement. I remember that four years ago a speed of hundred rounds per hour was considered excellent. Now 160 rounds is the standard for passing, according to Vinoba. Gangabehn has undertaken a big task. But God has always blessed her undertakings with success. Don’t mind if Kusum has gone. Who will now help you personally? I am sure you will feel hard pressed for want of enough workers to help you. Owing to so many hands having left, the burden of work is likely to increase rather than diminish. Who will take Kanta’s place? Send me a final list of all the women who leave.

I approve of your diet. If it suits you, it is almost an ideal combination. Do not increase the quantity of ground-nuts and do not eat ground-nuts and copra on the same day. The quantity of milk must not decrease now. Half a pound is the minimum you should take. It is Dr. Muthu’s view that that quantity supplies the necessary vitamins. If you feel weak, increase the quantity of milk or curds.

1 The names have been omitted.
2 ibid
Read my letter to Bhansali. If he still wishes to be admitted, do what you think best. If you are firm with him, you will have fewer difficulties with him. Also read my letters to Lilaben.

I don’t see any substance in Mathew’s suspicion. Read my reply to him. Parnerkar should take rest. Perhaps change of air may also be necessary. He ought to improve his health.

I must get now a strong piece of leather for the soles or a new pair of utility shoes. There are people who deserve “shoes”, but, when they get them, they do not accept them very cheerfully. I, on the other hand, became fit for “shoes” long ago and am now impatient to get them!

Send with anyone who may come on a visit here Krishnadas’s books in Kashi’s possession. I am in no hurry about them.¹

Tuesday morning, November 11, 1930

Tell Devdas that I have still not received his letter. Where and when was it posted? What did he say in it? Let him write again. If he can give me the date of that letter, I can make further inquiries.

Does anyone go and visit Somabhai and others who are in jail? I know that it is difficult to visit such a large number. But you should select those who are likely to be visited by nobody else. It would be good if you could make some arrangement for visiting such prisoners.

Prabhavati gets no Gujarati papers at all. We regularly receive Mumbai Samachar and other papers, and out of these you should send one or two to her. She wrote to me about this once or twice but I forgot to mention it in my letters. I had a separate letter from . . . ² yesterday. Before I could write to him the letter which I wished to do, I had this letter of repentance from him and so the reply which I have given to him is altogether different from what it would otherwise have been. The impression I have formed from his letter is that he is still hiding much. You will understand this if you read my letter. It has been a painful story.

¹ For the text of the discourse which followed, vide, “Letters on the Gita”—Ch. I.

² The name has been omitted.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
Read my letter to Surendra Mashruwala. Call him and tell him that, if he wishes to come and stay in the Ashram, he is welcome to do so.

There are 82 letters.
From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I

324. LETTER TO SURENDRA MASHRUWALA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 11, 1930

CHI. SURENDRRA (OF VIDYAPITH).

I got your letter. You need not feel worried. The disease from which you suffer is quite common these days. If you take nutmeg, take only a pinch of it daily. But the real remedy is mental. You should always keep your body and mind fully occupied. Never remain in a place where you are alone. You should eat simple food, and at fixed hours. If you stand it, you should bathe in cold water. You may live in the Ashram, if you feel happy there, or go to Wardha. I think you will probably feel uncomfortable at Wardha. If you prefer to go to the Ashram, Narandas will call you up there. Don’t worry at all. I will certainly write to you frequently. You should write freely to me. More in the next letter.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
After Kakasaheb is released, take his advice and then do what you wish.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 1506. Courtesy: Manubehn Mashruwala
325. LETTER TO BEHRAMJI KHAMBHATTA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 11, 1930

BHAISHRI KHAMBHATTA,

I have your letter. I have tried the Jivan spinning-wheel. It works quite well but at present I am experimenting on the Gandiv wheel. The Jivan wheel is used by Kakasaheb. He finds it quite convenient to spin on it, whereas he did not on the Gandiv wheel. Personally, I have fallen in love with the latter for its simplicity and low cost. However, I can give no final opinion yet. Why cannot you experiment with a milk diet in Bombay? There is no risk at all in doing so. Probably curds will agree better than milk. If the palate is no problem with you, I would advise you to try the experiment of a milk diet immediately. It will certainly do you no harm; it provides sufficient nourishment.

To you both,

Blessings from

BAPU

BHAIBEHRAMJI KHAMBHATTA
275 HORNBY ROAD
FORT, BOMBAY

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6598

326. LETTER TO HEMPRABHA DAS GUPTA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 11, 1930

DEAR SISTER,

Are the Gita recitations at Pratishthan conducted on the same lines as at Sabarmati? In that case, you may note that we have decided now to complete the recitation within seven days instead of fourteen. Write what you and Satis Babu think about it. If the period in which you complete the recitation is different, you need take no notice of this letter.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1675.
327. LETTER TO C. F. ANDREWS

YERAVDA CENTRAL PRISON,
November 12, 1930

MY DEAR CHARLIE,

Though I wrote to Mira only the other day sending you my love and telling her I must not write to you as I could not write all I wanted to, I cannot restrain myself from writing to tell you how delighted I have felt to get a letter from you directly. I think of you every day and that often. You will give a good account of yourself wherever you are and you do so because you will always be where you are led.

I have not got any of your two books as yet. I read the Times review copied in a local newspaper.

I was sorry to hear that Gurudev had not kept well in America and that he was returning. The marvel is that he can stand the strain at all at his age. Please give my love to him and the Greggs.

Love.

MOHAN

[PS.]

Kaka is with me given as companion. He sends you his love. Both of us have kept well.

C. F. ANDREWS, ESQ.
C/O PHELPS STOKES FUND
101 PARK AVENUE
NEW YORK CITY
U.S.A.

From a photostat of the original: C.W. 9318. Courtesy: Africana Museum

328. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 13, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

Your letter. The arrangement about translating my remarks on the Gita chapters is quite good. I shall look forward to the joint handiwork. I want to pour myself out into those chapters. This means additional work for you and will take up a great deal of your time. However, I know you won’t feel the strain of it, as you love that work.

Here is a letter from Andrews, this time, for me to send you. He could not restrain himself from writing to me directly. I have at last given him a few lines. Don’t give any time to the Gandiv till Keshu has obtained mastery over it and gives you a machine in working order. For me it continues to provide further delights. The original mal for the motor wheel at last had to be discarded, as I could not cut it any further for tightening it. It has to be fairly stout and thick. I had nothing with me in the hand-spun mals of the required thickness. As you know, I criminally neglected to learn how to make these little odds and ends. And I was bent on having only the hand-spun stuff. I had to give full two hours to the first attempt. It was successful and was possible only because only a short length was required. My second attempt took me barely half an hour. I had to make another for emergency, which occurred at once, for the original threads from which I made the mal were weak. I have now thought of a device of quickly twisting to the required strength practically any number of threads. My third attempt will therefore mean still less time. And meantime I am having now an accumulation of little bits of stout hand-spun chords which I can use for watchguards and the like. All this gives me delight and comfort, for it means greater mastery over the wheel. And this has become so easily possible because of the incredible simplicity of the Gandiv. But I am not going to regard my opinion as final or authoritative till I have corroboration from someone who knows much more than I do of the mechanism of the charkha. But I warn you against regarding this detailed description as any incentive for you to tackle the Gandiv. I know if I was outside, I could not have given all this time, thought and attention to the thing.
It might not have even been desirable if it was to exclude other urgent matters. I have given you the details merely to share my joy with you.
The charkha, the takli and the bow have become a fascination with me. I do not seem to get tired of them. Daily I wish I had more time to give to these things. I want to secure greater output on all the three.
But I am so clumsy and so stupid and slow. Somehow or other I feel that it is not the rigidity of old age that prevents from gaining a greater output. I have not the proper knack I fear. However I find satisfaction from the knowledge that God will accept this little offering as the best possible for me in the circumstances. If you can stand the cold bath in winter, nothing can be more bracing. You will not strive against nature. If there is no instantaneous warm reaction, you must revert to the warm bath. The condition of reaction is vigorous rubbing with the bare hands. I had sorrowfully to give up cold baths only after that wretched attack of pleurisy in London in 1914. Your food is quite good. It may be necessary to take more ghee. Experience has shown that you need a fair measure to keep strength, heat and weight.

Gangadevi may walk a little. She must take measured steps and begin with a few minutes only at a time. All risk of a setback should be avoided. She will get rid of the urinary trouble by taking a hip-bath. If the water is chilly a little hot water may be added to take the chill off. This hip-bath is almost an infallible remedy.

Is not this uncle, who has married, somewhat elderly and who vies with you in indifferent spellings, though very learned?

So according to your birthdate, you are only a babe a few months old!! You have therefore many a summer to look forward to.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5420. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9654

329. LETTER TO SHARDA C. SHAH

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 13, 1930

CHI. SHARDA,

Your letter. Continue to have sun-bath and oil-massage. While spinning on the takli, the thread should never snap. I could not understand your saying that there is little waste on the spinning-wheel. If you tell me the amount of waste in a given number of rounds of a particular count I would understand it. Calculate it this way. There is another way also. Find out how often you pulled out the yarn and how often it snapped in the course of half an hour. Is it clear to you that there is a difference between calculating the waste and [the frequency of snapping]? If you have understood this, write to me what this difference is.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9894. Courtesy: Sharda behn G. Chokhawala

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
330. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

November 13, 1930

CHI. VASUMATI,

I have your insipid letter. How is it that, though participating in such a great revolution, you could not think of anything to write about? It is possible, of course, that the mind may be stunned by the great changes taking place and reason may stop working; if so, one cannot think of anything to write about. At such a time, one’s mind may be wholly absorbed in work and can think about nothing else. If you are in such a sublime state of mind, I have nothing to say. I would then be satisfied even with a letter to this effect: “Bapu, everything is going well. Vasumati.”

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9293

---

331. FRAGMENT OF LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

November 13, 1930

I also see an error of principle in what you say regarding spinning and French. Having dedicated yourself completely to spinning, you cannot do anything else for your personal benefit while spinning. If somebody comes for a chat with you, you may talk with him for the sake of good manners. But you cannot argue that, instead of his taking up your time in talking, he may as well teach you French. You may, if you so wish, escape from the necessity of having to talk to him, and he also will not go on talking just in order that he may stay longer. But once he has agreed to be your teacher, he is bound to sit with you sufficiently long. All this has reference to the time when we are spinning for yajna. I have been realizing the force of this argument in my own experience. If, while I am spinning, I start thinking about other things, the speed of spinning and the count and

---

1 The source does not mention the addressee. But in “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 13/17-11-1930 where Gandhiji discusses spinning as yajna he asks Narandas to “understand” what he has said on the subject in his letter to Mahadev Desai. Presumably this is the letter.
evenness of spinning are adversely affected. Imagine Romain Rolland or Beethoven playing on the piano. They would be so absorbed in the music that they would neither be able to talk with anyone nor think about anything else. An artist is not apart from his art. If this is true in regard to the music of the piano, how much more so must it be regarding the spinning-yajna? It may be true that, as we are today, we cannot act in this spirit but that is another matter. If we keep our ideal pure, we are bound to succeed one day in putting it into practice. Let me repeat that I am not criticizing what has happened. Pitifully imperfect myself, what right have I to criticize anybody? Do I put into practice all that I know to be true? If I had done that, the seven lakh villages would have been filled with the sweet music of the spinning-wheel long before now. If even now I could live perfectly in conformity with what I know to be right, the cult of the spinning-wheel would spread fast all over the country though I am here in jail. “Though the aspiration is beyond my strength at present, the mind is set firmly on it. If God so decrees, I shall become the essence of light.” (Plagiarized from Raychandbhai, with apologies to him) I shall tire of praising the music of the spinning-wheel when Malaviyaji does of praising the Bhagavata Purana. We cannot, of course, speak of a spinning-wheel Purana. It will be for those who come after us to compose a Purana and they will do so if we have achieved anything which can be a worthy theme. Just now, we are composing a few tunes of the spinning-wheel music. How great the music will be which ultimately results from them, will depend on our tapascharya and the measure of our self-dedication. . . .

1 Omission as in the source. What follows seems to have been taken from a subsequent letter.
wholly absorbed in the work which we are doing, we should consciously go on repeating Ramanama. While spinning, we generally talk with somebody or listen to what people tell us or do some other work. This kind of spinning is certainly not yajna. If the yajna of spinning is a sacred obligation, the time which we give to it should be wholly dedicated to it. He who lives his life in the spirit of yajna and works without attachment will always be engaged in one task at a time. Though I know this well enough, I was the first to sin (be it more or less) in this respect, for it can be said that I never sat down in a secluded spot to spin quietly, that is, in complete silence. On my silence days, while spinning I either used to hear the mail being read out to me or listened to what people wanted to tell me. Even here I have not given up that bad habit. Is it any wonder, then, that though I spin regularly I have made no progress at all in the field and have barely acquired the speed of 200 rounds an hour? I see in myself many other deficiencies, besides this; for instance, while I am spinning the thread snaps, I do not know how to make a belt, know very little about spindle-holders, cannot tell the quality of cotton, cannot as certain with precision the evenness of the thread and cannot judge the quality of the fibre. Does this befit one who claims to do spinning as yajna? Is it then surprising that the progress of khadi should be slow? If God is in truth God of the poor, and certainly He is that, and if khadi is the symbol of His grace, then I am the oracle, or what you will, who proclaimed this truth, and yet how slack have I been in putting into practice my own teaching! I, therefore, never feel tempted to criticize anybody else in this matter. I am only trying to describe to you my own deficiency in this regard and my pain, and the self-understanding and knowledge which result from that pain. Though I have occasionally expressed such sentiments while talking with Kaka, you are the first person to whom I have expressed them so clearly, and I got the opportunity to do this because you combined the study of French with spinning. Let me repeat that I see no fault on your part in having done that. On the contrary, I see what an imperfect preacher of the mantra of spinning I have been. I knew the mantra but did not observe its ritual perfectly, and, therefore, it failed to reveal its full power. Apply to all activities in life the argument which I have applied here to spinning. You will then be able to feel in your imagination the wonderful peace and sense of fulfilment which we can experience in our life. This is the meaning of the verse, “Yoga is skill in work“. If we cultivate this attitude, we shall attempt only what is within our capacity to do and shall rest content with it. I am convinced that by working in this spirit we shall have contributed most to our own development and that of society. But all this will be mere philosophizing if I myself do not follow it in practice in everything I do. I am certainly making progress day by day in my effort to do so. What will happen when I am released, God alone knows. If possible, observe this at least in practice. Spin in this systematic manner the number of rounds which you regard as your daily contribution to the spinning-yajna. You may spin the rest in any manner that you can, for the purpose of increasing the country’s wealth. I feel tempted to go on writing still further. But I think I should stop here.

[From Gujarati]

Gitabodh, pp. 29-32

332. LETTER TO SHIVABHAI PATEL

November 13, 1930

CHI. SHIVABHAI,

I came to know only from your postcard that you had been released. Pyarelal had completely forgotten to tell me about it. How did you get scabies? It is a disease which is in fact quite easy to cure. I hope you observe proper restrictions in your diet. Write to me and tell me how long you were in the temple, and describe your experience in it.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9501

1 Bhagavad Gita, II. 50
333. LETTER TO GANGADEVI SANADHYA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 13, 1930

CHI. GANGADEVI,

I have not written for a long time and you seem to have taken a vow of not writing to me unless I do. I have written to Mirabehn fully regarding walking and the pain you have. She will explain to you. Do not hesitate to write to me anything you feel like. How is Totaramji?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2543

334. LETTER TO ABBAS TYABJI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 14, 1930

BHURRR TO WHITE-BEARDED YOUNG MAN, THREE WEEKS’ GUEST.

If I write in Gujarati to the daughter, who, though a mere girl, tries to look old, why should I not write in the mother tongue to the father who, though old, is getting younger day by day? In the West people communicate by means of wires, and transmit images too. I have the gift of the East. I see before me a youthful face, white-bearded but bursting with hearty laughter, and I hear the man telling the reporter: “I shall be back in the guest-house within three weeks.” I have in my pocket the likeness of his face notwithstanding that I don’t have a pocket. The old man has played his part marvellously well. The whole family is like him! May God protect him. Khuda Hafiz.

Bhurrr from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9573
335. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 14, 1930

CHI. KUSUM (SENIOR),

What shall I write to you? Once you sat down to write to me, you could give me plenty of news. Now adhere to the resolution you have made. You can, if you wish, complain about your lot to me. We must find our happiness in suffering. One may say that that is the teaching of the Gita. I don’t however wish to give a sermon.

I had at last to ask them to send me a pair of sandals. I require no clothes. I use the rug supplied from here. And I also have with me the one which I had taken with me when starting for the march. I have received plenty of khadi. I hope you are all right now. Kakasaheb will be released by the 28th.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1809

336. LETTER TO TEHMINA P. JOSHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 14, 1930

DEAR SISTER,

I have your letter. I am not and will not be bored. Please do not hesitate to write to me whenever you wish. It was good that you mentioned Dadabhai [Naoroji] in your letter. He was like a father to me. When I first reached England he was the only senior person to whom I had a letter [of introduction]. He took me under his care then and never left me afterwards.

It was he who led us during our early days in South Africa. Every fortnight (almost) I used to have a letter from him. Today I am enjoying the fruit of his paternal blessings.

Blessings from
MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 115

1Underlined in the source
337. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI PANDYA
November 14, 1930

CHI. BHAGWANJI,

I have your letter. Real progress appears to be slow but in fact it is the short cut to our destination. As man engages more and more in the service that has fallen to his lot, without attachment to the results, he attains freedom from desire without effort. Control over the sense-organs, too, then becomes an absolutely easy thing.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 330. Courtesy: Bhagwanji Purushottam Pandya

338. LETTER TO PADMA
YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 14, 1930

CHI. PADMA,

What a careless girl you are! Why do you write what looks like the marks left by a fly crawling across the sheet, and spoil your handwriting right from this age? Can you not get ink there? And you don’t write anything about your health. You are quite right when you say that our sacrifices are nothing as compared to the sacrifices made by the women on that side. Well, then, learn to make similar sacrifices while you live there and devote yourself wholly to service.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6115
339. LETTER TO ABDUL KADIR BAWAZEER

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 14, 1930

BHAI IMAM SAHEB,

When you get this letter, you will have been released. I heard that you had had fever recently, but I hope you have completely recovered now. Let us wait and see when you return as the Government’s guest. I have heard from others about your activities in jail, but I should like to have a first-hand account from you. Has Amina calmed down now? Did Qureshi see you?

Blessings and Vandemataram from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6646

340. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

November 14, 1930

CHI. GANGABEHN,

Your letter to Kakasaheb was received late. I understood the situation better from it. People certainly give you credit. But exercise the utmost patience. You have taken upon yourself a great responsibility. But you should meditate over those three verses which we have recently included in the prayers. Those who work for God with His name ever on their lips, He makes them His special concern and ensures the success of their undertakings, and it is He who guides them; why, then, should we worry?

Padma seems to have got fever. She has a swelling too. If you cannot judge what to do to cure her, get her examined by Haribhai. If you can judge what to do, don’t be afraid to apply any treatment you think best. Even when doing that, you should feel that you are guided by God and take measures which seem best at the moment; having done that, you should rest completely free from worry. Do not take upon yourself a burden beyond your strength to carry.

Man has ill-treated woman and is still doing so. But the remedy for this ultimately lies in woman’s own hand. If she stops thinking that she is weak, she can be free this very day. The really strong are not those who are strong in body. Ravana, who was a demon, that is, had physical strength, was helpless before the seemingly weak Sita. I am sure you remember the story. Sita was under the protection of a boon to the effect that anyone who cast an evil glance at her would be instantly burnt to ashes. Ravana knew this and that is why, though he carried her away, he could not touch her person with impure thoughts.
He had to entreat Sita to let him embrace her. He threatened her time and again in the hope that she might yield; but unless she yielded of her own free will he was, in spite of his strength, as helpless as a goat.
Though physically Sita was utterly helpless, in spirit she was a lioness.

We know the meaning of a boon. It is only a symbol. Every woman who has inviolable purity of character enjoys the same boon as Sita did. Any man who casts an evil glance at such a woman would be instantly burnt to ashes. If man has ill-treated woman, the reason is that she, too, has yielded to lust. Being enslaved by passion, both forgot their higher nature, forgot that they were souls and remained mere bodies. So far as the body is concerned, man is undoubtedly the stronger of the two. Hence woman was enslaved by man and the impression came to prevail that she was helpless before man, that she was weak and always needed man’s protection.

As souls man and woman are equal. If a man does not recognize his spiritual nature but a woman does, the latter is the stronger of the two, as Sita was stronger than Ravana, and the other remains weaker, as was Ravana. Don’t believe, moreover, that this was possible only in the time of Rama. Even today there are countless Sitas in the world who require no man’s help and are yet safe against all danger. One such is Janakimaiya. You must have seen her. Whenever I went to Bombay, she came and saw me. She had not much intellectual capacity to speak of, but had boundless strength of spirit. She must have been good-looking in her youth. She embraced a hard path of service in the prime of her youth. I have known other Indian women like her, and also Englishwomen. They are examples of but a small measure of spiritual strength. A woman who has fully grown in soul deserves to be revered as the world’s mother.

For those who wish to cultivate such strength, satyayuga exists today. Your task, therefore, is to make women strong. That is the right method of securing justice from men. A man like me may guide you and awaken other men to a consciousness of their duty. But my capacity for serving women is limited.

Women alone can serve women perfectly. It is my ambition, through the Ashram, to prepare not one such worker but many. An opportunity to do so has presented itself to us just now.

If you have not followed this, ask me to explain again.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—6: G.S. Gangabehnne, pp. 45-7; also C.W. 8764. Courtesy:
Gangabehn Vaidya

341. LETTER TO PREMLILA THACKERSEY

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 14, 1930

DEAR SISTER,

You must have got my letter acknowledging receipt of the cotton, and also the one I wrote in reply to yours. Please send again three pounds of cotton. I hope all you sisters are well.

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 4816. Courtesy: Premlila Thackersey

342. LETTER TO GANGABEHN JHAVERI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 15, 1930

CHI. GANGABEHN (JHAVERI),

I got your letter. I see that you are really ill. It will be enough if you can get fruits like oranges, sweet lemons, fresh grapes, etc. It will also help you if you take dried black grapes or raisins soaked in water. As long as there are symptoms of dysentery, you should very carefully remove the skin, or drink the juice. Whenever the stomach is out of order, you can certainly fast for a few days no matter how weak you are and you will always find that fasting benefits you.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3108

343. LETTER TO PREMA BEHN KANTAK

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 15, 1930

CHI. PREMA,

I got your letter. You certainly did well in consulting a doctor. But I cling to the cure I have suggested. You may, if you wish, carry out the doctor’s treatment afterwards. Fast for at least seven days before you do anything else. We should never be afraid of fasting. During a seven-day fast, you will be able to attend to almost all your work. When I first undertook a long fast, I did not rest for a single day and experienced no difficulty on that account. It was a seven-day fast. At that time, I did have some fat on my body. Only a person who has no reserve of fat is forced to lie down during a fast. After two days of fasting, you will actually feel stronger. For two days, you may get a feeling of being hungry, but it will disappear after that and real hunger will return when the blood has been purified. Till that time, you should take an enema every day and keep the bowels clean. If, after taking the enema, you remain in the ardha sarvangasana posture, the water may even reach the large intestine. You may omit this, however, if you do not know how to do it. During the fast, you should drink plenty of water with soda bicarb and salt mixed in it. You may mix five grains of salt and ten grains of soda in every eight ounces of water and may safely drink up to eight cups of such water. You should also take sun-bath. I should like you to do this without any fear in your mind. You may tell the doctor about it, if you wish. Probably he, too, will approve of this cure. Many doctors now know about the miraculous effects of fasts.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10241; also C.W. 6690. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

VOL.50 : 23 AUGUST, 1930 - 6 JANUARY, 1931 237
344. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

Y. M.,
November 15, 1930

CHI. KANTA,

I have both your letter and your report. The report is very good. As far as possible do not use pencil for letters to be sent by post. Let me know especially about your mental state there. Serve Gangabehn well.

Where is Brother? A letter from him was expected but I see none.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: Chandrakanta Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

345. LETTER TO KAMALA NEHRU

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 15, 1930

CHI. KAMALA,

I have your letter. The letter addressed to Ba has also been sent to me. I do not know what was decided in the end. Ba writes that she had fallen ill and people told her that her presence was needed more in areas around Bardoli. Yes, I have seen the prize given to Jawahar.¹ He deserves even more. But for the present this should satisfy us. It will be a real test for the people when no leaders are out and only then will the women too get the real chance. I find that Krishna² and now Shyam Kumari too have been released. How sad! There is no need for you to be unhappy over the situation in U. P. Those who are not awake now will awaken later. Who is going to ¹ Jawaharlal Nehru who had been arrested on April 14, 1930, was released on October 11 and rearrested on October 19, and sentenced to 23 months’ imprisonment.

² Krishna Nehru
remain untouched during this final moment of trial? Let us love everyone and deal with them patiently. Everything will be well if we remain firm in our duty. Give me all the news about Father.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From the Hindi original: C. W. 10869. Courtesy: Selected Works of Jawaharlal Nehru

_346. LETTER TO KRISHNA NEHRU_

Y. M.,
November 15, 1930

CHI. KRISHNA,

What a clever girl you are? You came out so easily. Let us see what you do now. Did you have any information about that crazy man who paid the fine? The same thing happened to Shyam Kumari. All of you will be having enough chances. You need not feel sad.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From the Hindi original: C. W. 10868. Courtesy: Selected Works of Jawaharlal Nehru

_347. LETTER TO HEMPRABHA DAS GUPTA_

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 15, 1930

CHI. HEMPRABHA,

All right, I drop ‘Dear Sister’. However I may have addressed you, I tried to be like a father. Daily I pray to God to make me worthy of your love and confidence. The thought of women like you makes me feel the hand of God in the _yajna_ of self-purification. Your Hindi is so lucid that I don’t find any trouble in understanding it. The truth is that language is inadequate for heartfelt emotions. They just manifest themselves. Krishnadas is now released. Welcome him as one of your own. I have a letter from him. Anyway I have written to him to see you.

My letter about the Gita must have reached you.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1676

348. LETTER TO J. C. KUMARAPPA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 16, 1930

MY DEAR KUMARAPPA,

If a man makes an unalterable decision to do or not to do a particular thing, it is for me a vow. The strongest men have been known at times to have become weak. God has a way of confounding us in our strength. Hence the necessity of vows, i.e., invoking God’s assistance to give us strength at the crucial moment. But I must not strive with you. It seems to me that we mean the same thing but express it differently—you in Spanish and I in Italian, shall we say?

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 10082

349. LETTER TO SUSHILA GANDHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 16, 1930

CHI. SUSHILA,

I have just got a letter for the first time from Manilal. He informs me that he keeps very good health. He has lost not 40 lb. but 22 lb. Even that is a lot. But he seems to be very cheerful, and has also been reading a great deal. God has given him the strength to live in all circumstances. Moreover, he is simple at heart and so God always protects him. Probably you know all this, but the more often you hear the same thing the happier you will feel. Write to me regularly. Coax Bharati to scribble letters of the alphabet.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4777

350. LETTER TO SHANTA SHANKAR BHAII PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 16, 1930

CHI. SHANTA (SHANKARBHAI),

I have your letter. It is true indeed that you make a great many plans in your mind. But, then, you are not too old to carry out many of them at the proper time. Just now, however, in devoting oneself whole-heartedly to the work one has taken up lies the pursuit of painting or music or Sanskrit; it is marriage for those who want to marry and the vow of virginity for the unmarried. Write to me from time to time letters as long as the last one and fearlessly put before me all your thoughts, whether they are wise or foolish.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4056

351. LETTER TO MANSHANKAR J. TRIVEDI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 16, 1930

CHI. MANU,

I have your letter. As long as you continue to get fever and the doctor forbids you to leave the bed, you need not yourself write to me. It will be enough if you ask the person attending on you to write a few lines. Of course we were happy to read your letter. There is no hurry about Almora at all. I certainly would not insist that you should go. I had only made a suggestion. It is for the doctors to consider it.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7770

352. LETTER TO MAHAVIR GIRI

November 16, 1930

CHI. MAHAVIR,

I got a letter from you after many days. Kakasaheb does read your letters. When you write a letter to me, it is as good as writing to him. You cannot write anything specially for him in a letter to me. But now it will not be even two weeks before he is released. Your experiences have been useful. You are right when you say that whether a person learns or not depends mostly on how hard he works. All that a teacher can do is to point out his error when he goes wrong.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6221

353. LETTER TO RADHA GANDHI

November 16, 1930

CHI. RADHIKA,

I got your letter. A good book too can be a revered guru. But God is the only true guru. When we learn to feel His presence in our heart, we shall have met the revered guru whom we seek.

I had heard about Hari-ichchha’s betrothal. But it is from you that I hear about her wedding. To whom was she married, and how many persons attended the wedding? If Hari-ichchha is there, ask her to write to me. What is there to be shy about? What is the age of the husband? What is he? If you don’t know all this, inquire and tell me. Rukhi is being tried well. Are you all right now?

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati: C.W. 9315. Courtesy: Radhabehn Chaudhri

242 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
354. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

November 16, 1930

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I have your painful letter. I feel extremely unhappy that you get fainting fits every day. You must get away from there and go and live in the Ashram and cure your fits. This disease cannot be cured with medicine. Only change of air and congenial company will cure it.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3379

355. LETTER TO MAHALAKSHMI MADHAVJI THAKKAR

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 16, 1930

CHI. MAHALAKSHMI,

Your letters are very precise. I learn many things from them. Don’t be disheartened, or get angry, if some women do not keep their word. The wrong habits of many years will not change in a day. But a rope leaves a mark even on granite, if it rubs against it day after day. We should have faith that in the same way even hearts as hard as stone cannot but feel the effect of the rope of love continually rubbing against them. I have written to Chandra. If Chandra wrote the letter without help from anyone, it was a very good letter indeed. MY blessings to all the women.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6804
356. LETTER TO RUKMINI BAZAJ

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 16, 1930

CHI. RUKMINI,

I got a letter from you after many days. I was glad to learn that you had completely recovered your health. I hope the others also have recovered. What does Benarsilal intend to do there? How do you find the air at Kashi? I suppose you know that Nagardas Gandhi of Limdi lives there. His wife came and lived in the Ashram for some time. And Anandshankarbhai1 also is there. If you have not met all these persons, meet them when you get an opportunity to do so. Ask Benarsilal to write to me.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9054

357. LETTER TO JAYAPRAKASH NARAYAN

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 16, 1930

CHI. JAYAPRAKASH,

You must have got my letter. That Prabhavati is daily suffering from gastric trouble is intolerable. A change of climate and congenial company can cure it. I would request you either to escort or arrange to send Prabhavati to the Ashram. She can return when cured.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 3380

1 Bapubhai Dhruba
358. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

4.30 a.m. November 13/17, 1930

NARANDAS.

They sent me your packet at 4.30 p.m. on Wednesday, that is, yesterday.

The devotee “renounces all undertakings”.¹ This means the devotee will not draw up schemes of future expansion. For example, if a merchant who deals in cloth now has any plans of selling firewood as well in the future, or if he, having one shop only, thinks of opening five more shops, that would be arambha (undertaking) on his part, and the devotee will have none of it. This principle is applicable to service of the nation as well. For instance, a worker in the khadi department today will not take up cow-keeping tomorrow, agriculture the day after and medical aid on the fourth day. He will do his best in whatever has come to him. When I am free from egoism, nothing remains for me to do.

‘The Lord has bound me with a cotton thread; I am His, no matter where He leads me. I have been stabbed with the dagger of love.’ A devotee’s every activity is planned by God. It comes to him as in the natural course of things. He therefore rests content with, ‘this, that or anything else’ (ये केवल निर्माणो |) This is the meaning of ‘renouncing all undertakings’. The devotee does not cease to work; indeed he is nothing if not a worker. He only ceases to think needless thoughts about his work. It is these that he has to renounce.

‘This has been acquired by me today; that purpose I shall gain tomorrow’—this is the opposite of ‘renouncing undertakings’.

I think this answers your question fully. Ask me if anything is left out. Keep this portion with the discussion which is proceeding.

If, along with the new pair of sandals, you have not sent a piece of leather for repairing the soles, and if you can get such a piece and send it, with someone who may be coming on a visit here, please do send it, or send it by sample post provided it does not cost much, so that I can use when necessary even the worn-out sandals.

Write to Jamnalal and tell him that I wish him success in his holy resolves. A time will come when he will not have to plan undertakings in this fashion. God will load him with tasks of service one after another. He will not have to plan for them or seek them. Just now, his planning for them is all right. From this he will come to taste the joy of bhakti. So long as there are no rains, we have no choice but to exert ourselves and draw water from wells, rivers, streams, etc. But, when the clouds burst in the sky and we have the Ganga flowing at our doorstep, what else need we do then? I think the work he could do in Nasik would have been beyond the capacity of anyone else. All the same, it would be good if others, too, tried. In my own case, I have to content myself with a sincere effort, and I apply to others the same yardstick as I do to me. I can say or write much more about this, but all that can wait till we meet. As for what the heart feels and wishes to convey, I have set it down above. This for Jamnalal.

² Bhagavad Gita, XVI. 13

I have written to you about . . . 1. It is but right that none of us is satisfied with his confession. The evil in his heart is deep. I have of course written strongly to him. I suppose all of you must have expressed your dissatisfaction to him. So long as we are not satisfied about his purity, we cannot ask him to do any public service. He himself may do it on his own in the spirit of sacrifice. You may act in this matter as you think best. We need not be angry with him. We should act as love may prompt us to do. It is only the person on the spot who can realize what love requires him to do in certain circumstances. From a distance one can send no instructions about that.

4.45, November 15, 1930

Tell Manilal that the letter I received this time is the only one I have had from him. I did not receive his earlier letters. If he did write any, how did he send them, that is, with whom? I will inquire if I get definite information. If he is eager to have letters from me, I too wish to write to him. But I have a general understanding with the officials that I would not write to prisoners, and I abide by it. I enjoy sufficiently good freedom in other respects in the matter of writing letters and so I do not quarrel with them unnecessarily for further concessions. When our attitude is that we should be content in jail even if they do not permit us to write any letter at all, we ought not to quarrel on such grounds. Even so, we do send messages. Manilal,

1 The name has been omitted.
however, should write as often as he is permitted to do. I have already written to you about his studies and he must have got the message. His present programme of reading is good enough. But the plan which I have suggested seems to me methodical and complete. If, therefore, he can take interest in those books, he should follow that plan. Sushila wrote to me saying that he had lost 40 lb. in weight. I suppose that was an error. Or did he really lose as much as that at any time? Has he now been recovering it or has the reduction come to stay? How about his strength? He is right in his view about Phoenix. If the paper is running at a loss, they should close it. Ask Manilal to write to that effect. I, too, will write, when I am permitted to do so. I had a letter from Pragji. The Headman has just gone out and will decide what reply to give after he returns. Meanwhile you can write to him and tell him that I think Pragji ought to get all the powers which he asks for.

I am awaiting your reply regarding the letter which Devdas wrote to me.

You will find something about spinning in the letter to Mirabehn. I will write to her tomorrow. You will find something more important still in the letter to Mahadev,¹ which I want all of you to understand. To spin by way of yajna and to take up spinning as labour in order merely to add that much to one’s earning are twodifferent things. In yajna, the actual work, though extremely important, is of secondary value. In spinning undertaken as labour, the actual work is all that matters. Irrespective of whether it is anything more than that, even as work it bears fruit. In doing anything as yajna one is not concerned with the fruit of one’s labour and, therefore, the fruit is immeasurable. That is, yajna completely fulfils one’s cherished desires. In performing such a yajna, one must lose oneself in one’s work. By doing that one learns the science and art of working. Anyone, therefore, who would work in the spirit of yajna should have such qualities as purity of heart, etc., and should do his sacrificial work with single-minded devotion. He would not even think about anything else when working. A worker inspired with such spirit of sacrifice should have mastered all that is known about the science of spinning and should be daily adding to the existing knowledge. If a person who has voluntarily embraced the path of sacrifice has made mistakes through negligence or want of means or for any other reason, he should have the strength to rectify them as and when he detects them. I use the word ‘spinning’ here in a symbolical sense. It stands for proficiency in all the processes relating to cotton. You will think this a big task, which it is and is not. It is not a big or difficult task for those who have recognized its necessity, for they will be making some progress every day towards mastery of these processes and will grow in purity of heart day by day. A person who works in the spirit of sacrifice will be a lover of truth and will, therefore, after he has realized the necessity of working in this spirit, go on voluntarily increasing his knowledge and proficiency without having to make a strenuous effort. Even if he has to do so, he will look upon that as God’s grace and not a hardship. I feel, therefore, that all of us should adopt the method which I have explained in a previous letter and understand this deeper and truer meaning of yajna. I have explained sufficiently clearly in my letter to Mahadev how much I myself am to blame for our failure to understand this and put it into practice.

¹ Vide "Fragment of Letter to Mahadev Desai", 3-11-1930.

5 o’clock, November 16, 1930

I forgot to tell you in my last letter about Kakasaheb’s suggestion to reduce exactly by half the time for completing once the devotional reading of the Gita. You must have read about it if you saw the letter to Vinoba. I forgot to tell you that you should read that letter. His suggestion is that we shall be conforming better to the tradition if we complete one reading in a week. Anyone who wants to join in the middle of a week will not then have to think how far the reading must have progressed. Every week you will be reciting the same verses on a particular day. If we complete the reading in a fortnight, the verses read on a particular day of the week change from week to week. It is true that completing it in a week means twice as much time every day. If we read through the whole of the Gita at one time, we would take an hour and a quarter or an hour and a half. At the rate of an hour and a half for the whole Gita, it will require six and a half minutes per day to complete the reading in fourteen days and thirteen minutes per day to complete it in seven days. Those who are interested in the reading will not grudge the extra six minutes. To those who are not interested, even the six minutes being given to the reading at present are a burden. This is Kakasaheb’s argument in support of his suggestion. Both the suggestion and the argument appeal to me. Think about them independently and, if they appeal to you, put them before the other members of the group and discuss them. Discuss them with Mahadev if he is there. Those who join in the reading voluntarily and with true understanding of its meaning should be consulted first. If their view is against the suggestion, the matter need not be pursued further. It should be put before the rest of the group only if they welcome it. I have even prepared a time-table for completing the reading in seven days. I do not give it here just now. I will send it if the suggestion is favourably received. But no, there will be no need to write about it, for Kakasaheb will be there in two weeks’ time and he will personally explain the scheme. I will add this, however. I think it would be right to permit those who are not even today interested in the reading to leave the prayer-meeting when the reading begins. The reading always comes last, so that everyone will be present during the main part of the prayer, guests and visitors excepted of course. In Wardha, and most probably in the Pratishthan too, they do the reading of the Gita in the same manner as we do at Sabarmati. We should, therefore, find out whether the suggestion suits them too, and so I wrote last week to Vinoba and Hemprabhadevi. As we understand better the importance of the devotional reading of the Gita and come to look upon the work as the lighthouse which guides our actions in life, we shall be less inclined to grudge the practice of completing the reading in one week. Much will depend, of course, on the person who leads the reading. If he puts his whole heart in it, he cannot but make it interesting. If we meditate during the whole day on the chapter which was read at the prayer-meeting, we shall discover new meanings in it and understand better those which we know.

A mahavakya lends itself to ever new interpretations, and the Gita is a mahavakya.

Afternoon

I got the sandals today. However, send a strong piece of leather for the soles when you find it, so that I can wear the old pair for a few months more.

Monday morning, November 17, 1930

On Tuesdays the letters are posted, if at all, only if I hand them over by 11 a.m. Hence I feel pressed for time for writing the discourses on that day. If, therefore, I write out the discourse on Monday morning, I can finish everything in time and Kakasaheb will have sufficient time to read it slowly.¹

Blessings from
BAPU

Monday afternoon, November 17, 1930

[PS.]
I have tried the sandals on for a day. They fit me very well. Since Lady Vithaldas sends me cotton, I don’t want you to send any. If, therefore, she writes to you and asks you to send some, do so.

Do observe the distinction between letters which may and those which cannot be forwarded. It is a good rule that news about public developments which cannot be given to newspapers cannot be given to me either.

There are 60 letters.
From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U./I

359. LETTER TO KASHI GANDHI

November 17, 1930

CHI. KASHI,

I see from Chhaganlal’s letter that you suffer from constipation. I think that if it does not respond to change of diet, enema is the best remedy. That is the experience of the present-day doctors. I may say that it is only with the help of enema that I am able to keep well. The enema water should be lukewarm and should be inserted slowly. Soda-bi-carb and salt should be added to the water. At least two pounds of water should be inserted into the intestines and retained for about five minutes, if possible. Take sun baths. The abdomen should be massaged daily. Do this patiently. The enema should be taken in the morning on an empty stomach.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33091

¹ For the text of the discourse which followed, vide “Letters on the Gita”—Ch. II.
² The source has “November 18”, but Monday was on November 17.
360. LETTER TO BABALBhai MEHTA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 18, 1930

Bhai Babalbhai,

I have your letter. When Kakasaheb is released, he will guide you. Write to me from time to time. If you have not acquired mastery over the takli, do so. What is your speed on the spinning-wheel and on the takli? How much cotton can you card in an hour? What count of yarn do you spin? Give me all this information.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Kakasaheb has read your letter. He sends you his blessings.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9454

361. LETTER TO B. J. B. GALVIN

YERAVDA CENTRAL PRISON,
November 18, 1930

DEAR MAJOR GALVIN,

(1) Here is the usual post I send on Tuesdays. Will you please order its despatch today?

(2) There should be a spinning-wheel for me there. Could I have it please?

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: C.W. 4504. Courtesy: Prof. B. J. B. Galvin
362. LETTER TO PYARE LAL GOVIL

YERAVDA CENTRAL PRISON,
November 19, 1930

DEAR FRIEND,

Your touching letter of 28th ultimo has been given to me. My sympathy goes out to you in your affliction and I should be glad indeed if this letter brings you any comfort.

In my opinion you are in no way to blame. Having got the lady doctor you were quite right in trusting her. I do not believe in constant change of doctors and hakims. We must trust those whom we get to tell us when they need assistance or are in doubt as to their diagnosis. Sometimes it may be found that the trust was misplaced. But these are risks and chances of life which we must take always. I hope therefore that you will not worry yourself over what you consider was your negligence. This much you know yourself that you did not wilfully neglect anything. More no man can do.

1 This was in reply to a letter dated October 28, 1930 from Pyare Lal Govil, Sub-Judge, Muzaffarnagar, U.P. He had lost his parents some 15 to 20 years ago and his only sister 16 years before writing. Narrating the circumstances of the death of his only child, a 24-year old daughter, following a delivery, he wrote that the sepsis from which she was suffering could not be diagnosed in time. He blamed himself for “culpable mistakes” resulting in her death. He further wrote: “If God has made destinies and every thing happens as has been fixed beforehand then there is no use in praying for mercy. If He is powerless then He need not be approached.

The following shankas [doubts] arise:
1. What prayashchitta should I perform to wash off this sin of utter carelessness?
2. How to give rest to her soul?
3. Could she have not been saved if correct and timely help had been given?
4. Is God powerless in changing the course of destinies? If so then there is no use in prayer, nor in taking medicines nor in asking for medical help, or in making any efforts that way.
5. Does a soul wander here and there for any length of time after departing from this body?
6. How should and can I know that she has taken birth anywhere else?
7. The idea that I have been very careless haunts me every moment, although I can swear that I did not know that I was making any mistake when I made them, else I would have never made them. I do not know what had become of my discretion and sense. Now I want nothing but I wish to know if I can in any way help her soul to get rest and stay in Heaven. If so what should I do?

Very kindly give your ashirvad for the departed soul.”
Now for the answers to your questions:

(1) No prayashchitta is needed because in my opinion there was no carelessness on your part.

(2) No one can give rest to another soul. Her rest will come from herself.

(3) It is impossible to say what would have happened if other assistance had been procured. In spite of the ablest expert help kings have to die.

(4) There ought not to be much sorrow or fuss over an inevitable event. Death is the lot of every created thing, nor need it be considered as a calamity. Death is in reality a deliverance.

(5) What the soul does after discarding a body is in each case surmise but it is a certainty that the soul does not perish with the body. Let us trust the laws of God or nature for the rest.

(6) States before birth and after death are invisible as the Gita affirms and experience confirms. But we can infer from our present state that the condition after death is at least likely to be a second, though modified, edition of the present.

(7) We the survivors can certainly help the departed dear ones by wearing into our own lives all that was good in them. For if they know anything of what happens here they must be consoled by the knowledge that we are treasuring their memories by adopting what was best in them.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

[PS.]

One question has been omitted by oversight. God is never powerless. But His laws are immutable. We do not know them. Nor do we know His will at a given moment. Therefore we adopt within bounds such remedies as may commend themselves to us. Prayer is to the God within. It does not provoke God to change His will but it enables us to know His will which is everything.

M.K.G.

From a copy: C.W. 9305. Courtesy: D. B. Kalelkar; also Harijan, 15-2-1948
363. LETTER TO JAYAPRAKASH NARAYAN

YERAVDA JAIL,
November 21, 1930

CHI. JAYAPRAKASH,

Today I have sent you a telegram about Prabhavati which you will have received. I await your reply.¹ I hope you have sent her to the Ashram. The best thing of course would be for you to go with her and have her fixed up there. Any programme about her future work can be decided after she gets well. I understand your sorrow. I have thought over it. You should not say anything to Prabhavati. If she is moved by desire there will be no problem. But if she has no stirrings of desire, it becomes your duty to protect her. I need hardly remind you that women have as much right to freedom as men. It is my firm opinion that if one partner in marriage has sexual urge it is by no means the duty of the other partner also to have such urge, though it is the right of the partner with the sexual urge to satisfy that urge. This is perhaps one of the causes of polygamy. Just as it will be considered immoral for a man to cohabit with a wife who is ill it should also be considered immoral to cohabit with a wife who has no sexual desire. It is therefore my earnest advice that if Prabhavati has no craving for sex you should give her freedom and find yourself another wife. I see no immorality in that. After all what is to be done? How can your craving be forcibly stifled? You consider sex necessary and beneficial for the spirit. In such a situation I would not consider a second marriage immoral from any point of view. In fact I feel that your doing so may well set an example to others. Many young men use force with their wives. Others visit prostitutes. Still others indulge in even worse practices. Prabhavati has chosen to live the life of a virgin. You do not wish to practise brahmacharya. Therefore I see nothing wrong in your respecting the wishes of Prabhavati and finding yourself another wife. If you cannot think of another woman, you should, for the sake of Prabhavati, observe brahmacharya. If your love for prabhavati is really true you will find that as soon as you go near her your sexual craving will subside. I have placed my views before you. Do as your duty bids you. May God grant you the strength to do so.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Hindi original: Jayaprakash Narayan Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

¹ Vide “Letter to Prabhavati” 24-11-1930.
MY DEAR ANAND,

Do not mind the length of your letters. You won’t tire me at all. Jairamdas says you still do not feel that you are supporting yourself. You should throw off this tenderness. What you are getting is not a donation; it is what you earn. He who gives his best to the work he takes up and gets what he needs for living, earns it. If you were leading a luxurious life and getting paid for it, I would myself say that you were not living correctly. You must therefore get rid of this sensitiveness. I am glad you had all those precious hours with Jairamdas. The way to cultivate faith in God is to recognize our nothingness and thus be humble as a particle of dust. You know the prayer to Mother Earth in our morning verses. The best of us at his very best is a tiny thing and utterly helpless. And yet we are not so helpless the moment we know that we are sparks from the Divine which is in us. Faith does not come from reason. Faith is believing. Believe in God because those whose names we hold sacred have believed and testified.

You will keep up a respectful correspondence with Father even though you may scent coldness on his part at times.

Yours

BAPU

[PS.]

If you see Acharya . . . well. And remember me to Dr. Choithramyj and Malkaniy. Where is Jairamdas kept?

About Vidya in my letter to her. Does she or do you understand that letter?

From a microfilm. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani

---

1 Mutilated in the source
2 Dr. Choithram Gidwani’s
3 N. R. Malkani
365. LETTER TO PURUSHOTTAM GANDHI

November 22, 1930

CHI. PURUSHOTTAM,

You should write to me in order that the burden of giving me the news about everyone’s health and about the activities there may not rest on Narandas. When you write, you should give me news about Jamnadas too. Convey my respectful greetings to Grandfather and Grandmother. I think about both of them every day and pray for their blessings. Have you completely recovered now? Give me a sample account of your activities on any one day.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 900. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

366. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

YERAVDA MANDIR,

November 22, 1930

CHI. KUSUM (SENIOR),

I have your letter. If you will only realize that the verses' are a part of our prayers and that, therefore, we should learn them by heart, you will be able with some effort to get absorbed in them. You should not lose heart if you do not succeed in the effort. All those who recite them do not become absorbed in them. If, however, you continue to have faith and recite them, one day you will find that you can become absorbed in them. Moreover, the verses have a deep meaning. If you meditate over it, that, too, will help you to concentrate on them.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati G.N. 1810

1 Of Bhagavad Gita
367. LETTER TO SHIVABHAI G. PATEL

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 22, 1930

CHI. SHIVABHAI,

I have your letter. I think my memory is as weak as yours, but this is the method I followed, and still follow, for memorizing whatever I did, or do when I get any time for that, and I have no doubt that it is the best one. We should first try and understand the meaning of what we wish to memorize and the relations of the different parts to each other. After we have done this, all that remains to do is to commit to memory the poet’s words expressing that meaning and those relations. This is easy to do. Try this method and memorize Chapter XII. Arjuna asks: “As between one who worships in this manner and another who worships the Unmanifest, who is superior?” Reflect over the reply to this question and then try to memorize the verses. This is interesting, involves no waste of energy and, because we have faith, the meaning sinks in our heart while we try to memorize the verses.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9502

368. LETTER TO BALBHADRA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 22, 1930

CHI. BALBHADRA,

You have written a very good letter indeed this time. For your age, your handwriting is still poor and ill-formed. Make a patient effort and improve it. You like Narandasbhai’s spinning-wheel because it is respectable and is maintained in good condition. You are doing right in mixing milk with raab. It is also good that you eat khakhras and not rice. If you do as much physical work as you can, your body will certainly become strong and your weight will increase. You will be doing . . .¹ service in a spirit of non-attachment if you adopt the attitude that you will go with Raojibhai and stay with him if he takes you. A true servant does service wherever he lives.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 9214

369. LETTER TO MANSHANKAR J. TRIVEDI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 22, 1930

CHI. MANU,

I have your letter. Kakasaheb will meet you now in a few days. Get rid of your fever and your pain by a strong effort of will. I can understand your being proud of the fact that Kakasaheb’s birthday and yours fall on the same date. We should try to cultivate in ourselves the virtues of the person of whom we feel proud. You are doing that. May God give you a long life.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 7771

370. LETTER TO KASHINATH TRIVEDI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 22, 1930

CHI. KASHINATH,

If Mother lives near the Ashram, you will feel easy in mind and will also be able to go on with the work of service.

It is not obligatory on anyone to marry a particular person and nobody else. If, however, a Hindu woman wishes to marry a Muslim for good and sufficient reasons, we should not believe that she would be committing a sin if she did so. How, then, can we object to a woman marrying a so-called untouchable? Such a person is not a ¹One word is illegible in the source.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
non-Hindu. There is no necessary connection between marriage and the varna system. We should remember that marriage is a universally accepted religious institution intended to put a restraint on gratification of lust, and limit the field of choice for individuals. I think I have fully answered your question.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5261

371. LETTER TO MATHURI KHARE

November 22, 1930

CHI. MATHURI,

There are two reasons why you do not like to spin. One, you do not realize that it is for the sake of the poor nor do you know the poverty of the hunger-stricken. Two, you are not good at spinning. Therefore, know the poor and if you understand our duty to have compassion for the poor you will be interested without any effort. Then you will feel that you should spin as much as you can and as well as you can because you will be spinning for them.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati: C.W. 257. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn Khare

372. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

November 23, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

It was bad to have got fever again. But I suppose it is no use fretting over it. There is undoubtedly poison in your system. It upsets it on the slightest pretext. Whenever possible trace the cause and avoid it in future. If it is rest that is needed and if you cannot take it at the Ashram take it where you think you can get it. You may even go to Vijapur where Chhaganlal is or some such quiet place. Even a week’s change may set you up.

You will be pleased to hear that I have set the Bihar wheel going. I followed your instructions and it went. The holders required attention. I opened out the holes. I am not working at it because I am making experiments with the Gandiv which still gives promise of possibilities. I am describing the changes in my letter to Keshu. I would speak to you about the Bihar wheel. The alteration you have made doesn’t seem to me to have added to the utility of the wheel. The original length of the platform is the ideal length. The length in the “improved” machine is too much for drawing the thread away from you and too little for drawing it towards you. The original holders may admit of a change. I am trying the coir holders in the Gandiv and they have worked exceedingly well. In the coir holders the spindle moves in the rough and smooth convex surface of the coir twine. Hence it moves with the minimum of friction. In the Bihar holders the spindle moves lazily on 1/8th inch flat surface. Hence there is avoidable friction. The coir holders undoubtedly last long, take no time to make and hold oil better. Coir twine is available anywhere. It can be picked from waste. These hints are for you to note and follow out where you have leisure. Another good piece of news. For the last three days I have been trying one of the taklis you left here. It is giving me more satisfaction than the one I have made and on which I was working. The mouth of mine is wretchedly made. Yours is much better. I read today the translation of my summary of the first chapter of the Gita. I can trace your hand in it. The sense has been fairly preserved.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5421. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9655

373. LETTER TO VIDYA HINGORANI

November 23, 1930

CHI. VIDYA,

I have your letter. The remedy for your ill health is hipbath and sun-bath. Ramanama is prescribed for peace of mind. If sexual desire disturbs you, you should suppress it. There is only one way of staying near the Divine Light, namely, to serve the children of God. That Light cannot point any other way. Can you read my handwriting and understand my argument??

Blessings from

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Hindi. Courtesy: National Archives of India and Anand T. Hingorani
374. LETTER TO NIRMALA GANDHI

November 23, 1930

Chh. Nimu,

It will be good if you keep writing to me as you are doing now. It is as well that Sumitra knows me only by my photograph. In a way, it is a pleasant game. If one gets annoyed with a photograph, one can tear it up, one can even beat it up and, if one feels so inclined, one can bow to it. Moreover, a photograph will have only as many virtues as we imagine it to have. Who knows what the original is like? We cannot even have an idea of his bad qualities. And if one gives vent to one’s irritation with him, he may even . . . And so, on the whole, the name has more worth than the person bearing the name.

Blessings from
Bapu

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

375. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

November 24, 1930

Chh. Prabhavati,

I have been getting your letters. You must have got the letter which I wrote you. I sent it to the Patna address, since that is the address you had given in your letter. I had sent a wire to Jayaprakash asking him to send you to the Ashram. His reply was that, if your health did not improve, he would. I am eager to know what you intend to do now. May God give you peace of mind and health. In any case, do write to me regularly. Don’t give up courage.

Blessings from
Bapu

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3381

1 A word here is illegible in the source.
376. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

November 24, 1930

CHI. VASUMATI,

You had forgotten to sign your letter. I understand what you say about Sarbhon. You did right in leaving the place only after consulting Nath, Narandas and Mahadev. It was not then necessary to explain things to me in detail.

I am afraid the constipation may persist. Don’t neglect to write to me regularly.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9278

377. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

November 24, 1930

CHI. GANGABEHN,

I have your letter. When we do not set out to reach a place out of our pride but are led by God, we feel on arriving at the destination that we have arrived not a moment too soon. Our task is a difficult one. We trust in God for success in it.

Think over the verses in the women’s prayers. Every one of those verses would seem to have been composed for circumstances like the present. We should realize today the value of Draupadi’s prayer.

I hope no one shows antipathy to... Does everyone know about her?

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—6: G.S. Gangabehnne, pp. 47-8; also C.W. 8765. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

The name has been omitted.
378. LETTER TO HARILAL DESAI

November 24, 1930

CHI. HARILAL (DESAI),

I have your frank letter. I understand what you say regarding the marriage. Has the man any children? Is his mother alive? Has Hari-ichchha gone to her husband’s house? It was certainly wrong of you to have given up the tannery work. I see in your action a weakness common in our society. The reasons to which you yielded while leaving the work were before you when you took it up. Only yesterday, while I was translating Prayer No. 127, I read the following verse in it;

Revolv the thing in your mind carefully before you act,
Never go to fight in a battle in blind rivalry of others,
If you go, fight till you are hewn to pieces.
If you break your vow once, you will not know where to end.

You have also not properly understood your duty to your mother. Suppose a mother belongs to a society in which drinking is common. Her son gives it up as an evil, but the mother tries to dissuade him from doing so, and threatens to commit suicide if the son gives up drinking. In these circumstances, is it the duty of the son to give up what he regards as his duty? To honour the word given by Dasharatha, Rama left for the forest and let Dasharatha die. Though Kaikeyi entreated Bharata with piteous tears, Bharata clung to his decision not to accept the throne. Judging by common standards, had Kaikeyi done anything wrong? She was one of the many queens, and in any case she had her husband’s word. What sin had she committed in demanding the throne for her son? But Bharata saw sin in her action and disregarded her entreaties.

I have not written this to reproach you. I cannot feel angry with you. I have written what I have done because I thought it my duty to explain to you what your duty was.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6625
379. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 24, 1930

CHI. PREMA,

I have your letter giving me all details. I was glad. I don’t always remember the reasons behind my decisions. You have proved yourself a true soldier. It is a mistake if you believe that, by remaining there, you are not doing a soldier’s duty. All persons are not sent to the front. Many recruits are kept in reserve. Moreover, very responsible persons are required at the head-quarters. One must of course give up fear of danger and face it whenever it comes. But anyone who needlessly rushes into danger is not a soldier but a fool. I look upon Narandas as a true soldier. Who knows what dangers are in store for you? True soldiership lies in abiding by God’s will. That is non-attachment. If we express that idea in common language, it means that we should act as ordered by the general to whose discipline we have voluntarily submitted ourselves.

The Ashram children have complained in their letter against Dharmakumar, that he is dirty. Dhiru seems to know about it. Inquire about this.

I understand your view about the ceremonial recitation of the Gita. On this issue you may quarrel with Kakasaheb to your heart’s content. Personally, I think that at the back of your opposition to the proposal is your aversion to or lack of faith in the prayers themselves. If you had your way, I think you would have nothing besides the dhun. I would advise you to have faith in all the items of the prayers. If possible, concentrate your attention on the meaning of each item. If you cannot do that, have faith that the words you hear are noble and that even the fact of listening to them will do you good, and attend to them respectfully. Please do not understand from this that I wish to convert you to the proposal for completing the recitation in seven days. I have written this to convince you that there is some meaning in the prayers behind which lies fifteen years’ tapascharya, with unswerving faith, on the part of some of us.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10243; also C.W. 6691. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak
380. LETTER TO MAHALAKSHMI MADHAVJI THAKKAR

November 24, 1930

CHI. MAHALAKSHMI,

Madhavji writes and tells me that you keep worrying about the children. Why? Reflect over the verses which we recite daily and burn up all worries. God will look after the children. I have written a letter to Calcutta. We may request the elders as earnestly as with propriety we can and then, trusting them, rely on God.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6805

381. LETTER TO VANAMALA PARikh

YERAVDA MANDIR,

November 24, 1930

CHI. VANAMALA,

I got your letter. I had sent a translation of a poem by Swami Ramdas about the art of writing. Did you hear it read out? If you don’t know about it, request Premabehn to explain it to you and then try to write in that manner. Kakasaheb himself will go there now and give his blessings to you all.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5755
382. LETTER TO AMINA QUreshi
November 24, 1930

CHI. AMINA,

I have a letter from you after many days. I have heard about Qureshi having gone to jail again. He has done the right thing. Have all of you been able to keep yourselves well in Dhandhuka? Is it colder there or less cold [than in Ahmedabad]. Do you ever go out for a walk?

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
Convey my salaams to your father-in-law.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6668

383. LETTER TO MATHURADAS PURUSHOTTAM
November 24, 1930

CHI. MATHURADAS,

The question is this: Vithal says that it is not necessary to rub [the string] with leaves if it has been rubbed with candle-wax. You say it is necessary. If it is, why is it? Vithal should correct his error. We find that rubbing with candle-wax is enough. The cotton does not stick [to the string].

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3748

384. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

November 24, 1930

CHI. KANTA,

I have your letter. As far as possible avoid things containing chillies. If there are chillies in dal and vegetables, you must not of course eat the dal, indeed you should also avoid the vegetables. If milk or buttermilk is available, you can have either with the rotis. Or you can have the roti just with salt. You will be able to carry on like this for some time at least. Do you get buttermilk and milk? Live very carefully. Write to me about all that you observe. Write to Father and Mother from time to time.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: Chandrakanta Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

385. LETTER TO HEMPRABHA DAS GUPTA
November 24, 1930

CHI. HEMPRABHA,

I have your letter¹. Satis Babu’s discourse is excellent. It expresses well his mental state. Those desirous of living as inmates of Sodepur Ashram should scrupulously observe the Ashram regulations. If you cannot have such people, you may run it with paid workers or close it down. Herein lies our test. To what extent it is right to run it through paid workers is a different matter. Let us hope such an occasion never arises. The running or the closure of the Ashram rests with God.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1677

¹ The addressee in her letter had expressed disillusionment about the sincerity of the Ashram workers. In the absence of Satis Chandra Das Gupta, she was attempting to run the Ashram on her own. She had expressed the possibility of employing paid workers if the efforts of the Ashram inmates were inadequate, and had enclosed extracts from a letter from Satis Chandra Das Gupta which was more in the nature of a discourse upon Tarini’s death. (S.N. 16758-m)
CHI. NARANDAS.

I got your letter on Thursday (20th) morning. You should not forward any letters unopened. Open every letter before forwarding it. You may not read the letter, if the correspondent so desires, but even that on the understanding that the correspondent should write about no subject which is forbidden. Confidential letters, therefore, should be about personal matters only. Adhere to the method which you have been following.

It is certainly a painful matter that undesirable freedom was taken in several respects at the time of Hari-ichchha’s marriage, but you did right in tolerating everything patiently and giving all possible help.

Sometimes dharma lies in setting aside such rules. The attitude which you adopted was inspired by the spirit of non-violence. A principle has no exception. When, however, the rules and regulations framed to embody a principle are felt to kill its spirit, they may be set aside. The occasion of Hari-ichchha’s marriage was of this kind.

At the present time I have dedicated myself heart and soul to spinning and other related processes, and I find myself constantly thinking about the subject. Since we do spinning as a form of yajna, we should be very exact and regular in doing it, display the utmost perseverance and sincerity in our work and become very proficient in it. Most of us have no knowledge of even some elementary things about spinning. We should acquire it now. That is, everyone should be able to ascertain the count, strength and evenness of his or her yarn and keep a record of these. One should also keep a record of the time spent every day. If we do these things habitually, they will take very little time. Everyone should pay attention to increasing his or her speed, but without wasting yarn. People should also learn to keep the spinning-wheel in repair. That is, they should know how to make the belt, jotar and spindle-holder. They should know about the different models of spinning-wheels. But you should not be burdened with the task of thinking about all these matters and getting people to carry out my suggestions. I have nothing else to engage my attention, but you have to face new responsibilities and problems every day. These suggestions, therefore, should not impose a burden on you. You may carry out, and persuade others to carry out, only those suggestions which people can easily take up and act upon. Other people, too, should concern themselves with these things and think about them. Everyone should do what his interest and capacity incline him or permit him to do. You will find in the letter to Lakshmidas a description of my experience in this regard too; please read it.

Saturday morning

You have given a pleasing description of the service you are doing. Take care that you do not fall ill through all this labour. You have the spirit of non-attachment in you in good measure. There is little likelihood, therefore, of your falling ill. Krishna is bound to protect those who dedicate their work of service to Him. Your losing weight is a good sign indeed. You have had a good crop of fruit in the Ashram. Mathew has not described what freedom he takes. He has merely stated that he takes freedom. If you know in what respect, let me know. We keep him in the Ashram because he is a good man. I, too, believe that he will come round some day.

When you have no time because of pressure of work, it will suffice if you write only a few lines. You will find it easier if you write down from time to time what you think you must tell me. Don’t you see that that is what I do here, though I am not as busy as you are? I don’t depart from my daily routine in order to write these letters. That routine, of course, concerns the hours of meals, sleeping, answering the call of nature and spinning. The hours which are not taken up by these activities are practically all spent in writing letters, except on Tuesday. I know that you can arrange properly all your work, but even then I feel tempted to write this. It is also a test of non-attachment to work, that a person who has cultivated it will not feel that he is working under pressure even when he is busy with a variety of tasks. There is an excellent thought in an English saying. It is that a busy man can always spare time for others. The point is that such a person, even though working hard, is always found as fresh as if he had no work and no one is disappointed by him.

I was very happy that you could take in Dhiru and Vimu. It was also good that those two children felt drawn to the Ashram of their own accord. Let me know how Dhiru behaves now.
Amidas’s experiment is worth watching. From here, I see an error in it. If he does no work and rests all the time, he can certainly live on fruit, but his experiment will not have succeeded. That is right food for the body which gives it the necessary strength for the ordinary duties of service. To get such strength, he should be able to digest almonds and such other tissue-building foods. My experience so far tells me that a weak stomach cannot digest foods like almond, whereas it can digest the same nutrients from milk. However, I don’t wish to write about this to Amidas or suggest it indirectly to him. His sincere faith will probably give him the required light. Let us hope that he will correct his mistake, if he is making any, and that he will learn from his experience the value of milk or discover some vegetarian substances similar in value to foods of animal origin.

. . .’s\(^1\) case is a sad one. I did feel something unattractive on his face, but I believed that he was a good man and used to dismiss the other thought from my mind. And I was right in doing that. Even when he fell at times, he continued to struggle and it is possible that he has succeeded in his struggle by now. If so, the expression on his face may also have changed. It was said about Socrates that till the last his face did not seem like a good man’s. There is, therefore, only one path for creatures like us who are always liable to error. We should always assume a man to be good till we come to know something against him.

Give me the names of Chandrakanta’s father and mother. I will then write slips for them. What you have written to them is right. They ought to give up worrying about her. It would be best if Kanta’s mother does not come to the Ashram. She will probably be a burden on Gangabehn. Punjabhai’s becoming unconscious occasionally is God’s grace. That seems to give him some rest. It would be best if Champa’s delivery takes place in the hospital to which Amina was admitted. She will get all facilities there and will be well looked after, and nobody else will be put to trouble. Some woman or other who can be spared from the Ashram may visit her from time to time and stay with her. If this is possible, suggest it to Champa. If she agrees, she will find the arrangement convenient.

Monday morning, November 24, 1930

Most probably I wrote to you that I had received the bark-sheet sent by Ratubhai. I used it till this day as a covering when sleeping,

\(^1\)The name has been omitted.
but it has not become soft. I do not know whether or not it can be washed. As it remains stiff, I thought it would be more useful for spreading on the floor and that is what I have started doing from today. I am sitting on it just now.

Vinoba tells me in his letter that he has sent two taklis. I have made inquiries. They do not seem to have been received here so far. I wonder if they have been received there. If you have received them, send them here.

I call this chapter the key to an understanding of the Gita, and the gist of it is that life is given us for service and not for enjoyment. We have therefore to impart a sacrificial character to our lives. Intellectual assent to this proposition is only the first step, but such assent and conduct in terms of that assent are bound to rid our heart of its impurities in course of time. But what is real service? In order to obtain the right answer to this question, restraint of the senses is essential, as it gives us a clearer and clearer vision of the God of truth. Service rendered with selfish motives ceases to be sacrifice. Hence the urgent need for the spirit of detachment. When this is understood, all manner of controversies lose their meaning for us. ‘Did Krishna really ask Arjuna to kill his relatives? Could such killing ever be a part of one’s duty?’ Questions like these are set at rest for ever. When detachment governs our actions, even the weapon raised in order to strike an enemy down falls out of our hand. But a mere pretence of detachment serves no useful purpose. If only we persevere in our effort, detachment may come to us perhaps the very first day, or maybe only after a thousand years. We must not worry over the time this takes, for the effort carries within itself the seeds of success. We must however be on our guard and make sure that it is a genuine effort, and that there is no self-deception. And this is certainly possible for us all.

I have thus been able to complete Chapter III in two parts. I have now fifteen minutes left to me in which to finish this letter. The title you have suggested for these discourses is rather long. It seems you propose to publish them one by one. Kaka suggests a short title Gitabodh. I like it. The intention behind the present attempt is that it may help those who read the discourses to understand the meaning of

---

1 For the text of the discourse which followed, vide “Letters on the Gita” — Ch. III.

2 Light on the Gita
the Gita as I have understood it. I don’t know whether I shall succeed in my aim. But that is the intention behind my attempt and, therefore, the title Gitabodh suits the discourses very well. I doubt the necessity of an English translation of these discourses. But the final decision can only be made there. As for the suggestion to complete the devotional reading of the Gita in a week, Kakasaheb will now discuss it personally. If no one likes the idea, we certainly don’t wish to act upon it.

Blessings from

BAPU

After 8 a.m., Tuesday

[PS.]

Dudhabhai is in jail. Ascertain in which jail. If he is in Sabarmati Jail, someone should go and visit him. Where has Somabhai taken up work? I wrote to Jairamdas and told him that I was not eating fresh fruits. My reason for doing so was that there was a statement by the ‘lathi’ Department of the Government that it was not true that I had given up eating fresh fruits in protest against lathi charges and that I still ate them. I have already told you what I eat. However, I give here the history so far, so that, if an occasion arises, you may issue an authoritative rejoinder. I had given up fresh fruit for the most part during the salt-march. I had resumed it after I was brought here. But I gave it up after I heard about lathi-charges. I must have accepted it for three or four days when I heard about the lathi-charges. That was the position when Jairamdas met me. After that, with a view to overcoming constipation and saving expenditure, I gave up the dry fruits which I had been eating, namely, dates, currants and raisins and started eating vegetables only. For some days I ate both fruit and vegetables and then went over exclusively to vegetables, but realized that I could not keep fit on them alone. So I again went back to dates and raisins. Among the vegetables, I used to be supplied unripe papaiya. Sometimes the papaiya would be ripe and I would eat that too. This did not happen while Jairamdas was here. I must have accepted about ten times ripe papaiya supplied from the garden here. Lemon, I of course take every day, and Jairamdas has mentioned the fact. His statement, therefore, is quite correct and the Government’s on the whole incorrect. It is only recently that I have been receiving papaiya.

---

1 Probably the Home Department

272 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
and no one can say, because I eat it, that I live on fresh fruit. Probably no official knows about this fact at all, for the papaiya is supplied to me along with raw vegetables. It is never bought from the market. This is the position. Kakasaheb will be released on the 29th and he will of course state the correct position more clearly. My belief is that the Government official [responsible for the statement] has made no distinction between fresh and dry fruits or that he has assumed, from my having accepted a basket of fruit which may have been brought by a visitor and which I may have passed on to Kakasaheb, that I myself had eaten the fruit. God alone knows how the statement came to be issued. If no controversy follows, you need not go out of your way to issue any statement.

BAPU

[PPS.]

There are 64 letters today.

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: M.M.U/I

387. LETTER TO RAMABEHN JOSHI

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 25, 1930

CHI. RAMABEHN,

I have a letter from you this time after many week. I hope Chhaganlal will make good use of his enforced rest. Though late, the cutting off of Vimala’s hair is to be welcomed. Everything has its own appointed time. You need not feel sorry that you did not get her hair cut off earlier. The idea was so completely new that it is not surprising that a mother should not accept it readily. It is best that you should accept anything I may suggest only if you are convinced about it; you will then cling to it. It is my duty to have patience till I succeed in convincing you.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5327
388. LETTER TO KASHINATH TRIVEDI

November 25, 1930

CHI. KASHINATH,

I have your letter. If Mother definitely refuses to come and if Kalavati does not live with her to look after her, I can see only one alternative. Either you yourself should go and live with her or engage a servant who would look after her. Which of the two courses it is your dharma to adopt, your heart alone can tell you. It is not a matter on which you may consult somebody else. It would be improper for any person to tell you what your dharma is in this matter. The problem is so delicate that nobody else can suggest a solution.

Did you come to know anything more about that woman who committed suicide?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5262

389. LETTER TO MATHURI KHARE

November 27, 1930

CHI. MATHURI,

I have your letter. Premabehn does not spare the rod; have you then complained to her about this? I shall certainly plead on behalf of you and Chandan.

Blessings from
BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 258. Courtesy: Lakshmibehn Khare
390. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAILDA

November 27, 1930

CHI. GANGABEHN,

I have your letter and report. The report is excellent. You say that you saw no cow in the places which you visited; the position is the same in almost the whole of Kheda district. People are selfish and are simply not interested in keeping cows. That is why we have taken up cow-protection work.

Who cooks your meals?

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—6: G.S. Gangabehnne, p. 48; also C.W. 8766. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

391. LETTER TO JAYAPRAKASH NARAYAN

November 27, 1930

CHI. JAYAPRAKASH,

When I think of Prabhavati I feel that the sooner she goes to the Ashram the better it will be. That she will go to the Ashram if she does not recover will mean that she will go when her illness has become worse. You who have been educated in the West should understand that illness should be tackled at its inception. I have known cases of hysteria where recovery was effected by the transfer of the patient to a different place. In Prabhavati’s case it is doubly necessary that she should have a change of weather. She is ailing and she is also faced with a moral crisis. In a freer atmosphere she will be better able to know her heart and she will also discover her duty. The difficult question before you is that of freedom of women. If Prabhavati has as much freedom as you, you must concede to her the right to think for herself.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Hindi original: Jayaprakash Narayan Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library
392. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

November 28, 1930

CHI. RAMDAS,

I have your letter. Many children suffer when they cut teeth. Hence it is nothing strange that she does too. But her cold should go. Somebody should carry her and walk in the sunshine. The head should be kept covered. This will warm up the skin and make it less sensitive. I believe the cold will then disappear.

Once you have formed the habit of keeping accounts, you don’t find it a burden to do so and discover through experience the very great value of the practice. Whether or not one’s life is peaceful should make no difference in this matter. There are some things which we should try hard and learn to do with a peaceful mind even in the midst of highly distracting circumstances. Write to me regularly once a week.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6859

393. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

November 28, 1930

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I got your letter written from Arrah. I posted a letter to you yesterday to Sitabadiyara. This too I hope you will get. If your health improves there, I have nothing more to say about it. It will not, however, be good sense to go to the Ashram after your health is nearly ruined. While improvement is still possible, you will recover if you go and stay there for some time. Then you will also have some peace of mind to think about your problems and be able to judge what your duty is. You should know that you are not subject to anyone’s authority. It is we who make ourselves free or subject to someone’s authority. If you understand this, you will be able to face the whole world.
I am more or less all right. Kakasaheb will be released tomorrow—to put it more correctly, he will be imprisoned, for he is free here.

_Blessings from_
BAPU

SMT. PRABHAVATIDEVI
C/O BABU HARSOO DAYALJI
REVENUE OFFICER
ARRAH, BIHAR

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3382

394. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

November 28, 1930

CHI. VASUMATI,
I have your letter. I cannot stop wondering whether you will be able to preserve your health in the midst of all the wanderings there. I know I should not worry. In all things God’s will prevails. You can write to me everything which you can send to newspapers for publication. What you cannot send to the papers, you cannot write to me. You should follow this rule in giving me news about the present activities. About yourself, you may write anything. I keep all right, more or less.

_Blessings from_
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9294

395. LETTER TO ABDUL KADIR BAWAZEER

November 28, 1930

BHAI IMAM SAHEB,
I have your letter. It was a beautiful one. The more I think about religion, the more convinced I feel that its essence lies in truth and non-violence. In the very beginning occurs the name Rahim. Does it not stand for non-violence? We look down with contempt on the thing because we do not know how to employ it. Once we have learnt how to employ it, we will never forsake it.
That you still pass sugar in urine is a bad sign. If you can exercise sufficient control over yourself, that is, master the body, you should live exclusively on unboiled milk. You should mix nothing with it. Such milk is perfect food. If you live on it only, sugar is bound to disappear. Even fruit is not good for you. Nor is there anything else which will agree with you. You may certainly eat curds. If you can, do this for the sake of the country at least;

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6647

396. LETTER TO AMINA QURESHI

November 28, 1930

CHI. AMINA,

I have your letter. I hear from Imam Saheb that you have become impatient to go to jail. That is not proper, however. When God wills that you should go to jail, you will get an opportunity without seeking it. It is enough that you yourself are ready. Till that time comes, look after the children. Preserve good health and do whatever service you can from home. It is possible in this struggle to serve even from home. It is enough that you have shed fear.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

How far have you progressed in your study of Urdu?

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6659

397. LETTER TO HEMPRABHA DAS GUPTA

YERAVDA MANDIR,
November 28, 1930

CHI. HEMPRABHA,

Your letter. The deduction that violence prevails in Bengal due to insufficient propagation of my ideas seems to be wrong. The atmosphere in Bengal has always been surcharged with violence which is the reason for the lesser dissemination of my ideas there. But if we remain true, the atmosphere in Bengal is bound to change. This does not mean that you may give up your resolve. Do your best to propagate it but do not expect appreciable results too soon.

Blessings to the Ashram inmates.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1678

398. DUTY OF SATYAGRAHI PRISONERS

[Before November 29, 1930]

Our civil disobedience is fulfilled when we seek imprisonment. Disobedience would cease to be civil if we defied legitimate jail discipline. We may not therefore shout or create a row in the jails. We may not refuse work when it is demanded of us according to rules. We should rather be anxious to do as much work as we can and that too as efficiently as we are capable of. It would be nice if even ‘simple prisoners’ volunteered to do some useful work not necessarily with a view to getting any remission. Prisoners undergoing simple

1 This was quoted by D. B. Kalelkar in an interview to The Bombay Chronicle. On the basis of the discussions he had with Gandhiji before his release on November 29, 1930, he observed: “He does not think himself competent enough to guide the political struggle today because he is removed from the field of action. To a satyagrahi, imprisonment is a civil death. But as a prisoner he can give authoritative instructions for prospective satyagrahi prisoners. Daring my stay with him in the Yeravda jail I discussed with him various aspects of the jail life and elicited from him some useful instructions. He had no objections to my sharing them with workers in the cause of swaraj. I give them below as they occur to me.

A satyagrahi should realize that his antagonism or disobedience ceases as soon as he is convicted by the court. He is not out to paralyse jail discipline. In war, a prisoner lays down his arms and capitulates when he is caught. The enemy can always rely on the words of a true ‘soldier-prisoner’. A prisoner of war would not try to escape, would not try to deceive when he is allowed an amount of liberty on the strength of his word of honour. We, as satyagrahis, should try to be ideal prisoners in jails. We must always be prepared to abide by the rules of jail discipline so long as they do not go against the ordinary canons of humanity and self-respect. I have sometimes heard some young satyagrahis arguing against submitting to jail discipline. They say: ‘We came to jail because we wanted to disobey the laws of Government. How do you ask us to obey the rules inside the jail? We are pledged only to non-violence but we will certainly defy the Government even in jails.’

VOL. 50 : 23 AUGUST, 1930 - 6 JANUARY, 1931 279
imprisonment have helped a great deal in easing tense situations by merely offering to do hard labour. Whatever work we turn out is so much addition to the National Wealth.

_The Bombay Chronicle, 1-1-1931_

399. LETTER TO CHANDRAKANTA

[Before November 11, 1930]¹

CHI. KANTA,

I have your letter. You can go as Premabehn did, after obtaining permission. If there is a reason you also may go with permission as Premabehn has done, so arranging the time that the work does not suffer when you have a reason or feel an irresistible wish to go. You may tell Narandas. You will not be able forcibly to restrain your mind. Restraint should be exercised with understanding.

Brother should improve his health. The cure rests in his own hands. If one pays attention to the right amount of exercise, regularity in all work, hip-baths and moderation in eating, the health does improve in a large measure. There can be no question of giving the sewing-machine to a person who does not know how to use it. Of course if there is somebody to teach, it may be lent. You cannot be expected to teach sewing since all your time belongs to the Ashram. Gangabehn or Narandas may arrange for a teacher. Have I answered all your questions?

_Blessings from_

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: Chandrakanta Papers. Courtesy: Gandhi National Museum and Library

¹ From the reference to the addressee's desire to leave the Ashram; which she did before November 11, 1938; _vide_ “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 11-11-1930.
400. LETTER TO PREMABEHN KANTAK

YERAVDA MANDIR,
Night, November 30, 1930

CHI. PREMA.

I was very happy to read your letter. It is two days now since you broke your fast. By the time you get this letter, you will have forgotten all about the fast and will be enjoying new youth. If you do not have that experience, I would not regard the fast as a complete success. I expect that you will describe the result of your fast in detail. Your experience should be a guide to others. You know, of course, how to return to normal diet gradually after the fast is over. You will feel very hungry immediately after a fast, but you should certainly not eat as much as the stomach demands. You should gradually increase the quantity of milk and curds, and eat nothing between the meals. You may of course eat juicy fruits. I hope you do not count expense in that regard. Your body should become completely healthy. I am not surprised to hear that you could work normally during the fast. I have observed many people doing so. And that is my own experience, too. Those who have been harbouring many diseases in their bodies feel stronger during a fast. At any rate there is a brighter light on their faces.

I am satisfied with the children’s account sent by you. Krishnavijay seems to stand first in every item. Is there no one who can take Dudhibehn’s classes in her absence? I know that in the present circumstances you cannot ask anyone about this. What can you do when so many women are outside the Ashram? All the same, if there is any person to whom you can entrust the work, do not hesitate to ask him or her.

Dhurandhar must have been released. Tell him that I remember the discussions I had with him. I also remember his diary. Ask him to write to me. Let him describe his experience, too. He should also write about his future plans.

Mathuri has a complaint against you, that you beat children. Sometimes you even use a rod. If this is true, give up the practice. One should never beat children. Crosby has written a book called Tolstoy as Teacher. Probably it is in our collection. Read it. It has now been proved that physical punishment does not reform children.
I know that anyone who is accustomed to use the rod while teaching will find it difficult to give up the practice. But that is also true of an armed soldier. He thinks that without his gun he can get nothing done in this world. Our Ashram exists to prove that we can do without a gun. This is true in regard to children. I will not write more than this just now. If necessary, I will go into further argument after I get your reply.

I hope that you had plenty of sleep during the fast, and that now you regularly go to bed early. One ought to have sufficient sleep. Man needs sleep more than he does food. Fasting in regard to food benefits one, but fasting in regard to sleep wastes away one’s body. It dulls the brain and makes one restless. Do not, therefore, be careless about sleep. I would not complain if you sleep soundly between 9 p.m. and 4 a.m.

You will read about my experiment in the letter to Mira.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 10244; also C.W. 6691. Courtesy: Premabehn Kantak

401. LETTER TO MOOLCHAND AGRAWAL

November 30, 1930

Bhai Moolchandji,

Your letter to hand. You must resolutely get up at 4 a.m. It does not matter if you do not have any motions. Cleanse your mouth and say the prayers; drink a bowlful of cold water after cleansing the mouth. Go out for a walk after the prayers. Walk briskly. This will induce motions. You will feel warm instead of cold. Don’t worry if your bowels do not move. After the walk, you can occupy yourself in whatever task you choose. Go to the lavatory when you feel the urge. You will be cured by doing so for some days.

Yours,

Mohandas

Ringas (Raj.)

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 768
402. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

November 29/December 1, 1930

CHI. MIRA,

This is time after the morning prayer 29-11-1930. It is fairly cold. But I do a little writing after the prayer and before walking out on the bugle of 5.30.

I am glad you were better when you wrote your letter. We can only learn really in everything as in the matter of health-keeping by making repeated mistakes and profiting by them. This is an introduction to my confession rather than a warning to you. Last Thursday I suddenly developed a bad stomachache. I could have avoided it but stupidly did not. As you know I have been lately living on curds. They agreed very well though the bowels could be moved only by the enema. But as you saw the weight was going up and I was otherwise fit. So I continued the curds and then too the thick part.
That induced further constipation despite the enema. That was sufficient warning to stop at least curds or better still all food for a day. I would not and suffered for the day. I voluntarily brought out what I had eaten and in a few hours the pain subsided. Nothing but raisin water the next day and I was quite fit though at once I lost 3 lb.
in weight. It is ever thus with me. My weight beyond 95 is evidently an uncertain quantity probably made up of poisonous matter. I
