2 This was written after the departure of Andrews from South Africa. Phagan Sud 10 was on Saturday. But since Sunday is mentioned, the date given is that which corresponds to the day and not to the tithi.
Here is a list of persons going with us [to India]. I cannot say whether all those mentioned will go or not. We have still to decide about those whose names have a question mark against them. I have written to Kuppu. You may ask him again to consult his father and decide. Discuss things with Chhaganlal. Other names also may have to be added to the list. I take as certain all the names except those against which I have made a question mark. I know this is all perhaps like building on sand. Perhaps, the settlement may not come off; other things also might happen. Nevertheless, we want to leave as soon as a settlement is reached; it is therefore necessary to make all the preparations. Banana flour is made here. There is ample facility for getting it made and bananas are always available. I believe if we have biscuits made of banana flour with us on our voyage, nothing else would be required and we can carry on even if bananas are not available. We should get carpets made out of gunny bags for all of us. They will be useful in India also. Get these stitched and washed ready for use. It is necessary to hem their borders also. Two carpets for each would be preferable. They can be used one above and one below. It would be still better if these could be given some sort of coating. Do think about this. We should have something like the jug I have brought for [carrying] water. If we can get the empty tins of olive oil lying with us, repaired so that they can be corked, they would perhaps be cheaper. Get them so repaired that they might be useful in India also. Each one will have blankets, to be sure. They must have at least two, at the most three. It is not desirable to carry much luggage with us. I want every child to land in India with Indian-style clothes on. The very young should have a lungi, a shirt and a cap like the round one of velvet we have and the others should have a dhoti, a shirt and a cap. The grown-ups like you should wear a safa and a long coat. But you will decide this by yourselves. It is not quite necessary that you should do exactly what I want. I see no need for the boys to have shoes. However, if they have sandals they may keep them. I think new ones should not be made. But I am not particular about this thing. You may consider this also. It would be good if everyone learnt to eat with one hand only (the right one) and that too sitting cross-legged on the floor. It is desirable that they do not have to be taught to do this after they are in India. They should not take the plate on their lap. This applies to all who are to go. I therefore see no harm if all squat on the ground to dine. If you do so you will have to clean the floor with a wet cloth thrice a day. But that I think is desirable. Think of this also. They should also know how to make obeisance to the elders. What we want the youngsters to do, we elders should demonstrate by doing ourselves. This may cause a little inconvenience in the beginning, but it is worth while suffering it. They should learn to distinguish between the pure and the impure. We should make all necessary preparations irrespective of whether we go or not. We had stopped for some days the use of toilet paper in the latrines by the boys but we became slack again. I think we should stop its use again.
We should explain patiently to the older boys the whole significance and object of making the changes. It would also be well if they knew the geography of Bombay Presidency. The boys, I think, should start wearing dhotis on the steamer. Consider what foodstuffs and how much should be taken with us, and also how to carry them. Try to take as few enamelled utensils as possible. Drinking glasses or cups and such other things, made of brass, would serve our purpose. As we may have to use lemon, we shall take with us the enamelled cups that are already there. But we want to dispense with them as far as possible. In the manufacture of these vessels many a man is ruined. In comparison to the loss [of life] due to kicks and the lathis or sticks, the workers’ health has been affected to a greater extent [in this manufacture].
Consider this aspect and then decide.

I see good improvement today in Ba’s health. If she survives, take it for certain that our [nature cure] remedies and faith in God have saved her. She has come to realize that the doctor’s medicine was the cause of her breakdown. She was tempted by a desire to take the doctor’s treatment and I did not interfere. The punishment she received was severe and so the lesson learnt was equally valuable. Ba showed infinite capacity for patience. She did not trouble me at all.
The Gools showed great love. The doctor is a generous man. He does not interfere much with what I do. We wanted very much to satisfy him, but Ba later showed great firmness. I always read the Ramayana to her and sing prayer songs. She appears to listen to these attentively.
I repeat Ramanama also. The intention behind all this is not that she should survive; it is that, whether she lives or dies, her mind should be pure and tender. I have made all preparations and inquired about everything in case she dies. There is a cremation ground here equipped with the necessary facilities. It is four miles away.

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5765 Courtesy:
Radhabehn Choudhri
100. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

7 BUITENSINGLE,
CAPE TOWN,
March 9 [1914]

MY DEAR LOWER HOUSE,

I have your two letters and wire.

If I were you I would not disturb the meals you have arranged. Do not change what seems to agree so much only so that on occasions you can do without them. Manilal won’t save all the time you imagine. Your description shows that the preparation must take 1 hour. But that loss of time need not worry you. So long as there must be cooking so long must there be loss both of time and life. But habits of long standing cannot be altered in a day. You will observe that my tolerance is again reasserting itself and I am becoming more and more indifferent to the surroundings. Mrs. Gandhi’s sickness has given me food for introspection and a review of the past. I am glad Manilal is regaining his balance.

Mrs. Gandhi’s recovery (if the improvement continues) is almost a miracle. And she has responded to our natural treatment. I feel too that medical treatment would have killed her, not that she is certain now to live. But hope has revived. I had prepared her for death and had made arrangements for her funeral. There is a crematorium here built owing to the energy of Lucheram. She has remained very calm and sweet. I have now introduced in my life the counting of beads. I sing hymns to her in the morning and read the Ramayana to her in the evening and also sing hymns. Mrs. Gool sometimes comes and listens. My food you should know = tomatoes peeled by warming them and banana flour and coconut biscuits, also ground monkey-nuts or dried bananas stewed. The latter was tried for you. I had it for the first time today. It takes no time and by itself makes a perfect dish. There was very little water in it, of course, there was oil. Mrs. Gool prepared it. Mrs. Gandhi or I had made it, it would have been better I fancy. I add, of course, fresh fruit, principally grapes and a few almonds which I have been taking for the past week to test their effect on the eyes which have much troubled me. I take, I think, five tomatoes though I am not sure. The whole preparation does not take Mrs. Gool longer than 30 minutes, if that. But on a good stove the tomatoes to be soft should take no more than 5 minutes and the banana when done not more than 15 minutes. This much cooking is a concession to Mrs. Gandhi and a temporary indulgence for my palate. Peeling of tomatoes is a necessity. But alone I should peel them without warming.

1 Chooharmal P. Lucheram

Now for P. K. Naidoo, I was bound to give him the best advice. And I offered Phoenix. It is today partly a passive resistance farm. Whilst we may not disturb the even tenor of the Phoenix life, force of circumstances must interrupt and then the settlers are involuntarily tested. We may not expose ourselves to temptation. But when it comes, we must face it. Or we have no character. I may not put my hand in a lion’s jaw but may I fly away from it when it is in front of me? The simile must not be carried too far because I see it is not a perfect illustration. For if you may not fly away from the lion, you may not from a seductive woman. As a matter of fact you must fly away from both if you cannot face them without fear. You may not kill the lion and you may not succumb to the woman. Reverting to Naidoo, when a man asks me what he should do, must I not propose the best for him? The secret of Phoenix is that it will and can harbour those who will conform to its fundamental rules. And if Naidoo can stand them he will be a help to himself and to Phoenix. Shelat came, was found wanting and went. Even Harilal Thakar went. And Anandlal and Virji. There is a natural process of winnowing going on that very wonderful place. I call it wonderful although it is partly my offspring. I have no doubt it was conceived in the purest spirit, it was born amid most strenuous and holy circumstances and it has been nurtured on a spiritual diet which has been and is being continuously purified more and more. It can become a place that would not hold an impure soul. The future depends upon West and Chhaganlal mostly and partly on Sam. Raojibhai and Maganbhai may be taken away from Phoenix at an early date though not for a year or so perhaps.

Thambi has written to me. He is very bitter against us all. We must meet his bitterness by the greatest gentleness. Simply walk over to him. Tell him you do not want to hurt his feelings. And if he is unwilling to talk, come away. Repeat the performance till your love conquers his passion. This we must do so long as he is not found to be, as he is not, a bad coin.

---

1 Umiashankar Manchharam Shelat

Your affairs I understand a little. I will say nothing. What I may not like I shall tolerate and watch.

I have asked opinion today by wire to post you cheque for £200. From this you should pay Eric in any event for the pressing calls upon the family to the extent of £160. The Newcastle Hospital bill should not be paid by you. But Miss Schlesin writes to me saying she has transferred it to you for you to contest with the Government. But if there is to be no contesting, please pay out the Passive Resistance funds, not your own.

Be cautious about paying P.K. Naidoo or others. Refer them to me when you are in doubt.

What a long letter this! I think I have covered all the points raised by you.

With love,

Upper House

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

101. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

7 BUITENSINGLE,

Tuesday [March 10, 1914]

MY DEAR LOWER HOUSE,

The greatest grief imaginable has befallen me. My brother\(^1\) died yesterday. I suppose simply thinking up to his last breath of me. What a passionate wish it was on his part to meet me!\(^2\) And for me I was hurrying everything on so that I could go to India with the quickest despatch and fall down at his feet and nurse him. But it was not to be. Now I must go to a family of widows with my poor self as the head. You who do not quite know the Indian patriarchal [system] cannot quite realize what this may mean. Anyway my desire to go to India is keener than ever. And yet who knows! I doubt very much whether I shall ever realize that desire. However, I must prepare for the pilgrimage and then calmly leave it in the hands of Him who wields

---

\(^1\) Lakshmidas Gandhi; vide also “Letter to C.F. Andrews”, 13-3-1914

\(^2\) Vide “General Knowledge about Health [—XXXIV]”, 16-8-1913
the almighty power.

These shocks make in me still more intense fearlessness of death. Why should the event agitate one? The grief itself has a selfish touch about it. It is no calamity that my brother is dead, if I am ready to meet death and consider it as the supreme and welcome crisis in life. It is because we fear death so much for ourselves that we shed tears over the deaths of others. How can I who know the body to be perishable and the soul to be imperishable mourn over the separation of body from soul. But there is a condition attached to a real belief in this beautiful and consoling doctrine. He who believes in it must not pamper the body but must be its ruler. He must regulate its wants so as to make it serve the dweller within and not allow the body to master him. Not to grieve over the death of others is to accept a state almost of perpetual grief for this connection between body and soul is itself grievous.

These are the thoughts that rule me just now. I shall not write another such letter just now. This has written itself. Please, therefore, pass on to Polak. Let Manilal read it. And then you may pass on to Chhaganlal for West and others to read.

I am revolving the idea in my own mind of help for the indentured.

With love,

UPPER HOUSE

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

102. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

CAPE TOWN,

Phagan Sud 14, 1970 [March 11, 1914]

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I have some time to myself just now. Medh writes to say that they are plotting again in Johannesburg to take my life. That would indeed be welcome and a fit end to my work. I would not be frightened by this and stay away from Johannesburg on account of this. In case I die suddenly, be the reason this or any other, I want to set down here certain ideas which I have thought out and which I have not so far placed before you.
“Service of the family should come first.” This is quite correct from the point of view of our supreme interest. He alone who can render such service will be able to serve the community or the country. What that service consists in is the only point to consider. I think selfless conduct will show that quite easily.

The life of service or political work which we have followed so far seems to me of the lowest order. Ours is a notorious family, that is, we are known to belong to a band of robbers. Without disparaging our elders, we may say that they have possibly done service to the people, but only incidentally, while they pursued their selfish interests. Judged by common standards, it would seem that they have acted with a fair measure of justice. That is, they treated people to a smaller measure of oppression. At present, the family has fallen on evil days. Any member who failed to obtain a paid job would be on the streets. The highest our eyes can look up to is Narandas, slaving away in Bombay. Other members of the family just loiter about or, wallowing in the politics of [princely] States, manage to earn just enough for their food from day to day. All of them are busy multiplying, arranging marriages, etc. The utmost limit of a grandmother’s or a daughter-in-law’s ambition is to get [the grandson or] the son married.

How may we save ourselves from this? If possible, we should take another road. We should become farmers, in the first instance. If, to our misfortune, that should bring unbearable hardships on us, we should labour as weavers, etc., and live in the same state as we do in Phoenix. We must reduce our wants to the minimum. As for diet, we should, as far as possible, adhere to the system which we have thought out. Milk, which is generally considered a pure substance, may be taken, but it should be looked upon rather as the opposite of pure. This is an important change. Its roots go deep; and its consequences will be far-reaching. It is a separate question whether or not the change will prove acceptable to all. But knowing at least that this article is denied to millions, one should avoid it. The idea that it is pure flesh and not in keeping with the way of non-violence will never leave my mind. I do not think I shall ever be able to consume milk, ghee, etc., while I inhabit this body. You should do with the minimum use of fire. Any boys from the family who might wish to join should be allowed to do so and admitted. They should not be permitted to stay on if they failed to follow these ideas. Widows who might not wish to live such a life should be respectfully told that you would pay them each one and a half times as much as would be spent on each if they were to follow that way of life and so clear your debt to them, that, apart from this, you could give them nothing else. Never trouble yourself to get anyone married and provided for. The boy, on growing up, will arrange the business himself if he wants to marry. If it does become necessary to find husbands for daughters, we would offer them to those who are prepared to marry them with no more than a tulsi leaf for dowry. We would not spend a single pie. We would wait till we came across such a candidate and teach the daughter to be patient. We should be prepared for some gossiping in consequence, and to be sneered at. All this, we would bear with love. If we remain upright in our conduct, we would come to no harm. To have offspring is no religious obligation on us. It is none of our duty to multiply numbers in the world. The real secret of life seems to consist in so living in the world as it is, without being attached to it, that moksha might become easy of attainment to us and to others. This will include service of self, the family, the community, and the State. We should not stop till we reach that stage.

Whoever joins us in this way of living will be to us as a member of our family. We shall take in Raojibhai, Maganbhai, Pragji and any others who may come forward. Should I meet with an untimely end, it is my desire that you should order your life as indicated here. Be in no hurry to leave Phoenix, but bear these objects in mind and stay on. I am quite hopeful about Maganlal. If Jamnadas gets trained up, he has the necessary spirit. He has determination, too.

After my death, the money needed on account of the widows who have been my special responsibilities should be obtained from Dr. Mehta. If it is not forthcoming, all of you who agree with the aims set out above should make the necessary provision even if you have to put yourselves to extreme difficulty and slave for the purpose. Harilal will have to fend for himself. He may entrust the children to you, or anyone else who is in India. Fuli has enough and to spare, so that there is no question of providing for her. And now remain Gokibehn¹, Nandkorhabhi², Gangabhabhi³ and Gokuldas’s⁴ wife. If they live

¹ Raliyatbehn, Ghandhiji’s sister
² Widow of Lakshmidas Gandhi
³ Widow of Karsandas
⁴ Son of Gandhiji’s sister, who died within a fortnight of his marriage in 1908.
together, that will be very good of them, graceful of them. If they do not, separate provision should be made for each. Children may be handed over [to them]. But it would be better if they come over to live with the others. In that case, the total cost of maintaining them is not likely to be [even] as much as Rs. 40. The expenses for Ba also should be estimated on a similar scale. She should, at any rate, understand that the right thing for her would be to live with them. And she, too, should hand over the boys. The sons who are prepared to assume responsibility for their mothers should, of course, be welcome to do so. The suggestion made above concerns such of them as apply to us for help. If Harilal takes upon himself the burden of maintaining Ba, let him by all means. It would be better still if he maintained Nand-korbhabhi. Then the problem will remain only in regard to Gokibehn and Goka’s wife, and Gangabhabhi. It would be as well if Kaku should assume the responsibility for his mother, and Samaldas’ on account of his. The way suggested above is for those who would be left with no support. No one will be justified in expecting, or will expect, anything above your own standard of living. Since I consider that to be the best way of living, the ideas outlined above do not appear to be harsh. The logic behind this reasoning is based on poverty which, indeed, appears to be the only sound basis.

After my death, you may show this letter to anyone you like. For the time being, it may be read by Maganlal, Raojibhai, Maganbhai, Pragji and Jamnadas. I only want that these persons should not mention it in other company. If you feel that all of them should not be allowed to read it, show it to those only who, you think, should read it.

I think the letter is so comprehensive that it will provide answers to all the questions which may occur to you. If, however, any point seems to have been left out, ask me. If you want to discuss any questions with me, set them down in writing. If you differ from me, have no hesitation in telling me so. You should also tell me if you feel that the responsibility will be too heavy for you. Make all points by way of criticism that may occur to you.

Blessings from
MOHANDAS

1 Son of Lakshmidas Gandhi, Gandhiji’s elder brother

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
116
My dear Charlie,

I had your ocean post message as also cable from London. There was also Reuter’s cable giving the gist of your interview with Reuter’s agent.¹ I have expanded your ocean letter and sent it to Indian Opinion.² I took the liberty of omitting Mrs. Gandhi and Manilal because they are your own. I omitted Kallenbach, Polak, and West because their names did not seem to me to fit in with the others. Perhaps you will make time to write to them individually if you have not done so already. Regarding the omission of the last three, I am not decided in my judgment. In such cases I obey the first instinct.

I do hope you had a nice time with your people. For the last two weeks I have felt like writing a letter to your dear father, but I did not know whether it might not be considered presumptuous I could still write, of course. I shall abide by your judgment and if I may write, ¹ The interview took place on March 10, after Andrews arrived in London. He was accorded a reception by Indians, led by Sarojini Naidu, the poetess. The report stated that: “. . . Mr. Andrews extolled the chivalrous patriotism of Mr. Gandhi, during the railway strike, in calling off the passive resistance movement so as not to embarrass the Government. He also extolled the heroism and endurance of the Indians, and the generous and faiminded treatment of himself by the Union Government.

“‘He said he was immensely impressed with General Botha’s sterling character and simplicity, and added that General Botha had assured him that he would do whatever he could to act justly by the Indians.”

² The message, despatched on March 1, conveyed Andrews’ thanks to friends in South Africa. It was published in Indian Opinion, 18-3-1914.
please let me have Mr. Andrews’ full name.

Mrs. Gandhi was near death’s door last week. I have therefore done hardly anything else save nursing her during the last 10 days. She rallied 2 days ago and the improvement continues. Owing to the illness I have been obliged to remain at home.

I had a chat today with Sir Benjamin. He tells me the report has been shown to him and that it is on the whole good. But as you know we may not accept his verdict.

Copies of the reprint of your lecture have been sent to most of the men with whom you came in contact. The Bishop has written a charming letter in acknowledging his copy. Mrs. Drew is sailing for London tomorrow. She has sent £5—for the P[assive] R[esistance] fund. She sent me some names for sending the reprint to. The papers have published notices as per enclosed cutting. There is a request daily from a few for copies. An attempt is being made to induce Indians to take up copies for distribution among European friends of theirs. W.P. Schreiner had a complimentary copy. He paid for 6 extra copies for his friends in England. So you see your mission is showing a double success. The great saint and the cause that brought you to S. A. are being advertised to the good of humanity.

I suppose I ought to tell you that I had cable news of the death of my eldest brother in Porbunder. He was like father to me. He it was who sent me to London. He used to be very bitter against me for being in S. A., but his last letter was, to my great joy, one of complete reconciliation. His one wish was to meet me. And I was longing to hurry back to India. But it was not to be. I have now the responsibility of having to look after 5 widows in my father’s family and of course their children. However I am quite at peace with myself. There is a very remarkable manifestation of sympathy for Mrs. Gandhi and myself as the news of the loss is spreading among the community.

I hope that you were able to recover your health in London and

---

1 Andrews had addressed the university students on February 17 on Tagore.
2 This is not available.
3 Lakshmidas Gandhi passed away on March 9.
4 This was for his legal studies, in 1888.
5 For Gandhiji’s reply to Lakshmidas’s charges, vide “Letter to Lakshmidas Gandhi”, 20-4-1907.
6 Gandhiji acknowledged the messages of condolence in “Letter to Indian Opinion”, 18-3-1914 that you had a good time among your people.

With love

Yours,

MOHAN

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: S.N. 4099

104. LETTER TO MANILAL GANDHI

[CAPE TOWN,]

Phagan Vad 2 [March 14, 1914]

CHI. MANILAL,

I have not delayed in the least in writing to you. It seems I write wrong addresses. It happened in the case of Jamnadas. The same thing happened in the case of Schlesin also. I shall hereafter read the addresses again.

Ba is now getting better. You must have seen what I wrote about Bapa in my letter to Kallenbach. Do write a letter to Chi. Samaldas.

You need not be disturbed by the intrigues that are being hatched there. No man can hasten or delay my death even by a minute. The best way of saving oneself from death is to go seeking it. It is no doubt our duty to take care of our life in a general way. More than this we need not do. We should rather welcome death whenever it comes.

It will not matter if you do not try to save time by discontinuing to cook for yourself. Let things go on as at present. I think it will take three hours at least. You can save time only if you make more changes in your diet. It is not necessary to make the changes for the present. I have written to Kallenbach also accordingly.

Send the list of your books again to Phoenix.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C. W. 1499 Courtesy: Radha-behn Choudhri
105. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

7 BUITENSINGLE,
March 15 [1914]

MY DEAR LOWER HOUSE,

Yes, you may expend the amounts you suggest on the stones. The inscription on both should be the same, only the names and the dates will vary.

I know that I have your sympathy and more in the affliction that has befallen me. But I must not say thanks to you. We are so indivisible one soul in two bodies.

With love,

UPPER HOUSE

[PS.]

Bananas are and should be unripe. Remove the outer skin, cut them into thin discs and dry in the sun 3 days. They are ready to be stored away when they are quite dry and brittle. They can be ground to any fineness or thickness and can be cooked as they are. With nuts and oil and tomatoes they make a perfect meal. But, of course, this is not ideal. The ideal is the uncooked meal. It is however the nearest approach and the least expensive. For travelling where you may not get fresh fruit it is perfect in the form of biscuits. These with dried unripe mangoes could be carried for an army. And they would form a most nourishing diet not at all sweet. Mrs. Gandhi is better but not satisfactory. I fear that she has a fatal trouble in her stomach. The only cure for her so far as I can see is a prolonged fast with the neem leaves water. She may have cancer of the stomach. This never yields to medical treatment but it must yield to fasting treatment if the patient has stamina. Mrs. Gandhi has that yet, I think. This information is however only for you. This is alarming and I am only conjecturing. I have informed Chhaganlal. She moves about but in the heart of her hearts she herself is not satisfied. The swelling recurs most obstinately. I am slowly preparing her for the worst again. But the agony may be prolonged. What a cruel man I must be or can be to thus contemplate the death of others. However, such is my state just now. Nothing moves me permanently. If Eric has not the cheque he may have it without questioning. I think you should discuss these things with Polak. The latter may not with the family so long as he is not \textit{persona grata}.

1 From the contents

The report will be out on Wednesday I think.\footnote{The Solomon Commission Report was presented to Parliament on March 17, Tuesday.} This is still supposed to be private. We may then expect the Bill\footnote{The Indians’ Relief Bill which was published on May 28, \textit{vide} “The Relief Bill”, 3-6-1914 and Appendix “The Indians Relief Act”, 1914.} early.

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

\textbf{106. LETTER TO JAMNADAS GANDHI}

\textit{Cape Town,\[
Phagan Vad 6 [March 17, 1914]\]

CHI. JAMNADAS,

You are right in what you say about wheat and dates. Every grain of wheat will yield a plant. That is not the case with a date palm. The part of the date fruit which we eat will not grow if planted. So long, therefore, as we are still on the middle level, eating the date fruit is not very objectionable. Groundnut is certainly open to objection, as I have always been saying. We have not, however, reached a stage when it can be given up. Olive is not open to objection because it contains a separable seed. You have rightly pointed out the objection against the sesame seed. Ultimately, we are to give up sesame oil itself and make do with what oil can be obtained from dry fruit. Of course, the objection I have mentioned will probably apply to every variety of dry fruit; almond, for instance, is but seed. You will see on reflection, however, that there is much difference between consuming wheat and consuming almonds. An almond tree continues to flourish, but the wheat plant, once the grain has been removed, is no better than a weed. It is of no other use. No such violence as is involved in the sowing of wheat and other operations is involved in similar operations relative to almond. It is not possible, however, to go very deep into this kind of argument. I am but ignorant myself. I am telling you of my own conclusions, tentative and immature as they are. The basic principle, undoubtedly, is this: one should make do with the fewest possible articles [of food] and in the smallest possible quantity, no more than what is absolutely necessary to pay the body its hire. It will be best to frame the rules of our diet bearing this principle in mind. A man who cooks a meal of just an ounce of rough-ground wheat and is free in five minutes is far superior to the one who wrings (as I do) the utmost pleasure from a variety of fruits. Another, however, who lives on no more than five bananas will out-distance the first. In other words, one who lives on fruit diet stands a far better chance of rising than the other. Even here, the mental attitude is the primary factor. The motive is the chief thing.

\footnote{The original has “the date stones”}

We cannot deduce any rule that, if we can consume the fruit, we can also consume the leaves, the bark, etc.

The reason why certain green vegetables are permitted on *ekadashi*¹ but wheat is forbidden seems to be an obvious one rather than anything abstract. Since people do not have an entire meal of vegetables or look upon them as food, some vegetables were permitted for gratifying the palate; but wheat, being food was excluded and in this way the original aim of eating less on ekadashi was to some extent maintained.

Gourds, etc., are, like tomatoes, more or less a kind of fruit. The tomatoes are allowed because they can be eaten uncooked. It is doubtful if gourd and the like, if uncooked, can be digested by all. Radish, etc., are but roots of a weed and the consumption of roots is thoroughly objectionable according to Jain principles. When Ba wanted to have ginger, I ate it with her to know its effects. I liked it and continued to take it after neem juice. Ba has quite an enthusiasm for it. Both she and I liked it. She collected some tender shoots of ginger. They were nothing but roots. I ate them for a day or two and relished them very much indeed. This morning, I was filled with compassion and despised myself. It was as though I could see the souls in these pieces of ginger. On one knot of it, there are several tender shoots. To eat them amounted to destroying so many embryos. Deeply pained, I gave up ginger today. I had not done so till now, having kept myself free to eat it when necessary. Henceforth, I will treat it as forbidden and avoid eating it as far as possible. Before I am in India, I don’t want to place myself under any more restrictions than those I have already accepted. Ginger, however, I will not eat in this country.

¹ Eleventh day of each dark and bright fortnight. Hindus generally fast on this day.

Consumption of cooked food involves the destruction of life in an unnatural, and therefore cruel, manner. The destruction of life through eating uncooked food occurs in a natural manner. Moreover, food, when cooked, loses its nourishing element (vitality). Having regard to this, we can practically eat only ripe fruit. To pluck or eat fruit before it is ripe is objectionable. You will see from this that I have not been able to act upon all the results of my thinking. To that extent, my thinking is ahead of my action. But that will remain, of course. The effort is always for eagerly following up thought with action.

If the desire to eat our food while it is still hot comes back again and again, it is because of the hold of a vicious habit of long standing. The desire must be suppressed with the utmost effort. Improper desires will always occur. By suppressing them every time, we grow firmer in mind and gain in spiritual strength.

Ba’s condition is not so good, nor so bad. The oedema is quite heavy today but she moves about with courage. I have asked her to eat whatever she relishes. One cannot say what will happen. She is not bed-ridden at present.

I am likely to be detained here for three weeks more.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5697 Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

107. OBSERVATIONS REGARDING COMMISSION’S REPORT

[CAPE TOWN,

After March 17, 1914]¹

Reference to the Tr[ans]vaal Gold Law has been omitted by the Commission. A declaration that vested rights will be respected is necessary. I have already given my meaning of vested rights.

S[outh] A[frica-]born. Indians cannot be kept out of the Cape unless the economic clause is applied to them by special instructions to the Immigration Officers. It is suggested that these instructions should be issued to the officers unless a new condition arises, namely, that there is an inordinate influx of illiterate S. A.-born Indians into the C[olony].

There seems to be an obscurity in the Commission’s report on this (the marriage) point.

(a) Plural wives of domiciled Indians should, with their minor children, be admitted irrespective of the fact whether they have previously entered S. A. or not. Such cases are very few. And all these cases might, within a specified period, be notified to the Union’s officials or the Provincial officials.

(b) Indi[an] m[arriage] off[icers] should not be prohibited from celebrating plural unions though these would not be legalised.

From a photostat of the draft in Gandhiji’s hand: S.N. 5977

108. LETTER TO “INDIAN OPINION”

THE EDITOR
INDIAN OPINION
SIR

I have been so overwhelmed with wires from different parts of the Union expressing sympathy with my wife and myself regarding the death of my brother in India that it is impossible for me to thank severally the Associations and individual senders. Numerous messages have been received from Durban, Maritzburg, Johannesburg and other places. I thank all most heartily for their sympathy. Whilst doing so I would like to say just a word. To me as a passive resister and as a firm believer in the oneness of the Soul, my brother’s loss should occasion no greater pain than the death of Nagappen, Narayanasamy and Hurbatsing, who were just as much my brothers as my blood brother whose loss so many friends are mourning with me. Valliamah Moonsamy’s untimely end is, if possible, a greater stab from the hand of Death than my brother’s end. Yet I share the common human failing, and the thoughts that arise in the mind from the loss of my brother, who was in the place of father to me and to whom, next to my dead mother, I owe all I am in life, are more vivid than those that arose in me when those three brother passive resisters and the sister passive resister died. The idea that is uppermost in my mind just now is that death should cause no fear in us, if we have lived in the fear of God and have done nothing in violation of the voice of our conscience. Then, indeed, is death but a change for the better and, therefore, a welcome change which need not evoke any sorrow. Such a change, I feel, my brother’s death must mean for him. And we in South Africa, especially those who are passive resisters, must learn not only not to fear death but must be prepared to face it and welcome it when it comes to us in the performance of our duty. So have died Narayansamy and his three successors. I wish for no better end and I am sure no other passive resister does.

Finally, may I ask those friends who have overwhelmed me with their sympathy in my bereavement to help me, if the points of passive resistance are satisfactorily settled in the near future, in my desire to return to India to fall at the feet of my brother’s widow and to take charge of the domestic cares of five widows in my father’s family, in which the hand of death now leaves me the responsible head, according to the Hindu usage.

I am, etc.,
M. K. GANDHI

Indian Opinion, 18-3-1914

109. LETTER TO MANILAL GANDHI

[CAPE TOWN,]

Thursday [March 19, 1914]

CHI . MANILAL,

I hope it was after careful thought that you made the changes in diet you have done. See that whatever you do is not [done in a hurry] to be given up afterwards, and remembered merely as a dream. Some of it at least must endure for the whole of your life. You have introduced so big a change that you may perhaps find yourself in the same state you were in at the end of chaturmas. There is only one way to guard oneself against excessive eating, viz., to serve out the full quantity for oneself in advance and put away the utensils containing the rest before sitting down for the meal. Ba is all right.

Blessings from
BAPU

MASTER MANILAL GANDHI
BOX 2493
JOHANNESBURG

From the original postcard in Gujarati in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 104
Courtesy: Sushilabehn Gandhi

110. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

7 BUITENSINGLE,
March 20 [1914]¹

MY DEAR LOWER HOUSE,

You seem just now to be the busiest man in our circle. Your correspondence is invariably (almost) written in the train. Well, I hope, the result of this activity will be greater peace for you and a great benefit to the circle. I am not joking. I am serious though naturally I am sceptical about the value of such restless activity. But under exceptional circumstances it may be the lesser evil.

You asked me a question about the counting of beads. I forgot to deal with it. There is undoubtedly great efficacy in knowingly and deliberately uttering some sacred name as often as you can. The love of the owner of the name then grows on you and you ultimately merge in Him. Now every rosary has a stated number of beads. The Hindu rosary has 108. You take the 108 names of the deity once every turn of the rosary. And as the number of the beads is fixed you never omit a name. Thus you simply contemplate the name without worrying to know how often you have taken it or whether you have omitted any. The Muslims have 99 beads to correspond to the 99 names of God. Some Hindus simply mutter the same name. In that case the number of beads is of no consequence so long as it is the same rosary. You are in a position to know then how often during the day you have taken the sacred name. Thus to mutter the name of the Highest without a selfish purpose is a most desirable practice. Hence the universality of rosaries. I want to continue the counting if I can. The more secretly it is done, the better of course. The early morning and sunset are the best times and I try to keep these times at present. I do not = cannot for my eyes get up very early nowadays. I am going to try again. I cannot just now have my eyes examined or take another pair of spectacles. I want to observe the effect of the Indian climate on the eyes.

¹ From the contents

126 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI

Another question of yours was why was Indian Opinion transferred to West and Maganlal? Simply because the Trust-deed contemplates it and the Trustees should not [be] made responsible for what may appear in Indian Opinion.

Yours,

UPPER HOUSE

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

111. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

7 BUITENSINGLE,
March 21 [1914]

MY DEAR LOWER HOUSE,

Yes, I have given you a most thankless task to perform. I hope that you will be able to make a healthy impression on Eric. My analysis of Ritch was, I feel convinced, perfect. His children are suffering for his sins. It was a most recklesslike [sic]. No more than the present debts are to be discharged and then to the extent of not more than £170 so far as I can see at present. Do not sour Eric by too strong words. We can only put them in the best position possible and then they must rise to it or fall.

As for Mrs. Polak, she must follow her own inclinations. She is a different type. She knows or thinks she knows what she is doing. She is a superior woman. And Polak is a gem of the “purest ray serene”. He can reflect those he loves. After all the money must go the way it has come.

1 Of September 14, 1912; vide “The Phoenix Trust Deed”, 14-9-1912.
2 A popular poetic metaphor authored by Thomas Gray in his “Elegy in a country churchyard”; vide also “In Memoriam”, 12-1-1921.
The best translation of Ramayana is I think Griffith’s. What you want is a translation of Tulsidas’s Ramayana and no other. I might some day dictate it to you. Meanwhile you should procure Dutt’s rendering of the substance.

The Parliament rises for holiday on the 9th April and meets again on the 22nd. Whether therefore the Bill is brought or not before then I propose to leave here at least on the 9th but it may be much earlier.’ I must see. I shall know more next week.

With love,

U P P E R  H O U S E

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

112. LETTER TO RAOJIBHAI PATEL

CAPE TOWN,
Phagan Vad 10 [March 21, 1914]

DEAR SHRI RAOJIBHAI,

I have your letter. I had heard about your fast. If you had a reason for going on a fast, I have nothing to say. You will certainly enjoy no solitude there. There should be more of physical activity in Phoenix. That is conducive to peace. There the first place is assigned to service.

The breakdown in J’s health has given me a fright. I wish she recovers soon.

I feel anxious on account of Maganbhai. I cannot judge why things do not get right [with him]. I also feel that it would be good if he went along with me. Please keep on preparing his mind to that end. We shall see what can be done in India. I have a persistent feeling that the thing is due to mental illness. I am trying to discover why he enjoyed good health in gaol, but this is all that I can think of. While in gaol, the mind had been forced into an equable state and this had an effect on the body, too, so much so that he kept well despite the sort of food that he had to eat. Cannot he attain to that mental poise out of gaol? Be that as it may, the only right course for Maganbhai seems to be that he should go with me to India. Let him also think it over.

---

1 The Indians’ Relief Bill was introduced in the House of Assembly on June 2; vide “The Relief Bill”, 3-6-1914 and Appendix “The Indians Relief Act”, 1914.
I shall cite in passing one instance, my own. Ba wanted to take ginger. Since I was under no vow to avoid it, I started taking it along with her in order to test its properties. Ba’s tongue loves dainties. She happened to discover some shoots of ginger. I fell in love with them, so much so that I also used to chew four or five of these tender shoots, of the size of a grain of gram. One day, Ba collected a quantity of these from Mrs. Gool’s basket and placed them in [our] room. I was struck with horror to see them. The night passed. I sprang out of bed in a fright, early in the morning. How could one eat ginger? This thing, a single joint of which proliferated into so many shoots, must indeed be full of lives. Moreover, to eat fresh shoots was as good as killing delicate babies. I felt extremely disgusted with myself. I resolved that I would never eat ginger, not in this life. But the real fun comes now. Ba saw that I would not take ginger. She asked me the reason. I told her. She also caught my point. She carried away the very tendershoots and pressed me to take something from the rest. I declined. The vow holds, but the tongue and the eye are like dogs. The desire to eat ginger comes over me whenever the eye falls on a piece of it. The tongue starts licking. But just as a dog greedily watching food left over will not dare to eat it in the presence of the master, the tongue is prevented from touching the ginger by the watchfulness of Mr. Atman. My eye falls on it the whole day because it is lying just where my papers are. It seems more difficult for me to turn away my mind from ginger than it was to give up sugar or salt, such is the state I find myself in.

What, then, should you blame yourself for? It is not for nothing that the mind has been compared to a monkey that has got drunk. What is the point in having high hopes of learning wisdom from me? We are all sailing in the same battered ship and I, with greater wisdom than the rest by way of experience, point out the direction in which you are welcome to toddling along. We are all in darkness, groping for the same thing. Maybe my steps are firmer and move with greater confidence. To hold me in greater respect than this will amount to arresting your upward progress. When I have conquered all desire, I will instruct you without the least hesitation. For the present, let us pull together in quest of Narayana who grants moksha and, undeterred even if we lose our way or fall or get knocked about, go on seeking with courage and patience.

1 Name of God Vishnu

Blessings from Mohandas

[From Gujarati]
Gandhijini Sadhana and Jivannu Parodh

113. LETTER TO JAMNADAS GANDHI

[CAPE TOWN,]
Phagan Vad 11 [March 22, 1914]

CHI. JAMNADAS,

I got your two letters today. There is always twice the normal quantity of post on Saturdays. Write to Rustomjee Sheth and Motilal1 about the neem tree. It will be good if Maganlal plants one whenever he finds a sapling. From what Mr. Kallenbach has discovered, macaroni can be eaten but only if obtained from a particular source. There is a big risk, however, in that it is an article prepared by non-vegetarians and one concerning which we have no information. We can do nothing else but take their word. The traditional objection of the Hindus against all ready-made articles of food deserves to be respected, as far as possible. Jaggery is not merely [sugar-cane] juice; kharo2 or salt is added to it. Moreover, sugar-cane juice is boiled and from the whole only the sugar or jaggery is retained. If mangoes were to be processed in the same manner, the product would likewise be unacceptable. As for wind, it will probably be cured if [the sufferer] is given neem leaves and pepper or ginger. Do you take plenty of exercise? For the present you need not force yourself to get up early.

Did you read what I have written3 to Ramdas about fasting? If not, ask for the letter and go through it. I don’t want to prevent boys from fasting. Only, it should be done intelligently.

It is uncertain where else, apart from Johannesburg, I shall stop on the way back. The shirts at the Farm are mine. I am afraid I cannot spare any of them for you. You will have to have new ones made. That is easily done. Take my shirt as a model.

Blessings from Bapu

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5699 Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

1 Motilal M. Diwan, a leading Indian of Natal
2 Substance containing carbonates of sodium and potassium
3 This letter is not available.
114. LETTER TO MANILAL GANDHI

[CAPE TOWN.]
Phagan Vad 11 [March 22, 1914]

CHI. MANILAL,

I have been getting your letters. I see that your going over there has been for the best. And it is as well that you are alone. You are too quick in making changes. I wish some of them at least endure. It will be enough if your habits become regular there. Personally, I think it will be best if you come along with me. There will be no difficulty if 20 of us are together on the ship. I certainly don’t think Jekibehn will be able to stay with me at any rate for some time after we reach India. It is my desire to see you esteemed in India as a brahmachari of a high order, your conduct so naturally well-disciplined that it cannot but produce an impression on others. This will require hard work, study and purity in you. No impression can be made by doing anything with the deliberate object of producing one. If, however, the things which commend themselves to one are best, they will impress. You must, therefore, make your own choice and consider what you want to do. You must then cling to the thing till death.

I am sending Chi. Harilal’s letter for you to read. Think over the wretched state he has been reduced to. The fault is not his, but mine. During his childhood, I followed a way of life none too strict in its rule and he is still under its influence. Tear off the letter after reading it.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 103 Courtesy: Sushilabehn Gandhi
115. FRAGMENT OF LETTER

[CAPE TOWN.]

Sunday [March 22, 1914]\(^1\)

Everything is transient, except the atman. Not only should we keep reminding ourselves of this but we should work on accordingly. The more I reflect, the more insistently I feel the supreme importance of truth and brahmacharya. The latter, together with all other rules of morality, is comprehended in truth. I cannot help thinking, however, that brahmacharya is important enough to share the place of honour with truth. It is my unshakable faith that these two can conquer any obstacle whatever. The real obstacles are the evil desires of the mind. If, for our happiness, we depend in no way on our outward relations with others, we would always think of what we ought to do rather than of what people might say.

[From Gujarati]

Gandhijini Sadhana and Jivan Prabhat

116. THE COMMISSION’S REPORT AND RECOMMENDATIONS\(^2\)

The report of the [Indian Inquiry] Commission was released last week. We must admit that the report displays a sense of justice on the part of the Commissioners. It is a unanimous report, signed by all the three members. Messrs Esselen and Wylie deserve congratulations on this. We had felt it our duty to protest against their appointment. But they have not allowed their previously expressed views to affect their judgment. The agitation by the community is responsible, we believe, for this good result.

The Commissioners, as also Lord Hardinge, have criticized the action of Mr. Gandhi, and the general body of the Indians who

\(^1\) In the source this letter has been placed in March 1914, but the exact date is not ascertainable. It is, however, likely that the letter was written about the same time as the “Letter to Manilal Gandhi”, the preceding item acted on his advice, in abstaining from giving evidence. This criticism is not at all surprising. They wanted that the largest possible number of Indians should give evidence. We can understand why the Viceroy also criticized this action. He had both to act consistently with the advice which he had previously offered and to support the Commission. We believe, however, that the Indian community acted wisely in abstaining from giving evidence. To speak plainly, an oath once taken can never be broken. If they had tendered evidence, they would have struck at the very root of satyagraha. Moreover, abstention from tendering evidence has, in the event, proved to be an advantage. We had three hundred witnesses at least. Indian Associations throughout South Africa would have led evidence on our grievances. Then, there were the Europeans ready to tender evidence. Thus, the mere recording of our evidence would have taken six months. After that, the Commission would have taken some more time before issuing the report. It would then have been rendered impossible to introduce remedial legislation in the current session of Parliament, as is now likely to be done. What could have been more disastrous for us? Again, if we had tendered evidence, the spirit of conciliation which we find prevailing today would not have been there. It would also not have been possible for Mr. Andrews to do what he did, sowing the seeds of conciliation so silently and with such deep love and humility. The reason is that our giving evidence would have aggravated animosity. We, on our side, would have made bitter statements and the whites would have retaliated. The latter would have led stronger evidence against the evidence tendered by us, and in that case, would not have had the sense of responsibility that they actually showed. In these circumstances we could not have entertained strong hopes for settlement as we do now. Thus, our remaining faithful to an oath taken in the face of advice to the contrary by the Viceroy was sacred in itself and it has yielded gratuitously other good sweet fruit. Such is the magic power of truth and the efficacy of satyagraha. He who has the fear of God in him need not be afraid of any man. The truth of this has been proved over and over again a million times.

\(^2\) This was an editorial note.

A scrutiny of the Commission’s report leads us to the same conclusion. Practically no evidence was tendered by us in regard to the £3 tax and the question of Indian marriages. But these two issues were in the forefront of our struggle, and the Commission’s recommendations on them could not possibly have been better even if we had tendered voluminous evidence. If we had led evidence in regard to the £3 tax, very probably, as it seems to us, the Commission would not have found it possible to criticize it as strongly as it did. All those Indians who were misled into giving evidence rendered a disservice [to the community]. One of them gave evidence about force having been used and his testimony has been summarily dismissed by the Commission. The evidence tendered in regard to the Immigration Act was so flimsy that it undid the effect of the strong note submitted by Mr. Polak to Sir Benjamin; leading such evidence before the Commission could only result in putting us off with mere trinkets. These trivial issues, on which the community could have secured concessions at any time after the settlement or as part of the settlement, provoked the Commission’s strictures and proved our petty-mindedness. Let us cite one or two examples. The Commission has recommended that the certificates of identity be issued for three years’ duration instead of one year. In fact, we are entitled to permanent certificates [of domicile]. And that was what we demanded before Sir Benjamin. In consequence of the demand for three-year identity certificates submitted to the Commission, our demand for permanent certificates [of domicile] has been set aside. Because of uninformed and scrappy evidence tendered to the Commission on the question of trading licences, the Commission simply dismissed the issue. The issue of the Gold Law was also dismissed by the Commission as it was mixed up with other issues. Thus, in regard to the questions on which evidence was tendered we shall have to be satisfied with much less. Let the community note that all these matters were covered by the fifth point in Mr. Cachalia’s letter. It contained a demand for reasonable administration of all existing laws. But for this demand, the evidence that was given could not have been given. If, therefore, our countrymen had not been hasty and given the ill-considered evidence that they did, we could have secured much more and the fifth demand would have met with the same fortunate result as the demands in respect of the £3 tax and other matters. No permanent harm has, therefore, been done by their evidence, for the fifth point [in Mr. Cachalia’s letter] represents a demand for a standing assurance. If the Government gives, as it will have to give, such an assurance, the community will be justified in taking up further questions like the administration of the Gold Law, and the various trading licence Acts. Efforts are being made to see that this becomes possible. The Commission’s report is not the last word on the Indian question. In so far as it adversely affects our interests, it is not binding on satyagrahis, and the community is not likely to be harmed by the misguided evidence given in ignorance by some of its members. The remedy, of course, lies in the community’s hands.

1 An Indian saying

1 Vide “Letter to Secretary for Interior”, 12-9-1913.

The Commission’s report establishes that our satyagraha was in a just cause, that the charge of breach of promise levelled by us was correct and that all our demands were reasonable. This result is by no means insignificant. Unquestionably it is, as we believe, a perfect success for satyagraha.

If the Government accepts the Commission’s recommendation on the marriage question, the following will be the consequences:

(1) In the case of a person who has more than one living wife, one of the wives and her minor children will have the right of entry.
(2) If a man with only one wife wants his marriage to be legally recognized, he can do so, and get it registered before a Maulvi or Brahmin or other marriage officer nominated for the purpose.
(3) A person with only one wife desiring to have his marriage legally recognized can secure a certificate of legal recognition after the registration of his marriage, and his wife will have the same rights as a European wife.
(4) Arrangements are to be made for appointing Brahmans and Mullahs as marriage officers for the purpose of new marriages.
(5) If a person has more than one wife, all his wives and minor children will be permitted to enter; they will have no other legal rights.
(6) Even in the case of a lawful monogamous marriage, the husband will be free to take a second wife as sanctioned by his religion. But the second wife will not be recognized for legal purposes.
(7) No Indian is bound to take any of these steps and non will, in consequence of not doing so, forfeit the rights of his wife or wives.

More than this we did not demand and, we believe, cannot. To conclude: in addition to undertaking legislation about marriages and the £3 tax, the Government will have to do all it can to meet our demands in the Cape and the Free State and the demand relating to the administration of existing laws, and then alone will this epic struggle of ours, which has been going on for the last eight years, come to an end. For the present, we hope the signs point to its termination. But when one like Rama did not know what the next day was to bring him, who are we that we should claim to know the future?

[From Gujarati]
Indian Opinion, 25-3-1914

117. SPEECH AT CAPE TOWN RECEPTION

March 25, 1914

Mr. Gandhi thanked those present at the function, as also Mr. and Mrs. Gool and other members of the family, for their services to Mrs. Gandhi during her illness and to himself, and likewise all those friends who called to inquire after Mrs. Gandhi from time to time and brought fruit. He explained the implications of the Commission's report and argued with special emphasis that it was in the interests of the [Indian] community that Hindus and Muslims live as brothers. It was perfectly possible, he explained, for each community to adhere to its religion and yet live in peace with the other.

[From Gujarati]
Indian Opinion, 1-4-1914

118. LETTER TO MAHATMA MUNSHIRAM

Phoenix, Natal, March 27, 1914

DEAR MAHATMAJI,

Mr. Andrews has familiarised your name and your work to me. I feel I am writing to no stranger. I hope therefore that you will pardon me for addressing you by the title which both Mr. Andrews and I have

---

1 A meeting of Indians was held under the auspices of the Hindu Sabha to honour Gandhiji, Kasturba and Imam Abdul Kadir Bawazeer. Vartak presided. The Patidar community donated a sum of £7 10s to be used at Gandhiji’s discretion. The following report appeared in the English columns of Indian Opinion: “Mr. Gandhi wishes us to state that, during his stay at Cape Town, Dr. Gool was most unremitting in his attendance on Mrs. Gandhi during her serious illness, from which, we are sorry to say, she is not yet quite free.”

2 (1856-1926); later known as Swami Shraddhanand; a leader of the Arya Samaj, founder of the Gurukul at Kangri near Hardwar; was killed by a Muslim fanatic.
used in discussing you and your work. Mr. Andrews told me also how you, Gurudev and Mr. Rudra had influenced him. He described to me the work your pupils did for the Passive Resisters and gave me such word pictures of the life at the Gurukula that as I am writing this I seem to be transported to the Gurukula. Indeed he has made me impatient to visit the three places described by Mr. Andrews and to pay my respects to the three grand sons of India who are at the head of these institutions.

I remain,
Yours,

MOHANDAS K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 2204

119. LETTER TO G. K. GOKHALE

PHOENIX,
NATAL,
April 1, 1914

DEAR MR. GOKHALE,

I had your two cables. To the last one I am just now replying.

I doubt whether Mrs. Gandhi will survive the settlement. I am writing this by her bed side. I have to be her doctor, nurse and everything. Then my brother’s death leaves the sole charge of five widows and their children in my hands. Dr. Mehta is just now paying the expenses of the others. To this he will, I do not doubt, add the maintenance of my brother’s widow. But she and the others are most naturally anxious to have me with them at the earliest possible moment. I would, therefore, grudge having to go to London unless you consider it absolutely necessary. If you do, I shall certainly come if Mrs. Gandhi dies or is better—so well, that is to say, as to permit of my being away from her, I suppose, at least for two months.

As I have already informed you, Indian legislation will not be undertaken before the reopening of the Union Parliament on the 22nd instant.

I do hope that you will materially benefit by the cure at Vichy.

1 Susil Kumar Rudra; Indian Christian educationist; Principal, St. Stephen’s College, Delhi, 1909-23
I know it is useless my asking you not to worry about me or my future. Wherever I may be placed in India I shall carry out my compact with you, viz., that I should observe absolute silence except on the S[outh] A[frica] question for one year at least after my landing in India and about everything else I have promised.

I am,

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 3775

120. LETTER TO MANILAL GANDHI

[Phoenix,
Natal,]

Chaitra Sud 8, 1970 [April 3, 1914]

CHI. MANILAL,

The changes you have introduced are excellent. If you keep them up, you may do yourself much good. I have heard a great deal about the moral effects of getting up early. Why should you be afraid of April 1? Chaitra Sud 5 is looked upon as a sacred panchami\(^1\), which means that you have introduced the change on an auspicious day. In the last analysis, we alone can make fools of ourselves. If we have spirit enough in us, no one dare make a fool of us.

The morning hours should be devoted to the most important activities. It will do if you make it a rule to do a large number of sums in arithmetic. I shall be able to tell you more later. I am sending some books for you. Learn Sanskrit also very well.

Ba takes wheat coffee without milk. Except for that, she is on a fast. She is confined to bed. It seems her oedema will go down. I cannot say what the final outcome will be.

What did you do about the letter from Bapa? I wrote something in English about him. What happened to it?

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 95 Courtesy: Sushilabehn Gandhi

\(^1\) Fifth day
121. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

[April 4, 1914]

MY DEAR LOWER HOUSE,

Herewith Miss Hobhouse's farewell for you to keep. You may explain the meaning of it to Manilal. Her preface is wrong if it were universally applied.

You have made a great change about getting up. You can keep it up if you adhere to the retiring time which you should do.

Mrs. Gandhi is still practically fasting. She is taking wheat coffee without milk or sugar in addition to the infusion of the leaves. The swelling has not left her entirely but I think it is going. Anyway I feel that no other treatment could be better.

The whole of my time is given up to her and she takes it all. She resents my absence even for an hour. She is helpless without me.

With love,

Yours,

UPPER HOUSE

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

122. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

[Phoenix]

Tuesday [April 7, 1914]

MY DEAR LOWER HOUSE,

You will remember the following in the 2nd Chapter of the Song Celestial: "Anger leads to madness which brings on loss of memory. Then the intellect becomes weakened till at last the man himself is undone." Why did you give vent to anger? Manilal describes the apple incident. Was that the cause? He says he retorted and was sorry. Anyway your early rising must be for the sake of control of passions.

It is obvious we both fasted practically the same day. For me it was the nativity of Rama. And I had decided in Cape Town that as we laid so much stress on Ramayana, I would fast that day and then I further decided to fast every eleventh day of the two halves of the month as I used to before\(^1\). There is no fixed limit for this, so that I fasted on Saturday and then again on Monday. Hence I was up this morning at 2 a.m. Manilal’s was the first letter I wrote and yours is the second. You know how little sleep I need when I am fasting.

1 Vide “Letter to Manilal Gandhi”, 12-4-1914.

I have made a very drastic change here which I am asking Jamnadas to describe in his letter to Manilal. He will do so and Manilal must give it to you. Here I would only say that I took a vow on Sunday that I would restrict myself to one helping only whilst at Phoenix. I should endeavour to carry it out elsewhere also.

Mrs. Gandhi is lingering. She is taking a little food now but it is next to nothing. At this rate she can’t live many months if that. Yet who knows?

Please return the inscription I sent you. I shall have it rewritten in bold letter.

I see here a bag containing your papers. It has some letters from Mrs. Mayo\(^2\), etc. I thought I would search there for your Standerton papers but my search was vain. I cannot get over the loss of those papers.\(^3\) I cannot reconcile myself to the idea of their having been deliberately stolen. If they are not mislaid, they must have been lost by you owing to your usual habit of rushing. I do not ask questions but I have a vague fear that even now you are rushing and spending money in what to me would be idle speculation. But it is as well I am not with you. Let your progress go along your own line. How long could I reason? Only think, think and think forty times before you do anything at all. Haste is waste. ‘Hasten slowly’ was Lord John Russell’s motto.\(^4\)

And you seem to me to have been hasty in judging Andrews. I fancy that I know him better. Anyway, he does not consider every

\(^1\) ibid

\(^2\) Mrs. Isabella Fyvie Mayo Lafcadio Hearn, British journalist, author of several works on Japan, who married a Japanese woman and became a Japanese citizen.

\(^3\) Gandhiji had been arrested on Standerton Road on November 8, 1913 during the third and last satyagraha campaign before he left for India; vide “Application for Bail”, 8-11-1913 and “The Last Satyagraha Campaign: My Experience”, after 23-7-1914.

\(^4\) For similar references by Gandhiji to illustrate his point, vide “Mixed Schools and Morals”, 9-12-1911
Indian to be a saint. Nor is he like Hearn. Hearn began by loving the Japs, Andrews began by suspecting Indians. Remember he came avowedly as a missionary to convert. But this is enough. I cannot begin another sheet and must write other letters.

With love,

UPPER HOUSE

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

123. A MARRIAGE PROCLAMATION

The Union Government Gazette of the 24th March contains a marriage proclamation which is of some importance, as it bears on the expected legislation on the Indian marriage difficulty. We give elsewhere the proclamation in full. In effect, it requires banns to be published of intended Mahomedan or Hebrew marriages, in terms of the existing Natal legislation. If the proclamation has reference in practice only to Hebrew marriages, we can have nothing to say. If it anticipates the Indian marriages legislation and is intended to be a feeler, it is an ill omen. For the essence of the Indian proposal is that Indian marriages celebrated in accordance with the religious ceremonial prescribed by any of the great Indian faiths should be recognized by the law of South Africa so long as they are monogamous in fact. Now Indian religions do not require publication of banns. We have our own method (in our opinion, far superior to that of the publication of banns) of widely advertising approaching marriages. No Indian priest worthy of the name can possibly perform a marriage ceremony if there is any objection offered against it in terms of the religious custom or law. And it is the caste or the guild which takes severe notice of any breach of the canonical law. Whilst we do not wish to offend the sentiment of the Europeans of South Africa regarding monogamy, we certainly do not contemplate surrendering our religious principles by a hair’s breadth. We think it but right to utter this note of warning whilst the proposed legislation is still unpublished.

Indian Opinion, 8-4-1914

1 Lafcadio Hearn, British journalist, author of several works on Japan, who married a Japanese woman and became a Japanese citizen
124. LETTER TO E. M. GORGES

[PHOENIX,
NATAL.,]
April 8, 1914

DEAR MR. GORGES,

I would like to bring the following point to your notice. Mr. Polak sent the temporary certificates that were issued to the educated Indians who were allowed to settle in the Transvaal in terms of the Provisional Settlement of 1911 to be exchanged for permanent certificates in virtue of the Immigrants Regulation Act of 1913, and I understand that Mr. Chamney has written saying that such certificates are not yet to be issued. May I know why permanent certificates are not being issued?

I am,

Yours truly,

E. M. GORGES
OFFICES OF THE INTERIOR
CAPE TOWN

From a photostat of the typewritten office copy: S.N. 5958

125. LETTER TO E. F. C. LANE

[PHOENIX,
NATAL.,]
April 8, 1914

DEAR MR. LANE,

I notice in the Union Government Gazette a Marriage Proclamation requiring those who want to have their marriages celebrated by their Mahomedan or Hebrew Marriage Officers to have notices published of their intention so to do. I do not know whether this proclamation is deliberate as showing the future policy of the Government in anticipation, or whether it is a proclamation required for the Hebrews but necessitating reference to the Mahomedans in terms of the Natal Marriage Law referred to therein. If it is the former, I beg to draw General Smuts’ attention to the fact that what has been

1 A reply to this was received to the effect that the matter was under consideration and it would be dealt with after the passage of the Asiatic legislation.

142 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
submitted by me on behalf of the Indian community is that past de facto monogamous marriages celebrated according to Indian religious customs should be legalised and that, in future, such marriages should be recognized as legal. The Marriage Proclamation in question introduces the practice of the publication of banns, a practice which is totally opposed to both the Hindu and the Mahomedan usage; nor is any such publication necessary, because of the respective religions themselves requiring an elaborate process which renders fraudulent marriages impossible. I feel that, whilst the legislation to give effect to the recommendations of the Commission is being drafted, I should bring this matter to the notice of General Smuts.

I observe, too, from Mr. Burton’s reply to Mr. Meyler that the indentured Indians in the employ of the Railways Department have deducted from their wages instalments in part payment of the £3 Tax. I venture to suggest that a continuance of this practice is hardly consistent with the attitude shown by the Commission regarding the Tax. One of the chief points that the Commission had to advise upon was the £3 tax, and it is submitted that this deduction might have been stopped by the Government at least pending the report of the Commission, and now that the Commission has made such strong recommendations for the repeal of the Tax, I do trust that the officials concerned will be advised, if they have not been already, not to insist upon this deduction, for I assume that, if the Government bring in a Bill for the repeal of the Tax, the arrears will be remitted.

I am,

Yours truly,

ERNEST F. C. LANE, ESQ.

OFFICES OF THE INTERIOR

CAPE TOWN

From a photostat of the typewritten office copy: S.N. 5957

126. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

[PHOENIX]

Friday [April 10, 1914]

MY DEAR LOWER HOUSE,

Just now I am nothing but an efficient nurse devoting my whole energy to my task. Mrs. Gandhi is my sole consideration and she claims me. If I am away from her for any length of time she cries bitterly. I do not know what is to become. She may recover but there is not much chance. She will linger on for a while but cannot survive this illness. She has to be helped to do everything. I am only praying that there may be no imperative public call on me whilst I am doing this work.

You will now see why I cannot give you love letters at present. I did not or did I tell you that I do not want to perform the opening ceremony regarding the tombstone and I ought not to. We should get our old friend Hosken or any other you may think of.

The drastic changes made here are most satisfying. If they continue, they will form a splendid structure but we shall see. When I have more time I shall go into them more fully.

With love,

UPPER HOUSE

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

127. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

April 12, 1914

MY DEAR LOWER HOUSE,

Your letter of the 9th is petty, touchy and spiteful. It has made me sad and shows that all your so-called reforms there are simply superficial. What you call a circular letter is no circular letter. It was addressed to you and Polak. In your letter of the 8th, you complain of absence of my letter and in yours of the 9th you resent the very letter which explains absence of anything from me. Polak went for me for not writing and not getting Miss Schlesin to write about Mrs. Gandhi’s health. You, Polak and Manilal are sufficiently interested in her health to want to know about it daily; hence the letter from Miss Schlesin and the instructions that she herself should write as often as possible. There would have been no such letter had Mrs. Gandhi not been sick. Now tell me wherein I was wrong in sending you what you call a circular letter. Do you see my point and your pettiness? You are entirely right when you say you are jealous (and wrongly so) of Miss Schlesin and Andrews. Because she wrote the letter, it became an offence to you. And as if your letter, warning me not to send you a circular letter was not enough, you must perforce remark underneath
Miss Schlesin’s letter, “Please do not send me such circular letters henceforth”. You should be ashamed of having done this.

Manilal writes saying that you were surprised that I should have asked him to retire even [if] you might not have. Why surprised? You and Manilal are not equals. Manilal is a lad having to form his character. If he wants to cultivate the habit of early rising, it is essential that he retires early. Your hours may not be regular. Manilal not being a businessman need never have irregular hours. And I should have thought that you would encourage the boy to keep strictly regular hours even though you may not. I certainly do not expect the boys to keep awake with me because I retire late. If Manilal has misuderstood the position, you may explain it to him. I feel the same thing about his food. If he wishes to keep to a particular course of diet, he should not change with you. If the entirely fruitarian experiment had agreed with him, you should have allowed him to keep to it and made the complicated changes only for yourself.

Mrs. Gandhi is much better but an event happened yesterday which once more proved what I have told you, namely, that she has both the devil and the divine in her in a most concentrated form. She made yesterday a most venomous remark: “Who has opened Devdas’s drawer?” suggesting that Jeki had tampered with it. She spits fire on Jeki. I gently remarked that I had opened it. “Why?” was the growling query. I said, “In order to see whether I could find a sheet for you.” “That does not contain sheets,” was the retort, so much as to convey to me that I had not opened the drawer but I was telling a fib to shield Jeki. This was too much. And I again gently but rebukingly remarked that she was sinful in her thought and that her disease was largely due to her sins. Immediately she began to howl. I had made her leave all the good food in order to kill her, I was tired of her, I wished her to die, I was a hooded snake. The manner of the delivery of these remarks was most vicious. I told her even though she was ill, I could not pity her in her sins. The more I spoke the more vicious she became. I kept completely self-possessed. I apologized to her and told her that henceforth even to that extent I would not remonstrate with her. Nor would I. She has a character and she has none. She is the most venomous woman I have ever met. She never forgets, never forgives. She is quite normal today. But yesterday’s was one of the richest lessons of my life. All the charges she brought against me she undoubtedly means. She has contrary emotions. I have nursed her as a son would nurse his mother. But my love has not been sufficiently intense and selfless to make her change her nature. What wonder if Anglia and others cannot respond to my skin-deep love? What wonder if they misunderstood me? Truly she has so far been my best teacher. She teaches me emptiness of the world, she teaches me patience, forgiveness, greater need for self-sacrifice, for love and charity. The incident leaves me, I hope, a better, wiser, more loving man if it also leaves me sadder. Yes, a man who wishes to work with detachment must not marry. I cannot complain of her being a particularly bad wife or bad woman. On the contrary no other woman would probably have stood the changes in her husband’s life as she has. On the whole she has not thwarted me and has been most exemplary. But how can a leopard change his spots? And yesterday’s incident would probably not have happened either in an ordinary household. My point is that you cannot attach yourself to a particular woman and yet live for humanity. The two do not harmonise. That is the real cause of the devil waking in her now and again. Otherwise he might have remained in her asleep and unnoticed.

I wish you would not just now repeat walks like the Pretoria walk but allow Manilal to follow the even tenor of his life.

With love,

Yours,

UPPER HOUSE

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

128. LETTER TO MANILAL GANDHI

[PHOENIX, NATAL, Sunday, Chaitra Vad 2, April 12, 1914]

CHI. MANILAL,

... Whatever Mr. Kallenbach’s hour for going to bed, you must follow one rule alone. And the same about eating. Here is the meaning of the sentences which you could not understand: “All acts done in a purely legalistic spirit (in accordance with the literal

---

1 The date was supplied by Raojibhai Patel.
2 Some words appear to have been omitted here.
meaning) are, indeed, cursed. Even so, it is stated that those who do not keep doing the things as indicated by [the letter of] the law are all cursed.” The point is that mere bookish souls can never attain moksha. The Gita has a verse to the same effect, which you may ponder over. “The Vedas keep on the plane of the three gunas; be thou, Arjuna, beyond those gunas.”—This is what Shri Krishna said to Arjuna. This does not mean that one need not do the duties prescribed in the Shastras. It means rather that doing them is not quite enough, that one must understand their hidden significance, their aim, and go beyond the actions themselves. The man who renounces the prescribed duties and professes himself a barren Brahmacarini will have no footing anywhere. He will have lost the support provided by the Shastras while the foundation of inward illumination has not yet been built, so that he is bound to fall. St. Paul therefore told the Galatians: “Do perform the acts enjoined by the scriptures; but you will remain under a curse, if you have no faith in the teachings of the Lord Jesus and do not follow his teachings.” The same meaning is to be read in “bond maid” and “free woman”. Bond means bandhan.
Scriptures are compared to the mother in flesh who, it is pointed out, has the status of a slave so that her children are also born slaves.

Faith, which means bhakti, is described as a divine mother, whose children are angels. Read the sentences which precede and follow in the light of this explanation and tell me whether you follow them properly or not. The 56th verse of Chapter 15 in 1 Corinthians means that sin is the sting of death, that, in other words, that a sinful man alone feels death as a sting. For the virtuous, it is the means of attaining moksha. The second line means that mere dry knowledge of the scripture has the power of a curse. We observe this at every step.
Hundreds of sins are committed in the name of scripture. The meaning of Romans V, 20 is simple enough. Scripture made its appearance again and led to more crimes. As the load of sins increased, however, God’s grace also increased in like measure. That is, even in such evil times, men were found who broke themselves free from the chains of dry learning and, teaching the way of bhakti, brought out the hidden meaning of scripture; this was God’s grace.

1 Probably the reference is to Galatians, III, 10.
2 One who expounds the nature of Brahman
3 “Abraham had two sons; the one by a bond maid, the other by a free woman.”—Galatians, IV, 22.
St. John, XV, 3 means this: “Now ye are clean through the word which I have spoken unto you.” Here “are” denotes the future and “through” should be taken to mean “by acting according to”.

Think twice before introducing changes by way of reform in your life. But I wish that, having once adopted a change, you would cling to it like a leech. Love the virtues of Mr. Kallenbach. Know his weakness when you see it and keep yourself away from it. The latest change you have introduced has not been adopted after due thought. You are not bound to adopt all the changes which Mr. Kallenbach may make. You must learn to think independently for yourself and stick to your judgement. It will not matter if, in doing so, you sometimes go wrong. You are even entitled to oppose my views after you have honestly thought over a matter; in cases in which it seems right to oppose me, opposition becomes your duty. It is my earnest desire that you should understand the idea of moksha and aspire for it. This will never come about, however, till you develop a capacity for independent thinking and firmness of mind. At present, you are in the condition of a creeper. It assumes the shape of the tree over which it spreads. That is not what the atman does. The atman is free and, in its essence, omnipotent.

“It is desire, anger, born of the quality of rajas, all-devouring and sinful; know it to be the enemy.” This is the reply that Shri Krishna gave to Arjuna when the latter asked him what it was that drove man to commit sin against his will. It means this: “The cause of sin is desire, anger, which has its origin in the quality of rajas; is all-devouring and drives men to sins without number. Know it, for certain, to be the enemy.” This is an established truth. Hence you should have remained quiet when Mr. K. lost his temper. When one’s elders get angry, one should be gentle and not answer back; if forced to reply, one should say: “I will correct myself; please forgive me this time.” There is no admission in this of one’s having acted wrongly on purpose. Later, when the person has calmed down, one may politely put one’s doubt to him, if one has any. You can ask Mr. K., when he is himself, how it was wrong to serve apples picked from a lot which was getting rotten.

David’s Psalm has a meaning which is worth understanding. He desires in it the destruction of the wicked; the significance of this is that he cannot bear evil. The same idea appears in the Ramayana. Gods and men both pray for the destruction of rakshasas. The prayer Jaya Rama Rama is inspired by the same sentiment. The spiritual significance of the Psalm is that David (Arjuna—the godward attributes) desires the destruction of Duryodhana and others [the satanic attributes]. This is the sattvic impulse. It comes into play when one is in a state of bhakti. When one attains to the state of jnana, both the impulses subside and all that remains is pure consciousness—Knowledge Absolute. You will not probably find this state described in the Bible. Though David was imperfect, he was a bhakta. His sentiments have found expression in the Psalm in simple language and, though a great man, he makes himself humble before God, looking upon himself as a mere blade of grass.

1 Vide Bhagavad Gita, III, 37. Here the original verse in Sanskrit has been quoted.

[From Gujarati]
Gandhijini Sadhana

129. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

April 17, 1914

MY DEAR LOWER HOUSE,

How curious! No matter how intimate I may be with Gokhale or Andrews or anyone else, you will always be you and you alone to me. I have told you will have to desert me and not I you. So that I should like you finally to dismiss that fear from your mind. If I am called upon to enter Gokhale’s mansion or Andrews’ without you, I will refuse to enter. Only my own movements may become too hot for you and you always wishing to go the whole length with me may not be able [to] and may fall back. Our joint life does not demand coincidence though that is what you are bringing about. If I can lie on a stone bed and you cannot, you should certainly have a mattress underneath. And though you may lift a ten-stone weight, I shall certainly not attempt to do any such thing myself and still not feel ashamed to be your companion. I shall put up with you and love you

1 Demons
2 Vide Bhagavad Gita, XVI, 1-3.
3 Tending to the ethical life, as distinct from the rajasic, tending to competitive striving, and the tamasic, tending to inertia; vide Bhagavad Gita, XVIII, 30-2
4 Enlightenment
5 Devotee
just the same notwithstanding what you may call your limitations, even as you have to do likewise to me. We can therefore but go forward as far forward as our legs will carry us and no farther and still be together, one soul and two bodies. Please therefore be at ease so far as my side is concerned. Take care of your own and everything else will follow.

I have not received the letters you say you are enclosing.

Death for Mrs. Mayo can only be welcomed by her friend.\(^1\) She will go to a higher state and we must not form attachments for the sake of the bodies of people. Through the body we learn to know them but we do not need their bodies to continue to love them.

I shall have the inscription copied as you suggest.

I suppose I need not repeat here the information about the changes here that I have given to Manilal.

Mrs. Gandhi is decidedly better. It remains to be seen whether the change continues.

Some members of the Theosophical Convention visited Phoenix on Tuesday. They were 9 in all. Miss Pillenbury was one of them. I have asked her to describe to you the visit. They dined here. It was the simplest style, no strange food was given them. Indian marrow, rice and potatoes and rice pudding cereal, coffee and fresh lemon drink.
Old Nelson was one of the party. They seemed to be pleased. I had sent the message that those who cared could come and visit the Settlement.

With love,

[PS.]

Gokhale has cabled inquiring whether I would visit him in London before going to India. I have answered I might if absolutely necessary, Mrs. Gandhi’s health permitting. We shall see.

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

---

\(^1\) Mrs. Mayo died in the second week of May 1914; Vide “The Late Mrs.
Mayo”, 20-5-1914.
130. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

April 17, 1914

MY DEAR LOWER HOUSE,

What about the house at Mountain View which the Polaks want to buy from you? What are the terms you have suggested?

I have a letter from Douglas Hall, written for Gokhale, asking me if I would go to London before returning to India.

Mrs. Gandhi is still feeling well. If the improvement continues, it may be all well.

Yours,

UPPER HOUSE

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

131. LETTER TO MANILAL GANDHI

PHOENIX,
NATAL,

Friday, Chaitra Vad 8 [April 17, 1914]

CHI. MANILAL,

Received your letters. Ba is, now at any rate, on the way to recovery again.

Even there, I cannot but think, it will prove a rewarding practice to sit down on the floor to eat. You should clean the place where you sit down, so that no one could object. We have made it a practice to sleep on the floor and so we may have our meal as well. It should be enough if you mop the floor where the meal is to be served. One would feel it awkward if one had to start doing this after going to India. There is humility in sitting on the floor for a meal; it will mean, moreover, that we are adopting a practice followed by crores of people. It is few who have their meals at the table.

My diet consists of 18 dates, 9 bananas, three [sic] uncooked groundnuts, four amatungulu and two lemons, with two spoonfuls of oil added. I take a quantity of coconut kernel which I can chew. Tomatoes being dear, they have been ordered only for such as cannot do without them. Not everyone lives on one meal a day. Raojibhai and I alone follow the practice. Ramdas carried on with it for a month. On Mondays and Fridays, everyone goes without salt.

I do not know why people do not fast on the tenth instead of the eleventh day [of each fortnight]; it seems obvious, however, that going without the usual food at least one day in a fortnight purifies body and mind. We want to have the palate under control but, falling short of complete success, we atone for the failure once in a fortnight.
Moreover, we commit numerous sins mentally and hence by balancing the account once a fortnight we realize our abject state. To observe the ekadashi, it is not enough merely to keep a fast; the day should be spent, rather, in reflecting over matters of faith.

I have already asked two books to be sent to you. The Gita transcribed by you will be in addition to these.

“Such passeth from all ‘plaining’ to blest nirvana” is a translation of sa shantimadhigachchhati. It means, he attains to peace. He who has given up all desires, who is free from the sense of “I” and “mine”, who is unconscious of his identity as a separate being, attains peace. In the word “plaining” occurring in the English [translation] above, ‘ex’ has been left out, so that the word is “explaining”. Such a man escapes from all concerns (objects of desire and pursuit) to the happy state of nirvana.

One who rises early should make no exception on Sundays. If we do, we shall anxiously await the coming of a Sunday. If, therefore, you seriously want to form the habit, you must get up at the same time on Sundays as on other days.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Swami Mangalanandapuri has been here for the last two days.
He will leave tomorrow.

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 96 Courtesy: Sushilabehn Gandhi

1 Bhagavad Gita, II, 71

152  THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
132. TELEGRAM TO MINISTER OF INTERIOR

[PHOENIX,
NATAL.]
April 22, 1914

TO
THE MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR

I HAVE JUST RECEIVED RECORD OF CONVICTIONS AT VERULAM MAGISTRATE’S COURT ABOUT £3 TAX. THESE CON-VICTIONS HAVE TAKEN PLACE DURING THE CURRENT MONTH.
I VENTURE SUGGEST LEAST INDIAN COMMUNITY EXPECTS FROM GOVERNMENT IS THAT THESE FORCED COLLECTIONS OF TAX SHOULD BE SUSPENDED, PENDING LEGISLATION. RECORD BEING PUBLISHED. IF I CAN HAVE REASSURING ANSWER IT WILL AVOID MUCH IRRITATION, ILL-FEELING.

GANDHI

Indian Opinion, 29-4-1914

133. FRAGMENT OF LETTER

[PHOENIX,
NATAL.]
Chaitra Vad 13 [April 22, 1914]

. . . Never perhaps have I spent such days of agony as I am doing now.¹ I talk and I smile, I walk and eat and work, all mechanically these days. I can do no writing whatever. The heart seems to have gone dry. The agony I am going through is unspeakable. I have often wanted to take out the knife from my pocket and put it through the stomach. Sometimes I have felt like striking my head against the wall opposite, and, at other times, I have thought of running away from the world. But then again I reflected:
“The simple fellow that you are! Foolish one! Why do you go crazy in this fashion? If you do not preserve your balance of mind at this

¹ One of the inmates of Phoenix Settlement for whom Gandhiji had great regard was found to have been guilty of a moral lapse and had obviously deceived Gandhiji. On being warned by him, the person promised not to sin again; but when the offence was repeated, Gandhiji undertook a fast for 14 days.
hour, full of agony though it be, what use is the little wisdom you have come by?" And so I pass my days at present. I want just now to inform my well-wishers, "See here, my friends, J. has committed terrible sins."

When I knew all this, I thought I must atone for my own sin in putting my faith in one who did not deserve it. I was about to resolve on a fast for 15 days, but checked myself. I thought of Ba. If I fasted for 15 days, that would mean Ba’s death. I gave up the idea for the time being, deterred only by this fear. However, I decided afterwards that J. must leave for... To go and live there was the only right thing... could do... would come to no good by remaining here.... I do not know what evil there is in me. I have a strain of cruelty in me, as others say, such that people force themselves to do things, even to attempt impossible things, in order to please me. Lacking the necessary strength, they put on a false show and deceive me. Even Gokhale used to tell me that I was so harsh that people felt terrified of me and allowed themselves to be dragged against their will out of sheer fear or in the attempt to please me, and that those who found themselves too weak assumed an artificial pose in the end. I put [he said] far too heavy a burden on people. He, too, [he added] strained himself to do things beyond his capacity when he was asked by me.

[From Gujarati]
Gandhijini Sadhana

134. TELEGRAM TO MINISTER OF INTERIOR

[PHOENIX, NATAL.]
April 24, 1914

TENDER MY THANKS FOR PROMPT REASSURANCE ABOUT £3 TAX. MAY I SUGGEST THAT THOSE MEN WHO DURING RECENT PROSECUTIONS WERE IMPRISONED BECAUSE THEY COULD

1 Some words are omitted here in the source.
2 In response to Gandhiji’s telegram dated April 22, General Smuts had wired: “Your wire today on subject of prosecution of Indians for failing to take out £3 licence. Representations have been made to the Minister for Justice with view to suspending action re[garding] prosecutions, pending consideration of recommendations of Indian Enquiry Commission by Parliament.”
NOT OR DID NOT PAY THE INSTALMENTS BE DISCHARGED, WHETHER AT VERULAM OR ELSEWHERE?

GANDHI

Indian Opinion, 29-4-1914

135. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

April 28, 1914

MY DEAR LOWER HOUSE,

You ask me whether it will be inconvenient for me to have you here. What a question? You still observe the distance. What though it were inconvenient? You have still a right to come. So come when you like. Only I may have to leave for Cape Town any day now.

I have been unable to write to you for some days as I have not been able to get up early for the last few days, the nights having been disturbed by Mrs. Gandhi. She is getting better but sometimes requires service during night. The discipline here is becoming more and more severe. The boys may not now get up late on Sundays. It is the same hour for all the days, i.e., 4 a.m. Only two meals are served now. The times are 10 a.m. and 5 p.m. Two days in the week are saltless. The little ones get two bananas and a naarangi each at 7.30. The youngsters rise at 6 a.m. The school hours are 4.30 to 7 a.m., 7 to 9.30 physical labour, 9.30 to 10 bathing, 10 to 11.30 dinner, etc., 11.30 to 2 school, 2 to 2.30 recreation, 2.30 to 3.30 Press work, 3.30 to 4.45 agriculture, 5 p.m. supper, 6.30 to 7.30 p.m. service. To bed at 8 p.m. Coffee has now been rejected because I do not want any makeshifts in India. Please let Manilal see this as I shall not be giving him a separate account.

Your scale of diet is too extravagant and rich. Here we allow no more than one ounce of oil per head. You take nearly 6 oz. per head. The other allowances are also on the same liberal scale and it therefore makes the body gross. The scales should be fixed with some consideration for the lives of the poorest of mankind. In any case the scale cannot be followed in Phoenix without causing very great disturbance. We are now using gingili oil as I have been able to procure the finest quality. I commenced the experiment first. The taste has agreed with all. Whether it will agree with all constitutions

1 Gandhiji has spelt the word as “gingelly”.
here remains to be seen.

As for Polak, could he not buy the property and pay rent and interest at the same time? I say this without much consideration. The whole to be paid over in, say, 5 years’ time.

I am writing this under too much disturbance. The inscription is being sent by Jamnadas. I must not perform the opening ceremony.

With love,

UPPER HOUSE

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

136. “HIND SWARAJ”

I wrote Hind Swaraj in 1909 on board the ship during the return voyage from England. Copies of the book having been confiscated in the Bombay Presidency, I published a translation in 1910. It is now five years since the ideas in it were expressed in public. And during this period, many persons have had discussions with me on those ideas. Englishmen and Indians, both have written to me about them, several expressing dissent. At the end of it all, however, I find that the convictions I stated in the book have grown stronger. If only I had the time, I could set forth the same ideas more elaborately, with additional arguments and illustrations. I see no reason at all for revising them.

Numerous requests having been received for a second edition of Hind Swaraj, the inmates of Phoenix and the pupils there have found time to print it as a labour of love.

I should like to comment on one thing only. I have gathered an impression that, though Hind Swaraj does not advocate the use of physical force at any time and in any circumstances, and advocates always the use of soul-force to gain the desired end, the result of its teaching has been to create hatred for the British and to suggest that they should be expelled through armed fighting or use of violence otherwise. I was unhappy to know this. Such was by no means my object in writing Hind Swaraj, and I can only say that those who have drawn from it the foregoing conclusion have totally failed to understand the book. I, for one, bear no ill-will against the British or against any people or individuals. All living creatures are of the same substance as all drops of water in the ocean are the same in substance. I believe that all of us, individual souls, living in this ocean of spirit, are the same with one another with the closest bond among ourselves. A drop that separates soon dries up and any soul that believes itself separate from others is likewise destroyed. For myself, I am an uncompromising enemy of the present-day civilization of Europe. I tried to elaborate my view in Hind Swaraj and show that it is not the British that are responsible for the misfortunes of India but we who have succumbed to modern civilization. India can be free this very moment if we turn our back on this modern civilization and go back to our ancient way of life, which embodied the right ethical principles. The key to an understanding of Hind Swaraj lies in the idea that worldly pursuits should give way to ethical living. This way of life has no room for violence in any form against any human being, black or white.

---

1 This is the preface to the second Gujarati edition of Hind Swaraj which was published in May 1914. For the preface and text of the first edition, vide “Hind Swaraj”, 22-11-1909.

[From Gujarati]

Indian Opinion, 29-4-1914

137. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

[PHOENIX]

Monday [May 4, 1914]

MY DEAR LOWER HOUSE,

You must excuse my not writing to you regularly. I have not a minute to spare and I have no heart to write just now except when I am obliged. I am unable to get up early and unless I can do so I cannot write. The new discipline taxes me to the utmost.

Your telegrams I have misunderstood. I still do not know their meaning. I do not know whether you have to give me some news of further distress or what. However, your letter will say something.

I have, I think, answered all the points you summarised in your last letter. The Nagappan inscription, Manilal can write from

---

1 A note by the addressee at the top of the letter reads: “Written during the ‘Fortnight Fast’.”
Valliamma’s. I have not before me the exact dates.

On your diet scale I should like to write more fully when I have the time. Mrs. Gandhi continues to be better.

With love,

Yours,

UPPER HOUSE

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

138. TELEGRAM TO MINISTER OF INTERIOR

[PHOENIX,
Before May 6, 1914]

TO
THE MINISTER OF THE INTERIOR

I HAVE SEEN TELEGRAM\(^1\) SENT BY THE ANJUMAN ISLAM, DURBAN, REGARDING PHOTOGRAPH[S] REQUIRED FROM INDIAN WIVES SEEKING ENTRANCE INTO THE PROVINCE. UNABLE UNDERSTAND REQUIREMENT IMMIGRATION DEPARTMENT. VENTURE DRAW ATTENTION FACT THAT, WHEN QUESTION AROSE REGARDING EVEN MALES IN TRANSVAAL SOME YEARS AGO, IT GAVE RISE TO SUCH BITTERNESS THAT GOVERNMENT WERE PLEASED WITHDRAW REQUIREMENT. REGARDING WOMEN IT IS A MOST DANGEROUS THING. HOPE MINISTER WILL BE PLEASED INSTRUCT IMMIGRATION OFFICER WAIVE REQUIREMENT AND ACCEPT LOCAL PROOF OFFERED BY THE PARTIES IN QUESTION. UNDERSTAND ALSO THAT IMMIGRATION DEPARTMENT ADOPTING SEVERE METHODS REGARDING INDIAN ENTRANTS GENERALLY. AMONG THESE IS INSISTENCE UPON INDIANS POSSESSING RIGHTS DOMICILE MORE THAN ONE PROVINCE CHOOSING ONE PROVINCE ONLY. SUBMIT REQUIREMENT ARBITRARY, UNCALLED FOR. PRACTICE RECOGNIZING DOUBLE OR TRIPLE DOMICILE NEVER HITHERTO QUESTIONED, AND WHAT EVER LEGAL INTERPRETATION IMMIGRATION ACT 1913, HOPE

\(^1\) The Chairman of the Anjuman Islam of Durban had conveyed to the Minister of the Interior the Indian community’s concern at and objection, on religious grounds, to the demand for the photographs of Indian wives, and urged that local proofs be accepted for identification.
GOVERNMENT DO NOT INTEND DEPART FROM EXISTING PRACTICE. Gandhi

Indian Opinion, 6-5-1914

139. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

May 6, 1914

MY DEAR LOWER HOUSE,

Jeki has been found lying more than once. I therefore told her that she could not stay away from her husband unless she was absolutely superior to him. Indeed she is inferior to her husband. The latter is no hypocrite. But Jeki is a finished hypocrite. You may understand what all these discoveries must have cost me. However she has now consented to go to Fiji. I have Dr. Mehta’s authority by cable. So she goes next Sunday escorted by Miss West. She leaves by a Castle boat for Cape Town, and will there book for Fiji.

You did not ask for English inscription. You had it there. You asked only for Gujarati. And that you have. If there was anybody’s fault it was mine for the delay. But perhaps you will understand why I was delayed. Nagappan’s I have written to you about already.

With love,

Yours,

UPPER HOUSE

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

140. LETTER TO G. K. GOKHALE

PHOENIX,
NATAL,
May 6, 1914

DEAR MR. GOKHALE,

I have your cable, your own most affectionate letter and Dr. Mehta’s letter. How I would like to be by your side during your illness although I may be utterly helpless for any useful service! Your cable is for my comfort and convenience. But Mrs. Gandhi is now much better. If her progress continues, in a month’s time she should regain most of her former health. In that case and in any case I could come to London taking her with me. And after consultation with you, we may both proceed to India directly and the rest of the party may leave here after we have left. This will enable me to reach India without any great loss of time. At the outside it can be only three weeks. Please therefore cable if I may still come. In view of your own and Dr. Mehta’s letter I should much like to come. It would be a disappointment to me, if you do not let me come. Unless, therefore, you are leaving for India to reach there before me, I do hope that your cable will authorise my coming to you.

1 In reply to this, the Minister of the Interior telegraphed: “Your telegram today. Matter being inquired into.”

The draft bill is not yet out. It may, therefore, take quite to the end of June before I am free to move. And it is just likely that a final settlement may not be reached at all. In that event the struggle must recommence and I dare not go to India. I am fully prepared for either event.

I am,
Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 3776

141. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

May 7, 1914

MY DEAR LOWER HOUSE,

Pardon me for not writing to you promptly or fully. I have not written fully because your letters have not been with me at the time of writing. I have not written promptly because I get no time. Jeki and Mrs. Gandhi have put such a severe strain on me that I feel like doing nothing at all. I have never been so sorely tried as I am just now. I cannot write everything because I have not the energy but when we meet you shall have it all.

I am keeping your letter before me today, so here are the answers.

1 The reference is to the Indians’ Relief Bill.
1. I say that the walks to Pretoria should be stopped. If you want to cultivate regular habits, disturbances should not occur.

2. Yes, there is a letter from the Poet and it is a nice letter. I shall have it sent. It is not by me just now.

3. If I must go to London you may not come because you will be taking the party to India. I should go to India from London.

4. Isaac I fancy is going to Johannesburg. He will not be allowed to come to India. He is just now at Phoenix.

5. Dahya has offered to come to Phoenix and I have said he may. I do not know that he will come to India. Jeki will probably not go to Cape Town as I can get a boat to Australia on the 31st May. But I am not sure. I see there is a boat to Australia on the 20th from Cape Town. I am inquiring.

   I have answered about Valliamma and the Valliamma Hall. As to Polak’s property, I must consider. The matter may not be done in a hurry. More later.

   With love,

   UPER HOUSE

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

142. TELEGRAM TO MINISTER OF INTERIOR

[PHOENIX
On or after May 7, 1914]

REQUEST FAVOURABLE REPLY MY WIRE REGARDING PHOTOGRAPHS INDIAN WIVES. MEMBERS COMMUNITY GETTING AGITATED. IF DELAY DECIDING MATTER PLEASE INSTRUCT OFFICER EXTEND TEMPORARY PASSES.

GANDHI

From a photostat of the handwritten draft: S.N. 5974

---

1 This appears to be in reference to the “Telegram to Minister of Interior”, before 6-5-1914, and was evidently sent some time after May 6, 1914.
143. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

[PHOENIX]

Sunday [May 10, 1914]

MY DEAR LOWER HOUSE,

You must have little love for me if it is dependent upon letters from me and if it misinterprets absence of letters and does not believe that there must be sound reasons for the extraordinary absence. I have told you that latterly I have gone through mental shocks and agonies I have never gone through before. I do not want to write anything. I do not want to talk to anybody. I want to live in solitude and yet I am talking, writing and living in company. In the day-time I can do little writing. I am unable to get up early in the morning. Can you not enter into my feelings and let your love overlook the omissions and the faults?

Here is Valliamma's inscription in English. This I think finishes the list, does it?

With love,

Yours,

UPPER HOUSE

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

144. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

[PHOENIX]

Wednesday [May 13, 1914]

MY DEAR LOWER HOUSE,

Love is mute, it does not complain. Love is blind, it sees no fault. Love is deaf, it hears no tales. Love ever gives never demands. Love is constant, never varying whether in adversity or prosperity. Love is never hurt. Love never tires. How has yours fared of late!

Manilal knows nothing of Manilal of Fiji. He is an infatuated lad. Now that I know Jeki, I know that she is not a patch upon Manilal of Fiji. The latter is an honest man. He has left what an injured husband would feel. Is it any wonder? He has bluntly given vent to his feelings. Is it not honest? I could only keep Jeki away from her husband only in the belief that she was infinitely superior to her husband. Now I find that she is inferior. She is a liar, a wretched hypocrite, without pity, without remorse, full of evil passions. Could I ever keep her from her husband? Why, she would soon be as bad as he is and take part in all his enjoyments. Why should she not?

With love,

UPPER HOUSE

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

145. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

PHOENIX,
Sunday [May 17, 1914]

MY DEAR LOWER HOUSE,

I have not the energy to write to you myself, but it is better that I dictate something rather than I should let you remain without any letter at all. Manilal will give you a translation of my views on regular walks to Pretoria. This fast has been a very rich but very bitter and painful experience. I have suffered tortures and I am still suffering. It has left me utterly exhausted. However, more I must say later. If you have to go to India in charge of the party, of course I shall meet you at Bombay because I shall precede you and you will certainly be better able to cope with the party on boat than I can. When I go to Cape Town, you will certainly accompany me. I may be in Johannesburg during the week in order to be able to attend to many matters.

Yours sincerely,

FOR UPPER HOUSE,

CHHAGANLAL

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

1 This letter was followed by a letter to the addressee from Chhaganlal Gandhi; vide “Resolutions at Vrededorp Mass Meeting”, 30-3-1913.
2 Vide “Fragment of Letter”, 22-4-1914.
146. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

May 18, 1914

MY DEAR LOWER HOUSE,

This fast has brought me as near death’s door as possible. I can still hardly crawl, can eat very little, restless nights, mouth bad. But it would be all right. The fast was a necessity. I was so grossly deceived. I owed it to Manilal of Fiji, to Dr. Mehta, and to myself. It was one of the severest lessons of my life. The discipline was very great. Everyone around me was most charming. Mrs. Gandhi was divine. Immediately she realized that there was no turning me back, she set about making my path smooth. She forgot her own sorrows and became my ministering angel. And she still remains the same. The result is that she is better in health. I appealed to all not to go in for fasting but to rejoice that one of themselves was trying to purify himself. All caught the fire and I was helped all along.

I felt it my duty not to let you or Polak know because that would have thrown additional care on me and no good purpose could be served by informing you. The step had to be taken by me prayerfully and I took it. I would not miss the experience. What the effect will be I do not know.

Please let Polak read this so that I may not have to write the same thing twice. I am still too weak to write much.

With love,

UPPER HOUSE

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

147. LETTER TO ELIZABETH MARI MOLTENO

PHOENIX,

May 19, [1914]

DEAR MISS MOLTENO,

I know that I owe you a letter. But since leaving Cape Town I have passed through so many trials that I have not had the time or the inclination to write really to anybody. Mrs. Gandhi had a very serious relapse and she absorbed all my time. Then followed a disciplinary fast of 14 days the severest trial of my life. The fast was broken on Saturday last and I am feeling much better today. Mrs. Gandhi too has responded to the careful nursing and today for the first time after my return to Phoenix I am at the Press working at the desk having just left Mrs. Gandhi to her household work.

1 From the contents

Now I know you will excuse me why I should not have written a line to you after that very serious last conversation we had. Do please let me hear from you.

I had a very sweet letter from Miss Hobhouse this week. I am not replying just yet but may do so next week.

Mrs. Gandhi often recalls your love to her and thinks of the kind friends in Cape Town.

Manilal is still in Johannesburg with Mr. Kallenbach. With our united regards to both of you.

I am,
Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a copy: Molteno Murray Family Papers. Courtesy: University of Cape Town Libraries

148. TELEGRAM TO MINISTER OF INTERIOR

[PHOENIX,] May 19, 1914

TO INTERIOR CAPE TOWN

COULD I KNOW FOR SATISFYING INQUIRERS WHEN INDIAN LEGISLATION LIKELY BE INTRODUCED.?

GANDHI

From the handwritten draft: S.N. 5970

1 Vide also “Fragment of Letter”, 22-4-1914
2 The Minister in his telegram of May 20 replied: “Is it your desire to come here and discuss draft Bill with Minister, and if so, appointment could be made for a day early next week. Bill would probably be introduced week following.”
149. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

Tuesday [May 19, 1914]

MY DEAR LOWER HOUSE,

Please read the enclosed and return.¹ I am much better today and for the first time working at the Press. More later.

With love,

UPPER HOUSE

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

150. THE LATE MRS. MAYO

We regret to announce the death of Mrs. Mayo², which took place last week. The news was cabled to Mr. Kallenbach, and it soon became common property amongst the many who had come to look upon Mrs. Mayo with regard and veneration. Hers was [a] truly noble soul. It was a most strenuous life that she led up to the very end. She was one of the few true interpreters of Tolstoy’s teachings, and she will be best known to the world as such. To the Indians of South Africa her memory will be a cherished treasure for her very warm and loving sympathy during their troubles.

Indian Opinion, 20-5-1914

151. TELEGRAM TO MINISTER OF INTERIOR

[Phoenix,
Natal,]

May 22, 1914

TO INTERIOR
CAPE TOWN

AM LEAVING FOR CAPE THIS EVENING REACHING THERE WEDNESDAY MORNING HOPE REPORT MYSELF THEN.

GANDHI

From a photostat of the handwritten original: S. N. 5972

¹ The enclosed letter from Emily Hobhouse is not available.
² Mrs. Isabella Fyvie Mayo
152. LETTER TO “THE TRANSVAAL LEADER”

[JOHANNESBURG,]
May 23, 1914

[SIR,]

In your today’s issue of the Leader, you publish certain remarks made by Mr. Justice Mason, to which you give the headings “Credibility of Evidence”, “Judge’s Remarks on Indians”.

I have no desire in any way to controvert His Lordship’s statement which may be justified by the facts brought to his notice from time to time, but it should be well understood by the public that Mr. Justice Mason confined his remarks to a certain class of Indians only, whom my Association has no desire to direct from such criticism. He did not, as Mr. Greenberg appeared to suppose condemn Indian evidence on national or racial grounds at all. There are also certain classes of non-Indians equally guilty of attempts to mislead the Court, but I do not presume that, in similar circumstances, you would speak of the Judge’s remarks on Europeans. It is notorious that lawyers, like doctors, see mainly the seamy side of life, and they will necessarily draw conclusions from what they see. In spite, however, of

---

1 This was signed by A. M. Cachalia and was in reply to the following report in The Transvaal Leader: “Some rather strong observations regarding the credibility of Indian witnesses were made by Judge and counsel in the Witwatersrand Local Division yesterday. The case was one in which an Indian applied for the sequestration of a compatriot’s estate and the latter resisted an order on the ground that the applicant was not a creditor to the amount of £50 as provided by the Insolvency Law.

“Mr. Justice Mason remarked that the evidence in support of the respondent’s case was what one very often found in Indian cases. There generally seemed a number of witnesses for one side fortuitously at hand when the opposite side gave away its whole case...

“... In giving Judgment, Mr. Justice Mason said that the respondent’s case was that, in order to defeat other creditors, the applicant agreed with him to take over certain goods in reduction of his debt, and that that was done. In support of that, the respondent produced witnesses who conveniently happened to be present when the agreement was made, although the parties making it must have known that the arrangement was one which would be somewhat open to criticism in the eyes of the law. Then there were two more witnesses who happened to come on the scene when the arrangements were being carried out, and who seemed to know all about the collusive agreement. Now, these were coincidences which, if true, were of a remarkable character. Unfortunately, however, these coincidences so often appeared in Indian cases. They had got to face that fact.”
what might have been to a less just man a strong temptation to exaggerate, Mr. Justice Mason confined his remarks to that section of the community which he believed to be guilty and did not level an indictment against the whole of the Indian community, as one might suppose from the first few lines of your report.

I trust that you will find space for this letter in order to remove any wrong impression that might have been created.

[Indian Opinion, 3-6-1914]

153. PRAYER SPEECH

[JOHANNESBURG, May 23, 1914]

I shall not be pleased just because you recite verses from the Gita. I don’t care whether or not you read history, do sums in arithmetic or learn Sanskrit. What is necessary is that you should acquire self-control. That is what I want. I may agree to be some one’s slave, but not that of my mind. There is no sin as base as being the slave to one’s mind. Be wise, therefore, and learn to discipline your mind. So you will be able to live with me. Otherwise I have no need of anyone. Nor am I conceited enough to want to teach you or anyone else. I have a pupil, to train whom is the most difficult task. It is only by training that pupil that I can do some good to you, to India or the world. That pupil is myself, what I call my mind. Only those who thus become their own pupils are fit to stay here. Others who cannot stand such a life had better not stay here. Such a person would do well to leave this place. It is a sin, however, to do anything blindly (without a purpose, mechanically). I want no such thing.

[From Gujarati]

_Gandhijini Sadhana_
154. INTERVIEW WITH E. M. GORGES

PRETORIA,
May 27, 1911

Upon Clause 1 Mr. Gandhi indicated that he valued this provision mainly for the sake of appearances. He thought that the appointment of a large number of Indian priests as marriage officers might easily lead to abuses, as some persons representing themselves as priests might not be of the highest character. He contemplated therefore that a somewhat sparing use would be made of the power of appointment, and that only such priests would be selected as were known to be of unimpeachable reputation. He thought that, for practical purposes, the machinery of registration under Clause 2 would and should become the usual method of legalizing Indian marriages, and he therefore deprecated very strongly the limitation of the right to such marriages only as existed at the commencement of the Act.²

... Another point which was considered at the interview between Mr.
Gorges and Mr. Gandhi was the expediency of enabling Magistrates generally, whether appointed as marriage officers or not, to register Indian marriages under Clause 2.³

On Clause 3 Mr. Gandhi does not appear to have taken any exception to

¹ On May 30, 1914, the Governor-General, Lord Gladstone, addressed a despatch to the Secretary of State for the Colonies, forwarding printed copies of the draft Indians’ Relief Bill, and pointing out certain verbal amendments made therein.
In the course of the despatch, the Governor-General reported: “Mr. Gandhi has been summoned from Natal, and a copy of the Bill as printed was handed to him by the Secretary for the Interior on Wednesday morning. After perusing it he saw Mr. Gorges again on Wednesday afternoon. I understand that he seemed on the whole to be satisfied, and that the substance of the interview may be summarised as follows.” No other report of the interview is available.

² The despatch continued: “I may mention that I had previously caused to be conveyed to Mr. Gorges an expression of regret at the introduction of the words ‘at the commencement of this Act’. Mr. Gorges said that they had been inserted by General Smuts’ direction, but he did not know whether the Minister’s decision on this point must be regarded as irrevocable. I am therefore not without hope that Mr Gandhi’s representations in regard to this clause will not prove wholly ineffective.
He will have an opportunity of discussing the matter with General Smuts in the course of the next few days.”

³ The despatch here added: “Mr. Gorges, I understand, will suggest to General
Smut the insertion of a provision that, for the purposes of this action, the term ‘Marriage Officer’ shall include any Magistrate.”
proviso (b) of sub-clause (2). He urged, however, that the children of deceased women, who would have been eligible for admission under this clause, should not be excluded from its benefits. Mr. Gorges told my Secretary that he would submit to the Minister an amendment to the following effect: after the word “defined” at the end of the clause insert some such phrase as “or the child of the exempted person and a deceased woman who, had she lived, could have been recognized as a wife within the meaning of this section, or whose marriage could have been registered under the provisions of section 2 of this Act”.

These, so far as I am aware, were the only points raised by Mr. Gandhi upon the Bill.¹

He, however, made the following representations upon questions of administration. He asked for facilities for the admission and registration of all existing plural wives, whether in or out of South Africa, of Indians lawfully resident in the Union. This, you will observe, is a slight extension of the second recommendation on page 39 of the Commission’s Report, where the grant of the privilege is contemplated only in the case of plural wives who had actually lived in the country. Mr. Gorges did not seem to regard the request as unreasonable, but he told my Secretary that he was not aware of the view which General Smuts might take of the proposal. Mr. Gandhi renewed his request for an assurance that, so long as the immigration of Natal-born Indians into the Cape did not exceed its present dimensions, such Indians should be admitted without the imposition of a test, and particularly without the application of the provisions of Section 4(1)(a) of last year’s immigrants Regulation Act. He did not ask for legislation, as presumably he is well aware of the very serious difficulty which the Government would experience if the question of the Cape entry were again to be raised in Parliament even by the introduction of the small amendment recommended by the Commission on page 16 of their Report. I gather that the Commission attached no great importance to this recommendation and that after the position had been explained to them and they had been apprised of the reason why the words “at the commencement of this Act” had been inserted in Section 4(2)(a) of Act 22 of 1913, they intimated that the recommendation was not one which they would be disposed to press.

Mr. Gandhi renewed his plea for a satisfactory statement in respect of the declaration required under the Free State law from Indians entering that ¹ In his interview to Gandhiji on May 30, only a reference to which is available in the Governor-General’s despatch of June 5, 1914, Smuts agreed to the three legislative points raised by Gandhiji, Vide “Extract from Governor-General’s Despatch”, 5-6-1914.

Province. This point should occasion no difficulty as General Smuts and Mr. Gandhi had previously come to an agreement upon it.

Mr. Gandhi then raised two new points.

(1) He asked for some declaration or assurance that vested rights under the Transvaal Gold Law should be recognized and preserved. Mr. Gorges told him that this was really a matter for the Mines Department, and suggested that he should discuss it with General Smuts.

(2) Mr. Gandhi urged that a free pardon should be granted to all bona fide passive resisters in respect of convictions for bona fide passive resistance offences, excluding all offences of violence which had been committed during the passive resistance campaign. I see no reason why the Minister should adopt a non possumus attitude towards this request, but I am not aware of his views.

As regards Clause 4 of the Bill, I understand that the Government think it undesirable to interfere with the special legislation governing the status of indentured Indians under the Natal Acts, except in so far as the repeal of the £3 tax is concerned. For this reason they are disinclined to modify any provisions mentioned in Clause 4. Mr. Gandhi, I believe, made no comment upon the clause.

Colonial Office Records: 551/57

155. LETTER TO MANILAL GANDHI

[CAPE TOWN.]

Thursday [May 28, 1914]¹

CHI. MANILAL,

I have your letter. While you express your regret, you say in the selfsame letter that on that very day you had forgotten to serve so important an item as the vegetable. You say it was left out, without explaining how it happened. Who is to blame? Why did you entrust the task to anyone else? You should have yourself carried the vegetable you had lovingly cooked. You may as well take a lesson from this. There is no need to be sorry for what is past and over, but it is important that one should learn something from it. While there, learn to be devoted to your duty and cultivate self-discipline. This cannot be achieved, however, unless one thinks.

¹ From its reference to the publication of the Indians' Relief Bill, which took place on Thursday, May 28, it is evident that the letter was written the same day.

Have regard for everyone there, think of the good qualities in others, rather than their weaknesses, and be mindful of your own shortcomings. Instead of gossiping away your time, keep thinking. A single moment wasted is so much [time] lost from one’s life and so much stolen from God. Understand this and use every moment well. See that your body becomes tough.

The Bill has been published and is likely to come up next week.¹ One does not know, though. There has been no meeting yet with General Smuts.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 106 Courtesy: Sushila-behn Gandhi

156. THE RELIEF BILL

The long-expected Indian Bill has now been published. We reproduce the full text with the schedule.² It is a simple and short measure and seems to carry out the recommendations of the Indian Commission in so far as legislative action is necessary. The Bill removes the marriage difficulty and restores the status as it existed before the Searle judgment. It repeals the £3 tax and remits the unpaid arrears. Lastly, it validates Natal certificates of domicile, if the owner can establish his identity with the certificate by proving that the thumb-impression on it is his own. There is another clause in the Bill with which the community is not concerned. It is the clause which enables the Government to give a free passage to any Indian not otherwise provided for if he renounces for himself and his family all claim to domicile in Natal or any other Province of the Union.

There are certain alterations necessary in the Bill. It will be a proper thing to use for validating future unions the machinery provided in the Bill for validating existing unions. Amendment will also be necessary for protecting the children of deceased wives, where such wives, if alive, could have been recognized under the present Bill.

¹ It was introduced in the House of Assembly on June 2
² Vide “The Indians Relief Act”. 1914.
Assuming that the Bill with the suggested alterations becomes law, there will still remain the other matters recommended by the Commission and the matters covered by Mr. Cachalia’s and Mr. Gandhi’s letters. These require administrative treatment and include the Free State question, the Cape entry and the administration of existing laws. If satisfactory assurances are issued in connection with them, the struggle that has gone on for years, and that has meant enormous losses and sufferings to the community, may be said to have fitly and honourably closed.

Indian Opinion, 3-6-1914

157. LETTER TO G. K. GOKHALE

[Cape Town,]

June 5, 1914

DEAR MR. GOKHALE,

I was thankful to receive your cable. Mrs. Gandhi is much better but still weak. If she comes I shall bring her with me & Mr. Kallenbach may also come so that he may say good-bye to his people and also be with me. If you will not allow me to be with you as your nurse, I would like to go away to India immediately after our consultation.

As I do not know the state of your health I do not want to write a long letter though I feel tempted. I have, however, written¹ to Sorabji & asked him to see you about what I have written to him if you are well. He will then take instructions from you.

The Indian Bill has passed through the first stage. It is quite satisfactory & I am about to have another interview with General Smuts about the other points. There is, therefore, every prospect of the struggle being finally closed. In that event I should leave for London about the middle of July & even earlier if I can.

May I ask you please to cable the state of your health when you receive this?

Mr. Kallenbach who is just now with me wishes to be remembered to you.

I am,

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: G. N. 2248

¹ This letter is not available.
158. FRAGMENT OF LETTER

CAPE TOWN,

Tuesday, Jyestha Vad 2 [June 9, 1914]

We cannot pass any judgment on Mr. Sinha on the basis of what we read in newspapers at this distance. Mr. Norton also acted formerly as a public prosecutor in such cases. Who is a leader and who is not is a matter of opinion. Generally, a satyagrahi will express no opinion. In the kind of situation you mention, if one were to offer satyagraha and be imprisoned in consequence, the purpose of satyagraha would have been served. We need not always speak out in such cases. There is no ready answer to the question when satyagraha should be offered. A satyagrahi does not deliberate in advance when embarking on satyagraha. When he finds anything done that violates his conscience, he should use soul-force against it. Even at the time that I first started satyagraha, I considered it to be but a part of dharma. I have discovered from experience that it is the only religion and the only chintamani, and it has, therefore, developed in me especially in its aspect as dharma. He is a satyagrahi who has resolved to practise nothing but truth and such a one will know the right way every time. One’s entire life should be permeated with truth. This will come about gradually through the observance of yamas, niyamas, etc. Just as, in learning secular subjects, one has to work at them for many years, so too must one make efforts to understand the nature of satyagraha. As the veils which cover your atman and mine fall off, the atman of each will shine the more brightly and be the more resolute satyagrahis in battle.

[From Gujarati]

Mahatma Gandhijina Patro

1 A fabulous gem supposed to yield to its possessor all that he desires; the philosophers’ stone
2 This means any moral duty or religious observance. The yamas are usually said to be ten, but their names are given differently by different authorities. They include celibacy, compassion, truth, charity, non-violence, etc.
3 Any voluntary or self-imposed religious observance, dependent on external conditions.
159. INDIAN GRIEVANCES

The Bill as originally circulated, but not gazetted, has already been amended in the sense indicated as being necessary in our leading article last week. It will be remembered that the original draft required Indians applying for the validation of a marriage by virtue of its provisions to satisfy the Marriage Officer “that there existed at the commencement of this Act between them a union then recognized as a marriage under the tenets of an Indian religion which they profess”. The Bill as amended, and now gazetted, reads that the officer must be satisfied “that there exists between them a union then recognized as a marriage under the tenets of an Indian religion which they profess”. This amendment provides, therefore, for the validation of future marriages celebrated within the Union or elsewhere. Then, again, paragraph 3, sub-section 2, of the Bill is amended to provide that “the child under the age of sixteen” shall include “the child of the exempted person and a deceased woman who, if she had been alive, could have been recognized as the wife (as herein defined) or whose union with the exempted person could have been registered as a marriage under section 2 of this Act”. The amendment speaks for itself, and the Bill now seems to satisfy the legislative requirements of Passive Resisters. We hope that it will have a speedy passage through Parliament.

Indian Opinion, 10-6-1914

160. LETTER TO RAOJIBHAI PATEL

CAPE TOWN,

Wednesday, Jeth Vad 3 [June 10, 1914]

DEAR BROTHER,

When Ramachandra was about to go to the forest, King Dasharatha asked him to ignore his [Dasharatha’s] promise to Kaikeyi and not to go, breach of promise though this might mean. Ramachandra disre-garded this desire born of the common worldly attachment for the son and went to dwell in the forest, thus showing true reverence for his father, and so made Dasharatha’s and his own name immortal. Harishchandra, by selling his wife and showing himself ready even to bring down the sword on Rohit’s neck, proved his devotion to his wife and his love for the son. Prahlad, by disobeying his father’s order, rendered a service to him and brought about his deliverance. Mirabai, by leaving Kumbha Rana, turned the Rana himself into her disciple. Dayanand ran away from his parents, breaking betrothal already solemnized, and even gave the slip to the men who had been sent after him; in this way he showed his devotion to his mother and father. Lord Buddha went away as his young wife lay asleep.

1 Vide “The Relief Bill”, 3-6-1914.

We find many similar examples. Pondering over them, we must, in the difficult situation in which we are placed, do what seems the right thing from the point of view of true ethics. In the case of Shravana, the finer, intangible form of service happened to flow in the same channel as outward, physical service. Not infrequently, therefore, we fail to discover from his example what the right course should be. He who habitually follows the path of truth will know the right way at the crucial moment. If the things such as poems about disinterested-ness, which we read are of no help to us when faced with moral dilemmas, we will have read them in vain, parrot-like. We could not have reflected over them. If, despite our having read the Gita, it does not come to our help at the last moment, we might as well have not read it. This is the reason why I have always said: “Read little, but reflect over the little that you read, understand its significance and be ready to put it into practice.”

It is only when we cease to be selfishly attached to those we love that the heart feels true compassion and renders service to them. To the extent that I have grown free of such attachment for Ba, I am able to serve her better. The Buddha, by leaving his parents, brought deliverance to them as well. Gopichand, by his renunciation, displayed the purest love for his mother. In the same way, you will be serving your parents by strengthening your character and cultivating spotless morality. When your soul has grown pure, it cannot but produce a corresponding effect on all those whom you love.

[With due regards,
Mohanandas ]

[From Gujarati]

Gandhijini Sadhana

1 A medieval saint-poetess of Rajasthan
2 Swamy Dayanand Saraswati (1824-83); founder of the Arya Samaj
161. JOTTINGS

[CAPE TOWN,
About June 10, 1914]

Any marriage whether before or after should be legalised.
Sec. 3: What about the children of other wives, children living here?
The definition of child
The other wives
Their children
The Cape entry
The Free State
The number of entrants
The administration of existing laws—Gold Law, Townships licensing law, Immigration
The other recommendations
Free Pardon
Camay
Ficksburg
Anjuman
Bhayad
Educated Indians who entered before the Act of 1913
Guns for old holders and new ones who may need them
Registration of those who legally enter

From a photostat of the draft in Gandhiji’s hand: S.N. 5965

1 These concerned various matters obviously requiring Gandhiji’s attention. The date is assigned on the basis that on June 10 he forwarded to the Secretary for the Interior certain representations on behalf of Ficksburg Indians and the Anjuman Islam.
162. LETTER TO E. M. GORGES

[CAPE TOWN.]

June 11, 1914

DEAR MR. GORGES,

The enclosed speaks for itself. I do not understand the Mercury reading of the measure.¹ But, as the principle involved is so great, I would value an assurance that the meaning given to the Bill by the Mercury is not the meaning Government attach to the Bill.²

[I have, etc.]

M. K. GANDHI

Indian Opinion, 1-7-1914

163. LETTER TO RAOJIBHAI PATEL

CAPE TOWN,

Saturday [June 13, 1914]

DEAR SHRI RAOJIBHAI,

I got your letter so late today that I am in no position to write to you by today’s post or even send a telegram. I shall now send a telegram only on Monday.

Where it is a question of a mother’s love or a son’s affection, it is something of a moral dilemma for a third party to offer advice. But

¹ The Natal Mercury in an article had doubted whether Indians would be allowed to remain in the Province. It had contended that, when the £3 tax is removed, the privilege of remaining in the country will be taken away from Indians and the only alternative left for them will be either to re-indenture or return to India. It had also pointed out that under the Immigrants Regulation Act the minister had power to declare all Asiatics “prohibited immigrants” on economic grounds and thus to deport ex-indentured Indians.

² On June 22, Gorges replied: “General Smuts desires me to say that it is perfectly clear from the report of the Commission that it was never intended that, by the repeal of the provisions of the existing laws dealing with the £3 licence, the position of the ex-indentured immigrant would be prejudicially affected in some other way; and had there been the slightest doubt on the subject, he is sure that the Commission—consisting as it did of three eminent lawyers—would certainly have drawn attention to it. The Minister himself is quite satisfied that the effect of the Bill as it now stands would not be to bring into evidence the position which the Mercury and African Chronicle would have us believe will be created.”
offer it I must. When you took the decision you did on the strength of your father’s letter, we were able to judge your mother’s feelings. Her letter does not introduce any new factor. It has given rise, however, to a new concern, and love has naturally gained the first place in your heart. If now you can take a decision, with a mind free from selfish attachment, your love can be transformed into a pure and divine thing. You can give it to the entire world, that is, strive to do so. That is the end to which one must love and serve one’s mother. Any other form of love is of an earthly character, such as is common in the world, a love purely of the physical frame. You recite poems, often enough, which sing of freedom from such love. Recite this one, Know this world as of little good, and reflect over its inner meaning. What is the significance of The Living One’s kinship only with that which breathes? What is distinctive of the Phoenix way of life is that we strive to cultivate in us what we read about. Your going to India will have but momentary effect; ultimately, there needs must be grieving and weeping, be it after five days or fifteen, and certain separation ever afterwards.

Moreover, we aspire after a way of life in which we would not have a single pie of our own. Consider what men of such poverty would do in a situation like this.

That you should always yearn for a sight of your parents is good indeed. It is your duty [however] to repress the longing for the present and free your life more and more from the sway of attachments. You are enduring exile only for the sole purpose of training your character. This is the condition of vanavasa for you. Through it alone will you bring credit to your parents. The way of self-indulgence is not for you; if, instead, you raise your atman higher day by day and acquire a greater measure of self-control, you will be free, for the present, from the obligation of returning to India.

In reasoning thus, I have not had the slightest regard to the circumstances in the press. In giving the advice I have done, I have only considered what would best conduce to your spiritual progress.

All the same, if you do feel yourself drawn to India by human attachment to your mother and cannot be at peace with yourself while remaining here, by all means go. Treat what I have said only as advice.

---

1 Literally, a recluse’s life in the forest, like Rama’s during his 14 years’ exile.
and come to your own independent conclusion, and then act accordingly.

With due regards
MOHANDAS

[From Gujarati]
Mahatma Gandhijina Patro and Gandhijini Sadhana

164. FRAGMENT OF LETTER TO MANILAL AND JAMNADAS GANDHI

CAPE TOWN,
Saturday [On or after June 13, 1914]¹

I should welcome your keeping pace with me, but I don’t expect it. I have never wished that you should all follow me in everything I do. But whatever you undertake to do, you must carry out. . . .” There is no question of coercion, of course. Having, however, given up the evil of . . . , if you cheat me, you are certainly to blame . . . “ it may be conceded that the boys have reached a certain level. They refrain from certain things in Phoenix; while there, they regard them as things to be avoided. How, then, can they go after the very same things when away from Phoenix? No one is obliged to do without salt. Everyone refrains on principle from strong spices, addictions of any kind, sweets, rich feasts, tea, coffee, etc. And likewise, sexual indulgence, stealing, untruthfulness and late rising are shunned by all. How can anyone who finds this too strict a rule stay there? Every institution has certain rules which must be observed both in and outside the place. If anyone does not do so, there is no point in his remaining in the institution.

What you mean is that the boys and others do some of the things because of their regard for me and not voluntarily, and that, therefore, they are cheating me. The blame for this may be mine, but I have only one way of escaping it and that is by not staying with anyone. This does not seem to be my duty at present. If R . . . is

¹ From the reference to Norton in the letter, it appears to have been written after “Fragment of Letter”; 9-6-1914.
² Some words are omitted here in the source.
³ ibid
⁴ ibid
driven by his regard for me to make a show of adopting a saltless diet, when I have asked him to do no such thing, and so deceives me, how am I to blame? . . . I don’t love you any the less for your not adopting a saltless diet and J . . . any the more for his living exclusively on fruits. There is no special sin or virtue in eating or not eating salt. It is the underlying principle which raises moral issues. Imam Saheb is not the less dear to me because he will never adopt a saltless diet. Miss Schlesin takes an opposite course to mine in all matters, but in some ways I place her character very much higher than that of you all. In all the changes [we introduce], our aim is to practise and develop self-discipline to the best of our ability. What I said that evening was that anyone who is not ready for this may leave me. I think I was perfectly right . . . .

I am not much in love with Norton’s action nor do I despise Bengali lawyers. A satyagrahi has no concern with them and his field of duty is quite different from theirs. The point of your question is, [how one may know] whether a person is a true satyagrahi or not. If you cannot know this yet, I will only say that it is a matter of intuition, that others cannot explain it. We are making all these efforts to master the palate, etc., in order to be able to understand this. . . . Do not think that self-discipline means living on a saltless diet. You may live on a dry crust of bread, two days old, and a pinch of salt. That may, of course, be a much higher thing than my enjoying all manner of fruits and nuts. The moral worth of our actions is to be judged from the motive behind your eating dry bread and my living on fruits.

Purity of character is not put to shame, but rather gains further strength, by what others say against us.

If you have done anything unworthy, confess everything to me. Unless you do so, your fasts and the many other penances you may go through will be in vain. I am getting impatient to be there but cannot run away from my duty.

I am not likely to go back on a pledge once taken, even if the sun were to rise in the west.

If those whom I believed to be very pure are really so sinful, I don’t wish to nourish this body and keep it alive even for a moment.

It is not easy for a man to stick to his pledges.

1 Some words are omitted here in the source
2 Some words are omitted here in the source.
3 ibid
This letter will make both of you angry. But it would be a blot on my love of truth, such as it is, if I did not say what was in my mind and I would but ill serve you. It is my duty at the moment to cause you pain.

[From Gujarati]
Mahatma Gandhijina Patro and Jivanu Parodh

165. LETTER TO KUNVARJI MEHTA

[CAPE TOWN.]
Jeth Vad 8 [June 15, 1914]

DEAR SHRI KUNVARJI,

I have your letter. Thanks. I hope to meet the students in Surat when I return to India.

With due regards

MOHANDAS KARAMCHAND GANDHI

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: S. N. 2660

166. A HISTORIC DEBATE

The second reading of the Indian Bill was carried by a very substantial majority and became the occasion for a weighty pronouncement on the Government’s Indian policy. General Smuts’s speech was studiously moderate and not at all offensive as some of his speeches on the subject have been in the past. General Botha’s speech was worthy of the occasion. We feel grateful for his declaration that the Government proposed to stand or fall by the Bill. The other speeches delivered in favour of the Bill were of the same high order and, if the spirit of justice and conciliation that pervaded the speeches is continued in the administration of the existing laws, there need be no fear whatsoever of any Indian trouble arising in the future. We take the speeches as an earnest of the intention of the Government and the legislature that the resident population is to be treated with justice and fair play. Contrary to past experience, General Smuts made it clear that, this time, not only had the Government considered the feelings of the Imperial Government and the Government of India, but they had also considered the Indian sentiment. We trust that the same policy will be followed in the future.

1 Kunvarji Vithalbhai Mehta, manager of the Patidar Students’ Hostel at Surat, in Gujarat

2 This was on June 8, 1914.

What could have contributed to this high tone of the debate? Certainly the watchfulness of the Imperial Government; certainly, also, the courageous handling of the question by the Viceroy. Mr. Andrews’ mission of love, too, contributed not a little to the lofty tone of the debate. His spirit seemed to watch and guide the deliberations of the House. And none of these helps would have been at our disposal if we had not helped ourselves. The spirit of Passive Resistance it was which made this trinity of causes possible. Let the community, therefore, understand that its last weapon at a critical moment is Passive Resistance, which has been once more fully vindicated. But we hope and we have reason to believe that the community will not be called upon again to pass through the terrible fire of suffering which it has had to pass through during the last, long years.

Indian Opinion, 17-6-1914

167. LETTER TO MARSHALL CAMPBELL

CAPE TOWN,

June 20, 1914

DEAR MR. MARSHALL CAMPBELL,

With reference to this morning’s conversation between us about the telegram that appears in today’s issue of the Cape Times regarding the Indians’ Relief Bill, I beg to repeat what I said to you this morning, viz., that I do not know of any such Indian agitation as is referred to in the wire. I am sure that no responsible Indian has taken exception to the Bill. I do not believe for one moment that the Bill makes the Indians, affected by it, prohibited immigrants—a result

---

1 This was published in Indian Opinion, 24-6-1914. Reuter quoted this as a telegram from Gandhiji.
never contemplated by the Imperial Government, the Government of India or the Indian community or, I feel sure, by the Union Government.

I remain,

Yours truly,

M. K. GANDHI

[PS.]

You may make what use you think fit of this letter.

M.K.G.

From a photostat of the typewritten office copy signed by Gandhiji: S. N.

5991

168. LETTER TO INDENTURED INDIANS

[CAPE TOWN,
After June 22, 1914]

TO

INDIANS COMING WITHIN THE SCOPE OF ACT 17 OF 1895

MY DEAR BRETHREN,

You must have known by now that the £3 tax which you, your wives and grown-up children had to pay every year has been repealed and that the collection of arrears has been suspended. This means that you can live in freedom in this Province without re-indenturing yourselves. The Act of 1891 which applied to those who arrived before 1895 will now apply to you as well. It was in order to bring this about that you, I and hundreds of our brethren put up a struggle and went through suffering. But The Natal Mercury has stated that your position has become worse than it was and that now you will be either compelled to re-indenture yourselves or sent back to India. This is not true. The Government has stated categorically in one of its communications that the inference which the Mercury has drawn is not correct.¹ The Imperial Government and the Government of India are parties to the settlement. I know how they understand it. They have no doubt that the repeal of the tax means that you can live as free men and that, if you live so in Natal for three years, you will get the same rights of residence as Indians who arrive as free immigrants. And finally I want to tell you that, if, under the new Act, you are treated as prohibited immigrants, as The Natal Mercury says you will be, no matter in what part of the world I may be, I shall use all my strength to get so terrible an injustice removed. I am convinced, however, that the Government intends nothing of the kind and also that the Act bears no such meaning. This is the view of Mr. Marshall Campbell, too, who worked so hard to secure the repeal of the tax. You need have, therefore, no apprehensions on this score and I hope that no Indian will henceforth re-indenture himself out of fear of being expelled from this Colony.

¹ Vide 1st footnote of “Letter to E.M. Gorges”, 11-6-1914.

[From Gujarati]

Indian Opinion, 29-7-1914

169. THE LATE SIR DAVID HUNTER

The news reached Durban on Sunday that Sir David Hunter, K.C.M.G., one of Natal’s most sincere and broad-minded public men, had passed away, after an operation at a nursing home in Edinburgh. Sir David was well-known as one who stood up for the weak and oppressed. In as out of Parliament his voice could always be heard in favour of justice and fair-play, especially on behalf of those who were unrepresented in the Legislature. The Indian community will feel his loss very keenly. During his twenty-six years’ connection with the Natal Government Railways as General Manager he was known as a humane employer. He always spoke well of his Indian employees and they always thought highly of their Chief. We well remember, at the time of Mr. Gokhale’s visit, Sir David speaking at the historic banquet in the Durban Drill Hall, in the capacity of Chairman, saying that, through long and varied experience, he had learned to respect his Indian staff for their faithful and useful service, and he, therefore had satisfaction in believing that they reciprocated his feelings towards them by loyal trust in him. He also spoke of the innate dignity and courtesy which were characteristic of the Indian race. Sir David, along with many others, maintained that the £3 tax was an unjust imposition, and we had the assurance from his own lips that he intended to support its repeal at the earliest opportunity. Had it not been for the unfortunate illness which took him to Scotland in the hope of relief, we are confident that there would not have been a more faithful supporter of the present Indians’ Relief Bill than Sir David Hunter. To the relatives and friends we offer our sincere sympathy and condolence, and we feel sure that the whole Indian community will share our feelings.

Indian Opinion, 24-6-1914

170. POINTS FOR DISCUSSION WITH MINISTER OF INTERIOR

[Cape Town, Before June 27, 1914]

1. Indians born in South Africa to enter the Cape
2. Indentured Indians after 1895
3. The Free State
4. Marriages
5. How many will be admitted & how
6. Assurance that wives would be admitted if they are the only wives in S.A. and that even polygamous marriages will be recognised.
7. Evidence regarding wives
8. This year’s entries in the Transvaal, Cape and Natal.

From a photostat of the draft in Gandhiji’s hand: S. N. 5973

171. LETTER TO E. M. GORGES

[Cape Town, June 27, 1914]

DEAR MR. GORGES,

I forgot to borrow from you the Mauritian Ordinance.¹ Could you please send it to me at Phoenix? I shall return it to you as soon as I have dealt with it.

¹ Presumably, this was a memorandum for the interview Gandhiji had with Smuts on June 27, the gist of which was communicated to Gandhiji by Gorges on June 30; vide Appendix “The Indians Relief Act”, 1914. Gandhiji acknowledged this the same day; vide “Letter to E. M. Gorges”, 30-6-1914.

² This dealt with Indian marriages; vide “Cable to “the Hindu”, 6-7-1914; also “Marriage Law in Mauritius”, 8-7-1914.
I think that you took down in your notes for the proposed letter: “wives and their children”. If not, will you please add “children” to “wives” in the paragraph about plural wives?

I trust that your letter will be liberally couched. I have already told you something about the opposition I shall have to face.

I have been thinking over the Gold Law discussion. Protection of the vested rights (in the sense in which I have used the term) of those trading and residing in Gold areas is of vital importance and I hope that General Smuts will apply to the consideration of this matter the same generous spirit that he has, I am grateful to be able to say, applied to that of the other matters we discussed. I trust that on this point also I shall get a definite reply at an early date so as to enable me to make final arrangements for my departure.

You will kindly send me the letters about Messrs Bhyad and Camay too on Monday.

May I thank you for the great patience and courtesy shown to me by you throughout our somewhat protracted discussions?

I am,
Yours truly,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of a handwritten copy: S. N. 5996

172. SPEECH AT CONGRATULATORY MEETING

CAPE TOWN,
June 27, 1914

Mr. Gandhi, in replying, referred to the period 21 years ago when he first came to this country, an Agnostic. He had since learned, however, to recognize that there was a Divine purpose in the world, and a Divine hand guiding events conformably thereto. In the long struggle for the removal of Indian disabilities, a struggle which had absorbed the best part of his life, he had had many a hard knock, and many things had been attributed to him that he had neither done nor intended to do. The method on which he had relied, which he thought was now beginning to be better understood had nothing in it of a lawless or desperate spirit, but he knew always that it made more demands on a man’s courage and endurance than methods of violence could do.

---

1 Gandhiji spoke at a gathering of European and Indian friends who had assembled in the evening to congratulate him on the passage of the Indians’ Relief Bill. Senator Marshall Campbell and Hugh M. Meyler, M. L. A., expressed pleasure at the removal of £3 tax and other outstanding disabilities of the Indians in South Africa. The report in the indirect form is from a despatch by the Parliamentary Representative of The Natal Mercury.

Mr. Gandhi said it was a harder form of agitation, which, in the present case, could not have succeeded had his own countrymen not supported him, as was their duty. He felt himself to have been but a tool, and one of many tools. His deep thanks were due to the many European friends whose help had most materially contributed to the success now realised. He remembered how, during the month of the trying march into the Transvaal, a large number of Europeans had met the Indian column at various points along the road and encouraged them with sympathy and practical assistance. Potent, however, though passive resistance was as an instrument for winning reforms—perhaps the mightiest instrument on earth—it could not have achieved success had the Indian community not moderated their demands to what was reasonable and practical. This, again, was not possible until some of them were able to see the question of Indian rights from the European standpoint.

Mr. Gandhi went on to say he had made it his aim to see that question with the eyes of those who had seemed to his fellow-countrymen to be doing them an injustice; and he thought that, after long effort, he had fairly well succeeded. As to the Bill, he would say that it was a settlement of present difficulties. He felt that his countrymen in South Africa, after their struggle of eight years, were entitled to a reasonable period of peace. He had been impressed by the spirit of national and Imperial responsibility manifested in the recent speeches on the Bill in the Union Parliament, and, if that spirit continued, he had no doubt the Government here would be able to solve the problems which still remained in regard to their Indian subjects. He did not see that the peace now accomplished needed ever to be disturbed. There would be no more influx of Indians into the country. Indentured labour had been stopped for ever—let them thank heaven for that. The Indians knew perfectly well which was the dominant and governing race. They aspired to no social equality with Europeans. They felt that the path of their development was separate. They did not even aspire to the franchise, or, if the aspiration existed, it was with no idea of its having present effect. Ultimately—in the future—he believed his people would get the franchise if they deserved to get it, but the matter did not belong to practical politics. All he would ask for the Indian community was that, on the basis of the rights now conceded to them, they should be suffered to live with dignity and honour on the soil of South Africa.¹

We do not aspire to social equality, and I dare say our social evolution lies along different lines. We have stated so repeatedly — that we shall not at present ask for the whole franchise. We understand who is the predominant race here. In the process of time, when we have deserved it, we shall get the franchise also. I dare say, but that is not a question of practical politics. There will be no further influx of Indians from India—thank Heaven! —so that it is only a question of the fair and just treatment of the Indian population that is here, and, if that population is to live in peace, the least it is entitled to is to have the ability and opportunity of living here in absolute peace, and with honour and dignity. If that is not what we are entitled to, I do not know what we are entitled to.²

The Natal Mercury, 29-6-1914 and 30-6-1914

173. DRAFT FOR HERMANN KALLENBACH

CAPE TOWN,

June 30, 1914

I shall talk to Hoekstetter on business only calmly and dispassionately without any exaggeration.

I shall not be irritated with Wilson but put up with his weaknesses even as I would expect others to put up with mine.

I shall not preach to anyone, i.e., not speak to anyone about my

¹ What follows is from a “special” despatch dated June 29 and published in the issue of June 30. It was preceded by the following resume of a part of Gandhiji’s speech: “It had been his privilege to make life-long companions and friends, almost brothers, in South Africa amongst the Europeans. Where should he go to find such faithful, such noble friends, if he might say so, as Senator Marshall Campbell. Senator Marshall Campbell had shared their miseries and shared their sorrows; even in the thick of the struggle he had come in order to learn, and in order to gain, and he had no doubt that anybody who did join such a struggle did learn and did gain. It had never been a struggle of violence. They had not used passive resistance as a weapon of the weak, to be properly wielded, it required an infinitely stronger weapon than violence. If the spirit which had guided the deliberations of both Houses in the passage of that Bill, and of all their individual friends, was the spirit which would be applied to several other problems, there need be no fear of a recrudescence of passive resistance. After a struggle lasting eight years, the Indians needed a period of peace, and it was for the Europeans not to be sparing of sympathies.”

² The gathering was then addressed by Kallenbach.
life or to anyone about reforming his own, knowing well that I have yet to reform myself and find my ground.

I shall not do more with Dickson than merely asking him to assist me if he would.

I shall consider that with M. I was enjoying freedom, without him I am in prison and therefore be more strict in observing the discipline:- I shall rise earlier, I shall count beads more attentively, I shall not take more than 15 minutes over my stick, shall not take more food but less food, I shall not think evil of anyone and try to be loving and charitable to all and I shall always, before retiring and at the time of rising, ask God to give me strength to follow the Truth wherever it may lead me.

2. I shall daily before using the beads read Thomas a Kempis.\(^2\)

I shall always try to remember “Not to seek to be anything”, but “To seek to be nothing”.

I shall specially be silent to and patient with all my relations.

If only possible walk from and to Mountain View. I shall try to avoid irritation of any kind in my communications with all my workmen and contractors at Mountain View, in the office, at Pretoria and with any person I have any dealings with.

I shall daily think of Cape Town’s discussions, resolutions, vow of silence, real understanding, what my life has been and what it has to and must become, so that I am more ready and fit instrument when I meet M’ at Phoenix or Johannesburg and we take the work up in exactly the same manner as we left it.

The above and anything to be added, I shall read twice daily, morning and evening.

Avoid familiarity and speak as little as possible wherever you may be. Remember your vow of silence.

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

---

1 Up to here the draft is in Gandhiji’s hand
2 Vide also “Letter to The Natal Mercury”, 21-9-1913.
3 Illegible in the source
174. LETTER TO E. M. GORGES

CAPE TOWN,
June 30, 1914

DEAR MR. GORGES,

I beg to acknowledge receipt of your letter of even date herewith setting forth the substance of the interview that General Smuts was pleased, notwithstanding many other pressing calls upon his time, to grant me on Saturday last. I feel deeply grateful for the patience and courtesy which the Minister showed during the discussion of the several points submitted by me.

The passing of the Indians’ Relief Bill and this correspondence finally closes the passive resistance struggle which commenced in the September of 1906 and which to the Indian community cost much physical suffering and pecuniary loss and to the Government much anxious thought and consideration.

As the Minister is aware, some of my countrymen have wished me to go further. They are dissatisfied that the trade licences laws of the different provinces, the Transvaal Gold Law, the Transvaal Townships Act, the Transvaal Law 3 of 1885 have not been altered, so as to give them full rights of residence, trade and ownership of land. Some of them are dissatisfied that full inter-provincial migration is not permitted, and some are dissatisfied that, on the marriage question, the Relief Bill goes no further than it does. They have asked me that all the above matters might be included in the passive resistance struggle. I have been unable to comply with their wishes. Whilst, therefore, they have not been included in the programme of passive resistance, it will not be denied that some day or other these matters will require further and sympathetic consideration by the Government. Complete satisfaction cannot be expected until full civic rights have been conceded to the resident Indian population. I have told my countrymen that they will have to exercise patience and by all honourable means at their

---

1 Vide “Letter from E.M. Gorges”, 30-6-1914.
2 The Gold Law and the Townships Act of 1908 prevented Indians from residing or trading except in Locations in all the Gold areas.
disposal educate public opinion so as to enable the Government of the day to go further than the present correspondence does. I shall hope that, when the Europeans of South Africa fully appreciate the fact that now, as the importation of indentured labour from India is prohibited and as the Immigrants Regulation Act of last year has in practice all but stopped further free Indian immigration and that my countrymen do not aspire to any political ambition, they, the Europeans, will see the justice and, indeed, the necessity of my countrymen being granted the rights I have just referred to.

Meanwhile, if the generous spirit that the Government have applied to the treatment of the problem during the past few months continues to be applied, as promised in your letter, in the administration of the existing laws, I am quite certain that the Indian community throughout the Union will be able to enjoy some measure of peace and never be a source of trouble to the Government.¹

I am,

Yours faithfully,

M. K. GANDHI

¹ The Governor-General, Lord Gladstone, in two despatches, dated July 4 and 10, 1914, reported to the Colonial I Office the reaching of the settlement, and analysed in some detail how and to what extent Gandhiji’s demands had been met;
vide Appendix “Governor-General’s Despatch to Colonial Office”, 4-7-1914.
175. LETTER TO G. K. GOKHALE

IMBERLEY TRAIN,
July 1, 1914

DEAR MR. GOKHALE,

I cabled yesterday saying that everything was settled. I am not inflicting copies of the correspondence or any other papers on you.

I am making a desperate effort to leave by the 18th instant. My one desire is now to meet you and see you, take my orders from you and leave at once for India. This will be in your hands after I have left, if I leave on the 18th, but before if I leave on the 25th. I shall cable next week when I am to leave. If, therefore, you have any instructions for me will you kindly cable Cape Town or Madeira as the case may be.

I hope that your health is improving.

Mrs. Gandhi and Mr. Kallenbach accompany me.

I am,
Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: G. N. 3777

176. SPEECH AT KIMBERLEY RECEPTION

[July 2, 1914]

After giving a brief account of the events from the day of the meeting in the Gaiety Theatre, Johannesburg, in September 1906, up to date, and a moving description of the Indians’ sacrifices during the period, Mr. Gandhi said:

As a result of these sufferings, today we see that the hearts of the Europeans in South Africa have melted. In this struggle, I was only a soldier in the army of voluntary sufferers. Real honour should go to 1 This cable is not available.

2 A meeting was held in the Beaconsfield Town Hall to honour Gandhiji, with Councillor T. Pratley in the chair. The original report of the speech in English is not available.
those who went through these unbearable sufferings. We also owe thanks to Mr. Kallenbach, Mr. Polak and all other European friends who have helped us during difficult times.

Speaking on the new Bill, he said:

We could see that the Union Government worked to get the Assembly and the Senate to pass a Bill which would satisfy the Imperial Government, the Government of India and the Indians of South Africa. General Botha, it must be admitted, has done much for us, seeing that, for the sake of a community as docile as the Indians, he threatened to resign if the Bill was not passed. We also thank the Opposition for treating this issue, not as a matter of party-politics, but as an Imperial problem. We are thankful, too, to the Imperial Government and to Lord Hardinge, that noble Viceroy of India, for their help. The help which India gave us under the leadership of Mr. Gokhale and the invaluable help from Mr. Andrews—each of these surpassed the other and it is thanks to them that we have this final and satisfactory settlement today. The spirit which animated the Government in dealing out justice to us will also inspire the administration of the Act and, if so, there will be no occasion again for a struggle like this. But, with their leave, I wish to point out to my countrymen that the remedy for every hardship lies in the first instance with us; after that, we have the weapon of satyagraha. . . . I shall for ever cherish the sacred memory of European friends and the love my countrymen have borne towards me.

[From Gujarati]

Indian Opinion, 8-7-1914
177. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

Sunday morning, July 5, 1914

MY DEAR FRIEND AND SEEKER,

First the experiment. My ration was 3 bananas, 4 apples, 2 oranges, 6 naarangi[s], 4 dates, 4 oz. monkey-nuts, 2 spoonful oil and lemon and orange squash. Had no noises and only one motion for the whole day well bound. I am looking forward to the result of yours which is so thorough.

About Joseph, you were hopelessly wrong. You ought to have bought his ticket- Polak could not be considered. If you did not want to buy, you should not have taken the money and having failed to do either, you should have had the courage to give Joseph the real reason for not buying. It was a lie. Do you think Joseph could not understand? He was quite nice and allowed us to chat away. He was no disturbing factor. Turn your reading to account. Not until you have truth in you, will you make real progress. Fear God only. Do not fear man. Be ever brave but be truthful or do not speak. You could easily have said, ‘Joseph, and Polak and Gandhi are going to have a private chat. So better not go but if you must, ask their permission or I cannot help you to get the ticket’. That would have been gentlemanly and honest.

Hope Medh sent the wire to Union Castle.
Finish everything without worry.
May God give you strength and courage.
With love,

Yours,

DAS

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India
178. SPEECH AT DURBAN MEETING

[July 5, 1914]

The inference that the Mercury and other papers have drawn about the £3 tax is altogether wrong and misleading. It does not at all follow from the Act. After the Mercury's comments were published, General Smuts was addressed on the matter, and he is also convinced that the Act does not bear the meaning which the Mercury has read in it.2

Speaking on the marriage question, Mr. Gandhi said:

Some Indians have asked for a marriage law similar to the one in Mauritius. I have, however, read that law; it is worse, on the contrary [than the law here]. We shall not find anywhere else a better solution to the marriage problem than the one we have secured.

Proceeding, he said that the issue of the right of entry of South Africa born Indians into the Cape and the problem of the Orange Free State had also been satisfactorily settled, and added that the Government had given assurances for reasonable and lenient administration of the Act. Concluding, he thanked them for gathering in such large numbers to honour him.

[From Gujarati]
Indian Opinion, 8-7-1914

179. CABLE TO “THE HINDU”

JOHANNESBURG,
July 6, 1914

THE FINAL SETTLEMENT OF PASSIVE RESISTANCE COMPLETED ENDING EIGHT YEARS’ CONTINUOUS STRUGGLE PASSIVE RESISTANCE SUBMISSION ENTIRELY MET BY LEGISLATIVE AND ADMINISTRATIVE MEASURES AS REQUIRED. SPIRIT OF JUSTICE PREVAILED MINISTERS SPEECHES AND DEBATES IN BOTH HOUSES. FOR THIS HONOURABLE RESULT THOUGH REACHED PRINCI-

1 The meeting was held at the Football Ground on Gandhiji’s return from Cape Town, after the passing of the Indians’ Relief Bill.
2 Vide 1st footnote of “Letter to E. M. Gorges”, 11-7-1914.
3 This was signed by Cachalia, Kallenbach, Polak and Gandhiji.
PALLY THROUGH SUFFERINGS OF THOUSANDS OF RESISTERS BY WAY OF QUICKENING SOUTH AFRICAN CONSCIENCE COMMUNITY IS DEEPLY GRATEFUL TO IMPERIAL INDIAN AND UNION GOVERNMENTS AND ALSO INDIAN PEOPLE UNDER GOKHALE’S GUIDANCE AND TO ANDREWS AND PEARSON’S MISSION. IF ABOVE SPIRIT CONTINUES TO PERVADE ADMINISTRATION EXISTING LAWS NO FEAR REVIVAL OF TROUBLE.

_The Hindu, 8-7-1914_

180. CABLE TO G. K. GOKHALE

[JOHANNESBURG, July 6, 1914]

HON’BLE MR. GOKHALE
LONDON

WHOLE INDIAN COMMUNITY TENDERS YOU HEARTFELT THANKS CONGRATULATIONS FOR FINAL SETTLEMENT WHICH WITHOUT YOUR SELF-SACRIFICING SERVICES WOULD NOT HAVE BEEN REACHED SO EARLY. WE ASK YOU AS OUR SPOKESMAN CONVEY BY CABLE LORD HARDINGE OUR HUMBLE THANKS FOR HIS GREAT HELP AND FOR FEARLESS MANNER IN WHICH HE FACILITATED SETTLEMENT.

_Indian Opinion, 8-7-1914_

181. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

[PHOENIX]
Monday [July 6, 1914]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I posted a letter to you at P.M. Burg yesterday.

The boys were in Town. We had a good meeting. Then we took the train to Avoca and walked from there. It is now exactly 2.55 a.m. I woke up at 1.40, left the bed at 2.25, retired at 10 p.m. and slept away at perhaps 10.30 p.m. after a chat with Mrs. Gandhi. I am none the worse for the walk. Mrs. Gandhi has reconciled herself\(^1\) to uncooked diet now so that there is not much danger of my taking cooked fruit.

---

1 It appears that this and the “Cable to The Hindu”, the preceding item, were salt on the same day.

They in Durban want you even though it may be for a day. I have told them it is difficult.

Hope Medh sent the wire to Union Castle.

If I am able to get up as early as I have today, I should give you a daily letter.

With love,

Yours,

DAS

\(^{1}\) The source has “myself”.

\(^{2}\) From the contents it appears that this was written after the preceding item; vide also the following item.

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India
183. LETTER TO E. M. GORGES

PHOENIX,
NATAL,
July 7, 1914

DEAR MR. GORGES,

I have now got a moment to submit my note upon the Gold Law. As you know, after maturer consideration, I refrained from pressing for the insertion of a special clause defining “vested rights” in connection with the Gold Law and Townships Amendment Act, because I felt that any definition in the correspondence might result in restricting the future action of my countrymen. However, so far as my interpretation of “vested rights” is concerned, I think that I shall reduce it to writing. General Smuts was good enough to say that he would endeavour to protect vested rights as defined by me. The following is the definition I submitted to Sir Benjamin Robertson, who, I understood, submitted it to General Smuts. My letter containing, among other matters, the definition, is dated the 4th March, 1914. “By ‘vested rights’ I understand the right of an Indian and his successors to live and trade in the townships in which he was living and trading, no matter how often he shifts his residence or business from place to place in the same township.” I am fortified in my interpretation by the answer given by Mr. Harcourt in connection with the matter, in the House of Commons, on the 27th June, 1911:

Complaints against that legislation (the Gold Law and Townships Amendment Act) have been made and are now being investigated by the Government of the Union of South Africa, who have lately stated that there is no intention of interfering with any business or right to carry on business acquired and exercised by Indians prior to the date of the legislation.

I have also now traced the note by Mr. de Villiers which I alluded to in our conversation. It is contained in a White Paper published in London in March, 1912, and has the following:

No right or privilege which a Coloured person has at the present time is taken away by the new Act (Act 35 of 1908).

1 Vide “Letter to Sir Benjamin Robertson”, 4-3-1914.
And again,

Section 131, which, before the Bill was introduced into Parliament, formed the subject of questions in the English House of Commons and of despatches from the Secretary of State to the Governor, has been amended in Committee so as to safeguard any rights which a Coloured person may, at the present time, have of occupying land in mining areas.

Certainly, prior to the passing of the Gold Law, no restrictions were, to my knowledge, placed upon the movement or the trade of British Indians in the Gold Areas. There can, therefore, be no justification for any restriction now, especially in regard to those who are already settled in their respective townships.

I am,

Yours truly,

M. K. Gandhi

E. M. Gorges, Esq.
Pretoria

From a photostat of the typewritten office copy: S. N. 6003

184. SPEECH AT FAREWELL MEETING

Durban,
July 8, 1914

Mr. Gandhi, in returning thanks, first explained why he appeared in the mourning costume which he had been wearing since the time of the strike. He hoped they would forgive him for appearing in that strange costume, which he had adopted on his premature discharge from prison, as a sign of mourning. That mourning had gone, yet he retained the costume, and as the alternative was for him to wear evening

1 A large and enthusiastic meeting of Indians, attended by a number of Europeans, was held in the Town Hall to bid farewell to Gandhiji, Kasturba and Kallenbach on the eve of their departure for England en route to India. W. Holmes, the Mayor, presided. Gandhiji and Ba were garlanded and presented with bouquets. Kallenbach could not attend and a telegram from him expressing thanks was read at the meeting. Addresses on behalf of a number of organizations all over South Africa were read. Indian and European admirers of Gandhiji paid him glowing tributes. Gandhiji then addressed the meeting. This report of Gandhiji’s speech has been collated with the one appearing in The Natal Mercury, 9-7-1914.

2 The Natal Mercury reported: “Mr. Gandhi who appeared in Hindu mourning costume, and was received with prolonged cheering, began with a reference to the object of his appearing in the dress he wore that night.”
dress, he felt that, in the mental attitude which possessed him at that moment, he could not render a greater respect for them than in appearing as he did. (Cheers.) Referring to the addresses which had been presented to him, he said that, while he valued them, he valued more the love and sympathy which the addresses had expressed. He did not know that he would be able to make adequate compensation. He did not deserve all the praise bestowed upon him. Nor did his wife claim to deserve all that had been said of her. Many an Indian woman had done greater service during the struggle than Mrs. Gandhi. He thanked the community on behalf of Mr. Kallenbach, who was another brother to him, for the addresses presented. The community had done well in recognizing Mr. Kallenbach’s worth. Mr. Kallenbach would tell them that he came to the struggle to gain. He considered that, by taking up their cause, he gained a great deal in the truest sense. Mr. Kallenbach had done splendid work during the strike at Newcastle and, when the time came, he cheerfully went to prison, again thinking that he was the gainer and not the loser. Proceeding, Mr. Gandhi referred to the time of his arrival in 1897 when his friend Mr. Laughton had stood by him against the mob. He also remembered with gratefulness the action of Mrs. Alexander, the wife of the late Superintendent of Police in Durban, who protected him with her umbrella from the missiles thrown by the excited crowd. Referring to passive resistance, he claimed that it was a weapon of the purest type. It was not the weapon of the weak. It needed, in his opinion, far greater courage to be a passive resister than a physical resister. It was the courage of a Jesus, a Daniel, a Cranmer, a Latimer and a Ridley who could go calmly to suffering and death, and the courage of a Tolstoy who dared to defy the Czars of Russia, that stood out as the greatest. Mr. Gandhi said he knew the Mayor had received some telegrams stating that the Indians’ Relief Bill was not satisfactory. It would be a singular thing if in this world they would be able to get anything that satisfied everybody, but, in the condition of things in South Africa at the present time, he was certain they could not have had a better measure.

I do not claim the credit for it. It is rather due to the women and children and young people like Nagappan, Narayansamy, and Valliamah who have died for the cause and to those who quickened the conscience of South Africa. Our thanks are due also to the Union Government. I shall never forget that General Botha showed the greatest statesmanship when he said his Government would stand or fall by this measure. I followed the whole of that historic debate—historic to me, historic to my countrymen, and possibly historic to South Africa and the world.

---

1 Vide “Memorial to Secretary of State for the Colonies”, 15-3-1897
2 The Natal Mercury version here has: “Mr. Gandhi defended passive resistance which he described as the cleanest weapon they could use.”
Proceeding, Mr. Gandhi said that it was well known to them how the Government had done justice, and how the Opposition had come to their assistance. They had also received handsome help from both the Imperial and The manner in which India, led by their great and distinguished countryman, Mr. Gokhale, had responded to the cry which came from the hearts of thousands of their countrymen in South Africa was one of the results of the passive resistance movement, and left, he hoped, no bitter traces or bitter memories. (Applause.)

This assurance I wish to give. I go away with no ill-will against a European. I have received many hard knocks in my life, but here I admit that I have received those most precious gifts from Europeans—love and sympathy. (Cheers.)

This settlement, he said, had been achieved after an eight years’ struggle. The Indians in South Africa had never aspired to any political ambition, and as regards the social question, that could never arise in connection with the Indians.

I do not hold for one moment that East and West cannot combine. I think the day is coming when East must meet West, or West meet East, but I think the social evolution of the West today lies in one channel, and that of the Indian in another channel. The Indians have no wish today to encroach on the social institutions of the European in South Africa. (Cheers.) Most Indians are natural traders. There are bound to be trade jealousies and those various things that come from competition. I have never been able to find a solution of this most difficult problem, which will require the broad-mindedness and spirit of justice of the Government of South Africa to hold the balance between conflicting interests.

Referring to his stay in South Africa, Mr. Gandhi said that he should retain the most sacred memories of this land. He had been fortunate in forming the happiest and most lasting friendship with both Europeans and Indians. He was now returning to India—a holy land, sanctified by the austerities of the ages. In conclusion, Mr. Gandhi said, he hoped that the same love and sympathy which had been given to him in South Africa might be extended to him, no matter in what part of the world he might be. He hoped that the settlement embodied in the Indians’ Relief Bill would be carried out in a spirit of broad-mindedness and justice in the administration of the laws lately passed in connection with the affairs of the Indian community.

Then, I think there will be no fear on the part of my countrymen in their social evolution. That is one of the lessons of the settlement.¹

Indian Opinion, 15-7-1914

¹ The meeting ended with a vote of thanks to the Mayor and the singing of the National Anthem.
185. THE END

A struggle of eight years’ duration has at last finally closed. The Indians’ Relief Bill and the correspondence\(^1\) between the Government and Mr. Gandhi embody a complete and mutually satisfactory and honourable settlement of the problems that were affected by the passive resistance movement. For this happy ending we have to thank the Imperial, Indian and Union Governments, the Motherland, guided and moved by Mr. Gokhale, and Mr. Andrews’ mission. The sufferings of thousands of Passive Resisters, the martyrdom of Valliamah, Narayansamy, Nagappen and Harbatsingh brought these forces into being. Passive Resistance, as a lawful weapon, has thus once more been vindicated. The lengthy reference made by Lord Gladstone to the settlement shows its importance. We are grateful to His Excellency for clearly placing before the people of South Africa the Imperial aspect.

It now remains for the Union Government to follow up this happy solution of a difficult problem by a sympathetic and just administration of the laws that affect the Indian community and for the latter to show by its action that it is ever worthy of just treatment. If the community is permitted to enjoy rest, it will be possible to find an easy method of dealing with the matters dealt with in Mr. Gandhi’s letter and which some day or other will demand attention in order that the resident population may be restored to the ordinary rights of citizenship. For it must not be forgotten that, though there is cause for thankfulness in that the most pressing grievances have been removed, we shall still labour under legal disabilities which intense colour prejudice has brought into being. Administration of trade licence laws, largely on racial lines, the deprivation of the right to own land in the Transvaal, the precarious position under the Transvaal Gold Law, inter-provincial restrictions—these and many other such limitations of our liberty show how true were Lord Gladstone’s words when he said that the Indians’ Relief Bill did but the barest justice. Indeed, it can only be taken as an instalment and as an earnest of the future. The struggle will, therefore, have done much more than give us the Bill and the administrative measures, if it has also altered the repressive policy of the Government to a progressive one, such that we may look forward to a steady improvement in the future.

{
\textit{Indian Opinion}, 8-7-1914

---

186. THE END OF THE STRUGGLE

The struggle that went on for eight years has come to an end, and such an end as, we believe, hardly any other movement in modern times has been crowned with. The foundation of the struggle was laid in Johannesburg in September, 1906. The issue then concerned only the Registration Act. The Government refused to listen to us. Gaol-going was resorted to. While the struggle had not yet ended, the Immigration Act was passed. A conditional settlement followed. The Government failed to honour its commitment. The movement was revived and had to be extended to cover the effect of the Immigration Act on the Registration Act. A new issue was thus added, that there should be no racial discrimination in the Immigration Act. Naturally, our feelings were aroused still further in consequence. The struggle was prolonged and a second deputation went to England. The Union Government, however, refused in so many words to remove the racial discrimination. While the struggle was thus being prolonged, in 1911 again a provisional settlement came about. This covered a third issue. Since a problem created by a law of the Transvaal had to be solved by the Union Parliament, the satyagrahis took the stand that they could not accept legislation which, though it might meet their requirement, would endanger the rights of others. Accordingly, a condition was included in the provisional settlement of 1911 to the effect that the existing rights of Indians in all the parts of the Union should be left untouched. There was no decision, however, until 1913. In the meantime, there was the visit of Mr. Gokhale. The Government gave him a promise that the £3 tax would be removed. Even so, had the Government granted the satyagrahis’ demands in full during the settlement in 1913, the movement would not have been revived and the £3 tax would have had to be taken up as a separate issue.

Meanwhile, the Searle judgment raised the marriage question. This also entailed the loss of existing rights. In 1913, the late Mr. Fischer carried through the Immigration Act in the face of our protests. It conceded much, but also denied a few things. The marriage question was left unsolved and in other ways, too, existing rights were endangered. This led to the resumption of satyagraha a fourth time.

This was in 1909.
and our demands naturally increased. Now that the Government has had to concede all the demands, the struggle has ended.

We can see from this, if we will, that every time the Government went back on its word, it was obliged to yield more to us. This it is which makes one say that chicanery never pays. Double dealing may remain unexposed only where both sides play more or less the same [dirty] game. In satyagraha, one side alone plays this game. The satyagrahi himself cannot conceivably do so.

We can also see that the more the struggle was prolonged the greater became the strength of the people and their capacity to suffer, so that the suffering that the masses endured towards the end of the last year was unparalleled in modern history. And, if the suffering has been great, the relief obtained has also been proportionately great. This correlation goes to prove another eternal law of Nature. Man can be happy only in the measure that he suffers. He who merely scrapes the soil on the surface can harvest nothing but grass. He alone can harvest grain who ploughs deeper. In other words, it is vain to hope for happiness without undergoing suffering. Thus it is that the life of austerity, the fakir’s self-denial and other such practices have everywhere been held in high esteem and their praises sung.

What the community has bought at the cost of so much suffering it will be able to keep and add to, only so long as it retains the same capacity for suffering. If it loses that capacity, it will lose all it has gained, and more. All this is plain enough, but we often lose sight of it.

NEW ACT

Let us now have a look at our gains. The new Act covers two things. In the first place, the £3 tax has been abolished. Arrears have also been remitted. In this connection, it has been suggested by The [Natal] Mercury and other papers that in gaining one thing we have lost something else; for, though the Government has repealed the tax, the consequence will be that the indentured labourers, poor creatures, will be obliged to leave this country or continue for ever under indenture. This suggestion is entirely unfounded, as is clear from General Smuts’ own letter. The other point is about the marriage question. The manner in which it has been solved gives us more, not less, than what we had been demanding. This Act confirms the position that was believed to obtain before the Searle judgment. Prior to that judgment, we had assumed that the local law recognized monogamous marriages celebrated under any faith, including marriages solemnized under our rites. Mr. Justice Searle, however, ruled otherwise and held that Christian marriages could be recognized but not Hindu and Muslim marriages, even if such marriages were in fact monogamous. This was obviously an affront to the two religions. Mr. Cachalia therefore desired amendment of the law. The demand has now been met. The Act does not involve any other change. The position with regard to divorce, inheritance and polygamy remains what it was. The Act safeguards the interests of children by a deceased wife. Its provisions are permissive. No one is obliged to have his or her marriage registered. As for those coming from India, the question just does not arise. The main object of getting a marriage registered is to ensure that children’s interests do not suffer. Now that the danger has been removed, it is not necessary for any Indian to have his or her marriage registered. We would rather advise them not to do so. The situation required a [new] law. It was necessary to undo the affront to [our] religions. It should be sufficient that we have succeeded in this. The Act has been so drafted as to secure children’s interests without requiring registration of the marriages. In view of this, the question whether a marriage is monogamous or polygamous will not arise at all. In any case, one who intends to marry more than one woman, would do well not to have his marriage with any of them registered. It was necessary to have provisions made for appointment of our priests as marriage officers. But we would not advise that this right be availed of. We are of the view that such appointments will lead to dishonesty in the community and expose the priests to temptations. As for marriages already solemnized, there is no need for such appointments since these marriages can be registered before any magistrate. It is the same with regard to marriages that may be celebrated in future. In other words, we can have a marriage solemnized by any Maulvi1 or Gor2 and get it registered subsequently before a magistrate whenever we choose. We would, there-fore, particularly advise the community, not to take the trouble of getting marriage officers appointed. Before we leave this point, it has to be said that in no other Colony does a [marriage] law go as far as the one passed here does. It has been said that in Mauritius [Indian] marriages are recognized whether polygamous or not, but this is not true and the law there is not as good

1 Muslim priest
2 Hindu priest
as the one here, as we show elsewhere in this very issue.

A third point that has been satisfactorily settled in this Act is that, in case of any doubt regarding the domicile certificate of a resident of Natal, the certificate must be accepted as genuine if the thumb-impression on it is identical with the one on the copy in possession of the Immigration Officer. The result will be that people will not be unnecessarily harassed, as at present, with inquiries and sent away for making false claims in spite of the genuineness of the thumb-impression having been established. Those who can prove the thumb-impression to be genuine have their right secured now. This section does not however mean that one who has been away from Natal for a number of years will, just because he has the [domicile] certificate, be safe. Everyone, of course, will have to prove that he had not left Natal for good.

Administrative Relief

The kind of ameliorative measures needed outside the law can be judged from the correspondence between the Government and Mr. Gandhi. These concern issues such as South African Indians, the Free State and the administration of existing laws. Only one of these points calls for comment here. In view of the promise of reasonable administration of the laws in force, with due regard to existing rights, it will be possible for the community to obtain redress in every case of injustice. This clause, we believe, should prove very useful in future. But its usefulness will depend on how the community’s leaders exert themselves. If they sleep on, the clause will have been passed in vain. The laws which will most need to be watched are two: the licensing law in each Province and the Gold Law of the Transvaal. Mr. Gandhi has pointed out in his letter that we shall have to agitate in future to secure amendment of these laws. In starting any such agitation, the community will have to be particularly careful in obeying the laws in question; if it does so, it will, for the present at any rate, enjoy peace.

We must admit that on this occasion the Government have displayed a desire for justice and that the leading members of Parliament have also been actuated by the same desire in their speeches. It would also appear from the speeches of the ministers, and especially from that of General Smuts, that he is inclined to deal justly in future. We advise the community to profit by this desire, and this it will be able to do only if it has unity, manly spirit and regard for truth.

[From Gujarati]
Indian Opinion, 8-7-1914

187. MARRIAGE LAW IN MAURITIUS

We had heard that in Mauritius the law recognized polygamous marriages in the case of Indians. Thereupon we made inquiries. We have not received a copy of the Act. This law was the result of agitation by Indians there. It was passed on December 17, 1912. It provides for the appointment of Hindu and Muslim priests as marriage officers. No Indian marriage is to be recognized as valid unless it complies with the provisions of the Act of 1890. That is, the general law which applies to all applies to our people also. It is specifically mentioned in that general law that the provisions of sections 46 to 51 regulating marriages also apply to Indian marriages. If the husband is below 21 years and the wife below 18, the consent of the parents of both is necessary. There are other sections prescribing the duties and functions of marriage officers, the manner of maintaining registers, etc. Violation of any of the provisions or registration of an unlawful marriage is punishable with a fine up to Rs. 500/-. The following are some of the conditions to be observed by priests under this Act:

1. A boy under the age of 18 and a girl under 15 cannot be married except by special permission of the Governor.
2. If one wife is living, marriage with another woman cannot be contracted unless the former is lawfully divorced.
3. In case of divorce for adultery, the divorced party cannot marry the partner in such adultery.
4. A widow or divorced woman cannot remarry until after ten months.
5. No marriages can take place between a man and his niece, a woman and her nephew, and man and his brother’s wife, even where the woman is a widow.

Besides these, there are many other provisions which, however, we do not notice here.

What we have given above shows that the general law in Mauritius is applicable to Indians in regard to divorce, polygamous marriages, the minimum age for marriage and such other essential matters. The only change introduced by the new law is that, whereas Indian priests could not register marriages formerly, such priests can be appointed now for that purpose.

[From Gujarati]
Indian Opinion, 8-7-1914

188. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

July 9, 1914

MY DEAR FRIEND,

No letters from you for the last 2 days. Manilal says there should be with you my shoes and neckties, etc. I have not a collar left nor more than one tie. Please search and if the shoes are there you may get them stretched.

Yesterday’s function was good I acted for you and against you.¹

I am writing this in the Durban train. Am paying the passage here and sending all my luggage here so that there may be only a little to carry.

With love,

Yours,

DAS

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

189. SPEECH AT GUJARATI MEETING²

DURBAN, [July 9, 1914]

[Gandhiji] said that he would take the opportunity to address a few remarks to the Colonial-born Indians, as he did not know whether he would have another opportunity to speak to them. To them his first words had been when he came to South

¹ For Gandhiji’s speech at the farewell function organized in his honour and for Kasturba and Kallenbach, vide “Speech at Farewell Meeting”, 8-7-1914

² In his English speech thanking the gathering for the reception to Ba and himself, Gandhiji made touching references to the happy relations which existed between Hindus and Muslims.
Africa and to them his last words would be when he left it. It was they who had assisted him with his first piece of political work in South Africa, when a petition signed by some 10,000 Indians had been addressed to Lord Elgin, the then Secretary of State for the Colonies,1 against the disfranchisement of Indians. That petition had been successful in its object, the Bill being vetoed, though the Government of the day subsequently in another form achieved its purpose. The Colonial-borns had since also borne their share of the communal work, but they could, if they would, do more. It was they who were the permanent Indian settlers of South Africa. To the Colonial-borns South Africa was their birth-place and home, and it was essential to the well being of all other sections of the community that they should work together with the Colonial-borns. Their responsibility was great. It was they who would have to nurse the settlement, to maintain the happier tone which had now been established between the European and Indian communities and to live down the prejudice which today still existed in South Africa. This they would accomplish in time if they did their duty at all times. He referred to the fact that Nagappen and Valliamma had both been Colonial-borns, as had the ladies who did such noble work at Newcastle. He urged upon them to preserve their national characteristic, to learn their mother-tongue and study the history and traditions of their Motherland, where he would hope to see them some day.

Indian Opinion, 9-9-1914

190. SPEECH AT GUJARAT SABHA FUNCTION

[ Durban, July 9, 1914 ]

I have but limited time and I only want, therefore, to say a few things to Indian youths born in South Africa. In the van of the satyagraha battle were Indians born here and among them, particularly the poor and the simple people rendered great services. The rich were busy getting richer. My brother Nagappen and sister Valliamma were born here, and so was brother Narayansamy. I would urge you all to follow in their footsteps and advise you to go on a pilgrimage to India, be the difficulties what they might.2

1 This petition was addressed in May 1895 to Lord Ripon, the then Secretary of State for the Colonies. A copy of this was sent to Lord Elgin who was, at the time, Viceroy and Governor-General of India. Vide “Open Letter”, Before 19-12-1894 to “Petition to Lord Ripon”, Before 5-5-1895

2 Held at the Hindu Dharmashala in Victoria Street.

3 Gandhiji next addressed the gathering in Gujarati.
I am grateful to you all, friends, for the honour and the love that you have given us both. Whenever I am honoured, I feel my atman is exposed to danger. Whenever, on the contrary, I am attacked or insulted, I realize my imperfections and a new light dawns upon me. In my present state of mind, however, I am not at all likely to be corrupted by praise of me. I feel extremely sad to have to part from you, but sooner or later that was bound to happen. I am about to leave a bhoga-bhumi\(^1\) for a karma-bhumi\(^2\). For me there can be no deliverance from this earthly life except in India. Anyone who seeks such deliverance must go to the sacred soil of India. For me, as for everyone else, the land of India is “the refuge of the afflicted”. I am therefore longing to return to the motherland. It is my parting prayer that you should all bear love for one another, regardless of caste or creed.

I have always shown the same respect for Muslims as for Hindus. Hinduism, too, teaches this [regard for other religions], and if anyone says that in this I am not acting like a Hindu, I shall offer satyagraha against him. I make bold to say that certainly no one present here is more of a Hindu than I am, perhaps not even as much. Whenever we have a guest, we show due respect to him. We ought to respect members of other communities in the same manner. If every Indian lived thus in amity with others, there is not the slightest doubt that we shall make great advance in South Africa.

As to the honour that has been done to me on this occasion, I have only this to say, that every time I have been honoured I have felt particularly weak and that when I have received blows I have felt accession of strength and progressed towards greater firmness of mind. Those friends, therefore, who speak ill of me these days are, to judge from results, my well-wishers. I shall have been rightly honoured only when every friend becomes a satyagrahi.

[From Gujarati]
Indian Opinion, 15-7-1914

\(^1\) Land of enjoyment
\(^2\) Land of duty
191. SPEECH AT SPORTS FUNCTION

DURBAN, [July 9, 1914]

Mr. Gandhi said that he was deeply grateful to the Farewell Committee for having organised those sports and for having set apart that day for the sake of the Indian children and gathered them together at that short notice, and he must confess that he was not at all equally grateful for the function that they had in the Town Hall.¹ For him that had been insipid, but that function that afternoon would carry with it or would send with him the pleasantest recollections of his stay in South Africa. He knew the community of South Africa, but he scarcely knew the community of India. He felt confidant that if he wanded to give a knowledge to anybody as to how the Indian mind in South Africa would run on a particular occasion, he should be able to state accurately the direction in which it would go, but he had no knowledge at all as to what the Indian mind in India itself could do or would do on a particular occasion. To that extent he knew his countrymen in South Africa, and it gave him very great pleasure that afternoon to see those around him when he was about to say good-bye to South Africa and to say good-bye to his dear countrymen and to all those boys and girls. He then addressed the children. He said they had come there that afternoon to indulge in sports, and sports were good, they were excellent, if they knew the meaning of those sports, but he would leave those alone that afternoon and would like to direct their attention to the real sport in life. They had raced for prizes and, as Mr. Baillie had just reminded him, the prize-giving might have a demoralising effect upon those who had the training of the children in their hands as well as upon the children themselves. He shared that fear, but, if they had raced that afternoon for the sake of racing in order to show that during the past few years they had been endeavouring to keep the physical portion of their being in a fit and proper state, it showed also the value of the industry, the courage and the time that they had put forth in a disciplined manner in order to gain that particular purpose in life. But in life there was a better race for them and for him to run—did they know what that race was? All the children who went to churches if they were Christians, or all the children who were Hindus if they had any Hindus to teach them what their own religion taught, or if they were Mahomedans and had priests to tell them, he felt sure that they would all tell them that there was that race in life where they had to make themselves good in future and behave themselves if they grew up as men and women. In his opinion, if he might address a few remarks to the teachers also, having played at teaching himself for a number of years, it seemed to him that the real teaching consisted not in giving the children a knowledge of letters merely, but in developing their character, and that, in so far as the boys and girls developed their character whilst they were still tender and whilst they could still be moulded, and, if their teachers told them that character was the first, the middle and the last and that their knowledge of letters was purely and simply an aid to develop that character, then he thought that they were doing well in attending those schools and it was well for their parents also [to allow them] to do that; but, if their parents sent them, if they went to schools, merely to have a knowledge of letters, so that they might earn a few pounds anyhow in future, then he was afraid that their education was not education and he felt that he should say that little word to them that afternoon.

¹ Gandhiji spoke at a children’s sports function held in the Albert Park, Durban. A brief report of the function appeared in Indian Opinion, 15-7-1914.
² Vide “Speech at Farewell Meeting”, 8-7-1914

Presently they were going to receive prizes, but they had been told that the Sporting Association of the Natal Province was about to receive a wandering trophy from Mr. Rustomjee, and he understood that it was not a trophy which was intrinsically valueless, but that it had actually cost a sum of over £30. He hoped that the Natal Sporting Association deserved that trophy, but he did not dwell upon the trophy because it was a valuable thing, but he did hope that the Natal Sporting Association would behave in a sportsmanlike spirit, and in that real sport in the world and in that race in life would set a noble example to the children, the boys and girls who had gathered together there that afternoon, by gaining trophies not from one Parsee Rustomjee but from everyone of their countrymen in South Africa by placing themselves at their disposal and by serving them in a sportsmanlike manner. And, even as these schools had run the races and put their whole spirit into the race, so he hoped that the Association would do so, and he thought that they had given him an earnest of what they were doing from the manner in which they had conducted those proceedings, because it was, he thought, on their shoulders that the brunt of the burden had fallen, led as they had been and still were by Mr. Rustomjee. And one word for Mr. Rustomjee. Friend though he was to him, client though he had been to him, trustee though he was of the Phoenix Settlement, he did wish to commend to them the services of Mr. Rustomjee. He knew that he had worked himself practically to death in connection with that farewell, but he did hope it had not been because a friend of his was going away from South Africa, but in order to show what they had got to do in South Africa, in order to show that South Africa had a reputation, or the Indians in South Africa had, in keeping up the reputation of the Motherland, and he showed also by his energy and by his supporting all such movements what they had got to do. He knew that Mr. Rustomjee was at times hard to please. But if they did please him, he (the speaker) knew also that they had no better, no more constand, leader to work with in South Africa. Mr. Rustomjee knew no distinction of race or religion. He was a Parsee among Parsees, but also a Mahomedan among Mahomedans in that he would do for them, die for them, live for them. He was a Hindu amongst Hindus and would do for them likewise. There were many others whom he (the speaker) might point out in South Africa who could equal Mr. Rustomjee in many respects and surpass him, but none his equal in constancy and courage. And before he left the Port of Durban, he would leave that parting word with them. If there was anything of public work to be done, let them trust Mr. Rustomjee, but let them also obey him. They should bear with Mr. Rustomjee, but also with his faults. There was no human being without faults. Even the sun and moon had spots. God alone was spotless; it was not given to any mortal being to be spotless. Let Mr. Rustomjee’s faults take care of themselves, and let them see his merits, and they knew what he had been to them during the gigandic strike. In conclusion, he asked them to pray for him, to give their love to him, and send him nice messages, and, in return, he promised that, in whatever part of the world he might be, he would not forget his countryman with whom he had mixed in South Africa and how they had loved him, and he prayed that God might give him strength to love them in return. God alone knew him and could see his heart. It may be that he had loved them wisely, it might be that he had loved them ignorantly, and thereby performed a service or disservice to them; then, God was also great enough to forgive him, but they should also forgive him if he had not loved them well enough, served them well enough, but knew that all he had done and endeavoured to do had been done from the bottom of his heart. Mistakes he had committed, for which they should pardon him. But if they had seen traces of love in him, let them pray to the Almighty that that love might grow abundantly and come forth to them also as some poor return of the love and generosity and consideration they had shown to him and Mrs. Gandhi in their darkest hours.

Indian Opinion, 2-9-1914

192. SPEECH AT RECEPTION BY DHEDS

[DURBAN, July 9, 1914]

This morning, gentlemen of the Dhed community called on me to extend an invitation, but, not aware of who they were, I expressed my inability to accept it owing to pressure on my time. Had I known their caste, I would have certainly come earlier. I feel proud that I am now meeting [members of] this caste. They are our own brethren, and to regard them with the slightest disrespect not only argues our own 1 Gandhiji addressed members of the Dhed community, traditionally charged with sanitary duties.

---

unworthiness but is morally wrong, for it is contrary to the teaching of the Bhagavad Gita.

Mr. Gandhi then explained how the training of children’s character was far more important than literary education. They might learn less, but the education they received would have some meaning only if they understood what they learnt.

[From Gujarati]
Indian Opinion, 15-7-1914

193. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

PHOENIX,
July 10, 1914

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter today. This time I do not want to miss a single day if I can help it.

I have here your waistcoats and trousers which I am bringing with me as also your papers.

Yesterday and today I have not been able to get up early having retired after midnight. The functions in Durban compelled me to take only the 9.30 p.m. train from Durban. The temptation to take cooked fruit was great but it is finished now. I am not likely to succumb between tomorrow and Sunday. Here is the train coming so good-bye.

With love,

DAS

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

194. SPEECH AT PRETORIA

July 10, 1914

Mr. Gandhi, in replying to the address and speeches, expressed pleasure that Mr. Stent had presided over the gathering Mr. Stent had consistently advocated their cause, and he (the speaker) felt personally grateful to him. He reciprocated Mr. Chamney’s sentiments. He had certainly stood up against Mr. Chamney and the management of his office, but there had been no personal ill-will on the speaker’s part, and he always received the utmost courtesy at Mr. Chamney’s hands. He appreciated the compliment Mr. Chamney paid him by coming out to arrest him with one man only to assist, when the speaker was at the head of 2,000 men and women. It showed the confidence Mr. Chamney had in him as a passive resister. He thanked them for the purse, the contents of which, in common with those of any others received, would not be used for himself, but first for the furtherance of the interests of the Indians of South Africa, and, secondly, for any work he might have to do in India which had commended itself to them in the course of the conversations they had had. He felt that the settlement they had received was a kind of Magna Charta. It was not a final settlement in the sense that they had no wrongs left. They had to exercise patience and cultivate European opinion, in order to get those wrongs redressed. They had to maintain the sympathy which men like Mr. Stent might think fit to extend to them. He paid a glowing tribute to the work done for the Indian cause by Miss Schlesin.

Gandhiji attended a farewell meeting at Pretoria, presided over by Vere Stent Chamney, Hajee Habib and Mangalbhai eulogized Gandhiji’s work and leadership.

Indian Opinion, 29-7-1914

195. THE THEORY AND PRACTICE OF PASSIVE RESISTANCE

[Before July 11, 1914]

I shall be at least far away from Phoenix, if not actually in the Motherland, when this Commemoration Issue is published. I would, however, leave behind me my innermost thoughts upon that which has made this special issue necessary. Without Passive Resistance, there would have been no richly illustrated and important special issue of Indian Opinion, which has, for the last eleven years, in an unpretentious and humble manner, endeavoured to serve my countrymen and South Africa, a period covering the most critical stage that they will, perhaps, ever have to pass through. It marks the rise and growth of Passive Resistance, which has attracted world-wide attention. The term does not fit the activity of the Indian community during the past eight years. Its equivalent in the vernacular, rendered into English, means

---

1 En route to India, Gandhiji left Phoenix on July 11.
2 The “Golden Number” of Indian Opinion, dealing with the Indian struggle in South Africa, was released on December 1, 1914.
3 “Satyagraha”, the phrase Gandhiji preferred to use; vide “Gujarati Equivalents for Passive Resistance, Etc.”.
Truth-Force. I think Tolstoy called it also Soul-Force or Love-Force, and so it is. Carried out to its utmost limit, this force is independent of pecuniary or other material assistance; certainly, even in its elementary form, of physical force or violence. Indeed, violence is the negation of this great spiritual force, which can only be cultivated or wielded by those who will entirely eschew violence. It is a force that may be used by individuals as well as by communities. It may be used as well in political as in domestic affairs. Its universal applicability is a demonstration of its permanence and invincibility. It can be used alike by men, women, and children. It is totally untrue to say that it is a force to be used only by the weak so long as they are not capable of meeting violence by violence. This superstition arises from the incompleteness of the English expression. It is impossible for those who consider themselves to be weak to apply this force. Only those who realise that there is something in man which is superior to the brute nature in him, and that the latter always yields to it, can effectively be Passive Resisters. This force is to violence and, therefore, to all tyranny, all injustice, what light is to darkness. In politics, its use is based upon the immutable maxim that government of the people is possible only so long as they consent either consciously or unconsciously to be governed. We did not want to be governed by the Asiatic Act of 1907 of the Transvaal, and it had to go before this mighty force. Two courses were open to us—to use violence when we were called upon to submit to the Act, or to suffer the penalties prescribed under the Act, and thus to draw out and exhibit the force of the soul within us for a period long enough to appeal to the sympathetic chord in the governors or the law-makers. We have taken long to achieve what we set about striving for. That was because our Passive Resistance was not of the most complete type. All Passive Resisters do not understand the full value of the force, nor have we men who always from conviction refrain from violence. The use of this force requires the adoption of poverty, in the sense that we must be indifferent whether we have the wherewithal to feed or clothe ourselves. During the past struggle, all Passive Resisters, if any at all, were not prepared to go that length. Some again were only Passive Resisters so-called. They came without any conviction, often with mixed motives, less often with impure motives. Some even, whilst engaged in the struggle, would gladly have resorted to violence but for most vigilant supervision. Thus it was that the struggle became prolonged; for the exercise of the purest soul-force, in its perfect form, brings about instantaneous relief. For this exercise, prolonged training of the individual soul is an absolute necessity, so that a perfect Passive Resister has to be almost, if not entirely, a perfect man. We cannot all suddenly become such men, but, if my proposition is correct—as I know it to be correct—the greater the spirit of Passive Resistance in us, the better men we will become. Its use, therefore, is, I think; indisputable, and it is a force which, if it became universal, would revolutionise social ideals and do away with despotisms and the ever-growing militarism under which the nations of the West are groaning and are being almost crushed to death, and which fairly promises to overwhelm even the nations of the East. If the past struggle has produced even a few Indians who would dedicate themselves to the task of becoming Passive Resisters as nearly perfect as possible, they would not only have served themselves in the truest sense of the term, they would also have served humanity at large. Thus viewed, Passive Resistance is the noblest and the best education. It should come, not after the ordinary education in letters of children, but it should precede it. It will not be denied that a child, before it begins to write its alphabet and to gain worldly knowledge, should know what the soul is, what truth is, what love is, what powers are latent in the soul. It should be an essential of real education that a child should learn that, in the struggle of life, it can easily conquer hate by love, untruth by truth, violence by self-suffering. It was because I felt the force of this truth, that, during the latter part of the struggle, I endeavoured, as much as I could, to train the children at Tolstoy Farm and then at Phoenix along these lines, and one of the reasons for my departure to India is still further to realise, as I already do in part, my own imperfection as a Passive Resister, and then to try to perfect myself, for I believe that it is in India that the nearest approach to perfection is most possible.

Golden Number, Indian Opinion, 1914
196. SPEECH AT DURBAN BANQUET

[July 11, 1914]

Mr. Gandhi thanked those present for the hearty way they had received the toast. Amid all the kind words that had been spoken of him, there was a danger of developing a swollen head. When much praise was being bestowed, that was the time to beware. Speaking of the Settlement, he said that, whilst it was a settlement of the present difficulties, it was not a complete settlement. It was not a charter of full liberties. There were many questions which would require patience to solve. One of these was the licensing question. He had never been able to find a solution. It would need much tact and a sense of justice on the part of the Government and a desire to meet all the requirements of sanitary and building by-laws on the part of the Indian community. A certain class of Indians were born traders and if these people were to be driven from their means of livelihood, a serious position would arise. The value of the settlement lay in the struggle which preceded it—a struggle which quickened the conscience of South Africa—and the fact that there was a different tone prevailing to-day. (Hear, hear.) It would rest upon themselves to keep up that tone. That which they had gained was but a portion of that which they had to gain. Speaking generally of the opposition with which they were faced, he said that, although there was great prejudice, in his opinion, unreasonable and unjustifiable, there was also a spirit of justice behind that prejudice. He appealed to his fellow-countrymen to exercise patience and try to live down prejudices which were against them. They had not received all they were entitled to, but it depended very largely upon themselves whether they received in the future a full measure of justice. Referring to the Provincial barrier, he said that the Union was no Union for them so long as they were confined within their own Province. They appealed for and should have freedom of movement no matter to what Province they desired to go. In conclusion, Mr. Gandhi spoke of the British Constitution and ideals, and remarked that so long as both were retained as they were, and the traditions maintained then it was a good thing, but evil would be the day when the Constitution crumbled, and its ideal was changed.

1 A public dinner in honour of Gandhiji at Durban was attended by the Mayor, other prominent Europeans and about 30 Indians. Addresses were presented to Gandhiji and Miss Schlesin on behalf of the Farewell Committee. The Hon. Robert Jameson, J.P., presided.

2 The report in The Natal Mercury, 13-7-1914, added here: “Many things had been given up, and in return they had received only a portion.”

3 The Natal Mercury reported Gandhiji as having said here: “The trading question was a big one, and in order that the community should live in peace, it would be a question that would have to be settled on amicable and just lines.”
(Applause). Although he was going home to India which was dear to him, he assured them that he would never forget South Africa, and next to the homeland it would be nearest his thoughts. (Applause.)

Mr. Gandhi again rose, on behalf of Miss Schlesin, to thank the donors of the address and set of books presented to her. He said that Miss Schlesin had played a great part in the passive resistance movement. She had worked night and day and thrown herself heartily into the work. She had not hesitated even to court imprisonment but that was denied her. For many years she had acted as his secretary and rendered valuable assistance to him in his public work, but she was also no less than a sister to him. She had organised the Transvaal Indian Women’s Association and had acted, since its inauguration, as honorary secretary.¹

The Chairman (the Hon. R. Jameson) had recalled an instance which he (the speaker) thought he might have forgotten, and that was when the scene was laid in his office and he had approached him tremblingly, but also in the fullest faith, that he was a friend of the community, that he had guided him, as he well said, as a father would guide his child, in many things which he wanted to do as a humble burgess of that beautiful borough, the garden of South Africa. He had approached him first with that proposal of his in connection with the offer of forming an ambulance corps and he, naturally, as a soldier, had put a damper on his enthusiasm. He had uttered words of caution. The speaker had gone away chastened but he had gone to another friend. He did not know whether he was a soldier, but he knew that he was an Imperialist and also that he had a kindly corner in his heart for him—Mr. Laughton. His eyes beaming with delight, because he had never thought that the Indians could ever make any such offer, he had said, never mind what Jameson said, he should make the offer and he would see that the Government would probably accept it, but even if they did not, his countrymen would rise in the estimation of the Colonists of Natal. That sealed their fate. The offer was made and was rejected. He went over to Dr. Booth who was then in charge of St. Aidan’s Mission and asked him whether he would give them ambulance lessons. He formed the class and gave them those lessons for three or four weeks. They continued to have them. Most of those who made the offer were Colonial-born Indians. Just then they all had the fear that the enemy, now the friends of the British Empire, were descending upon Maritzburg and finally might take the Port of Durban also. The offer, was renewed, this time with better hope. Dr. Booth went over to the Bishop of Natal,² who intervened—and he would not take no for an answer—till at last the offer was not only accepted, but they were able to form a very decent stretcher-bearer Corps which, as they all knew, did its humble share. If he had ¹ The gathering was then addressed by the Mayor who said Gandhiji had done splendid work for the Indians not only in Durban but also in South Africa. He wished him godspeed on his voyage. The report which follows appeared in Indian Opinion, 23-9-1914.

² Vide "Indian Ambulance Corps", 13-12-1899
dealt with that matter in some detail, it was in order to render a humble tribute to the European friends and to say that at that time, as on many other occasions, there had been a perfect blending, a perfect harmony and a perfectly friendly tone, that at that time they were not without European sympathy and without European friends. With what a heavy heart, then, would he leave South Africa when he had all those rich memories. If he dwelt upon that incident, he also dwelt upon it in order to show to his countrymen that, if they always clamoured for their rights, if they always wanded to resist any encroachment upon their rights, they had also to recognize their obligations as members of a state. That was an occasion which offered itself for such a recognition on the part of the Indian community, and though they had been only a few thousand, he thought that they had done whatever it was in their power to do, and he wished to remind his countrymen of that occasion and wished them to understand that the settlement also carried with it obligations.1

Indian Opinion, 22-7-1914 & 23-9-1914

197. SPEECH AT VERULAM2

July 12, 1914

BROTHERS AND SISTERS,

When I agreed to come over to Verulam, I had no idea in my mind that I would receive an address. I came only to pay homage to my indentured brothers and to explain to them the facts under the new law. Moreover, a visit to this place is for me like going on a pilgrimage, for the Indian friends here played a great part in the recent strike; and in what wonderful a manner! When all the so-called leaders were resting in their private rooms or were busy making money, the indentured brethren of this place, the moment they happened to hear that a strike was on in Charlestown and elsewhere about the £3 tax, struck work too. They looked for no leaders. The leaders at Verulam, Tongaat and Isipingo were busy going round

1 Brief reports in The Transvaal Leader and The Star, both of 13-7-1914, said: “Mr. Gandhi made an important statement to the effect that Indian disabilities were only partially satisfied by the Relief Bill, and added that the question of equal status was bound to come up in the future. He was leaving South Africa for some years, but might return.”

2 Gandhiji addressed a farewell meeting of about 5,000 indentured and other Indians. Some representative Europeans also attended. Addresses and purses were presented to him on behalf of Tamils and other Indians from Verulam and Tongaat. E. H. Langston presided. Gandhiji first spoke in Hindi and then in English. For the speech in English, vide the following item.
collecting money. But spontaneously, the friends here struck work. This proves that poverty is real wealth. The poor are like kings. They will have their way. Be it here or in India or anywhere else, our salvation lies through poverty. The poor are the soul of a great movement like this.

As I accept the addresses that you have presented to me, I remember an injunction in the scriptures: “Man! Flee from a place where you find yourself being praised, or at least plug your ears with cotton-wool.” I keep turning over this injunction in my mind whenever I hear myself praised. But, on this occasion, I have not been able to act as enjoined. When one can do neither, the injunction says: “Ivā, if you cannot act as enjoined here, offer all the praise you receive to Lord Krishna.” And this is what I do. Obedience to such religious injunctions and the path of uprightness will ensure success in every undertaking. What I mean to say is that you are not right when you attribute our success to me. It was the strength of our indentured brothers that brought us success. It is they who have done something really great. Even if I and those near me had continued to be in gaol to this day, a settlement would not have come about as quickly as it did.

[Having explained that the tax, including the arrears, would not be collected henceforth, Gandhiji said:]

The prevalent impression that because of the repeal of the tax Indians would have to remain permanently under indenture or be repatriated is entirely mistaken. On the expiry of your contract, you can stay as free citizens. My own advice to you is that you should never re-indenture yourselves. You will, of course, have to complete the term of the present contract; no one can escape that. Those who become free can obtain passes from the Protector at Durban. Free Indians who remain here for three years will be treated as domiciled here. After completing three years, anyone who wands to go to India and return will be able to do so. Such a person should go to India at his own expense, and not approach the Government for the purpose. But those who have made up their minds not to return here will be able to claim from the Government the expenses for the journey to India.

I take this occasion of my visit to Victoria County to offer thanks to Mr. Marshall Campbell for help in securing the repeal of the tax. He worked indefatigably in the Senate to achieve that end, unmindful of his own interests.

1 The individual Self, conscious of its separate identity

Your feeling unhappy, as you say, at my going away binds me all the firmer to you in love. But I am leaving Phoenix behind me. You may approach Mr. West or the other inmates on any matter connected with the law or when you are up against any other difficulty. They will encourage you, advise you and work for you. They will not charge you a single penny and, in case they can be of no help, they will direct you to the right quarters. If ever they start demanding money from you at Phoenix, you should refuse even to turn your eyes in that direction again. I shall, of course, continue to work for you. You are under indenture with one person for five years, but I am under indenture with 300 millions for a life-time. I shall go on with that service and never displace you from my heart. All the money I have received here, I shall use for local purposes and the books for my own study.

It made me very unhappy to know that, during the recent strike, provoked no doubt by excessive cruelty or some other cause, you raised your hand in retaliation. Had I been with you, I would have had my head broken rather than allowed you to do what you did. For the future, however, I wish to put before you one important suggestion. If it should ever happen that the Government is harsh with you or that your employers ill-treat you, you should fearlessly strike work; sit yourselves down at one place, go hungry if they do not give you food, suffer yourselves to be abused and kicked and finally, if such be your lot, submit even to hanging or being shot dead, but do not waver in your faith in God. If you act thus, even the stoniest heart will melt. Such is the power of satyagraha. Have trust in it. This alone is pure satyagraha. It is a weapon which surpasses all weapons, all your clubs and other weapons. Cling to it—therefore; it will never fail you in times of need. Good-bye to you.

[From Gujarati]

Indian Opinion, 22-7-1914
Mr. Gandhi asked the chairman’s permission to speak in Hindustani first, and, then, in as brief as possible English, so that it might be interpreted into Tamil, which he did not speak. . . . He would not elaborate his Hindi remarks regarding the presentations and praise to himself. The money would be used for such public purposes as commanded themselves to him on reaching India, but preference would be given to South Africa. He then continued:

Please understand, my indentured countrymen, that it is wrong for you to consider that relief has been obtained because I or you have gone to gaol, but because you had the courage to give up your life and sacrifice yourselves, and, in this instance, I have also to tell you that many causes led to this result. I have to specially refer to the valuable assistance rendered by the Hon. Senator Marshall Campbell. I think that our thanks and my thanks are due to him for his work in, the Senate while the Bill was passing through it. The relief is of this nature: The £3 tax you will not have to pay, and arrears will be remitted. It does not mean that you are free from your present indentures. You are bound to go through your present indentures faithfully and honestly, but when these finish, you are just as free as any other free Indian under Act 25, 1891, and can receive the same protection as set forth in that Act. You are not bound to re-indenture or return to India. Discharge certificates will be issued to you free of charge. If you want to go to India and return therefrom, you must first spend three years in Natal as free Indians. If you, being poor, want assistance to enable you to go to India, you can get it on application to the Government; but, in that case, you would not be allowed to return. If you want to return fight shy of this assistance, and use your own money or borrow from your friends. If you re-indenture, you come under the same law — namely, 25 of 1891. My advice to you is: Do not re-indenture, but by all means serve your present masters under the common law of the county. Now, in the event of any occasion arising (which I hope it will not do), you will know what is necessary.

Victoria County has not been as free from violence as the Newcastle district was. You retaliated. I do not care whether it was under provocation or not, but you retaliated, and have used sticks and stones, and you have burnt sugarcane. That is not passive resistance. If I had been in your midst I would have repudiated you, and allowed rather my own head to be broken than allow a single stick or stone to be used. Passive resistance is a more powerful weapon than all the sticks, stones and gunpowder in the world. If imposed upon, you must suffer even unto death. That is passive resistance. If, therefore, I was an indentured Indian working for the Hon. Mr. Marshall Campbell, Mr. Saunders, or other employer, and if I found my treatment not just, I would not go to the Protector—I would go to my master and ask for justice; and if he would not grant it, I would say that I would remain there without food or drink until it was granted. I am quite sure that the stoniest heart will be melted by passive resistance. Let this sink deeply into yourselves. This is a sovereign and most effective remedy.

1 The speech was translated into Tamil.

If you want any advice or guidance, all I can suggest is that you go to Phoenix to Mr. West [or Mr. Chhaganlal Gandhi]¹, if you do not want to pay Mr. Langston, or any of his brothers in law. I have no doubt that if you go to Mr. Langston with a certificate from Mr. West [or Mr. Chhaganlal Gandhi], saying that you are too poor to pay a lawyer’s fee, that the lawyer in Mr. Langston will sleep, and the man within him will rise, and he will give you advice free of charge. Do not sign any document unless you first consult Phoenix, and Phoenix advises you to sign it. If Phoenix ever fails you, or wants a penny from you, shun Phoenix.

I shall now say my farewell to Verulam and you all. The scene before me will not fade in my memory, be the distance ever so great. May God help you all in your trouble. May your own conduct be such that God may find it possible to help you.

Mr. Gandhi then lowered his voice to address the Europeans near to him. He asked his European friends to forgive those Indians who during that awful time retaliated. He had no part or parcel in such retaliation but there were times in life when one lost self-control, and the brute in one arose, and one felt that might was right, and worked with the doctrine of “an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth”. He again asked for their forgiveness. He thought that sometimes the European employer was inclined to be selfish, and he asked them to bear in mind that the indentured Indians were human beings, with the same sentiments as themselves. They were not cattle, but had all the weaknesses of themselves, and all the virtues if they were only brought out. He made a plea for sanitary housing, and asked that the Europeans would look upon their indentured Indians as fellow-beings, and not as Asiatics who had nothing in common with them. The indentured Indian was a moral being.

¹ This addition is found in Golden Number, Indian Opinion, 1914.

Do not place him in surroundings in which he cannot rise from hideous immorality. He is not beyond reclaiming, but is capable of responding to every moral pressure and realising the highest moral height.¹

Let them credit them to the fullest extent with their weaknesses, as also at least with the possibility of all the virtues. Would they not then treat their Indian employees even as brothers? It was not enough that they were well treated as they well treated their cattle. It was not enough that they looked upon them with a kindly eye merely; but it was necessary that employers should have a much broader view of their own position, that they should think of their employees as fellow human beings and not as Asiatics who had nothing in common with them who were Europeans, and they would also respond to every attention that might be given to them. Then they would have an intelligent interest not merely in the material or physical well-being of their men, but in their moral well-being. They would look after their morality, after their children, after their education, after their sanitation, and, if they were herding together in such a manner that they could not but indulge in hideous immorality, that they would themselves recoil with horror from the very imagination that the men who were for the time being under their control should indulge in these things because they had been placed in these surroundings. Let them not consider that, because these men were drawn from the lowest strata of society, they were beyond reclamation. No, they would respond to every moral pressure that might be brought to bear upon them, and they will certainly realise the moral height that is possible for every human being, no matter who he is, no matter what tinge of colour his skin possesses.²

The Natal Mercury, 14-7-1914 and Golden Number, Indian Opinion, 1914

¹ What follows is an additional report found in Golden Number, Indian Opinion, 1914.

² S. D. Shroff then proposed a vote of thanks to the Chairman. A number of Indians insisted on prostrating themselves before Gandhiji. A photograph was taken and then Gandhiji and Kasturba left for Durban by the 1 o’clock special train.
199. SPEECH AT DURBAN MEETING

[July 12, 1914]

SISTERS AND BROTHERS.

The honour I have received today is the highest ever in my life, for your love has been simply beyond words, and seeing so many of my indentured brothers and sisters makes me happy indeed. You must have heard quite a few things about the Settlement, some of them, perhaps, false. The indentured friends will be able, on the expiry of their contracts, to buy land and settle down as free men. If, however, you are not sufficiently vigilant after my departure or if you weaken, the Government may even exploit the situation to its advantage. In that case, all that you did last year to win relief from your sufferings you must repeat and suffer again. You will not for that purpose need my presence or that of other leaders. If thus, in the hour of your difficulty, you turn to satyagraha instead of looking for leaders, success will assuredly be yours.

I shall now tell you something else. For Indians born here, this is their motherland. They have a better right here than other Indians. Their future is bound up with that of this country. I would ask them to be vigilant. They would do well to turn their attention to land instead of crowding lawyers’ or other offices. Besides, whenever as a community you find it necessary to oppose the authorities, you should employ the same weapon as you did during the last eight years to a successful end.

Brothers and sisters under indenture, yours is a very wretched state. I have had information from several sources throwing doubt on the value of the repeal of the £3 tax. The money thus saved [it has been suggested] will go to wine-dealers and goldsmiths. The labourers will be robbed at either place. This is quite true. To goldsmiths, of course, I can say: “Dear friends, give up robbing. It can have no good result. Do not reduce your brethren to a miserable state. Do not rob your poor kith and kin by mixing copper or brass with gold.” To the wine-dealers, I can say nothing. But I shall address myself to you. If you resolve that you will have no intoxicating drink, the wine-dealers will close down their shops. I have often seen numbers.
of men and women, lost in drink, engaged in street-brawls or going tipsily along public roads. I have been deeply moved by such sights. What a pity, I would say, that my brothers and sisters should be in such a state! Through this wretched habit of drinking, how low have we sunk in this country? Losing all sense, we have fallen into immorality and vice. In order that we may be freed from this condition, the young among us must come forward. They must reason and plead with the obtuse, entreat them and dissuade them from drinking. They must station themselves near wine-shops and turn away Indians who might approach these. If, in doing so, they have to suffer insults or assaults, they must put up with them, too. This course, if adopted, would help destroy the evil habit. You will all become better in the result. The whites here will also look on you with respect. Your pecuniary condition will improve as well, and you will be set on the right path. I, therefore, beg of you to shake off this evil habit.

I will never forget your love for me and it will be my chief duty in India to look after your interests. I am under indenture with you all for the rest of my life, so that I am not likely ever to put you out of my heart. May you, too, not forget me.

[From Gujarati]
Indian Opinion, 22-7-1914

200. PARTING MESSAGE

[DURBAN,
July 12, 1914]

Whether you are Hindus or Muslims, Parsis or Christians, work unitedly as Indians. Forget religious differences and never allow your heart to shrink. The community will retain the prestige it has gained only if all of you work together. If, during my stay in South Africa, I have harmed anyone, maybe unknowingly, please forgive me.

[From Gujarati]
Indian Opinion, 22-7-1914

---

1 Gandhiji gave this message at Durban on the eve of his departure for Johannesburg.
201. SPEECH AT JOHANNESBURG

[July 13, 1914]

Mr. Gandhi . . . declared that at last a settlement had been reached that was honourable to both sides, and in keeping with the dignity of passive resisters; for the Government had conceded every tittle of what had been asked for by Mr. Cachalia in his last letter¹ before the negotiations were interrupted last year. To have asked the Government to go further would, Mr. Gandhi declared, have been a breach of faith on the part of passive resisters, to which he could be no party.

Transvaal Leader, 14-7-1914

202. SPEECH AT FAREWELL BANQUET

JOHANNESBURG,
July 14, 1914

Mr. Gandhi said that they or circumstances had placed him that evening in a most embarrassing position. Hitherto those who had known him in Johannesburg had known him in the capacity of one of many hosts at gatherings of that kind, but that evening they had placed him in the unfortunate position of being a guest, and he did not know how he would be able to discharge that duty. For the other he thought long experience had fitted him, if he might say so with due humility, most admirably; but the present position was entirely new to him and Mrs. Gandhi, and he was exceedingly diffident as to how he was going to discharge the new duty that had been imposed upon him. So much had been said about Mrs. Gandhi and himself, their so-called devotion, their so-called self-sacrifice, and many other things. There was one injunction of his religion, and he thought it was true of all religions, and that was that, when one’s praises were sung, one should fly from those praises, and, if one could not do that, one should stop one’s ears, and if one could not do either of these things, one should dedicate everything that was said in connection with one to the

¹ On their arrival at Park Station, Gandhiji and Kasturba were greeted by a large crowd of Indians. They were seated in a cab drawn by enthusiastic admirers and taken in procession. Later Gandhiji addressed a meeting.

² Vide “Letter to Secretary for Interior”, 12-9-1913.

³ A farewell banquet was given in the Masonic Hall, Jeppe Street, in honour of Gandhiji, Kasturba and Kallenbach. They were presented with addresses on behalf of the British Indian Association, the Chinese Association, the Tamil Benefit Society, the Transvaal Indian Women’s Association and the Gujarati, the Mahomedan and the Parsee communities. Offering his four sons to Gandhiji, C. K. T. Naidoo said: “On behalf of myself and my wife, I have the honour to present these four boys to be servards of India.”
Almighty, the Divine Essence, which pervaded everyone and everything in the Universe, and he hoped that Mrs Gandhi and he would have the strength to dedicate all that had been said that evening to that Divine Essence.

Of all the precious gifts that had been given to them, those four boys were the most precious, and probably Mr. Chamney could tell them something of the law of adoption in India and what Mr. and Mrs. Naidoo, both of them old gaol-birds, had done. They had gone through the ceremony of adoption, and they had surrendered their right to their four children and given them (Mr. and Mrs. Gandhi) the charge. He did not know that they were worthy to take charge of those children. He could only assure them that they would try to do their best. The four boys had been his pupils when he had been conducting a school for Passive Resisters at Tolstoy Farm and later on at Phoenix. Then when Mrs. Naidoo had sought imprisonment, the boys had been taken over to Johannesburg, and he thought that he had lost those four pearls, but the pearls had returned to him. He only hoped that Mrs. Gandhi and he would be able to take charge of the precious gift.

Johannesburg was not a new place to him. He saw many friendly faces there, many who had worked with him in many struggles in Johannesburg. He had gone through much in life. A great deal of depression and sorrow had been his lot, but he had also learnt during all those years to love Johannesburg even though it was a Mining Camp. It was in Johannesburg that he had found his most precious friends. It was in Johannesburg that the foundation for the great struggle of Passive Resistance was laid in the September of 1906. It was in Johannesburg that he had found a friend, a guide, and a biographer in the late Mr. Doke. It was in Johannesburg that he had found in Mrs. Doke, a loving sister, who had nursed him back to life when he had been assaulted by a countryman who had misunderstood his mission and who misunderstood what he had done. It was in Johannesburg that he had found a Kallenberg, a Polak, a Miss Schlesin, and many another who had always helped him, and had always cheered him and his countrymen. Johannesburg, therefore, had the holiest associations of all the holy associations that Mrs. Gandhi and he would carry back to India, and, as he had already said on many another platform, South Africa, next to India, would be the holiest land to him and to Mrs. Gandhi and to his children, for, in spite of all the bitterness they bore those life-long companions. It was in Johannesburg again that the European Committee had been formed, when Indians were going through the darkest stage in their history, presided over then, as it still was, by Mr. Hosken. It was last, but not least, Johannesburg that had given Valiamma, that young girl, whose picture rose before him even as he spoke, who had died in the cause of truth. Simple-minded in faith—she had not the knowledge that he had, she did not know what Passive Resistance was, she did not know what it was the community would gain, but she was simply taken up with unbounded enthusiasm for her people—she went to gaol, came out of it a wreck, and within a few days died. It was Johannesburg again that produced a Nagappen and Narayansamy, two lovely youths hardly out of their teens, who also died. But both Mrs. Gandhi and he stood living before them. He and Mrs. Gandhi had worked in the lime-light; those others had worked behind the scenes, not knowing where they were going, except this, that what they were doing was right and proper, and, if any praise was due anywhere at all, it was due to those three who died. They had had the name of Hurbatsingh given to them. He (the speaker) had had the privilege of serving imprisonment with him. Hurbatsingh was 75 years old. He was an ex-indentured Indian, and when he (the speaker) asked him why he had come there, that he had gone there to seek his grave, the brave man replied, “What does it matter? I know what you are fighting for. You have not to pay the £3 tax, but my fellow ex-indentured Indians have to pay that tax and what more glorious death could I meet?” He had met that death in the gaol at Durban. No wonder if Passive Resistance had fired and quickened the conscience of South Africa! And, therefore, whenever he had spoken, he had said that, if the Indian community had gained anything through this settlement, it was certainly due to Passive Resistance; but it was certainly not due to Passive Resistance alone. He thought that the cablegram that had been read that evening showed that they had to thank that noble Viceroy, Lord Hardinge, for his great effort. He thought, too, that they had to thank the Imperial Government, who, during the past few years, in season and out of season, had been sending despatches after despatches to General Botha, and asking him to consider their standpoint—the Imperial standpoint. They had to thank also the Union Government for the spirit of justice they had adopted at that time. They had, too, to thank the noble members of both Houses of the Legislature who had made those historic speeches and brought about the settlement; and, lastly, they had to thank the Opposition also for their co-operation with the Government in bringing about the passage of the Bill, in spite of the jarring note produced by the Natal Members. When one considered all these things, the service that he and Mrs. Gandhi might have rendered could be only very little. They were but two out of many instruments that had gone to make this settlement. And what was that settlement? In his humble opinion, the value of the settlement, if they were to examine it, would consist not in the intrinsic things they had received, but in the sufferings and the sorrows long-drawn-out that were necessary in order to achieve those things. If an outsider were to come there and find that there was a banquet given to two humble individuals for the humble part they played in a settlement which freed indentured Indians from a tax which they should never have been called upon to pay, and if he were told also that some redress were given in connection with their marriages, and that their wives who were lawfully married to them according to their own religions had not hitherto been recognized as their wives, but by this settlement those wives were recognized as valid wives according to the law of South Africa, that outsider would laugh, and consider that those Indians, or those Europeans who had joined them in having a banquet, and giving all those praises and; so on, must be a parcel of fools. What was there to gloat over in having an intolerable burden removed which might have been removed years ago? What was there in a lawful wife’s being recognized in a place like South Africa?

230 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
But, proceeded Mr. Gandhi, he concurred with Mr. Duncan in an article he wrote some years ago, when he truly analysed the struggle, and said that behind that struggle for concrete rights lay the great spirit which asked for an abstract principle, and the fight which was undertaken in 1906, although it was a fight against a particular law, was a fight undertaken in order to combat the spirit that was seen about to overshadow the whole of South Africa, and to undermine the glorious British Constitution, of which the Chairman had spoken so loftily that evening, and about which he (the speaker) shared his views. It was his knowledge, right or wrong, of the British Constitution which bound him to the Empire. Tear that Constitution to shreds and his loyalty also would be torn to shreds. Keep that Constitution intact, and they held him bound a slave to that Constitution. He had felt that the choice lay for himself and his fellow-countrymen between two courses, when this spirit was brooding over South Africa, either to sunder themselves from the British Constitution, or to fight in order that the ideals of that Constitution might be preserved—but only the ideals. Lord Amphill had said, in a preface to Mr. Doke’s book, that the theory of the British Constitution must be preserved at any cost if the British Empire was to be saved from the mistakes that all the previous Empires had made. Practice might bend to the temporary aberration through which local circumstances might compel them to pass, it might bend before unreasoning or unreasonable prejudice, but theory once recognized could never be departed from, and this principle must be maintained at any cost. And it was that spirit which had been acknowledged now by the Union Government, and acknowledged how nobly and loftily. The words that General Smuts so often emphasised still rang in his ears. He had said, “Gandhi, this time we want no misunderstanding, we want no mental or other reservations, let all the cards be on the table, and I want you to tell me wherever you think that a particular passage or word does not read in accordance with your own reading,” and it was so. That was the spirit in which he approached the negotiations. When he remembered General Smuts of a few years ago, when he told Lord Crewe that South Africa would not depart from its policy of racial distinction, that it was bound to retain that distinction, and that, therefore, the sting that lay in this Immigration Law would not be removed, many a friend, including Lord Amphill, asked whether they could not for the time being suspend their activity. He had said “No.” If they did that, it would undermine his loyalty, and even though he might be the only person, he would still fight on. Lord
Amphill had congratulated him, and that great nobleman had never deserted the cause \textsuperscript{1} \textit{Vide} “Lord Amphill’s Introduction to “M.K. Gandhi: An Indian Patriot in South Africa”, 26-8-1909.

even when it was at its lowest ebb, and they saw the result that day. They had not by any means to congratulate themselves on a victory gained. There was no question of a victory gained, but the question of the establishment of the principle that, so far as the Union of South Africa at least was concerned, its legislation would never contain the racial taint, would never contain the colour disability. The practice would certainly be different. There was the Immigration Law—it recognized no racial distinctions, but in practice they had arranged, they had given a promise, that there should be no undue influx from India as to immigration. That was a concession to present prejudice. Whether it was right or wrong was not for him to discuss then. But it was the establishment of that principle which had made the struggle so important in the British Empire, and the establishment of that principle which had made those sufferings perfectly justifiable and perfectly honourable, and he thought that, when they considered the struggles from that standpoint, it was a perfectly dignified thing for any gathering to congratulate itself upon such a vindication of the principles of the British Constitution. One word of caution he wished to utter regarding the Settlement. The Settlement was honourable to both parties. He did not think there was any room left for misunderstanding, but whilst it was final in the sense that it closed the great struggle, it was not final in the sense that it gave to Indians all that they were entitled to. There was still the Gold Law which had many a sting in it. There was still the Licensing Law throughout the Union, which also contained many a sting. There was still a matter which the Colonial-born Indians especially could not understand or appreciate, namely, the watertight compartments in which they had to live; whilst there was absolutely free inter-communication and inter-migration between the Provinces for Europeans, Indians had to be cooped up in their respective Provinces. Then there was undue restraint on their trading activity. There was the prohibition as to holding landed property in the Transvaal, which was degrading, and all these things took Indians into all kinds of undesirable channels. These restrictions would have to be removed. But for that, he thought, sufficient patience would have to be exercised. Time was now at their disposal, and how wonderfully the tone had been changed! And here he had been told in Cape Town, and he believed it implicitly, the spirit of Mr. Andrews had pervaded all those statesmen and leading men whom he saw. He came and went away after a brief period, but he certainly fired those whom he saw with a sense of their duty to the Empire of which they were members. But, in any case, to whatever circumstances that healthy tone was due, it had not escaped him. He had seen it amongst European friends whom he met at Cape Town; he had seen it more fully in Durban, and this time it had been his privilege to meet many Europeans who were perfect strangers even on board the train, who had come smilingly forward to congratulate him on what they had called a great victory. Everywhere he had noticed that healthy tone. He asked European friends to continue that activity, either through the European Committee or through other channels, and to give his fellow-countrymen their help and extend that fellow-feeling to them also, so that they might be able to work out their own salvation.

To his countrymen he would say that they should wait and nurse the Settlement, which he considered was all that they could possibly and reasonably have expected, and that they would now live to see, with the co-operation of their European friends, that what was promised was fulfilled, that the administration of the existing laws was just, and that vested rights were respected in the administration; that after they had nursed these things, if they cultivated European public opinion, making it possible for the Government of the day to grand a restoration of the other rights of which they had been deprived, he did not think that there need be any fear about the future. He thought that, with mutual co-operation, with mutual goodwill, with due response on the part of either party, the Indian community need never be a source of weakness to that Government or to any Government. On the contrary, he had full faith in his countrymen that, if they were well treated, they would always rise to the occasion and help the Government of the day. If they had insisted on their rights on many an occasion, he hoped that the European friends who were there would remember that they had also discharged the responsibilities which had faced them.

And now it was time for him to close his remarks and say a few words of farewell only. He did not know how he could express those words. The best years of his life had been passed in South Africa. India, as his distinguished countryman, Mr. Gokhale, had reminded him; had become a strange land to him. South Africa he knew, but not India. He did not know what impelled him to go to India, but he did know that the parting from them all, the parting from the European friends who had helped him through thick and thin, was a heavy blow, and one he was least able to bear; yet he knew he had to part from them. He could only say farewell and ask them to give him their blessing, to pray for them that their heads might not be turned by the praise they had received, that they might still know how to do their duty to the best of their ability, that they might still learn that first, second, and last should be the approbation of their own conscience, and that, then, whatever might be due to them would follow in its own time.¹

"Golden Number, Indian Opinion, 1914"

¹ Kallenbach then thanked the gathering. Miss Schlesin was given an address. The proceedings concluded with a speech by Dr. Krause.
I am going to India for good. I am going with the intention of never returning, and if ever I have to return to South Africa or leave India, it will be owing to circumstances beyond my control, and at present beyond my conception.

The Settlement I consider to be entirely honourable to both parties. I believe both General Botha and General Smuts have acted most justly. There has been no mental reservation whatever. The one desire on the part of General Smuts was that there should be no misunderstanding left, and he endeavoured to appreciate the Indian standpoint at every stage of the interviews that he gladly gave me, even when he was pressed with work.

And I do feel that nothing could have been finer than the co-operation that the Opposition gave whole-heartedly.

In fact, the whole spirit of the debate, both in the Senate and the Assembly, in spite of a jarring note from Natal, was of a highly Imperial order. And it will be a thousand pities if either my own countrymen, by excessive agitation, or Europeans spoil that tone and destroy the good effect produced by the Settlement. It respects all the reasonable demands of the Europeans with reference to immigration and such other matters, and it concedes to the Indians entirely what they have been fighting for and suffering for during the last eight years. Throughout my travelling I have noticed a very exemplary attitude on the part of European friends, many of whom have been really strangers to the question, and certainly strangers to me personally.

[REPORTER:] Is the struggle really at an end—will Indians here not fight, constitutionally no doubt, for political equality?

We have never asked for political equality. We do not hope to get that.

You want the vote?

No; my view on that would be to leave the question of the political vote severely alone, and my firm conviction is that passive resistance is infinitely superior to the vote. I have never asked for the vote. What I always have insisted on was the removal of racial distinctions, not for equality.

Mr. Gandhi then went on to recall some of the more remarkable incidents in his career, particularly the march of the Indian strikers into the Transvaal in Nove-ember last year which he described as his most wonderful experience in South Africa.

Through that march, I learned to love human nature more, and to appreciate that no matter whether the human spirit flourished under European or Indian, under the Western or the Eastern sky, it could respond in an equal measure to the same chord.

In recounting his experiences on the march, Mr. Gandhi did not dwell on the hardships; these he seemed to have forgotten. But he recalled the little acts of kindness that were done by obscure individuals. There was the station master who brought him a glass of milk and a couple of boiled eggs, and many other delicacies to tempt a starving man.

It seemed rank ingratitude to refuse them, but I kept to my vow, and I explained to the station master that I seldom ate eggs, and could not taste the milk and the other nice things he had brought, because I had to accept the same treatment as the rank and file. He seemed hurt;: and I was sorry, but I was not ungrateful, and I hope the kind soul understood.

At another place the proprietor of an hotel said to me: “You are shivering. Come to my hotel, and I will put you up.” I thanked him, but declined, and, pointing to my companions, I said: “They too feel the cold, and are shivering.” “Oh! It is not a case of putting you on the verandah,” he said, “I will give you a room.” His kind offer I was obliged to decline.

At another place we reached, a woman who ran a small store placed everything she had at our disposal. I remonstrated, but she would have her way. She said: “Though you are all Indians, you are suffering and I hope I have enough of the old British sense of sympathy left in me to help you.” At Charlestown and Newcastle the whole community helped us, and we helped them. There was no pilfering, no drunkenness.

I explained to the men before they started that they would win, not by putting their sticks over the shoulders of others, but over their own. It took them some time to see it, but that was the condition on which I allowed them to come with me. So our army kept on its way. We rose before the sun in the morning and did the best of our day’s march before food passed our lips. Then we halted for a small ration of bread and sugar. It was, you will admit, a wonderful thing for two thousand men to have marched so far without violating the law, without stealing or rioting.

As to the treatment of himself personally, and of his family during those troubled times, Mr. Gandhi could not find words to express his appreciation.¹

The Transvaal Leader, 15-7-1914

204. LETTER TO INDIANS IN SOUTH AFRICA

[JOHANNESBURG,
Before July 15, 1914]

DEAR BROTHER OR SISTER,

On the eve of my departure from South Africa, I should like to leave a brief message in writing.

There has been no limit to the love I have received from the Indians in this country. I am sure those who have given such love will always prosper. I hear it said that our community is ungrateful. My heart tells me that this is said in ignorance and impatience. Were the Indian people really so, I would have felt no pride in being called a son of India, nor could I recite with utter sincerity the sublime poem, India, a refuge of all those that suffer.

Though I have had more than human love from Indians, I also know that there are some of them who believe themselves, and are taken by others, to be my enemies. For me, however, they are no enemies. Those who speak ill of us sometimes prove to be our true friends. I do not consider at the moment whether this is so in my case or not. I only want to show that I am not free from responsibility for their speaking ill of me. If I had perfect love for them, they would never have bitter things to say against me. Such love, however, is hardly possible for man. Whilst I lack it, I shall bear their hostility; I shall not regard them as my enemies.

¹ In the course of his report, the representative of The Transvaal Leader summed up thus his own estimate of Gandhiji: “So it is humanly certain that the most arresting figure in the Indian community in South Africa today is to say good-bye to a country in which he has spent many years, crowded with experience and exertion, his work on behalf of his countrymen at last crowned with success. When a man has been imprisoned so often that were his offences not merely political he would have qualified as an ‘habitual’, when he has times without number endured fatigue, and fasted with a smile, when he has moved steadily on over obstacles that might daunt the bravest, to the goal on which his eye has been fixed, you might picture him physically as an Apollo, and imagine his heart made of the fibre that belongs to martyrs. In the qualities of the heart and of the soul you may believe the best of Gandhi, but you would wonder, did you see him, that so frail a figure could house so vigorous a character.”

There are easy and effective measures which will enable Indians to live in peace in this country. All religious andagonism, as that one is a Hindu or a Muslim, a Christian or a Parsi, should be forgotten. Let there be no provincial distinctions such as Bengalis, Madrasis, Gujaratis, Punjabis, etc. All ideas of high and low which divide men into Brahmns, Kshatriyas, Vaishyas and Shudras should be abandoned. Indians are all subject to the same laws; if so, how can we fight them disunited?

We need must observe truth. I know it is futile to expect, in this land, that everyone will be perfectly truthful; it should, however, be possible for us to adhere to truth, by and large. Otherwise, Indians cannot live on here as Indians, or human beings.

Whenever there are hardships, they will have to be fought courageously. Should Indians refuse to fight them, blinded by self-interest or because of weakness, they will assuredly be overwhelmed by disaster.

If the leaders are selfish, greedy, lazy, given to lying and licentious, the common people will make no progress. And so, should the latter remain backward, the responsibility will be that of the leaders and theirs, too, will be the guilt.

Indians from Bombay are often rude to those hailing from Calcutta and Madras and indifferent to their feelings. The term *colcha*¹ has still not gone out of use in our language. Such ways are fraught with danger and, if not abandoned, will assuredly bring the community to grief. The people from Bombay know very well that their compatriots from Calcutta and Madras are far more numerous than they. Even from the point of view of self-interest, therefore, it is necessary that we show them due regard.

Even good Indians show contempt for Colonial-born Indians. I have believed, and still believe, that they are wrong in doing so. Colonial-born Indians do have some defects; but, then, who has not? They have also many fine qualities. It is worth noting that, if the satyagraha campaign has been a glorious performance, it was because of the sacrifices of Indians born in this country. Large numbers of such Indians, and many women too, have gone to gaol. To help forward any Colonial-born Indians, either educated or uneducated, will be an act of piety on the part of the community meriting a reward, and I am sure it will be duly rewarded, for such has been my experience.

¹ Probably, a corrupt form of “coolie”

We are very dirty and some of us behave so abjectly, because of greed, that the whites feel disgusted, as they well might. If the leaders exert themselves, they can end all the filthiness that we notice around us. That there should be too many people sleeping in small rooms, that these should hold stores of foodgrains, fruit, etc., and never be washed, that lavatories should be kept unclean, that bedsteads should never be aired in the sun, that the windows should never be opened, that the place should never be dusted, that sleeping, cooking, bathing, relaxing, should all be done in one and the same room—this is pathetic indeed. This way we turn ourselves into denizens of hell in this very world. This state of affairs must change.

Gold-smuggling by members of the community is on the increase. Some Indians want to get rich quick. They will get into trouble and disgrace the name of the community as a whole. I wish they would rein themselves in.

As some Tamils and Calcuttamen have become slaves to the wicked habit of drink, so have some Gujaratis too. The Indian who weans them from this will be a man of noble soul indeed. Indian businessmen can exercise a good influence, if they mean to, over these helpless brethren whose state is so pitiable.

As I understand it, the Settlement which has taken place is a charter of our freedom. We could not have accepted less than what it gives. More it is not possible to secure at present. It is my emphatic advice, therefore, that every effort should be made to preserve what has been obtained and to resist the Government if it seeks to take away anything from it. If it places upon the terms of the Settlement a construction different from ours, or mine, or if a court does so and the Government then refuses to make any modifications, there will be cause for friction and the Government will again invite the charge of breach of promise.

The main difficulty for the present will be regarding the Dealers’ Licenses Act. Even in this matter, however, redress will be easier wherever things are under the jurisdiction of the Union Government. Where, on the other hand, licenses are granted by the municipalities, things will be very difficult. The remedy for this is to put up a fight whenever licenses are taken away, apply to courts and petition the Government, hold meetings and pass resolutions. If, at the end of all this, there should be no redress, there will be nothing for it but to resort to satyagraha. This is easy to offer in the matter of licenses. If only the hawkers show courage, the struggle for licences could be won. It is possible that traders will have to suffer for some time. I hope they will not fail to do their duty at the critical moment. We must demand complete freedom to trade, and ought to get it. Everything depends on the traders.

The Gold Law in the Transvaal is a very oppressive measure. The settlement secures to all the right to carry on business wherever they are doing so at present. People can shift their business from one place to another in the same town, but they cannot go over to another town. So much can be taken as included in the clause on “existing rights”. If the Government permits less than this, that will be a breach of the terms of the Settlement. To secure more than this, independent efforts will be necessary, and I don’t think these can be made at present. Great care will have to be exercised to see that they do not keep us in the dark and pass complicated laws on these and related subjects. In regard to the Gold Law also, it should be easy to offer satyagraha against it, if it is administered with excessive severity.

As regards the Transvaal Law of 1885, I don’t see any possibility of our being able to touch it at present.

On the issue of marriages, it is not possible to secure anything more for the present. To waste efforts on that will interfere with other important tasks. There is no better law elsewhere than the one which has been enacted.

We need not fight for votes or for freedom of entry for fresh immigrants from India. I think we shall have to rest content at present with the removal of the taint [of racial discrimination] from the law.

However, if the Indian community is strong and itself enterprising, if it maintains unity, truthfulness and courage, the following expectations may be realized in 15 years:

2. Full rights of ownership of land in all Provinces and
3. Freedom of movement from one Province to another.

In order to bring all this about, it will be necessary to have the Licensing Acts, the Gold Laws, the Township Act, Law 3 of 1885 and the Immigration Act amended, for which purpose public opinion will have to be cultivated among the whites of South Africa. This is not difficult to do.

The community need not be anxious on account of the indentured labourers. There is nothing in the new law which can be interpreted to mean that the Government may send them away. I appeal to all Indians to help Mr. Polak and seek his help. No one is as well informed about our question as he. He has regard for the community, is honest, has ability and is full of enthusiasm. It is my earnest request to Indians in all Provinces that they utilize Mr. Polak’s services and follow his advice. Others will not be able to draft petitions as well as he can. He will not accept money for any public work, which means that he will remain in South Africa only if he can pay his way by his professional work; otherwise, he will leave for England. I know that he still does not earn enough to meet his needs and, therefore, I earnestly appeal to the Transvaal Indians to entrust their legal affairs to Mr. Polak.

Indian Opinion is run only for the service of the community. So is Phoenix. Those who have settled there have not done so with the intention of making money. They draw only as much as they need for a simple and plain life. It will be so much of a loss to the community if it does not utilize the services of those who are working in this spirit. Mr. Omar Hajee Jhaveri and Parsee Rustomjee are now the owners of the Phoenix lands and its managing trustees in South Africa. The community can get all information about Phoenix through them or even directly. I request every Indian to understand the objects of Phoenix. I cannot help saying that it is a great field for anyone aspiring to serve India. This, some may indeed feel, is rather improper of me to say in view of my close association with Phoenix; it is, however, my sincere belief.

Though I am leaving for the motherland, I am not likely to forget South Africa. I should like friends who may have occasion to go to India to come and see me there. I do intend, of course, to work in India in regard to the disabilities here. And I shall be able to work better if the people in South Africa ask for my services. I think the expenses to be incurred in India on this work by way of stationery, postage, printing, etc., should be met from here. The money I have been given I propose to use only for this purpose.

Above all, I wish to say that it is up to the community to win its freedom and that its ultimate weapon, an irresistible one, is satyagraha.

If I have harmed any Indian, knowingly or unknowingly, if I have been the cause of pain to anyone, I crave God’s forgiveness and theirs.

I am, of course, a satyagrahi and I hope always to remain one, but in December last I fell more under the spell of indenture. Since the term girmitio (“indentured labourer”) is already in use about me in Gujarati.

I am,
As ever,
The community’s indentured labourer,
Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: S. N. 6020

205. TRIBUTE TO PASSIVE RESISTANCE MARTYRS1

Braamfontein,
July 15, 1914

Mr. Gandhi said he thought that, in Johannesburg, among their intimate European friends, Mrs. Phillips was the oldest, and therefore, if they considered her to be the mother of the family, they only gave her her due. Mrs. Phillips had set the seal upon that morning by unveiling those two monuments. He knew that he was uttering a truism when he said that Mrs. Phillips had taken the trouble, but it was not the physical trouble. What he wished to refer to was that Mrs. Phillips had come there with a heart just as sore as any Indian’s and he hoped that the noble words that she had uttered would go down into the hearts of every one of them. He personally had never felt tired of repeating his sentiments again and again in connection with that dear sister—a daughter to her, to him a sister—and that dear brother Nagappen, and whenever he had thought of those two and the neglected grave of Narayansamy, whose bones were now resting at Lourenco Marques, he had felt the littleness of the service rendered by all of them. Mrs. Polak had just reminded him how lightly they had treated the sickness of the girl whose body lay under that cold stone. He recalled also a scene when he left Durban, and when he had paid a hurried visit, with Mr. Polak to see Valliamma—that was a most affecting scene. She was just coming out. Her mother was there. Her mother, most loving and attentive, thought that she must hurry forward Valliamma. He felt guilty that there was any hurry at the time, but she was brought out. She was almost in a swoon. They three carried her in the best manner they could. There was no feather mattress, no stretcher, in the room where she lay, simply the wooden floor; not that they were cruel to her, but their discipline was so rigorous and exacting that those who were in immediate charge, as Thambi Naidoo, would not think of having any other things or taking any other things. That was her lot inside and outside prison, that was her spirit, that was the spirit also, he well remembered, of the young lady by her side in the same condition, who had just been delivered of a child. He did not know whether they should not now consider themselves criminally guilty. At the same time he did not know because, as Passive Resisters, they held the soul immortal, and the body merely subject to the spirit, and if the body might be lost for the perfection of the soul, they held it was the right thing. Valliamma herself, he fancied, if he knew anything of that soul, would have spurned the idea of being treated differently from her other sisters. Those scenes would never be effaced from his memory. Nagappen’s face he could not recall so vividly as Valliamma’s, but he knew full well how that brave lad had suffered in that horrible camp prison, exposed to the most severe weather, and how unnecessary it had been to send him there. But the desire then had been not to do something for Passive Resisters but to bend their spirit. But today they recognized the steel of which Nagappen’s heart was made. He came out of prison a wreck, but he said. What did it matter? He had to die but once, and he was ready to go to gaol again if it was necessary for him to do so, and so that undaunted spirit died. But yet they were not dead, for they would live, and live for ever in the memory of every Indian. It was a matter for mourning that they were no longer with them to set them a noble example, but when he thought of it a little more deeply, it was a matter for rejoicing that they had amongst them such three noble souls who had usefully lived out their lives for the sake of truth—he would not say for their country. Little they knew of their country. He believed they were perfect strangers to it—they were Colonial-born. They had no idea of their Motherland; to them South Africa was their Motherland; but this they knew, that it was a sacred fight, a religious fight, a fight for truth. They lived for the truth, and for it they died, and therefore he felt that they had every cause for rejoicing and instead of appreciating them by stones, they should erect in their own hearts, every one of them, imperishable memorials, and, whenever they felt like succumbing to temptation, remind themselves of the imperishable names of these three. Then, indeed, would they have done honour to their graves in the true spirit and then only would it have been worth Mrs. Phillips’ while to have come there all the way to perform that ceremony.

1 Gandhiji attended at 11.30 a.m. the ceremonial unveiling of memorial tablets erected in honour of Nagappen and Valliamma in Braamfontein cemetery. Kasturba, Miss Schlesin and Mrs. Polak were among those present. Gandhiji spoke after Mrs. Phillips, wife of Rev. Charles Phillips, the Acting Chairman of the European Committee, had unveiled the memorials.

Indian Opinion, 29-7-1914

206. SPEECH AT TRANSVAAL INDIAN WOMEN’S ASSOCIATION

JOHANNESBURG,
July 15, 1914

Mr. Gandhi said that they had spoken of him that day as a Protector and a Guru but he felt that he was undeserving of either title, but if they would accept him as their devoted brother, it was the highest honour that he could claim from them, and he knew that it would be a precious privilege to him to think of them, wherever he might be, as his sisters. And as their co-worker and fellow-Passive Resister, but with greater experience than they possessed, he could only tell them to continue the work they had commenced, and that the work they had done was noble. They should hold together as one woman, and, if the call to duty came again, they should not fail to respond and should not fail to do even as Valliamma had done. They should not forget Mrs. Vogl. She had done much selfless work. They could still receive her assistance in taking sewing classes and much other work. Her companionship too was worth catering for. She was a true woman who felt for them. She would do more if she could, and she would never fail to do all she could. They owed her a great deal, but the best honour that they could pay Mrs. Vogl was not to pile gifts upon her, but to follow her advice and receive her assistance, which she was most anxious to give in connection with classes and such other matters. In India sisters gave their blessings to their departing brothers, whether younger or older than they. He hoped that his sisters there would give him their blessing, no matter in what part of the world he might be placed.

Indian Opinion, 5-8-1914

---

1 The meeting of the Transvaal Indian Women’s Association was held in the Ebenezer Church Hall to bid Gandhiji farewell. Mrs. Rama Moodaley, President of the Association, was in the chair.

2 She conducted classes for Indian women and took keen interest in the Indian cause.
Before answering the questions, Mr. Gandhi, who was applauded by a section, assured them that he appreciated it as a high honour that they had invited him, because he knew that some of them were opposed to the Settlement and had moved heaven and earth that the settlement should not become final. He had not despaired of pleasing even these countrymen of his. The first question was on whose authority he had accepted or arranged this settlement with the Government. It was on the authority of the general body of the Indians throughout South Africa, because when the final letter of Mr. Cachalia was sent, it was sent in the name of the British Indian community. He was the secretary and carried on the negotiations, and when he found that there was nothing he had to abandon but that he could get all, he did not consider it necessary to come to them again. It was not possible for any public man to do otherwise. If he had done less he would have been an unworthy servant. He did his duty when he carried out the full terms of that letter. Of course, General Smuts wanted this Settlement accepted by the community in general—he did not want to leave any

---

1 Gandhiji addressed a crowded Muslim meeting at the Hamidia Islamic Society Hall, convened for the purpose of expressing Muslims’ dissatisfaction over the Settlement. Essop Ismail Mia presided. Gandhiji’s speech largely comprised statements made in reply to various questions put to him by the Chairman of the meeting and by other speakers. Rand Daily Mail, 16-7-1914, reported Mia’s observations as follows: “The Chairman whose remarks were interpreted—sometimes with the aid of Mr. Gandhi himself—asked on whose authority the compromise was made with the Government. He next referred to the funds of the plague hospital, and wished Mr. Gandhi to say what had become of the funds. Ever since the commencement the Indian Association had subscribed, and he wished the accounts to come before the public, and that Mr. Gandhi should explain the position. Four points had been put forward, and Mr. Gandhi, according to his view, had gained only one and a half. In the marriage problem a question had cropped up which required explanation, affecting the Mahommedans. He would explain to his merchant friends what they had gained during their eight years’ struggle. Mr. Gandhi had said in Durban that no man could satisfy everybody. He wished to say that Mr. Gandhi had left them with the battle to be fought all over again. As regards the marriage question, not only the Mahommedans, but the Hindus also had said that they had gained nothing.”

2 The Transvaal Leader report of the same date has here the words: “... without a word of protest. It was supported by all throughout.”

3 The Transvaal Leader report has: “... he did not think there was any need to hesitate as to whether he should keep it open or conclude the agreement. He had abandoned nothing, but gained everything.”
loophole. In the series of meetings so far there had been as much unanimity as possible. The next question was what had they gained out of the Settlement? He suggested that they had gained everything they had asked for. They had gained to the fullest extent and in the most liberal manner.

The next question was what had he done with the hospital moneys? There had been some misunderstanding about this. The origin of this fund was as follows: The stands in the old location had been expropriated, and he acted on behalf of certain claimants against the Town Council. He did not charge the full legal fees, which, taxed, would have amounted to £40 or £50. He agreed to charge so much a stand, and told them that he did not want it all for himself. £5 he would use for his own purposes, and set the balance aside as the nucleus of a hospital fund. He had ideas at the time of going to England, of qualifying as a doctor, and coming out again to minister to their needs; but those were castles in the air. There were no public funds—no charity. The whole of that fund had been used up in the course of the passive resistance movement for public purposes and South African public purposes; but he was unable to hold himself responsible to the public in connection with those funds; but even a child could come and look at his public dealings.

With regard to the accounts of the British Indian Association, he had also to inform them that, every time they had held a committee meeting, he had submitted accounts of disbursements. Later on he had several funds—the anti-Indian law fund, the passive resistance fund, and the funds from Bombay. All these he had accounted for, some in the columns of the Press. He was not taking the books away, and at any time they could ask Mr. Polak as to the disposal of the funds. So long as they were not unreasonable, they could certainly inspect what had been done.

The next question was how many points had been gained. The points in Mr. Cachalia’s letter were the marriage question, the £3 tax, the Orange Free State and the Cape entry question, and the administration of the existing legislation with due regard to the Indians’ feelings. They had got these five points, and a little more. Now what had the merchants gained? The merchants had gained everything that the community had gained, and had gained probably most of all. The Indian community had raised its status in the estimation of Europeans throughout South Africa. They could no longer be classed as coolies by General Botha and others. The term had been removed as a term of reproach, silently but effectively. If they had not fought for the past eight years, no trace would have been left here of Indians as a self-respecting community. They might have been able to live in the Locations and eke out the miserable existence of coolies and dogs. If they had asked for more they would not

---

1. The Transvaal Leader report here adds the words: “... 75 out of the 99 entrusting their claims to him. He received part of the costs from the Town Council and was authorised to charge attorney and client fees...”

3. The Transvaal Leader report adds: “... but simply his fees and those funds were not used for a hospital...”

246 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
have got it, and would have been hounded out of court and been regarded as a community not to be trusted. He explained what they had gained by the Settlement in regard to marriage, and concluded by stating that he would continue to serve the community. That was his religion.

1 The Transvaal Leader report here furnishes details of Gandhiji’s reply on this point: “He had not yet heard a Hindoo say he was not satisfied with the marriage question. That was where they had gained a little more than they asked. Before the Port Elizabeth case, they thought one Indian wife would be recognized, no matter what her religion. That was overturned; and they came to the conclusion that they should ask the Government to legalise one-wife marriage throughout South Africa. Polygamy had been a question in this country for 50 years, but the only question which arose concerning the Settlement was that of monogamous marriages. What they asked in this respect was granted, and a little more also, for Magistrates were allowed to legalise marriages. Polygamy they could practise, but it was not legalised. Natives could only have one wife. Sir William Solomon wanted to go as far as that with the Indians, but he (Mr. Gandhi) said, ‘No; if you do, we will fight.’ All he expected the South African Government to do was to become tolerant of polygamy, but not to legalise it.”

2 Here H. O. Ally, who had in 1909 accompanied Gandhiji on a deputation to England, raised a number of points, as reported by Rand Daily Mail: “It was only fair that Mr. Gandhi should call a mass meeting and explain the Settlement. They had heard one thing from his speeches in Cape Town and another thing from his speeches in Durban. In his speech at the Masonic Hall again, Mr. Gandhi had admitted that the Colonial-born question was not settled. Many things were not settled, and yet with what right or face could any Indian organisations apply to General Smuts in the future, and say there were certain disabilities and grievances that were killing their people—in the face of Mr. Gandhi’s expressions here of the ‘final honourable settlement’?

‘Cables and congratulations had passed between Gokhale, the Imperial Government and India. Where could they ask for more redress? What they wanted him to explain to them was how they were going to live in future. They had trusted Mr. Gandhi. He (the speaker) was one of his admirers. He (Mr. Gandhi) knew that it was his elder brother that was talking to him. It was not one who was jealous of him. Mr. Gandhi had been a staunch patriot, and he had said so to his detractors. But he (the speaker) never knew that Mr. Gokhale cabled to Mr. Gandhi that it was a mistake not to submit to the Commission the real grievances of the Indians throughout the Transvaal. He now understood that Mr. Gandhi had received such a cable and had spent about £200 on sending a lengthy cable to Bombay about the oath to continue passive resistance until the four points were settled. Now about this settlement. No sensible man expected the Union Government to legalise polygamous marriages. But Mr. Gandhi ought to know very well, because a message was sent to him from that Hall, that it was impossible for Mussulmans to break one syllable out of their holy Koran. He was told that, whatever he did with regard to the marriage question, not to bind the Mussulmans with regard to one man one wife, because they would be transgressing the law of God. And the Koran said that ‘Whosoever transgresses the statutes of God will be cast into hell fire for ever.’
Mr. Gandhi, in reply, said that there was no compulsory registration of children who were South-Africa-born. Up to the age of sixteen they were entirely free. If all passive resisters had fallen and he was the only one left, he would have died in that cause. As for the future, he had said that the Settlement was final in the sense that passive resistance was closed. His own letter to General Smuts had left the door open. The Settlement was that of the passive resistance on the questions that were on the board for which they had fought and bled and suffered. It did not close anything else. It did not prevent them from holding mass meetings, passing resolutions and taking up new passive resistance. The inter-provincial immigration was an open question yet. That was not in the terms of the Settlement, and it was a fair matter for agitation on the part of the Indian community.

The Settlement did not bind himself or the Indian community not to restart passive resistance if they came to the conclusion that they had grievances which would justify it. Take the Free State question, the licensing laws, the gold laws, and the township laws. He had warned his countrymen, however, that they must educate Europeans on these matters. On the marriage question the Settlement did not violate one iota of the Holy Koran. He had admitted that they did not expect a Christian community to legalise polygamy, so that there was no point at issue. Day and night his programme was so full that he was not allowed time for meals. He was addressing meetings all the time—some twenty mass meetings in the last few days.

After a number of speeches in Hindustani, Gujarati and Tamil, Mr. Gandhi replied. He did not think the letter he had received was representative of Mahomedan opinion. It was their duty if they wanted a meeting at that time to call it and invite him. With regard to the £1,200, he pointed out that Indian Opinion was a public Indian property—it was only nominally registered in his name. The money was therefore they could not accept the law and would remain in the country as unmarried. Not a single Mussulman had accepted the Cape law of 1860. In fairness it was his duty to call a public meeting before talking of an honourable final Settlement. He challenged Mr. Gandhi to call a mass meeting and produce the minute books of the British Indian Association. At the time of the 1909 passive resistance movement Mr. Gandhi had said that he would continue to resist until all children were free, even if he were the only person left.

1 Vide “Letter to E. M. Gorges”, 30-6-1914.
2 At this stage, there were further questions put to Gandhi. According to The Transvaal Leader report: “Mr. Stent asked how Mr. Gandhi could say he represented Indian opinion, when the Hamidia Islamic Society and the Hamdad Society passed a resolution on March 31 saying that he and his friends had no authority to act for them? He had been deliberately repudiated by the two societies. Mr. Gandhi received certain funds for the passive resistance movement, and it was up to him to give an account of them. Habib Motan asked if Mr. Gandhi did not take £1,200 for the Phoenix newspaper.”
expended on behalf of the public, and he had rendered the accounts and had published them. Still he told them again that they could go to Mr. Polak and see what had been done with the money. He eulogised Mr. Polak for his work and self-sacrifice for the Indian cause. He (Mr. Polak) would be secretary of the British Indian Association. Mr. Polak had certainly been receiving his living out of the passive resistance fund but he had contributed his all to that fund.

Rand Daily Mail, 16-7-1914

---

208. SPEECH AT TAMIL MEETING

Johannesburg,

July 15, 1914

Mr. Gandhi said that he felt, in coming to meet the Tamil brothers and sisters, as if he came to meet blood relations. That was a sentiment which he had cherished now for many years, and the reason was quite simple. Of all the different sections of the Indian community, he thought that the Tamils had borne the brunt of the struggle. The largest number of deaths that passive resistance had taken had been from the Tamil community. They had that morning gone to the cemetery to perform the unveiling ceremony in connection with the two memorials to a dear sister and brother. Both of these had been Tamils. There was Narayansamy whose bones lay at Delagoa Bay. He had been a Tamil. The deportees had been Tamils. The last to fight and come out of gaol had been Tamils. Those who were ruined hawkers were all Tamils. The majority of the passive resisters at Tolstoy Farm had been Tamils. On every side, Tamils had shown themselves to be most typical of the best traditions of India, and by saying that he was not exaggerating in the slightest degree. The faith, the abundant faith in God, in Truth, that the Tamils had shown had been one of the most sustaining forces throughout those long-drawn years. The majority of women to go to gaol were Tamils. The sisters who defied the authorities to arrest them and had gone from door to door, from barracks to barracks at Newcastle, to ask the men to lay down their tools and strike work—who were they? Again, Tamil sisters. Who marched among the women? Tamils, of course. Who lived on a pound loaf of bread and an ounce of sugar? The majority were Tamils; though there he must give their due also to those of their countrymen who were called Calcutta men. In that last struggle they also had responded nobly, but he was not able to say quite so nobly as the Tamils; but 1 Gandhiji spoke at a meeting of the Tamil community which, among others, was attended by Kasturba, Miss Sehlesin and a number of ladies, Indians and Europeans. Thambi Naidoo presided.

---

2 Vide "Tribute to Passive Resistance Martyrs", 15-7-1914
they had certainly come out almost as well as the Tamils had, but the Tamils had sustained the struggle for the last eight years and had shown of what stuff they were made from the very beginning. Here in Johannesburg they were a handful, and yet, even numerically, they would show, he thought the largest number who had gone to gaol again and again; also, if they wanded imprisonment wholesale, it came from the Tamils. So that he felt when he came to a Tamil meeting that he came to blood-relations. The Tamils had shown so much pluck, so much faith, so much devotion to duty and such noble simplicity, and yet had been so self-effacing. He did not even speak their language, much as he should like to be able to do so, and yet they had simply fought on. It had been a glorious, a rich experience, which he would treasure to the end of his life. How should he explain the settlement to them? They did not even want it. But if he must he could only tell them all that they and theirs had fought for had been obtained and obtained largely through the force of character that they had shown; and yet they did not wand, they had not wanded to reap the reward except the reward that their own consciences would offer them. They had fought for the Cape entry right for Colonial-borns. That they had got. They had fought for the just administration of the laws. That they had got. They had fought for the removal of the racial taint in the law with reference to the Free State. That they had got. The £3 tax was now a matter of the past. And, with reference to the marriage question, all those dear sisters who had gone to gaol could now be called the wives of their husbands, whilst but yesterday they might have been called so out of courtesy by a friend, but were not so in the eye of the law. That was one of the things they had fought for and had got. Truth was what they had been fighting for, and Truth had conquered—not he or they. They might fight tomorrow for an unrighteous thing, and as sure as fate they would be beaten and well-beaten. Truth was unconquerable, and whenever the call to duty came, he hoped they would respond. There was one thing more. They had sometimes, as every other section of the community had, jealousies amongst themselves. They had petty jealousies not in connection with the struggle, but in matters which had nothing to do with the struggle. All those petty jealousies and differences he hoped would go, and they would rise higher still in the estimation of themselves and of those who at all grew to know them and the depth of character which they had. They had also, as all sections of the Indian community had, not only those jealousies but sometimes many bickerings also, and petty quarrels. He felt these also should be removed especially from their midst, because they had shown themselves so fit to give themselves to the Motherland. And here, of course, it was a Tamil who had given his four sons to be trained as servands of India.¹ He hoped Mr. and Mrs. Naidoo knew exactly what they had done. They had surrendered all right to those children for life, and they could not possibly do anything to advance their material well-being, but had always to remain servands of India. It was no joke, and yet Mr. and Mrs. Naidoo had certainly done that. He could not appeal to them too strongly that they of all sections should rid themselves of all those bickerings, petty jealousies and quarrels amongst them-selves. He would also ask them whenever they chose a President or a Chairman to obey him, to follow him, and not always listen to the views of this or that man. If they did that, their usefulness would be curtailed. And then, too, they should not worry if others and not they might reap the reward. Their reward would be all the greater if it was not of this earth; they were not fighting for material reward, and a true passive resister never thought of material reward. They should not worry about material prosperity, but always have higher things before them. Then, indeed, they would be like the leaven working in the community which could raise the community as one to look up to. The privilege was certainly theirs and time also was at their disposal, and if they make good use of that time it would be a splendid thing for the whole of South Africa, and would certainly be a splendid thing for them; and if he heard in India that all those little things to which he had drawn attention had also been got rid of by the Indian community, he would, indeed, be rejoiced. One thing more. He had known something of Madras, and how sharp caste distinctions were there. He felt they would have come to South Africa in vain if they were to carry those caste prejudices with them. The caste system had its uses, but that was an abuse. If they carried caste distinctions to that fatuous extent and drew those distinctions, and called one another high and low and so on, those things would be their ruin. They should remember that they were not high caste or low caste, but all Indians, all Tamils. He said Tamils, but that was also applicable to the whole Indian community, but most to them because most was certainly expected of them.¹

¹ Vide “Speech at Farewell Banquet”, 14-7-1914.

Indian Opinion, 5-8-1914

209. SPEECH AT PRETORIA²

July 16, 1914

Mr. Gandhi, in replying, said that he was very pleased that Mr. Stent had consented to preside. Nothing could have been more fitting, on account of the way in which Mr. Stent had advocated their cause. When the speaker first came to Pretoria he found comments in the Pretoria News advocating their cause. He inquired, and was told that Mr. Stent was a negrophilist and took up many an unpopular cause at great personal risk to himself. Mr. Stent had consistently advocated their cause, and the speaker felt personally grateful to him. He reciprocated Mr. Chamney’s sentiments. He had certainly stood up against Mr. Chamney and the management of his office, but there had been no personal ill will on the speaker’s part, and he always received the utmost courtesy at Mr. Chamney’s hands. He appreciated the compliment Mr. Chamney paid him by coming out to arrest him with one man only to assist, while the speaker was at the head of 2,000 men and women. It showed the confidence Mr. Chamney had in him as a passive resister. He thanked them for the purse, the contents of which, in common with those of any others received, would not be used for himself, but first for the furtherance of the interests of the Indians in South Africa, and secondly for any work he might have to do in India which had commended itself to them in the course of the conversations they had had. He spoke feelingly of the many European friends he was leaving behind, and said that on their memorable march he had had much sympathy and encouragement from Europeans; it was for this reason that that march had made him love South Africa more than ever before. It was during that period he had realised that, although South Africa was a land largely ruled by materialism, there was no need to despair. He felt that the settlement they had received was a kind of Magna Charta. It was not a final settlement in the sense that they had no wrongs left. They had to exercise patience and cultivate European opinion in order to get those wrongs redressed. They had to maintain the sympathy, which men like Mr. Stent might think fit to extend to them. He spoke of the tremendous force of passive resistance, which he hoped they would not need to use again, and said Indians could not separate politics from religion; with them the two things were as one. He paid a glowing tribute to the work done for the Indian cause by Miss Schlesin.\footnote{Gandhiji then spoke in Hindi and, after a meeting with the leaders of the community, left for Johannesburg.}

¹ The gathering was then addressed by Kallenbach, Polak, P. K. Naidoo and Thambi Naidoo.
² Gandhiji arrived at Pretoria by road at 8 a.m. An address was presented to him in the Indian Location. Chamney, Vere Stent, Hajee Habib and several others paid tributes to Gandhiji.

Rand Daily Mail, 17-7-1914

210. SPEECH AT MEETING OF GUJARATIS\footnote{The Gujaratis had gathered to bid farewell to Gandhiji and Kasturba.}

JOHANNESBURG,
July 16, 1914

My Gujarati brethren have done a great deal for me and Mrs. Gandhi but they did not, I must say, render as much service in the cause of the struggle as the Tamil community did. I wish the Gujaratis to learn a lesson from the Tamils. Though I do not know their language, they have given me the greatest help in the fight. On the other hand, though I can explain my aims best to Gujaratis because I know Gujarati, they have failed in their duty. They cared [more] for money. It makes me very unhappy to hear that some members of the community have fallen a prey to drink. They must be pitied. Those who know better have a duty to help such persons break free from the vicious habit. Some are engaged in smuggling gold. They believe that thereby they are helping India economically. Ill-gotten money, however, is never secure. I have not yet attained a state in which I would not seek monetary help. Even so, I would on no account accept help offered from such ill-gotten money. You will perhaps feel that, every time I speak to you, I use fairly harsh language. My bitter words will, however, prove wholesome to you in the end. I am going far away from you, to the motherland, but I can never forget your affection.

1 Rand Daily Mail, 17-7-1914

210. SPEECH AT MEETING OF GUJARATIS

[From Gujarati]

Indian Opinion, 5-8-1914

211. THE LEGAL POSITION

[Before July 18, 1914]¹

As the removal of the £3 tax has given rise to the fear that it makes the Indians affected by it prohibited immigrands and that, therefore, their position becomes worse than before, it may be worth while examining the true legal position. For, if it is a fact that the removal makes them prohibited immigrands, the first clause of Paragraph 2 of the letter² from the Secretary for the Interior addressed to Mr. Gandhi, providing for the issue of discharge certificates to such Indians, does not, as The Natal Mercury says, take them out of the category. That clause was inserted, not for the purpose, as the Mercury would have us believe, of securing these poor men’s right of domicile. It was inserted simply to enable the men to move about the Province without vexatious inquiries from the Police and to free them from liability of arrest for being without passes. Now the contention that has been made by the Mercury is that, if the men do not pay the tax, they have to perform one of the other two conditions of their contract, namely, to re-indenture or to repatriate themselves to India, and, if they do not do either—so it is argued—they can be declared prohibited immigrants in virtue of Section 30 of the Immigrants’ Regulation Act of last year, which defines the term “domicile”, declaring those who may have entered the Union under terms of conditional residence prohibited immigrants. If the above contention were correct, those Indians who have not paid the tax for years could all have been declared prohibited immigrants and driven out of the Province immediately after the passing of the Immigrants’ Regulation Act. But no such thing was done. The contracts containing the conditions as to re-indenture or re-patriation are made with the Immigration Trust Board, a private body. It is a well-known maxim of law, that contracts which are opposed to public morals or are in restraint of personal liberty, are invalid. Therefore, the clause as to repatriation, being against public morals and in restraint of personal liberty, is invalid, and a special statute would be necessary to make them valid and effective in law. This is what the late Natal Government tried and failed to obtain from the Government of India, and the only thing—though it was a wrong and shameful thing—that the then Government of India consented to do, was to make the men, who did not repatriate themselves, liable to pay the tax. Therefore, the tax being removed, the clause as to repatriation or re-indenture becomes ineffective and valueless. Another maxim of law is that any Statute which does not provide a sanction, that is, a penalty, for a breach of any of the obligations which it may impose upon the subject is powerless to compel the subject to perform that obligation. This was clearly laid down by the Supreme Court of the Transvaal in a case that arose out of Law 3 of 1885, which requires Indians to reside in Locations. If they do not so reside, no penalty is provided in that Law, and the Supreme Court has, therefore, held that Indians cannot be compelled to live in Locations, and that position remains unchanged, and, in spite of the Section referred to, Indians reside where they like in the Transvaal. It is, therefore, absolutely clear, so far as the legal aspect is concerned, that the Indians affected by the repeal of the tax are exactly in the same position as those who came under Law 25 of 1891. Adding to this the fact that the Commission themselves, composed of three distinguished lawyers, recommended the repeal of Section 6 of the Act of 1895 in question, and considered the repeal to be sufficient to put the men who came under it in the same position as those who came under Law 25 of 1891, that the Government of India and the Imperial Government, too, hold the same opinion as the Commission, and understood clearly that the men, after the repeal of the tax, would be free to settle in the Province after completing their present indenture and that the Union Government themselves have declared that such is also their reading of the law, we fail to see the slightest cause for alarm. The Mercury further has suggested that, whilst the assurance of the Union Government may be enough, should the legal interpretation placed upon it be found to be true, that assurance will not be of any value if General Hertzog were to become the Premier. We cannot share this fear, no matter what policy General Hertzog may have on the Indian question. In a constitutional State such as the Union of South Africa is, General Hertzog would be bound by the promise made by his predecessor to third parties. He can change policy, he can alter laws, but he cannot, he dare not, alter or commit a breach of promise made by predecessors in office to third parties. If he could, it is easy to see that there would be an end to government, and that people could not with any assurance have dealings with governments where there is Responsible Ministry [sic].

¹ Evidently, this item was written before July 18 when Gandhiji left for England en route to India.
² Vide Appendix “Letter from E.M. Gorges”, 30-6-1914.

Lastly, our countrymen need have no fear as to the future. Many things are possible; they are highly improbable. It is possible that the Supreme Court may interpret the law as the Mercury has. It is possible, though highly improbable, that any future Government or even the present Government would commit a breach of the promise deliberately made. Surely, in those circumstances, with the clearest conscience and with the fullest justification before the world, Indians can make use of the same irresistible weapon of Passive Resistance, as they have hitherto done.

Indian Opinion, 22-7-1914
I would like, on the eve of my departure for India, to say a few words to my countrymen in South Africa, and also to the European community. The kindness with which both European and Indian friends have overwhelmed me sends me to India a debtor to them. It is a debt I shall endeavour to repay by rendering in India what services I am capable of rendering there; and if, in speaking about the South African Indian question, I am obliged to refer to the injustices which my countrymen have received and may hereafter receive, I promise that I shall never wilfully exaggerate, and shall state the truth and nothing but the truth.

A word about the Settlement, and what it means. In my humble opinion, it is the Magna Charta of our liberty in this land. I give it the historic name, not because it gives us rights which we have never enjoyed and which are in themselves new or striking, but because it has come to us after eight years’ strenuous suffering, that has involved the loss of material possessions and of precious lives. I call it our Magna Charta because it marks a change in the policy of the Government towards us and establishes our right not only to be consulted in matters affecting us, but to have our reasonable wishes respected. It moreover confirms the theory of the British Constitution that there should be no legal racial inequality between different subjects of the Crown, no matter how much practice may vary according to local circumstance. Above all, the Settlement may well be called our Magna Charta, because it has vindicated passive resistance as a lawful, clean weapon, and has given in passive resistance a new strength to the community and I consider it an infinitely superior force to that of the vote, which history shows has often been turned against the voters themselves.

The Settlement finally disposes of all the points that were the subject-matter of passive resistance, and in doing so it breathes the spirit of justice and fair play. If the same spirit guides the administration of the existing laws, my countrymen will have comparative peace, and South Africa will hear little of the Indian problem in an acute form.

---

1 Gandhiji released this to Reuter’s Agent at Cape Town. Addressed to Indians and Europeans in South Africa, it was also published in Rand Daily Mail, 20-7-1914, and The Transvaal Leader, 24-7-1914.

Some of my countrymen have protested against it. The number of these protestants is numerically very small, and in influence not of great importance. They do not object to what has been granted, but they object that it is not enough. It is impossible, therefore, to withhold sympathy from them. I have had an opportunity of speaking to them, and I have endeavoured to show to them that, if we had asked for anything more, it would have been a breach of submission made on behalf of the British Indians in a letter addressed to the Government by Mr. Cachalia during the latter part of last year and we should have laid ourselves open to the charge of making new demands. But I have also assured them that the present settlement does not preclude them from agitation (as has been made clear in my letter to the Secretary of the Interior of the 16th ultimo) for the removal of other disabilities which the community will still suffer from under the Gold Law, the Townships Act, the Law 3 of 1885 of the Transvaal and the Trade Licences Laws of Natal and the Cape. The promise made by General Smuts to administer the existing law justly and with due regard to vested rights gives the community breathing time, but these laws are in themselves defective, and can be, as they have been, turned into engines of oppression and instruments by indirect means to drive the resident Indian population from South Africa. The concession to popular prejudice in that we have reconciled ourselves to almost the total prohibition by administrative methods of a fresh influx of Indian immigrants, and to the deprivation of all political power, is, in my opinion, the utmost that could be reasonably expected from us. These two things being assured, I venture to submit that we are entitled to full rights of trade, inter-Provincial migration, and ownership of landed property being restored in the not distant future. I leave South Africa in the hope that the healthy tone that pervades the European community in South Africa today will continue, and that it will enable Europeans to recognize the inherent justice of our submission. To my countrymen I have, at various meetings that I have addressed during the past fortnight, attended in several cases by thousands, said, "Nurse the Settlement; see to it that the promises made are being carried out. Attend to development and progress from within. Zealously remove all causes which we may have given for the rise and growth of anti-Indian prejudice or agitation, and patiently cultivate and inform European opinion so as to enable the Government of the day and Legislature to restore to us our rights. “It is by mutual co-operation and goodwill that the solution of the balance of the pressing disabilities which were not made points for passive resistance may be obtained in the natural course, and without trouble or agitation in an acute form.

The presence of a large indentured and ex-indentured Indian population in Natal is a grave problem. Compulsory repatriation is a physical and political impossibility, voluntary repatriation by way of granting free passages and similar inducements will not—as my experience teaches me—be availed of to any appreciable extent. The only real and effective remedy for this great State to adopt is to face responsibility fairly and squarely, to do away with the remnant of the system of indenture, and to level up this part of the population and make use of it for the general welfare of the Union. Men and women who can effectively strike in large bodies, who can for a common purpose suffer untold hardships, who can, undisciplined though they are, be martyrs for days without police supervision and yet avoid doing any damage to property or person, and who can in times of need serve their King faithfully and capably, as the ambulance corps raised at the time of the late war (and which had among other classes of Indians nearly 1,500 indentured Indians) bore witness, are surely people who will, if given ordinary opportunities in life, form an honourable part of any nation.

If any class of persons have special claim to be considered, it is these indentured Indians and their children, to whom South Africa has become either a land of adoption or of birth. They did not enter the Union as ordinary free immigrants, but they came upon invitation and, indeed, even after much coaxing by agents of South African employers of this class of labour. In this letter I have endeavoured as accurately and as fairly as is in my power to set forth the Indian situation, and the extraordinary courtesy, kindness and sympathy that have been shown to me during the past month by so many European friends. The frankness and generosity with which General Smuts, in interviews that he was pleased to grant me, approached the questions at issue, and the importance that so many distinguished members of both Houses of Parliament attached to the Imperial aspect of the problem, give me ample reason for believing that my countrymen who have made South Africa their home will receive a fairly full measure of justice and will be enabled to remain in the Union with self-respect and dignity.

Finally, in bidding good-bye to South Africa, I would like to apologise to so many friends on whom I have not been able, through extreme pressure of work, to call personally. I once more state that, though I have received many a hard knock in my long stay in this country, it has been my good fortune to receive much personal kindness and consideration from hundreds of European friends, well-wishers and sympathisers. I have formed the closest friendships, which will last for ever, for this reason and for many similar reasons, which I would love to reduce to writing but for fear of trespassing unduly upon the courtesy of the Press. This sub-continent has become to me a sacred and dear land, next only to my motherland. I leave the shores of South Africa with a heavy heart, and the distance that will now separate me from South Africa will but draw me closer to it, and its welfare will always be a matter of great concern, and the love bestowed upon me by my countrymen and the generous forbearance and kindness extended to me by the Europeans will ever remain a most cherished treasure in my memory.

I am, etc.,

M. K. GANDHI

Indian Opinion, 29-7-1914

213. FAREWELL SPEECH AT CAPE TOWN

July 18, 1914

Mr. Gandhi, who was received with cheers, said he thanked them most heartily and sincerely for the honour they had done his wife and himself on this day of their departure from the land of their adoption. He thanked those who had framed this beautiful address for the sentiments that had been expressed. He wished he could believe with them that he deserved even one tenth of what they, in their generosity, had been good enough to say about the little service that he might have rendered to 1 Accompanied by Kasturba, Kallenbach, Mr. & Mrs. Polak and Miss Schlesin, Gandhiji arrived at Monument Station by the Imperial Mail. The party was received by a large number of European and Indian friends and was taken in procession to the Docks. Here Gandhiji was presented with gifts, an address by the Madras Indian Association, and another telegraphed by Port Elizabeth Indians. After Dr. J. H. Gool and Dr. Abdurrahman, Cape Town leaders, had eulogized his services, Gandhiji addressed the gathering.

his countrymen in South Africa. The speeches which had been made by Mr. Gool and Dr. Abdurrahman had also been tuned similarly, but if he had done anything for his countrymen in South Africa, that in itself was sufficient reward for him.

You have presented me with costly gifts. If you have at all followed my life, you would know how inconsistent these gifts are with the life I have endeavoured to lead, in however small a manner, during the past few years, the life which I have sketched out for myself in India. However I take these rich gifts as an indication of your love, of your sympathy, and your support. May God grant that I should so behave in India as to retain this love of yours. May God grant that this love, although distance may separate us, will extend as the ages go by.

Continuing, Mr. Gandhi said that they had done well in referring to the loss Lord Hardinge had sustained, ¹ “that noble Viceroy and faithful friend of ours”, and he would endeavour to convey their sincere sorrow, in which he heartily joined, to His Lordship.

It was very hard for him, he said, to part from them, but though he was apart from them in body, he was sure that in spirit they would be knitted together. It was 21 years ago that he landed on the shores of Natal, when he came as a stranger in their midst. He did not know any of his countrymen; they did tot know him. He knew not a single European. ² He had only a vague knowledge of the geography of the country. He found that he was leaving a country with great resources, with beautiful scenery, and with a beneficent climate, and certainly, in spite of the hard knocks he had received, with a people who had the great spiritual view, and one need not fear or despair of a land which had produced an Olive Schreiner—(cheers.)—W. P. Schreiner, and a John X. Merriman. (Cheers.) These noble men and women would live when they had gone, and a land which had produced these noble men and women was a land that had a great future.

Continuing, he said he would carry away with him happy recollections of many European friendships that would last when he had gone from South Africa.

Turning and placing his hand on the shoulder of Mr. Kallenbach, he said:

Why, I carry away with me not my blood brother, but my European brother. Is not that sufficient earnest of what South Africa has given to me, and is it possible for me to forget South Africa for a ¹ The reference is to the death of Lady Hardinge.

² Indian Opinion, 29-7-1914, reporting the speech says: “Since then he had made many friends, some of them his staunchest and most faithful being amongst Europeans. He had learned to love the country, its beautiful scenery and splendid climate...”
single moment? (Cheers.)

Our difficulties, your difficulties are by no means over, but I do hope [and trust]¹ you will treat this generous settlement that has been given to us in the spirit in which it has been given, backed as it is by those long-drawn-out sufferings extending over a period of eight years, backed as it is by those historic debates in both Houses of Parliament, and backed as it is by the Imperial and Indian Governments—a settlement so well meant, so well conceived should be fruitful of a great future. But the future is entirely in your own hands. Let me hope that we shall deserve by our conduct whatever may be in store for us.

[I] would like to make a final appeal to our European friends who take an interest in the British Indian question in South Africa. Let me appeal to them to take a humanitarian view of the question, the imperial view of the question. Rightly or wrongly, for good or for evil, Englishmen and Indians have been knit together, and it behoves both races so to mould themselves as to leave a splendid legacy to the generations yet to be born, and to show that though Empires have gone and fallen, this Empire perhaps may be an exception and that this is an Empire not founded on material but on spiritual foundations.

That has been my source of solace all through. I have always believed there is something subtle, something fine in the ideals of the British Constitution. Tear away those ideals and you tear away my loyalty to that Constitution; keep those ideals and I am ever a bondman. (Cheers.) Both races should see that those ideals of the British Constitution always remained a sacred treasure.

I say good-bye, farewell. I shall never forget you. So much love, so much sympathy has overwhelmed me in spite of my trials and tribulations in South Africa, and that love and that sympathy which I have received, not only from my fellow countrymen, but from my European friends, will never be forgotten, but will always remain a sacred memory. (Cheers.)

Cape Times, 20-7-1914

---

¹ These words are reported in the introductory paragraph of the speech.
214. INTERVIEW TO “THE CAPE ARGUS”

CAPE TOWN,
July 18, 1914

Well, let me say that I shall carry away with me the happiest recollections, and that I hope it will be my pleasure while away to find that my countrymen are being treated with justice in South Africa.

Indian Opinion, 29-7-1914

215. MESSAGE OF THANKS

CAPE TOWN,
July 18, 1914

May I convey, on behalf of Mrs. Gandhi, Mr. Kallenbach and self, our deepest thanks to hundreds of senders of telegrams from all parts of South Africa which awaited us upon our arrival on board. These telegrams, containing messages of love and sympathy, will be an additional reminder to us of what South Africa has meant to us. We trust that the goodwill shown to us personally by so many European friends will be transferred to those to whose cause our lives in South Africa were dedicated.

The Natal Mercury, 20-7-1914

1 Just before s.s. Kinfauns Castle, by which Gandhiji was sailing, weighed anchor, a Cape Argus representative approached him for “any final remarks he would like to make”. Of his departure from South Africa Gandhiji later wrote in the following terms: “I sailed for England, to meet Gokhale on my way back to India, with mixed feelings of pleasure and regret,—pleasure because I was returning home after many years and eagerly looked forward to serving the country under Gokhale’s guidance, regret because it was a great wrench for me to leave South Africa, where I had passed twenty-one years of my life sharing to the full in the sweets and bitters of human experience, and where I had realized my vocation in life.” “Conclusion”: Satyagraha in South Africa.

2 Gandhiji sent this by wireless to Reuter’s Agency soon after he sailed for England en route to India.
216. LETTER TO ELIZABETH MARI MOLTENO

July 20, 1914

DEAR MISS MOLTENO,

I had your two letters. I am sorry we were not able to meet to say goodbye to one another. Mrs. Gandhi and I cannot forget the affection you and Miss Greene showed us during our stay in Cape Town. May God reward you for it.

Do please write to me occasionally. My address will be Rajkot via Bombay.

With our united regards to you both,

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a copy: Molteno Murray Family Papers. Courtesy: University of Cape Town Libraries

217. THE LAST SATYAGRAHA CAMPAIGN: PREFACE

[S. S. KINFAUNS CASTLE,

July 23, 1914]

I have left South Africa, but not my connection with that land. I said in many of my speeches during the final days that I would not give up that connection. My writings in Indian Opinion will furnish some proof of my keeping the promise. In them, I shall express my thoughts from time to time, hoping that readers will like them and find them useful as well.

I am commencing this article on board the Kinfauns Castle. Five days have passed since we left the Cape. We are travelling third class, Mr. Kallenbach, my wife and I. This is my first experience of a voyage to England in this class. Of first class I have had experience on several occasions. I must say that we are happier in third class than we could have been in first. There are no attendants here keeping constant watch on us. We feel no pricking of conscience that we are living in special style, segregated from the poor. One does not have here the feeling of closeness one has in first class, nor has one to submit oneself to meaningless conventions. There are no inconveniences in particular. The usual ones which attend on poverty prove wholesome in the end. I do not mean by these comments of mine that every Indian should travel third class. I have always felt that those who are rich and wish to live among the rich must, of course, travel first class, as a matter of duty at least; otherwise, we are likely to invite the charge of miserliness. It is certain, however, that travelling in first class for the sake of better comforts is sinful. Men like me, moreover, who travel at public expense and whose mode of travelling has no bearing on the prestige of their community must necessarily travel third class, or in a still lower class, if there be any.

All three of us live almost entirely on fruit, though we cook fruit which may not have ripened, or boil things like groundnuts. The labour is generally Mr. Kallenbach’s. He has at present accepted manual work as a kind of religion and takes joy in it. For Mr. Kallenbach and my wife, this is the first occasion when they have had no sea-sickness. I believe it is their simple habits and heir fruit diet which have made the difference. We are getting more convinced by experience every day that a fruit diet is the best. We hardly ever come into contact with other passengers. We have divided up our time and do everything at the appointed hour, so that the days pass easily.

The love of our Indian brethren in their thousands and the honour they accorded us are constantly in our minds. That love reminds me of the wonderful power of the soul and its extraordinary properties. The functions at Durban, Verulam, Johannesburg, Kimberley and Pretoria are, we find, impossible to forget. The Cape Town friends, moreover, placed us under a crushing burden of gratitude by taking out a procession. Where so many showed such immeasurable love, whom shall we thank by name? The white people, too, made an excellent demonstration of their affection. During the final days, we drank the cup of their love also full to the brim. Occasions such as these prove that there is no bar or permanent division as between the whites and Coloureds and that, if both the sides make the required effort, the evil in South Africa can be overcome. If one side at least were to practise satyagraha on every occasion and in every manner, it is my firm faith, borne out by experience, that even such effort, one-sided as it would be, would suffice to remove the evil of colour-
218. THE LAST SATYAGRAHA CAMPAIGN:
MY EXPERIENCE

[After July 23, 1914]

During the last campaign, the very highest limit was reached. I have had simply no time to write of the experience. I had meant to share it with the readers of Indian Opinion. They will remember that the last struggle was, as it were, the third chapter in the story of satyagraha. When the first chapter came to a close, we, at any rate I, had thought that it was definitely the last. When the time came for the second chapter to open, many friends said to me: “Now who will fight? The community cannot be expected to put forth so much strength every time.” I laughed when I heard this. My faith in truth was unshakable and I replied, “The people, having tasted once the joy of struggle, will fight now with even greater zeal.” And that was precisely what happened. On the first occasion, a hundred or two hundred Indians went to gaol. The second time, not only did hundreds court imprisonment, but the whole of Natal woke up and leaders came from there to join the struggle. The fight dragged on, but the morale never went down and we advanced. When it came to launching the last fight, I heard only talk of defeat. “Every time the Government deceives you,” they said, “and you allow yourself to be imposed upon and the people’s interests suffer. This will never do.”

1 An editorial note at the end of the article stated that this was followed by a long account of the latest satyagraha campaign, which had been held back for publication in the Golden Number of Indian Opinion. Vide the following item.
2 Gandhi started writing this article on board the ship after he had prepared the prefatory one, vide the preceding item. It seems to have been sent to Chhaganlal Gandhi in two or more instalments. It could not apparently be completed owing to Gandhi’s illness and his preoccupation in connection with Indian Ambulance Corps work in London. Chhaganlal Gandhi collected the different parts of the article for publication in the Golden Number of Indian Opinion. This special issue also carried a comprehensive survey of the entire Indian struggle in South Africa and its implications by the Editor of Indian Opinion; vide Appendix “The Struggle and what it has meant”.

VOL. 14 : 26 DECEMBER, 1913 - 20 MAY, 1915 265
had to listen to bitter words like these. I knew only too well that neither I nor anyone else had any remedy against the Government’s foul play. If, after we have accepted a promissory note, the signatory refuses to honour it or confesses his inability to do so, how are we to blame? To me it was clear that, if the Government broke its promise, though we would have to put in greater efforts, it would have to yield all the more. The longer the time taken to repay a debt, the heavier the burden becomes. This unalterable law applies to both material and moral obligations. My reply at that time was, “Satyagraha is a kind of struggle in which there can be no defeat and no cause for regret. A man can only become stronger through the struggle. He suffers no exhaustion and at every stage he gains fresh strength. If truth be on our side, the Indian community will work harder this time and earn an even more glorious name.” When I made this reply, I never dreamt that 20,000 poor Indians would arise and make their own and their country’s name immortal. General Botha observed in the course of a speech that the whites had not been able to start and conduct the kind of strike that the Indians had done this time. This fight was joined by women and by many young boys of sixteen, so that the campaign became much more of a moral struggle. South African Indians became the talk of the world. In India, rich and poor, young and old, men and women, kings and labourers, Hindus, Muslims, Parsis, Christians, citizens of Bombay, Madras, Calcutta and Lahore—all were roused, became familiar with our history and came to our assistance. The Government was taken aback. The Viceroy, gauging the mood of the people, took their side. All this is public knowledge. I am stating these facts here in order to show the importance of this struggle. My main purpose in writing this article is to reveal certain details with which I am particularly familiar, which are not known in India and even to Indian friends in South Africa.

The training imparted in Tolstoy Farm proved to be of great use in this last fight. The mode of life accepted by the satyagrahis on the Farm became an invaluable asset in the struggle. It was copied and improved upon in Phoenix. When Tolstoy Farm was closed, the pupils who wished to, came over to Phoenix. The discipline was severe and there was an understanding with each pupil and his parents that those of the pupils who chose to live in Phoenix should, provided they were of a suitable age, join the struggle, if it was launched again. To tell the truth, the education in Phoenix was for the most part a preparation for satyagraha. The rules applied also to the families living in Phoenix.
Only one of them kept aloof. The result was that, leaving aside those engaged in running Phoenix, all were fully prepared when the agitation started. Thus the third struggle began with the residents of Phoenix. I shall never forget the scene when those men, women and children marched out. Each had but one thought— that this was a holy war and that all were setting out on a pilgrimage. They set out singing hymns, one of which was the famous “Let not thy mind be affected by joy or sorrow”. The strains of music that issued from the throats of those men, women and children still echo in my ears. The great Parsee Rustomjee was among this band. Many had thought that Mr. Rustomjee had suffered so much in the previous struggle that he would not join this one. Those who said so did not know his true greatness. That women and children should go forth and he stay behind was unthinkable to him. Two other incidents of this period stand out in my memory. There was an argument between Mr. Rustomjee and his lion-hearted son, Sorabji, who insisted that he would accompany his father. “Father, let me go in your place,” he said, “or take me along with you.”

The second incident was the meeting between the late Hoosen Mian and Rustomjee. When Mr. Rustomjee went to see him, tears streamed from his eyes and he said, “Kakaji, if I had been well, I would have accompanied you to gaol.” Bhai Hoosen loved his country dearly; though bed-ridden, he gave full support to the struggle and spoke constantly of it to all who visited him.

Among those who remained behind in Phoenix were boys under sixteen. Although they and the others who managed the affairs of Phoenix stayed out of prison, they did better work than those who went to gaol. Day and night were one to them. They placed themselves under the strictest vows till such time as their companions and elders should be released, lived on saltless diet and fearlessly took upon themselves even the most onerous tasks. When the strike began in Victoria County, hundreds of indentured labourers took shelter in Phoenix. To have looked after them was in itself a very great achievement. It was equally an achievement to have gone on doing their work in complete fearlessness in spite of the danger of raids by their masters. When the police came and arrested Mr. West, they prepared themselves for the possibility that others also might be taken. But not a single person moved out of Phoenix. As I have said already, only one family remained an exception. The Indian community can never truly measure the services that the Phoenix workers rendered to it at that time. This secret history has yet to be written, that is why I am recording a part of it here in the hope that some lover of truth might collect further information and might appreciate the services of the Phoenix workers at their true worth. I am very much tempted to write more, but I drop Phoenix here.

When the Phoenix batch went to prison, Johannesburg could not remain behind. The women there became restive. They were fired with the desire to be in gaol. The entire family of Mr. Thambi Naidoo got ready. His wife, sister-in-law, mother-in-law, Mr. Moorgan’s relatives, Mrs. P. K. Naidoo, Valiamma, who made herself immortal, and otherwomen came forward. They marched forth with children in their arms. Mr. Kallenbach took them to Vereeniging. The idea was that, when they crossed the Free State border and returned, they would be arrested. Their expectations were not fulfilled. They somehow managed to spend a few days in Vereeniging, where they tried to get arrested by going round with baskets, hawking, but they were left free.

This frustration held within itself a glorious future. If the women had been arrested in Vereeniging itself, the strike might not have taken place; at any rate it would never have reached the proportions it finally did. But the community was in the [protective] hand of God. He is ever the protector of truth. When the women were not arrested, it was decided that they cross the Natal border. If they were not arrested even there, they were to fix, along with Mr. Thambi Naidoo, their headquarters at Newcastle. Accordingly, they proceeded to Natal. At the border, the police did not arrest them. They made their home in Newcastle. There Mr. D. Lazarus handed over his own house to the women; his wife and sister-in-law, Miss Thomas, took it upon themselves to look to the comforts of the women satyagrahis.

The plan was that in Newcastle the women should meet the indentured labourers and their wives, give them a true idea of their conditions and persuade them to go on strike on the issue of the £3 tax. The strike was to commence on my arrival at Newcastle. But the mere presence of these women was like a lighted match-stick to dry fuel. Women who had never before slept except on soft beds and had seldom so much as opened their mouths, now delivered public speeches among the indentured labourers. The latter were roused and,

---

1 Literally, “immortal hope”
even before I arrived, were all for commencing the strike. The project was full of risk. I got a wire from Mr. Naidoo. Mr. Kallenbach went to Newcastle and the strike began. By the time I reached there, Indians in two coal mines had already stopped work.

I was sent for by the Committee of European Sympathizers presided over by Mr. Hosken. I met them. They approved of the strike and decided to support it. I stopped for a day at Johannesburg and proceeded to Newcastle and stayed on there. I saw that the people’s enthusiasm was tremendous. The Government could not tolerate the presence of the women and finally they were sent to gaol as “vagabonds”. The house of Mr. Lazarus now became a dharmsala for satyagrahis. Food had to be cooked there for hundreds of indentured labourers. Mr. Lazarus was not to be daunted. The Indians in Newcastle appointed a committee. Mr. Sidaat was elected chairman, and the work proceeded apace. Indians in other mines downed tools.

Thus, as the strike by the Indian workers in the mines was spreading, a meeting of the Mine-Owners’ Association was held. I was invited to attend.¹ A great deal of discussion ensued but no solution was found. Their proposal was that, if we called off the strike, they would undertake to write to the Government about the £3 tax. This, the satyagrahis could not agree to. We had no quarrel with the mine-owners. The object of the strike was not to hurt them but rather to invite suffering on ourselves. And so the suggestion of the owners was unacceptable. I returned to Newcastle, when I reported the result of this meeting, enthusiasm mounted still higher. Work stopped in more mines.

Till then the workers had always resided at the mines where they worked. The Council of Action in Newcastle felt that, as long as the labourers continued to live on their masters’ estates, the strike would not have its full effect. There was the risk that they might be either tempted or coerced to resume work. Then again, to live in the master’s house or eat his bread while refusing to work for him would be immoral. The workers’ continued stay on the mines was morally wrong. This last taint, it was felt, would sully the purity of the satyagraha movement. On the other hand, to house and feed thousands of Indians was a stupendous problem. Mr. Lazarus’ house was now too small. The two poor ladies laboured night and day but found it impossible to cope with the work. It was decided, even in the face of this, to adopt only the right course, whatever the cost. Messages were sent to miners to stop work and proceed to Newcastle. The moment these messages were received, an exodus from the mines began. Indians from the Belangi mine were the first to arrive. It appeared as though bands of pilgrims were daily streaming into Newcastle. Men young and old, women—some by themselves, others with children in their arms—all arrived with bundles on their heads. The men, one saw, were carrying trunks. Some arrived by day, others by night and food had to be provided for them. How can I describe the contentment of these poor people? They were pleased with what they got, no matter how little. Rarely did one come across anyone with a downcast look. A smile played on every face. To me they appeared to have come from among the 33 crores of gods. The women were like goddesses. From where could shelter be provided for all? For bedding, straw was spread on the earth and the sky was their roof. God was their protector. Someone asked for a bidi. I explained that they had come out, not as indentured labourers, but as servants of India. They were taking part in a religious war and at such a time they must abandon addictions such as drinking and smoking. Those who were unable to give them up should not expect their requirements to be paid for from the common coffers. The good men accepted this advice. I was never again asked for money to buy a bidi. The exodus from the mines continued. One pregnant woman had a miscarriage on the way. In spite of numberless hardships of this kind, no one gave up the struggle or turned back.

¹ Vide “statement at Chamber of Commerce”, 25-10-1913

There was a tremendous increase in the Indian population of Newcastle. The houses of Indians were over-filled. The number made available was enough to accommodate women and old people. I must state here that the white people of Newcastle showed us great courtesy, even sympathy. No Indian was harassed by them. One good lady even gave her house free for our use; other assistance of a minor nature was also received from a number of whites all the time.

It was, however, not possible to keep thousands of Indians permanently in Newcastle. The Mayor became apprehensive. The normal population of Newcastle is about three thousand. An additional ten thousand could not be accommodated in such a town. Labourers stopped work in other mines too. And so the question arose: what should be done? The intention behind the strike was to court imprisonment. The Government could have arrested the workers if it had so wished, but there were not enough prisons to house those thousands. Hence, they had not so far touched the strikers. The one simple way left to us now was to cross the Transvaal border and get arrested. We thought that the congestion in Newcastle would thereby be relieved and the strikers could also be put to the test. In Newcastle, the agents of the mine-owners were trying to lure away the workers. Not a single person had yielded; even so, it was the duty of the Council of Action to keep them away from all temptation. It seemed desirable, therefore, that they should march from Newcastle to Charlestown. The distance is about 35 miles. To provide railway fare for thousands was out of the question. It was therefore arranged that all able-bodied men and women should do the journey on foot. The women who could not walk were to be taken by train. There was a possibility of arrests on the way. Moreover, this was the first experience of its kind for them. It was therefore decided that I should myself take the first batch. It consisted of about 500 persons of whom 60 were women, with their children. I shall never forget that scene. The company walked along raising cries of “Victory to Dwarkanath”, “Victory to Ramachandra” and “Vande Mataram”. Each person was given enough cooked rice and dal to last for two days. Everyone carried his or her things in a bundle. The following conditions were read out to them:

1. It was probable that I would be arrested. Even if this happened, they were to march on until arrested themselves. Though every effort would be made to provide them with meals, etc., on the way, they should not mind, if by chance, food was not available on some day.
2. For the duration of the struggle, they should abstain from drinks.
3. They must not retreat even in the face of death.
4. They should expect no shelter for night halts during the march, but should sleep on the grass.
5. No trees or plants on the way should be harmed in the least nor should any article belonging to others be touched.
6. If the Government’s police came to arrest anyone, the latter should willingly surrender.
7. No resistance should be offered to the police or any others; on the contrary, beating should be patiently borne and no attempt should be made to protect oneself by offering violence in return.

8. They should cheerfully bear the hardships in gaol and live there as if the gaol were a palace.

There were persons of every caste and community in this pilgrim-band. There were Hindus, Muslims, Brahmins, Kshatriyas, Vaishyas and Sudras. There were men from Calcutta and there were Tamils. Several Pathans and Sindhis from the North found it difficult to accept the conditions requiring them to refrain from defending themselves in case they were beaten; not only did they accept it, however, but, when the testing time came, they actually made no move to defend themselves.

And so, the first batch started on its march. On the very first night, we had the experience of sleeping out on the grass. On the way, warrants were received for the arrest of about 150 persons and they surrendered themselves readily. A single police officer had come to make the arrests. He had no assistant; how the arrested men were to be taken away became a problem. We were only 6 miles from Charlestown. So I suggested to the officer that these persons could proceed along with me and that he should take them into custody at Charlestown, or do whatever he thought fit after obtaining instructions from his superiors. The officer agreed and left us. We arrived at Charlestown. This is a very small township, with a population of barely 1,000. There is only one main road and the Indian population is negligible. The whites were amazed, therefore, at the sight of our party. At no time had so many Indians appeared in Charlestown. There was no train ready to convey the prisoners to Newcastle. Where could the police keep them? There was not enough room for all these arrested persons at the Charlestown police station. And so, the police handed them over to me and agreed to pay for their food. This is no small tribute to satyagraha. In the ordinary course of things, how could people arrested from among us be placed in our charge? If some of them had escaped, the responsibility would not have been ours. But everyone knew that it was the job of the satyagrahis to court arrest and they had, therefore, full confidence in us. The arrested men thus stayed with us for four days more. When the police were ready to take charge of them, they went away willingly.

More and more people were being recruited to our party. On some days 400 would join, on others even more. Many arrived on foot, while women came mostly by train. These were put up wherever there was space in the houses of Indian merchants of Charlestown. The local Corporation also offered us houses. The whites did not give us the slightest trouble. On the contrary, they went out of their way to help us. One Dr. Briscoe took it upon himself to give us free medical aid and, when we proceeded beyond Charlestown, he gave us gratis some expensive medicines and useful instruments. Our food was cooked in the mosque premises. The fire had to remain lit all the twenty-four hours. The cooks came from among the strikers. During the final days, four to five thousand persons were being fed. Yet these workers never lost heart. In the morning, the meal consisted of mealie pap with sugar and some bread. In the evening they had rice, dal and vegetables. Most people in South Africa eat thrice a day. The indentured labourers always have three meals, but during the struggle they remained content with only two. They like to have small delicacies with their meals, but these, too, they gave up at this time.

What to do with these huge crowds of people became a problem. If they were kept somehow in Charlestown, there was the likelihood of an epidemic breaking out. Moreover, it was not desirable that so many thousands accustomed to hard work should be kept in a state of idleness. It needs to be mentioned here that, although so many poor people had come together in Charlestown, not one of them committed a theft. The police had never to be called and they had no extra work on our account. However, it seemed best not to keep waiting in Charlestown. It was therefore decided to proceed to the Transvaal and, if not arrested, to go on ultimately to Tolstoy Farm. Before commencing the march, the Government was informed that we were proceeding to the Transvaal to court arrest, that we had no desire to stay there or to claim any rights, but that, as long as the Government did not arrest us, we would continue our march and finally stay on Tolstoy Farm. If, however, the Government promised to withdraw the £3 tax, we were willing to return. But the Government was in no mood to consider this notice. It was misled by its informants who assured it that the strikers would soon be exhausted. The Government had a notice printed in all languages and distributed among the strikers.

At last the time came for us to proceed beyond Charlestown. On November 6, a party of 3,000 left at day-break. The procession was more than a mile long. Mr. Kallenbach and I were at the rear. The procession reached the border where a police party stood in readiness. When the two of us reached the spot, we had a talk with the police. They refused to arrest us and the procession went on in a disciplined and peaceful manner through Volksrust. On reaching Standerton Road outside the town, we halted and had some refreshments. It had been arranged that women should not join in this march, but later it became impossible to check the tide of enthusiasm and a few women managed to accompany the procession. However, some women and children still remained behind in Charlestown. After crossing the border at Volksrust, Mr. Kallenbach was sent back to look after them.

On the following day, the police arrested me near Palmford. I was charged with having brought unauthorized persons into the Transvaal. There was no warrant for the arrest of anyone else. Therefore, on reaching Volksrust, I sent the following telegram' to the Government.

The procession went ahead. I was produced before the magistrate at Volksrust. I did not, of course, wish to defend myself. But as some arrangements had yet to be made regarding those who had gone beyond Palmford and those left behind at Charlestown, I asked for time. The Government pleader objected, but the magistrate pointed out that bail could be refused only in a case of murder. He then asked me to furnish a bail of £50 and gave me time for a week. The amount was immediately paid by a merchant in Volksrust. As soon as I was released, I went straight to the marchers. Their enthusiasm was doubled. Meanwhile, a wire came from Pretoria to say that the Government had no intention of arresting the Indians who were with me. Only the leaders were to be arrested. This did not mean that all the rest would be allowed to go free. But the Government had no desire to make our work easy by arresting all of us or to provoke agitation in India on this account.

Mr. Kallenbach followed with another large batch. Our party of over 2,000 was nearing Standerton. There, I was again arrested and the hearing was fixed for the 21st. We, however, proceeded on our way. But now the Government could stand this no longer and it took the step of separating me from the rest. At this time, preparations were afoot to send Mr. Polak to India with a deputation. He came to see me before leaving. But “our undertakings remain unfinished, and the will of God prevails”. This is what happened. On Sunday I was arrested, for the third time, near Greylingstad. The warrant this time was issued from Dundee and the charge was that of instigating the workers to stop work. I was removed from there to Dundee in utmost secrecy. I have mentioned above that Mr. Polak was in the march with us. He now took charge. My case came up for hearing in Dundee on Tuesday. All three charges against me were read out and I pleaded guilty to all of them. I then made, with the Court’s permission, the following statement:1

---

1 This is not reproduced here. For the text, vide “Telegram to Minister of Interior”, 7-11-1913

I made myself quite comfortable in gaol. Afterwards, proceedings were taken against me in Volksrust and I was given another three months of gaol, besides the nine months I got at Dundee.

About this time, I learnt that Mr. Polak had been arrested and that instead of going to India he found himself in gaol. I, for one, was delighted, because this, to my mind, was a far more weighty deputation than the other one. Soon after this, Mr. Kallenbach was arrested and he also, like Mr. Polak, found himself lodged in gaol for three months. The Government was sadly mistaken when it imagined that, once the leaders were arrested, the people would surrender. All the strikers were put into four special trains and taken to mines in Dundee and Newcastle. They were subjected to much cruelty and they suffered terribly. But they had come forward to suffer. They were their own leaders. They had to demonstrate their strength, left as they were without any leaders, so called; and they did so. How well they did is known to all the world.

Rightly indeed has Dayaram2 sung:

Who without utmost suffering has attained to a vision of Krishna?

Find any, if you can, among the saints of the four ages;

Rare are the men who have much love for a Vaishnava;

Persecutors all and enemies to bhakti.

Dhruva and Prahlad, Bhishma, Bali and Vibhishana,

Vidur and Kunti, with her princes, were all ill-used.

Vasumati, Devki, Nandji and Yashomati,

---

1 This is not reproduced here. For the text, vide “Trial at Dundee”, 1-11-1913.
2 (1777-1853); Vaishnav poet; author of numerous lyrical compositions popular all over Gujarat Unhappy Vraj-lovers all, happy in their love.

Nala, Damayanti, Harishchandra and Tara,
Rukmangada and Ambarish, and many others, full of misery their lives;

Narasinh Mehta and Jayadev, and Mira as well—
Suffering first for them and only then showers of bliss.

Vyas knew suffering of body and mind, and so did Tulsi and Madhav,

For the Kapalis\(^1\) secret lore Shiva is blamed by all mankind. Past endurance the suffering of Janaki, Mother of the world, She suffered, though sinless—she whom all adore.

With no store of past actions working out as Fate,
Even such a one suffers the threefold pain;
Inscrutable are the ways of God and their causes, Irresistible His will.

Sin and virtue are but words,
The world dances as Nandkumar makes it dance;
Not a leaf stirs but by the wish of Daya’s lover
Though in the unripe mind the delusion never clears.

[From Gujarati]
Golden Number, Indian Opinion, 1914

---

\(^1\) Sect of Shiva-worshippers, reputed to follow occult practices of worship
219. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

[ON BOARD SHIP.]

Shravan Sud 6 [July 28, 1914]

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

Go on writing to Nayak about the money due from him. Take Motilal’s help as well. I am writing to Nayak.

It is only today that I write this letter. The note above was set down lest I should forget the thing. All three of us^2 are keeping excellent health. Ba behaves wonderfully. She gives no trouble about food. She has reduced the intake of wheat to a minimum. She lives for the most part on raw banana, boiled groundnut and milk. After the wheat bati brought from there has run out, she is inclined to give up even wheat for the present. For one hour I teach Gujarati to Kallenbach and for one hour, at seven in the evening, I explain the Gita to Ba and read the Ramayana to her. She attends to both with great interest. I do not feel any of the inconveniences usual in the third class, but see many advantages. We do not come into contact with other passengers and that saves us plenty of time. We have framed time-tables and the fixed routine is never upset. The Company has stocked all fruit so that we get bananas, oranges, etc., in plenty. It also supplies almonds, etc. If any cooking has to be done, it is attended to by Mr. Kallenbach.

The party^3 who were to leave for India must have done so and, therefore, I address nothing to them.

The separation this time was a very painful experience. I received much love in Phoenix. “The creeper of love I have planted and watered with tears.”^4 I can utter this from my own experience and rich has been the harvest I have reaped.

I am sending plenty of material and you will see that I have not finished. I shall send more after leaving Madeira, that is, post it from Southampton. I hope I shall not let you run short of matter.

^1 The letter, with the exception of the first paragraph, was written on July 28.
^2 Gandhiji, Kasturba and Kallenbach.
^3 A batch of some twenty-five Phoenix students, a few teachers and Maganlal Gandhi left for India in the first week of August 1914, to join Tagore’s Santiniketan.
^4 This is from a lyric by Mirabai.
I have kept you with me from your childhood as though it was through divine inspiration that my eyes rested on you. So far, I have not been disappointed in you. I pray God to give you strength so that I may never be. Strive to observe the five yamas all your life.

Win everyone's love in Phoenix. That is the way of daya (charity). Think over the deep implications of daya. I have just finished reading Yogadipaka. I read in it that the atman advances through action that is natural to it and falls back through action that is contrary to its nature. I found this definition of swadharma¹ more convincing [than the usual one]². I would very much like to go on writing, but my time-table will not permit my doing so. You will, however, be able to develop these ideas further.

This letter is for all three of you to read. I shall be content, therefore, with much shorter letters to Raojibhai³ and Pragji.⁴

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: S. N. 6048

220. LETTER TO RAOJIBHAI PATEL

[LONDON,]

Shravan Sud 7, 1970 [July 29, 1914]

[DEAR SHRI RAOJIBHAI,]

I cannot forget your love. I think it has been a wonderful achievement for you to have won over Ba. I notice here that she has changed much.

Remain firm in the vows you have taken. Cling to them like a fanatic. You will then be able to win over M[anibhai], conquer the world and become master of yourself; you will also achieve India’s freedom. In other words, one single key ensures victory of every kind, such is the path that we follow. This ancient path is indescribably easy

¹ One’s own duty determined by one’s nature and station. According to the Gita, death in pursuit of swadharma is preferable to duty foreign to one’s nature, however attractive in itself.
² Which interprets swadharma as the duty traditionally assigned to one’s caste
³ Vide the following item.
⁴ The letter addressed to him is not available.
and also difficult.

Increase still further the simplicity we have adopted. You were free so long as I was there. Consider yourself in prison now. Do not let the palate run away with you. Do not tell yourself, ‘I may have this, and this too’; keep thinking, rather, ‘I have got rid of this slavery, and now I will of this too,’ and so be victorious.

Keep me fully informed how you live. Live with Shri Pragji as with a blood brother. Give your whole-hearted attention to agriculture, spread your fragrance all over Phoenix and see that the place grows into a centre of pilgrimage. Keep silent, as far as possible.

Do not give up Tamil. Get into the habit of speaking with Muthu and others.

[BLESSINGS FROM MOHANDAS]

[From Gujarati]

Gandhijini Sadhana

221. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

60, Talbot Road,
Baywater, W.,
[London,]
August 7, 1914

MY DEAR CHHAGANLAL,

I am just now laid up in bed with the old pain in my left leg, and shall not, therefore, be able to write you in Gujarati. Miss Polak is taking down this letter for me. Herewith copy of my letter\textsuperscript{1} to Polak which will tell you all about the circumstances here. I am not sending you the balance of the Gujarati writing\textsuperscript{2}, as I am afraid it might be lost. I shall see how things go next week.

Please remember me to all at Phoenix and from the copy herewith you will see why I am not writing my letters this week. There is nothing to worry about as to the pain in my leg; it is due to \textsuperscript{1} This is not available.

\textsuperscript{2} For the article under reference; \textit{vide} “The Last Satyagraha Campaign: My Experience”. After 23-7-1914.
overstraining yesterday. I have not yet got rid of the effect of the long fast.

_Blessings from_

_MOHANDAS_

_CHHAGANLAL GANDHI_

_PHOENIX_

_(NATAL)_

_S. A._

From a photostat of the typewritten original signed by Gandhiji in Gujarati: S. N. 6040

222. SPEECH AT LONDON RECEPTION

_August 8, 1914_

To you, Mr. Basu, and to Mrs. Sarojini Naidu, I can only say that you have both overwhelmed me; I do not even know that I can struggle through what I have to say. I would make the briefest reference to the tremendous crisis which has overwhelmed the Empire. Since we reached England and heard the news, I have been reading and thinking about it. I think of husbands and sons who have gone to fight, of mothers, wives, and sisters left weeping behind. I ask: ‘What is my duty? I am an exile of 21 years from my Motherland, so cannot speak as the representative of the imaginary India which my friends tell me I have pictured.’ If I were in South Africa, I should certainly speak as the representative of my people. I have not yet come to any conclusion, but trust we can do something in concrete shape. I hope those of you who are as young as I am, those who are fellow-students of mine—I am still a student—will think what can be done, consult with our elders and follow their advice if it commends itself to our consciences.

It is impossible to express in adequate terms the sense of

---

1. After his arrival in England on August 4, Gandhiji, Kasturba and Kallenbach were given a reception at Hotel Cecil by British and Indian friends. Among those present were Sarojini Naidu, Satchidanand Sinha, Lala Lajpat Rai, M. A. Jinnah, Mrs. Wybergh and Albert Cartwright. The Hon. Bhupendranath Basu presided. Sarojini Naidu paid a tribute to Gandhiji and garlanded the chief guests.

2. The outbreak of World War I gratitude which Mrs. Gandhi and I feel to you all. We come among you almost as barbarians. We have lived isolated on a little farm, cut off from the cities. That is why I said we were “barbarians”. We have worked in the limelight, and you have seen what we have done in exaggerated form. If we merit any approbation, how much more those behind us, who went into the battle with simple faith, with no thought of appreciation.

What will you say to Hurbatsingh, an ex-indentured Indian, 75 years of age, who was with me at Volksrust Gaol? He was 6 feet tall and of noble carriage. “Why have you come?” I asked. “How could I help it?” was his reply. “In the evening of my days I am content to pass the rest of my life in prison to deliver my countrymen.” He remained in gaol and died there.

What do you think of the young lad, Narayansamy, whose parents came from what is falsely called the Benighted Presidency, Madras? He had never seen India except as a deportee; he starved for some days when he returned. He died.

And what of Nagappen, another lad from Madras who suffered imprisonment. He worked as a prisoner on the African veldt in the bitter cold of winter, in the early morning when there was no sun. You know what the cold of a London winter is like, but few of you know the biting cold of the early mornings of winter on the veldt. Unfit for work, he still held on, but at last he died.

Then there is Sister Valliamma, a girl of 18. She went to prison and was only discharged when she was very ill. I remember well when Mr. Polak and I went to see her; how we lifted her with greatest care on to her carpet, and tended her to the best of our powers. She died, leaving thousands of Indians in South Africa to mourn the loss.

There were 20,000 strikers who left their tools and work because there was something in the air. People said that they did not know why they had struck. There was a half-truth in that saying; they went out in faith. Violence was entirely eschewed. These men and women are the salt of India; on them will be built the Indian nation that is to be. We are poor mortals before these heroes and heroines.

But victory is due not only to their work. They quickened the conscience of the Empire and of South Africa. Success was due also to the help given by the Motherland in the hour of trial of her sons and daughters, led by that saintly politician, Gopal Krishna Gokhale; to the stand made by India; and to the action of that great Viceroy, Lord Hardinge. Success would, however, have been impossible had not the conscience of South Africa been quickened, had not the people realised the moral force which Indians could bring to bear against brute-force.

Marching over the veldt last November, Europeans came to our aid. I have spoken elsewhere of unreasonable and unreasoning prejudice; but the masses stood aside; they never worried us; and during the march they helped us and showed us practical sympathy.

The Botha Government, too, “played the game”. Mr. Smuts said to me: “We do not want any misunderstanding; we want all the cards on the table. Take these documents; read them; come to me again and again if you are not satisfied; we will make changes.” And he did.

You see many things conspired to enable the Settlement to be made. But I must mention one more: Mr. Andrews. You have no notion what he did; how he worked in selfless zeal, preaching love for India through his Master—the poet-saint at Bolpur whom I have come to know through Mr. Andrews—Rabindranath Tagore.

I have called the Settlement the Magna Charta of the British Indians of South Africa; after due deliberation I repeat my statement. It is the Magna Charta of British Indians, not only because of its substance, which is great enough, but for its spirit, which indicates a change of attitude on the part of South Africa and the South African Government. The sufferings of our countrymen sealed the Settlement. The discovery was made that the ancient force could be applied in South Africa; conviction came after the sufferings of eight long-drawn-out years. They saw that Indians, when in earnest, were irresistible; that they would not take a bit less than the minimum they demanded.

Mr. Cartwright is here; he has been our staunch friend throughout and I honour him for his help. But I tell him here that he almost tried to weaken us. I remember, and he will remember how he came to me in Johannesburg Gaol, and said: “Will not this letter do?” “No, Mr. Cartwright,” was my reply; “not until this alteration is made.” “But everything is achieved by compromise,” he urged. “There can be no compromise on principles,” I answered. There never was any compromise on principles from 1906 to 1914.

The Settlement is final on all the points of our passive resistance, but not of all our grievances. Grievances remain which will have to be redressed in no distant future. But I hope it will not be by way of passive resistance. They are capable of settlement by pressure of Indian public opinion, by pressure from Downing Street, and from Delhi or Calcutta. The attitude of South Africa has changed; that is our greatest asset. On our behaviour depends the future settlement in South Africa.

I thank again, on behalf of Mrs. Gandhi and myself, Mr. Basu and Mrs. Naidu for all their kind words. But you have only seen the bright side; you do not know our weaknesses. Indians are altogether too generous; they overlook faults and magnify virtues; this had led us to incarnating our heroes. I think of what is written in our scriptures—that it is our duty to fly away from praises, we must lay them all at the feet of the Almighty. I hope we have enough courage, and courage to lay them at His feet, in whose name and in the name of Mother India we have endeavoured to do our duty, but nothing but our duty.

Indian Opinion, 30-9-1914

223. LETTER TO UNDER SECRETARY FOR COLONIES

[London,]

August 10, 1914

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE

COLONIAL OFFICE, S.W.

sir,

Mr. Hermann Kallenbach is a German by birth, his parents having migrated from Russia and settled in Germany at the border town of Russ, East Prussia. He is a Jew by religion, an architect by profession. He has settled in South Africa for the last 18 years. He is owner of Tolstoy Farm in the Transvaal and considerable other landed property in the same Province.

He has been connected with my activity in South Africa for the last 10 years and has come with me, both of us being on our way to India.

Mr. Kallenbach never formally became a British subject, but as he was coming with me to India, both of us came to the conclusion that it would be better for him to become naturalised. Before, therefore, we left South Africa, that is before the 18th July, he filed his application for naturalisation with the Secretary for the Interior at Pretoria. He was to have taken the oath of allegiance in India, where his papers were to follow him. Owing to the crisis, both Mr. Kallenbach and I are now stranded here and both of us hope shortly to be able to offer our services as non-combatants during the crisis that has overtaken the Empire.

I write this, however, to ascertain whether, as Mr. Kallenbach does not yet hold the certificate of naturalisation, he is to take any steps in connection with the notices published requiring Germans to register themselves.

In any event, Mr. Kallenbach wishes to place himself entirely at the disposal of the authorities.

_I have the honour to remain,_

_Sir,_

_Your most obedient servant,_

M. K. GANDHI

Colonial Office Records: 551/68

224. A CONFIDENTIAL CIRCULAR

[LONDON, August 13, 1914]

We, the undersigned have, after mature deliberation, decided for the sake of the Motherland and the Empire to place our services unconditionally, during this crisis, at the disposal of the Authorities. We advisedly use the word ‘unconditionally’ as we believe that, at a moment like this, no service that can be assigned to us can be considered to be beneath our dignity or inconsistent with our self-respect.

_Indian Opinion, 16-9-1914_

---

1 This was sent round in connection with and preceded the Indian offer to assist the British Government during the War, vide the following item. It was signed by Gandhiji, Kasturba, Sarojini Naidu and fifty others.
225. LETTER TO UNDER SECRETARY FOR INDIA

[LONDON,]

TO

THE UNDER SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA

[SR.]

August 14, 1914

It was thought desirable by many of us that, during the crisis that has overtaken the Empire and whilst many Englishmen, leaving their ordinary vocation in life, are responding to the Imperial call, those Indians who are residing in the United Kingdom and who can at all do so, should place themselves unconditionally at the disposal of the Authorities.

With a view of ascertaining the feeling of the resident Indian population, the undersigned sent out a circular letter to as many Indians in the United Kingdom as could be approached during the 30 hours that the organisers gave themselves. The response has been generous and prompt and, in the opinion of the undersigned, representative of His Majesty’s subjects from the Indian Empire at present residing in the different parts of the United Kingdom.

On behalf of ourselves and those whose names appear on the list appended hereto, we beg to offer our services to the Authorities. We venture to trust that the Right Hon’ble the Marquess of Crewe will approve of our offer and secure its acceptance by the proper authority. We would respectfully emphasise the fact that the one dominant idea guiding us is that of rendering such humble assistance as we may be considered capable of performing, as an earnest of our desire to share the responsibilities of membership of this great Empire, if we would share its privileges.

It may be added that some of those whose names are sent herewith are already doing work in connection with some of the organisations that are already rendering assistance, and we have no doubt that, if our humble offer is accepted, as the news permeates the Indian community, many more volunteers will come forward.¹

M. K. GANDHI
and others

Indian Opinion, 16-9-1914

¹ The Under Secretary of State for India, Charles Roberts, replied to this co-communication, indicating Government’s qualified acceptance of the offer. Vide Appendix “Letter from C.Roberts”, After 14-8-1914.
DEAR MR. ROBERTS,

You have no doubt heard of Mr. Hermann Kallenbach who has been associated with the Indian movement in South Africa for the last 10 years. His parents originally came from Russia and settled in Germany at Russ, East Prussia. Mr. Kallenbach was born there and has been a German subject. He has settled in South Africa for the last 18 years and has carried on the profession of an architect. He is owner of considerable landed property in the Transvaal. Not having exercised the duties required of German citizens in the Transvaal, Mr. Kallenbach forfeited, according to German law, the rights of German nationality. As he was accompanying me to India before we left South Africa, both of us came to the conclusion that he should become naturalised. He, therefore, completed his application for naturalisation on the 15th July last at Johannesburg. And instructions were left with his solicitor to forward the certificate to his Indian address, as we did not expect to stay in London for any length of time. He was to have taken the oath of allegiance in India.

As I do not know what Mr. Kallenbach’s legal status exactly is, for his protection, I have placed the above facts before the Colonial Office and am now awaiting their answer.

Mr. Kallenbach is desirous of joining the Indian Volunteer Corps and taking First Aid instruction in the class that is being formed under Dr. Cantlie. But he does not wish to take any such steps without the knowledge and approval of the India Office. Will you kindly consider the matter and, if this letter reaches you in time, favour me with your reply before Wednesday morning; the class, as you know, commences at 10 a.m. that day.

I remain,

Yours truly,

M. K. GANDHI

CHARLES ROBERTS, ESQ., M.P.

INDIA OFFICE

Colonial Office Records: 551/68
227. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

84-85, PALACE CHAMBERS, WESTMINSTER,
LONDON,

Bhadarva Sud 5 [August 26, 1914]¹

CHI. MAGANLAL,

As my affairs are in a mess, I do not know what to write. I am attending these days one of the training classes² recently started for nursing the wounded. All told, we are 59 Indians in this class, which will run for three weeks. After that, I may have some idea when I shall be there [in India]. There may be some difficulty, perhaps, about Mr. Kallenbach’s going.³ In that case, my departure is likely to be delayed. I have been coming up against one obstacle after another to my going to India.

You may commence writing to me. All of you are on your trial there. Use money with the utmost care. Let everyone be scrupulous in observing the various restrictions on food. That will keep you collected both in body and mind and bring credit to Phoenix. I am not writing this time to everyone. Next week, I may possibly get more time. Send me a list of the persons in your party.⁴

I read in Indian Opinion that all of you were honoured in Durban. Let everyone of you be absorbed in studies there. I hope Maganhbai⁵ is keeping well. If you need anything, see Mr. Deodhar⁶ of the Servants of India Society. I think you are put up with Revashankerbhai⁷. I had a letter from him in which he said that you ¹ From the reference to the First Aid Class it appears this letter was written from England in 1914.

² These were conducted by Dr. James Cantlie, an authority on Red Cross work, at the Regent Street Polytechnic.
³ Kallenbach, being a German, was denied a passport to India.
⁴ The reference is to the party of Phoenix inmates bound for India.
⁵ Maganbhai Patel
⁶ Gopal Krishna Deodhar (1869-1935); a social worker who worked for the Servants of India Society and Sevasadan, an institution for women’s uplift, in Poona
⁷ Revashanker Jagjivan Jhaveri, brother of Dr. Mehta and a life-long friend of Gandhiji would stay with him.

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original in Gandhi ji’s hand: C.W. 5656 Courtesy: Radha-behn Choudhri

228. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

[LONDON,]
Bhadarva Sud 14 [September 3, 1914]

CHI. MAGANLAL,

I wrote a letter to you last week.¹ I hope you get all my letters. Here I am quite engrossed in work. It seems that one who wants to do his duty should expect no leisure.

Today we had an examination in first aid. I too had to read a lot. The questions were as follows: “What is the cure for opium poisoning?” “What is the treatment for a broken collarbone?” “What should be done to stop bleeding from a wound in the palm?” We are 70 Indians in the class. From tomorrow begins the next session. And, besides, I must see all these volunteers who keep turning up. There is no knowing what the outcome of the War will be, or whether we shall have to go on special duty. Things are thus in an uncertain state. Ba keeps excellent health. My weakness has not disappeared yet, thanks to fasting. Mr. Kallenbach is learning Gujarati. I am yearning for letters from you all.

This letter is for all of you to read. I see that you will be tried much more severely than we thought. For the present, I do not write separately to Maganbhai, Manilal, Jamnadas, and others. I shall see next week. Keep writing to me. I am anxious to hear about the health of Maganbhai and Santok.

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhi ji’s hand: G. N. 2763

¹ Vide the preceding items
229. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

[BHARAT, LONDON,]

Bhadarva Vad 13 [September 18, 1914]

CHI. MAGANLAL,

I had no time last week to write to you. Most of the time is spent in the training class for first aid to the injured and the rest with Mr. Gokhale. He is keeping good health at present. They will give us training for two more months and then send us to the front. This means that my going to India in the immediate future is out of the question, unless the War suddenly comes to an end.

All of you may want to know why I have undertaken even the nursing of the wounded. Recently, I used to say, in South Africa, that, as satyagrahis we cannot help in this way either, for such help also amounted to supporting a war. One who would not help a slaughter-house should not help in cleaning the butcher’s house either. But I found that, living in England, I was in a way participating in the War. London owes the food it gets in war time to the protection of the Navy. Thus to take this food was also a wrong thing. There was only one right course left, which was to go away to live in some mountain or cave in England itself and subsist there on whatever food or shelter Nature might provide, without seeking assistance from any human being. I do not yet possess the spiritual strength necessary for this. It seemed to me a base thing, therefore, to accept food tainted by war without working for it. When thousands have come forward to lay down their lives only because they thought it their duty to do so, how could I sit still? A rifle this hand will never fire. And so there only remained nursing the wounded and I took it up. This is how I commoned to myself. I cannot say for certain that the step I have taken is the right one. I have thought much about the matter though, but so far I have discovered no alternative.

My guess is that we shall be here for at least four months more. The War should not go on longer than that. Ba is keeping good health. She can even walk long distances. Here she has given up wheat as well. She takes only milk in addition to what I do. Mr. Kallenbach, too, enjoys excellent health. He keeps up his study of Gujarati. Mr. Sorabji sees me every day. He has joined the War along with me. We are 70 in the class. He has passed the first examination, that is, the entrance examination [for the Bar]. He will take three more years to be called to the bar. I am growing more convinced with experience that coming here for degrees serves no useful purpose whatsoever. The students’ plight is pitiable. Maybe they do get some education, but they learn nothing. Their character is ruined. Perhaps the coming over of a very small number may be useful (only at a mature age, though).

All of you should read this letter. Make a copy and send the original to Dr. Mehta. Send the copy to Harilal. Write to me regularly at this address: 84-85, Palace Chambers, Westminster, London. I do not write separately to the others. This may be taken, therefore, as meant for all.

You must be finding yourselves in a trying situation indeed, all of you. I pray to God to be your help and to give you the firmness of mind to do your duty. Send a copy of this letter to Samaldas\(^1\) also. He should join us. Who knows when I shall be able to bow down my head before the sisters-in-law. I am eager to know if Maganbhai has been to his people. See if you can arrange for [teaching] Tamil to Fakiri\(^2\) and Kuppu\(^3\). You may see Mr. Natarajan\(^4\) He will guide you. Ask everyone to write to me. Tell me how things are with Kalyandas\(^5\).

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a copy of the Gujarati original: C. W. 5766; also S. N. 6052 Courtesy: Radhabehn Choudhri

\(^1\) Son of Lakshmidas Gandhi, Gandhiji’s elder brother
\(^2\) Boys who accompanied Maganlal Gandhi to India
\(^3\) _ibid_
\(^4\) Kamakshi Natarajan, editor of _Indian Social Reformer_, Bombay
\(^5\) Kalyandas Jagmohandas Mehta; _vide_ “Kalyandas Jagmohandas [Mehta], 11-5-1907.”
230. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

[LONDON,]

Bhadarva Vad 14 [September 19, 1914]

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I still hesitate to send you what I have written, so afraid I am about the post. There have been no letters from you so far by the latest mail. To me this country seems like poison. My soul is in India. I am, however, staying on because I think I must. I want to write more about this but I have neither the time for it just now, nor the mood. Do go on writing to me here. Give my salaams to Imam Saheb. I wish to write again to him. I do not know, though, when I shall be able to do so. Ask Raojibhai and Pragji to write.

I have given £190 to Sorabji for admission to the Bar. Debit that to Dr. Mehta’s account and send me a draft for the amount by registered post. If I am not here, the letter will follow me to India.

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: S. N. 6051

231. CIRCULAR REGARDING TRAINING CORPS

September 22, 1914

In response to a desire widely expressed by Indian students resident in the United Kingdom to take some active part in the defence of the country and in service abroad, it has been decided to organise a Field Ambulance Training Corps in connection with the Red Cross Society, and to give members of this Corps, when adequately trained, an opportunity of serving with the Indian Army in Europe. The nucleus of such a Corps has already been formed in London, and drilled and trained for some weeks under Dr. James Cantlie, and steps are now being taken, with the co-operation of the War Office and the authorities of the London University Officers’

1 The original entitled “Indian Field Ambulance Training Corps” was drafted by Gandhiji and Mr. Mallet; vide “Letter to C. Roberts”, 25-10-1914
Training Corps, to expand and develop this nucleus into a highly organised corps. The Government of India has given its sanction, and Lieutenant-Colonel Baker of the Indian Medical Service (retired) has consented to act as Commander of the Corps.

Indian gentlemen desirous of joining it should send in their names without delay to the Indian Volunteers Committee, 60, Talbot Road, Bayswater, London.

The Corps is intended mainly for residents in London; but Indian students from other centres will be admitted if they desire to join. Men with medical training will be able to undertake special duties, but all men willing to train and serve will be of use. Applicants will be asked to enrol themselves in the Indian Field Ambulance Training Corps, and will require to be passed by a Medical Board as physically fit. They will then be drilled almost every day by trained instructors in London, at an hour which will not interfere unduly with their ordinary studies or occupations; and at each week-end they will be expected to go into camp for further training from Friday night to Monday morning. A camping ground within easy reach of London will be placed at the disposal of the Corps, and uniforms and equipment will be procured. After some weeks of training—which will involve hard and steady work—they will, when efficient, be entitled to volunteer to serve for six months as a Detachment under the Red Cross Society in connection with the Indian troops abroad. The terms and conditions of such service will be announced later. But it is hoped that the Red Cross Society will be able, in the first instance, to find places in the Detachment sent abroad for 10 Medical Officers and for 50 other recruits who would serve as Nursing Orderlies, Dressers, Compounders, Bearers, &c. The rates of pay on active service will probably be 20s. per day for Medical Officers and 4s. per day, with free rations, for the rest. Preference in the filling of these places would be given to recruits who, in the opinion of the Commanding Officer, were the most efficiently trained.

From a printed leaflet: S. N. 6053
232. LETTER TO DR. ABDURRAHMAN

[London, October 1, 1914]

DEAR DR. ABDURRAHMAN

I think you should inform the Minister that you represent not only the Malay community but the other Mahomedans also who are not Malays. At the same time, a statement of your case should certainly be submitted to him. You will read in this week’s Indian Opinion counsel’s opinion which would show you that the resident Mahomedans are also affected by the judgement. What you desire is that (you will tell him) non-Christian marriages celebrated according to the rites of the respective religions of the parties should be recognised and that if a deputation was received a way out of the difficulty might be found and further that the Minister will then notice the intensity of the feeling roused. I hope that you will be satisfied with nothing less than an alteration of the Law—no assurances can be accepted as sufficient.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: S. N. 5758

233. SPEECH TO INDIAN FIELD AMBULANCE CORPS

[London, October 1, 1914]

Mr. Gandhi spoke of Dr. Cantlie’s splendid spirit in all the work that had been done, but added that, if he had one weakness, it was his keen desire “to make us wear kilts in order to keep ourselves thoroughly warm!” The one who laughed longest and loudest was Dr. Cantlie himself. To the Directors of the Polytechnic Institution Mr. Gandhi also paid a fine and deserved tribute; it has made a home for the Indian Corps, given them the use of its splendid equipment, of its rooms and halls, of its many facilities, for practically nothing because dominated by the spirit of patriotism and service.

1 At a public meeting held at the Polytechnic Institution, Regent Street, the Indian Voluntary Aid Corps, which was trained by Dr. James Cantlie in First Aid, Sanitation and Hygiene, received recognition from the War Office as the Indian Field Ambulance Corps. Col. R. J. Baker, an ex-member of the Indian Medical Corps, took over charge of further instruction. Gandhiji presided over the meeting which was addressed by the Aga Khan and attended, among others, by Kasturba, Sarojini Naidu, Ameer Ali and Kallenbach. Earlier, Gandhiji presented Dr. Cantlie with a set of Tagore’s works in appreciation of his services to the Corps.

When speaking of H. H. the Aga Khan—to “introduce” him, said Mr. Gandhi, would be an impertinence, especially by one who had been for more than twenty years an exile from his Motherland—Mr. Gandhi, as might be expected, fastened upon the offer of His Highness to serve as a private in the British ranks in this time of crisis. It was a noble example set by one to whom every avenue in the army might be open; it would comfort, encourage and cheer the Indian Corps, who would gladly serve His Highness. A word was added about the unfailing encouragement and substantial financial help which His Highness had always given to the struggle in South Africa, of his help to Mr. Gokhale in his strenuous work on behalf of the Indians in South Africa, and of the thrill of joy which touched not only the hearts of the Aga Khan’s followers, of whom there were some in the midst of the struggle, but of all Indians, irrespective of creed.1

Mr. Gandhi afterwards expressed on behalf of Hindus complete sympathy with Mussulmans in their resentment of Mr. Lloyd George’s words, and made the suggestion that they should raise a farthing subscription and present to the Chancellor of the Exchequer an authentic narrative which would prove that the Prophet of Islam was not the monster he thought him to be.

Indian Opinion, 4-11-1914

234. LETTER TO COL. R. J. BAKER

LONDON, October 13, 1914

DEAR COLONEL BAKER,

I thank you for your note of today’s date, supplemented by the message sent by you, verbally, through Mr. Venkatraman who was good enough to take [my] note to you.

I am aware that strict military discipline requires that all complaints by members of a Corps should be sent to the commanding officer through section leaders. I am also aware of the fact that, in the military sense, I am no more than any other private, but I have been

1 The gathering was then addressed by the Aga Khan, under the belief that in the interests of the Corps, and unofficially, I would be allowed to act as a humble channel of communication between you and the members of the Corps, so as to avoid any friction or stiffness, especially in the initial stages, when the members who have never undergone military discipline are likely to misunderstand experiences which may be quite new to them. I also thought that you would not mind recognising my representative capacity as Chairman of the Volunteer Corps, and would not resent my approaching you in the matters affecting the Corps, and it was in that belief that, being entirely a cripple, I took the liberty of inviting you to my room so that we could have a mutual discussion, which I have always known to be far more satisfactory than letter-writing, and if you think it worth while, I would still ask you to favour me with a call.

Meanwhile, and in any case, here are the complaints so far as they have been brought to my notice.

First, grievous dissatisfaction has been caused by the appointment of section leaders without reference to the feeling of the members of the Corps. They are disappointed, and I share their disappointment, that they were not in any way consulted as to the appointment. The leaders appointed may or may not be desirable persons, and I hardly know any of them, but I think that the efficient and smooth working of the Corps demands the appointments of officers who are likely to be popular with its members. I, therefore, venture to suggest that the appointments already made may be recalled, and that the members of the Corps may be invited to elect section leaders and other officers whose appointment would depend entirely upon you, and in the event of your not approving of the choice made by the members, that they should elect others in the place of those rejected by you.

The other complaints are of minor importance. The blankets supplied are not considered enough, nor of sufficient length. The quantity, as also the kind of rations, requires revision. There are still some other matters with which I will not burden this note, which is, I fear, too long as it is.

I remain,
Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From the typewritten office copy signed by Gandhiji: S. N. 6069B
235. RESOLUTION

[London,
October 13, 1914]

This meeting of the Indian Volunteers of the Indian Field Ambulance Training Corps hereby places on record its deep sense of regret in connection with the appointment of corporals without reference to the wishes of the members of the Corps and expresses further regret that the Commanding Officer has not seen his way to comply with the reasonable request of the Chairman of the Corps suggesting that the appointments already made may be recalled and that members may be given an opportunity of electing during the training period Corporals and other officers subject to confirmation by the Commanding Officer, and respectfully resolves that, unless the appointments above mentioned are recalled and some means adopted of ascertaining definitely the wishes of the members of the Corps in making fresh appointments, the members will be reluctantly obliged to abstain from further drilling and week-end camping.

From the typewritten office copy: S. N. 6069B

236. LETTER TO COL. R. J. BAKER

[London,]
October 14, 1914

DEAR COLONEL BAKER,

I have to say with the greatest regret that Your letter in reply to mine of yesterday’s date was a severe disappointment to me. I had come to look upon you as a good-natured and soulful Commander who, being free from red tape and stiffness, would carry everything before him and that in the sweetest manner possible. But your letter disillusioned me. I made a most reasonable suggestion well knowing the feeling of the Corps. My special vocation in life has been to smooth over difficulties between officials and my countrymen, and I may tell you, although I occupied no official rank in the late South African Indian Ambulance Corps consisting of 1200 men, there never was a hitch between Colonel Gallwey and the Corps. And though officially there were even several Europeans who occupied ranks, Colonel Gallwey and Major Baptey, who was under him, were good enough not to take any steps without reference to me with a view to ascertaining the wishes of the Corps. And you may know that we were attached to a column of 30,000, were under strictest military discipline, and the Corps was called upon to work at the most critical period of the Boer War and when, in the initial stages, British arms had suffered reverses. I assure that nothing can be further from my thought than to undermine your proper authority or to do anything subversive of military discipline, but if you desire to train us for that discipline, in my opinion, there is no other way than the one I have ventured to suggest. It will enable you to know your Corps better, and may I say that, by accepting my humble advice, you will add to your popularity and prestige.

---

1 This was passed at a meeting of the Corps held on October 13 and was sent to Col. Baker; vide the following item.

We had an enthusiastic meeting of the Corps last night. There were 53 members present. I attended though I was in agony and in defiance of medical instructions. The subjoined resolution was carried by 49 votes against 2 dissentients. I have asked the members present to attend at the drilling time this afternoon. If you could possibly see your way, in the interest of the Corps, to alter your decision, the drilling will go on. If you could not do so, those of us who voted for the resolution and the others who may fall in with it will be informed of your unfavourable decision and will therefore respectfully withdraw.

I hope that you will reconsider your decision and avoid what would undoubtedly be a catastrophe. I assure you that I am most anxious to please you as our Commanding Officer, but I am equally anxious to serve my countrymen many of whom have joined this movement upon my advice.

Mr. Gandevia who has kindly offered to take this letter to you will await your reply.

I remain,
Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From the typewritten office copy signed by Gandhiji: S. N. 6069B

1 Vide “Letter to Chhaganlal Ganddhi”, 23-1-1902 “Speech at Calcutta Meeting”, 27-1-1902

VOL. 14 : 26 DECEMBER, 1913 - 20 MAY, 1915 297
DEAR MR. ROBERTS,

An unfortunate situation has arisen in connection with the Indian Field Ambulance Training Corps which may disrupt it if it is not handled in the right spirit.

Last week, Colonel Baker appointed section commanders without reference to the wishes of the members of the Corps. There was grave dissatisfaction and, when it was brought to my notice, I shared it. On Tuesday morning I appealed to Colonel Baker to recall the appointment, and appoint those whom the members of the Corps may choose, subject to further election by them, in the event of the choice not being accepted by Col. Baker. He, however, much to my surprise, took up what to my mind was an untenable attitude. He thought that any complaints that the members might have to make could only be brought before him through the section commanders and that recall of the appointments would be subversive of all discipline. My committee at once called a meeting of the members of the Corps and a resolution was adopted on Wednesday night requesting Col. Baker to recall the appointments and to allow us to submit names for his approval. He not only did not accede to our request but considered it a grave breach of military discipline to have convened the meeting.

I submit that Col. Baker has grievously misunderstood his position and that of the Corps.

I venture to think:

1. That up to the present we are only probationers undergoing training in ambulance work.
2. That we have yet to sign contracts which would bind us in the military sense.
3. That the internal administration of the Corps should rest in the hands of the Volunteer Committee.
4. That our services have been accepted only as a voluntary aid detachment and that, therefore, the full military code can never apply to us.

I may be permitted to draw your attention to two precedents within my knowledge. At the time of the Boer War the Indian Ambulance Corps was 1200 strong. There was also a European Ambulance Corps, I think much larger. We were all under Col. Gallwey’s command. But Col. Gallwey never claimed to interfere with the internal administration of the Corps, although we were under military discipline. And we were not then, as the Corps is now, merely a training body. We were in action at the most critical period of the war. Col. Gallwey did not appoint section commanders. We appointed our own leaders and others. As it so happened, all orders ultimately passed through my hands. Similarly, at the time of the Zulu rebellion in Natal, we were under Col. Sparks’ command. Col. Sparks never appointed officers of our Corps. We appointed from among ourselves our officers and the sole responsibility for carrying out orders as to military duty rested upon one of us. You may be aware that both Corps found honourable mention in dispatches. There may be precedents to the contrary. I do not know the military code. If a grave and punishable breach of discipline has been committed in the calling of the meeting alluded to above, or in any other manner, I alone must be held responsible and I shall cheerfully bear the penalty. But if the Corps is to be held together, I cannot help feeling that the appointments of the corporals should be recalled, the status of the Corps exactly defined and the position of Col. Baker and my Committee determined.

I need hardly assure you that I have addressed this communication to you in no irresponsible manner. I know that this is not the time for squabbles or quibbles but for solid work. I fear however that Col. Baker’s uncompromising attitude has made it impossible for many of us to work through him unless he can alter his attitude. I venture to trust that you will be able to suggest a way out of the difficulty.

I am,

Yours truly,

M. K. GANDHI

CHARLES ROBERTS, ESQ., M.P., ETC.

INDIA OFFICE

From the typewritten office copy signed by Gandhiji: S. N. 6069B

1 Vide “Indian Stretcher-Bearer Corps”, Before 19-7-1906.

2 The original has “country”.

VOL. 14 : 26 DECEMBER, 1913 - 20 MAY, 1915
238. EXTRACT FROM LETTER TO J. E. ANDREWS

[London,]
October 20, 1914

Charlie has been writing to me. . . . You are likely to be grieved over his having given up the clerical robe. I hope however that such is not the case. His action is no change; it is, I feel convinced, expansion. He preaches through his life as very few do, and he preaches the purest love. . . . Charlie has evidently a mission (of) whose extent even those who are nearest him have no conception. May I plead for your blessings to Charlie in all his work? It will be such a comfort to him to know that nothing he has done has grieved you.

Charles Freer Andrews

239. LETTER TO C. ROBERTS

16, Trebovir Road, S. W.,
[London,]
October 22, 1914

DEAR MR. ROBERTS,

I thank you for your letter received this morning.

I am unaware of the regulations governing Red Cross contingents, and though I think that the Indian Corps can be isolated from the Red Cross Detachments in that it is a unique corps and is being treated as a Red Cross Detachment only because it is the Viceroy’s wish (no doubt for the better safety of the Corps). I shall be prepared to advise the Committee to accept the position stated in your letter and resume duties which have been unhappily suspended. But before I advise the Committee, I would like an assurance that the principle of consultation which Col. Baker will recognize is not to be merely personal to me but that it would apply to my Committee and that its status and existence will be recognized by Col. Baker and that the principle of consultation is to be applied to all matters affecting

1 In early August 1914, Andrews had taken a critical decision to leave the Order, on conscientious grounds. His father and some of his friends were disturbed over this. Andrews relied on non-Christians among them to speak for him, and Gandhiji wrote to Andrews’ father. The full text of the letter, however, is not available.
the internal administration of the Corps. I presume, too, that the circulars, which have been issued presumably by Col. Baker inviting Indians individually to offer their services, will no longer be issued if my Committee resumes co-operation with him. I am sure His Lordship will consider that the recognition I am asking for the Committee is solely for the sake of ensuring success and efficiency.

As I am calling a meeting of the members of the Corps for tomorrow, may I ask for a reply perhaps by express delivery. I shall thank you if you will kindly lend me your copy of Army Regulations referred to in your letter.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From the typewritten office copy signed by Gandhiji: S. N. 6069B

240. LETTER TO C. ROBERTS

16, TREBOVIR ROAD,
LONDON, S. W.,
October 25, 1914

DEAR MR. ROBERTS,

I have to thank you for your prompt reply of the 23rd instant. The correspondence between us was read to the meeting referred to in my letter of the 22nd instant and with but two dissentients, the meeting passed a resolution expressing deep regret over your letter under reply and authorising me to negotiate for a settlement on the lines of my last letter.

I fear very much that there seems to be a complete misunderstanding between the India Office and my Committee as to its functions and the relative positions of Col. Baker and the Committee. The issue of the circular which was drafted by Mr. Mallet and myself, and of which I enclose copy herewith, was simultaneous with the appointment of Col. Baker as the Commanding Officer. That circular expressly contemplates exclusive recruiting by my Committee. And up to the time of the unfortunate rupture, recruiting has been exclusively done by it with the knowledge of Col. Baker. It is, therefore, hardly fair to suggest that I am now even challenging Col. Baker’s right to recruit—a right which never belonged to him. Indeed, if I may say so, we have a right to complain that, whilst we were trying our best to heal the breach, circulars inviting recruits were issued by Col. Baker and even the Students’ Department intervened and more or less formally wrote to those who were likely to respond to Col. Baker’s efforts. These attempts suggest that there is no intention on his part to retain my Committee’s co-operation. It would certainly have been more becoming, if he had waited for the result of the negotiations carried on by me for a settlement. If, therefore, in spite of resumption of duties by the Corps, Col. Baker were to continue recruiting, the Corps would lose its national and voluntary character and his action would be contrary to the circular referred to by me and the practice based upon it. It would moreover be contrary to the spirit of your letter of the 18th August wherein the signatories to the offer were invited to form a committee. The least that is, in my opinion, due to the Committee, is, in the event of a settlement, to be allowed to retain its exclusive right to recruit.

1 Vide “Circular regarding Training Corps”, 22-9-1914.

Your letter further suggests that it would be impracticable for Col. Baker to accept the principle of consultation with my Committee in matters affecting the internal administration of the Corps. It has not, I feel sure, been Col. Baker’s experience hitherto. He has not, for instance, found it impracticable to seek and value the co-operation and advice of the Committee rendered through me as to the method of managing the Commissariat, the way of dealing with the difficult question of different sections wanting different foods as also of dealing with the equally difficult question of uniforms. It is, not suggested by me that upon matters of rendering service and doing work my Committee might be consulted. I am well aware of the fact that, in the forms of contract voluntarily signed by us, we have undertaken to obey all lawful commands of our commanding officer. But we have not undertaken to subscribe to the exercise by that officer of functions that we have all along understood do not belong to him. I may be allowed to state that I have before now known how to obey and I hope that, if it becomes my good fortune to serve during this crisis in any capacity whatsoever for which I may be fitted, I shall not be wanting. And I think I may say the same of my fellow-workers. Throughout this unfortunate affair, their one desire has been to fulfil the letter as also the spirit of the contract forms signed by them.

I have already written at much greater length than I had desired to. My Committee and I are very anxious to see a settlement. And as I know that nothing conduces to a mutual understanding so much as personal conversation, may I avail myself of your offer to visit me again when necessary. I am under strict medical orders not to leave my bed at least for a fortnight. I shall, therefore, be deeply grateful, if you could find time to come over.

Any time and day will suit me.

I am,

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

---

241. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

LONDON,

Kartak Sud 7, 1971 [October 25, 1914]

CHI. MAGANLAL,

I have not been able to write to you lately.

Being better today, I have sat down to write. I am still confined to bed and shall be so, it seems, for another ten days at least. This time the pain was extreme and the reason for it, in my opinion, was that I listened to doctor friends. Pressed by everyone, I agreed to take things against which I had not taken an inviolable pledge. I ate dal, rice, and vegetables for four days. The pain went on increasing all these days, instead of subsiding as expected. On the fifth day, I took salt. The pain on that day was unbearable. On the sixth day, I gave up the doctors and went back to my own remedies. The pain vanished entirely and the piles also disappeared. The pain returned, however, thanks to my own foolishness. On the day I ate salt there was blood in my cough, for the first time in my life. I still get it. And so Mr. Kallenbach brought a white doctor, a vegetarian whom I know. He said that there was no need for salt, but pointed to the need for roots and tubers. He suggested, moreover, that the body having grown extremely weak through fasting, I should not take oil, nuts, etc., for the present. Hence I live at present on barley water, eight ounces of fresh fruit, and eight ounces of soup of turnip, carrot, potato and cabbage mixed. The body is extremely emaciated. I do not have full faith even in this treatment. Since, however, I have not myself hit upon the key to my health, I am trying out this experiment. The pain has stopped. Blood continues to come up while coughing. I have lost all taste for food and hence this is an excellent opportunity for mastering the palate. The doctor has stopped lemon as well, so that, in the absence of oil, the soup of turnip, carrot and cabbage is not very inviting, but I take it with relish. In the beginning, barley water did not taste nice. But now I think I can stand it. I write all this in detail to you, but there is no need to worry. I hope I will be all right, and that too, I still feel, with fruits. It is yet to be seen whether this is borne out by experience. Friends insist that I should take milk, but I have flatly refused to do so. I have told them that I have vowed not to consume it and would not therefore have it even if I should die without it.

Ba’s stamina is wonderful. She is coming to have more faith in my remedies.

I have had to start a satyagraha here against the India Office, details of which I will give in my next letter.¹

Follow all the ideals of Phoenix even at the cost of extreme suffering. Tell me in detail how everybody is keeping and what has been the effect of the environment on the minds of the children after going there.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Gandhijini Sadhana

242. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

[LONDON,
About end of October 1914]²

. . .³ I shall let you know its details in my next letter.

Mr. Gokhale left by the last mail [steamer]. Do meet him. He has promised to give monetary assistance if needed. He is of the opinion that we cannot use for our expenditure there the funds lying

¹ Some portion appears to have been omitted here in the source.
² Gokhale arrived in Bombay on November 13. He was likely to have sailed for home about three weeks earlier, soon after which this letter was written.
³ Some portion of the letter is missing in the source.
with us; nor can the expenses on account of the voyage of all of us be met from these funds. He has, however, told me that he would make the necessary arrangements after my arrival there. We can use the purse-amounts. Remain faithful to all the aims, even at the cost of extreme suffering. You have three sources for help: Dr. Mehta, Mr.
Gokhale and Mr. Andrews. Draw upon any of them as you may find convenient. So long as Dr. Mehta is ready to meet the expenses, I think you should not seek anybody else’s assistance. Please write to me in detail what your expenses are, what food you eat, how all of you keep and what effect the atmosphere has on the inner life of the boys, etc.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C. W. 5775 Courtesy: Radha-behn Choudhri.

243. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

[LONDON,]
Kartak Sud 13 [October 31, 1914]

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I am in no condition to write a long letter to you. I am still confined to bed and I fear I will have to stay there. There is no danger, however.

There is nothing else to do but to let Mr. Polak draw whatever he wants. You can discuss the matter with him. I can think of no advice to give you from here on this matter. I have already written about Lakshmi. I cannot say how long I shall have to stay.

The satyagraha here is over. We got what we wanted.

Tell Pragji and Raojibhai that I will write to them later.

Blessings from
MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: S. N. 6060

1 This letter is not available.
244. LETTER TO "INDIA"

[ LONDON],
November 4, 1914

TO
THE EDITOR
INDIA
[LONDON]
SIR.

There were at the Netley Hospital last Sunday nearly 470 Indian wounded soldiers. Many more are expected to arrive shortly, if they are not there already. The need for Indian Volunteer orderlies is greater than ever. Nearly 70 members of the local Indian corps are already serving as nurses there. Leaving aside the medical members of the corps, there are now very few left to answer the further call when it comes.

May I, therefore, trespass upon the hospitality of your columns to appeal to the Indian young men residing in the United Kingdom to enlist without delay? In my humble opinion, it ought to be our proud privilege to nurse the Indian soldiers back to health. Colonel Baker’s cry is for more orderlies. And in order to make up the requisite number, as also to encourage our young men, several elderly Indians occupying a high position have gone or are going to Netley as orderlies. Among them are Mr. M. A. Turk had, a former vice-president of the Rajkumar College in Kathiawar; Mr. J. M. Parikh, barrister-at-law; and Lieutenant-Colonel Kanta Prasad, of the Indian Medical Service (retired), who has served in five campaigns.

I hope that the example set by these gentlemen will inspire others with alike zeal, and that many Indians who can at all afford to do so will be equal to the emergency that has arisen. Those who desire to enlist can do so at the Indian Volunteers Committee’s rooms at 16, Trebovir Road, near Earl’s Court, at any time during working hours.

[I am, etc.,]
M. K. GANDHI
CHAIRMAN,
INDIAN VOLUNTEERS COMMITTEE

India, 6-11-1914
245. A CIRCULAR LETTER

[LONDON,]
November 4, 1914

There were at the Netley Hospital last Sunday nearly 470 Indian wounded soldiers. Many more are expected to arrive shortly, if they are not there already. Nearly all the available members of the Indian Volunteers Corps are working either as nurses or as orderlies at Netley.

The cry is for more orderlies.

The Committee thinks that it should be considered a proud privilege by us to be able to nurse our own wounded countrymen. Atleast two hundred more recruits will be required in order to cope with the work that lies before us. The service will be required for no more than three months. Students, therefore, will not be called upon to sacrifice more than three months of their time after being enlisted.

Several of our elderly countrymen have gone to Netley as orderlies. Mr. M. A. Turkhad, ex-Vice-President, Rajkumar College, Kathiawar, Mr. J. M. Parikh, Barrister-at-Law, and Lieut. Col. Kanta Prasad, I.M.S., (retired), who has served in five different campaigns before, are now working as orderlies at Netley.

Indian Opinion, 9-12-1914

246. LETTER TO MAGANBHAI HARIBHAI PATEL

Kartik Vad 1 [November 4, 1914]

BHAISHRI MAGANBHAI,

I have your letter. I felt great pity for you when I read it. I can see that you are facing a real dilemma.

Consult Bhai Maganlal and take whatever money you receive.

I don’t see anything wrong in your having you son with you. It would be better if you brought your wife there after I return. I intend

---

1 This was signed by Gandhiji and Gandevia.
2 From the contents and from the letter to Maganlal Gandhi dated November 6, 1914, which has reference to this letter; vide “Letter to Maganlal Gandhi”, 6-11-1914 Kartik Vad 1 in the year fell on November 4.
to involve you all here in the war if my stay here becomes prolonged.

Let us see what happens. Today there is no time to write more.

I don’t think that Raojibhai can be freed all of a sudden. Still I shall write to Phoenix. It is only natural that when we meet our dear ones we should feel unhappy by the thought of those who are away from us. But that feeling subsides. I am writing this to comfort you, not because I do not want Raojibhai to come.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

[PS.]

More from letter to Maganlal. Show this letter to Chi. Maganlal.

247. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

[LONDON,]

Kartak Vad 9 [November 5, 1914]

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I have your letter.

It does not seem proper that I should write to Mr. Polak from here. Mr. West and you may do what seems best. However, if you insist on my writing, I will. Send me the accounts subsequent to the point where Maganlal left off, so that, in due course, I may publish them in Bombay. Mr. Gokhale has been able to do nothing about the accounts. He has told me not to publish them till I have met the Committee.

I shall have to stay here for at least three months more—how much longer, is yet to be seen. I have sent another offer1, a copy of which will be sent to you by Mr. Polak. You will see from it that I wish to include South Africa and our group2 in India.

I am not quite well yet, but not confined to bed either. I take short walks. Let us see what effects that will have. Today is the third

1 Gandhi as Chairman of the Indian Volunteers’ Committee in London had been recruiting Indian volunteer orderlies to nurse wounded Indian soldiers at the Netley Hospital.
2 This is not available.
3 The reference is to the Phoenix party.
day since I started.

It does not seem likely that I shall go to France. I may have probably to go where our wounded soldiers are. Perhaps Ba and Mr. Kallenbach may also be able to join me. The latter has been staying with me and will remain with me for the time being. He has had to take out a pass. He suffers no inconvenience, though.

I am sending Chi. Maganlal’s letters with this. I have already sent some matter [for Indian Opinion] to you. I have been able to do nothing after that. I hope to be able to write if I keep well. Miss Smith’ told me again yesterday that she continues to send contributions regularly.

Ba keeps excellent health. Here she is exercising the utmost control over the palate. Now, we go out for a short walk.

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: S. N. 6061

248. LETTER TO G. K. GOKHALE

[LONDON,]

November 6, 1914

DEAR MR. GOKHALE,

I saw your letter to Mr. Kallenbach. I have been out of bed for the last five days and am slowly regaining my strength. Please do not worry about me.

You will be pleased to learn that the quarrel with Col. Baker has been adjusted. He has conceded the two points for which we were fighting. I do hope that you benefited by the voyage and that you are keeping well.

I am,

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: G. N. 2249

1 She used to write a newsletter from London for Indian Opinion.
249. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

[LONDON,]

Kartak Vad 3, [November 6, 1914]

CHI. MAGANLAL,

This is no time to write long letters. My health is improving. If I am better next week, I will give you more details. Do not worry about me. I expect to improve. I have been out of bed these three days.

I have had a letter from Mr. Maganbhai I have sent a reply. Read it and act upon it. . . .² Send for money from Phoenix, if necessary. Mr. Sorabji has gone to the Hospital which has some of our wounded troops. Seventy more from among us have gone to him. I could not go on account of my ill-health. I hope to be able to send some papers along with this.

The satyagraha started here has succeeded. Mysterious are the ways of Providence.

Ba keeps good health. Mr. Kallenbach is staying with me. I am trying to bring you all here, in case I have to stay here for long. I hope to send a copy of the letter I have written to Mr. Roberts. No one should be upset over that letter, nor build any hopes on it. If you do not receive a cable from me before this letter, you may understand that nothing has come of my offer.

Tell all of them that I am unable to write a separate letter to each of them.

There has been no letter at all from Jamnadas. Let them not think that because I do not write to them, they too need not write to me.

Please let me know what your food expenses come to there. If you do not have to come here, I believe, so far as I can see today, I shall be free from here within about three months. But nothing is certain. Nothing can be said definitely before I leave this and actually reach there.

¹ This is not available.
² Some portion is found to have been omitted here.
³ This is not available.
⁴ There is no evidence that this was sent.
If any of the sons of revered Kalabhai or revered Karsandas comes, take him with you. Write to Nandkorbhabhi that I will make all the arrangements after I reach there.

_Blessings from_

_MOHANDAS_

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C. W. 5776 Curtesy: Radhabehn Choudhri

---

250. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

LONDON, Kartak Vad 10/11 [November 13/14, 1914]

CHI. MAGANLAL,

I did get the letters which Manilal and you wrote from Delhi. The mails have been very irregular, so that letters arrive on no fixed days.

You are all getting plenty of experience. Stay in Santiniketan so as to be helpful and give them no cause to be displeased. Perhaps, you may find it more convenient to get from elsewhere any articles of food you cannot do without. From here I can make no suggestions. After due consideration, do whatever is necessary. Be quick in teaching Hindi to the Tamil children, otherwise they will be ill at ease. Pick up a little Bengali, as you are staying there. It will not take much time to learn it. Find out a Tamilian, if available. It would be good if Dr. Mehta spares Mr. Rajangam. Many unforeseen responsibilities have devolved on you. I should like you to come out successful.

Mr. Sorabji and others have already gone down to nurse the wounded. I could not go on account of my ill-health. I am trying hard now, but difficulties crop up.

Make yourself useful to the Poet¹, Mr. Andrews and Mr. Pearson. See that everyone shows respect to the elders. You should all rise earlier than the residents there.

Write to me regularly. Please let me know how much expenditure was incurred per head on account of food in Bombay.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

¹ Rabindranath Tagore
[PS.]

Treat this letter as meant for all of you. I am unable to send you all the papers I wanted to. Read the accompanying carefully and ponder over them. Show them to Jamnadas as well and preserve them. Show to Andrews if he wants to see them. Tell him about them. The other papers, I shall send later.

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C. W. 5777 Courtesy: Radhabehn Choudhri

251. LETTER TO JAMNADAS GANDHI

[LONDON,]
Kartak Vad 10/11 [November 13/14, 1914]

CHI. JAMNADAS,

Had a letter from you after a long time. Here we always remember you.

You must be married now. May your life be pure. I pray that all the hopes you have cherished be fulfilled. Remain firm and he always devoted to what you think is your duty. Given patience and faith, everything will come off all right. Keep writing to me at length. Do not look for long letters from me at present. I keep good health. It is improving now, though there is considerable weakness. It is with my own treatment that I am recovering. At home, we have kept up the Indian style in everything. We take meals sitting on the floor and likewise make our beds too on the floor. Whatever cooking is necessary, we do ourselves. Mr. Kallenbach is with us. I keep on our own dress when I see anyone. When going out, I have to put on the English dress.

I see that I shall be detained here for at least three months more. Sorabji and others have gone to attend to the wounded and are already busy. There is a possibility of my going next week.

Give my humblest greetings to the respected Khushalbhai and Devbhabhi, as also to Raliatbehn and Gangabhabhi, and tell them that I am getting impatient to see them. Give me all the news.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C. W. 5688 Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

312 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
252. LETTER TO PRAGJI DESAI

LONDON,

Kartak Vad 12 [November 15, 1914]

DEAR PRAGJI,

I have your letter. I can well understand that you have doubts. I think I have sent 2 to someone the replies to your questions. All the same, I shall try to answer them again. A satyagrahi cannot support war directly or indirectly. There are no two opinions about that. I am not such a perfect satyagrahi. I am trying to be one. Meanwhile, one should go as far as one can. Soon after I landed here, the War started. I spent some days thinking out my duty. It seemed to me that to go on living in England, keeping my thoughts to myself, also amounted to taking part in the War. It was obvious to me that, if this island were not protected by the Navy, the people would starve and they would all fall into the hands of Germans. I am being protected, therefore, by that Navy, which means that I was indirectly supporting the War. As a satyagrahi, it was my duty to go away to a spot where I would not need such protection and could do without the food so procured. Such a place would be the mountains here. There, one is not under any protection. If the Germans took me away, I should not mind. I must subsist on whatever fruit or grass or leaves grew on the mountains. This food is not protected by the Navy. I am not, however, ready for this manner of living. I could not summon the necessary courage. It is for cultivating such courage that I am going to India, where the circumstances are favourable. They are not so here, and to create them here one must have an atman a hundred thousand times stronger than mine. What is my next duty, then? Brothers, husbands and sons have gone, rightly or wrongly, to get themselves killed, leaving behind weeping sisters, wives and mothers. Thousands have already been killed. And am I, doing nothing, to continue enjoying myself, eating my food? The Gita says that he who eats without performing yajna is a thief. In the present situation here sacrifice meant, and means, self-sacrifice. I saw, therefore, that I too must 1 In the original, Gandhiji has given Kartak Vad 3, November 6, at the top, but he says at the end of the letter that he resumed writing on November 14 and finished it on November 15.

---

3 Sacrifice
perform yajna. I myself could not shoot, but could nurse the wounded. I might even get Germans to nurse. I could nurse them without any partisan spirit. There would be no violation of the spirit of compassion then. And so I decided to offer my services. Now, I am not a private individual, but a public figure. I must also talk to others. These others are out for fighting and are not opposed to war. I must address them; an unconditional letter, which I did. But you must have seen in it a sentence to the effect that we would unconditionally undertake any work for which we were qualified. Everyone knows that I am not fit for active service. I could not, therefore, be asked to fight. This is the explanation for using the expression “unconditional”. The main point, however, is whether I could even undertake to nurse the wounded. I have explained it, therefore, at greater length. It is possible you may even then remain unconvinced. If so, write to me again. I shall keep writing to you in reply whenever I have time. Gradually, you will come to see the point. It is after much deliberation that I have taken this step. Whenever I was questioned there, I used to reply that I could not even join in ambulance work now. You have seen that my position is still the same. It is on a level with the idea that I must not kill a snake. But so long as, in my cowardice, I fear a snake, I would certainly remove it to a distance, if not kill it outright. This also is a form of violence. If, while I am removing one, it struggles hard, I should hold it so tight between the sticks that it might bleed, and even be crushed to death. Even so, my statement that I ought not to kill a snake would and must hold true. So long as I have not developed absolute fearlessness, I cannot be a perfect satyagrahi. I am striving incessantly to achieve it, and will continue to do so. Till I have succeeded, do all of you save me [from doing anything wrong] and put up with my cowardice. You should all keep struggling to make yourselves fearless.

Let everyone there read this letter and then send it to Medh. Afterwards, send it on, or a copy of it, to Chi. Maganlal, so that he, too, may have some points explained.

I have written this letter in three instalments. I am so busy even here. I commenced it last week, resumed it yesterday and finished it today, the [Kartak vad] 12th.

Further news you will get from the other letters. Sorabji is busy

---

1 Vide “A Confidential Circular”, 13-8-1914
2 November 15, 1914

314  THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
253. LETTER TO A. H. WEST

LONDON, S.W.,
November 20, 1914

MY DEAR WEST,

I have your welcome letter after months. You all say that you had not heard from me at all. That’s strange. Certainly, not a mail has been missed by me—either I wrote myself or Sorabji for me, at least to someone or other in Phoenix. It is evident, therefore, that my letters have all, or some of them, miscarried.

I wish that your surmise was true and that I was working among our wounded soldiers. Most of the members of the Corps are certainly doing so, at Netley. When the last batch went I was bedridden. In any case, my presence was necessary here, in order to get together the required number of men. I was to have followed, however; but now unheard of difficulties are being put in my way and am prevented from going to Netley, or to any of the other hospitals where our wounded soldiers are being received. It seems to me that I am being prevented, because the officials immediately in charge fear that I might make mischief. The ostensible reason given to prevent my going is ill health. I may be quite wrong in my surmise, however. At any rate, I have placed the whole facts before Mr. Roberts, the Under Secretary for India—and I should know before long probably.

So you will see that I have not yet been separated either from Mrs. Gandhi or Mr. Kallenbach. We are all now living under Mr. Gandevia’s roof. He, as you know, is the Secretary of the Corps. He is the proprietor of a boarding house for Indian students. He has placed one of his best rooms at our disposal.

I envy you your gardening work. Just now my own health seems to have been completely shattered. I feel that I hopelessly mismanaged my constitution in the fast. I was in a hurry to regain my lost energy. I, therefore, overfed the system and overstrained the body in compelling myself to take long strenuous walks. I was too impatient and am paying the penalty: I can now scarcely walk with any strenuousness without the original pain starting. The ribs seem to have become shattered—they will not stand any strain, nor the groins. I, therefore, am obliged largely to keep indoors and remain in bed. Of food I can take very little—the slightest excess would upset me. In spite of all this, I am able to attend to my work. Nor does all this imply that I am only skin and bones. By carefulness I am able to undo the mischief done. The mental and moral atmosphere is also a great drawback. Everything appears so artificial, so materialistic and immoral that one’s soul almost becomes atrophied.

I am longing to go to India and so is Mrs. Gandhi; but a sense of duty and—I am not sure that, on this occasion, it is a right sense of duty that compels me to remain here.

I share your views about the War. If I had the moral strength, however, I would certainly be the passive resister that you have pictured in your letter.

I am glad that you all are getting on well there and that your little ones are doing so well and add to the joys of your life. I hope that everything there is going on peacefully.

Please remember us to all. I may not be writing any other letter this week so that I would like you to show this to everybody.

This letter is being taken down, you will be glad to know, by an Indian friend. After James, he is the first Indian friend I have found capable of taking shorthand notes. He is just now staying in the same house with me awaiting instructions to proceed to one of the hospitals where our Indian troops are. His name is Manic Lal Chandra, and has been in England for about four years. Mr. Chandra, from what I understand, is a much-travelled man.

I shall try and write to Polak, but you may pass this letter on to him lest I fail to do so.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the handwritten original signed by Gandhiji: C. W. 4416

Courtesy: A. H. West
254. LETTER TO G. K. GOKHALE

[London,]
November 26, 1914

DEAR MR. GOKHALE,

I have your cable to which I have replied. I cannot bring my malady under control. Nor can the doctors. They would say that they could if I followed them implicitly. This I am unable to do. I do not want to live on any terms. Dr. Allinson, the Vegetarian doctor, considers my own treatment to be perfect in the circumstances. Dr. Mehta has been most attentive. I listen to him wherever it is possible. I had a serious relapse last week. I am still in bed but much better and seemingly progressing. Pray do not be anxious about me. If I cannot recover, I shall try to leave for India.

We all wish that in your cable you had said something about your own health. I hope that it is much better. Anyhow you have now surroundings you were longing for.

I remain,
Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: G. N. 2250

255. LETTER TO MRINALINI SEN

16 Trebovir Road, [London] S.W.,
November 30, [1914]²

DEAR MRS. SEN,

Mr. Sen told me that you would gladly give me lessons in Bengalee whilst I was confined to my room. I think that I am now in a position to take them. Could you kindly come for say _ hour daily on any day that may suit you? Any time between 2 to 3.30 or 5.30 to 6.30 will be suitable for me. I have a good Bengalee grammar. If you

¹ This cable is not available.
² The year has been inferred from the reference to Gandhiji’s learning Bengali while confined to his room in London. He began learning Bengali during his illness in October-December 1914; vide “Letter to Maganlal Gandhi”, 10-12-1914.
I am still confined to bed. I have sat up to write a long letter to you. I do not know when I shall finish it. Have no anxiety on my account. I have a very sweet letter from Mr. Andrews. He says that Gurudev also, on his part, will be very happy to have you all in Santiniketan. He adds that your presence there will help to remove whatever unhealthy caste distinctions still remain and that, on the whole, your visit will certainly benefit Santiniketan. It is up to you all to see that it does. If all our Phoenix ideals are kept up, Gurudev’s expectations are sure to be fulfilled. Let everyone of you give some service rather than ask for any. Do not forget agriculture. You must not think that you will not be there to enjoy the benefit of the trees you plant. Rise earlier than the others do. Do your own cooking, of course, but also undertake cooking for the whole establishment, if you can. Out of respect for Gurudev and by way of inducement to you all, I have started study of Bengali in my bed. I have completed Mrs. Murat’s grammar and the Bengali primer. This is the fifth day. I started the study on Monday. Today is Friday. I see that it is easy for a Gujarati to learn Bengali. Everyone of you should pick it up. The alphabet, too, is simple. Study of Gujarati and Tamil should also continue. Sanskrit, of course, you must be doing.

Your boarding expenses are to be borne by Gurudev. Approach Rajangam through the Doctor for his help in Tamil. The latter says that his sons are there. You must be in correspondence with him. Send for Maganbhai’s son. More later. This letter is meant for all. Ba is pining to see you all. Her nursing is incomparable.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C. W. 5655 Courtesy: Radha-behn Choudhri
257. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

[London,]
Magshar Vad 8 [December 10, 1914]

CHI. MAGANLAL,

I got the letters from all of you. In my present helpless condition, I do not write to everyone. Hence, take this letter as meant for all and, on your part, all of you continue to write to me.

You say you would ask me for permission for whey after I return. But I give it straight from here. After observing the conditions there, make any exceptions that you find necessary. Do not wait to consult me. Only, in all that you do, remember the need for self-discipline.

You are right in concluding that agriculture is the only real prayer and service. It is not only fitting but it is actually one’s duty to keep repeating God’s name, whether we are busy in the fields or having our meal, whether playing or wandering aimlessly, during a bath or at any other hour. One who wants to lose himself in Rama, who is striving to do so, requires no particular hour; all the same, it is necessary to have some kind of a rule for the young. And so the time not meant for work in the fields should be specially appointed for prayers, that is, just before daybreak, when it is still dark. The shastras lay down that sandhya1, etc., should be performed before dawn. The evening hour that we have set apart is the right one.

Intensify your interest in agriculture. Plant fruit-trees. Send for wheat from Bombay. Use the indigenous grinding stones. Make copra or ground-nut oil at home. You will get both milk and ghee by crushing fresh cocoanut kernel to a fine paste and straining it through a piece of cloth. It seems this is very beneficial. Since it is certain that you will be there for quite some time, there is nothing wrong in stocking the necessary articles. Wheat must be available in Calcutta. It seems they do not use tamarind there.

I have written a letter2 to Mr. Pearson, which I think he will show you. It will be an excellent thing if the elders among you undertake to do some service for every teacher.

As for the expenditure on all of you, that on Kuppu’s and

1 Prayer to Sun-god, usually in the morning and evening
2 This is not available.
Naidoo’s sons and for Maganbhai will be met from the Satyagraha Fund. For you, Manilal and others, I shall make some arrangement. The money for Sivapujan, Shanti and Navin is to be provided by the respective parents. The expenses for Chhotam are to be met from the Satyagraha Fund.

From what Mr. Andrews wrote, it appeared that Gurudev would bear the expenses. But you need not discuss the question. Let him, if he does; if not, it should not matter.

Make everything you can with your own hands. Get used to doing without the things which you cannot make.

If only we learn to maintain ourselves by agriculture and manual labour, there will be nothing more for us to earn or learn. That is what I too must learn. I may, however, pass away without doing so. Let that not happen to you.

If Gurudev is likely to be put to inconvenience and if there is not enough room there, ask him to let you live in a tent or make some other arrangements.

Personally, I have always felt, and it now appears that there is no institution today in the world to excel Phoenix in its ideals or its way of life. If there is any, the civilized world has not heard of it. I am happy that all of you have the same impression. While I am yet to recover, Ba has had an acute attack of menorrhagia since yesterday. I do not know what God has willed. Ba is confined to bed and so I have forced myself to get up. Let none of you be anxious, however.

Since my diet was deficient in organic salts, Dr. Allinson¹ has advised me to take roots and tubers and leafy vegetables. And so, even in this dangerous condition, I am making experiments. My diet is as follows: In the morning, I have soup with two or three tea-spoonfuls of dry banana brought from there² and ground-nut, with tomatoes and a spoonful of oil added. At noon, I take a small carrot and one half of a small raw turnip, with eight biscuits, made of wheat or banana flour, boiled. Sometimes, in place of carrot and turnip, I take two leaves of cabbage, crushed. In the evening, two spoonfuls of rice, boiled, with vegetables as above or dry figs, soaked in water, with a small piece of bread made of banana flour or wheat. This is the routine at present.

¹ Dr. T. R. Allinson, author of books on health and hygiene which Gandhiji found helpful; a member of the London Vegetarian Society till he was censured for his unorthodox views on birth control
² South Africa
The intention is to replace cooked items with uncooked articles and wheat by nuts. I take two apples in the morning. I have been taking raw vegetables for nearly a month now. I have observed no harm from this at any rate. You used to say that vegetables could be eaten raw, but I would not believe it. I find many persons here eating vegetables raw. The practice has many implications. I cannot write about them, however. Later, I may. I have taken a final vow here not to have milk and ghee. Doctors were very insistent, and I feared I might give in if I did not take a solemn vow. Hereafter, I will never consume these things in this present life. I will take other vows when I am there, though I cannot be sure that I will not take some here meanwhile, occasion arising.

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: S. N. 6097; also
Gandhijini Sadhana

258. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

[LONDON, About December 10, 1914]

[CHI. CHHAGANLAL,]

I have established very good relations with Mr. Charles Roberts. Also with his wife. He took great care of me during my illness.

Write a letter of condolence on the death of Miss Smith’s mother, on your behalf as well as on behalf of the press. When writing for the press, consult Mr. West. That lady has been giving us excellent help. Perhaps Mr. Sorabji will ask that his wife be sent to England. If so, pay her up to £100 for the fare. She will ask for it.

Send me immediately the bank balance, the Satyagraha [Fund] balance and the accounts of whatever remained after the withdrawal by Maganlal. It will not be possible now to publish the accounts in India. We are not to blame for the delay.

If I keep well, I will start writing for Indian Opinion. It is necessary to ask the parents of Shanti, Sivapujan and Navin for money to 1 From the contents this appears to have been addressed to Chhaganlal Gandhi. The first three pages of this letter are not available.

2 From the reference to the expenses regarding Shanti, Sivpujan and Navin the letter appears to have been written about the same time as “Letter to Maganlal Gandhi”; vide the preceding item.
meet their needs. If Sivapujan’s parents cannot pay for him, let me know, so that the amount may be debited to the Satyagraha Fund. There are also outstanding dues on account of Shanti. Remind Chi. Jayashanker about this. Let me know the total amount I received by way of purses and the names. Indicate also which of the amounts belong to the Emergency Fund. I have not yet told you that the funds of the Transvaal [British] Indian Association have been handed over to me. The transfer deed is with me. Credit the amount to my account and debit it to the Association’s. Include this amount too under “purse”. I think the purse amounts will have to be used to run the institution in India. The expenses for persons other than the satyagrahi boys cannot be met from the Satyagraha Fund. I shall, however, be in a better position to judge after I reach India.

_Blessings from_

_MOHANDAS_

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: S. N. 6047

259. ACCOUNTS OF INDIAN AMBULANCE CORPS

[London, December 18, 1914]

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Receipts</th>
<th>£</th>
<th>s.</th>
<th>d.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>His Highness the Aga Khan</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>200</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>His Highness the Gaekwar of Baroda</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. Ratan J. Tata</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>50</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Mr. Karimbhoy Adamji Peerbhoy</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>15</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Contributions from members of the Corps for ambulance class fees, etc.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>318</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>EXPENDITURE</th>
<th>£</th>
<th>s.</th>
<th>d.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Stationery and printing</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>16</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stamps, telegrams, telephone, etc.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>131</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Members’ travelling expenses</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>181</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Ambulance class fees, etc.</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>29</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Balance</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>239</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Total</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td>318</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

_India, 25-12-1914_
260. INTERVIEW TO REUTER

LONDON,
December 18, 1914

In the course of an interview with Reuter, the Indian leader emphasised that the settlement made in South Africa was a most happy thing for the Indians, who were rallying to the Government in the time of the great crisis. He had said, the most pleasant recollections of his last interviews with General Botha and General Smuts.

Mr. Gandhi paid a tribute to the Union Government for taking into account Indian feelings, even in small matters and he was glad to be able to announce this in India. . . .

Indian Opinion, 23-12-1914

261. SPEECH AT LONDON FAREWELL

[December 18, 1914]

Mr. Gandhi, who was received with cheers, said that his wife and himself were returning to the motherland with their work unaccomplished and with broken health, but he wished, nevertheless, to use the language of hope. He declared, too, that despite the dictum of two doctors, he felt that if he had been allowed to take his part even now, the work itself would have cured his weakness! When the Ambulance Corps was formed, it had been a matter of great joy to him that so many students and others came forward and willingly offered their services. Men such as Colonel Kanta Prasad, and Mr. Turkhud, and Mr. Parikh were none of them expected to do the work of hospital orderlies at Netley, but nevertheless they had cheerfully done it. Indians had shown themselves thereby capable of doing their duty, if they received recognition of their rights and privileges. (Cheers.) The whole idea of the Corps arose because he felt that there should be some outlet for the anxiety of Indians to help in the crisis which had come upon the Empire. (Hear, hear.) He thanked Mr. Roberts for his appreciation of the services that are being rendered. It was, he said, after prayerful consideration as to how Indians would help in the crisis that the Corps had come into

1 This is an extract from a Reuter’s dispatch covering also a farewell reception to Gandhiji and Kasturba held later in the day; vide the following item.

2 Gandhiji and Kasturba were given a farewell dinner at Westminster Palace Hotel, attended among others by Charles Roberts, Sir Henry Cotton, Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Polak and Miss F. Winterbottom. J. M. Parikh presided. After Sir Henry Cotton, J. M. Parikh, C. Roberts and Mrs. Olive Schreiner had spoken, Gandhiji replied. The report has been collated with a despatch from the London correspondent of Amrit Bazar Patrika published in Indian Opinion, 27-1-1915.
being; his joy was mixed with pain because he could not do his part; he had himself pleaded hard with Mr. Roberts that some place should be found for him but his health had not permitted, and the doctor had been obdurate. He had not resigned from the Corps. If in his own motherland he should be restored to strength, and hostilities were still continuing, he intended to come back, directly the summons reached him. (Cheers.) As for his work in South Africa, that had been purely a matter of duty, and carried no merit with it, and his only aspiration on his return to his motherland was to do his duty as he found it day by day. He had been practically an exile for 25 years, and his friend and master, Mr. Gokhale, had warned him not to speak on Indian questions, as India was a foreign land to him. (Laughter.) But the India of his imagination was an India unrivalled in the world, and an India where the most spiritual treasures were to be found, and it was his dream and hope that the connection between India and England might be a source of spiritual comfort and uplifting to the whole world. He could not conclude without expressing his warmest appreciation of the great kindness which Lady Cecilia Roberts had shown to his wife and himself in the illness. They had landed in England as strangers, but they had speedily fallen among friends. There must be something good in the connection between India and England, if it produced such unsolicited and generous kindness from English men and women to Indians.

We are blest with many friends, who have helped and cheered us, and we hope and pray that we may so discharge ourselves as to deserve the kind things that have been said and the tribute of this gathering as well as that arranged on our arrival from South Africa. We hope this is not a final good-bye to so many good friends.

India, 25-12-1914 and Indian Opinion, 27-1-1915

1 The Amrit Bazar Patrika report quoted Gandhiji as saying here: “My hope is to come back and if the War should last till then, I shall be ready to do my share of service as a nursing orderly.”

2 The Amrit Bazar Patrika version has: “India, he felt, was the country where the greatest spiritual treasures were to be found for the comforting and uplifting of the whole world and all could work towards strengthening the tie between India and Great Britain by each giving of its best to the other.”

3 What follows is from the Amrit Bazar Patrika report.
262. LETTER TO A. H. WEST

S. N. C o. S. S.,
December 23, 1914

MY DEAR WEST,

I am thoroughly done up now but on the approach of Xmas eve I cannot help sending you loving thoughts. Our departure was sudden & early. We are keeping well considering the stormy weather. My health improving I hope to resume writing for I.O. Please send to Miss Smith a message of condolence on her mother’s death.

I have been so often prevented from reaching India that it seems hardly real that I am sitting in a ship bound for India. And having reached that what shall I do with myself? However, ‘Lead Kindly Light, amid the encircling gloom, lead Thou me on.’ That thought is my solace & may it be yours in the darkest moments.

With love to you all from both of us.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: C. W. 4417 Courtesy: A. H. West

263. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

S. S. “ARABIA”,
December [23, 1914]¹

MY DEAR FRIEND,

This is the fifth letter I am writing to you during the voyage. The first was written before reaching Sheerness. My last letter was written in a gloomy mood. But somehow or other the gloom went with the disappearance of the gateway to Europe. It is strange yet true. But why strange! Perhaps it should be considered quite natural.

Our joint life is becoming stricter. Our menu now is for Mrs. Gandhi a portion of the special bread, three biscuits soaked in water, 3

¹ The source has December 3 in Gandhiji’s hand, evidently a slip as he set sail for India on December 19, 1914. From the opening sentence in the letter, the date is presumed to be the 23rd, the fifth day of voyage.
plums, a fig, two tomatoes and 3 oranges, also a spoonful of oil and 6 almonds. This twice a day. Mine was ground-nut, butter spoonful, two biscuits, 6 plums, 2 oranges, one tomato and teaspoonful pine kernel. This for breakfast; for the evening meal ground-nut preparation with the other things and no biscuits but 6 walnuts. Before retiring, I shall drink a lemon. These simple meals satisfy us both and now for me there is no hankering. The only thing to complete our happiness would be your presence. We always talk about you at meal times, what you would be doing there at the time, how you would make the stewards work here and how you would have insisted on some cooked things and how you would have wanted more tomatoes and more oil and how I would have protested against both. This return to the old style has improved my health wonderfully though the pain in the side has not yet left me. However, that may leave me in India. Today I have worn somewhat to Mrs. Gandhi’s disgust, the Indian dress I used to in South Africa. The passengers looked surprised as I appeared on the deck but I think the surprise has passed away.

I have been more and more devoted to my Bengali studies and I fancy I have made marked progress. Before retiring I invariably read the Bhagavad Gita, Ramayana and sing one hymn.

We have mixed but little with the passengers. One very noted suffragist is on board. She has become interested in us. So we talk to her now and then.

So much of our life. But yours we left you unhappy, a lonely calf! That cow must be wretched that leaves her calf! And yet the leaving was the only thing possible and I think it was the best. I shall feel very sad if you keep me without a cable even when we reach Bombay. I dare not expect any news of you at [Aden]1 which we reach tomorrow.

And now a personal touch before I reach India. I have been harsh to you, apparently cruel even, rude too as you thought. But the words came out of the purest love. If I did wrong, it was not because I love you less but because I loved too well. I became impatient to see you do what I thought was the right thing. Pardon me then if I hurt you as I know I did. You made no secret of it. I did not heed it. I hope I did right in not heeding it. Let that love keep you and me on the path we have chosen. It is a strange path, it is difficult but not inaccessible. With sufficient attempt we shall reach it. The glory, if we want it, lies in the attempt not in the reaching. Tolstoy even said that the goal ever receded as [one] went nearer.

1 The source has “Arden”.

326  THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI

Mrs. Gandhi, who is sitting by me, wants me especially to send her love to you.

And now, may this letter be redirected to you in India. May you have left before this reaches London. If it does reach you in London, please give the purport of this unless you would read it to Sorabji, Gandevia1 and Mehta.

With love,

Ever Yours,

OLD FRIEND

LATE UPPER HOUSE

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

264. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

ON S. S. ARABIA,

Wednesday, Posh,Sud 7 [December 23, 1914]

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

Wonderful is the sport of God! I have been able to leave London unexpectedly early and in an unexpected manner. It remains to be seen whether I reach home safe. I cannot feel that I am in India till I have landed in Bombay. I have been disappointed many times. We are both keeping good health, now at any rate. We are very careful. Let us see whether I regain my former strength. We live on the food we have brought from England. Mixing two parts banana flour and one part wheat flour, we have made biscuits and rotis. We eat these and dry fruit, soaked in water. Ripe fruit we obtain from the ship. Ripe bananas are over, so they put half-ripe bananas into the oven for ripening before giving them to us. We have brought our own stock of groundnuts, dates, etc. We have our meals both times only in the cabin. We have second-class tickets. There is no third-class or deck accommodation on this ship. It is very crowded. There is no room for moving about on the deck. I think we should reach Bombay on January 11th or 12th.

1 Secretary of the Indian Field Ambulance Training Corps
I study Bengali on the ship. I have not been able to read much on account of the cold.

Every effort is being made for Mr. Kallenbach. He will come as soon as he gets permission.

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: S. N. 6098

265. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

December 26 [1914]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

Much to our surprise there was no cable from you at Gibraltar. The inference I drew was that there was no reply yet received. We reach Malta tomorrow (Sunday). I hope to have a word from you then.

The voyage has been uneventful. The pain in the ribs continues. The weather is still cold, though the sea is calm. Our menu still continues the same. I have taught the baker how to make our bread. So I am making use of Allinson’s meal they have on board, thanks to your foresight. He makes it much better than we should. I asked him to whip the water before adding it to the flour. This aerates the bread and makes it very light. They supply delicious oranges and now tomatoes also. So you see we have really more than we want. Though the temptation to take cooked food is great (the 2nd Steward has offered to have anything specially prepared) we have hitherto resisted it.

I do not get up early. There is no stove to warm myself at. I, therefore, remain in bed up to 9 a.m. and keep warm. Mrs. Gandhi does likewise.

I do fairly decent strolling on deck. The groins are still keeping well.

For reading what time I get I devote to Bengali. I write as much as I can in order to get a hold on the alphabet. Not much time however can be given to study owing to the severely cold weather. One cannot keep warm for long.

So much for ourselves. What about you, I wonder! Mrs. Gandhi often misses you. It shows how people are sometimes appreciated when they are not available.

I can only repeat the formula. Do not allow circumstances to master you. We are made to master them. If we succumb to them, they unman and enslave us. If we control them we ever ascend and grow manlier. Study of Gujarati is a necessity. And do read The Light of Asia, Bunyan, Thomas a Kempis again and again and yet again.

I take it you are giving some time to Mrs. Olive Schreiner. It may not be amiss to give W.P. Schreiner a call. His offices are in Victoria Street.

With love,

From Your Old Friend

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

266. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

December 30 [1914]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

Yet no cable from you. You have made me somewhat anxious. I am hoping against hope that I may have something from you at Port Said this evening. For we reach that place about 9 p.m. tonight.

I have had somewhat of a setback. The piles reappeared and the pain in the side seemed to be slightly greater than before. I attribute the piles to the pure wheat bread I described to you. We have therefore dropped it and we are now living purely on biscuits made there and fruit. The piles have subsided and I am hoping that the ten days that now remain will not cause any complications. I have found a very decent Bengali scholar. So I am reading Bengali with him. All the time I can get is given to Bengali only. Mrs. Gandhi too is not well. She is just now beside me with a severe headache on. I have put her in one of our sleeping chairs. Such are the ups and downs of life and such the hopes and disappointments. I notice that I have lost much in London in mental equilibrium. My mind wavers and longs for things which I had thought it had laid aside. How we are deceived! We fancy that we have got rid of particular desires but suddenly we discover that they were only asleep in us and not dead. No, London has done me no good. Instead of returning to India a man full of health and hope, I am returning a broken-down man not knowing what he is to do or be in India and I did not know before too. But it was a joy not to know, now it is not a joy. The anchor of hope is not there to buoy me up. So, my dear Lower House (the expression has still a sweet flavour), beware of London! You are in the city of Darkness. Let the Inner Light guide you and keep you on the narrow and straight path. I am free of the place and yet it haunts me.

No more now.

With love,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

267. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

[About 1914]

... then it is possible. I wish that such things should occur to you. I firmly believe that there is some [truth] in it. I easily experience the presence of some great men. Now something more about diet.

At 1 o’clock. I take bananas, grapes and groundnuts. I have enough groundnuts. When that is over, I will take almonds. The groundnuts also seem to suit me here. Even then, I am an exception as far as groundnuts are concerned. Rama and Mr. Kallenbach also take groundnuts. However, for the last two days, they are taking almonds. In the evening, we have gruel made of queni mill and some hand-made bread without powder. Both butter and milk are added to the gruel. Some salt is added to it and so also sugar. From today, sugar has been removed from my diet. I take some groundnuts in the evening also. It does not spoil the taste of my mouth. Mr. Kallenbach keeps fine. Rama takes a glass of milk and a piece of bread in the morning. His health has become very good. I do not feel that milk is necessary but that can be said for sure only after special experience. I, on my part, have not taken milk for a long time but there is no adverse effect on me. Most of the Indians who were in the jail, had done without milk and ghee, but they came out quite healthy. Lakhs of poor like Thambi Naidu never get milk. The experience of such people suggests that one can preserve one’s strength even without milk. There may be many reasons behind the instruction to the householder to keep a cow. One is that a householder quite frequently uses his semen and is, therefore, advised it’s use. The late Raychandbhai had written that a person who wants to observe unadulterated brahmacharya should give up milk. It is obvious that brahmacharya serves the purpose of milk for many. Otherwise many a youth from Kathiwar, used to drinking milk have left this world. I had told Dr. Mehta of my opinion that all of them were lustful and that is why they had gone. He had agreed with me. Dharamsi is no more. What is the reason for his going? He would have drunk plenty of milk and partaken [of food from] a number of offerings. But in a room like a store-room, he most probably regularly played with the body of a small innocent girl. Leading such an immoral life, eating rotis made of mill-flour and enjoying the rich ‘malarial’ food of Bombay, he ‘ruined’ his health and left this world. Such is the favour shown by God to India that either demons will survive in India, or religious persons. Persons pretending to be religious men, either consciously or unconsciously, will not survive. Our eyes will open only when such things happen on a large scale. Such thoughts come to my mind quite often. All this is not for running down milk but to help one to get rid of his attachment for milk.

1 From the contents, the letter appears to belong to the year 1914; see references to usefulness of milk in “Letter to Jamnadas Gandhi”, 2-7-1913; 19-7-1913, “Letter to Chhaganlal Gandhi”, 11-3-1914; to benefits of a fruit diet, ibid to Santok’s health, ibid and to good health of jail inmates ibid which match the references to these subjects as mentioned in this letter.

I have discovered one thing. It takes a lot of time to cook queni mill. How can we waste so much time? I have not found a reason here to live on just dry fruits. It seems that at present we will have to keep wheat with us.

I soaked wheat in water for about 12 hours and then roasted them. I thought they would pop up but that did not happen. On 1 Raychand Rayjibhai Mehta, also known as Rajchandra; a poet and a man of great character and learning; died young at the age of thirty-three. His writings exercised a great influence on Gandhiji, greater than the writings of Ruskin or Tolstoy or Thoreau.

---

2 Dr. Jivraj Mehta
being roasted, wheat became hard. I added hot milk and sugar to it. It became gruel. Chewing it took a lot of time. I, no doubt, ate it with relish but not Rama and Mr. Kallenbach. I have had a coffee-mill bought. In it, I ground the roasted wheat into rough powder. I soaked the powder in a mixture of water and milk for 10 minutes and added a pinch of salt and a spoon of butter. Mr. Kallenbach and I ate it without sugar. Rama added some sugar to it. After that, we had two bananas and an apple each. I think that was sufficient. Roasted wheat can be eaten as it is. It is good if cooked the way I have described. It also tastes good if it is roasted in ghee and jaggery. Water should be added to it. It is also good if you eat it with cow’s milk or tinned milk. This thing should be eaten in place of bread or roti and is meant to save time. It is clean. It would have no worms like the flour. It is enough if the wheat is roasted once a week. It does not require a big stove, etc., and one can very easily prepare the best food in ten minutes. Wheat can be sent from here if you want to prepare the food I have described and you do not get wheat there.

Why should we indulge in such activities? Why should we experiment with food? Where will it take us? Such thoughts come to me quite often. Every seeker of self will have such thoughts. They are not worthless and in our condition, they are necessary. We are setting up everything new. If we [do not experiment], to what things would we cling? Our normal food is full of rituals and takes a whole day to eat. To cling to that food, is attachment. Living on fruit is the best. At present, however, fruit diet alone will not do. So, we have to think of something close to fruit diet. With that aim in view, I feel like making innocent experiments. Maybe there is some attachment in that too. At present, I do not feel that way. Experience suggests that as we start leading a simple life and as we become firm in our search for self-realisation, our craving for variety in food dwindles. The [craving] for food I had an year ago is there no more. Mr. Kallenbach keeps on testing me. He also feels the same way. From that it appears that I am on the right path. I had to do the same in England twenty years ago and could thus subsist on a non-violent diet there.

Now I have written enough. This letter has been written on the basis of the questions raised by you and Purshottamdas in your letters. Both of you should read it. Send it to Chhaganlal if you think it proper. If you fear that the views about food will provoke him, do not send it to him.
For prolonging the life of Santok, it is very necessary for her to take simple food, Kühne’s baths and, if required, mud-packs, and agreeable exercises. She should sleep in the open with the face uncovered. If she feels cold, she can wrap a shawl around her head but the face should be kept out of the cover. If the face is kept uncovered, one will breathe through the nose only. One can manage without water for a day but without air one cannot live even for a minute. If the water is polluted, it can have an adverse effect on one’s health. One can easily imagine how much worse will be the effect of polluted air on one’s health. But we remain indifferent to things which we do not see with our naked eye. We would touch the feet of God if we could see him without naked eyes . . .

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32926

268. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

S. S. ARABIA,
Paush Vad 3 [January 3, 1915]¹

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

Today is Sunday. We will reach Aden in the morning. I was very much depressed and despondent till Port Said. Whatever the reason, but the moment I left behind the gateway to Europe, I cheered up, was full of hope again and the joy of returning to mother country became more intensified. I spent the time on the Red Sea in a state of spiritual bliss. I regularly read Tulsidas’s chaupais for spiritual company. I am reading them with a new zest. For all I know, the Indian soil itself might act as spiritual company for me. I have gone back to my normal diet and Ba does not interfere. Everything seems to be going on very well. Only time will tell whether it is transient or lasting.

Both of us were not well but now we seem to be all right. I still have pain in the ribs but that does not make me uneasy. From today, I have started wearing my Indian dress of the South African days. In India, I will wear only our customary dress. Here, the dress of South African days seems more suitable.

¹ The letter is incomplete.
² Though Paush Vad 3 in the year 1915, when Gandhiji returned to India from South Africa, corresponded to January 4, a Monday, the letter was actually written the previous day as the first sentence of the letter indicates.
I am occupied in my study of Bengali and for that reason, I am not writing other letters. Show this to all the inmates of the Phoenix Ashram. Ask Bhai Pragji\textsuperscript{1} to translate it or if you have the time, do it yourself and send it to Johannesburg.

Ba sends her blessings to all of you. Tell Imam Saheb that I will definitely see his father.

\textit{Blessings from Mohandas}

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32904

269. \textsc{INTERVIEW TO “THE BOMBAY CHRONICLE”}

\textit{January 9, 1915}

On January 9, 1915, the day of his arrival in Bombay from abroad, Gandhiji was interviewed by a representative of \textit{The Bombay Chronicle}.

I need hardly say that having been out of India for practically a quarter of a century, and without interruption for over 13 years, both my wife and I were exceedingly glad to see again the dear old Motherland, and the kind and hearty reception which the public gave us has added to the joy, and overwhelmed us. I can only hope that by our future conduct we shall have deserved this welcome.

As the public know, I, in common with many of our countrymen, offered my services to the authorities in connection with the War. These services were accepted,\textsuperscript{2} and I had hoped that I should be able to render personal service in one or other of the hospitals that had been placed at the disposal of the wounded Indian soldiers. Unfortunately, however, I was suffering from pleurisy, and the Commanding Officers in charge of the various sections would not listen to my going to any of the hospitals. Meanwhile, Mrs. Gandhi had a relapse of an old malady, and the Under-Secretary of State for India\textsuperscript{3}, on hearing this, immediately wrote to me saying that, after all, my work, so far as the organisation of the corps was concerned, was finished, and that as both of us were ill. we should at once return to

\textsuperscript{1} Pragji Khanduhbai Desai, Gandhi’s co-worker in South Africa; among the earliest to arrive at the Tolstoy Farm; taught the youngsters at the Farm and wrote regularly for the Gujarati section of \textit{Indian Opinion}

\textsuperscript{2} Vide “Letter to Under-Secretary for India”, 14-8-1914

\textsuperscript{3} Charles Roberts
India. Hence it is that we are here before our time.

I know that the public would like something with reference to the South African situation, and I can but repeat what I have said so often before, that every point on which passive resistance was directed has been completely gained, through the great assistance that was rendered by our noble Viceroy\(^1\) and the generous public of India, led by the Hon. Mr. Gokhale\(^2\). I must confess that the Ministers there were very frank, and entered into the spirit of the struggle, and, as you are aware, General Smuts\(^3\), speaking during the debate on the deportation of the leaders of the railway strike, distinguished passive resistance from the latter and justified our position. There is now a spirit of sympathy, and, I think a desire to consult Indian opinion before undertaking any special legislation affecting us in South Africa. I have, therefore, every hope for the future. Not that all the disabilities have been removed, but the bulk of them have, and by proper conduct on our part, and sympathetic administration on the part of the Government, there need be no fear of a repetition of the miseries so many of us have had to go through.

Questioned as to his future movements, Mr. Gandhi said he had come to India to settle here, and he would not go back to Africa unless circumstances rendered it necessary. He did not know what he would do here, but he would be at the service of Mr. Gokhale, whom he had for years recognised as his guide and leader, and his movements would be largely controlled and directed by him. Mr. Gandhi concluded:

For the present, as Mr. Gokhale has very properly pointed out,\(^4\) I, having been out of India for so long, have no business to form any definite conclusions about matters essentially Indian, and that I should pass some time here as an observer and a student. This I have promised to do, and I hope to carry out my promise.

The Bombay Chronicle, 11-1-1915

---

\(^1\) Lord Hardinge

\(^2\) Gopal Krishna Gokhale (1866-1915), educationist and statesman.

\(^3\) J. C. Smuts (1870-1950), South African general and statesman, later Prime Minister

\(^4\) Vide “Speech at Reception by Ahmedabad Citizens”, 2-2-1915.
Questioned regarding the position of Indians in South Africa, he [Gandhiji] said that it was much better than it was before the settlement, all the points to which passive resistance was applied having been gained. He thought that on the whole the Indian community was satisfied with the “relieving legislation”\(^1\) that had been passed. The future, he said, very largely depended upon the Indians themselves, as well as on the personnel of the Ministry.

One great thing which I think has been attained is that the Government have recognised that, in any legislation affecting the British Indians in South Africa, Indians should be consulted and their wishes respected as far as possible. This I think to be an advance in the right direction. This happy result has no doubt been arrived at owing to the valuable assistance afforded to our great and righteous cause by H. E. Lord Hardinge and the magnificent response made by the Motherland under the spirited guidance of my esteemed friend, the Hon. Mr. Gokhale.

Describing the present attitude of the Indian settlers in South Africa, Mr. Gandhi said there was no hesitation on the part of the whole community in offering their services to the local and Imperial Governments during the war. Though the occasion for the acceptance of the services had not arisen, the offer was much appreciated by the Governments. Mr. Gandhi added that on the whole the present Ministry\(^2\) was not unsympathetic and, as it understood Indian questions, was probably better able to understand the Indian mind and therefore better calculated to advance Indian interests than any other Ministry. The material position of the Indians in the colony was not all that could be desired, but its improvement depended upon the future commercial outlook.

Mr. Gandhi said that he intended to devote his time to study Indian problems during the remainder of his life and he did not propose to return to the scene of his former activities unless some unforeseen call was made upon him.

---

1. Indian Relief Bill (1914); vide “Letter to Lazarus”, after 17-4-1915.
2. With Louis Botha as Prime Minister.
271. SPEECH AT RECEPTION, GHATKOPAR

January 11, 1915

At a reception to Mr. and Mrs. M. K. Gandhi at Ghatkopar [Bombay] on Monday, Mr. Gandhi was presented with an address enclosed in a silver casket, with fetters made of gold, Rao Bahadur Vassanji Khimji presiding.

Mr. Gandhi, in acknowledging the gifts, described the silver casket and the fetters as somewhat unsuitable to a person who had neither a roof over his head nor locked doors to his house. Fetters, whether of gold or of iron, were the same to him, as they were fetters after all. A function like the one they held, he said, was most uncongenial to him, and the temptations it involved would tend to spoil a person like him whose only thought was to serve his Motherland, irrespective of praise or blame, with no expectation of any reward whatsoever.

The only idea behind his work was duty. He had only been able to do so far one anna of it and he had returned to his country after all these years to try his best to do what he could of the other 15 annas in the years that were left to him. He hoped for nothing and wished for nothing, beyond being able to fulfil the duty that lay before him. He entreated them all to accept whatever service he could give, and not to give him costly presents which he could not use, and which could be put to far better uses. He sincerely trusted that they would not misunderstand him; he was only expressing his innermost feelings.

The Bombay Chronicle, 15-1-1915

272. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

Posh Vad 10¹, 1971, Monday [January 11, 1915]

CHI. MAGANLAL².

I have your letter. I was filled with tears of joy when, nearing Bombay, I sighted the coast. I am still beside myself with joy. I don’t like Bombay, though. It looks as if it were the scum of London. I see here all the shortcomings of London but find none of its amenities;

¹ The Original has Posh Vad 11, which appears to be a slip, for that day was a Tuesday.
² Son of Khushalchand Gandhi, Gandhiji’s cousin. Maganlal had assisted Gandhiji for about a decade in his activities and experiments in South Africa; left Phoenix in August 1914 with a party of about 25 students and teachers for India, and with the party stayed at Tagore’s Santiniketan.
this is also one of the benefits of living in India. It would seem that Lady India had resolved to exhibit nothing but the scum of London lest we should be thrown off our balance by the amenities. I feel suffocated by all this public honouring. I have not known a moment’s peace. There is an endless stream of visitors. Neither they nor I gain anything.

My health is good, on the whole, and the same is true of Ba’. I am divided in my heart over three places Rajkot, Porbunder and Bolpur. It will take more than a month before I am there. You do well to stay on patiently there. A farmer should not go about from place to place. A farmer’s son would be violating his dharma if he were to neglect sowings that he might go and see his father. You have spread your fragrance there; it must be that some good deeds of yours and mine are now bearing their fruit. Mr. Andrews\(^3\) writes much in praise of you. We are to meet before long, so I won’t write much. This letter is meant for you all.

I think all of us should know the Hindi, Urdu, Tamil and Bengali scripts. It would be good if the children could be taught all these. I gave much thought to this matter while on board the ship.

I have made considerable progress in the study of Bengali. I shall leave here on the 16th for Rajkot.\(^4\) I shall return before February 5, to leave for Poona immediately and from there proceed to Bolpur. Let me know the shortest way to that place. Ask Mr. Andrews or Mr. Pearson\(^5\) about it. I am glad that your difficulties about food are over. I have been living entirely on fruit, subsisting mostly on bananas, groundnuts and lime.

Blessings from

BAPU

---

1. Kasturba Gandhi
2. At Bolpur
3. Charles Freer Andrews (1871-1940), British missionary who took great interest in Vishwabharati University founded by Tagore; his devoted services for many years in the cause of the Indian people won him the name ‘Deenbandhu’ “brother of the poor”; he was deeply attached to Gandhiji.
5. William Winstanley Pearson, a Christian missionary and an active supporter of Indians; for some time teacher at Santiniketan
Tell me if I should bring anything. I have not been able to bring any books from England. We may get them here, if you send me the names. Mr. Kallenbach\(^1\) has not been able to come, since he did not get the permission.

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C. W. 5660. Courtesy: Radhabehn Choudhri

273. SPEECH AT PUBLIC RECEPTION, BOMBAY

January 12, 1915

A public reception was accorded by the elite of Bombay to Gandhiji and Shrimati Kasturba Gandhi at Mount Petit, on January 12, 1915, over 600 distinguished citizens being present, including Europeans. The Hon. Sir Pherozeshah Mehta\(^2\), who presided, warmly welcomed the guests of the evening.

Replying to the toast, Mr. Gandhi said that he did not know that the right word would come to him to express the feelings that had stirred within him that afternoon. He had felt that he would be more at home in his own Motherland than he used to be in South Africa among their own countrymen. But during the three days that they had passed in Bombay, they had felt—and he thought he was voicing the feelings of his wife, too—that they were much more at home among those indentured Indians, who were the truest heroes of India. They felt that they were indeed in strange company here in Bombay, and that reminded him of one thing said to him by a great Englishman, namely, that duty would be merited [sic] at the last.

In what he had done, he had done nothing beyond his duty and it remained to be seen how far he had succeeded in doing his duty. That was not a mere lip expression but he asked them to believe sincerely that these were his feelings. He felt all that his elders had done for him, all that his political leaders had done for him, all that Sir Pherozeshah Mehta had done for him and he could recall many an incident when he, i.e., Sir Pherozeshah Mehta, had cheered him up while he was a young briefless barrister in his disappointments. He had had the honour of receiving instruction, guidance, and advice from many other distinguished countrymen of his own, and

\(^1\) Hermann Kallenbach, a German associate of Gandhiji in South Africa, who left South Africa for India with Gandhiji, was not allowed by the British Government to go to India because of the War and was held up in London.

\(^2\) (1845-1915), one of the founders of the Indian National Congress, its President in 1890 and 1909.
would he not be ungrateful if he did not do what they told him to do? He had paid his respects to the Grand Old Man of India—Mr. Dadabhoy Naoroji1—that morning. His life was an inspiration to him and in that connection he dared not leave out one name, that of his guide—at least his political leader, the Hon. Mr. Gokhale. (Cheers.) His life was more than an inspiration to him. Mr. Gokhale had been to him more than a brother. He also must not omit to mention the deep debt that he owed to all his countrymen, let alone the memory of his revered parents, who taught him to respect them and through them the whole country. They were paying these regards to them, who were but poor creatures, while the real heroes were the indentured labourers. He wished to remind them of the indentured Indian that staggered him in jail. When he met that Indian, he did not know what inspired the latter to go to jail, and what inspired him to utter the words he did utter. He told the Indian that there was no occasion for him to go there and that he had never advised such of his countrymen as Harbat Singh2 to go there. But that old Indian said that he could not restrain himself from going there when he saw his poor brothers and sisters go there for the honour of the country. How could he leave himself out, he asked, and added that he wanted to die there. They were alive and he was dead. That man was the hero and there were many of his type. If he had lived and come out to India, they would not have noticed him, perhaps he too would not have noticed him. All honour was due to the memory of Harbat Singh.

They had also honoured Mrs. Gandhi as the wife of the great Gandhi. He had no knowledge of the great Gandhi, but he could say that she could tell them more about the sufferings of women who rushed with babies to jail and who had now joined the majority than he could.

In conclusion, Mr. Gandhi appealed to them to accept the services of himself and his wife for, he said, they had come to render such service as God would enable them to do. They had not come to receive big entertainments like that because they did not think they were worthy of such presents. He felt that they would only spoil them if ever by such action a thought crossed their minds that they had done something to deserve such a big tamasha made in their honour. He, however, thanked them on behalf of his wife and himself most sincerely for the great honour done to them that afternoon and he hoped to receive the blessings of the whole country in their endeavour to serve the Motherland. Hitherto, he said, they had known nothing of his failures. All the news that they had received related to his successes. Here they would now see them in the naked light and would see their faults, and anticipating such faults and failures, he asked them to overlook them, and with that appeal, he said, they as humble servants would commence the service of their country. He again thanked them most sincerely for the very great honour done to himself and his wife.

1 (1825-1917), the first Indian to be elected member of the British Parliament in 1893; President of the Indian National Congress thrice, in 1886, 1893 and 1906; author of Poverty and Un-British Rule in India; vide “The Grand Old Man of India”, 3-9-1910.

2 An old man of 75 from Uttar Pradesh; vide “Speech at Public Reception, Madras”, 21-4-1915.

_The Bombay Chronicle, 13-1-1915_

274. SPEECH AT NATIONAL UNION MEETING AT BOMBAY

_January 13, 1915_

At a meeting convened by the Bombay National Union at Hirabag [Bombay] on the 13th instant to welcome Mr. and Mrs. Gandhi, Mr. Tilak¹ was present, though no formal invitation was sent to him. The meeting was attended by about 250 persons. Mr. Tilak addressing the gathering said that they were only doing their duty in honouring Mr. and Mrs. Gandhi, as they had fought for the honour of India in a distant land. He said that India ought to produce more men and women of the self-sacrificing spirit of the honoured guests, and impressed upon the audience that this was the lesson they had to learn from the career of Mr. Gandhi.

Mr. Gandhi’s speech was colourless and formal; he expressed the gratefulness of the Indians in South Africa to the mother country which contributed lavishly to the fund² for their relief during the late struggle. He said it was a pleasure to meet Mr. Tilak in Bombay as he fully intended to pay his respects to him when he visited Poona.

Mr. Baptista said that it did not matter whom Mr. Gandhi selected as his guru (this refers to a remark made by Mr. Gandhi that Mr. Gokhale was his guru), so long as he always held before him the ideals of honour and self-respect, as he had done throughout his life. Both he and Mr. Ali Muhammad Bhimji referred to the gallant conduct of the Indian troops in support of the cause of right in the present war.

Bombay Government Police Abstracts, 1915, p. 40, Para 60

¹ “Lokamanya” Bal Gangadhar Tilak (1856-1920); Indian patriot politician and scholar.

275. SPEECH AT SERVANTS OF INDIA SOCIETY, BOMBAY

January 14, 1915

The premises of the Servants of India Society’s home in Bombay were tastefully decorated for the entertainment that was given to Mr. & Mrs. Gandhi on the evening of 14th January by the members of the Bombay Branch of the Society and by some of those who were associated with it as its helpers, supporters and co-workers. Among those present were Sir Bhalchandra Krishna, Sir Vithaldas Thakersey, Sir Jagmohandas, Shet Dani, Shet Hansraj Pragjee, Mrs. Ramabai Ranade, Lady Jagmohandas, Mrs. Sonabai Jayker, Mrs. Bahadurjee and others. On the arrival of Mr. and Mrs. Gandhi, Mr. Devadhar spoke on behalf of those that were assembled.

Mr. Gandhi, then, in the course of a brief speech, said that he was proud to have seen so many men and women who helped the Servant of India Society, which would soon be the sphere of his work. He had accepted Mr. Gokhale as his political leader and guide and he considered those people fortunate who had the privilege of being associated with Mr. Gokhale in their work. He would go over the country for one year and, after studying things for himself, he would decide his line of work. In conclusion, he thanked all the ladies and gentlemen, on his behalf as well as on behalf of his wife, for the honour they did them.

Sir Bhalchandra garlanded Mr. Gandhi and Mrs. Ramabai garlanded Mrs. Gandhi. After the distribution of flowers, etc., the whole assembly partook [of] refreshments.

276. SPEECH AT GURJAR SABHA RECEPTION, BOMBAY

January 14, 1915

A garden party in honour of Gandhiji and Shrimati Kasturba Gandhi was given by members of the Gurjar Sabha, Bombay, on the grounds of Mangaldas House, on January 14, 1915. Messrs M. A. Jinnah, Chairman of the Sabha, who presided on the occasion, and K. M. Munshi having spoken (in English) welcoming the guests,

1 Founded by Gokhale in 1905 with headquarters in Poona, the members being life-workers in the service of the nation
2 A brief report of this also appeared in Gujarati, 17-1-1915.
3 Mohammad Ali Jinnah (1876-1948), Muslim leader, founder and first Governor-General of Pakistan
4 (1887-), lawyer, politician and author; founder and President of Bharatiya Vidya Bhavan; Governor of U.P., 1952-7
Gandhi replied as follows:

Mr. Gandhi, who spoke in Gujarati, thanked Mr. Jinnah for presiding at this function and said that while he was in South Africa and anything was said about Gujaratis, it was understood to have a reference to the Hindu community only and Parsis and Mahomedans were not thought of. He was, therefore, glad to find a Mahomedan a member of the Gurjar Sabha and the chairman of that function.

With regard to their words of praise and welcome, he was at a loss to say anything. As he had said so often before, he and his wife had done nothing beyond their duty. He did not wish to repeat the same thing, but he desired to say that he considered all these good feelings and kind words as their blessings and he prayed to God that those blessings might enable him and his wife faithfully to serve their country. They first intended to study all the Indian questions and then enter upon the service of the country. He had looked upon the Hon. Mr. Gokhale as his guide and leader and he had full confidence in him and he was sure that Mr. Gokhale would not put him on the wrong track. He had visited His Excellency the Governor that morning and while thanking him for the honour, he also mentioned the same thing that he was absolutely confident that under the guiding spirit of the Hon. Mr. Gokhale he would be adopting the right course.

Continuing, Mr. Gandhi said that the chairman had referred to the South African question. He had a good deal to say on this subject and he would explain the whole situation in the very near future to the Bombay public and through them to the whole of India. The compromise was satisfactory and he trusted that what had remained to be gained would be gained. The South Africans had now learnt that they could not utterly disregard the Indians or disrespect their feelings.

With regard to the Hindu-Mahomedan question he had much to learn, but he would always keep before his eyes his twenty-one years’ experience in South Africa and he still remembered that one sentence uttered by Sir Syed Ahmed, namely, that the Hindus and Mahomedans were the two eyes of Mother India and if one looked at one end and the other at the other, neither would be able to see anything and that if one was gone, the other would see to that extent only. Both the communities had to bear this in mind in the future.

In conclusion, he thanked them for the great honour done to him and his wife.

_The Bombay Chronicle, 15-1-1915_

---

1 Lord Willingdon
2 Sir Syed Ahmed Khan (1817-98), educationist and reformer; founder of the Mahomedan Anglo-Oriental College at Aligarh
277. FRAGMENT OF LETTER

[Before January 15, 1915]

. . . You must have seen Radha. You should urge her to write to me. Ask Raliatbehn to have patience. We shall meet only when God wills it. She should not be quite so eager that we should meet. I am taken up with such difficult tasks. I indeed very much want to see her, but I have simply no time. Tell me all about conditions at home. Let me know how Fuli does. Give me all details now about the conditions in the home, who is in charge of shopping, and so on.

I met Harilal. He looks very handsome. . .

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: S.N. 6714

278. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

ON THE TRAIN,
[January 16, 1915]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

Not a minute’s rest. Your cable received. I am sorry. I shall try.

Good-bye.

Love,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

---

1 Only the seventh page of this letter is available.
2 The letter appears to have been written immediately after Gandhiji’s arrival in India and before Gandhiji left Bombay for Rajkot.
3 Maganlal Gandhi’s daughter
4 Gandhiji’s sister; also known as Gokibehn
I have not been keeping very fit and, during the last thirty-six hours, my health has gone down very badly; but I have conserved my strength as much as possible in order to be able to visit my native town, Rajkot. Coming here, I fully realize what a loss I have suffered in the death of Shri Kevalrambhai, whom I respected as an elder. This is a painful thought to me. I have been laid under an obligation by Shri Pandit who has won the affection [of the people] of this Province by his fine qualities and who has expressed good wishes for me. I regard it as my good fortune, moreover, that in the absence of Shri Kavelrambhai I have been presented this address by you, a friend of his. His Excellency the Governor told me that the spontaneous demonstration of popular feeling towards me suggested that I was likely to have a fruitful career. I have had today first-hand proof of the truth of this. The daughter of my friend, Mr. Shukla\(^2\), was the first to put a tilak on me and garland me. I look upon this as a blessing. The honour I have been receiving in Rajkot is beyond all bounds. In India it has become a kind of custom to accord such excessive honour.

Hills, they say, look pleasing from a distance; you have only heard my praises. But we have done nothing in particular. We have come here only as novices ready to learn. Everyone must have observed that nowadays people work with a variety of motives. It is extremely difficult to know what is in the heart of any individual. We are now in India and you will find it easier to form a correct opinion about us from what we do. The world is full of selfish men, who work with some ulterior motive or other. But to work in this manner is like mixing poison in milk. We have much to learn from Kathiawar and, when we have gone through the training, you will have an opportunity of testing us. I must tell you, however, that you will then see our failures also; I ask of you that [even then] you should keep up, unimpaired, the love which you have shown today. Let the rest of the

---

1 Bejonji Meherwanji Damri, the Dewan of Rajkot, presiding
2 A barrister practising at Rajkot; friend and fellow-student of Gandhiji country forsake me, if it will, because of any failure of mine; if the people of Rajkot even then overlook my shortcomings with a generous heart I shall believe that your expression of love today was really the result of genuine feeling. This love of yours will be put to the test at that time. As for our achievements in South Africa, I tell you that people of lower standing than ours did a thousand times better work than we. An old man of 75 and a young girl of 17 both died in jail.¹ I am a barrister and it is natural, therefore, that I should feel impelled to work. But innumerable men and women, poor souls, gave their lives in the service of the nation, suffering the hardships of Jail life, merely because of their faith and as a matter of duty. What honour will you do to them? These persons, like truly heroic spirits, sacrificed their lives. Accepting, now, this honour you have done to us as a form of blessing, we dedicate our services to the country and declare here that we should be thought of as good children of Rajkot if we always show ourselves keen on doing our duty; but as unworthy ones if we are found to be remiss. I thank you all.

[From Gujarati]

Kathiawar Times, 17-1-1915

280. SPEECH AT RECEPTIONS BY RAJKOT MODH COMMUNITY

January 20, 1915

... In reply, Mr. Gandhi pointed out that men who entered public life had to make their hearts hard indeed. He had lost an elder brother² and had also had to bear other losses. Nevertheless, when attending parties, he had to agree to being entertained with songs, poems, etc., though he was in mourning. If he kept back his grief in order to receive such honour, it was because he received it as a symbol of the people’s love. People should understand the real meaning of what little he had done and when he undertook something to serve the interests of the community or the people at large, he would demand their help as a matter of right because of their love for him.

If the people respond favourably at such a testing time, I shall believe that the love you have shown towards me on this occasion is sincere. If they refuse the help I ask for, I shall believe that you have only been following one another blindly, like so many sheep, and that it is just the same whether an address is written on a sheet of gold or silver, or merely on paper, none of them being of greater worth than dust. I must admit that, when I returned to India as a barrister, the Modh community elsewhere deserted me but that the Modh people here at Rajkot stood by me. I would be an ungrateful man to forget this and hence I regard the honour I have received today as a blessing.

---

¹ Harbat Singh and Valiamma; vide “Speech at Public Reception, Madras”, 21-4-1915.
² Laxmidas Gandhi, who passed away at Porbander on March 9, 1914.

[From Gujarati]
Kathiawar Times, 24-1-1915

281. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH
January 22 [1915]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

Harilal has written to you at my instance. But I wanted to give you a line no matter where I was. We left Rajkot this morning. We are here at a place called Jetpur. I am writing this squatting on the verandah of a nice isolated bungalow. Addresses have been raining on me. I am perfectly sick of them. I doubt very much whether they will serve any purpose. However there they are; I [am] receiving them at the cost of my health. I am due at Poona about the 10th February. Pleurisy has become chronic. It is not very painful but it necessitates great care.¹

So you are not free to come. There is a divine purpose in all this forced separation.¹ I am anxiously waiting for your letter. And then I may be able to do something. My constant prayer every day is that you may be rightly guided during your stay in London and that you may take no new step hastily.

May I ask you in all you do to think over the past and keep before you our joint ideals?

I had your first letter at Rajkot. The second should have reached

¹ From the contents
The addressee was not allowed by the British Government to visit India because of the War and was held up in London.

² Vide also An Autobiography, Part IV, Ch.s XLI and XLII.

³ The addressee was not allowed by the British Government to visit India because of the War and was held up in London.
me by this time but it has not.
With love,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

282. SPEECH AT RECEPTION AT DARBARGADH

January 22, 1915

Mr. Gandhi said that he was much gratified to see that Hindus and Mahomedans were united on the occasion and knowing that they had done so he had accepted the invitation to come down to Dhoraji. In the future he would undertake to bring about happier and closer relations between these two communities.

Kathiawar Times, 24-1-1915

283. SPEECH AT RECEPTION BY PORBUNDER MODH COMMUNITY

January 25, 1915

I am happy beyond words in accepting your blessings, here in this place of my birth and my childhood days. As for my services to the country, I ought to say that it is not for me alone to follow truth. All of us can follow it if we choose, and, if we do, not I alone but all of us shall deserve honour and be able to play our part in some great task.

[From Gujarati]
Kathiawar Times, 31-1-1915

1 A place near Dhoraji in Saurashtra
284. SPEECH AT PORBUNDER IN REPLY TO CITIZENS’ ADDRESS

January 25, 1915

After visiting a few places, I shall come back here. So many herbs grow on the hills round here. There is much I can learn about them. I shall move about for a week in the company of my friend Mr. Jaikrishnabhai, the ex-Curator, and be in your midst afterwards.

[From Gujarati]
Kathiawar Times, 31-1-1915

285. LETTER TO MAJOR HANCOCK

RAJKOT,
January 26\textsuperscript{th}, 1915

DEAR SIR,

I am sorry that during my stay in Porbunder I was not able to pay my respects to you. I shall try to seek that opportunity another time when I am again in Porbunder. Meanwhile I would like to thank you for the great kindness that the officials and the public of Porbunder showed to my wife and me during our stay there. I would also like to thank you, if I may, for your help during the passive resistance struggle in South Africa. The Hon’ble Mr. Gokhale told me of the kindly worded letter that accompanied the generous gift.

I am,
Your faithfully,
M. K. GANDHI
MAJOR HANCOCK\textsuperscript{2}

From a copy of the original: C.W. 5661. Courtesy: District Deputy Collector, Porbunder \textsuperscript{1} According to the Diary for 1915, however, Gandhiji left for Rajkot on the 27th.

\textsuperscript{2} Administrator of Porbunder State during the Rana’s minority; later, Political Agent to the Viceroy in Western India States Agency
Rajkot,

Maha Sud 11 [January 26, 1915]

I got your kind telegram at Gondal. I hope you received my reply telegram. I am sorry I have not been able to accept the people’s invitation but I hope that you will all forgive me, seeing that I am helpless. I am in such poor health that, if I did not have to call on my widowed sisters-in-law at Rajkot and Porbunder, I would probably not have come to Kathiawar just at present. On my way to these two places, I passed Gondal and other towns where I was obliged to stop. In thinking of visits to Bhavnagar and other cities, I am afraid for my health and my time is also over. I can now hope to see you all only when I come to this side again after two or three months.

Please accept the respectful greetings of

Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi

[From Gujarati]

Kathiawar Times, 31-1-1915

287. SPEECH AT GONDAL RASASHALA

January 27, 1915

The eminent vaid\(^4\) is a good scholar of Sanskrit and Ayurveda and the rasashala\(^5\) he has established has been serving the people through Ayurveda. The literature published by the Pharmacy is very useful to the people. I used to read some of it in South Africa. I was very much flattered by the compliments a scholar like him paid me in the address which he has read. I shall cherish them for ever. I think highly of Ayurveda. It is one of the ancient sciences of India, which ensures the health of the millions in her thousands of villages. I advise

\(^1\) Chief of the business community of Bhavnagar

\(^2\) Not available

\(^3\) Gandhiji paid a visit to Rasashala Aushadhashram, a celebrated Ayurvedic pharmacy at Gondal, in Saurashtra, and addressed a large gathering of citizens including the Dewan of the State, Ranchhoddas Patwari.

\(^4\) Jivaram Kalidas Shastri, who presented the address on behalf of the Rasashala

\(^5\) Pharmacy
every citizen to live his life in accordance with the principles of Ayurveda. The Pharmacy, the dispensary and the vaidraj, all have my blessings that they may be enabled to render the best possible service to Ayurveda.

[From Gujarati]

Report of Rasashala Aushadhashram, Gondal, 1948

288. SPEECH AT RECEPTION BY GONDAL CITIZENS

January 27, 1915

Shri Gandhi . . . referred to the obligation which His Highness the Thakore Saheb had laid him under, and, being himself unworthy of the epithets applied to him, to his search for someone in India who would be worthy of them, to his struggle over the years, and the struggle that he wished to carry on, to be so worthy, and said that he had tendered all this praise as an offering to Lord Krishna. Giving his blanket to Keshavji Sheth, he asked the Sheth to spend the hundred rupees\(^1\) in the service of the country or for some pious purpose. Pointing out, in conclusion, that it was brahmacharya that led to all the virtues and ensured success in one’s tasks, he said that it was yet to be seen whether the sentiments expressed at the moment would remain the same when the time for testing came.\(^2\)

[From Gujarati]

Gujarati, 7-2-1915

---

\(^1\) The price offered by Shri Sheth for the blanket, which had been put to auction

\(^2\) The English report in the Bombay Chronicle, 1-2-1915, adds: “He [Gandhiji] said the essential qualities a servant of the country should possess were simplicity of life, truthfulness and brahmacharya, and it was his ambition to establish somewhere in the vicinity of Kathiawar [Saurashtra] an institution where the rising generation of the country could be trained in those ideals.”
289. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

RAJKOT,
January 28, 1915

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I have your second letter. Your diary is silent as to your studies. Do you read the Imitation of Christ? Do you attend to the rosary? Do you read Gujarati? Do you read the Song Celestial? The idea of California frightens me. I do not want to restrain you but I would like you not to come to any hasty decision. Do let me try to bring you out here. You need hardly be assured that I shall leave no stone unturned to have you here. At every turn I think of you. At times I feel glad you are not here. For, some of the positions I pass through are most trying. Other times I wish you were here for you would have gained greatly from the experiences you would have passed through in common with me.

Mrs. Gandhi has up to now remained a pure fruitarian. It is a most wonderful thing indeed. I have found no difficulty in remaining a fruitarian up to now. I anticipate none now.

Harilal and Jamnadas are going with me to Bolpur.

With love,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

290. SPEECH AT RECEPTION BY AHMEDABAD CITIZENS

February 2, 1915

Ahmedabad is the capital of Gujarat and the place where I took my [matriculation] examination. The reason why I have especial regard for Ahmedabad is that one of my fellow-workers and

---

1 By Thomas a Kempis
2 Sir Chinubhai Madhavlal, Baronet, presiding
3 In 1887

352 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
fellow-sufferers in the satyagraha campaigns was Mr. Surendrarai Medh, a resident of this place. This place has made an important contribution to the satyagraha struggle. Today I have come on a pilgrimage to it.

We have done no more than our duty. I have come to India to learn. My revered guru, Mr. Gokhale, gave me a piece of advice: One who had been out of India for 25 years should express no opinion about affairs here before he had studied things carefully. Accordingly, I keep my ears open and my mouth shut.

[From Gujarati]
Kathiawar Times, 7-2-1915; also Gujarati, 14-2-1915

291. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

BOMBAY
February 6, 1915

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letters. I am writing against time. My travels are not yet finished. I leave here for Poona very shortly and then go to Bolpur. In a fortnight’s time I may have some peace at Santiniketan. My ribs are not yet right. I have asked Jamnadas to write to you at length. More next week I hope.

With love,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

1 The last two sentences are from Gujarati, 14-2-1915.
292. SPEECH AT MISSION SCHOOL, BOMBAY

February 7, 1915

This function today has given me greater pleasure than any grand reception ever did. I will try to avail myself of every opportunity of meeting you and keeping in touch with you.

[From Gujarati]
Gujarati, 14-2-1915

293. LETTER TO C.F. ANDREWS

Bombay,
February 7, 1915

MY DEAR CHARLIE,

I have hardly any time left to me to attend to correspondence. I have a moment left whilst I am waiting for Mr. Setalvad to come. I shan’t be long before I am with you. We go to Poona tonight. I may leave for Bolpur on the 18th or even earlier. Hope to drop you a wire as soon as the date is fixed. With love,

Yours ever
Mohan

From the original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5663. Courtesy: Radhabehn Choudhri

---

1 Gandhi visited, without any formal invitation, a Mission School for the children of Antyajas, i.e., low-caste Hindus, whom he later described as Harijans, God’s folk.

2 Dr. Sir Chimanlal Harilal Setalvad, a leading member of the Bombay bar; Vice-Chancellor of Bombay University
294. FRAGMENT OF LETTER TO
MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

February 7, 1915

Truthfulness, brahmacharya, non-violence, non-stealing and non-hoarding, these five rules of life are obligatory on all aspirants. Everyone should be an aspirant. A man’s character, therefore, is to be built on the foundation of these disciplines. Beyond doubt, they are to be observed by everyone in the world. Though a business man, one must never utter or practise untruth; though married, one must remain celibate; though keeping oneself alive, one can practise non-violence. It is difficult to be of the world and yet not to steal (to observe the rule of non-stealing) and not to hoard wealth or any other thing. One must, nevertheless, keep that as an ideal to be attained and have some limit in these respects; when the mind has begun to turn away from these things, one may even embrace the supreme renunciation.

Everyone who observes these vows will be able to find a way out of all perplexities.

[From Gujarati]
Bapuni Prasadi

295. LETTER TO MAHATMA MUNSHIRAM

SERVANTS OF INDIA SOCIETY,
POONA CITY,
Magha Krishna Paksha 8 [February 8, 1915]

MAHATMAJI,3

I had your Wire; my reply telegram4 must have reached you. I

---

1 Son of Anandbehn, Gandhiji’s sister
2 From the reference to the addressee’s looking after Gandhiji’s children (Phoenix teachers and boys), the letter appears to have been written in 1915. In 1915, Magha Krishna Paksha 8 corresponded to February 7, but Gandhiji went to Poona from Bombay only on the 8th.
3 Mahatma Munshiram (1856-1926), later known as Swami Shraddhanand; nationalist leader; was active in the Arya Samaj; one of the early pioneers of national education, he founded the Gurukul at Kangri
4 Not available
had written⁠¹ to Mr. Andrews asking him to thank you for the trouble you took looking after my children and for the affection you showered on them. But, as I am anxious to pay my humble respects to you, I deem it my duty to go there without waiting for an invitation. I hope to wait on you on my way back from Bolpur.⁡

Yours respectfully
MOHANDAS GANDHI

From a photostat of the Hindi original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 2205

296. LETTER TO MAGANBHAI H. PATEL

Wednesday [Before February 10, 1915]¹

BHAISHRI MAGANBHAI,

I have your letter. I will never leave you so long as you do not want to leave me. I am aware of your trouble. I want to take work from you keeping that in mind. Take the vows only when you think it right to do so. I shall arrange to have the meeting with your father in good time. The rest from my letter to Maganlal.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 11009. Courtesy: Suryakant C. Patel

---

¹ Letter not available
² Gandhiji left for Bolpur on February 15. He could, however, reach Kangri only on April 6.
³ This letter appears to have been written before the one to Maganlal Gandhi dated February 10, 1915 (vide “Letter to Maganlal Gandhi”, 10-2-1915), wherein Gandhiji, mentions the addressee’s father.
297. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

February 10, 1915

DEAR MR. KALLENBACH

The bearer Mr. Khandwala proceeds to England for his studies. Will you please guide him and introduce him to friends?

Yours sincerely,

M. K. ANDHI

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

298. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

[POONA,]

Maha Vad 11 [February 10, 1915]

CHI. MAGANLAL,

I am writing this letter from the [Servants of India] Society’s premises in Poona. I have talked to Chi. Jamnadas’ about the clothes you have sent for. I saw Maganbhai’s’ father. We had a long talk. He was even pacified somewhat; for the present, however, he will not send his son. We shall have to wait for three months.

I think Chi. Narandas’s’ son will be with me. I have not even considered whether it will be possible to accommodate all. If it is not possible, we shall come away from there earlier. There will be some delay, of course, since nothing will be decided in a hurry. Meanwhile, I have decided to bring along those who live with us, that they may not be left to fend for themselves.

I am not bringing the sitar and tabla, as I am told by Prof. Barve that they will be available there; that is, in Calcutta, of good

1 From Gandhiji’s tour itinerary mentioned in the letter, it appears to have been written in 1915.
2 Addressee’s younger brother
3 Patel, a teacher in the Phoenix school, who came to India with the addressee
4 Addressee’s younger brother
5 A stringed musical instrument
6 A percussion instrument quality and cheap in price.

Most probably, we shall leave on Monday, that is, on the 15th. We have decided to take the route you have suggested. I don’t write much, since we are to meet soon. I shall reach Bombay on Sunday. If, therefore, you wish to send any telegram, send it there.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I shall be accompanied by Ba, Harilal¹, Jamnadas, Kaku, Ranchhod, Shanti, Chhotalal—Chhabildas’s. These at any rate, and I, are coming. There may be one or two more.

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5644. Courtesy: Radhabehn Choudhri

299. REPLIES TO QUESTIONS AT POONA MEETINGS

February 11/12, 1915

Mr. Gandhi came to Poona on Monday morning . . . was garlanded at several places during his drive through the city to the buildings of the Servants of India Society, where he put up. On Thursday evening the Deccan Sabha met him in a friendly gathering. The next evening he was treated to a friendly party by the Sarvajanik Sabha in its hall. Mr. Gandhi’s conversation at both these conversazione parties was most enjoyable and edifying. To see the living embodiment of simple life and high thoughts was an education in itself. His unassuming demeanour and free and hearty talk were revelations of the pure and burning spirit within. He was asked several questions to which he gave straightforward replies.

Asked about his future plans he replied that he had not yet settled anything and that it was not certain that he would join the Servants of India Society.

Respecting South Africa he was asked why it was that some people there still complained that the question was not yet finally and satisfactorily determined and in what sense he thought it finally settled. Mr. Gandhi replied by pointing out the difference between grievances for which people were ready to sacrifice property and life—in fact, become passive resisters—and grievances which were not felt so acutely. There was a settlement as far as the former kind of grievances were concerned, though there remained others such as those relating to locations and racial distinctions on tramways and railways, towards the removal of which attempts still must be made. But these latter, though serious, were not felt so acutely as to justify the initiation or continuation of the Passive Resistance Movement.

¹ Gandhiji’s eldest son

Asked wherefrom exactly the pressure came upon the Union Govt.,—what exactly as the difficulty which in a way forced that Govt. to yield, he replied that it was the favourable European public opinion in the colony which made it possible for the Passive Resistance Movement to succeed. He recognised the value of the representations of the Indian Government and the Imperial Government, but he thought all these would not have availed much, had the passive resisters not the advantage of the sympathy of the general European public towards their cause. The passive resisters, weak, indigent and unarmed as they were; could not have marched in the way they did in a foreign and alien country had not the tacit sympathy of the general population been on their side. In their march they emptied tanks of water belonging to the Europeans with impunity and even without much remonstrance, and that was saying much in a country where water was very deficient. Some of the white settlers even helped the marching party with food. One of the passive resisters was tempted to steal a blanket but he was not prosecuted by the European owner but generously forgiven. That showed the attitude of the general public of white settlers.
The Bantoos, that is, the original settlers, were not at all hostile, but favourable, if anything, to the Indian cause. The opposition came mainly from some Boers and the trading and industrial classes of the European white population. The planters and the traders—those were the strong opponents of Indian claims. The traders did not stand competition with the Indian merchants and hawkers. The planters opposed the Indians but they could not do without Indian labour.

As to whether the traders and planters wanted to send Indians bag and baggage back to India, Mr. Gandhi said that the planters wanted Indians very badly—but only as indentured labourers. The plantations would be waste lands without Indians.
Indigenous labour was not so steady and skilful as the Indian. In fact it was the Indians who were largely contributing to the industrial prosperity of the colony. And Mr. Gandhi clinched his point by remarking that he had always said to the planters to boycott Indians, if they really did not want them. That was in their hands and Indians could not have legally complained about it. But the Indians were useful labourers and traders and they could not be spared—that was why they were not boycotted.

As to whether there were any temples for Hindus and mausoleums of the Mahomedans, he said there were some but they were more or less apologies of temples and mausoleums. He knew the priests there, and he was obviously sad when he had to speak of their character.

As to how people from different provinces managed to speak with each other, he proudly referred to Hindi. As to social customs, he said that there was inter-dining among the different sections of the Hindus, but not intermarriage.
To the question, whether the Indians there would be absorbed by the population of their country of adoption, he had to give an emphatic “No”—thanks to the Indian civilization. It was obvious from his manner of speech that the “so-called western civilization” was not very highly thought of by him and that he felt a pride in speaking of the Hindu civilization.

The Mahratta, 14-2-1915

300. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

February 12 [1915]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I have seen your letter to Mr. Gokhale. Yours to me has not yet reached me. The idea of California does not appeal to me. But I must not interfere. If you think that your pecuniary position will warrant the enterprise and that London will not make you happy, you may go. The best thing, however, is to await Mr. Gokhale’s arrival there. You will then discuss with him the whole thing. I feel that if you went to a farm in England it would be better. And all this is subject to the result of my efforts to bring you here. This effort I can only make after reaching Bolpur. I reach there next week.

Your letter shows that you were most miserable at the time of writing. There is no peace but from within. And this I know that any peace brought from without is false and transient. We must all therefore search within. Then there is no disappointment. Try, try again and yet again.

Yes, India is still the place of spirituality that I have pictured to myself. It has brought me unconscious peace. There is much to criticize, much to disappoint; underneath it all there is an intense spirituality. The basis of life is spiritual. You can therefore build straightway. Not so anywhere else and in the same degree.

Mr. Gokhale is better than he was there but he is no more at peace with himself here than he was there. His nature is to worry.

Your answer to Gandevia was right. You could not give pecuniary assistance with your sensitive nature. I can quite understand that the incident must have added to your unhappiness. My heart goes out to you. My comfort is that I shall not leave a stone unturned to secure your permit. If I fail — I do not know.

1 From the contents

With love and sympathy,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

301. SPEECH AT POONA PUBLIC MEETING

February 13, 1915

On Saturday Mr. Gandhi visited the Anath-Balikashram of Prof. Karve\(^2\), the Fergusson College and the Anandashram, at all of which places he was warmly welcomed. In the evening there was a public meeting held in the Kirloskar Theatre. The speakers were Sirdar Nowroji Padamji, the President, Sir R. G. Bhandarker\(^3\) and Mr. Wadia.

Mr. Gandhi made an appropriate reply in which he referred to Poona as a place of learning, culture and noted for the spirit of self-sacrifice of its citizens—a city which, whether he made his future ‘home’ or not, would be considered by him and his wife as a sacred place of pilgrimage. He had, he said, rendered very little service to the country, but what little he rendered had raised such high expectations about him that he feared, they perhaps would be disappointed and he prayed that in case he disappointed the people’s hopes about himself, he would be judged in a spirit of generosity and forgiveness. He closed his speech remarking that his guide and teacher\(^4\) had asked him to endeavour to close his lips and keep open his ears for some time. He finished off his nice little speech with expressing thanks for the honour done to him and hoping to be judged generously if he slipped in future.

The Mahratta, 14-2-1915

\(^1\) For the significant Shakespearean echo of the uncertainty expressed herein, Vide "Message to Gokhale’s Life", before 4-2-1916.

\(^2\) D. K. Karve (1858-1962); social reformer; “Bharat Ratna”; founder of the Indian Women’s University; vide “Speech on Indian Women’s University”, 23-2-1916.

\(^3\) (1837-1925), Orientalist and author Vice-Chancellor of Bombay University; leader of Hindu social and religious reform movements.

\(^4\) G. K. Gokhale; vide “Speech at Reception by Ahmedabad Citizens”, 2-2-1915.
It seems India is now under the deadly sway of the Iron Age. I have been moving about in this country for a month and seen on what an enormous scale fraud is prevalent here. I had firmly resolved that for twelve months I would go round everywhere, keeping my ears open and hear everything, but address no meeting and express no opinion on any subject. But I must advise you, students, to read these prize-books carefully, to reflect over their real import and, keeping in mind all the profound truths set out in them, follow the path enjoined by religion. Whether you are a girl or a boy, you will grow up one day and have to carry a heavy burden of worldly duties; give some thought, therefore, to the future. Truth is revealed not only in our scriptures but in the scriptures of other religions as well.

It is the duty of students to assimilate whatever they have learnt. They should have religious and moral instruction, as much of it as they can usefully apply. They need education in such measure that it would not become too much of a useless burden on them. I should like to address a few words exclusively to students. Men and women students, you will benefit from what you have learnt only to the extent that you have assimilated it. That should be the object of this institution too. You should ponder over the element of truth in whatever books of religion you read. If you cling to truth, success is yours. I would advise you, from my experience, to profit well from your education. That will be to your advantage and to your country’s as well.

[From Gujarati]

Kathiawar Times, 17-2-1915 and Gujarati, 21-2-1915
303. SPEECH AT KAPOL HOSTEL, BOMBAY

[February 15, 1915]

I am not in the least surprised that you have collected Rs. 70,000 for the Hostel, as the Kapol community is quite wealthy and it is the duty of its richer members to provide for the education of its poorer members and help them to employment. I thank you for your kind words. I would not, normally, have found it possible to pay this visit to the Hostel, but Dr. Jivraj Mehta had lived here and had had an illustrious career and I was, therefore, keen on seeing the place. Of him, I will say in brief that, young and patriotic that he is, I am confident he will prove himself useful to the country in the years to come. I am indebted to the Kapol community because Jagmohandas Shamaldas gave me a substantial loan. When I returned as a barrister, I was afraid he might ask for an instalment but Mr. Mulji Barbhaiya came to my help. In conclusion, I would ask the students to speak in their mother tongue instead of using a hotchpotch of English and Gujarati in their speech. Finally, I should urge everyone here to work for success, to cultivate character and to serve both one’s family and country.

[From Gujarati]

Gujarati, 21-2-1915

304. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

SANTINIKETAN, BOLPUR,
February 17 [1915]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

You may now send all letters c/o Servants of India Society, Poona City. There is no responsible party in Rajkot and letters may

---

1 On the occasion of Gandhiji’s and Kasturba’s visit to the Hostel. Sheth Tribhuvandas Varjivandas presided.
3 Inferred from the contents get lost. The letter you say in yours to Mr. Gokhale you have written to me, has not yet been received by me. It may follow me.

I reach the above place today. I am just now at Burdwan, waiting for a change. Andrews has come here to fetch me. Bolpur is about 20 miles from here. I have a big party, i.e., 6 young men, with me. Of course, Mrs. Gandhi is inseparable. My eldest brother’s two boys, the other brother’s one boy and Chhotu, Chhabildas Mehta’s son, whom you know, Harilal and Jamnadas—these form the party.

After consultation with Andrews, I propose to write to the Viceroy myself about you and see what reply is received. I hope that you will war is over and that within a short time. Anyway I shall try.

Though I am not yet free from pains, I am better. Both of us are still strictly fruitarians.

Andrews sends his love to you. He is by me as I am writing this.

With love,

Yours,
OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

305. SPEECH AT SANTINIKETAN RECEPTION

February 17, 1915

The delight I feel today I have never experienced before. Though Rabindranath, the Gurudev, is not present here, yet we feel his presence in our hearts. I am particularly happy to find that you have arranged for this reception in Indian style. We were received with much pomp in Bombay, but there was nothing in it to make us happy. For there, purely western ways were imitated. We shall proceed to our goal in our own eastern ways and not by imitating the West, for we are of the East. We shall grow up in the beautiful manners and customs of India, and true to her spirit, make friends with nations having different

1 Chhotalal
4 Lord Hardinge
3 Presented by the inmates
4 Rabindranath Tagore (1861-1941); poet and artist, won Nobel Prize or Literature in 1913; founder of Santiniketan, now a University ideals. Indeed, through her oriental culture, India will establish friendly relations with the eastern and western worlds. Today I feel a close kinship with this Ashram in Bengal. I am no stranger to you. I liked also the distant land of Africa because the Indians there have not given up their Indian habits and customs.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI

Gandhiji ended his speech by offering his thanks to the audience.

From a Bengali report in Tattvabodhini Patrika, February, 1915

306. TELEGRAM TO H. N. KUNZRU

[BOLPUR, February 20, 1915]

EXPRESS
KUNZRU
SERVINDIA
ALLAHABAD

MR. GOKHALE PASSED AWAY². PROCEEDING POONA TONIGHT’S MAIL. MEET ME CHHEOKI. BETTER IF YOU JOIN ME.

GANDHI

From the draft in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5672. Courtesy: Radhabehn Choudhri

---

¹ Hriday Nath Kunzru (1887- ), President of Servants of India Society; Liberal politician and parliamentarian
² On February 19
307. TELEGRAM TO KARSANDAS CHITALIA

[BOLPUR, February 20, 1915]
DEFERRED
CHITALIA
SERVINDIA
BOMBAY
HEARD TERRIBLE NEWS. REACHING POONA MONDAY EVENING.
TELL REVASHANKER\(^1\) SEND LETTERS POONA.
GANDHI

From the draft in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5666. Courtesy: Radhabehn Choudhri.

308. CABLE TO TRANSVAAL B. I. ASSOCIATION

[BOLPUR, February 20, 1915]
DEFERRED
GANDHI
JOHANNESBURG
GOKHALE DEAD. SUGGEST UNIVERSAL MOURNING. WE HALF FASTING.
GANDHI, POONA

From the draft in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5665. Courtesy: Radhabehn Choudhri

309. SPEECH AT SANTINIKETAN ON GOKHALE’S DEATH

[February 20, 1915]
My one desire tonight is that my heart may reach your hearts and that there should be a real at-one-ment between us.
You have all learnt something about Tulsidas’s Ramayana. The \(^1\) Associated with Bhagini Samaj, Bombay, and Servants of India Society.

\(^2\) Revashanker Jagjivan Zaveri, a friend of Gandhiji and brother of Dr. Pranjivan Mehta.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
most stirring part is that about the companionship of the good. We should seek the company of those who have suffered and served and died. One such was Mr. Gokhale. He is dead, but his work is not dead, for his spirit lives.

The masses came to know of Gokhale’s efficiency in work. All know Gokhale’s life of action. But few know of his religious life. Truth was the spring of all his actions.¹

This was behind all his works, even his politics. This was the reason he founded the Servants of India Society, the ideal of which was to spiritualise the political as well as the social life of the nation.

It was fearlessness which ruled all the actions of his life. But as he was fearless he was also thorough. One of his favourite shlokas² from the shastras says: Real wisdom is not to begin a thing but to see the thing through to the end. This characteristic of thoroughness may be seen from this incident. He once had to speak to a large audience and he spent three days in order to prepare a short speech for this meeting and he asked me to write out a speech for him. I wrote out the speech. He took it and smiled his heavenly smile, discussed it with me and said, “Give me something better, rewrite it.” For three days he worried over it. When the speech was given, it thrilled the whole audience. He delivered his speeches without notes, but he did so, because he was so thorough, that one might say he wrote his speeches with his own blood. As he was thorough and fearless, so he was gentle. He was human from top to toe in all his dealings. He was sometimes impatient, but he would ask forgiveness, coming forward with his smile, whether to a servant or a great man, saying, “I know you will forgive me, won’t you?”

He had a great struggle during the latter days of his life, a struggle with his conscience. He had to decide whether he should continue to take part in a struggle at the expense of his health. His conscience ruled every action of his life. He did not wear it on his sleeve, he wore it in his heart. Therefore he is living still, and may we all have the strength to carry out his last wish. His last words to those members of the Servants of India Society who were with him were: “I do not want any memorial or any statue. I want only that men should love their country and serve it with their lives.” This is a message for the whole of India and not only for them. It was through service that he learnt to know his own nature and to know his country. His love for India was truthful and therefore he wanted nothing for India which he did not want for humanity also. It was not blind love, for his eyes were open to her faults and failings. If we can love India in the same way that he did, we have done well in coming to Santiniketan to learn how to live our lives for India’s sake. Copy the zeal which he showed in all he took up, the love that was the law of his life, the truthfulness which guided every action and the thoroughness which was characteristic of all his work.

¹ This paragraph is from Tattvabodhini Patrika.
² Verses

Remember that our shastras teach us that these simple virtues are the stepping stones to the higher state of life, without which all our worship and works are useless.

I was in quest of a really truthful hero in India and I found him in Gokhale. His love and reverence for India were truly genuine. For serving his country, he completely eschewed all happiness and self-interest. Even while lying on his sick-bed, his mind was occupied in thinking about the welfare of India. A few days ago, when at night he was under the grip of a painful ailment, he called for some of us and began talking about the bright future of India, as envisaged by him. Doctors repeatedly advised him to retire from work but he would not listen to them. He said, “None but death can separate me from work.” And death at last brought peaceful rest to him. May God bless his soul!"
310. LETTER TO CHIEF TRAFFIC MANAGER, E. I. RAILWAY

SERVANTS OF INDIA SOCIETY,
POONA CITY,
[February 23, 1915]¹

THE TRAFFIC MANAGER
EAST INDIAN RAILWAY
CALCUTTA

SIR,

Mrs. Gandhi, two friends and I travelled on the 21st instant by the 3 up mail from Burdwan to Kalyan en route for Poona. We were holders of 3rd class tickets Nos. 7186 to 7189. Upon the train-steaming in, I found that the 3rd class compartment was uncomfortably crowded containing far more passengers than the number specified on the label. However, we tried to get in. The station clerk who was standing by prevented us from doing so. I suggested that we would stand in the carriage as it was necessary for us to reach Poona at the earliest possible moment. The clerk would not listen to me. I then suggested that we should travel in an intermediate compartment until we could find accommodation in the 3rd class carriage. This suggestion was accepted. We got into an intermediate carriage. The station clerk duly reported the matter to the guard who insisted that we must pay the difference between the 3rd class and intermediate fares as far as Jubbulpore or we should not travel by mail train at all and go by the passenger train which was to follow. I protested but my protest was of no avail. I had therefore no alternative but to consent under protest to pay the difference which was taken from me at Assansol. The excess fare ticket number was 274577. I paid Rs. 19-12-0. I asked the ticket master to note on the ticket that I paid the excess fare under protest. He disregarded my request. As I had no desire to travel in an intermediate compartment, I and my party were looking for an opportunity of transferring to 3rd class compartment which we did at Mughalsarai. Here I asked the ticket collector to mark on the excess fare ticket that I had changed to the

¹ From the reply of the addressee.
3rd class compartment but he declined to do so.

I submit that, in the circumstances above mentioned, my party should have been found seats in the 3rd class compartment, failing that, permitted to travel intermediate without extra fare until the pressure had been removed; in any case it was unfair to insist on excess fare being paid as far as Jubulpore and that as my party actually transferred to the 3rd class compartment at Mughalsarai, there is no warrant for the retention of the excess fare between Mughalsarai and Jubulpore.

I trust that the Railway Administration will direct a refund of the full excess fare.

I have thought it to be my duty to bring this matter to your notice, as; much for the sake of the recovery of the excess fare paid (having operated upon public funds for my travels) as for the principle 3rd class passengers are entitled to proper treatment. I observed that they were roughly handled by several officials who were rude and impatient. I have no doubt that the Administration do not desire to see 3rd class passengers in any way roughly handled by inconsiderate officials.¹

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,

From the draft in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5667. Courtesy: Radhabehn Choudhri

¹ In his reply dated March 27, the Acting Divisional Traffic Manager defended the action of the railway staff, but wrote: “As the difference in fares was correctly realized according to rules, and there is no record at Moghulsarai of your having travelled from that point to Jubbulpur 3rd Class, under ordinary circumstances refunds are not granted, but I am prepared to accept your statement and will send by Postal Money Order the difference in fares between Moghulsarai and Jubbulpur.”
MY DEAR SISTER,

What would you say of a brother who does not inquire about his sister’s health, does not acknowledge her message of goodwill and who does not even send a note of sympathy on her father’s death? You will believe me when I tell you that I have not had a moment’s rest after our landing. I thought therefore that I would write to you on settling down somewhere. Then I heard from Mr. Gokhale just when I left for Bolpur that you had lost your father. I said to myself then that I would write to you on reaching Bolpur. But no sooner did I reach Bolpur than I had to retrace my steps to visit the desolate home of the Society.¹ Oh! the pity of it. And yet my Rajya Guru died as very few had the privilege of dying.

And now excuse me for the delay in writing to you. My sympathies are with you in your sorrow. You have enough philosophy in you to bear the grief that has overtaken you. Do please let me know how you are keeping.

With regards from us both,

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

¹ Gopal Krishna Gokhale had passed away on February 19.
312. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

POONA,
February 25 [1915]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

You do not expect a long letter from me this week. This death has severely taxed me and is still doing so. I have hurried back here from Santiniketan. I have not yet joined the Society and I do not know that I ever will. My abstention will perhaps be the best service I shall render to the memory of the Master. However, I do not know.

I am asking Maganlal, who is with me, to write to you at length.

With love,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

313. LETTER TO RATILAL M. SHETH

SERVANTS OF INDIA SOCIETY,
POONA,
Phagan Sud 13 [February 27, 1915]

BHAISHRI RATILAL,

I have your letter. My health is improving.

I am indeed very happy that you think of using the looms. I would advise alteration in Indian looms, only after they have been patiently handled and such alteration is found necessary. An intelligent man may suggest improvements, but only after he has learnt to operate a hundred per cent Indian loom and produce cloth on it. There will be some propriety in that. Yarn, too, it seems to me, should be spun on our own spinning wheels. That way, I see, lies the prosperity of the country, of its poor, that is. More about this when we

1 Of G.K. Gokhale on February 19, 1915
2 The Servants of India Society
3 Gandhiji was in Poona on this date.
The man who knows in his heart of hearts that this mortal frame is liable to perish any moment will be ever ready to meet death. That he might be so, the householder will limit his external activities and expand the inner and live accordingly. Following this rule, though a householder you can limit the scope of sense-pleasures. You can introduce even into your business some degree of holiness. Before deciding on any course of action, you can ask yourself whether it is essential. That way, you will also discover very easily what will be most conducive to your highest good. All this can be explained more clearly only in a personal discussion.

Let me know what kind of cloth you keep.

Remember this about what I may write or say, that I too am a novice like you. Possibly, I have more experience. You are welcome to profit by that experience.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 4648. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

314. EXTRACT FROM LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

POONA,
Phagan Sud 14, February 28, 1915

I got your letter here. It seems to me that for the present, you must do nothing but prepare for the future. I think it will be a good thing if you start studying Hindi and Marathi as languages. It will be better still to learn hand-weaving at the same time. If you haven’t formed the habit of going out for a walk every day, you should. At least four hours should be spent in body labour.

We shall think of some other book after you have completed Yogadarshan1.

I shall be there most probably on Thursday and start for Bolpur again the same day.

[From Gujarati]

Bapuni Prasadi

1 Aphorisms on Yoga by Patanjali
315. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

SERVANTS OF INDIA [SOCIETY],

POONA,

March 2 [1915]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I have before me your two letters. I have not left out a single week. But when I was physically unable to write, being engaged here, there or elsewhere, I asked someone to write to you. I am happy, am progressing, am strong spiritually and becoming stronger physically but I hate the rush and the constant moving about. Yet it is necessary, I feel. Before I settle down I have to see certain things.

I was in Bolpur last week but Mr. Gokhale’s sudden death brought me back to Poona. What an end! He died in harness. He was in full possession of all his faculties to the last and was working away. I was with him the Sunday previous to his death, which took place on the Friday following. Well, I am without a helmsman. But it is well. He lives in the spirit and his spirit is enthroned in my heart.

I have not joined the Society. Yet I pleaded for admission but there were differences which could not be bridged. So I am to travel about and see things for myself and study. This I shall do.

Meanwhile I am trying to settle the boys somewhere, possibly near Bombay, i.e., 150 miles from it — in Ahmedabad. Maganlal is now in Ahmedabad looking into affairs [sic]. He has risen to the occasion fully. I retain the idea that there is something in the atmosphere here which enables you to be easily spiritual. In spite of the rush I am going through there is peace within. May such peace be also yours.

I was going to concoct a letter to the Viceroy about you in conjunction with Andrews when I was called away, as I have said before. I hope to try again on reaching Bolpur. If I fail, I can only advice that you should stay in London where you are. Better to put up with the ills we have than to risk having greater ones whilst trying to avoid what we have. No happiness obtainable from without. You may study agriculture there. I can understand that. And is there not a better chance of our meeting earlier if you are there than if you were anywhere else? Surely that thought should rivet you to England. You will be surprised that Mrs. Gandhi has developed a passion for you. She thinks of you at every turn. She thinks that our life is incomplete.
without you. This is not my favourable construction method but this is how it is happening with her just now.

It surprises me with what tenacity she holds on to a purely fruitarian diet and mostly uncooked. I am living on purely uncooked fruitarian food. The meal today consisted of 3 bananas, 1, 2 small cucumbers, 2 tomatoes and 2 ripe figs and a few green grapes. The latter two were brought by friends only today. You will notice absence of ground-nuts. These I omitted only today because I had a full dose yesterday. I am always better when I have only a few ground-nuts. Of course I am having no physical exercise worth naming. I fancy that you too would have been satisfied with such food. I am going to take up other salad vegetables if necessary in order to compete with the poorest.

I think that you should ring up Lady Cecilia and inquire whether she received the letters you sent. They must have missed her. There is no other explanation. In any case the least that you owe her is to inquire through the phone or walk over to them. I should do that most decidedly.

Now I think I have given you enough. I shall resume the chat next week.

Yet best to address letters c/o Servants of India Society. They will thereby reach me more quickly wherever I am.

With love,

Yours,
OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

316. LETTER TO D. B. SHUKLA

Phagan Vad 1 [March 2, 1915]

BHAISHRI,

I have your letter. May I thank you for sending Rs. 1500?

My health is fairly good. There is still pain in my ribs but Dr. Dev said that there was no pleurisy now.

1 Lady Cecilia Roberts, wife of Charles Robert, Under Secretary of State for India
2 From the post mark
I am left without shelter through revered Gokhale’s death. I am thinking of leaving here on Thursday and returning to Bolpur.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

REVERED BHAISHRI DALPATRAM BHAVANJI SHUKLA
BARRISTER
CIVIL STATION
RAJKOT

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 2326

317. LETTER TO SIR WILLIAM WEDDERBURN

March 3, 1915

DEAR SIR WILLIAM¹,

The national calamity that has befallen us has prevented me from replying earlier to your letter.

Many caskets of the kind sent to you have been brought to India. But the Cape Town one was, as it were, destined to go to England. It was the last one received in South Africa just on the day of embarkation for Southampton. Then we stayed in London and the thought of leaving the casket in England was developed during the time. Mr. Roberts, Mr. Kallenbach and I agreed that the best institution where it could be housed was your own house. It will only be a small personal tribute to one whom I have been taught to love and regard as one of India’s best friends. The depositing of the casket with you may serve as an effort in binding the two nations together.

May I therefore ask you kindly to keep it yourself. I am sure that had Mr. Gokhale read your letter he would have joined me in my request.

With respects,

I remain,
Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From the typewritten office copy: S.N. 21645C

¹ (1838-1918), President, Indian National Congress at Bombay, 1889 and at Allahabad, 1910.
At a crowded meeting of the citizens of Poona held at the Kirloskar Theatre on March 3, 1915, under the presidentship of the Governor of Bombay, to condole the recent death of Mr. G. K. Gokhale, the following resolution proposed by Gandhiji was passed:

That the citizens of Poona in public meeting assembled place on record the great loss the whole country, and especially Poona, has sustained in the untimely death of the Hon. Mr. G. K. Gokhale who was the leader of the whole country and who by his devotion and self-sacrifice has left a great example to his countrymen of selfless public work. That this meeting deeply sympathises with Mr. Gokhale’s daughters and other relatives in their grief and requests the President to communicate this Resolution to them.

Mr. Gandhi proposing the resolution paid an eloquent tribute to the memory of the deceased statesman. The speaker said it would look a presumption on his part if he were to add to the glowing tribute which H.E. Lord Willingdon had paid to the memory of the deceased patriot. One thing he would like to mention and that was the deep-seated religious feelings of the man from which sprang a thoroughness which was one of his chief characteristics. He also possessed a conscience. Shortly before his death, Mr. Gokhale was called upon to decide whether he should attend a certain conference. After much deliberation, he decided to do so in the interests of his country, though at a grave risk to his life.

The Bombay Chronicle, 4-3-1915 and The Amrita Bazar Patrika, 5-3-1915

I am writing this letter from Bombay. Very likely I shall have to stop here, too, for a day. I got three letters from you at Poona, at the same time. We want to run our institution for the whole of India and so we will beg from the entire country. From Ahmedabad, however, we want the land and the required buildings. That will be the foundation.

We will do without machinery as far as possible. We need not concern ourselves whether this will lead to the stopping of the mills. It will be no bad thing even if the millowners stop erecting additional mills. And if indeed they do not, we will still keep to the path which we think will make for our happiness.

You have not understood the [true] significance of brahmacharya. Will you be unhappy if Keshu were to attain moksha today? If yes, how profound is your condition of moha! To believe that procreation by good persons is conducive to the happiness of the world seems to argue great conceit and ignorance. Good men have no desire for worldly pursuits. They desire withdrawal from them, that is, moksha. Those who keep them company [on the path] are their children. Not to admit even this bespeaks a state of utter ignorance. All this does not mean that Keshu will never marry. His inclination will be determined by the influences under which he grows up. Your duty is to place the highest ideal before him. It will not matter if he falls short of it. The children of one who so falls will be able to do good to the world. But please ponder deeply over the difference between this position and the other, namely, that the man who violates brahmacharya for the purpose of procreation is likely to have good progeny. Ponder deeply over this fine distinction between the two conditions. In one of them, we deliberately commit sin. In the other, though knowing better, we fall through weakness. In this latter, there is scope for rising yet. In the former, one has set one’s face against rising. Rising is looked upon rather as falling. If, in spite of our giving the right education to Keshu, he does marry, there will be no harm. If he does not, he will acquire a light that will shine over all the world, such is the strength he will gain. Parents should desire the best for their children. The latter will then acquire what they are capable of. There is no error in my thinking. Be sure of that. I want you to understand my thoughts very carefully. Do not take weakness to be strength. Do not regard moha as knowledge. Think over this

---

1 Addressee’s son
2 Deliverance from phenomenal existence
3 Delusion resulting from attachment to worldly objects very carefully. Preserve this letter and send it to Maganbhai\footnote{Patel} at Shantiniketan.

I have wired\footnote{This telegram is not available.} to Raojibhai to come here. If you think it proper to show this letter to anyone there, you may.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

If it should become necessary for me to go there, I think it will be better that I go after I have finished my work at Bolpur, etc.

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 110. Courtesy: Radhabehn Choudhri

320. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

[BOLPUR]

March 10 [1915]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I write this only to tell you that I have not a minute to write a decent letter to you this week. I therefore send you my love. I am at Bolpur and am leaving tonight for Calcutta and thence for Rangoon.

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

321. SPEECH AT RECEPTION BY CALCUTTA MODH COMMUNITY

March 12, 1915

By Mr. Gokhale’s untimely death, I have lost a friend, philosopher and guide, in whose footsteps I followed in serving the motherland. From his deathbed, he exhorted his friends that we...
Indians should render sincere service to the motherland.

[From Gujarati]

Kheda Vartaman, 24-3-1915

322. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

Calcutta,

March 13 [1915]\(^1\)

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I am here on my way to Rangoon. I am writing far in advance of the next mail as I may not be able to reach it otherwise, being on the waters.

Extraordinary changes have been made in the Santiniketan school. Andrews and Pearson\(^2\) rose to the occasion and Pearson and I, whilst we were working away at sanitation reform, thought of you how you would have thrown yourself into the work.

I hope you have given up the idea of going to California. I have not yet written about you\(^3\). I am waiting for the opportunity.

Ramdas is with me going to Rangoon.

With love,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

[PS.]

This is a general p[ersonal] a[ppel]\(^4\) to you remember me to all friends.

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

---

\(^1\) From the content

\(^2\) William Winstanley Pearson, a Christian missionary and an active supporter of Indians; for some time teacher at Santiniketan

\(^3\) To the Viceroy; Vide "Message of Gokhale’s Life”, before 4-2-1916.

\(^4\) The source has “p.a.”
MR. CHAIRMAN AND FRIENDS,

I do not know in what terms to return my thanks to you for giving me such a hearty welcome. You, sir (President), have blessed me and have entrusted a charge to me also. I hope I shall have deserved your blessing and I shall have power enough and willingness enough to carry out the charge that you have entrusted. Calcutta revives hallowed memories. It was in 1902 that I recognised, as I had not recognised before, in Mr. Gokhale my political master. It was at his feet that I learnt all that I felt I should learn. It was at his place that I came to know Dr. P. C. Roy. I wondered if I should be able to see his face during my visit and I am thankful that I have been able to do so. You have said much which I know I do not deserve. If I can steal a corner of your heart, what do you propose to do to Harbat Singh, who went to jail in South Africa against the wishes of his friends and against my wish also?

Harbat Singh, Mr. Gandhi went on to say, died in prison. How could he describe the deed of Baliama than whom a sweeter woman was not born? She was a girl of 17. What would they give to Harbat and Baliama? If anybody deserved anything, it was they who deserved a corner of their heart but not heroes like himself who were imported from England. Whatever he was able to do or say, he learnt in England. Harbat was uneducated, he did not know a word of English but he was the worthiest of all. It was Baliama and not his wife who should be exalted.

Proceeding, Mr. Gandhi said it was the life of Mr. Gokhale which inspired him and would do so throughout the work that lay before him. Mr. Gandhi was described as one who did not break the law. That, Mr. Gandhi said, had only a restricted meaning.

1 On the grounds of the palace of the Maharaja of Cassimbazar, with Babu Motilal Ghosh in the chair
2 Dr. (Sir) P. C. Ray (1861-1944), scientist and patriot
3 Valliamma, who died a martyr in South Africa; vide “Speech at Public Reception, Madras”, 21-4-1915.
4 Surendranath Banerjea in his tribute at the meeting had said: “Mr. Gandhi’s name would find its place in the enduring pages of history. Mr. Gandhi would not break laws, he would submit to laws but triumph over laws. There was a lesson to the Bengal anarchists which they well might lay to heart, which they might follow. Mr. Gandhi triumphed over the law by moral force.”
They had been described in South Africa as law-breakers. Mr. Gandhi said he broke the law and invited the penalty under the law which his conscience could not accept.

Babu Hemendra Nath Sen proposed a vote of thanks to the chair.

Before the close of the meeting, Moulvi Leakuat Hossein called for shouts of “Bande Mataram” which were lustily responded to and the “Bande Mataram” song was sung in chorus.

_The Amrita Bazar Patrika, 15-3-1915_

324. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

On Way to Rangoon,

Phagan Vad 14 [March 14, 1915]

CHI. NARANDAS,

We are having a very bitter experience of the deck, which is but common. Those going are Ba, Ramdas, and myself. We hope to return to Shantiniketan by the end of this month.

I see that there has been a misunderstanding between Harilal and me. He has parted from me completely. He will receive no monetary help from me. [I] gave him Rs. 45/- and he parted at Calcutta. There was no bitterness. Let him take any books or clothes of mine he may want. Hand over the key to him. He may take out anything he likes and then return the key. You must have heard that the key supposed to have been lost was found. It was with Revashankerbhai. Get it from him, if you have not got it already.

_Blessings from_
MÖHANDAS

From the Gujarati original in pencil in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5668. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

---

1 Gandhiji was on his way to Rangoon on this date

2 Third son of
BHAISHRI 5 M.

You are right in what you think about non-violence. Its essentials are daya', akrodha', aman', etc. Satyagraha is based on non-violence. We saw this clearly in Calcutta and came to the conclusion that we should include it among our vows. The thought led to the further conclusion that we must observe all the yamas and that, if we do so by way of vows, we perceive the inner significance of non-violence. In my talks with hundreds of men here I place the various yamas above everything else.

I remembered this verse in Calcutta on this occasion and pondered deeply over it. I am absolutely clear in my mind that India’s deliverance and ours will be achieved through the observance of these vows.

In observing the vow of non-hoarding, the main thing to be borne in mind is not to store up anything which we do not require. For agriculture, we may keep bullocks, if we use them, and the

1 From the references to Calcutta and Tagore, the letter appears to have been written after Gandhiji’s first visit to Shantiniketan and Calcutta after his arrival in India. Gandhiji left Calcutta on March 14, 1915. In Gandhijini Sadhana it is stated that this was written after February, 1915; however, in Mahatma Gandhijina Patro, this letter is published as from Madras with the date Vaishakh Sud 11, which corresponds to April 25, 1915.

2 This superscription in a letter addressed to Maganlal Gandhi is unusual. It is reproduced as in Mahatma Gandhijina Patro.

3 Compassion

4 Freedom from anger

5 Freedom from the desire to be respected

6 Any great moral or religious duty or observance. The yamas are usually said to be ten, but their names are given differently by different writers. Generally they include truthfulness, non-violence, compassion, celibacy, etc.

7 “If Bharata had not been born, imbued with the ambrosia of love for Sita and Rama, then who would have practised such self-control and strict observance, continence, restraint and rigorous vows as scarce enter the imagination of sages?” Ayodhya Kanda (Second book) of Tulsidas’s Ramayana (Hill’s translation).
equipment required for them. Where there is a recurring danger of famine, we shall no doubt store food-grains. But we shall always ask ourselves whether bullocks and food-grains are in fact needed. We are to observe all the yamas in thought as well, so that we shall grow more secure in them from day to day and come to think of fresh things to renounce. Renunciation has no limit to it. The more we renounce, the more shall we grow in the knowledge of the atman. If the mind continues to move towards renunciation of the desire for hoarding and if in practice we give up hoarding as far as it is physically possible to do, we shall have kept the vow of non-hoarding.

The same is true about non-stealing. Non-hoarding refers to stocking of things not needed. Non-stealing refers to the use of such things. If I need only one shirt to cover myself with but use two, I am guilty of stealing one from another. For, a shirt which could have been of use to someone else does not belong to me. If five bananas are enough to keep me going, my eating a sixth one is a form of theft. Suppose we have a stock of 50 limes, thinking that among us all we would need them. I need only two, but take three because there are so many. This is theft.

Such unnecessary consumption is also a violation of the vow of non-violence. If, with the ideal of non-stealing in view, we reduce our consumption of things, We would grow more generous. If we do so, actuated by the ideal of non-violence, we would grow more compassionate. In assuring, as it were, every animal or living thing that it need have no fear on our account, we entertain compassion — love—for it. A man who entertains such love will not find any living being inimical to him, not even in thought. That is the most emphatic conclusion of the shastras and my experience as well.

The principle underlying all these vows is truth. By deceiving oneself, one may refuse to recognize an act of stealing or hoarding as such. Hence, by taking careful thought we can ensure at every step that truth prevails. Whenever we are in doubt whether a particular thing should be stored or not, the simple rule is not to store it. There is no violation of truth in renunciation. When in doubt about the wisdom of speaking, it is the duty of a man who has taken the vow of truth not to speak.

I want all of you to take only such vows as each one feels

---

1 The Self

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
inclined to, of his own free will. I always feel that vows are necessary. But anyone may take them only when he himself feels the need and take only such as he wants to.

Ramchandra may have been a man of great prowess, performed innumerable feats and killed hundreds of thousands of monsters, but no one would think of him today if he had not had such devoted men as Lakshmana and Bharata to follow him. The point is, if Ramchandra had had no more than extraordinary strength as a fighter, his greatness would have been forgotten after a while. There have been many brave warriors who killed monsters as he did. There has been none among them whose fame and greatness are sung in every home. Ramchandra possessed power of some other kind which he could induce into Lakshmana and Bharata and in virtue of which the latter became great men of austerities. Singing in praise of their austerities, Tulsidasji asked who else, if Bharata had not been born and practised austerities unattainable even by great sages, would have turned an ignorant man like him to Rama? This is as much as to say that Lakshmana and Bharata were the guardians of Rama’s fame, that is, of his teaching. Moreover, austerities are not everything. For, if Lakshmana went without food or sleep for 14 years, so did Indrajit. But the latter did not know the true significance of austerities which Lakshmana had learnt from Rama; on the contrary, he possessed a nature which inclined him to misuse the power earned through austerities and so came to be known merely as a monster and suffered defeat at the hands of Lakshmana, the man of self-mastery, a lover of God and seeker of deliverance. In the same way, however great the ideal of Gurudev, if there is no one to implement that ideal, it will remain hidden in the profound darkness of the ages. Conversely, if there are any to put it into practice, it will spread its light multiplied many times over. The steps which one has to climb in order to practise an ideal constitute tapas. One should realise, therefore, how very necessary it is to bring tapas—discipline—into the life of children.

[From Gujarati]

_Gandhijini Sadhana; also Mahatma Gandhijina Patro_

1 Meghanad, son of Ravana, who had earned the name of Indrajit by his victory over Indra, chief of the gods

2 Rabindranath Tagore
326. LETTER TO MAGANBHAI H. PATEL

ON WAY TO RANGOON,
Phagan Vad 15 [March 15, 1915]¹

BHAISHRI MAGANBHAI,

Harilal has parted from me. I have given him Rs. 45 on which he will struggle through as he pleases. There is nothing improper about it.

We shall return by steamer on Monday or latest by Thursday. It seems on our way back we shall have to stop at Calcutta for two days. We have abandoned the idea of being at the Gurukul in the beginning of April. We shall have to spend some time at Santiniketan.² We must do our utmost to see that the new experiment succeeds.

You will have received the dried fruit which Manilal was asked to send, and you will have managed with. . .³

Fakiri and Baba will have fully recovered by now.

Blessings from
MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 11003. Courtesy: Suryakant C. Patel

327. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

RANGOON,
March 16 [1915]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

We reached Rangoon this morning. This time I had a real experience of deck passage. The latrines were the filthiest I have ever seen anywhere and so was the so-called bathing place. The latter we

¹ Gandhiji left Calcutta for Rangoon on March 14, 1915. Phagan Vad 15 corresponds to March 15.
² The addressee along with some other Phoenix companions was staying at Santiniketan.
³ In self-cooking at Santiniketan; vide An Autobiography —Part V, Chapter IV.
⁴ One word is illegible here.
⁵ This appears to be a slip. Gandhiji had reached Rangoon on March 17; vide “Diary for 1915”, 9 January, 1915.

386 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
simply did not use. The deck was crowded. There was hardly seating accommodation. There was no air space. It was a time of trial. You would almost have died in the latrine. We had three nights of it and 3 days. Yet I am returning as a deck passenger. I am sending a complaint to the company. I understand that the steamer is one of the oldest of the company.

Here in Rangoon it is already very hot. Dr. Mehta however has built a nice place out in the open. It is therefore not unbearable. I should not have come here but for Dr. Mehta. Burma for the present at any rate is not in my line. The country is being exploited by Indians with the assistance of the English.

We stay here about a week and return to India.

I am seeing much, observing much. I am not disappointed. I am finding things as I had expected and I feel that you would have felt the spiritual India, could you have come. The cities are still plague spots. But even in the cities you meet with real men as you do there.

Harilal came to me for a time. He has again left. He has no faith in me and my co-workers except you. He thinks that I have used my sons for my own benefit and sacrificed them to my ambition. He did not put it quite so badly but the purport was unmistakable. The other boys have grown in wisdom. Harilal is now not to receive any pecuniary help from me. I think that is the best thing I can do for him.

I shall still be travelling for a few months and seeing things.

I must describe Santiniketan to you in my next letter.

For you, I have still the same message. Have patience, find happiness in the situation that faces you. There are others much worse situated.

With love,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

1 Vide also “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 14-3-1915 and “Guide to London”, [1893-94].
328. AMENDMENTS TO "OBJECTS" OF IMPERIAL INDIAN CITIZENSHIP ASSOCIATION

[On or after March 16, 1915]

The following clauses are suggested in place of 1 to 4 under the head ‘objects’:

To ascertain the condition of Indian settlers not excluding indentured labourers outside India and to agitate for the removal of their disabilities and grievances.

To secure for such settlers equal status with all the other settlers in the respective parts of the world.

To investigate the conditions of transport under which immigrants travel to their destination and secure an amelioration of such conditions where they may be found to be defective.

To secure with all the other British subjects equality of treatment alike as to terms of admission and as to residence for all British Indian emigrants to any part of the world including British self-governing Colonies.

To maintain a bureau of information for the benefit of emigrants.

To establish and maintain a library containing colonial and foreign laws and journals and all other special books of interest to emigrants.

From a photostat of a draft in Gandhiji’s hand: S.N. 6305

---

1 Amendments suggested in reply to Jahangir Bomanjee Petit’s letter of March 16, 1915, forwarding a draft copy of the rules and regulations of the Imperial Indian Citizenship Association for Gandhiji’s perusal and suggestions.

2 “Objects” 1 to 4 were as follows:

(1) To protect and safeguard the civic interest of Indians in general in any part of the world outside India, including the self-governing British Colonies;

(2) To work for, insist upon and obtain for Indians in all British foreign possessions in particular, absolutely equal treatment in all respects with all other British citizens;

(3) To establish and maintain by all possible constitutional means the right of Indians to emigrate into and settle in any part of the British Empire, including self-governing Colonies, on the same terms as other members of the Empire;

(4) To maintain by all legitimate and constitutional means the inherent right and privileges of Indians within the Empire as British citizens.
329. LETTER TO AGENTS OF B. I. S. N. COMPANY

[RANGOON,]
March 19, 1915

THE AGENTS
BRITISH INDIA STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY

GENTLEMEN,

With Mrs. Gandhi and five others, I was a deck passenger from Calcutta to Rangoon per s.s. Lunka which arrived here yesterday. I have been in the habit of travelling as a deck passenger now for some time. I was surprised to find that the arrangements for deck passengers on s.s. Lunka were the worst I have yet seen. The deck was uncomfortably crowded. There was hardly enough sitting accommodation for the number of passengers taken. My party could not all fully stretch ourselves during night although several passengers were anxious to make us comfortable. I saw many lying anyhow and anywhere thoroughly cramped. The latrines were in a dangerously filthy state. The floor space between the seats and the doors was used as urinals. There seemed to be no outlet for the urine. There was therefore always a pool of urine in front of you. The walls of the latrines I found to be extremely dirty and sticky. The doors were without bolts. The only bathing room I saw was used by the passengers for urinary purposes. There was no check against passengers spitting anywhere. The deck used by them was never washed.

I am sure that a great company like yours do not wish to treat their deck passengers in the manner described above. May I ask you please to forward this letter to the proper quarters for attention? I am likely to return to Calcutta next week and may I hope that my party and I, in common with the other passengers, will be able to have the ordinary sanitary comforts which a human being should have?

I remain,
Yours faithfully

From a photostat of the original draft in Gandhiji’s hand: S.N. 6167

---

1 On the 17th, both according to the “Diary for 1915”. and the Company’s letter of the 20th, acknowledging this letter and promising an inquiry into the complaint about the state of latrines (S.N. 6168)
330. LETTER TO MAGANBHAI H. PATEL

Chaitra Sud 6 [March 21, 1915]

BHAISHRI MAGANBHAI,

I have your letter. I shall be here till Monday night. I shall reach Calcutta on Thursday and hope to be at Santiniketan on Saturday. It is very good that the work there is proceeding well. We should continue to help in it to the best of our ability. Look after Messrs. Andrews and Pearson very carefully. You have not given any news about Pal Baba’s health. Maganlal shall have reached there before my arrival.

I had told Manilal to send the dried fruit immediately. You must have received it soon after your letter.

It is extremely hot here. I am now tired of all the honour and respect being showered on me. I do not see any meaning in it.

All the three of us are well.

Regards from

MOHANDAS

[PS.]

Look after your health. Professor Balwantrai Thakore will have arrived there or will be arriving. Look after him. Give him my regards if he has already come, and give the necessary news.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 10999. Courtesy: Survakant C.

331. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

RANGOON,
March 21 [1915]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

This is my second letter from Rangoon. Yours of the 12th February has followed me here.

You want to know my personal life. I shall therefore restrict this to its description. I rise never later than 5 a.m. and often at 4 a.m.

1 From the contents it is evident that this letter was written from Rangoon and after the one to the addressee dated March 15, 1915.
2 C. F. Andrews
3 William Winstanley Pearson
4 Ramdas and Chhaganlal Gandhi had accompanied Gandhiji to Rangoon.
Here in Rangoon I go out for a long walk with Dr. Mehta. At 10 a.m. we take the first meal. Mine and Mrs. Gandhi’s consists of uncooked fruits and nuts. Ground-nuts are roasted. My menu today was 4 bananas, 2 tiny tomatoes, 1 tiny unripe mango chopped, 2 spoonfuls of grated fresh coconut, 4 walnuts, perhaps 2 ounces of date, ground-nut meal mixed, 1 naarangi, 2 slices of wretched melon, 2 lemons and a drink of coconut water. Much the same will be taken at 5 p.m. Dr. Mehta joins me in the fruitarian meal. He adds milk and almonds to the above. Both of us walk about the Town barefoot. Mrs. Gandhi cooks unripe bananas when she can get them. I have now no desire for cooked bananas. Hitherto, there has been no difficulty about procuring fruits and nuts. Several young men in different parts of the country are trying the fruitarian diet. I have asked them to let me have results. The tutor to Dr. Mehta’s sons is trying the experiment with me. We retire here at about 10 p.m. Elsewhere I have not been able to do so. The pains in the ribs are still there somewhat. I notice nothing in the groins or the right calf. I have a good appetite now and my bowels move twice. I anticipate no difficulty about continuing the experiment. This country seems to be peculiarly fitted for fruitarian diet. The temptations which I feared there have not overtaken me at all. On the contrary, living our ideals here seems to be comparatively easier.

Dr. Mehta’s house is nice and airy. It is very simply conducted. His life is transparent. There is no cant or hypocrisy about it. You would have liked the life here immensely. He has a farm also which is groaning under the weight of fruit trees that were there when he bought it. He has introduced handlooms there.

I leave here on the 29th instant and reach Santiniketan about the 5th April.¹
Now good-bye.
With love from us all,

Yours,
OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

¹ However, Gandhiji left Rangoon on March 26 and reached Santiniketan on April 2; vide also “Diary for 1915”, 9 January 915.
332. INTERVIEW AT RANGOON

[Before March 22, 1915]

A correspondent from Rangoon writes under the date March 22:

When I asked Mr. Gandhi to grant me an interview on behalf of a local paper, he simply would not hear of it. He said he had returned from S. Africa only recently. He had not given to the, problems of India the amount of study they required. Therefore he could not be expected to speak on Indian affairs with any semblance of authority. He was at present engaged in studying our problems on the late lamented Mr. G. K. Gokhale’s advice. When his studies were over, then he would be “out for interviews”, but not till then. But I assured him that I had no intention of asking him his opinions about topical matters. I said I represented a Tamil paper, that I was myself a member of the Tamil community and that I merely intended to ask him what he thought of the Tamil community with whom he must have largely come into contact in South Africa. On hearing this he seemed greatly relieved and without the slightest pause, like a man who had already formed his final opinions on this subject, he delivered a glowing eulogy on the Tamil people.

He started by saying he could quote chapter and verse for the good work performed by them in South Africa. They were of the greatest help to him during the passive resistance struggle. All the Indian communities were of very great help to him, but especially the Tamil community. It was considered a shame among them for one man not to have gone to jail at least once for the common cause. That was not true of any other community, but that was entirely true of the Tamil. When he first met them, he learnt to admire them. Ever afterwards he had found them better and better. He said:

I consider I have more in common with the Tamil community than with any other.

I asked him whether he had any ulterior purpose in visiting Burma. . . . His answer was simple. He said:

My work lies in India.

The Hindu, 30-3-1915
CHI. JAMNADAS,

I have your letter. About the diet, you will be able to speak of your experience only after some time. With patience, you will see the results. It happens that one needs glasses for the eyes, whether to buy them or not, we shall consider by and by.

I too am surprised how the pillars came down all of a sudden. If they were the ones which bore the invaluable inscriptions, the thing is very much to be regretted. What you did was quite right. You had them brought down after getting your doubts cleared, and that was but proper. Show me this place.²

We shall know more then. I don’t think tamarind induces weakness. An excessive quantity of food must have been taken.

Fiction means an imagined story. It is beyond doubt that the Ramayana and the Mahabharata have less of history and more of imagination. They are both sacred books; tens of millions of people look upon them as more than history, and rightly. Maybe there was no brother of Rama exactly like Bharata, but there have been such Bharatas at any rate in India and that is why Tulsidas could conceive one. It is to the Bharata depicted in the Ramayana that Bharatvarsha³ pays homage.

We need not make ourselves unhappy in the least if, because of our offering satyagraha, Phoenix should turn desolate and go to waste. In settled conditions, we should take to agriculture. When conditions are unsettled, we may beg or labour, or starve. We should have unshakeable faith that nothing that is done is ever done in vain. This is a law which has no exception. If circumstances arise again, we may resume agriculture. If not, we need not worry. Agriculture is not the end but only a means. The end is, from the lower point of view, service of the people and, from the higher point of view, moksha. One of the means for achieving both is agriculture. When it hinders us

---

¹ Gandhiji left Rangoon on March 26, 1915.
² It has not been possible to ascertain the exact significance of this paragraph.
³ India
from attaining the end, we should abandon it.

The freedom that the Poet takes is wrong. We should, however, bear with a man like him, in the hope that one day he will give up indulgence of the senses. For him, our company is all to the good. We should make things as easy for him as we can. We need not apply to others the rule we apply to the Poet. That is, we need not have the same rule for all in such matters. Even the Poet may not cross the bounds, however.

It is because of the respected Gokhale that we keep using the name ‘Phoenix Institution’. He gave this name to our institution in order that everyone, himself included, may recognize the meaning immediately. Most of the aims of Phoenix are the aims of our institution here. He understood the aims of Phoenix and so gave that name. We need not keep it for ever. We will look for another name after we have settled down somewhere.

I shall preserve the dresses and hand them over to you. But they will be useless when I have worn them out. You will have, therefore, to make your selection right now. They were good experiences I had in Rangoon.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati original: C.W. 5684. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

334. LETTER TO MAGANBHAI H. PATEL

8 MOIRA STREET,
CALCUTTA,
Monday [March 29, 1915]¹

BHAISHRI MAGANBHAI.

I shall be busy here till the evening of Wednesday, hence I shall leave by the last train, and reach there around 11 or 11.30 at night. Everybody will have got to Hardwar.² I have received Mr.

¹ From the contents this letter appears to have been written after Gandhiji’s arrival in Calcutta from Rangoon, i.e., March 28, 1915, and before he left for Santiniketan on March 31. Monday in the interim fell on March 29.
² Gandhiji’s Phoenix party had been invited to assist the volunteer corps of the Servants of India Society at the Kumbha fair at Hardwar.
Kunzru’s telegram saying that everyone should be sent there. It seems that I shall have to go there too, but I shall have to return immediately. Chi. Maganlal will have arrived.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

[PS.]

Dr. Mehta’s elder brother Potatbhai is with me. Anna and Doctor’s sons are not here.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 10998. Courtesy: Suryakant C. Patel

335. SPEECH AT STUDENTS’ HALL, CALCUTTA

March 31, 1915

On Wednesday evening under the presidency of the Hon’ble Mr. Lyons and before a stupendously large gathering at the Students’ Hall, College Square, Mr. Gandhi delivered an address, embodying advice as to the duties of young men in view of the anarchical crimes committed by some misguided youths in this country.

Though it was the command of his guru, the late Mr. Gokhale, that Mr. Gandhi, during his stay here keep his ears open but his mouth shut, he could not resist the temptation of addressing the meeting. It was the opinion of the speaker as well as his departed guru that politics should not be a sealed book to the student community; for he saw no reason why students should not study and take part in politics. He went the length of saying that politics should not be divorced from religion. They would agree with him as well as their teachers, professors and the worthy chairman that literary education was of no value, if it was not able to build up a sound character. Could it be said that the students or the public men in this country were entirely fearless? This question engaged the speaker’s serious attention although he was in exile. He understood what political dacoity or political assassination was. He had given the subject his most prayerful and careful attention and he had come to the conclusion that some of the students of his country were fired no doubt with zeal in their minds and with love for their motherland, but they did not know how they should love her best. He believed that some of them resorted to

1 H. N. Kunzru
2 Harihar Shama, a teacher from Baroda, who joined Gandhiji in June, 1915.
3 This was published under the caption “Mr. Gandhi’s Advice to Young Bengal”, reprinted under the caption, “On Anarchical Crimes” in _Speeches and Writings of Mahatma Gandhi_, Natesan.
4 P. C. Lyons

VOL. 14 : 26 DECEMBER, 1913 - 20 MAY, 1915 395
nefarious means, because they did not work in the fear of God, but in the fear of man. He was there to tell them that if he was for sedition, he must speak out sedition and think loudly and take the consequences. If he did so, it would clear the atmosphere of any taint of hypocrisy. If the student, who were the hopes of India, nay perhaps of the Empire, did not work in the fear of God, but in the fear of man, in the fear of the authorities — the Government whether it was represented by the British or an indigenous body — the results would prove disastrous to the country. They should always keep their minds open regardless of what the consequence would be. The youths who resorted to dacoities and assassinations were misguided youths with whom they should have absolutely no connection. They should consider these persons as enemies to themselves and to their country. But he did not for a moment suggest that they should hate those people. The speaker was not a believer in Government; he would not have any Government. He believed that that Government is the best that governs the least. But whatever his personal views were, he must say that misguided zeal that resorted to dacoities and assassinations could not be productive of any good. These dacoities and assassinations were absolutely a foreign growth in India. They could not take root here and could not be a permanent institution here. History proved that assassination had done no good. The religion of this country, the Hindu religion, was abstention from himsa, that was to say, taking animal life. That was he believed, the guiding principle of all religions. The Hindu religion said that even the evil-doer should not be hated. It said that nobody had any right to kill even the evil-doer. These assassinations were a western institution and the speaker warned his hearers against these western methods and western evils. What had they done in the western world? If the youths imitated them and believed that they could do the slightest good to India, they were totally mistaken. He would not discuss what Government was best for India, whether the British Government or the Government that existed before, though he believed that there was a great deal of room for improvement in the British Government.

But he would advise his young friends to be fearless, sincere and be guided by the principles of religion. If they had a programme for the country, let them place it openly before the public. The speaker concluded the address with an appeal to the young men present to be religious and be guided by a spirit of religion and morality. If they were prepared to die, the speaker was prepared to die with them. He should be ready to accept their guidance. But if they wanted to terrorise the country, he should rise against them.

The President, in the course of an eloquent speech, eulogised the address of the evening and suggested that the young men should band themselves for the purpose of uprooting the anarchical evil from this country. He offered a vote of thanks to Mr.

1 The Bengalee, 1-4-1915, has “would”.
Mr. Gandhi made a suitable reply and invited correspondence from the student community to which he promised to give a prompt reply.

336. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

_April 1 [1915]_

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letters. Sometimes I have no time and I am travelling. Naturally I must then only send love. Today is such a time. I have just returned from Calcutta and can only send you love. Your diaries are still interesting for the omissions.

_Yours,_
OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

337. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

_April 8 [1915]_

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I am still wandering, still seeing people and places. Here I am almost beyond the reach of the post.¹ I saw yesterday a little of the Himalayan scenery and I wished you could have been with me as I was wandering. I have not seen anything grander anywhere else. This place lies at the foot of the mountains. It is one of the holiest places of India. But the holiness is all but gone. I have brought the boys here to help the pilgrims. The air is bracing. The Ganges you see flowing in all her grandeur.

¹ Gandhiji was in Gurukul Kangri, Hardwar on this day. His Phoenix party had been invited to assist the volunteer corps of the Servants of India Society at the Kumbha Fair at Hardwar; vide also the following item and “Speech at Gurukul, Hardwar”, 8-4-1915.
I have not yet decided where I am to settle down. The question is becoming more and more complicated. But some day it will solve itself. ‘One step enough for me.’

I have just walked 15 miles. This is my longest walk for months. I do not know how it will affect me. But you will excuse my not giving you a fuller letter. I am not too tired but I have to go to a meeting in a few minutes.

Yours with love,
OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

338. SPEECH AT GURUKUL, HARDWAR

April 8, 1915

An address of welcome was presented to Mr. Gandhi by the Brahmacharis of Gurukul Kangri on 8th April when Mr. and Mrs. Gandhi visited Hardwar in connection with the Kumbhi. Professor Mahish Charan Sinha with his band of Brahmacharis went to receive him. Brahmachari Budhaduri read the address....

Mr. Gandhi replied:

I feel indebted to Mahatmaji for his love. I came to Hardwar only to pay my respects to Mahatma Munshiram, as Mr. Andrews has pointed out his name as one of the three great men whom I ought to see in India.

He thanked the Brahmacharis for the help they sent to their Indian brothers in Africa and felt specially grateful to the Brahmacharis and the Mahatma for the love and affection they extended towards his Phoenix boys while visiting Gurukul and felt that his pilgrimage to Gurukul was satisfactory. He said:

I am proud that Mahatmaji has called me his brother in a letter. Please pray that I may deserve his fraternity. I have come after 28 years to my country. I can give no advice. I have come to seek guidance and am ready to bow down to anyone who is devoted to the service of the Motherland and I am ready to lay down my life in the service of my country and I shall no more go abroad. One of my brothers is gone.¹ I want guidance. I hope the Mahatmaji will take his place and be a brother to me now.

¹ Laxmidas Gandhi
To the Brahmacharis, he said:
Whatever your aim is, is the aim of all of us. May God fulfil our mission.

Mahatma Munshiram, while welcoming him, said that he was glad to hear that he would live in India and would not go abroad like others to serve India from outside. He hoped that Mr. Gandhi would be the beacon light of India.

The Hindu, 12-4-1915

---

339. SPEECH AT ST. STEPHEN’S COLLEGE

DELHI,

April 13, 1915

Mr. Gandhi said he took the liberty of speaking in Hindi having ascertained previously from the Principal that the European staff of the College understood the language of the people and he was glad to know that they did.

In the course of his address he said that it would be premature for him to offer any advice in regard to Indian problems, for he had been long away from the motherland. He needed to learn first before he spoke. He had come to learn and hoped to live and die in India now. Long years ago when he met his Master Mr. Gokhale, he felt he had found his guru in the sphere of politics and he had tried humbly and faithfully to follow him. In the religious sphere he had not met with a religious guru yet. But he must not leave people under a false impression in this respect. His Master, Gokhale, was a deeply religious man. Nobody worked with him in the closest contact but felt the depth of the reality of his essential religious temper. To Mr. Gokhale God was a great reality and truth was a great reality. This it was which explained his incessant and indefatigable labours which tried his physical powers at last. He was a Hindu but one of the right type. A Hindu sannyasi once came to him and made a proposal to push the Hindu political cause in a way which would suppress the Mahomedan and he pressed his proposal with many specious religious reasons. Mr. Gokhale replied to this person in the following words: “If to be a Hindu I must do as you wish me to do, please publish it abroad that I am not a Hindu.” But Mr. Gokhale was a Hindu and his religion was fearlessness. He had a deep belief in God, in the eternal triumph of truth. This explained his arduous toil in mastering facts and in investigating truth. India's greatest need was this great fear of God—the fear of God alone and therefore no fear of man. That was the one thing we needed. Anarchism was not necessary. If it existed, it showed there was no fear of God. To face evil we must stand in the strength of God and truth; and there was that ancient text on the College walls that truth, not falsehood, eternally triumphed. Evil of any kind could not stand the searching light of truth and could only be rooted out in the strength of God through personal suffering and not through the infliction of suffering on others. That was the secret.

---

1 This was in reply to a welcome address by Principal Rudra. Gandhiji spoke in Hindi.

Fear God, therefore, and do not fear men, and remember that ahimsa is our religion, the great gift of our rishis. What we have got to do is to bring this religion of the Fear of God into all our lives and even into politics. Nothing but this and the passionate love of truth will help us. I would exhort you therefore to obey your teachers and to be true to your College motto, to be rooted in the truth of it, so that you may worthily enter the citizenship of your motherland.”

Then thanking the students for their splendid help in the South African crisis and their hospitality and kindness to the Phoenix boys when they were the guests of the Principal, Mr. Gandhi resumed his seat amidst loud and prolonged applause.

St. Stephen’s College Magazine, No. 32, pp. 6-9

340. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

ON THE WAY TO MADRAS,

April 16 [1915]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I am on my way to Madras. This eternal moving is now telling on me and I am pining for rest my post too cannot be received as no one knows where I am. I shall get letters only at Madras now. My experiences have been rich and varied. Some time or other I may let you have a portion of them. This cannot be until I have settled down somewhere. I have not yet stayed a fortnight at a stretch at any place, not even at Rangoon.

I had hoped to meet the Viceroy at Delhi but he was not there. I have not yet been able to hit upon any method of approaching him about you. I fear that for the time being you will have to wait there. I am sure that you ought not to think of going to California or any other place. I only wish you could find some occupation to steady you. For me there is no doubt that India has a great hold on me. Even amid the most trying circumstances, I am able to perceive the inner life. It may be all a delusion. But it is there.
At Hardwar, one of the holiest places in India, I felt the need to take a further step and this is what I have done. In India I am not to take for my sustenance more than five things during 24 hours and not to eat after sunset. Things include condiments. Thus if I have taken today, say, bananas, dates, ground-nuts, oranges and lemons, I may not take cloves or tamarind. I still take two meals and I have to make my choice of five things for the day. Both the vows are fairly stiff. But they had to be taken. The spirit was there. The flesh will have to yield. The vows were taken on the 10th instant.\(^1\) I have left the boys at Hardwar to work as volunteer nurses to pilgrims. With me are Mrs. Gandhi and Dr. Mehta’s eldest brother.\(^2\) He accompanies me to curb his temper. He is 65 years old. He has become a pure fruitarian and avoids milk also. He is doing very well indeed.

Needless to say we have been travelling 3rd-class throughout. At times it is most trying, involving long night journeys in crowded compartments.

Will you please give the contents of this to Miss Winterbottom and Sorabjee.

With love,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

341. SPEECH ON ARRIVAL AT MADRAS

April 17, 1915

Mr. and Mrs. M. K. Gandhi arrived in Madras last Saturday evening from Hardwar by the Delhi Express. . . . A little disappointment was in store for the people, however. When the train arrived, they searched all the first and second class compartments, but in vain, and they were inclined to think that Mr. Gandhi and Mrs. Gandhi had not come. But a guard told them that Mr. and Mrs. Gandhi had come by that train and they were in a compartment at the end of the train. A long search discovered Mr. and Mrs. Gandhi sitting in a third class compartment. Mr. Gandhi looked thin and emaciated, a loose shirt soiled by four days of continuous travel covered his body and a pair of trousers similar in appearance covered his legs. There

---

\(^1\) Vide “Speech at Reception By Indian Christians, Madras”, 26-4-1915 and “Diary for 1915”, and An Autobiography, Part V, Ch. VII, p. 310.

\(^2\) Ibid
was a rush to that compartment and the crowd was such that about a dozen policemen who had been there found themselves powerless to manage the crowd and had to leave it to shift as best it could. . . . Shouts of “Long live Mr. and Mrs. Gandhi”, “Long live our hero” and “Bande Mataram” rang from the crowd. Mr. Gandhi bowed to them in acknowledgement and was conducted to the carriage. The students who had gathered in large numbers unyoked the horse and volunteered to drag the carriage. The carriage was taken, dragged by the students, to the premises of Messrs Natesan & Co., Sunkurama Chetty Street. Mr. Gandhi being cheered all along the way, Mr. and Mrs.
Gandhi standing in the carriage and with hands cooped [sic] acknowledging the greetings.

On arrival at Messrs Natesan & Co., where he will be stopping during his stay in Madras, Mr. Gandhi stood up in the carriage and in a loud and clear voice said that he was exceedingly thankful to them for the expression of their love to him. He was fagged on account of the four days continuous journey and wished to be allowed to say good night. He would, however, be free to see them during his stay here between three and five o’clock on all days and discuss questions affecting their common good.

Mr. and Mrs. Gandhi expect to stay in Madras for a fortnight. Mr. Gandhi desires to visit the places in the South wherefrom the bulk of South African Indian settlers have been drawn in order to meet such of the passive resisters as have settled in India.

The Hindu, 19-4-1915

342. LETTER TO LAZARUS

MADRAS,
[After April 17, 1915]

MY DEAR LAZARUS,

I have your letter. The Indian Relief Bill¹ ought to serve, as it was designed to serve, as a sound basis on which we can erect a sound structure. I gave ample warning on my leaving South Africa that it might be differently interpreted by the Government. In every such case we have our own remedy—legal and moral. We may or we may not take up the legal remedy. The moral is, and should be, always at our disposal, and that is passive resistance. If the spirit of the settlement is not carried out and hardships are inflicted by the

¹ Gandhiji arrived in Madras on April 17, 1915; this was his first visit to the place after returning from South Africa.
² Vide Appendix “The Indians Relief Act”, 1914.
administration, our final remedy must be passive resistance. I hope none of you considered that we would never have to resort to passive resistance. All that one could hope for was that the Government had altered their spirit and that they would not lightly invite a revival of the struggle. But this last and sovereign remedy is always at our disposal to be used whenever necessary. Of course virtue lies in knowing when it should be used. Generally speaking, if there is a departure from the fundamental principles which were laid down at the time of the settlement, there is sufficient cause for offering passive resistance. You must understand the main purpose of the Relief [Bill]. Let me reiterate the chief points. First, the removal of the £3 tax: second, the reinstatement of the status of Indian wives: third, repeal of the Asiatic Act. These three things have been obtained, I think, practically for all time. Just administration of existing laws is a point covered by the correspondence which was published immediately after the passage of the Bill, and it is there that naturally there was an uncertainty. Our meaning of just administration may be totally different from that of the Government, and to keep the Government up to the level of our views, there must be continuous watching.

With regard to Christopher, I note what you would want me to do. I shall try to do what I can. I have not yet settled down. I have just arrived in Madras in the course of my wanderings, but as soon as I settle down I shall see what can be done. I take it that, if there is a scholarship forthcoming, he will study in India.

As to your suggestion about Indian Opinion, its sphere is narrow for want of workers. In spite of desperate efforts we have not been able, as you are aware, to get a sufficiently large number of selfless workers. I still feel that it cannot be worked upon any other lines. Immediately we introduce the system of payment according to ability, it will lose all its usefulness. Anyhow, that is not the Phoenix ideal. You have to raise at least a few colonial-born young men who would devote themselves to public cause without thought of reward, and you can make Indian Opinion a greater power than it is and you can then make it cater for colonial-born Indians in the special sense you suggest.

That a sound body carries a sound mind is after all a truism, but it is to be interpreted with many qualifications. Take the celebrated Sandow. His is, as you would consider, one of the soundest bodies. I am not sure that he necessarily carries a sound mind with it. To me a sound body means one which bends itself to the spirit and is always a ready instrument at its service. Such bodies are not made, in my opinion, on the football field. They are made on cornfields and farms. I would urge you to think this over and you will find innumerable illustrations to prove my statement. Our colonial-born Indians are carried away with this football and cricket mania. These games may have their place under certain circumstances. But I feel sure that for us, who are just now so fallen, they have no room. Why do we not take the simple fact into consideration that the vast majority of mankind who are vigorous in body and mind are simple agriculturists, that they are strangers to these games, and they are the salt of the earth? Without them your and my existence would be an impossibility, whereas you and I are totally unnecessary for their well-being.

The health of both Mrs. Gandhi and myself is good. It would have been better had we not been touring so ceaselessly as we have done. But the holy atmosphere of India has done all that we had expected. It is because there is something peculiar about the Indian atmosphere that I suggest so strongly to the colonial-born friends that they should consider it as a matter of duty to visit India, and to visit as Indians wanting to live the purely Indian life, and not half-European and half-Indian.

I think I have now covered all the points you have raised. Be good to the people of Phoenix, have patience with them. They are doing their best, they are giving their all, they mean to render services to the motherland. Help them to do so, criticise them by all means, but let your criticism be tempered with love of the settlement. Please remember me to the old folks. I should not forget you or Brian from whom I have received so much love. Whenever you are prepared to give me your boys on my terms, I shall be ready to take them over. The sooner you come to a decision, the better. Else it may be too late for them.

Yours sincerely

From a photostat of the typewritten office copy: S. N. 6120
343. SPEECH AT GOKHALE CLUB, MADRAS

April 20, 1915

Yesterday evening, Mr. Gandhi spent about an hour and a quarter in a conversation in the home of the Servants of India Society with the members of the Gokhale Club, an association of young men started some six months ago for the study of public questions under the guidance of experienced elders.

Mr. Gandhi described his “Phoenix” settlement scheme\(^1\) as one meant for the training of people for the service of the motherland. Special attention would be paid in the settlement to the formation of character and several vernaculars would be taught in it. In his opinion, the observance of brahmacharya was essential for all national service and would be a necessary condition for admission into the settlement. Everyone there would be taught and required to do some manual work, preferably in connection with agriculture. The settlement would be open to persons of both sexes, married and unmarried. Asked if he would recommend brahmacharya and poverty as ideals to be followed by the whole country, he said he would do so without the least hesitation; only he would recognise it as a religious impossibility for a whole nation to follow them. For conduct in life he would recommend ahimsa, the latter including abstention from giving any pain to the body or to the mind and extending to all forms of life. As to the application of passive resistance to politics, he warned his hearers that it was a very difficult weapon to use and should not be resorted to except as a last resource and in defence of the dearest interest like national honour. He was against the use of all machinery and would use only hand-made articles.

When the meeting dispersed, everyone present felt chastened by his inspiring words.

The Hindu, 21-4-1915

---

\(^1\) Vide “Interview to The Madras Mail”, 22-4-1915.
CHI. MAGANLAL,

I learnt from Maganbhai that you had reached Gurukula.

Agricultural work is part of satyagraha. We have deduced the necessity of agricultural work from satyagraha. Hence the question: what should one do if it becomes necessary to give up agricultural work for the sake of satyagraha? My purpose was to show Jamnadas that [in such a situation] agricultural work is not our chief object. His question was: What should one do if the ruler of the place where we are living seizes our land? Also, that if a situation arises in which one may have to attend immediately to some urgent work, the agricultural work may get neglected. I can say much to explain this matter. Our object always remains the same. But as circumstances change from time to time, we can deduce from the nature of our object what should be done in each case.

If Jamnadas does not take the vows, he can remain in the capacity of a student.

Harilal’s letter made me realize that I should act more independently of others than I do at present and teach you all to do likewise. You have to show to a still greater degree that you always do what you think proper and not out of regard for me. As for Harilal’s letter, it merely echoed his weakness. All of us shrink from admitting our weakness, and so abuse what our weakness does not permit us to do. Even Harilal seems to have realized this now. His two letters accompanying this, are worth reading and pondering over by you all. Therefore, read them and understand their meaning. Preserve the letters. It seems to me that Manilal, Ramdas, and you too, will recover

1 From the printed letterhead
2 From Gandhiji’s itinerary mentioned in para 5; he arrived at Bombay on May 10, having left Madras on May 7; reached Ahmedabad on May 11 and Rajkot on May 15. Vaishakh Sud 7 in the year 1915 corresponded to April 21.
3 This first son of Gandhiji.
4 This second son of Gandhiji.
5 This third son of Gandhiji.
your peace of mind to some extent.

Here I am tasting the utmost sweetness. I will leave Madras on the 7th and go to Bombay. From there to Ahmedabad, and from there to Rajkot. I have now received Sheth Mangaldas’s letter. He says in it that the place is ready in Ahmedabad. I will go to Ahmedabad and see everything for myself. I will await a detailed letter from you today.

Assuming that Maganbhai and the others will also read this letter, I am not writing another one to them.

Ba is fine. You must have come to know of my two vows.1 Raojibhai also has taken a vow. You must have come to know of it.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33907

345. SPEECH AT PUBLIC RECEPTION, MADRAS

April 21, 1915

Mr. Gandhi rose amidst deafening cheers and said:

MR. CHAIRMAN AND FRIENDS,

On behalf of my wife and myself, I am deeply grateful for the great honour that you here and Madras, and, may I say, this Presidency have done to us and the affection that has been lavished upon us in this great and enlightened—not benighted—Presidency. (“Hear, hear.”) If there is anything that we have deserved, as has been stated in this beautiful address, I can only say I lay it at the feet of my Master under whose inspiration I have been working all this time under exile in South Africa. In so far as the sentiments expressed in this address are merely prophetic, Sir, I accept them as a blessing and as a prayer from you and from this great meeting, that both my wife and I myself may possess the power, the inclination, and the life to dedicate whatever we may develop in this sacred land of ours to the service of the motherland. (Cheers.) It is no wonder that we have come

1 On April 10, 1915, at Hardwar, Gandhiji took two vows—not to eat more than five articles of food during 24 hours and not to eat after sunset.

2 The address, presented by the Indian South African League, was read by G. A. Natesan. Sir Subrahmanya Aiyar presided. Among those present were Mrs. Besant, Justice Tyabji, Srinivasa Sastry and others. to Madras. As my friend, Mr. Natesan, will perhaps tell you, we have been overdue and we have neglected Madras. But we have done nothing of the kind. We knew that we had a corner in your hearts and we knew that you will not misjudge us if we did not hasten to Madras before going to other Presidencies and to other towns. It was in 1896 that I found in Mr. Gokhale my rajya guru (Cheers.) and it was in the same year that I found in Madras, as I did not find in any other place, that deep abiding sense of religion. It appeared in 1896 before you as a stranger pleading a forlorn cause.¹ I then discovered that Madras, or this Presidency, had that instinctive power to distinguish between a right cause and a wrong cause, and it was here that you appreciated in its fullest measure the gravity of the situation that I was then endeavouring to place before my countrymen throughout India. (“Hear, hear.”) And the impressions that I took with me to South Africa in 1896 have been more than amply verified throughout my experience in South Africa. The drafters of this beautiful address have, I venture to say, exaggerated the importance of the little work that I was able to do in South Africa out of all proportion. (Cries of “No, no.”) As I have said on so many platforms, India has been still suffering under the hypnotic influence produced upon it by that great saintly politician, Mr. Gokhale. (Cheers.) He issued in my favour a certificate which you have taken at its surface value, and it is that certificate which has placed me in a most embarrassing position, because I do not know that I shall be able to answer the expectations that have been raised about myself, and about my wife in the work that lies before us in the future on behalf of this country. But, Sir, if one-tenth of the language that has been used in this address is deserved by us, what language do you propose to use for those who have lost their lives, and therefore finished their work on behalf of your suffering countrymen in South Africa? What language do you propose to use for Nagappen² and Narayansamy³, lads of seventeen or eighteen years, who braved in simple faith all the trials, all the sufferings, and all the indignities for the sake of the honour of ² Who died a martyr on July 6, 1909; vide “Two Posers”, on or before 12-6-1945.

³ Who died a martyr on October 16, 1910; vide”Letter to the Press”, 17-10-1910 & “Narayansamy”, 22-10-1910 the motherland? (Cheers.) What language do you propose to use with reference to Valliamma, that sweet girl of seventeen years who was discharged from Maritzburg prison, skin and bone, suffering from fever to which she succumbed after about a month’s time? (Cries of “Shame”.) It was the Madrassees who of all the Indians were singled out by the great Divinity that rules over us for this great work. Do you know that in the great city of Johannesburg, it is found among the Madrassees that any Madrassee is considered dishonoured if he has not passed through the jails once or twice during this terrible crisis that your countrymen in South Africa went through during these eight long years?1 You have said that I inspired these great men and women, but I cannot accept that proposition. It was they, the simple-minded folk, who worked away in faith, never expecting the slightest reward, who inspired me, who kept me to the proper level, and who compelled me by their great sacrifice, by their great faith, by their great trust in the great God to do the work that I was able to do. (Cheers.) It is my misfortune that I and my wife have been obliged to work in the limelight, and you have magnified out of all proportion (Cries of “No, no”.) this little work we have been able to do. Believe me, my dear friends that if you consider, whether in India or in South Africa, it is possible for us, poor mortals, the same individuals, the same stuff of which you are made, if you consider that it is possible for us to do anything whatsoever without your assistance, and without your doing the same thing that we would be prepared to do, you are lost, and we are also lost, and our service will be in vain. I do not for one moment believe that the inspiration was given by us. The inspiration was given by them to us, and we were able to be interpreters between the powers who called themselves the governors and those men for whom redress was so necessary. We were simply links between those two parties and nothing more. It was my duty, having received the education that was given to me by my parents, to interpret what was going on in our midst to those simple folk, and they rose to the occasion. They realised the importance of birth in India, they realised the might of religious force, and it was they who inspired us, and let them who have finished their work, and who have died for you and me, let them inspire you and us. We are still living, and who knows whether the devil will not possess us tomorrow and we shall not forsake the post of duty before any new danger that may face us? But these three have gone for ever. An old man of 75 from the United Provinces, Harbat Singh, has also joined the majority and died in jail in South Africa, and he deserved the crown that you would seek to impose upon us. These young men deserve all the adjectives that you have so affectionately, but blindly lavished upon us. It was not only the Hindus who struggled, but there were Mahomedans, Parsis and Christians, and almost every part of India was represented in the struggle. They realised the common danger, and they realised also what their destiny was as Indians, and it was they, and they alone, who matched the soul-force against the physical forces. (Loud applause.)

1 1906 to 1914

The meeting then terminated with a vote of thanks to the Chair.

_The Hindu, 21-4-1915_

---

346. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

[GEORGETOWN, MADRAS]¹

_Vaishakh Sud 8 [April 22, 1915]²_

CHI. MAGANLAL,

I got your letter today. I see from it that you are much worried and that you have become nervous. I have not become impatient. I am perfectly easy in mind. It is true that the condition of the country that I see today has induced in me a still greater spirit of renunciation. But you are in no way connected with that. I do not in the least mind if all of you continue to be as you are today. We have been observing in the past the vows³ that I have suggested. All that I am now asking is that they should be observed more firmly and intelligently. But even in that, I will expect and accept from you only what you can give. I do not insist on anything. I wish you to shed fear. I will be able to go there⁴ in about a month’s time. I will leave this place on the 7th. They have been showing me boundless love here. About four persons are likely to join us. All the four are good men.

Leaving on the 7th, I will go directly to Bombay and thereafter

---

¹ From the printed letterhead
² Vide the preceding item, fn 3, page 10.
³ For the contemplated Ashram
⁴ To Ahmedabad
to Ahmedabad. From there, I intend to go to Rajkot and settle the matter about the house. I will also settle the questions concerning Kaku, Ranchhod and Shanti at the same time. All this is likely to take the whole month of May.

I wish the boys there to start digging and studying. I have suggested to Mahatmaji\(^1\) to permit you to make separate arrangements for cooking your meals. He has agreed to do so.

I am eager to know how you manage the thing. It would be well if you become calm and collected. I am keeping well. I am getting plenty of experience.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

[PS.]

Ask Manilal to write to me.

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33906

347. INTERVIEW TO “THE MADRAS MAIL”\(^2\)

_April 22, 1915_

Yesterday, a representative of this journal had a long and interesting talk with Mr. M. K. Gandhi, about various topics of current interest, of which the following is a summary:

Will you kindly tell me, Mr. Gandhi, what is to be your programme of work, now that your labours in South Africa have ended in a satisfactory solution of the Indian situation in that country?

For this year, of which three months have already gone, I am under instructions from Mr. Gokhale to tour round the country, study the people and institutions, and form my own conclusions before I commence any active work. And during this period of probation, I am also to refrain from speaking on controversial topics on public platforms. At the end of the year, I shall know definitely what the questions are to which I shall be able to devote my attention. There is one thing, however, which it was agreed upon between Mr. Gokhale

---

\(^1\) Mahatma Munshiram, an Arya Samaj leader who afterwards embraced _sannyasa_ and adopted the name ‘Shraddhanand’

\(^2\) This appeared under the caption, “Mr. M. K. Gandhi—His Future Work in India”.
and myself that I should continue to do, and that was the conduct of what he called the Phoenix institution. It was so called by Mr. Gokhale because he saw the experiment I am about to explain to you in working order partly on the Tolstoy Farm, belonging to Mr. Kallenbach, and partly at Phoenix, a wayside station on the north coast of Natal. The experiment consists in training young men, and also women and children, for long service to the Motherland. It is a feature of the institution that everyone should perform some form of manual labour, and as agricultural labour is the best form of manual labour, everyone is expected to work for a certain period of the day on the soil. It is proposed also to introduce hand weaving. All who are in the institution will also study the chief vernaculars of the country, in order that they may be able to come into contact with the masses in different parts of India without any difficulty. For mutual intercourse, vernaculars alone will be used, the use of English being confined as far as possible to communications with British people, or those who may not understand any of the chief Indian languages. The vow of brahmacharya and poverty will be strictly observed at the institution. I feel that if the experiment proves a success, and there is a large response from young men, it will automatically solve many of the important problems that now puzzle or worry us.

Can you tell me something of the proposed methods of work of the institution and the nature of the service to India?

It is not possible for me to say what form the service will take. It will largely depend upon the results of my observations during the period of probation. At the same time, it is easy to see that an important part of the service is really included in the training itself that I have mapped out. It ought to be easy for anyone to realize the various directions in which work may be done in this respect; but I do not propose to discuss with the public what branches of public activity are going to occupy my attention and that of my co-workers, if only because of my promise to Mr. Gokhale that I would refrain from committing myself to any definite programme until I had previously studied problems in the manner mentioned. The obligation not to do this rests all the more heavily on me in that, I have lost my helmsman, and I am thrown entirely upon my own resources. I, therefore, want to act with the greatest caution, and, as far as is humanly possible, to keep an open mind upon all the burning questions of the day.
Was this period of probation imposed on you by Mr. Gokhale because you had been away from India for so very many years?

Yes, that was his great argument, because I was away from India for nearly 28 years and all my ideas were formed outside India, and, therefore, a corrective in the shape of personal contact with present-day conditions was, in his opinion, absolutely necessary.

Have you noticed any perceptible change in the condition of affairs in India since you last visited this country?

So far as I have been able to observe and so far as I am competent to compare things to-day with things as I observed them in 1902, during my brief visit to India, I notice that there is greater eagerness amongst the younger generation to be of service to the Motherland, and that there is also great willingness to undertake work which may require a measure of self-sacrifice.

Our representative then referred to the Indian question in South Africa, political agitation in India and various other topics, and gathered that Mr. Gandhi does not lay so much store by agitation for obtaining concessions from the Government as by working for the moral, material and economic regeneration of his countrymen, for he is of the opinion that once people make themselves fit by their character and capacity, the grant of privileges will follow as a matter of course—in fact, there will be no need for people to ask for concessions, and what is granted will be no concessions, for people will have grown into them. Mr. Gandhi implicitly believes that no agitation for political concessions will do any service to the country without reform coming from within, at the same time. Mr. Gandhi prefers to be judged by his conduct rather than by the words he utters, words spoken under the limitations of an interview not being, in his opinion, capable of expressing all that the person interviewed might like to say on the subjects discussed.

The Madras Mail, 23-4-1915

348. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

April 23 [1915]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

In the hope of writing to you at length I deferred writing to you earlier and now I find I would have almost missed the mail. But I suddenly woke [up] with a fright that I had not yet written to you. Here am I, therefore, writing this in the small hours of the morning by candle light. Your diary still remains interesting for what it omits. My dear friend, I know you want to assist me, you could do so even now if you were here. But you could do so from there by realizing our common ideals. You have no notion of how from that distance even you can affect the lives of men here. The powers of a soul purified are illimitable. May you be able to carry out your resolves. More later.

With love,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

349. SPEECH AT RECEPTION BY MAHAJAN SABHA AND CONGRESS COMMITTEE, MADRAS

April 23, 1915

The members of the Madras Mahajan Sabha and the Madras Provincial Congress Committee were “At Home” to Mr. and Mrs. Gandhi last evening at “Humayun Munzil”, the residence of the Hon. Nawab Syed Mahammad President of the former Association.

NAWAB SAHEB AND FRIENDS,

On behalf of my wife and myself, I thank both these venerable associations most sincerely for having organized this function, and the address' couched in such beautiful language. I do not think that you expect any speech from me. I feel that one thing is true about us that distance lends enchantment to the view. We have now come to work before the public gaze. I have now to trade with whatever capital I have brought from South Africa. I am already exhausting that capital. When we have begun to work before you, you will see us in our nakedness; and I request you to exercise then that generous spirit for which our great Motherland is famed. I expect you to excuse any faults in us, and to take what we give in the best spirit in which we offer it. (Applause.)

New India, 24-4-1915

Not reproduced here
350. INTERVIEW TO ASSOCIATED PRESS, MADRAS

April 23, 1915

A representative of the Associated Press interviewed Mr. Gandhi in course of which the latter referred to the splendid loyalty of British Indians in South Africa who stood on the outbreak of war by the Union Government as representing the Imperial Government. General Botha in an appreciative letter promised to make use of their services, should the occasion arise.

Asked if any further improvement in the status of Indians was probable after the war, he said that it largely depended upon the attitude of the Imperial Government and many other considerations.

Referring to the continuation of his work in South Africa, he said that so far as legal assistance was concerned, Mr. Polak himself was practising as an attorney and was eminently fit to advise. There were many able Indian passive resisters, he continued, who were looking after the situation, so that the problems as they rose would be fully looked after by local friends of India assisted by Mr. Polak. The Indian Opinion voicing the passive resisters’ views was managed and controlled by Mr. West¹ and Mr. C. Gandhi².

Questioned as to his future work in India, he said he was touring round the country as was advised by Mr. Gokhale for study, preliminary to forming a definite plan of work in the service of the country. He said:

Meanwhile I shall also be continuing the institution which was being conducted in South Africa and which has for its object the training of young men for life-long national service. As is well known, I have already charge of several young men and boys who have followed me from South Africa and have been either passive resisters or are sons of passive resisters.

The Bengalee, 24-4-1915

¹ A. H. West, Manager of the International Printing Press, Phoenix, which published Indian Opinion
² Chhaganlal Gandhi
351. SPEECH AT RECEPTION BY MUSLIM LEAGUE, MADRAS

April 24, 1915

On Saturday evening, the Muslim League was At Home to Mr. and Mrs. Gandhi at Lawley Hall, Mount Road. . . . The refreshments being over, Mr. Yakub Hasan\(^1\) made a short speech . . . . He promised on behalf of the Mussalman community co-operation in any work he might undertake for the benefit of India.

Mr. Gandhi made a short reply in which he thanked them on behalf of his wife and himself for their kindness to them. A promise had been made to him and it was an unconditional promise to co-operate with him in anything he might undertake on behalf of this country. It was one thing to promise and another thing to fulfil. He gave them fair warning that he was most exacting to demand the discharge of obligations, especially when so voluntarily given and it might give them an uncomfortable hour when he called upon them to discharge their obligations. In this connection, he remembered two instances of the valuable services rendered by the Mussalmans in South Africa. One was that of Ahmed Mohamed Kachadia\(^2\) who was a merchant. He had not known a more stubborn man than Kachadia. He went to jail several times for the sake of the country and his European creditors forced insolvency upon him for political reasons, but he was able to pay them 20s. in the £. The other instance that of Abdul Sahiba Muezzin. His services were as valuable as any rendered by anybody else and he also forsook everything and was reduced to poverty on behalf of the mother-country. He and his family were now in the Phoenix settlement in Natal. He again reminded them of the promise they made.

On Sunday afternoon at 2.30 p.m., the ladies of the Abeda Aikya Ananda Samajum gave an At Home at their premises in Ramaswamy Street, Manady, where an address was also presented.

The Hindu, 26-4-1915

---

1. Secretary, Indian South Africa League
2. Ahmed Muhammad Cachalia, Chairman, Transvaal British Indian Association; vide “Telegram to Johannesburg Letter”, 7-4-1911.
352. SPEECH AT MADRAS LAW DINNER

April 24, 1915

Under the auspices of the Madras Bar Association, the Annual Madras Law Dinner, the third of its kind, came off on Saturday evening last in the open air under bright moonlight on the extensive grounds adjoining the Moore Pavilion, People’s Park, Madras. The Hon’ble Mr. F. H. M. Corbet, Advocate-General, was in the chair.... Mr. Gandhi, who is now in Madras, and who, as a Barrister, had been invited to the Dinner, was honoured with a seat on the left of the Hon’ble the Advocate-General. . . . The Chairman asked Mr. Gandhi to propose the toast of “The British Empire”. . . . In proposing the toast of “The British Empire”, Mr. Gandhi said:

MR. CHAIRMAN, MR. LORD CHIEF JUSTICE, MY LORDS AND GENTLEMEN,

When the learned Advocate-General came to me and asked me to propose this toast, I must confess that I was taken aback a little. I don’t think he noticed it himself, but I make that confession to you. I felt that I was invited to be present here as at one time I belonged to the profession to which you or most of you belong and as I happen to be in Madras, but that I would be allowed to remain a silent spectator of what was going on here. But when he mentioned the thing I did not hesitate to say, “Yes, I shall be pleased to speak to this toast.” During my three months’ touring in India as also in South Africa, I have been often questioned how I, a determined opponent of modern civilization and an avowed patriot, could reconcile myself to loyalty to the British Empire of which India was such a large part, how it was possible for me to find it consistent that India and England could work together for mutual benefit. It gives me the greatest pleasure this evening at this very great and important gathering to re-declare my loyalty to this British Empire and my loyalty is based upon very selfish grounds. As a passive resister I discovered that I could not have that free scope which I had under the British Empire. I know that a passive resister has to make good his claim to passive resistance, no matter under what circumstances he finds himself, and I discovered that the British Empire had certain ideals with which I have fallen in love, (“Hear, hear.”) and one of those ideals is that every subject of the British Empire has the freest scope possible for his energies and efforts and whatever he thinks is due to his conscience. I think that this is true of the British Empire as it is not true of any other Governments that we see. (“Hear, hear.”) I feel as you have perhaps known that I am no lover of any Government and I have more than once said that Government is best which governs least, and I have found that it is possible for me to be governed least under the British Empire. Hence my loyalty to the British Empire. (Loud applause.) And may I before I sit down and ask you to drink to the prosperity of the British Empire remind you of one singular incident that happened during this campaign in far-off South Africa. General Beyers, the trusted Commander of one of the Forces of the British Empire, rose against that Empire in open rebellion. It was only possible for him under that Empire and that Empire alone not to have himself shot on sight. General Smuts wrote to him in a memorable letter that he himself was at one time a rebel. He wrote to General Beyers that it was only under the British Empire that it was possible for him to save his life. Hence my loyalty to the British Empire. (Loud applause.)

The toast was very enthusiastically honoured.

The Hindu, 26-4-1915

353. SPEECH AT SOCIAL SERVICE LEAGUE, MADRAS

April 25, 1915

The members of the Social Service League met Mr. Gandhi in the Ranade Hall, on Sunday (25-4-1915) last at 3.30 p.m. Among those present were Mr. S. Sreenivasa Aiyangar, Rao Bahadur T. Vijayaraghavachariar, the Hon’ble Mr. V. S. Srinivasa Sastri, Mr. V. T. Krishnamachariar, Mr. G. A. Natesan and others.

Mr. Gandhi, who was introduced to the meeting by Mr. T. Vijayaraghavachariar, said that he had already heard something of the work which the League had been doing. He began by saying that all social work must be undertaken in a spirit of utter humility and self-sacrifice and instanced Mr. Gokhale who had said that to all true public workers, work was its own reward. Absence of recognition or appreciation should not in the least deter a social worker from carrying on his work strenuously and with whole-hearted attention. Whateoever a social worker attempted to do, he must not cease his labours till he had carried it out to a successful conclusion. He was against half-hearted social service and said that such work had better not be done at all. Asked what he would advise the members of the League to do who were only able to devote a limited time each week, Mr. Gandhi said that they should devote at least the few hours they could spare with concentrated attention. He said that if they had the right sort of men undertaking social work, success could certainly be hoped for.

He was unable within the time at his disposal to enter into the question of moral and religious instruction for the depressed classes, while he fully believed that it was a most important point, a true understanding of which would enable them to get to the heart of the people among whom they worked.

Asked about the policy of mingling Panchama boys with caste boys in night schools, he said that there was nothing bad in it at least in the night schools, where the time of teaching was so short, and that neither the Panchama boys nor the caste boys would be prejudicially affected in any way. As to elementary education generally and the policy of extending that education indefinitely, he said that there was no doubt that it did a great deal of good and was an eminently desirable thing, though it was not indispensable for the sanitary betterment of the masses. Even people without a knowledge of the 3 R’s were capable of understanding hygienic principles and capable of co-operating in any proper scheme of improvement that might be devised for them. He said that there was a great and crying need for active work in that direction....

work or put into their head the notion that manual labour was degrading and said that he saw nothing wrong in a cobbler who had taken the M.A degree following that profession throughout his life. Regarding intemperance, Mr. Gandhi said that it was an evil which it was extremely difficult to remedy and that it could be successfully overcome only by a great religious worker. He gave a practical instance of this from the experience of a social worker in Poona.

Mr. Gandhi in closing the conversation said that for social service what was required was not money but men, men of the right sort with right sentiments, with an abiding love and charity and full of faith in their work. If they did have such men, money would come, even unasked. Much social work could be done without any money. It was very difficult for an educated man to understand and appreciate exactly the feelings that prompted the masses unless he retraced his steps; and it was impossible for any man however wealthy to do any social work if he was inspired thereto not by the work itself, but by any feeling of personal ambition. It was easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for such a man to do any effective social service.

With a vote of thanks to Mr. Gandhi, the meeting terminated at 4 30 p.m.

The Hindu, 27-4-1915

1 A few words are missing here in the source which has been damaged.
354. SPEECH AT RECEPTION BY ARYA VAISHYA MAHASABHA, MADRAS

April 25, 1915

Mr. Gandhi in his reply thanked them for the honour shown to his wife and himself and said that the credit for their success in South Africa should be given to other people who have settled in South Africa. He said it was not the time for him to detail all they were doing in South Africa. The Indians in South Africa were petty agriculturists, hawkers and petty traders. The cause of the trouble was the stubborn competition which our people offered to the Europeans domiciled in South Africa. There were many other things also which accounted for the struggle but the chief reason was the competition. Although a settlement had been arrived at for the time being, he said, they might assume that some kind of irritation remained and would remain so long as that competition remained. He said our people there were not men with scholarship or university men, but he told them that they were men that would enable India to be raised in the scale of nations.

The Hindu, 26-4-1915

355. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

GEORGE TOWN,
MADRAS,
Vaishakh Sud 11 [April 25, 1915]

CHI. NARANDAS,

I have your letter. I shall leave here for that side on the 7th. Maganlal and the rest are at Kangri Gurukul, Hardwar. Everybody has settled down to studies, each in his right place.

You are right in your guess about Harilal’s letter. One will not easily find a parallel to what Harilal has done. When a son writes in that manner, there is bound to be bitterness between father and son, though in our case there was not even a possibility of anything of the kind. Harilal has written to say that he has recovered his

---

1 At Vasantha Mantapam Govindappa Naick Street at 6 p.m., Mr. Salla Guruswamy Chetty delivered a short welcome address.

2 Gandhiji arrived in Madras on April 17 from Hardwar and Delhi. There were two Vaishakhs in this year.
calm and that he is sorry he wrote that letter. The letter was all error, and I know that, with experience, he will understand things better.

The Bolpur weather itself is very hot in summer and Ramdas got ill in consequence. The food there is less hot than elsewhere. The people here keep saying harsh things nowadays about the heat. Speaking for myself, I don’t feel it at all.

I have not told you about the two vows I have taken,1 never to eat after sunset in this country and not to have more than five articles of food on any day. The second vow is rather stiff and may sometimes cause difficulty. It was worth taking, though and the mind feels freer as a result of it. We both keep good health. Revashankerbhai’s elder brother, who has joined me so that he might overcome his anger, also lives on fruit. There is no one with me from among our company. I shall spend about four days in Bombay and then leave for Ahmedabad.

Blessings from
MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5669. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

356. SPEECH AT RECEPTION BY INDIAN CHRISTIANS

MADRAS

April 26, 1915

The Rev. T. and Mrs. Subramaniam, of the Wesleyan Mission, Peter’s Road, Royapettah, received at their house yesterday, a number of European missionaries and Indian Christians, representing the clergy and the laity, to meet Mr. and Mrs. Gandhi . . . Mr. M. D. Devadoss, Barrister-at-Law, and Mr. V. Chakkarai Chetty, on behalf of the Indian Christian community of Madras, spoke a few words of welcome . . .

Mr. Gandhi, in reply, said that while in South Africa he had the hearty co-operation and sympathy of Canon Booth2 and other missionaries as well as of all the Indian Christians there. He thanked the host and the hostess for the entertainment, and the guests dispersed.

The Madras Mail, 27-4-1915

1 On April 9 at Hardwar; vide “Diary for 1915”.
2 Dr. booth, Head of St. Aidan’s Mission, Durban; he supervised the small charitable hospital founded by Indians. In 1899, during the Boer War, he helped to train the Indian Ambulance Corps.
357. FRAGMENT OF LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

MADRAS,
[April 27, 1915]

. . . have been repeated. If you send your reply to this letter through Narandas to Bombay it will reach me. It is enough if I get it there. Today is the 27th. This letter will reach you on the 1st. Even if you take two days to consider it you can write to me on the 3rd. The letter should reach me on the 7th. Depending on when you write address your reply here or to Bombay. I do not intend to stay for more than four days in Bombay. I shall go thence to Ahmedabad. I shall stay there for about three days and proceed to Rajkot to dispose of the house there. I think I shall not need to stay for more than four days at Rajkot.

I wish Jamnadas not to leave the place before we meet. He need not be in a hurry.

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 11168. Courtesy: Radhabehn Choudhri

358. SPEECH AT Y. M. C. A., MADRAS

April 27, 1915

MR. CHAIRMAN AND DEAR FRIENDS,

Madras has wellnigh exhausted the English vocabulary in using adjectives of virtue with reference to my wife and myself and, if I may be called upon to give an opinion as to where I have been smothered with kindness, love and attention, I would have to say: it is Madras. (Applause.) But, as I have said so often, I believe it of Madras. So it is no wonder to me that you are lavishing all these kindnesses with unparalleled generosity, and now the worthy President of the Servants of India Society—under which Society I am going through a period of probation—has, if I may say so, capped it all. Am I worthy of these things? My answer from the innermost recesses of my heart is an emphatic “No”. But I have come to India to become worthy of every adjective that you may use, and all my life will certainly be dedicated to prove worthy of them, if I am to be a worthy servant.

1 The first four pages of the letter are not available.
2 The month and year have been inferred from Gandhiji’s itinerary.
3 In reply to the Madras students’ address, V. S. Srinivasa Sastri presiding
And so it is that you have sung that beautiful national song\textsuperscript{1}, on hearing which all of us sprang to our feet. The poet\textsuperscript{2} has lavished all the adjectives that he possibly could to describe Mother India. He describes Mother India as sweet-smelling, sweet-speaking, fragrant, all-powerful, all-good, truthful, a land flowing with milk and honey, and having ripe fields, fruits and grains, and inhabited by a race of men of whom we have only a picture in the great Golden Age. He pictures to us a land which shall embrace in its possession the whole of the world, the whole of humanity by the might or right not of physical power but of soul-power. Can we sing that hymn? I ask myself, “Can I, by any right, spring to my feet when I listen to that song?” The poet no doubt gave us a picture for our realisation the words of which simply remain prophetic, and it is for you, the hope of India, to realise every word that the poet has said in describing this Motherland of ours. To-day I feel that these adjectives are very largely misplaced in his description of the Motherland, and it is for you and for me to make good the claim that the poet has advanced on behalf of his Motherland.

The Real Education

You—the students of Madras as well as students all over India—are you receiving an education which will make you worthy to realise that ideal and which will draw the best out of you, or is it an education which has become a factory for making Government employees or clerks in commercial offices? Is the goal of the education that you are receiving that of mere employment whether in the Government departments or other departments? If that be the goal of your education, if that is the goal that you have set before yourselves, I feel and I fear that the vision which the poet pictured for himself is far from being realised. As you have heard me say perhaps, or as you have read, I am and I have been a determined opponent of modern civilization. I want you to turn your eyes today upon what is going on in Europe and if you have come to the conclusion that Europe is today groaning under the heels of the modern civilization, then you and your elders will have to think twice before you can emulate that civilization in our Motherland. But I have been told: “How can we help it, seeing that our rulers bring that culture to our Motherland?”

\textsuperscript{1} The proceedings had begun with the “Vande Mataram” song, all standing.
\textsuperscript{2} Bankim Chandra Chatterji
Do not make any mistake about it at all. I do not for one moment believe that it is for any rulers to bring that culture to you unless you are prepared to accept it, and if it be that the rulers bring that culture before us, I think that we have forces within ourselves to enable us to reject that culture without having to reject the rulers themselves. (Applause.) I have said on many a platform that the British race is with us. I decline to go into the reasons why that race is with us, but I do believe that it is possible for India if she would but live up to the tradition of the sages of whom you have heard from our worthy President, to transmit a message through this great race, a message not of physical might, but a message of love. And then, it will be your privilege to conquer the conquerors not by shedding blood but by sheer force of spiritual predominance. When I consider what is going on today in India, I think it is necessary for us to say what our opinion is in connection with the political assassinations and political dacoities. I feel that these are purely a foreign importation which cannot take root in this land. But you the student world have to beware, lest mentally or morally you give one thought of approval to this kind of terrorism. I, as a passive resister, will give you another thing very substantial for it. Terrorise yourself; search within; by all means resist tyranny wherever you find it; by all means resist encroachment upon your liberty, but not by shedding the blood of the tyrant. That is not what is taught by our religion. Our religion is based upon ahimsa, which in its active form is nothing but love, love not only to your neighbours, not only to your friends but love even to those who may be your enemies.

One word more in connection with the same thing. I think that if we were to practise truth, to practise ahimsa, we must immediately see that we also practise fearlessness. If our rulers are doing what in our opinion is wrong, and if we feel it our duty to let them hear our advice even though it may be considered sedition, I urge you to speak sedition but at your peril. You must be prepared to suffer the consequences. And when you are ready to suffer the consequences and not hit below the belt, then I think you will have made good your right to have your advice heard even by the Government.

Rights and Duties

I ally myself with the British Government, because I believe that it is possible for me to claim equal partnership with every subject of the British Empire. I today claim that equal partnership. I do not belong to a subject rate. I do not call myself a member of a subject race. But there is this thing: it is not for the British governors to give you; it is for you to take the thing. I want and I can take the thing. That I want only by discharging my obligations, Max Muller\(^1\) has told us—we need not go to Max Muller to interpret our own religion but he says, our religion consists of the four letters “D-u-t-y” and not the five-letters “R-i-g-h-t”. And if you believe that all that we want can grow from better discharge of our duty, then think always of your duty and fighting along those lines, you will have no fear of any man, you will fear only God. That is the message that my master—if I may say so, your master, too—Mr. Gokhale has given to us. What is that message then? It is in the constitution of the Servants of India Society and that is the message by which I wish to be guided in my life. The message is to spiritualize the political life and the political institutions of the country. We must immediately set about realising its practice. The students cannot be away from politics. Politics is as essential to them as religion. Politics cannot be divorced from religion. Politics divorced from religion becomes debasing. Modern culture and modern civilization are such politics.\(^2\) My views may not be acceptable to you, I know. All the same I can only give you what is stirring me to my very depths. On the authority of my experiences in South Africa, I claim that your countrymen who had not that modern culture but who had that strength of the \textit{Rishis}\(^3\) of old, who have inherited the \textit{tapascharya}\(^4\) performed by the \textit{Rishis}, without having known a single word of English literature and without knowing anything whatsoever of the present modern culture, they are able to rise to their full height. And what has been possible for the uneducated and illiterate countrymen of ours in South Africa is ten times possible for you and for me today in this sacred land of ours. May that be your privilege and may that be my privilege! (Applause.)

\textit{Speeches and Writings of Mahatma Gandhi}

---
\(^1\) (1823-1900), German orientalist
\(^2\) These two sentences are from \textit{The Hindu}, 28-4-1915.
\(^3\) Sages
\(^4\) Penance
359. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

April 29 [1915]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I can only send you goodwill by the mail that leaves tomorrow. I am just going to a meeting and from there to a place further away so that if I do not send you this line now I cannot write at all this week.

With apologies and love,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

360. SPEECH AT LAKSHMI MEMORIAL ARYA PATHSHALA, MADRAS

April 29, 1915

Mr. Gandhi, in reply, said that he and Mrs. Gandhi were exceedingly obliged to Mr. N. Swaminatha Aiyer, for having shown them the institution at work, and congratulated the school on having such a generous patron as Mr. C. Ramanujam Chettiar.

New India, 30-4-1915

361. SPEECH AT RECEPTION BY GUJARATIS OF MADRAS

April 29, 1915

“Govinda Vilas”, Patter’s Road, Royapettah, the residence of Mr. Lodd Govindas, was the scene of a very large and representative gathering yesterday evening of the leading Indian citizens of Madras who responded to the invitation of the Gujarati community to attend an At Home in honour of Mr. and Mrs. Gandhi. . . A group photograph with Mr. Gandhi in the centre was taken. Mr. Lodd Govindas in a short speech said that the Gujarati community was indeed proud of possessing a great man like Mr. Gandhi among them. . . Dewan Bahadur Govindas Chathurbujadoss read

1 At Thambu Chetty Street
2 Sub-Inspector of Schools, Georgetown Range

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
an address of welcome in Gujarati.

Mr. Gandhi, in replying in Gujarati, drew the attention of the Gujarati community in Madras to that important fact that their well-being was the same as that of other communities in Madras and consequently impressed on them the necessity for working in unison with others. He was grateful to the Madras public for having taken such a large number of Gujarati people into the town and this Presidency.

Mr. Lodd Govindas, on behalf of the members of the Gujarati community, as well as the Gujarati-speaking people of Madras, presented, with great pleasure, a money purse to Mr. Gandhi.

Mr. Gandhi, in thankfully accepting it, said that he never received any kind of present from anybody, and the money would therefore be dedicated to public use.

New India, 30-4-1915

362. SPEECH AT RECEPTION AT TRANQUEBAR

April 30, 1915

Yesterday the public of Tranquebar and suburbs accorded a grand and enthusiastic reception to Mr. and Mrs. Gandhi. Over 2,000 people representing numerous classes, particularly passive resisters, had assembled. . . . Mr. K. C. Subramaniam, Barrister, read the welcome address. . . . The distinguished guest replied in appropriate terms exhorting his fellow-workers to take to passive resistance whenever and wherever needed for adopting constitutional agitation [sic].

His speech was heard with rapt attention and it was translated on the spot.

The Hon'ble Mr. V. S. Srinivasa Sastri was next called upon to speak. He exhorted the audience to work for their country's cause.

The Hindu, 1-5-1915

1 In Madras state
363. SPEECH AT RECEPTION BY DEPRESSED CLASSES SOCIETY, TRANQUEBAR

April 30, 1915

The South Indian Depressed Classes Society presented a separate welcome address.

Mr. Gandhi in reply observed that that section of his countrymen needed larger attention and patriotic, earnest and practical work until the existing shameful differences disappeared and the so-called depressed got elevated and got equal privileges.

The Hindu, 1-5-1915

364. SPEECH AT RECEPTION AT MAYAVARAM

May 1, 1915

MR. CHAIRMAN AND FRIENDS,

I am exceedingly thankful to the people of Mayavaram for presenting this beautiful address to me on the occasion of our simply passing through your town or village whatever it may be called, on our way to places where I had hoped to see two widows of men who were shot during the struggle that went on for eight years in South Africa. I was able to see only one and I was not able to see the other whom I hope to see before I leave this great Presidency. It is therefore a matter of greater pleasure to me that you would not allow us to pass unnoticed even though it were simply a passing tour through Mayavaram. But if we have appreciated or if we have received this great and warm welcome from you, may I, for the first time after my return to the sacred land, commence to make a return for the great love that has been shown to us and with your permission I shall try to do so this evening.

It was quite by accident that I had the great pleasure of receiving an address from my Panchama brethren, and there they said that they were without convenience for drinking water, they were without convenience for living supplies and they could not buy or hold land.

1 In reply to a welcome address by Municipal Chairman at the meeting in the Victoria Town Hall, with Rao Bahadur V. K. Ramanujachariar in the chair.
It was difficult for them even to approach courts. Probably, the last is due to their fear, but a fear certainly not due to themselves and who is then responsible for this state of things? Do we propose to perpetuate this state of things? Is it a part of Hinduism? I do not know; I have now to learn what Hinduism really is. In so far as I have been able to study Hinduism outside India, I have felt that it is no part of real Hinduism to have in its hold a mass of people whom I would call “untouchables”. If it was proved to me that this is an essential part of Hinduism, I for one would declare myself an open rebel against Hinduism itself. (“Hear, hear.”) But I am still not convinced and I hope that up to the end of my life, I shall remain unconvinced that it is an essential part of Hinduism. But who is responsible for this class of untouchables? I have been told that wherever there are Brahmins, it is they who are enjoying supremacy as a matter of right, but today are they enjoying that supremacy? If they are, then the sin will fall upon their shoulders and that is the return I am here to declare and that is the return I shall have to make for the kindness you are showing to me; often my love to my friends, relations and even to my dear wife takes devious ways. So my return here for your kindness is to suggest a few words which you were probably not prepared to listen to and it does seem to me that it is high time for Brahmins to regain their natural prerogative. I recall to my mind the beautiful verse in the Bhagavad Gita. I shall not excite the audience by reciting the verse, but give you simply a paraphrase. “The true Brahmin is he who is equi-minded towards a Pundit and a Pariah.”

Are the Brahmins in Mayavaram equi-minded towards the Pariah and will they tell me if they are so equi-minded and, if so, will they tell me if others will not follow? Even if they say that they are prepared to do so but others will not follow, I shall have to disbelieve them until I have revised my notions of Hinduism. If the Brahmins themselves consider they are holding a high position by penance and austerity, then they have themselves much to learn, then they will be the people who have cursed and ruined the land.

My friend the Chairman has asked me the question whether it is true that I am at war with my leaders. I say that I am not at war with my leaders. I seemed to be at war with my leaders because many things I have heard seem to be inconsistent with my notions of self-respect and with self-respect to my motherland. I feel that they are probably not discharging the sacred trust they have taken upon their shoulders; but I am not sure I am studying or endeavouring to take wisdom from them, but I failed to take that wisdom. It may be that I am incompetent and unfit to follow them. So, I shall revise my ideas. Still I am in a position to say that I seem to be at war with my leaders. Whatever they do or whatever they say does not somehow or other appeal to me. The major part of what they say does not seem to be appealing to me. I find here words of welcome in the English language. I find in the Congress programme a Resolution on Swadeshi. If you hold that you are Swadeshi and yet print these in English, then I am not Swadeshi. To me it seems that it is inconsistent. I have nothing to say against the English language. But I do say that, if you kill the vernaculars and raise the English language on the tomb of the vernaculars (“Hear, hear.”), then you are not favouring Swadeshi in the right sense of the term. If you feel that I do not know Tamil, you should pardon me, you should excuse me and teach me and ask me to learn Tamil and by having your welcome in that beautiful language, if you translate it to me, then I should think you are performing some part of the programme. Then only I should think I am being taught Swadeshi. I asked when we were passing through Mayavaram whether there had been any handlooms here and whether there were handloom weavers here. I was told that there were 50 handlooms in Mayavaram. What were they engaged in? They were simply engaged chiefly in preparing sarees for our women. Then, is Swadeshi to be confined only to the women? Is it to be only in their keeping? I do not find that our friends, the male population, also have their stuff prepared for them in these by these weavers and through their handlooms. (A voice: There are a thousand handlooms here.) There are, I understand, one thousand handlooms; so much the worse for the leaders! (Loud applause.) If these one thousand handlooms are kept chiefly in attending to the wants of our women, double this supply of our handlooms and you will have all your wants supplied by your own weavers and there will be no poverty in the land. I ask you and ask our friend the President how far he is indebted to foreign goods for his outfit and if he can tell me that he has tried his utmost and still has failed to outfit himself, or rather to fit himself out with Swadeshi clothing and therefore he has got this stuff, I shall sit at his feet and learn a lesson. What I have been able to learn today is that it is entirely possible for me, not with any extra cost to fit myself with Swadeshi clothing. How am I to learn, through those who move or who are supposed to be movers in the Congress, the secret of the Resolution? I sit at the feet of my leaders, I sit at the feet of Mayavaram people and let them reveal the mystery, give me the secret of the meaning, teach me how I should behave myself and tell me whether it is a part of Swadeshi, whether it is a part of the national movement that I should drive off those who are without dwellings, who cry for water and that I should reject the advances of those who cry for food. These are the questions which I ask my friends here. Since I am saying something against you, I doubt whether I shall still enjoy or retain the affection of the student population and whether I shall still retain the blessings of my leaders. I ask you to have a large heart and give me a little corner in it. I shall try to steal into that corner. If you would be kind enough to teach me the wisdom, I shall learn the wisdom in all humility and in all earnestness. I am praying for it and I am asking for it. If you cannot teach me, I again declare myself at war with my leaders. (Loud cheers.)

1 Ch. V, v. 18

The Hindu, 3-5-1915

365. LETTER TO A. H. WEST

May 4, 1915

MY DEAR WEST,

I will take your letter as it comes. It is no use your qualifying as a lawyer. It is possible you may get some guilty ones discharged on technicalities and you may get the innocent also saved from imprisonment. But when you consider what a small percentage of the population passes through the courts, you at once see that it is no part of humanitarian work to take up law. All that you can do, without getting the title of a lawyer you are doing. More you do not need. If you have leisure, read up your laws by all means as Mr. Gokhale did, though he never was a lawyer.

I am nearing the end of my first tour. I hope then to write more regularly and to write for Indian Opinion also. I am going through very varied experiences. India continues to satisfy my aspirations. I see much to dishearten me and I see much to encourage me.

We are both keeping fairly good health. If we can settle down somewhere, we should do better. More than this, I have not the time to say just now.
So with love from us both,

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

[PS.]

I have seen Selvan’s widow and I succeeded in getting from her the youngest boy. She will get a monthly allowance of Rs. 5. I invited her also to join me but she wouldn’t.

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 4418. Courtesy: A. H. West

366. LETTER TO SAROJINI NAIDU

NELLORE,
May 4, 1915

MY DEAR SISTER,

I did not reply to your last letter as I had hoped to be able at the time of replying to tell you when I was likely to visit Hyderabad. But the receipt of your booklet with the beautiful inscription in it compels me to write to you now, even though I cannot fix the date of my coming to Hyderabad.

I thank you for the inscription. Yes, Mr. Gokhale longed to have you as a full servant of India. Your acknowledgment of discipleship fills one with new hope. But of this more when we meet. For me the death of the Master has drawn me closer to him. I see him and appreciate his worth as I never did before; for the lover, the loved one never dies.

Are you keeping well in health?

I leave Madras on the 7th instant for Bombay.

My permanent address is Servants of India Society, Poona.

Mrs. Gandhi, who is with me, sends her love to you.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From the original: Padmaja Naidu Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library
367. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

Vaishakh Vad 5 [May 4, 1915]

CHI. NARANDAS,

I shall arrive there on the 10th or perhaps the 9th. So far as I know, Chi. Jamnadas had joined the institution, but there may have been a misunderstanding on my part. Jamnadas thinks that he had taken no vow. One who does not take any vow cannot be a member, though such a one can stay as a student. Even a student must observe the vows while he lives in the institution. A member must observe them all his life. Jamnadas wants to remain outside the institution and observe its rules. It seems Harilal’s letter has had some effect on his mind. He is hurt by the former’s allegations.

Groundnuts and dates have done most of us no harm. By not eating more than five articles on any day, we advance in the observance of the vow of non-violence, as, on that particular day at least, we spare all vegetable life excepting the articles in question. The vow concerning [the control of] the palate will also be better observed because one would not have more than five things to enjoy for their taste. The vow of non-stealing will be conformed to because, in drawing nourishment from five articles, one would not be over-eating and there would be greater economy besides. I shall have to think much now before eating the groundnut sweet. As it would contain three articles, I could have only two in addition. Cardamom and similar things would also count as separate articles. This is a difficult vow to have taken but I am getting used to it. The mind, the dog that it still is, runs about like one seeking to extract the utmost relish from the five articles. More you may ask me when we meet. I shall be in Bombay for as short a time as possible. The mind has only one thought, settling the affairs at Ahmedabad.

Inform Madhavji² about the date of my arrival there.

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand C.W. 5670. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

¹ This appears to have been written in 1915 after Gandhiji took at Hardwar a vow to take only five articles of food in a day on April 9; vide “Diary for 1915”.
² Kasturba’s brother
MR. CHAIRMAN AND FRIENDS,

I do not propose to inflict a speech upon you. I am extremely zealous of individual liberty about which we heard this morning from the eloquent lips of Mrs. Besant and from Mr. Sastriar, with his matchless, merciless, severe and cold logic. I was so zealous of your liberty that I had concocted a plot, but, unfortunately it failed. I was not able to draw in our worthy Chairman of the Reception Committee and the present president of this Conference. I wanted to suggest to them that for the Congresses and for the future Conferences, they might lead the way by not reading their addresses but by simply distributing their addresses for us to read.

It is an accident that this resolution follows on two resolutions one with reference to my noble master Mr. Gokhale, and the other to the noble Viceroy to whom fitting tribute has been made, and I amhere to acknowledge the indebtedness that your countrymen in South Africa owe to the Viceroy.

Sir, if my wife and I are worthy of anything that has been said on this platform and on many a platform, I have repeated, and I am here to repeat, that the inspiration that we derived was from an Indian source and that was from the late Mr. Gokhale. His life, his message, his words, his methods, have been to me a guiding star, and they will still remain an important guide; and we can best revere hismemory by translating some part of his life into our own. My life is dedicated to that, and I appeal to you, my countrymen, not to spoil

1 At the 21st Madras Provincial Conference
2 Annie Besant (1847-1933), President of the Theosophical Society in 1907; also founder of Central Hindu College at Benares; President, Indian National Congress, 1917. She had said: “In the successful issue of the struggle in South Africa is a presage of the successful termination of the struggle for liberty on the Indian soil. We thank him not only for what he did, but also in that what he did will strengthen the Indian nation in the future. Mr. Gandhi’s great help to us is that of inspiration—an inspiration to self-sacrifice, an inspiration to following of a great ideal, the recognition of the fact that there is no dishonour in anything that is endured for the sake of right and justice, and that a prison is no dishonour when the soul within it is free, and when prison is accepted as the price of that liberty.”
3 The resolution moved by G. A. Natesan which expressed “grateful appreciation of the enormous sacrifices.....” of Gandhiji and Kasturba us, not to isolate us in the service, not to overrate what we have done in South Africa. Let me make this humble appeal. Let what is done in South Africa be buried there. Our countrymen in South Africa know well of what has been done there. It is impossible to stand here upon any reputation we may have built in South Africa. You will spoil us for two reasons. We may lose our heads and so be lost to the country. The other is that you may raise enormous expectations about us and disappointment may at last be the result.

_Indian Opinion, 7-7-1915_

369. SPEECH AT STUDENTS’ MEETING, NELLORE

_May 6, 1915_

The address having been read and presented to Mr. Gandhi, he then thanked the students for taking such a lively part in the Conference¹ and serving as volunteers.’ He said that unless what had been said on the platform was translated into action and interest kept up, these Conferences were of no use. A great deal was said about the encouragement of industries on the platform, but when he went into that part of the public hall, where clothes made of fly shuttle weaving and brought from Narayanavanam, Chittoor District, were exhibited and enquired of the owner how much worth of clothes he had brought, and how much of it he had sold, he found that out of Rs. 1,000 worth of clothes, he had sold only Rs. 50 or Rs. 60 worth. The clothes were good enough, and in spite of it even the educated could not be induced to put their hands into their pockets and purchase some if only to mark their appreciation of the Swadeshi enterprise. When such was the state of encouragement offered to local indigenous industries, there was no hope of advancement. He exhorted the students to set a practical example, and not rest contented with merely making speeches.

_New India, 7-5-1915_

¹ Madras Provincial Conference: _vide_ the preceding item.
370. FRAGMENT OF LETTER

[NELLORE, May 6, 1915]

I think it is all to one’s good to observe these vows. I believe in making a supreme effort for rising above this earthly existence. It seems to me that service of the nation will include such an effort. Our aims are right. I think our faith in them is unshakable. It becomes stronger through experience. I should like you to follow the same reasoning. I don’t want any of you to submit to my wishes and take things on trust. Nor will I force my views [on you]. You may all take the vows when they appeal to you.

There will be some gentlemen from Madras with me. I see that the number will go up. I am bringing along Selvan’s son.2 You know him. He is the little one who used to be naughty in Phoenix.

I am writing this from Nellore. I am attending a conference here. I shall leave tomorrow morning.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 6671. Courtesy: Radhabehn Choudhri

371. STATEMENT AT INDIAN SOUTH AFRICAN LEAGUE MEETING, MADRAS

May 7, 1915

Mr. Gandhi, in the course of a brief statement, said that the passive resistance Africa as the Searle judgment5; (3) repeal of the annual £3 tax which was payable struggle started with the Asiatic struggle in the Transvaal in 1906. As it went on stage after stage, it owing to the exigencies of the case and as a matter of course

1 The first four pages of the letter are missing. The available portion is also torn at places.
2 Vide “Letter to A. H. West”, 4-5-1915.
3 Madras Provincial Conference
4 At the premises of Messrs G. A. Natesan and Co.
5 The judgment delivered by Justice Searle of the Cape Supreme Court on March 14, 1913 which declared as invalid all marriages not solemnized with Christian rites and not duly registered

436 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI expanded and embraced the following further points, viz., (1) the removal of racial disability in the immigration legislation of the Union of South Africa; (2) the restoration of the status of Indian wives whether married in accordance with Hindu or Mahomedan religious rites as it originally existed before what was known in South by every ex-indentured Indian, his wife and his children—male and female—males after reaching 16 years, females after reaching 12 if they decided to settle in the province of Natal as free men; (4) just administration of existing laws specially affecting British Indians with regard to vested rights. All these points were completely gained under the settlement of last year, and they have been embodied so far as legislation was necessary in what was known as the Indians’ Relief Act and otherwise in the correspondence that took place between General Smuts and himself immediately after the passing of the Act referred to. Such being the case and as the Indian South African League was formed solely for the purpose of assisting the struggle, it could well dissolve itself. Mr. Gandhi referred also to the administration of the funds that were sent to him from India and other parts of the Empire. He said that at every stage of the struggle a complete statement of income and expenditure was published. The first was sent to Mr. Gokhale accompanied with a public letter. The second statement was rendered to Mr. Ratan Tata also accompanied with a public letter. The third was ready and was to have been published after consultation with Mr. Gokhale and the general committee at Bombay. Such was Mr.
Gokhale’s desire. He (the speaker) was now waiting to see Mr. Nut, Mr. Petit, the secretary of the committee, and then publish the statement. Mr. Gandhi added there were nearly 30 passive resisters including their families in India who were to be supported. These included the widows and children of two men who were shot in the course of the struggle. He therefore suggested that the small balance which was still with the Indian South African League might well be devoted to their assistance. Mr. Gandhi desired to take the opportunity to express the thanks of the South African Indians for the great and valuable assistance it had rendered to them during the most critical times of the struggle. He was not going to mention any names but he felt it his duty to convey in person, as the interpreter of the wishes of many Transvaal deportees who were in Madras in 1909, their heartfelt thanks to Mr. Natesan for the devotion which he displayed in looking after their interest

1 Vide “The Indians Relief Act, 1914”.
3 Sir Ratan Tata (1871-1918), Parsi philanthropist who sent large sums of money for the satyagrahis in South Africa; vide “Public Letter to Ratan J. Tata”,
1-4-1912
5 The League passed a resolution, dissolving itself and placing the balance at his disposal.
during their exile in India. He was glad [he was] able to convey in person his grateful thanks to the chairman and the members of the League for the moral and material support they had rendered to their cause.

_The Leader, 24-6-1915_

372. SPEECH AT BANGALORE

_May 8, 1915_

MY DEAR COUNTRYMEN.

Before I perform this ceremony to which you have called me, I wish to say this to you that you have given me a great opportunity or rather a privilege on this great occasion. I saw in the recitation, the beautiful recitation that was given to me, that God is with them whose garment was dusty and tattered. My thoughts immediately went to the end of my garment; I examined and found that it is not dusty and it is not tattered; it is fairly spotless and clean. God is not in me. There are other conditions attached; but in these conditions too I may fail; and you, my dear countrymen, may also fail; and if we do tend this well, we should not dishonour the memory of one whose portrait you have asked me to unveil this morning. I have declared myself his disciple in the political field and I have him as my _Rajya Guru_; and this I claim on behalf of the Indian people. It was in 1896 that I made this declaration, and I do not regret having made the choice.

Mr. Gokhale taught me that the dream of every Indian, who claims to love his country, should be to act in the political field, should be not to glorify in language, but to spiritualise the political life of the country, and the political institutions of the country. He inspired my life and is still inspiring [it]; and in that I wish to purify myself and spiritualise myself. I have dedicated myself to that ideal. I may fail, and to what extent I may fail, I call myself to that extent an unworthy disciple of my master.

What is the meaning of spiritualising the political life of

---

1 While unveiling the portrait of G. K. Gokhale in Government High school at the instance of the Social Service League
2 From Tagore's Gitanjali, of the poem “Leave this chanting and singing and telling of beads’ which has: “He is with them in sun and in shower and his garment is covered with dust. . . . What harm is there if thy clothes become tattered and stained?”
3 “love” in _Speeches and Writings of Mahatma Gandhi_, Natesan
the country? What is the meaning of spiritualising myself? That question has come before me often and often and to you it may seem one thing, to me it may seem another thing; it may mean different things to the different members of the Servants of India Society itself. It shows much difficulty and it shows the difficulties of all those who want to love their country, who want to serve their country and who want to honour their country. I think political life must be an echo of private life and that there cannot be any divorce between the two.

I was by the side of that saintly politician to the end of his life and I found no ego in him. I ask you, members of the Social Service League, if there is no ego in you. If he wanted to shine, —he wanted to shine in the political field of his country,—he did so not in order that he might gain public applause, but in order that his country might gain. He developed every particular faculty in him, not in order to win the praise of the world for himself, but in order that his country might gain. He did not seek public applause, but they were showered upon him, they were thrust upon him; he wanted that his country might gain and that was his great inspiration.

There are many things for which India is blamed, very rightly, and if you should add one more to our failure, the blame will descend not only on you but also on me for having participated in today’s functions. But I have great faith in my countrymen.

You ask me to unveil this portrait today, and I will do so in all sincerity and sincerity should be the end of your life. (Loud and continued applause.)

The Indian Review, May 1915

373. TALK WITH BANGALORE CITIZENS

May 8, 1915

Mr. Gandhi was met today at his temporary residence Seshadri Road, Bangalore, by a few citizens who engaged him in conversation.

Questioned as to India’s poverty, Mr. Gandhi said India was becoming poorer and poorer, on account of disappearance of the handloom industries owing to violent competition and export of raw materials.

He said:

We have lost much of our self-respect on account of being too much Europeanised. We think and speak in English. Thereby, we impoverish our vernaculars, and estrange the feelings of the masses. A knowledge of English is not very essential to the service of our Motherland. Turning to caste, he said:

Caste is the great power and secret of Hinduism.

GANDHI'S HOME

Asked where he would stay, Mr. Gandhi replied:

Great pressure is brought down on me to settle in Bengal; but I have a great capital in the store of my knowledge in Gujarat and I get letters from there.

WANTED A LIBRARY

Vernacular literature is important. I want to have a library of all books. I invite friends for financial aid to form libraries and to locate them.

MODERN CIVILIZATION A CURSE

Modern civilization is a curse in Europe as also in India. War is the direct result of modern civilization. Every one of the powers was making preparations for war.

GREAT MORAL FORCE

Passive resistance is a great moral force meant for the weak, also for the strong. Soul-force depends on itself. Ideals must work in practice, otherwise they are not potential. Modern civilization is brute force.

It is one thing to know the ideal and another thing to practise it. That will ensure greater discipline, which means greater service and greater service means greater gain to Government. Passive resistance is a high aggressive thing. The attribute of soul is restlessness; there is room for every phase of thought.

THREE EVILS

Money, land and woman are the sources of evil and evil has to be counteracted. I need not possess land, nor a woman, nor money, to satisfy my luxuries. I do not want to be unhinged because others are unhinged. If ideals are practised, there will be less room for mischievous activities. Public life has to be moulded.

SADHUS IN INDIA

Every current has to change its course. There are one and a half million sadhus\(^1\) and if every sadhu did his duty, India could achieve much. Jagatguru Sankaracharya does not deserve that appellation because he has no more force in him.

INDIAN IDEALS

Malicious material activity is no good. It finds out means to multiply one’s luxuries. Intense, gross modern activity should not be imposed in Indian institutions, which have to be remodelled on ideals taken from Hinduism. Virtue as understood in India is not understood in foreign lands. Dasharatha\(^2\) is considered a fool in foreign lands for his having kept his promise to his wife\(^3\). India says a promise is a promise. That is a good deal. Material activity is mischievous. Truth shall conquer in the end.

EMIGRANTS

Emigration does no good to the country from which people emigrate. Emigrants do not return better moral men. The whole thing is against Hinduism. Temples do not flourish. There are no opportunities for ceremonial functions. Priests do not come, and at times, they are merely men of straw. Immigrants play much mischief and corrupt society. It is not enterprise. They may earn more money easily in those parts, which means they do not want to toil and remain straight in the methods of earning. Immigrants are not happier and have more material wants.

THEOSOPHICAL SOCIETY

Questioned about the Theosophical Society, Mr. Gandhi said:

There is a good deal of good in the Theosophical Society, irrespective of individuals. It has stimulated ideals and thought.

New India, 10-5-1915

---

1. Wandering recluses
2. Father of Rama
3. Kaikeyi, who wanted Rama to be sent into exile and her own son Bharat to become the crown prince
MR. CHAIRMAN AND MY FRIENDS,

I think it is simply impertinent to tell you that I thank you most sincerely on behalf of my wife and on my own behalf for the signal honour you have shown me. Words fail me, and one thought oppresses me all the more. Am I, are we, worthy of the honour? Are we worthy of the oriental generosity of this love? The Chairman has furnished this ground for the love, and quoted Mr. Gokhale. Let me not bask in that reputation. See me please in the nakedness of my working, and in my limitations, you will then know me. I have to tread on most delicate ground, and my path is destined to be through jungles and temples. The glamour produced by the saintly politician has vanished, and let us be judged eye to eye. So many have assembled here to do honour. This morning, you did greater honour. Greater honour was shown by the Reception Committee in arranging for the conversation, in order to open my heart to you and to understand the innermost thoughts in you by quiet conversation between my countrymen and myself.

I did not want to be dragged in the carriage. There is a meaning in that. Let us not spoil our public men by dragging them. Let them work silently. We should not encourage the thought that one has to work because one will be honoured similarly. Let public men feel that they will be stoned, they will be neglected and let them still love the country, for service is its own reward. A charge has been brought against us that we as a nation are too demonstrative and lack business-like methods. We plead guilty to the charge. Are we to copy modern activities or are we to copy the ancient civilization which has survived so many shocks? You and I have to act on the political

---

1. At Albert Victory Conservatory at Lal Bagh
2. Dewan Bahadur Puttana Chetty, Hon. President of the City Municipal Council, who read the address of welcome
3. Gandhiji had received a great ovation on his arrival at the City Station and at the unveiling of Gokhale’s portrait.
4. Vide the preceding item.
5. This paragraph is from Mahatma Gandhi: His Life, Writings and Speeches, Ganesh & Co.
platform from a spiritual side and if this is done, we should then conquer the conquerors. The day will dawn then when we can consider an Englishman as a fellow citizen. (Cheers.) That day will shortly come; but it may be difficult to conceive when. I have had signal opportunities of associating myself with Englishmen of character, devotion, nobility and influence. I can assure you that the present wave of activity is passing away and a new civilization is coming shortly which will be a nobler one. India is a great dependency and Mysore is a great Native State. It must be possible for you to transmit this message to British governors, and to British statesmen; the message is: “Establish a Ram Rajya in Mysore and have as your minister a Vashishta who will command obedience.” (Prolonged cheers.) My fellow-countrymen, then you can dictateterms to the conqueror. (Prolonged cheers.)

Indian Review; May, 1915; Mahatma Gandhi: His Life, Writings and Speeches, Ganesh & Co.

375. LETTER TO G. A. NATESAN

BOMBAY,

May 10, 1915

DEAR MR. NATESAN,

How shall I thank you for the extraordinary affection shown to me by you? As you did it all for the country I accepted it. I shall endeavour to prove myself worthy of it. Yes, Madras still remains my favourite.

We reached without much discomfort. As all the principal men are out of Bombay I am leaving for Ahmedabad tonight. Sundaram seems to be shaping well. Naiker still remains a gem. The old friend is all right. And Mrs. Gandhi can only think of you.

You must let me have Tamil books please. I want books for beginners and books for men like Sundaram. I want all Dr.

1 During Gandhiji’s visit to Madras
2 Inmates of the Satyagraha Ashram
3 Inmates of the Satyagraha Ashram; vide the following item
4 Revashanker Zaveri’s elder brother; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 25-4-1915.
Pope’s books. Will you please attend to this as early as you can?
And you will send us those covering sheets?
Please remember us to your mother and Mrs. Natesan and to all the friends who may be still thinking of us.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. Gandhi

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: G. N. 2228

376. THE ASHRAM: AN ESTIMATE OF EXPENDITURE

Vaishakh Vad 13, Tuesday [May 11, 1915]

Dada¹ Maganbhai Shanti
Ba His wife Ranchhod
Myself His son Kaku
Sundaram Maganlal Keshu
Naiker Shivpujan Krishna
Santok Shanti Prabhudas
Rukhi Navin Rajangam
Radha Cuppu Rati
Manilal Fakiri Magan
Ramdas Bala Three other Tamils
Devdas Chavda’s daughter
Kaka Chhotalal
Naranji Narandas
His wife Parthasarathi

To begin with, there will be about 40 inmates in the institution.
The number is likely to be 50 in a short time.
There are likely to be, on an average, ten guests in a month.
Three to five of them will be with families.

¹ Dr. G. U. Pope (1820-1908), author of First Lessons in Tamil, A Handbook of the Ordinary Dialect of the Tamil Language, A Textbook of Indian History, etc.; vide “The Late Dr. Pope”, 14-3-1908.
² Prepared for Sheth Mangaldas Girdharlal of Ahmedabad; vide “Diary for 1915”.
³ Used for elder brother or grandfather. Here presumably for Revashanker Jhaveri’s elder brother.
Hence the accommodation to be provided should be such that those with families can stay separately and the rest together.

Having regard to this, three kitchens and rooms measuring 50,000 sq. ft. [together] will provide sufficient accommodation to all.

In addition to this, a room and cupboards for holding a thousand books will also be required.

At least five acres of land will be required for cultivation. Agricultural implements sufficient for at least thirty persons to work with will be needed. These should include hoes, shovels and pickaxes.

Carpenter’s tools will be required as under:

5 Big hammers
3 Adzes
5 Small hammers
2 Anvils
3 Drills
10 Chisels, small and large
4 Carpenter’s planes
1 Pricker
4 Files
4 Gimlets, small and large
4 Saws, small and large
5 Pinches, small and large
20 lbs nails and pins
1 Wooden hammer

Cobbler’s tools
I estimate the total cost at Rs. 500.

The kitchen utensils required will cost Rs. 150.

If we are far away from the railway station, one bullock cart or horse-carriage will be needed for transport of luggage and also perhaps for conveyance of guests, etc.

The annual expenses on boarding, etc., I estimate at the rate of Rs. 10 p.m. per head. I don’t see any possibility of our being able to provide this from our produce during the first year. Thus, with an average of 50 inmates, the annual expenditure will come to Rs. 6,000.

I have understood it to be the desire of the [local] leaders that we should merely experiment for a year in Ahmedabad. If that is so,
Ahmedabad should bear the whole of this burden. My demand was that Ahmedabad should provide me with land and building complete, while I would obtain the remaining expenses from elsewhere or by other means. As we have now changed the basis, I think Ahmedabad should bear the entire burden for a year or any shorter period. If Ahmedabad is not prepared to do this for a year, I am in a position to provide for the boarding charges.

As I have worked out this estimate in a hurry, it is likely that I have missed some few items. Moreover, I have no information about local conditions, except for boarding charges. Hence my estimates may well be incorrect.

If Ahmedabad bears all the expenses, the figures under the different heads will be as follows:
- Rent—bungalow and farm land
- Cost of cupboards for books
- Carpenter’s tools
- Cobbler’s tools
- Kitchen utensils
- Bullock-cart or horse-carriage
- Boarding charges for one year: 6000

I think we shall need blacksmith’s and mason’s tools and many others besides. But I have not taken into account these and also equipment for educational purposes. Five or more indigenous looms will be the main requirements among the latter, as far as I can see.

MOHANDAS KARAMCHAND GANDHI

HOUSEHOLD ARTICLES

4 Large cooking pots for 40 persons
2 Small cooking pots for ten persons
3 Water jars of brass or copper for fetching water
4 Earthen [water pots]
4 Wooden stands
1 Frying pan large enough for ten pounds
3 Small ladles
2 Trenchers for kneading flour
1 Large brass vessel for heating water
3 Kettles
5 Buckets or metal vessels to hold bathing water
5 Flat cover-dishes for cooking pots
5 Utensils to store corn
3 Shallow pans
10 Metal trays
10 Metal cups, large size
10 Metal tumblers
10 Cups
4 Tubs for washing clothes
2 Sieves
1 ‘Brass strainer
3 Querns
10 Spoons
1 Scoop
1 Pair of mortar and pestle
3 Sweeping brooms
6 Chairs
3 Tables
6 Cupboards to hold books
30 Inkstands
6 Black-boards
6 Racks
3 Maps of India
3 Maps of the world
2 Maps of Bombay Presidency
1 Map of Gujarat
5 Handlooms
Carpenter’s tools
Cobbler’s tools
Agricultural implements
4 Bedsteads
1 Carriage
5 Lanterns
MY DEAR FRIEND,

Last week no letter went to you. I miscalculated the mail day and found myself at a place from where I could not send a letter to fit in with the mail day at Bombay.

So you have changed the restaurant life for the life at Walden. I do not mind, if it gives you some peace. The chief thing is to occupy yourself in something useful. It is quite clear you will not study there. What you will do when you rejoin me remains to be seen. I see no present chance of my securing permit for you. With the bitterness between the parties increasing, no permits will be granted. I observe too that you are no longer meeting the Roberts. I do hope that this forced separation will nerve you and fit you for the struggle to come. For whilst the atmosphere here is grand, it requires all the greater effort for the perception it gives one.

I am now at a place where, for the time being at least, I shall have fixed up the Phoenix party. We have almost arranged. I am being given a temporary residential place, tools, etc. The leaders here will watch me and my work and meanwhile look about for a place which will be an agricultural site. I shall then have to think out a plan for buildings, etc. In this you could have advised most efficiently. However, just now I must simply do the best I can.

My health continues to be good. The pain in the side somehow or other does not leave me entirely. It is difficult to understand the thing. The fruit diet continues and the restriction to five articles does not cause any trouble. The sunset arrangement answers admirably.¹

¹ The source here has “you”.
² The reference apparently is to the vows Gandhiji took on April 9 at Hardwar; vide “Speech at Reception by Indians Christians, Madras”, 26-4-1915.
I had a rare time in Madras. I met the two widows and I have taken with me one of the little ones of one of the widows.

More in my next.

With love,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

378. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

[AHMEDABAD.]

Vaishakh Vad 0)), Thursday [May 13, 1915]

CHI. MAGANLAL,

I am writing this letter on Thursday. You will get it on Monday or Sunday. It has been decided to rent a bungalow here and later look about for land, etc. The rent for the bungalow and the cost of tools, etc., are to be borne by Ahmedabad. And of utensils as well. Boarding charges are to be borne by us. I am leaving for Rajkot today. I shall return to Ahmedabad at the latest on Tuesday. If you start from there on Monday, you will reach Delhi on Tuesday morning, and Ahmedabad on Wednesday. Fix the date and let me know by wire when you will start. Tell me in the telegram when you will reach here. I enclose [currency] notes for Rs. 200/-. If I am not mistaken, you will need 16 and a half tickets.

Send away Pandit to Calcutta now, though, of course, if you feel that he may join you, let him. He should pay the fare himself, however.

I shall be in Rajkot on the day you get this letter, and in Ahmedabad when you arrive there.

1 Mrs. Selvan whose son Naiker was taken by Gandhiji to the Ashram; vide “Letter to A.H. West”, 4-5-1915 and Fragment of Letter”, 6-5-1915.
2 From the reference to the renting of a bungalow in Ahmedabad, the letter appears to have been written in 1915. In Gujarati the fifteenth day of the dark half of the month is written as 0)).
3 For the Ashram
4 Gurukul, Hardwar
You will get the most convenient train via Delhi: Laksar, Saharanpur, Delhi Ajmer, Palanpur and Ahmedabad. If you purchase at Hardwar a through ticket to Ahmedabad, you will save Rs. 5/-.
The fare is two and a half pies per mile for the first 100 miles and 2 pies beyond that. The Mail has only Intermediate Class. There is a mixed third-class Express from Delhi, reaching Ahmedabad in 27 to 30 hours. It seems you will have to change at least at Laksar, Saharanpur and Delhi.
If a large stock of dates, etc., remains over, it will be better to buy it. They should not feel at the Gurukul later that we had been a burden there.

There is nothing more to write.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji's hand: C.W. 5673. Courtesy: Radhabehn Choudhri

379. LETTER TO V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI

AHMEDABAD,
May 14, 1915

DEAR MR. SHASTRIAR,

I want to have a quiet chat with you regarding your health. I feel very strongly about it. I am sure that you can by regulating your diet and taking water treatment completely cure yourself while there is yet time. You owe it to the Society and the country to get cured when it is so easily possible to do so. In the treatment I suggest, there need be not a day’s interruption in your public work.’ The one thing needful is to follow the cure religiously. Prolonged treatment is not necessary to notice its results. And here it is:

2 hip baths per day of at least 20 minutes’ duration, the baths to be taken not before the completion of three hours after a meal. Two hours’ gentle walk in the open air morning and evening.

Only two meals per day, the last not after sunset.

Every morsel of diet must be chewed with deliberation so that it goes down the throat not as a solid mass but as a smooth thick liquid.

—

1 (1869-1946), scholar, statesman; President, Servants of India Society, 1915-27
Whether you have done this or not can always be noticed in your stools.

The diet to consist of bananas, mangoes, oranges, oats, figs (fresh or dried), sultanas, grapes, lemons, tamarind, papaw, pineapple, prunes, cocoanut, groundnuts, almonds, pistachios, walnuts, olive oil, if necessary.

Only two varieties of nuts may be taken during the day. In quantity no more than 4 ounces of both during the day. At the commencement, i.e., for 4 days nuts may be omitted altogether and then gradually introduced.

Either lemons or tamarind may be taken. Figs, dates and other dried fruit should be well washed and soaked for six hours before eating. The water in which they are soaked should be drunk.

If olive oil be taken, no more than an ounce per day may be taken. Nine, fair-sized bananas should be enough per day along with the other fruits.

However, quantity may be regulated by each one for himself.

A month’s trial without a break is sure to show you that complete recovery lies in this direction and no other. Of course, all drinks—coffee, tea, soda water, etc., and betel leaves, etc., must be eschewed during the treatment. Later on you will go back to your old diet with variations that you may have picked up during the treatment.

Do please think of this thing seriously.

Pray remember us both to your mother and Mrs. Shastriar.

Yours sincerely

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 6287

380. SPEECH AT LIMBDI

May 19, 1915

The epithets used of me in the address and the praise showered on me by the speakers are full of exaggeration. In all that I did, I did no more than my duty towards my motherland.

[From Gujarati]

Gujarati, 30-5-1915

1 In reply to an address from the citizens, His Highness the Thakore Saheb of Limbdi presiding
381. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

LIMBDI,

Vaishakh, Sud 5, Wednesday [May 19, 1915]

CHI. NARANDAS,

I have come here for a day, as the Thakore Saheb was keen that I should. Santok and the girls have also come along. Jamnadas will stay in Rajkot for the time being.

Send the luggage lying with Revashankerbhai, as also that with you and Kalyandas', to Ahmedabad in a goods train. The beddings, I think, will have to be covered with hessian and stitched in. Alternatively, a friend coming this way could bring them along. Boxes which may have no locks should be packed well. Those containing glassware should be handled carefully.

There is a telegram from Chi. Maganlal saying that they will all leave Hardwar on Thursday. So they should be in Ahmedabad on Saturday or Sunday.

Shamaldas has come with me. Whether he will stay on, or what he will do, I can’t say.

Respected Khushalbhai and I have had long talks. I feel all the time that there is something owing from him to me. In the same degree that he has satisfied me, Nandkorbhabhi, Gangabhabhi and Gokibehn¹ have disappointed me.

More when we meet.

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5674. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

¹ Gandhiji was in Limbdi on this date with Shamaldas, son of his elder brother Lakshmidas, and Santok, wife of Maganlal Gandhi.
² Kalyandas Jagmohandas Mehta, who had worked with Gandhiji in South Africa; vide”Kalyandas Jagmohandas [Mehta]”, 11-5-1907.
³ Raliatbehn, Gandhiji’s elder sister
382. DRAFT CONSTITUTION FOR THE ASHRAM

[Before May 20, 1915]

This is only a draft printed for circulation among friends for their comments. It is not intended as a statement for the Press.

SATYAGRAHASHRAM?
DESHSEVASHRAM?
SEVAMANDIR?

OBJECT

The object of the Ashram is to learn how to serve the motherland one’s whole life and to serve it.

CLASSES

The Ashram consists of three classes Controllers, Novitiates and Students.

(1) CONTROLLERS

The Controllers believe that, in order to learn how to serve the country, the following observances should be enforced in their own lives and they have been trying to do so for some time.

1. Vow of Truth

It is not enough for a person under this vow that he does not ordinarily resort to untruth; such a person ought to know that no deception may be practised even for the good of the country. One should consider the example of Prahlad in order to understand how one should behave towards elders such as parents in the interests of Truth.

1 This was revised and published as third edition on November 7, 1915.
2 The Ashram, as stated in the third edition, was established on May 20.
3 Vide “Letter to Ranchhindal Patwari”, 5-6-1915 and “Letter to Purushottamdas Thakurdas”, 8-6-1915.
4 These sentences were replaced in the third edition by: “Some revisions have been made in this edition in the light of suggestions from friends or experience.” The revisions were as indicated in the footnotes.
5 The third edition appeared under this title, with the following note below it:
(Established) in Ahmedabad on Vaishakh Vad 6, Thursday, May 20, 1915.
2. Vow of Non-Violence

It is not enough to refrain from taking the life of any living being. He who has pledged himself to this vow may not kill eventhose whom he believes to be unjust; he may not be angry with them, he must love them; thus, he would oppose the tyranny whether of parents, governments or others, but will never kill or hurt the tyrant. The follower of truth and non-violence will offer satyagraha against tyranny and win over the tyrant by love; he will not carry out the tyrant’s will but he will suffer punishment even unto death for disobeying his will until the tyrant himself is won over.

3. Vow of Celibacy

It is well-nigh impossible to observe these two vows unless celibacy too is observed; and for this vow it is not enough that one does not look upon another woman with a lustful eye, one has so to control the animal passions that they will not be moved even in thought; if one is married, one will not have sexual intercourse even with one’s wife, but, regarding her as a friend, will establish with her a relationship of perfect purity.

4. Control of the Palate

Until one has overcome the palate, it is difficult to observe the foregoing vows, more especially that of celibacy. Control of the palate should therefore be treated as a separate observance by one desirous of serving the country and, believing that eating is only for sustaining the body, one should regulate and purify one’s diet day by day. Such a person will immediately, or gradually, as he can, leave off such articles of food as may tend to stimulate animal passions.

5. Vow of Non-Stealing

It is not enough not to steal what is commonly considered as other men’s property. One who has pledged himself to this vow should realize that Nature provides from day to day just enough and no more for one’s daily needs by way of food and so hold it theft to use articles of food, dress, etc., which one does not really need and live accordingly.

6. Vow of Non-Possession

It is not enough not to possess and keep much, but it is necessary not to keep anything which may not be absolutely necessary for the nourishment and protection of our body: thus, if one can do without chairs, one should do so. He who has taken this vow will always bear this in mind and endeavour to simplify his life more and more.

SUBSIDIARY OBSERVANCES

Two other vows follow from the foregoing.\(^1\)

1. Vow of Swadeshi

The person who has taken the vow of Swadeshi will never use articles which conceivably involve violation of truth in their manufacture or on the part of their manufacturers. It follows, for instance, that a votary of truth will not use articles manufactured in the mills of Manchester, Germany or India, for he cannot be sure that they involve no such violation of truth. Moreover, labourers suffer much in the mills. The generation of tremendous heat causes enormous destruction of life. Besides, the loss of workers’ lives in the manufacture of machines and of other creatures through excessive heat is something impossible to describe. Foreign cloth and cloth made by means of machinery are, therefore, tabooed to a votary of non-violence as they involve triple violence. Further reflection will show that the use of foreign cloth can be held to involve a breach of the vows of non-stealing and non-possession. We follow custom and, for better appearance, wear foreign cloth in preference to the cloth made on our own handlooms with so little effort. Artificial beautifying of the body is a hindrance to a brahmachari and so, even from the point of view of that vow, machine-made cloth is taboo. Therefore, the vow of Swadeshi requires the use of simple clothing made on simple handlooms and stitched in simple style, foreign buttons, cuts, etc., being avoided. The same line of reasoning may be applied to all other articles.

2. Vow of Fearlessness

He who is acted upon by fear can hardly observe the vows of truth, etc. The Controllers will, therefore, constantly endeavour to be free from the fear of kings or society, one’s caste or family, thieves, robbers, ferocious animals such as tigers, and even of death. One who

\(^1\) Omitted in the third edition observes the vow of fearlessness will defend himself or others by truth-force or soul-force.

3. VOW AGAINST UNTOUCHABILITY¹

According to Hindu religion as traditionally practised, communities such as Dhed, Bhangi, etc., known by the names of Antyaj, Pancham, Achhut and so on, are looked upon as untouchable. Hindus belonging to other communities believe that they will be defiled if they touch a member of any of the said communities and, if anyone does so accidentally, he thinks that he has committed a sin. The founders of the Ashram believe that this practice is a blot on Hindu religion. Themselves staunch Hindus, they believe that the Hindu race will continue to add to its load of sin so long as it regards a single community as untouchable. Some of the consequences of this practice have been terrible. In order to be free from this sin, the Ashram inmates are under a vow to regard the untouchable communities as touchable; actually one Dhed family was staying in the Ashram, and it is still there, when the third edition of these rules was being drawn up. It lives exactly in the same condition as others in the Ashram do. This vow does not extend to association for purpose of eating. All that is desired is the eradication of the evil of untouchability.

VARNASHRAM²

The Ashram does not follow the varnashram dharma. Where those in control of the Ashram will take the place of the pupils’ parents and where life-long vows of celibacy, non-hoarding, etc., are to be observed, varnashram dharma has no scope. The Ashram inmates will be in the stage of *sanyasis*³ and so it is not necessary for them to follow the rules of this dharma. Apart from this, the Ashram has a firm belief in the varnashram dharma. The discipline of caste seems to have done no harm to the country; on the contrary, rather. There is no reason to believe that eating in company promotes brotherhood ever so slightly. In order that the varnashram dharma and caste discipline might in no way be undermined, the Ashram inmates are under obligation, whenever they stir out, to subsist on ¹ This and the paragraph on Varnashram were added in the third edition.

---

² The organisation of society into four castes, each with a distinctive function, and the division of life into four stages
³ Those who, in the last stage of life have renounced the world fruits if they cannot cook their own food.

Mother Tongue

It is the belief of the Controllers that no nation or any group thereof can make real progress by abandoning its own language, they will, therefore, use their own language. As they desire to be on terms of intimacy with their brethren from all parts of India, they will also learn the chief Indian languages; as Sanskrit is a key to Indian languages, they will learn that too.

Manual Work

The Controllers believe that body labour is a duty imposed by nature upon mankind. Such labour is the only means by which man may sustain himself; his mental and spiritual powers should be used for the common good only. As the vast majority in the world live on agriculture, the Controllers will always devote some part of their time to working on the land; when that is not possible, they will perform some other bodily labour.

Weaving

The Controllers believe that one of the chief causes of poverty in the land is the virtual disappearance of spinning-wheels and handlooms. They will, therefore, make every effort to revive this industry by themselves weaving cloth on handlooms.

Politics

Politics, economic progress, etc., are not unconnected matters; knowing that they are all rooted in religion, the Controllers will make an effort to learn and teach politics, economics, social reform, etc., in a religious spirit and work in these fields with all the zeal that they can command.

(2) Novitiates

Those who are desirous of following the foregoing programme but are not able immediately to take the necessary vows may be admitted as Novitiates. It is obligatory upon them to conform to all the observances which are followed by Controllers the while that they are in the Ashram. They will acquire the status of Controllers when they are able to take the necessary vows for life.
(3) Students

1 Any children, whether boys or girls, from four years and upwards may be admitted with the consent of their parents.
2 Parents will have to surrender all control over their children.
3 Children will not be permitted to visit their parents for any reason until the whole course of study is finished.
4 Students will be taught to observe all the vows intended for the Controllers.
5 They will receive instruction in religion, agriculture, handloom-weaving and letters.
6 Instruction in letters will be through the students' own languages and will include History, Geography, Arithmetic, Algebra, Geometry, Economics, etc., the learning of Sanskrit, Hindi and at least one Dravidian language being obligatory.
7 English will be taught as a second language.
8 Urdu, Bengali Tamil, Telugu, Devnagari and Gujarati scripts will be taught to all.
9 The Controllers believe that the whole course will be completed in ten years. Upon reaching the age of majority, students will be given the option of taking the vows or retiring from the Ashram. This will make it possible for those to whom the programme has not commended itself to leave the Ashram.
10 They will exercise this option at an age when they will require no assistance from their parents or guardians.
11 Every endeavour will be made from the very beginning to see that, when they leave, they will be strong enough to have no fear what they would do for their maintenance.
12 Grown-up persons also may be admitted as students.
13 As a rule, everyone will wear the simplest and a uniform style of dress.
14 Food will be simple. Chillies will be excluded altogether and generally no condiments will be used excepting salt, pepper and turmeric. Milk, ghee and other milk products being a hindrance to a

---

1 This was replaced in the third edition by: “Boys and girls under twelve years of age will not be admitted if their parents do not join at the same time.”
2 This sentence was omitted in the third edition.
celibate life and milk being often a cause of tuberculosis and having the same stimulating qualities as meat, they will be most sparingly used, if at all. Meals will be served thrice a day and will include dried and fresh fruits in liberal quantities. All inmates of the Ashram will be taught the general principles of hygiene.

15 No holidays will be observed in this Ashram but, for one and a half days every week, the ordinary routine will be altered and everyone will have some time to attend to his private work.

16 During three months in the year, those whose health permits it will be taken on a tour, on foot for the most part, of India.

17 Nothing will be charged either from Students or Novitiates towards their monthly expenditure, but parents or the members themselves will be expected to contribute whatever they can towards the expenses of the Ashram.

MISCELLANEOUS

Administration of the Ashram will rest with a body of Controllers. The Chief Controller will have the right to decide whom to admit and to which category.

The expenses of the Ashram are being met from moneys already received by the Chief Controller or to be received from friends who may have some faith in the Ashram.

The Ashram is accommodated in two houses on the banks of the Sabarmati, Ahmedabad, on the road to Sarakhej across the Ellis Bridge.

It is expected that in a few months, about 250 acres of land will be acquired in the vicinity of Ahmedabad and the Ashram located thereon.

A REQUEST

Visitors are requested to observe all the Ashram rules during their stay there. Every endeavour will be made to make them comfortable; but the management will be thankful to them if they bring with them their bedding and utensils for meals, as the Ashram rules permit the stocking of only a minimum of articles.

Those parents who intend sending their children to the Ashram are advised to pay a visit to the Ashram. No boy or girl will be admitted before he or she has been duly tested.
DAILY ROUTINE

1. An effort is being made to see that everyone in the Ashram gets up at 4 o'clock. The first bell rings at 4.
2. It is obligatory on all, except those who are ill, to get up at 4.30. Everyone finishes bathing by 5.
3. 5 to 5.30: Prayers and readings from holy books.
4. 5.30 to 7: Breakfast of fruits, such as bananas.
5. 7 to 8.30: Manual work. This includes drawing water, grinding, sweeping, weaving cooking, etc.
6. 8.30 to 10: School work.
7. 10 to 12: Meal and cleaning of utensils. The meal consists of dal, rice, vegetables and rotlis for five days. On two days, there are rotlis and fruits.
8. 12 to 3: School work.
9. 3 to 5: Work, as in the morning.
10. 5 to 6: Meal and cleaning of utensils. The meal mostly follows the same pattern as in the morning.
11. 6.30 to 7: Prayers, as in the morning.
12. 7 to 9: Study, receiving visitors, etc.

Before nine, all children go to bed. At ten the lights are put out.

For school work, the subjects of study at present are Sanskrit, Gujarati, Tamil, Hindi and Arithmetic. Study of History and Geography is included in that of languages.

No paid teachers or servants are employed in the Ashram.

In all, the Ashram has at present 35 inmates. Four of them live with their families. There are five teachers to look after teaching. Permanent members of the Ashram include two from North India, nine from Madras Presidency and the rest are from Gujarat and Kathiawar.

[From Gujarati]

From photostat of printed leaflets: S.N. 6187 and S.N. 6189

---

1 Added in the third edition
383. LETTER TO V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI

AHMEDABAD,
May 20 [1915]

DEAR MR. SHASTRIAR,

I have just returned from a brief domestic visit to Rajkot to find your two letters. If I may suggest, I think that you should respond to Sir William’s call. Sir Pherozeshaw is likely to take the same view that Mrs. Besant does. To me it is enough that Sir William wants you, and that you know the subject you are expected to handle. Your credentials as President of the Society are and ought to be sufficient to give you the status and authority you will need in your mission.

And if you go, I suppose you will not need to do so for two months. Will you not then during the time get rid of your disease so as to enable you the more effectively to do your work?

Naiker and Sundaram seem to be doing very well.

I am settling down here for the time being at any rate.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

The pamphlet I have sent you is not the last word.

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 6289

384. LETTER TO G. B. VEERASWAMY

AHMEDABAD,
May 20, 1915

DEAR VEERASWAMY,

I have your letter. I shall know in due course what you propose doing.

Yours truly,

M. K. GANDHI

G. B. VEERASWAMI
1/6 NALLATHAMBHI MUDALI STREET
TRIPPLICANE
MADRAS

From a photostat: C.W, 11014. Courtesy: Balachandran

1 The reference to Sir Pherozeshah Mehta (who died in November 1915) fixes the year as 1915.
APPENDICES

APPENDIX I

THE GREAT MARCH

[Volksrust, November 8, 1913]

He [Gandhiji] left almost at once by motor to rejoin the marchers. Thus, if there was an effort on Government’s part to put an end to the demonstration by depriving the men of their leader in the hope that they would become discouraged and abandon the attempt to reach the Rand, this effort has been completely stultified. I shared the motor in which Messrs Kallenbach and Gandhi overtook the main body of marchers about 33 miles from Volksrust. They were well on their way to Kromdraai Station, near Standerton, which is their halt for the day. The narrow ribbon of road which leads to the Rand passes through beautiful grassy country, and, as the weather was pleasant, the strikers were walking easily and showed little fatigue. They were a little beyond General Botha’s farm when the car overtook them, and there was extraordinary enthusiasm as Mr. Gandhi alighted among them. The car had halted at Paardekraal, where Mr. Gandhi spoke some encouraging words to the women. Old and infirm men halted there, and Mr. Gandhi left some medicines which a doctor in Newcastle had supplied. All along the road the car passed stragglers, who lined up and saluted Mr. Gandhi, calling him “Bapoo”, or father.

THE RATIONS

Although the rations served out consist only of a pound-and-a-half loaf of bread and an ounce of sugar per man, the marchers are cheerful and patient to an extraordinary degree. They have the utmost confidence in Mr. Gandhi, and obey him implicitly, although as a class indentured coal-miners and the like—they are totally unused to discipline unaccompanied by force. As lieutenants, Mr. Gandhi has several young Johannesburg Indians who were prominent during the former passive resistance movement, and the mounted constables accompanying the marchers told me they had orders to arrest some of these at Kromdraai and take them in to Standerton.

Mr. Gandhi informs me that the passive resistance movement is diminishing his resources by £250 a day, and that more than the present contribution of £3,000 per month will have to be sent from India if the success of the movement is to be assured. He has, however, no doubt at all about the response from India. Apart from the women at Charlestown, there are communities of strikers in every affected area to be supported, and the cost of the march to the Rand is estimated at one shilling per day per man. Volksrust bakers have received a contract for the supply of bread, which is sent on each day by rail to an appointed station. The sugar is served out for its sustaining properties, and amounts to about five packets a day in the aggregate. The Indians make a hole in their loaves, into which they put their handfuls of sugar. Each man carries a pannikin, which he fills with water as often as is possible. The marchers had an unexpected treat at Paardekop, where last night tea was served to the full 2,000 odd of them at the expense of a local Indian storekeeper. Mr. Gandhi impressed upon them the fact that tea was not on the regular menu. Leaving Mr. Gandhi with the passive resisters, whose leadership to the promised land he resumed, Mr. Kallenbach and I returned to Volksrust, and passed about 13 miles from the town a further band of 100 coolies, who crossed the border this morning with as little trouble as their predecessors. Some of those who march to Johannesburg, I learn, are men who were charged at Newcastle with breaking their indentures, and were released on their own recognisances through lack of prison accommodation. They offered to await trial if food and shelter were provided, but this the local Magistrate refused, and so they departed to join in the march on Johannesburg.

Indian Opinion, 19-11-1913

APPENDIX II

EXTRACT FROM GENERAL BOTHA’S SPEECH

[NYLSTROOM,
November 1, 1913]

General Botha said he was sure there was only one road to be followed in dealing with the Asiatic question and that was the right road. He hoped people not living in South Africa would realise that their altitude in regard to the Asiatic was not prompted by a desire to get rid of Asians, but was prompted by principle. In this country they had Coloured races to deal with and they did not want to have the position complicated any further. Their sole aim was to keep the position pure and clean. Today he understood the Asians would undertake a great march from Newcastle to Volksrust. He hoped these people would accept better advice than they were doing today. General Smuts had recently made a statement as to what had taken place when Mr. Gokhale was here. Mr. Gokhale had replied and made a different explanation of what occurred. He (General Botha) wished to state that he was present at the interview with Mr. Gokhale. It took place in his (General Botha’s) office, and the others present were General Smuts, Mr. Fischer, and Mr. Gokhale. He only wished to say that he agreed with and endorsed every word spoken by General Smuts in regard to that interview, and in regard to what took place. “At any rate,” General Botha concluded, “we shall do nothing by which your rights will suffer.”

1 This has been extracted from Governor-General’s despatch dated November 6, 1913, to the Colonial Office.
It will be observed that General Botha confirms the denial given by General Smuts to the statement that the repeal of the £3 tax was definitely promised to Mr. Gokhale.

Colonial Office Records: 551/45

APPENDIX III

POLAK’S LETTER TO LORD AMPTHILL

VOLKSRUST GAOL,
November 12, 1913

DEAR LORD AMPTHILL,

My present address will not surprise you after the cables that will have doubtless been sent home. The circumstances of my arrest you will see from Indian Opinion. The whole affair, whilst partially accidental, is really taking advantage of me on the part of the Government. I had joined Mr. Gandhi near Greylingstad, in order to discuss a number of matters with him prior to my prospective departure for India on Friday next. He was then marching at the head of 1500 of the £3 tax passive resisters who had entered the Transvaal to court arrest, as the Government had refused otherwise to deal with them and had left the heavy burden of feeding and otherwise maintaining them upon us. I had received a warning from him that if I came to the Transvaal from Natal, I might be arrested. In view of the fact that I, as an outsider, had so often counselled Indian passive resisters to challenge arrest, I felt that it would be highly dishonourable for me—an Englishman—to draw back before such a risk, and I did not hesitate to join him. We had hardly been conversing half an hour before we were met by a police sub-inspector and the Chief Immigration Officer, who arrested Mr. Gandhi on a warrant from Dundee, charging him with removing indentured Indians from Natal. He was driven away at once, and as these hundreds of people were leaderless, did not know where their camping ground was for the night, or where they were to get their rations next day, the authorities having refused the responsibility of taking charge of them and providing for them, I had no option but to accept the responsibility of leading the people to Greylingstad, where we camped on the open veld for the night, and the next day to Balfour, about 13 miles beyond. Here the police officer and the Chief Immigration Officer asked me to discuss the situation with them. They informed me that they were instructed to order the arrest of all the people as prohibited immigrants in the Transvaal and to deport them to Charlestown, in Natal, where they would be arrested on local charges by the Natal authorities. They asked me to co-operate with them in entraining the men so as to avoid disturbance and the intervention of the squad of police that had arrived. I told them that, in the circumstances, I would co-operate with them cordially, as they now assumed the responsibility of feeding and sheltering the people, but that, had they not given me that assurance, I was prepared to continue to march with the men until either they were arrested or I, and I offered to place myself at their disposal for arrest then if they desired to hold me. I hey replied that they had no desire whatever to do so and thanked me for my offer of service. Later, when the people were arrested, some of the more defiant spirits, who did not know me refused to entrain until they received the instruction from Mr. Gandhi, and carrying the mass with them, they proceeded to resume the march. I at once stood in front of them and urged them to remember their status as passive resisters. Eventually I prevailed upon them to follow me to the station where they all entrained peacefully. I am sure it would have been impossible to entrain them had I not been present, and the men would probably have been goaded into violent reprisals by police tactlessness and military brutality. I was specially thanked by the police officials in charge and also, subsequently, by the magistrate here. As I did not know exactly what might happen at Charlestown, and in order to assist the authorities to keep order in case of need, I travelled down with the first train. Shortly afterwards I was arrested and brought to Volksrust. Yesterday both Mr. Kallenbach (whose name is no doubt well-known to Your Lordship—he is the owner of Tolstoy Farm, where the passive resisters were maintained in the last struggle, a German by nationality, a Jew, like myself, by religion, and an architect by profession) and I were charged before the magistrate with aiding and abetting in the introduction of prohibited immigrants into the Transvaal. A remand until tomorrow was asked for by the prosecution. We were refused bail as we declined to give an assurance that meanwhile we would take no further part in the movement. We are now in prison awaiting trial, and expect to be convicted tomorrow. We shall probably get about 3 months, but whether with or without hard labour I cannot say. We shall, of course, refuse to pay the alternative fines.

---

1 A copy of this was forwarded by Lord Ampthill to the Colonial Office on December 5, along with a covering letter in which he observed, “I venture to think that the Union Government of South Africa would have done better to invite the leaders of the Indian community to confer with them instead of putting them in gaol as there can be little doubt that under Mr. Gandhi’s leadership the struggle would have been managed without disorder and with none of the injury which has since been caused. I trust, however, that His Majesty’s Government have already suggested to the authorities in South Africa that negotiation with Mr. Gandhi affords the most likely means of arriving at a speedy solution of the difficulty.”

I at once wired the circumstances to the Minister of the Interior, explaining that I had intended to leave for India on Friday at Mr. Gokhale’s request, thus leaving it to him to decide whether or not to proceed with the prosecution. He has replied that the case should go on. I shall not, therefore, be going to India. May I suggest that a representation on the subject may be made to the Imperial Government, pointing out that, with the facts before them, the Union Government have prevented my joining Mr. Gokhale in his request in order to assist him in placing the South African Indian question fully before the Government of India.

I am sure that Your Lordship will agree that, in the circumstances in which I suddenly found myself, I could not have adopted honourably any other course of action than I did. In any other case, such influence as I have with the Indian community would have at once disappeared.

I may add that the spread of the strike along the Coast, on the plantations, is wholly spontaneous, and indeed, strongly against our advice as we did not wish it to get beyond manageable proportions. But the Government must now bear the responsibility.

Both Mr. Kallenbach and I are looking forward to an enviable period of repose and irresponsibility. The strain of the last few weeks upon Mr. Gandhi especially and ourselves has been tremendous and this withdrawal from public activity for the time being will be a matter of real relief to us. Mr. Gandhi was sentenced at Dundee yesterday to nine months hard labour, on three separate charges under the indenture law. I am afraid that, meanwhile, until my release, Your Lordship must derive your news of the movement from Indian Opinion.

With kind regards,

Yours very truly,

Hy. S. L. Polak

Colonial Office Records: 551/52

APPENDIX IV

(1) GOVERNOR-GENERAL’S CABLE TO COLONIAL OFFICE

December 1, 1913

SECRET

CACHALIA, WHO PRESIDED AT A MEETING OF INDIANS AT JOHANNESBURG YESTERDAY SAID THAT £3 TAX WAS ONLY ONE OF SURFACE SORES INDICATING PRESENCE OF DEEP SPREAD ROOTED EVIL; NOTHING LESS THAN THE SWEETING AWAY OF THE WHOLE SYSTEM OF INDENTURED LABOUR WOULD SATISFY BRITISH INDIANS. THE INDIANS HAVE THEREFORE AS YOU WILL SEE AGAIN CHANGED THEIR GROUND. I HAVE SEEN J. C. SMUTS THIS MORNING ON HIS RETURN FROM DURBAN. LOCAL AUTHORITIES BELIEVE THAT STRIKE WILL VIRTUALLY TERMINATE THIS WEEK. INDIANS WORKING COAL MINES AND ON SOUTH COAST, ABOUT 2500 STILL OUT ON THE NORTH COAST. J. C. SMUTS SAYS THAT STRIKE HAS HARDCENED NATAL FEELING. REPEAL OF THE £3 TAX OPPOSED AND MUCH TALK OF REPATRIATION BUT THERE IS OF COURSE NO EXISTING POWER TO REPATRIATE. HE IS QUITE SATISFIED THAT THERE HAS BEEN NO VIOLENCE IN PRISON COMPOUNDS BUT THE POLICE HAD AT TIMES TO USE STICKS FREELY AGAINST RIOTERS AND NO DOUBT MANY SHOW MARKS. INDIAN ASSOCIATION DECLINE TO GIVE ASSISTANCE TO MARDALL THE GOVERNMENT INSPECTOR OF THE PRISONS, WHO WAS SENT TO REPORT ON ARRANGEMENTS IN THE NEWCASTLE DUNDEE DISTRICTS. J. C. SMUTS SAID THAT OF COURSE A JUDICIAL ENQUIRY MUST BE HELD AND PROPOSED DOVE WILSON NATAL JUDGE, PRESIDENT. I SAID THAT I THOUGHT THAT WOULD BE WORSE THAN USELESS. IF COMMISSION WERE APPOINTED IT SHOULD BE A STRONG ONE OF NOT LESS THAN THREE. I PRESSED FOR SOLOMON AS PRESIDENT WITH DOVE WILSON AND A GOOD TRANSVAAL REPRESENTATIVE, POINTING OUT THAT ENQUIRY WOULD BE OF FAR GREATER IMPORTANCE THAN THE RAND RIOTS ENQUIRY. J. C. SMUTS APPEARED QUITE FAVOURABLE. I WARNED HIM THAT IF MINISTERS APPEARED TO FAVOUR REPATRIATION WITHOUT EXPRESS AGREEMENT WITH GOVERNMENT OF INDIA, INDIANS HERE WOULD PROBABLY SAY THAT MINISTERS HAVING REFUSED TO REMOVE GENUINE GRIEVANCES WERE SEEKING TO DEPORT BRITISH SUBJECTS FROM HOMES AND OCCUPATIONS. J. C. SMUTS AGREED THAT PROPOSAL IN ANY CASE COULD NOT BE ENTERTAINED EXCEPT BY ARRANGEMENT WITH THE GOVERNMENT OF INDIA.

GLADSTONE

Colonial Office Records: 551/46

(2) GOVERNOR-GENERAL'S CABLE TO COLONIAL OFFICE

December 19, 1913

CONFIDENTIAL

MY TELEGRAM OF YESTERDAY CONFIDENTIAL 2. I AM TOLD BY J. C. SMUTS THAT SOLOMON DID NOT SUCCEED IN REMOVING HIS DIFFICULTIES BUT THAT LITTLE REMAINS TO BE DONE AFTER FORMAL ANNOUNCEMENT. BEST COURSE WOULD HE THINKS BE FOR INDIANS HERE TO RETAIN CAPABLE SOUTH AFRICAN ADVOCATE, SUCH AS SCHREINER. THIS WOULD SERVE THE PURPOSE OF INDIA GOVERNMENT. IF HOWEVER INDIAN GOVERNMENT DECIDE TO NOMINATE COUNSEL IT WOULD BE FAR BETTER FROM POINT OF VIEW OF MINISTERS FOR THE INDIAN GOVERNMENT TO RETAIN SCHREINER OR SOME OTHER CAPABLE SOUTH AFRICAN ADVOCATE. SOLOMON HIMSELF URGES THIS COURSE STRONGLY AS LONG DELAY IN Sending COUNSEL FROM INDIA WOULD BE VERY INCONVENIENT FOR THE COMMISSION WHICH ADJOURNED YESTERDAY AND PROPOSES TO RESUME PROCEEDINGS AT DURBAN ON JANUARY 12TH. GANDHI INTIMATES THAT THE INDIANS HERE HAVE NOT DECIDED WHETHER THEY WILL ACCEPT COMMISSION. SHOULD THEY REFUSE TO GIVE EVIDENCE THE COMMISSION WILL IN ALL PROBABILITY BE DISSOLVED. IF PASSIVE RESISTANCE AND STRIKES ARE SUBSEQUENTLY AGAIN RESORTED TO THE FEELING HERE WILL BE EXASPERATED AND A VERY DANGEROUS POSITION WILL PROBABLY BE CREATED. MY MINISTERS AND THE COMMISSION HAVE DONE THEIR UTMOST TO MEET VIEWS OF THE INDIAN AND IMPERIAL GOVERNMENTS. I TRUST THAT YOU WILL IMPRESS THE INDIAN GOVERNMENT THROUGH THE INDIA OFFICE WITH THE EXTREME IMPORTANCE OF SECURING THE ACCEPTANCE OF THE COMMISSION AND ABSTINENCE FROM ALL PROVOCATIVE ACTION BY THE BRITISH INDIANS IN SOUTH AFRICA.

Gladstone

Colonial Office Records: 551/46

APPENDIX V

(1) LETTER FROM MINISTER OF INTERIOR

PRETORIA,

December 24, 1913

GENTLEMEN,

Your letter, which was dated 21st instant and immediately communicated by you to the Press, has only today reached the Department of the Interior and been seen by the Minister.

I am instructed to reply at once that the Minister is unable to accept the conditions on which you propose to give evidence before the Commission appointed by the Government and to suspend passive resistance pending the Commission’s finding, particularly the condition which involves the appointment of additional members to the Commission in the interests of the Indian community. The Commission was intended to be impartial and judicial in character, and in constituting it the Government consulted neither the Indian community nor the Coal-owners and Sugar Planters’ Association of Natal, nor could the Government for a moment, by following the course you propose, give colour to the unwarranted reflections you make on two of the Commissioners appointed.

The course you propose to pursue is noted and deeply regretted, not least so in the interests of the Indian community, which cannot but be profoundly affected by the lawless character of your procedure, the gratuitous infliction of grave sufferings on the innocent, both white and Indian, and the consequent exasperation of public opinion throughout the Union.

I have etc.,

H. B. SHAWE

ACTING SECRETARY FOR THE INTERIOR

MESSRS. M. K. GANDHI
KALLENBACH, AND
H. S. L. POLAK
110 FIELD STREET
DURBAN

Colonial Office Records: 551/46

(2) GOVERNOR-GENERAL'S CABLE TO COLONIAL OFFICE

PRETORIA,

December 22, 1913

CONFIDENTIAL

MY TELEGRAM OF 19TH DECEMBER CONFIDENTIAL. AT MASS MEETING OF INDIANS AT DURBAN YESTERDAY GANDHI IS REPORTED AS SAYING THAT INDIANS COULD NOT ACCEPT CONSTITUTION OF COMMISSION THERE BEING GRAVE OBJECTIONS TO IT FROM INDIAN STANDPOINT. HIS ADVICE WAS THAT THEY SHOULD NOT ACCEPT COMMISSION IN ITS PRESENT FORMATION AS INDIANS HAVE HAD NO VOICE IN IT. THEY WERE FIGHTING FOR REDRESS OF SEVERAL GRIEVANCES THE UNDERLYING SPIRIT OF THE STRUGGLE BEING TO OBTAIN A FIRM RECOGNITION ON THE PART OF THE GOVERNMENT OF THE RIGHT OF CONSULTATION IN ANYTHING APPERTAINING TO INDIAN INTERESTS. UNLESS GOVERNMENT WERE PREPARED TO CONDESCEND TO THAT EXTENT AND TO ASCERTAIN AND RESPECT INDIAN SENTIMENTS IT WAS IMPOSSIBLE FOR INDIANS AS LOYAL BUT MANLY CITIZENS OF EMPIRE TO RENDER OBEDIENCE TO COMMANDS OF LAWS PASSED OVER THEIR HEADS. OTHER OBJECTION TO COMMISSION WAS THAT IT WAS PARTISAN AND THEREFORE INDIANS WANTED THEIR OWN PARTISANS. THIS THEY MIGHT NOT GET BUT THEY WANTED AN IMPARTIAL COMMISSION. UNLESS MEN HOLDING NON-ANTI-ASIATIC VIEWS WERE NOMINATED INDIANS COULD NOT ASSIST GOVERNMENT TO BRING CRISIS
TO AN END WITHOUT FURTHER SUFFERING. IF GOVERNMENT DECLINED THIS REQUEST HE PROPOSED THAT THEY SHOULD ALL ON NEW YEAR’S DAY BE READY AGAIN TO SUPPER BATTLE AND AGAIN SUPPER IMPRISONMENT AND MARCH OUT. THAT WAS HIS ADVICE TO FREE AND INDENTURED INDIES. IF THEY ACCEPTED A QUIET LIFE THEY WOULD INCUR THE DISGRACE OF ALL THEIR COUNTRYMEN IN THEIR MOTHERLAND AND THE WHOLE OF BRITISH EMPIRE. THEY SHOULD OBEY THE ORDERS OF CONSCIENCE AND GO FORWARD WITHOUT THINKING. WHEN THEY HAD MADE UP THEIR MINDS THEY SHOULD STICK TO IT EVEN UNTO DEATH. KALLENBACH POLAK AND RITCH ALSO SPOKE RESOLUTIONS WERE PASSED (1) THE COMMUNITY MAY NOT IN HONOUR GIVE EVIDENCE BEFORE COMMISSION BECAUSE IT HAD NOT BEEN CONSULTED AS TO CHOICE OF MEMBERS AND BECAUSE NONE WERE INCLUDED SPECIALLY REPRESENTING COMMUNITY’S INTERESTS. (2) URGING ADDITION TO COMMISSION OF SCHREINER AND ROSE INNES OR OTHER EMINENT SOUTH AFRICANS OF EUROPEAN RACE WHOSE NOMINATION WILL BE ACCEPTABLE TO INDIAN COMMUNITY. NITY. (3) REQUESTING THAT IN THE EVENT OF GOVERNMENT GRANTING ADDITION TO PERSONNEL TO SECURE ADEQUATE RE-PRESENTATION OF ALL INTERESTS INVOLVED ALL PASSIVE RESISTANCE PRISONERS SHOULD IMMEDIATELY BE DISCHARGED. INDIAN COMMUNITY WOULD THEN UNDERTAKE TO SUSPEND PASSIVE RESIS-TANCE UNTIL PUBLICATION OF COMMISSION’S REPORT BUT IF GOV-ERNMENT REFUSED COMPLIANCE WITH THESE REQUESTS COMMUNITY WOULD BE OBLIGED AT ONCE TO PROSECUTE STRUGGLE WITH RENEWED VIGOUR AND DETERMINATION. I SEE NO PROSPECT OF GOVERNMENT BEING ABLE TO COMPLY WITH THESE DEMANDS.

Gladstone Colonial Office Records: 551/46

(3) GOVERNOR-GENERAL’S CABLE TO COLONIAL OFFICE

PRETORIA,
December 23, 1913

PRIVATE AND PERSONAL

MY CONFIDENTIAL TELEGRAM 22ND DECEMBER. IF INDIANS FOLLOW GANDHI’S ADVICE THE POSITION IS SERIOUS. GOVERNMENT WILL PRESS THE COMMISSION TO MAKE ENQUIRY AS FAR AS POSSIBLE. BUT CONCURRENTLY THERE MAY BE RECRUDESCEENCE OF MARCHES INTO TRANSVAAL STRIKES AND VIOLENCE. IF SO QUES-TION OF TAKING LEGISLATIVE POWERS TO REPATRIATE INDENTURED

470 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
INDIANS WHO REFUSE TO WORK AND LAW BREAKERS WILL AT ONCE ARISE. VICEROY OF INDIA AMPHILL AND GOKHALE HAVE I BELIEVE ALREADY MENTIONED GENERAL REPATRIATION BUT APPARENTLY AS A MENACE. IF INDIAN GOVERNMENT PROPOSED THIS J. C. SMUTS TELLS ME THAT IT WOULD BE WELCOMED BY MINISTERS. FURTHER HE SAYS THAT NATAL PLANTERS AND COLLIERY OWNERS ARE BEGINNING TO REALISE THAT THIS MAY BE THE ONLY SOLUTION. BUT THIS IS THE LAST THING WISHED BY THE INDIANS HERE. IF THEY REALISED THAT THE LAW BREAKERS WOULD BE REPATRIATED IT WOULD PROBABLY PUT AN END TO LAW BREAKING. AT PRESENT GANDHI AND HIS ASSOCIATES HERE AND IN INDIA BELIEVE THAT COOLIES ARE ESSENTIAL TO NATAL AND PRESS IMPOSSIBLE DEMANDS ON THAT SUPPOSITION. THESE DEMANDS ARE IMPOSSIBLE. REPRESSION OF DISORDER IS COMPARATIVELY EASY BUT IT IS NO REMEDY AND WILL EMBITTER FEELING IN INDIA. MINISTERS THINK THAT THEY WILL HAVE TO GO TO THE ROOT OF THE TROUBLE. DO YOU THINK REPATRIATION OF THE LAW BREAKERS AND INDENTURED INDIANS IN WHOLE OR IN PART COULD RECEIVE CO-OPERATION OF THE INDIAN GOVERNMENT? FAILING THAT WHAT ARE YOUR VIEWS ON LEGISLATIVE ACTION HERE TO THAT END? COMPENSATION WOULD BE PAID IN RESPECT OF PROPERTY.

GLADSTONE

Colonial Office Records: 551/46

APPENDIX VI

LORD HARDINGE’S SPEECH

A message from Madras states that the Viceroy (Lord Hardinge), in a speech in reply to Indian addresses said the position of Indians in South Africa for some years past had received the most anxious consideration of the Raj, which was doing all in its power to ensure fair treatment.

He added: “The Union Act of which you complain has in practice the effect of putting an end to Asiatic emigration to South Africa, though it does not discriminate in so many words against Asiatics. We, however, have succeeded in securing the privilege of entry for a limited number of educated Indians annually, and have also specially endeavoured to secure as favourable terms as possible for the Indians already 1 This was delivered on November 24, 1913.

resident in the Union. Our efforts have resulted in the inclusion of provisions for the right of appeal to the Court on points of law and definition of domicile in accordance with which the position of un-indentured Indians is satisfactorily laid down.

“We are at present in communication with Lord Crewe regarding other restrictions in the Act to which you take exception and we trust our representations will not be resultless. You urged retaliatory measures by the Raj, but it is not stated what particular measures are adoptable. We forbade the emigration of indentured Indians to Natal in 1911, and the Natal planters sent a delegate to India to beg for a reconsideration of that decision. That shows how hardly the planters were hit by the stoppage of that emigration, but I am afraid that it had little effect on South Africa as a whole, and unfortunately it is not easy to find means whereby India can make its indignation felt by those holding the reins of Government in South Africa.

“Recently your compatriots in South Africa have taken matters into their own hands, organising passive resistance to laws which they consider invidious and unjust, an opinion which we, who are watching their struggles from afar, cannot but share. They violated those laws with a full knowledge of the penalties involved, and are ready with all courage and patience to endure the penalties. In all this they have the deep and burning sympathy of India and also of those who, like myself, without being Indians, sympathise with the people of this country, but the most recent developments have taken a most serious turn. We have seen the widest publicity given to allegations that passive resistance is dealt with by measures which would not be tolerated for a moment in any country claiming to be civilised. These allegations were met by a categorical denial by the responsible Government of South Africa, though even the denial contains admissions which do not seem to me to indicate that the Government exercised a very wise discretion in some of the steps it adopted. That is the position for the moment. I feel that if the South African Government desires to justify itself in the eyes of India and the world, the only course open is to appoint a strong impartial committee, wherein Indian interests will be represented, to conduct the most searching inquiry, and you may rest assured that the Raj will not cease to urge these considerations on the Imperial Government.”

Indian Opinion, 3-12-1913
APPENDIX VII

VICEROY’S TELEGRAM TO G. K. GOKHALE

December 28, 1913

The Hon’ble Mr. Gokhale
Servindia
Poona

In view of promise given by Gandhi and my great desire to secure a peaceful settlement Sir Benjamin Robertson will leave Bombay on January 1st and should arrive in Durban on 11th or 12th stop. I have asked the Secretary of State to endeavour to arrange with the Union Government a short postponement of the meeting of the Commission stop. I am not very hopeful of the result of Robertson’s mission but am anxious to lose no opportunity of securing peace stop. I think it is desirable that you should inform Gandhi that if he and the Indians commence passive resistance or have resort to violence Robertson will immediately dissociate himself from them stop. I trust that Gandhi will communicate freely with Robertson on his arrival.

Viceroy

National Archives of India, File No. 45 Courtesy: Servants of India Society, Poona

APPENDIX VIII

(1) TELEGRAM FROM MINISTER OF INTERIOR

Pretoria,
January 5, 1914

To Gandhi
110, Field Street Durban

32366 Delay in replying to your telegram 29 December regretted but was due to contradictory information which arrived from Durban as to revival of passive resistance and the commencement of a new march to the Transvaal. Later information however has shown that
THE MOVEMENT OF CERTAIN BODIES OF INDIANS IN NATAL ON THE FIRST JANUARY WAS MISUNDERSTOOD.\(^1\) WITH REGARD TO THE PROPOSALS CONTAINED IN YOUR TELEGRAM THE MINISTER REGRETS THAT THE REQUEST FOR ADDITIONS TO OR A REDUCTION IN THE MEMBERSHIP OF THE COMMISSION CANNOT BE ACCEDED TO FOR THE REASONS ALREADY MENTIONED IN MY LETTER OF THE 24TH DECEMBER. IN VIEW OF THE ATTITUDE YOU HAVE TAKEN UP IN REGARD TO THE CONSTITUTION OF THE COMMISSION THE MINISTER HAS NOT DEEMED IT NECESSARY FOR THE GOVERNMENT TO CONSIDER WHAT ADVICE SHOULD BE TENDERED TO HIS EXCELLENCY THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL AS TO THE REMISSION OF SENTENCES OF PASSIVE RESISTERS AND THE GOVERNMENT HAVE CONFINED THEIR ACTION TO THE RECOMMENDATION MADE BY THE COMMISSION IN RESPECT OF THE LEADERS. THE COURSE ADOPTED BY THE LEADERS IMMEDIATELY ON THEIR RELEASE HAS NOT BEEN SUCH AS TO IMPRESS THE GOVERNMENT AS TO THE BENEFICIAL RESULTS LIKELY TO FOLLOW FROM THE RELEASE OF THE BALANCE OF THE PASSIVE RESISTERS. IF YOU ARE STILL DESIROUS OF SEEING THE MINISTER HE WILL BE PREPARED TO GRANT YOU AN INTERVIEW DURING THIS WEEK.

Colonial Office Records: 55l/53

(2) EXTRACT FROM GOVERNOR-GENERAL’S DESPATCH\(^2\)

PRETORIA,

December 31, 1913

You will observe that Mr. Gandhi’s present attitude is less unreasonable than that which he adopted in his public utterances immediately after his liberation. General Smuts is still considering his reply to Mr. Gandhi’s latest proposals, and I think it not improbable that he will agree to grant a personal interview as requested. I doubt, however, whether Mr. Gandhi’s suggestions with regard to the constitution of the Commission will be found acceptable. The addition of two members, nominated \(^1\) This referred to an erroneous report about the movement of a group of Indians collected at Pinetown, near Durban, on January 1, the date originally announced by Gandhiji for the resumption of the march into the Transvaal. It later transpired that the group acted in ignorance of Gandhiji’s declaration that Passive Resistance would not be resumed on New Year Day.

---

\(^2\) This formed part of a despatch forwarding to the Colonial Office copies of correspondence between Gandhiji and the Minister of the Interior, and clippings from various newspapers.
respectively by the Indian community and by the employers of Indian labour, would destroy the judicial character of the Commission, and this would probably entail the resignation of Sir William Solomon. The alternative proposal that the Commission should be converted into a single-member Commission, consisting only of Sir William Solomon, is not open to the same objection, and neither Mr. Esselen nor Colonel Wylie would probably show any disinclination to resign their membership.
It would not, however, be easy for the Government so to reconstitute its own Commission at Mr. Gandhi’s bidding without seeming to admit that the two members whose elimination is asked for were in fact not wholly impartial. Possibly if General Smuts and Mr. Gandhi meet, their combined ingenuity may succeed in discovering some way out of the difficulty.

On Monday last General Smuts told my Secretary in confidence that he had received a private letter from Sir William Solomon expressing regret at the bad use which Mr. Gandhi, Mr. Polak and Mr. Kallenbach had made of their liberty, and intimating that if the Commission were to be boycotted by the Indians, in whose interests it had been appointed, it was unlikely that the enquiry could prove anything but one-sided. Sir William went on to say that he had accepted appointment, much against his own personal inclinations, only from a sense of duty because it had been represented to him that by acting as Chairman he would have an opportunity of rendering a public service. As it now seemed likely that the Commission would be unable to do any useful work, he was inclined to doubt whether there was any reason why he should continue to serve. General Smuts said that he proposed in his reply to point out the distinction between abstention by the Indians from giving evidence and a renewal of passive resistance, strikes and lawlessness. If recourse were again had to disorder, the question whether the enquiry should be proceeded with might arise.
If, however, the Indians confined themselves simply to a policy of abstention from giving evidence, the Commission would still be able to hear official and other European witnesses upon the incidents of the strike and the allegations of ill-treatment, and to consider the general question of grievances from the documentary material which could be laid before it by the Government. It was desirable, moreover, that the official witness who was being sent by the Government of India should be afforded an opportunity of being heard. General Smuts seemed to hope that these arguments would induce Sir William Solomon to continue to serve. He was evidently apprehensive lest Mr. Gandhi should be enabled to enhance his prestige by the personal triumph of breaking up a Government Commission of whose constitution he happened to disapprove.

Colonial Office Records: 551/46
APPENDIX IX

STATEMENT ISSUED BY G. K. GOKHALE

[December 31, 1913]

In view of the anxiety prevailing in the country as to the position of matters in South Africa and the inquiries that are being addressed to me on the subject, I think it necessary to publish the following statement:

On 18th December, I received at Calcutta a telegram from the Natal Indian Association stating that there was a strong feeling among Indians in South Africa not to accept the Commission of inquiry appointed on account of two members out of three being known to be hostile to the community and asking for my advice as to what should be done. Mr. Gandhi and other passive resistance leaders were then in jail and there was at that time no indication of the lines on which the Commission proposed to work. It was impossible for me in the circumstances to offer any definite advice and after hurriedly consulting two distinguished friends in Calcutta, who were within easy reach, I cabled back to say that the course to be adopted should depend on the strength of feeling of the community and the advice of friendly Europeans in South Africa; and I asked the Association to weigh carefully which course would do greater harm to the cause, viz., abstention from offering evidence or participation in the proceedings under protest, adding that I would cable again from Bombay after consulting Sir Pherozeshah Mehta. I left Calcutta that same day and arrived in Bombay on the 20th, when I read in the papers a summary of Sir William Solomon's opening statement, as also news about the release of Mr. Gandhi and other passive resistance leaders. As Reuter had stated that the released leaders had proceeded to Pretoria to see the Ministers, I naturally concluded that the Union Government was desirous of arriving at some understanding with the community and that Mr. Gandhi's reported visit to Pretoria was in connection with some negotiations that had already been started. I immediately put myself into telegraphic communication with Mr. Gandhi and during the last ten days numerous cables have passed between us. It is not possible to publish all these cables, but I think I may state that in the course of these communications every effort was made to press on Mr. Gandhi the view which clearly is now gaining ground in this country, viz., that after Sir William Solomon's speech, the release of the leaders and the recognition given to the Commission by the Government of India by the deputation of Sir Benjamin Robertson, it would be a tactical mistake to boycott the Commission as forgoing an important opportunity secured after great difficulty to state the Indian case before the whole world and likely to alienate from the cause influential support both in this country and in England. Mr. Gandhi, however, finds himself unable to act on this view unless the Union Government modify in some manner the constitution of the Commission and release all passive resisters at present in jail, as he and the Indian community stand bound by a solemn oath not to accept the Commission except on these terms. This is the situation at present. Meanwhile Sir Benjamin Robertson starts for South Africa on 1st January. As it is necessary that the country should clearly understand Mr. Gandhi’s position, I asked him to cable to me for publication a full statement of that position. This statement into which are incorporated some of his previous cables is as follows: Mr. Gandhi says: We were discharged unconditionally on 18th instant on the recommendation of the Commission. We were not told at the time of our release why we were being released. It is not true that after release we went to Pretoria to see the Ministers. Knowing what we do of the feelings of Mr. Esselen and Col. Wylie towards Indians, it is impossible for us not to feel strongly that the Commission has not been appointed to give us fair play, but it is a packed body intended to hoodwink the Government and the public both in England and in India. The Chairman’s integrity and impartiality is undoubted, but Mr. Esselen and Col. Wylie are well-known and admitted generally to be amongst the strongest and most violent opponents of Indians in South Africa. Mr. Esselen has emphatically declared from public platforms on many occasions extreme anti-Asiatic views, and he is so intimately related politically to Union Ministers that he is regarded here practically as a non-official member of the Ministry. Only recently he expressed himself privately most offensively about the Indians to a member of the Union Parliament, named Mr. Meyler, who has publicly protested against his appointment. Col. Wylie has been our bitterest opponent in Natal for more than twenty years. So far back as 1896 he led a mob to demonstrate against the landing of Indians who had arrived at Durban in two vessels, advocated at a public meeting the sinking of the ships with all Indians on board and commending a remark made by another speaker that he would willingly put down one month’s pay for one shot at the Indians, asked how many were prepared to put down similarly a month’s pay on those terms. And he has consistently been our enemy all these years. Moreover he is colonel of the defence force whose acts are the subject of inquiry and he is also legal adviser of many estate owners and during present agitation he has openly said that the £3 tax ought not to be repealed. Commission is not merely judicial but also political, investigating not only facts as to ill-treatment, but also recommending policy for the future, and it is impossible that the Chairman will control the views of his colleagues in matters of policy. To appoint Messrs Esselen and Wylie to investigate our grievances and to stigmatize our protests against their appointment as an unwarranted reflection on their impartiality is to add insult to injury. Almost entire South African Press admits reasonableness of our suggestions as to additional members, and several influential ministers of religion and other European friends are working to remove present deadlock and secure us fair play. We would be prepared to lead evidence before Sir William Solomon alone if it was a question merely of inquiring into charges of flogging, acts of military and other ill-treatment, but this inquiry includes an examination of grievances also. Before our release public meetings had been held at all Indian centres throughout South Africa protesting strongly against the personnel of the Commission and urging the appointment of Mr. Schreiner and Judge Rose-Innes to counterbalance Messrs Esselen and Wylie. Immediately on our release as soon as we took the situation in, we addressed a letter to the Ministry asking for these additions to the Commission. Objection has been taken to the form in which this request was put forward by us, but we are confronted with a terrible crisis and it is not easy always to weigh carefully niceties of form at such a juncture. Indian position always has been to insist on the community being consulted at least informally regarding matters vitally affecting it since it is voteless. In constituting present Commission Indian sentiment not only was not consulted but was contemptuously trampled on. During recent deadlock in connection with European railwaymen’s grievances the men were permitted to choose their nominee by a referendum. We merely ask for informal consultation. When we were released, we found that the indignation of our countrymen was at white heat owing to floggings which they had seen with their own eyes, shooting which they believed to be unjustified, and other acts of ill-treatment; and this indignation was further intensified by the harrowing accounts of prison treatment which passive resisters, including ladies, who were released at this time on the expiry of their sentences, gave to the community. In all our experience of prison treatment in this country, never have we been treated before with such unparalleled cruelty. Insults by warders, frequent assaults by Zulu warders, withholding of blankets and other necessary articles, food badly cooked by Zulus, all these necessitated a hunger-strike causing immense suffering. You have to know these things, to understand the frame of mind in which the community met in public meeting on Sunday 21st December to consider the position and resolve on future action. I here was but one feeling at the meeting and that was that if we had any self-respect we must not accept the Commission unless it was modified in some manner in favour of the Indians, and we must also ask for the release of all real passive resister-prisoners, in which term we do not include persons rightly convicted of actual violence. And we all took a solemn oath in God’s name that unless these conditions were complied with, we would resume our passive resistance. Now this oath we mean to keep whatever happens. In this struggle we are fighting with spiritual weapons, and it is not open to us to go back on our solemn declarations. Moreover, in this matter it is not as though it is the leaders that are egging the community on. On the contrary, so determined is the community to keep the vow which it has solemnly taken that if any leaders ventured to advise the acceptance of the Commission without any modification on the lines asked for, they would beyond all doubt be killed, and I must add justly so. I believe we are gaining ground. Several influential Europeans, including some ministers of religion, recognizing the justice of our stand, are working to help us and we have not yet given up the hope that some way may be found out of the difficulty. In all this crisis, I wish to say before concluding, two things have greatly sustained and comforted us. One is the splendid courage and staunch advocacy of our cause by His Excellency the Viceroy and the other is the hearty support which India has sent us. We shall do nothing now till Sir Benjamin Robertson arrives and we shall receive him with all honour and trust, both because you tell us we shall find in him a strong friend and also because he has been appointed by the Viceroy to whom we feel so profoundly grateful. But unless the Commission is made in some way more acceptable to us, I do not see how renewal of passive resistance can be avoided. We know it will entail enormous suffering, assure you we do not desire it, but neither shall we shrink from it, if it must become.

_The Times of India, 1-1-1914._

APPENDIX X

EXTRACT FROM GOVERNOR-GENERAL’S DESPATCH

Pretoria,

January 22, 1914

Subsequently in the course of confidential conversation General Smuts intimated to me that practically no difficulty would be presented by Mr. Gandhi’s two administrative points, and very little by the point on the marriage question, if the sense of Mr. Gandhi’s proposal thereon had been correctly apprehended. The abolition of the £3 tax would be a much more formidable task, but he was disposed to think that it would in the end be found inevitable. In substance therefore Mr. Gandhi could probably be met; on the question of form, however, he did not see his way clear to compliance with Mr. Gandhi’s wishes. If in regard to policy he were to ignore the Commission appointed by the Government and to make a compact with Mr. Gandhi after all that had occurred recently, he and his colleagues would be placed in a most undignified and, he feared, even impossible position. At the same time, if a settlement which would be accepted by all parties as final was attainable, he would like to effect it without unnecessary delay by carrying the requisite legislation during the forthcoming Session. He doubted whether he would be able to carry such legislation unless he were fortified by a recommendation of the Commission, and equally whether a recommendation would be obtainable in time if evidence were to be led on every Indian grievance which could conceivably be brought forward. From this point of view matters would not be advanced by the acceptance of Mr. Gandhi’s second alternative, viz., the addition of Sir James Rose-Innes or Mr. Schreiner to the Commission, even if there were no serious objections to such a course on other grounds. He was in favour of limiting the enquiry of the Commission on questions of policy to the four points specified by Mr. Gandhi, if this could be done without making an overt bargain with him.

After further consideration and consultation of the Cabinet, General Smuts signified his decision to Sir Benjamin Robertson for communication to Mr. Gandhi. Its purport was that the Government could not see their way to alter either the composition or the terms of reference of the Commission, nor could they authorize him to make a compact with Mr. Gandhi by giving in advance of the Commission’s report the assurances for which he had asked. The Commission must go on as previously arranged, but it would be asked to submit its recommendations in regard to policy at a sufficiently early date to enable legislation to be introduced during the forthcoming Session. If Mr. Gandhi felt himself precluded by his vow from giving evidence under these conditions, he was quite at liberty to abstain from participation in its proceedings; he need, however, feel no serious apprehensions as to the probable nature of the Commission’s recommendations on his four points and as to the Government’s intentions, but he should promise not to revive passive resistance until the Commission had reported and the Government had been given an opportunity of taking action on the report. The Minister repeated that while he had no knowledge whatever of Colonel Wylie’s views he had some little time ago sounded both the Chairman and Mr. Esselen and felt sure that their recommendations would be satisfactory to Mr. Gandhi.

In the result of the ensuing interviews and negotiations an understanding which is embodied in the enclosed correspondence of yesterday’s date, was finally reached by the Minister and Mr. Gandhi. You will observe that, while Mr. Gandhi receives no assurances, the Government expressed their desire for an early settlement. Mr. Gandhi and his friends will not appear before the Commission, but in recognition of the opportunities of consultation which General Smuts had afforded by consenting to receive Mr. Gandhi, they offer to assist Sir Benjamin Robertson in the preparation of his evidence. Passive resistance is to be suspended pending the report of the Commission and the introduction of legislation. The release of bona fide passive resisters now serving sentence is asked for, and the Minister explains that this had already been done by the Government. At his own suggestion, Mr. Gandhi and his friends will take no further action with regard to the allegations of ill-treatment during the Indian strike. The Government while repudiating the allegations as emphatically as ever will also refrain from leading evidence upon them, but reserve their right to ask the Commission to investigate the shooting affrays at Esperanza and Mount Edgecombe. It will be noted that Mr. Gandhi has added to his previous four points a fifth, asking for an assurance of just administration of the law and of due regard to vested rights. This appears to be innocuously vague and should not cause any difficulty. He has also slightly modified his stipulation respecting the licence under Natal Act 17 of 1895. He formerly asked that a standing licence should be substituted for the annual licence, but he now apparently contemplates that after an ex-indentured Indian has acquired domiciliary rights, in terms of the judgment in the Subrayen case, by three years continuous residence after the expiration of his indentures, the licence should be dropped altogether. This is a point of detail on which the Commission’s recommendation will doubtless carry weight with the Government. I may mention that yesterday afternoon, when Mr. Gandhi received Mr. Gorges’ letter, he was much perturbed by the omission of any explicit recognition of the motive which restrained him from pursuing the allegations of ill-treatment. In order to meet his difficulty, General Smuts caused the words which now form the third sentence of the letter to be inserted. They were suggested by Mr. Gandhi himself, and he is understood to be satisfied and to be leaving for Natal today.

Colonial Office Record: 551/54

APPENDIX XI

LETTER FROM MINISTER OF INTERIOR

PRETORIA,
January 21, 1914

SIR,

With reference to your letter of even date I am instructed by the Minister of the Interior to reply that you are correct in your statement that it is not proposed to make any alteration either in the personnel of, or the reference to, the Commission appointed to enquire into the recent Indian Strike in Natal. The Minister regrets but of course understands that you are so far committed by your previous public declarations in regard to the Commission that you are precluded from appearing before it. He also recognizes the motive which makes you unwilling to revive old sores by courting libel proceedings before another tribunal.

The Government repudiates as strongly and emphatically as heretofore the charges of harsh or improper action against the Indian passive resisters and strikers. But as you and your friends have decided not to appear before the Commission and lead evidence in support of those allegations, it seems likely that there will be no charges for the Commission to investigate. The Government would regret the consequent absence of an opportunity to lead rebutting evidence in vindication of the conduct of its officers, but it feels that, unless it has a definite case to answer, any attempt to deal with the allegations before the Commission could only result in an unprofitable waste of time. The Government is anxious that any recommendations which the Commission may make on the larger issue of Indian grievances should be received at a sufficiently early date to enable proposals to be submitted to Parliament during the forthcoming Session. It is hoped that those proposals, if accepted by Parliament, would ensure a satisfactory and permanent settlement. The Government considers that such a settlement of long standing disputes is too important to justify any risk of endangering its achievement by delaying the proceedings of the Commission—already delayed through unforeseen circumstances—by an enquiry, which would now be necessarily one-sided, into points of minor and secondary moment relatively to the wider issues at stake. If, therefore, the Indians decline to submit to the Commission any specific charges in connection with the treatment of passive resisters and strikers during the recent troubles, the Government will not think it necessary to take any further action in refutation of the allegations against it and its officers, but it reserves its right to ask the Commission to investigate the occurrences which resulted in loss of life at Esperanza and Mount Edgecombe.

---

1 This has reference to the resolution of the deadlock in the final negotiations described by Andrews; vide footnote 2 to “Interview with General Smuts”, 16-1-1914.

With reference to your prayer for the release of bona fide passive resistance strikers from ordinary or compound gaols, the Department of Justice had already previous to the arrival of your letter taken steps for the release of the small balance of these prisoners kept in the gaols.

In regard to the grievances which you have summarised at the end of your letter, the Government will, as already stated, await the recommendations of the Commission before taking any action.

I have the honour to be,

Sir,

Your obedient servant,

E. M. Gorges

Secretary for the Interior

M. K. Gandhi Esq.

Pretoria

From a photostat of the typewritten original: S. N. 5926
APPENDIX XII

ANDREWS’ INTERVIEW WITH GOVERNOR-GENERAL

[PRETORIA, January 13, 1914]

I saw Mr. Andrews quite privately on Tuesday and had a long talk with him. He impressed me favourably and appeared to have an exceptionally intimate acquaintance with the working of Mr. Gandhí’s mind. He said that Mr. Gandhi makes two crucial demands (1) the recognition of one wife as having a legal status, (2) the repeal of the £3 tax. Importance was also attached but to a lesser degree to some agreement being arrived at which restored the right of unrestricted admission into the Cape Province enjoyed by South Africa-born Indians under the Cape Immigration Act. Mr. Andrews assured me that Mr. Gandhi would make no claim whatever to equal franchise rights, and fully accepted the policy of exclusion of Asiatics from South Africa. According to Mr. Andrews, Mr. Gandhi is prepared to accept the Commission in so far as enquiry into disturbances is concerned. If his political conditions are accepted, it would be a solution of the position and there would be no necessity for any further work by the Commission. If they were not accepted, a very difficult question would arise for Mr. Gandhi had, with several compatriots, taken a vow not to recognize the Commission unless he was met on his basic points. I said that personally I saw little difficulty in conceding what Mr. Andrews stated Mr. Gandhi required. But Ministers might not feel able to give unconditional promises because the political situation might prevent giving absolute guarantees that the remedial Act could be passed. Mr. Andrews said that he feared Mr. Gandhi’s vow would prove an insuperable obstacle. I suggested that Mr. Gandhi could give evidence as regards the disturbances as he expresses readiness to do this. He could then by leave address the Court, state his conditions, giving arguments and say that while fully accepting the capacity and authority of the Commission to decide on questions of fact, he reserved to himself and his colleagues absolute discretion to take their own courses on matters of political principle, and concerning his own conscience. He hoped that the Commission would arrive at a right judgment but that neither he nor his colleagues could give further evidence. Mr. Andrews said that this gave a ray of light. Nothing could shake Mr. Gandhi on matters of conscience. The vow might still create great difficulty. Mr. Gandhi’s life, on a former occasion, had been attempted in Johannesburg by two Pathans because, after taking a vow, he had come to an agreement. But he would do his best to induce Mr. Gandhi to take this course if the Government assurances were not satisfactory.

1 This is an extract from Governor-General’s despatch dated January 14? 1914 to the Colonial Office.
He said further that, while Sir Benjamin Robertson was an excellent official, he would not understand the subtle and sensitive working of Mr. Gandhi's mind. I have given this information to General Smuts. How far Mr. Andrews correctly interprets Mr. Gandhi's views I cannot say, but if he speaks with accurate knowledge, the situation looks more hopeful. The Government, moreover, are in a better position to take a generous view than at any previous time. Their firm and courageous action in dealing with the strike firmly establishes their authority and reputation which various events had shaken. Mr. Gandhi's action in holding his hand while the Government were in difficulties has been much appreciated. If concessions are now made to the British Indians, no one can allege that they are made under coercion. I sincerely trust therefore that the outcome may be satisfactory.

Colonial Office Records: 551/53

APPENDIX XIII

EXTRACTS FROM SOLOMON COMMISSION REPORT

As the Bill based upon the recommendations of the Commission may be published very soon, we do not propose to give many extracts from the Report. Moreover, the full report is available at 9d. per copy in Cape Town. We give, however, some of the salient points from it. We have not found it possible to condense the exhaustive sketch of the marriage and the £3 questions. We have, therefore, been obliged to content ourselves with merely giving the text of the recommendations on these two points. The curious must search the Report itself. The document occupies 38 foolscap pages from which we take the following:

ON THE COMMUNITY'S ABSTENTION

Unfortunately the main object which the Commission had in view in commending the release of Messrs Gandhi, Polak and Kallenbach was, to a great extent, frustrated by the attitude taken up by these persons.

So far from assisting the Commission by placing before it the case for the Indian community for the redress of alleged grievances and by collecting evidence in support of the serious allegations of acts of violence committed upon persons sentenced to imprisonment in connection with the strike, the leaders decided, on various grounds which it is unnecessary to mention, entirely to ignore the Commission. The result was that not only was the Indian community not represented by counsel, but that, acting upon the advice given by Mr. Gandhi, no witnesses appeared to substantiate the charges of violence.

Fortunately, during the latter end of our sitting, a few Indians, chiefly from the Mahomedan section of that community, who represented the Natal Indian Congress, did appear before us and gave evidence of considerable value and importance. At a later stage of the enquiry, when the Commission sat in Cape Town from the 23rd to the 27th February, several other Indians presented themselves who claimed to represent various societies, three of them having travelled from the Transvaal for that purpose. These persons were, we think, well advised to refuse to follow the advice given by Mr. Gandhi to his fellow-countrymen to ignore the Commission. By appearing and giving evidence they were able to give us important information on certain subjects and, by doing so, they, in our opinion, rendered considerable service to the Indian community.

ON THE CAUSES OF THE STRIKE

The documentary evidence as contained in the various Blue Books which have been placed at our disposal makes it clear that the strike was immediately due to dissatisfaction on the part of the leaders of the Indian community with the provisions of the Immigrants Regulation Act, 1913.

Being unable to obtain from the Minister what he considered to be satisfactory assurances on these points, Mr. Gandhi deliberately decided to take the grave steps which immediately led to the strike and to the subsequent disturbances which are the subject of this enquiry. In his letter of the 28th September, which closed the correspondence between the Minister and himself, he informs the former that the step which he proposes to take “consists in actively, persistently and continually asking those who are liable to pay the £3 tax to decline to do so and to suffer the penalties for non-payment, and, what is more important, in asking those who are now serving under indentures and who will, therefore, be liable to pay the £3 tax on completion of the indentures, to strike work until the tax is withdrawn.”

This is the first occasion on which, in the course of the correspondence already referred to mention was made of the £3 tax. It was a matter, however, on which there can be no doubt that many of the Indians felt very strongly, and it had been one of the chief subjects of discussion between the Union Government and Mr. Gokhale when he visited South Africa in 1912. The feeling of the Indians on this subject had been much aggravated by the statements made to them that the Union Government had promised Mr. Gokhale that a Bill would be introduced in the next session of Parliament to repeal the tax.

When, therefore, no such Bill was introduced and when, in addition, the Government repudiated having made any promise to that effect, the result was that there was grave disappointment, on the part of the Indian community, especially in Natal. It is impossible for us in this enquiry to enter into the controversy which has arisen on the subject of the promise alleged to have been made to Mr. Gokhale; it is sufficient for our purpose to state that the Indians had been led to believe that such a promise had been made, and that, on failure to introduce the expected legislation, there was considerable feeling on their part against the Government.

There were other matters affecting Indians which we were invited by certain witnesses to investigate, but which, in our opinion, did not fall within the scope of our reference. Our enquiry into alleged grievances is limited to those which in any way contributed to the strike. We have no authority to investigate and to make recommendations upon the general position of Indians in the Union, and the disabilities under which they suffer.

There was one other subject, however, upon which, though we at first felt some doubt as to whether it was within the terms of our reference, we ultimately decided to hear evidence. Complaints were made that the laws of the Union, more especially the Immigration and Licensing Acts, were being administered against Indians in a harsh and unsympathetic manner. That was one of the subjects specially referred to in a letter from Mr. Cachalia, the Chairman of the British Indian Association, to the Secretary of the Interior, dated 12th August, 1913, and published in Blue Book C.D. 7111, page 26, in which he formally notifies the Government that the Indian Community proposes again to have recourse to passive resistance, and in which he states that the struggle will be continued so long as, amongst other things, “a spirit of generosity and justice does not pervade the administration of the existing laws referred to herein.”

The same subject is referred to in other communications that took place between the Indian leaders and the Government, and in his letter of the 21st January, 1914, in which Gandhi intimates to the Minister his intention not to take part in the proceedings before the Commission, he sums up the points on which relief is sought, as follows:

(1) The Orange Free State question
(2) The Cape Colony question
(3) The Marriage question
(4) Repeal of the £3 tax
(5) An assurance that existing laws, especially affecting Indians, will be administered justly and with due regard to vested rights.

In view of these circumstances, we came to the conclusion that we were justified in extending the scope of our enquiry so as to include an investigation into the subject of the administration of the Immigration and Licensing Laws.

We feel bound, however, in view of the terms of reference, to limit our investigation to the five subjects specified above, and to eliminate from our enquiry such questions as the following, which we were invited by various witnesses to consider:

(a) That the Transvaal Laws prohibiting Asiatics from becoming the owners of fixed property and from acquiring rights under the Gold Law should be repealed.

(b) That it should be illegal for the Government to insert in grants and leases of land in townships in the Transvaal a clause prohibiting the transfer or sub-letting of the land to Asiatics;

(c) Such general questions as the alleged want of proper educational facilities for the children of Asiatics; their inability to carry firearms, to ride in trams in the Transvaal, etc.

None of these matters in our opinion had any effect in bringing about the strike, and most of them could only be dealt with by legislation and not by administrative action, so that we do not consider that they fall within the scope of our enquiry.

That being so, we now proceed to discuss the five subjects set forth by Mr. Gandhi in his final letter of the 21st January, 1914.

THE ORANGE FREE STATE QUESTION

This has already been referred to, and, in view of the assurance given by the Minister on the subject, it is somewhat difficult to understand why it has been resuscitated. The only point that can be made regarding it is, that, inasmuch as under Section 7 of the Act of 1913 educated Indians entering the Free State become subject to Section 8 of Chapter 33 of the Free State Law Book, which amongst other things requires that a declaration shall be made before a Resident Magistrate, and inasmuch as it has been agreed by the Minister that no such declaration shall in future be required, it might be advisable to amend Section 7 of the Act so as to make this perfectly clear.

THE CAPE ENTRY QUESTION

It is clear that, if the provisional settlement of 1911 did in fact safeguard the existing rights of Indians, then in strict law there has been a breach of that agreement. Unfortunately the terms of this settlement are not set forth specifically in any formal document, but are to be gathered from two letters which passed between the Private Secretary to the Minister and Mr. Gandhi on the 23rd April, 1911.

It has been pointed out that in the letter of the Private Secretary of the 22nd April, there was no direct assurance that existing rights would be maintained, but there is no doubt that Mr. Gandhi and the Indian community generally understood that this was one of the terms of the settlement. This appears from many letters subsequently written by Mr. Gandhi to the Minister and specially from certain correspondence which took place between them in January and February, 1912, and subsequently in July and August, 1913. For example, in Mr. Gandhi’s letter of the 24th August, 1913, he states specially that “the correspondence setting forth the provisional settlement of 1911 protected all existing rights of the British Indians”.
Statements to the same effect are made in other letters, and never on any occasion was this claim repudiated by the Minister. In fact, a perusal of the correspondence leaves the impression that this was common cause between the parties, and was never the subject of controversy.

Then, if that be so, it follows that by restricting the entry of Indians born in south Africa into the Cape Colony to those who can satisfy the educational requirement of Act 30 of 1906, there has been a departure from the provisional settlement of 1911. At the same time, it is clear from Mr. Gandhi’s own letters to the Minister that there is very little substance in this alleged grievance.

Looking at the whole subject from a practical point of view, we have come to the conclusion that no good purpose could be gained by recommending that this shadowy grievance should be remedied by amending the Act of 1913, so as to restore the right of South Africa-born Indians to enter the Cape without undergoing the educational test therein provided.

Before leaving the subject we might refer to a point to which our attention was directed by Sir Benjamin Robertson. Section 4, (2) (a) of the Act of 1913 which deals with the educational requirements of the Cape and Natal Provinces, makes provision for those who were, at the commencement of the Act, lawfully entitled to reside in any Province. It was pointed out that the right conferred by that section would not strictly avail any person who became lawfully entitled to reside in any Province after the Act came into force, as for example, a child born, after the commencement of the Act, of Indians domiciled in South Africa.

It is indeed difficult to see what good purpose is served by the inclusion in the Section of the words “at the commencement of the Act,” and they might very well be deleted.

ADMINISTRATION OF EXISTING LAWS

We have now reached the fifth and last of the alleged grievances which have been formulated by Mr. Gandhi in his letter to the Minister of the 21st January, 1914, in-which he requires “an assurance that the existing laws especially affecting Indians will be administered justly and with due regard to vested rights.” The representations which have been made to us on this subject deal mainly with the Immigration and Licensing Acts, and, as already stated, we propose to confine ourselves to these subjects.

THE IMMIGRATION ACT

The complaints against the administrative methods of the Immigration Department were fairly numerous, chiefly in the Cape Colony. In respect of some of them we were not satisfied that they have been established and we do not propose to make any reference to such. There are others, however, in regard to which we are of opinion that grievances do exist and we propose to deal with these as shortly as possible.

THE LICENSING ACTS

Representations were made to the Commission regarding the administration of the Acts with reference to the grant of licences to carry on trade or business in the Cape Colony and in Natal.

We do not, however, see our way to making any recommendations on this subject which are likely to be of any use.

No evidence was laid before us as to the administration of the licensing laws in other towns of the Cape Colony or in the country districts, and we have, therefore, no observations to make on that subject.

As regards Natal, the system is somewhat different from that which obtains in the Cape Colony.

The evidence before us is to the effect that the Act is not so strictly administered against Indians in the Natal boroughs as it is in Cape Town, but that it is becoming more and more difficult for Indians to obtain new licences except in those quarters of the town which are inhabited almost exclusively by them, and which may be regarded as Asiatic reserves. In some other parts of the towns it is almost impossible now for Indians to obtain new licences.

As regards the rest of Natal outside of the boroughs and townships, there is one licensing officer who is a Government official, and from whose decision an appeal lies to the licensing board. His policy towards Indians is far more liberal than that of the licensing officers in the boroughs. In fact, he informs us that he makes no distinctions between Europeans and Indians.

A fact of some interest which was elicited from this witness is that, where applications for new licences are made by Indians, more than 50 per cent of the objections come from other Indians.

We had no complaint regarding the grant of new licences from this licensing officer, the complaints being directed entirely against the administration of the Act in the boroughs and townships. We do not see our way, however, to make any recommendations on this subject. Nothing can be done which would be of any effect except by legislation, and, for the reasons already given when dealing with the grant of licences in Cape Town, we are unable to suggest any amendment of the laws.

We have now dealt with all the grievances formulated by Mr. Gandhi in his letter to the Minister of the Interior, but before closing, we think that it is desirable to summarise the various recommendations that appear in different parts of the report.

Some of these recommendations will require legislation to give effect to them whilst others can be sufficiently dealt with by administrative action.

They are as follows:

(1) Section 5 (g) of the Immigration Regulation Act of 1913 should be amended so as to bring the law into conformity with the practice of the Immigration Department, which is: “To admit one wife and minor children by her of an Indian now entitled to reside in any Province, or who may in the future be permitted to enter the Union, irrespective of the fact that his marriage to such wife may have been solemnised according to tenets that recognise polygamy, or that she is one of several wives married abroad so long as she is his only wife in South Africa.”

(2) Instructions should be given to the Immigration Officer to open registers in each Province for the registration by Indians of, say, three or more years’ residence in South Africa, who have at present, or have had in the past, more than one wife living with them in South Africa, of the names of such wives, who are to be free to travel to and from India with the minor children so long as the husband continues to reside in this country.

(3) There should be legislations on the lines of Act 16 of 1860 of the Cape Colony making provision for the appointment of marriage officers from among the Indian priests of different denominations for the purpose of solemnising marriages in accordance with the respective religions of the parties.

(4) There should be legislation for the validation by registration of existing de facto monogamous marriages, by which is understood the marriage of one man with one woman, under a system which recognizes the right of the husband to marry one or more other wives.

(5) Section 6 of Act 17 of 1895 of Natal which requires certain Indians to take out year by year a pass or licence to remain in the Colony and which provides for the payment of £3 a year for such licence should be repealed.

(6) Conditions under which identification certificates under the Immigrants Regulation Act of 1913 are issued should be amended so as to provide that such certificates shall remain in force for a period of three years instead of one year.

(7) An Interpreter should be attached to the office of the Immigration Department in Cape Town who should be a whole-time officer.

(8) Application forms for permits, certificates, etc., from the Immigration Department should be filled in by the clerk in the office upon information supplied to him by the applicant, if the latter so desires.

(9) The practice at present existing in the Cape Town office of this Department of taking in certain cases prints of all the fingers of both hands, instead of the thumbs only, should be discontinued.

(10) The Resident Magistrate of a district in which there is no immigration officer should have authority to issue temporary permits to Indians residing in his district who desire to travel from the Province in which they are living to another Province of the Union.

(11) The present fee of £1 for an identification certificate or temporary permit should be materially reduced, and no charge should be made for any extension.

(12) The present practice of the immigration officer of one Province of communicating by telegraph with the immigration officer of another Province, when an application is made by an Indian for a permit to travel from one Province to the other, should be discontinued.

(13) Domicile certificates which have been issued to Indians in Natal by the immigration officer of that Province, and which bear the thumb impression of the holder of the permit should be recognized as conclusive evidence of the right of the holder to enter the Union as soon as his identity has been established.

(14) An arrangement should, if possible, be made with the Government of India for the holding of official inquiries by the magistrate or other Government official in the case of women and children proceeding from India to join their husbands and fathers in South Africa. If, on inquiry, the official is satisfied that the woman and children are the wife and children of the man in South Africa whom they claim as husband or father, a certificate should be given by him to that effect, and such certificate should be treated by the immigration officer as conclusive evidence of the facts stated in it.

Indian Opinion, 25-3-1914

APPENDIX XIV

Letter to Hermann Kallenbach

Sunday 9.30, May 17, 1914

DEAR MR. KALLENBACH

It is very late now. I must go to bed early so that I can have no difficulty in getting up in time tomorrow morning. Father is a little better today but he will have still to be confined to bed for about 5 to 6 days. He is very weak. He speaks very slowly and not quite distinctly. He takes fruit juices and lemon drink now and then.

1 Vide “The New Bill and the Old”, 12-4-1913
The period of the fortnight was of a great commotion and hardly anybody in Phoenix could give rest to one's thought or mind. Jeki Behn is now away and father seems to have some feeling that a great burden is removed from his mind.

With love from us all,

Yours sincerely,

CHHAGANLAL

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

APPENDIX XV

EXTRACT FROM GOVERNOR-GENERAL'S DESPATCH

CAPE TOWN,
June 5, 1914

In my despatch Secret of the 30th ultimo I had the honour to report that Mr. Gandhi was about to have an interview with General Smuts for the purpose of discussing the points which he had raised upon the draft Indians’ Relief Bill, and upon certain administrative questions. The interview took place on Saturday last. I understand that General Smuts suggested to Mr. Gandhi that, in view of the more immediate urgency of the Bill, the points connected with it should be taken first, and the administrative questions allowed to stand over for a short time until the Minister should have a little more leisure for their consideration. To this suggestion Mr. Gandhi appears to have agreed. The result of the interview was that General Smuts accepted Mr. Gandhi’s representations upon the three legislative points specified in the third paragraph of my above-mentioned despatch, and gave instructions for the necessary amendments to be made in the text of the Bill prior to its introduction in the House of Assembly.

2. You will have learnt from my telegram of the 3rd instant that the Bill was introduced and read a first time on Tuesday last, and was set down for second reading on Monday the 8th instant. The variations from the original text have also been communicated to you by cablegram. Copies of the Bill as introduced accompany my despatch No. 362 of the 5th instant.

3. Mr. Gandhi’s wishes have been met by the elimination from 2(1)(a) of the words “at the commencement of this Act”, and the substitution of the word “exists” for the word “existed”. The word “then” has been retained before the word “recognized” but I am not aware whether this retention is deliberate or due to an oversight. I am enquiring into the point, but in any case it does not seem to be one to which importance need be attached. The paragraph in its present form restores the privileges in regard to the registration of Indian marriages which were provided in the last type-written draft, as enclosed with my despatch Secret No. 4 of the 16th ultimo. By a further amendment of Clause 2(1), the words “Magistrate or” have been inserted on page 2, line 25 of the new print. Thereby all Magistrates will be enabled to register Indian marriages under Clause 2, irrespective of the circumstance whether or not they also hold appointment as marriage officers. This meets Mr. Gandhi’s second point. His third (relating to the admission of the children of a deceased woman who, had she lived, would have been eligible under Clause 3 for exemption from restriction) is met by the introduction of the words following the word “defined” on page 4, line 33 of the new print.

4. I have reason to believe that General Smuts is anxious to complete the second reading stage as soon as possible. It is to be hoped, therefore, that the Bill will not be crowded out by financial business on Monday. Considerable opposition from Natal members on both sides of the House is anticipated. Sir Thomas Smartt and other prominent Unionist members may be expected to give the Bill a helping hand. There are no indications at present as to the attitude which the Hertzogites and the Labour party are likely to adopt.

Colonial office Records: 55/58

APPENDIX XVI

THE INDIANS’ RELIEF ACT, 1914

ACT No. 22 OF 1914

TO MAKE PROVISION FOR THE REDRESS OF CERTAIN GRIEVANCES AND THE REMOVAL OF CERTAIN DISABILITIES OF HIS MAJESTY’S INDIAN SUBJECTS IN THE UNION AND OTHER MATTERS INCIDENTAL THERETO

Be it Enacted by the King’s most Excellent Majesty, the Senate and the House of Assembly of the Union of South Africa, as follows:

APPOINTMENT OF MARRIAGE OFFICER TO SOLEMNIZE MARRIAGES ACCORDING TO THE RITES OF AN INDIAN RELIGION

1. (1) The Minister of the Interior (hereinafter referred to as Minister) may from time to time appoint priests of any Indian religion to be marriage officers with authority to solemnize the marriages of Indians in accordance with the rites and formularies of such religion.

(2) A marriage between two Indians solemnized in accordance with such rites and formularies by a marriage officer so appointed shall be a valid and binding marriage, and all the incidents shall follow therefrom which follow from any other union recognized in law as a valid and binding marriage.
(3) A marriage officer appointed under this section shall be under the same obligations of keeping registers and entering therein particulars of marriages solemnized by him as are imposed upon marriage officers appointed under any other law in force in the Province in which those marriages are solemnized and the provisions of any such law as to the custody and inspection of registers, the obtaining of copies thereof, the evidence of certified copies thereof, the loss, the destruction or falsification of or injury to such registers or such certified copies shall be deemed to be incorporated in this section.

Validation by Registration of Marriages which in Fact Are Monogamous

2. (1) If any Indian male and Indian female upon a joint application to any magistrate or marriage officer (whether appointed under this Act or under any other law) satisfy such officer:

(a) That there exists between them a union recognised as a marriage under the tenets of an Indian religion which they profess; and

(b) That there does not exist between either of them and any other person a union so recognised as a marriage or any union recognized in law as a marriage; and

(c) That each of them is desirous that the union should be regarded as a valid and binding marriage in law, such officer shall, upon being furnished with particulars as to the full name, residence, place of birth, and age of each party and such further particulars as are prescribed by regulations made under this section, register such union in manner so prescribed, as a marriage between those parties. Notwithstanding that by the tenets of the religion which the parties profess polygamous unions are approved or recognised, the said union shall, by the fact of registration, become, as from the date when it was contracted, a valid and binding marriage between the parties, and all the incidents shall follow therefrom which follow from any other union recognised in law as a valid and binding marriage, and the marriage shall be deemed to have taken place at the place where the union was, prior to the registration, contracted.

(2) The Minister may make regulations as to the manner in which applications shall be made under this section, the keeping of registers for the purposes thereof, and the particulars to be entered in those registers. The provisions of the marriage laws in force in the Province in which such unions are registered as marriages, so far as those laws relate to the custody and inspection of registers, the obtaining of copies thereof or extracts therefrom, the evidence of certified copies thereof, the loss, destruction or falsification of or injury to those registers certified copies or extracts shall mutatis mutandis apply to registers kept under this section.
AMENDMENT AND INTERPRETATION OF SECTION FIVE (G.) OF ACT NO. 22 OF 1913

3. (1) From paragraph (g) of Section five of the Immigrants Regulation Act, 1913, (Act No. 22 of 1913), the following words shall be deleted, that is to say, the words—

“Including the wife or child of a lawful and monogamous marriage duly celebrated according to the rites of any religious faith outside the Union—”

(2) In the interpretation of that paragraph, as hereby amended—

“The wife” shall include any one woman between whom and the exempted person mentioned therein there exists a union recognized as a marriage under the tenets of an Indian religion, notwithstanding that by those tenets the union of that exempted person with other women at the same time would also be recognized as a marriage: Provided that no woman shall be deemed to be the wife of such exempted person—

(a) If such a union exists between him and any other woman who resides in any Province; or

(b) If such exempted person has in any Province offspring by any other woman who is still living;

“The child under the age of sixteen” shall mean a child who is the offspring of the exempted person and the wife as herein defined, or the child of the exempted person and a deceased woman who, if she had been alive, could have been recognized as the wife (as herein defined) or whose union with the exempted person could have been registered as a marriage under Section two of this Act.

SAVING OF EXISTING PROVISIONS OF INDIAN IMMIGRATION LAWS OF NATAL AS TO MARRIAGES

4. Nothing in the preceding sections in this Act shall be construed as repealing or in any manner modifying the provisions of Sections sixty-five to eighty-nine inclusive of the Indian Immigration Law, 1891, of Natal (Law No. 25 of 1891) or Act No. 2 of 1907 of Natal.

AMENDMENT OF SECTION THREE OF ACT 17 OF 1895 (NATAL)

5. Section three of the Indian Immigration Amendment Act, 1895 (Natal) is hereby amended by addition to the end of that section of the words “if he applies therefor within twelve months after such expiry”.

POWERS TO GRANT FREE PASSAGE TO INDIA AT REQUEST OF INDIA

6. The Minister may in his discretion cause to be provided out of moneys appropriated by Parliament for the purpose a free passage from any port in the Union to any port in India (with or without free conveyance by rail to such first mentioned port) for any Indian (other than an Indian who is or may become entitled under Law No. 25 of 1891—Natal—or any amendment thereof to such free passage) who makes a written request for such free passage and—

(a) Signs as a condition of the grant of such request a statement that he abandons on behalf of himself and his wife and all minor children (if any) all rights possessed by him or them to enter or reside in any part of the Union together with all rights incidental to his or their domicile therein; and

(b) Furnishes to an officer designated by the Minister such means of identification of such Indian and his wife and minor children (if any) as the Minister may prescribe.

A condition so signed shall be conclusive evidence that such Indian and his wife and minor children (if any) have abandoned his or their rights to enter and reside in the Union and any rights incidental to his or their domicile therein.

EVIDENCE OF FORMER RESIDENCE OR DOMICILE IN NATAL OF INDIANS

7. If in the administration of any law any question arises as to whether an Indian who produces a certificate of former residence or domicile in Natal is identical with the Indian who was lawfully entitled to obtain that certificate, then if the thumb impressions placed on that certificate when it was issued by the immigration officer are identical with the thumb impression of the Indian who produces it, the certificates shall be conclusive evidence of such Indian’s former residence or domicile in Natal.

REPEAL OF PROVISIONS OF LAWS RELATING TO YEARLY PASSES OR LICENCES OF EX-INDENTURED INDIANS

8. The laws specified in the Schedule to this Act are hereby repealed to the extent set out in the fourth column of that Schedule, and those provisions of those laws which are hereby repealed shall, in so far as they have been extended to Zululand, cease to be in force therein.

No proceedings shall be taken to recover any moneys which may have become due from any Indian prior to the commencement of this Act under the provisions so repealed.

SHORT TITLE

9. This Act may be cited for all purposes as the Indians’ Relief Act, 1914.

Colonial office Records: Cd. 7644/14
DEAR MR. GANDHI,

Adverting to the discussions you have lately had with General Smuts on the subject of the position of the Indian community in the Union, at the first of which you expressed yourself as satisfied with the provisions of the Indians’ Relief Bill and accepted it as a definite settlement of the points, which required legislative action, at issue between that community and the Government; and at the second of which you submitted for the consideration of the Government a list of other matters requiring administrative action, over and above those specifically dealt with in that Bill; I am desired by General Smuts to state with reference to those matters that:

(1) He sees no difficulty in arranging that the Protector of Indian Immigrants in Natal will in future issue to every Indian, who is subject to the provisions of Natal Act 17 of 1895, on completion of his period of indenture, or re-indenture, a certificate of discharge, free of charge, similar in form to that issued under the provisions of Section 106 of Natal Law No. 25 of 1891.

(2) On the question of allowing existing plural wives and the children of such wives to join their husbands (or fathers) in South Africa, no difficulty will be raised by the Government if, on enquiry, it is found, as you stated, that the number is a very limited one.

(3) In administering the provisions of Section (4) (1) (a) of the Union Immigrants’ Regulation Act, No. 22 of 1913, the practice hitherto existing at the Cape will be continued in respect of South Africa-born Indians who seek to enter the Cape Province, so long as the movement of such persons to that Province assumes no greater dimensions than has been the case in the past; the Government, however, reserve the right, as soon as the number of such entrants sensibly increase, to apply the provisions of the Immigration Act.

(4) In the case of the “specially exempted educated entrants into the Union” (i.e., the limited number who will be allowed by the Government to enter the Union each year for some purpose connected with the general welfare of the Indian community), the declarations to be made by such persons will not be required at Provincial borders, as... the general declarations which are made in terms of Section 19 of the Immigrants’ Regulation Act at the port of entry are sufficient.

(5) Those Indians who have been admitted within the last three years, either to the Cape province or Natal, after passing the education tests imposed by the Immigration Laws which were in force therein prior to the coming into effect of Act 22 of 1913, but who, by reason of the wording of Section 20 thereof, are not yet regarded as being “domiciled” in the sense in which that term is defined in the Section in question, shall, in the event of their absenting themselves temporarily from the Province in which they are lawfully resident, be treated, on their return, as if the term “domicile” as so defined did apply to them.

(6) He will submit to the Minister of Justice the cases of those persons who have in the past been convicted of “bona fide passive resistance offences” (a term which is mutually understood) and that he anticipates no objection on Mr. De Wet’s part to the suggestion that convictions for such offences will not be used by the Government against such persons in the future.

(7) A document will be issued to every “specially exempted educated entrant” who is passed by the Immigration Officers under the instructions of the Minister issued under Section 25 of Act No. 22 of 1913,

(8) All the recommendations of the Indian Grievances Commission enumerated at the conclusion of their Report, which remain over and above the points dealt with in the Indians’ Relief Bill, will be adopted by the Government; and subject to the stipulation contained in the last paragraph of this letter the necessary further action in regard to those matters will be issued without delay.

With regard to the administration of existing laws, the Minister desires me to say that it always has been and will continue to be the desire of the Government to see that they are administered in a just manner and with due regard to vested rights.

In conclusion, General Smuts desires me to say that it is, of course, understood, and he wishes no doubts on the subject to remain, that the placing of the Indians’ Relief Bill on the Statute Book of the Union, coupled with the fulfilment of the assurances he is giving in this letter in regard to the other matters referred to herein, touched upon at the recent interviews, will constitute a complete and final settlement of the controversy which has unfortunately existed for so long, and will be unreservedly accepted as such by the Indian community.

I am, etc.,

E. M. GORGES

M. K. GANDHI ESQ.
CAPE TOWN

Colonial Office Records: 551/58

APPENDIX XVIII

(1) GOVERNOR-GENERAL’S DESPATCH TO COLONIAL OFFICE
CAPE TOWN, July 4, 1914

SIR,

The agreement reached between General Smuts and Mr. Gandhi upon outstanding administrative points, as reported to you by telegraph on the 1st instant, is a welcome sequel to the enactment of the Indians’ Relief Bill, and presages, I trust, a respite from those Indians’ troubles which have formed the subject of constant correspondence during practically the whole of my residence in this country.

2. I enclose herewith copies of the two letters \(^1\) which were summarised in my telegram. The concessions promised by the Minister display a spirit of generosity and statesmanship. All Mr. Gandhi’s stipulations which were recorded in my Secret Despatch of the 30th May have been met, although in regard to the preservation of vested rights in the administration of existing laws and particularly of the Transvaal Gold Law, the general assurance given towards the end of Mr. Gorges’ letter is less precise and categorical than Mr. Gandhi desired. This point, I believe, was found the most difficult of adjustment. On Sunday last General Smuts said that on the previous day he had received Mr. Gandhi in an interview lasting a couple of hours, and that, apart from the question of the administration of the Gold Law, an agreement was in sight. Upon the Gold Law, however, Mr. Gandhi’s demands involved an extension rather than a confirmation of vested rights as understood by the Minister, and he did not think it would be possible to give the specific assurance for which he was asked. Being anxious for a settlement, he was still considering what could be done, but he doubted that he would be able to go as far as Mr. Gandhi wished. The further negotiations were conducted by Mr. Gorges, and in the end Mr. Gandhi, either in a mood of sweet reasonableness or from reluctanceto jeopardize what he had obtained for the sake of the unobtainable, signified his willingness to accept the formula which was offered and to close the bargain. Letters were exchanged and on the following morning, the 1st instant, Mr. Gandhi left Cape Town for Durban. My Secretary, who happened to meet him before his departure, did not observe any marked change in his appearance as the result of his recent fast. In the course of a brief conversation he spoke with great modesty of his own share in the settlement and with generosity of the help which had been given by others.

\(^1\) The reference is to E. M. Gorges’ letter to Gandhiji of June 30, 1914, the preceding appendix, and Gandhiji’s reply thereto of the same date ("Letter to E. M. Gorges", 30-6-1914).

3. Mr. Gandhi presumably will publish the attached correspondence shortly after the end of the session. It is not likely to enhance the popularity of the Government in Nationalist circles, and even in some other quarters, especially in Natal, it may be expected to have a dubious reception. In these circumstances publicity before Parliament has risen might prove very inconvenient. I need not lay stress on the courage with which General Smuts has disregarded the prejudices of a large section of his party.

4. The assurance given on the first point specified in Mr. Gorges’ letter should go far to allay the apprehensions which have been aroused in Natal as to the effect of the removal of the £3 licence. These misconceptions are responsible for the foolish telegrams from Durban, which have been communicated to you under cover of my Despatches No. 467 and No. 468 of the 2nd instant, asking that the Bill should be "vetoed". The sender of one of them, Mr. K. K. Pillay, who describes himself as "Chairman of the £3 tax Committee", is said to be a person of no importance. I am also told that it is very doubtful whether Mr. M. C. Coovadia, from whom the other emanates, has any considerable following even among the members of the Natal Indian Congress. Information has reached me that at a recent so-called "mass meeting" which he summoned the attendance only numbered some thirty Indians. For the accuracy of this statement I cannot, however, vouch. There is some force in his criticism of Section 7 of the Act as redrafted. The point had not been overlooked. I saw the new clause for the first time when it appeared among the amendments on the Order paper. I at once caused enquiry to be made why the Commission’s recommendation had been varied so that proof might be required not only of the identity of the Indian producing a certificate of domicile, but also of the grantee’s lawful title to its issue. I was advised that in some cases such certificates had been obtained by fraud and that the Government did not think it right that these should be protected. I should have preferred the original clause, but as the contention of the Government was not in itself unreasonable, and as Mr. Gandhi took no exception to the amendment, I did not feel called upon to cause embarrassment by insisting on so relatively trivial a detail. In other respects Mr. Coovadia’s telegram is futile. It is conceivable, though there is no evidence, that this agitation may have been encouraged by a few Euro- peans in Natal who were perhaps not averse from allowing Indian suspicion and credulity to be stimulated into a belief that, in the absence of a £3 licence, reindenture was the only safeguard against compulsory repatriation. Mr. Gandhi’s influence may, upon his return to Natal, be expected to supply the necessary corrective.

5. On the second point in Mr. Gorges’ letter, the concession is more generous even than the Commission’s recommendation in so far as the requirement that the plural wives affected shall previously at some time have lived in South Africa has been omitted. That the privilege was only to be granted if the number of potential beneficiaries was found to be small has been common ground throughout.

6. On the third point Mr. Gandhi receives the desired administrative assurance in regard to the question of the “Cape entry”. On the fourth point his difficulty about the Orange Free State declaration is met. The matter dealt with in the fifth point had not hitherto, so far as I am aware, been raised. It is disposed of in an eminently fair and reasonable manner. On the sixth point a conciliatory and favourable answer is given to Mr. Gandhi’s plea that past convictions for “bona fide passive resistance offences” should not in future be brought up against the persons so convicted. The seventh point regulates satisfactorily a detail of procedure in connection with the admission of “specially exempted entrants”. In the eighth point the pledge given by General Smuts in the House of Assembly as to the adoption of all the administrative recommendations summarised at the end of the Commission’s report is explicitly reiterated. No surprise can be felt at the addition of a stipulation that the fulfilment of all these assurances in conjunction with the legislative action which has been taken is subject to the understanding that the settlement will be accepted as complete and final by the Indian community.

7. Mr. Gandhi in his reply says unequivocally that the passage of the Bill and this correspondence bring the passive resistance struggle to a final close and at the end of his letter he expresses his conviction that, if the generous spirit recently displayed by the Government continues to be applied, as promised, in the administration of existing laws, the Indian community in the Union will be able to enjoy some measure of peace and will never be a source of trouble to the Government. Further than this Mr. Gandhi could hardly be expected to go, and General Smuts would probably have been glad if the letter had been confined to these two statements. The indication that other points stand over for adjustment at some future date is, however, tactfully worded, and Mr. Gandhi may have felt its inclusion to be necessary both in justice to himself and as a means of preventing any immediate clamour for further concessions. General Smuts, when the letter was submitted to him, is understood to have described it as a remarkable feat of diplomacy and ingenuity; he does not appear to have regarded it as a serious departure from the terms of settlement, but I have not yet had an opportunity of sounding him personally on the point.
8. I enclose two newspaper extracts. The first reports the proceedings at a congratulatory function held in Mr. Gandhi’s honour on Saturday last. The speeches delivered by Senator Marshall Campbell, Mr. Meyler, and Mr. Gandhi will be read with interest. The second records a grumble by a Muhammadan Society at Johannesburg. Their grievance presumably is that the Act fails to give recognition to polygamy, and that grievance, I fear, will, for the present at any rate, have to remain unredressed. The legislation of Mauritius, to which a Muhammadan deputation invited the attention of General Smuts, is considered by the Department of the Interior, with whose view I agree, to be rather less liberal, in this respect than the marriage provisions of the Indians Relief Act as passed by the Union Parliament.

I have, etc.,

GOVERNOR-GENERAL

Colonial Office Records: 551/58

(2) GOVERNOR-GENERAL’S DESPATCH TO COLONIAL OFFICE

CAPE TOWN,
July 10, 1914

SIR,

I have the honour to transmit to you herewith a copy of correspondence, as published in the Press, between the Department of the Interior and Mr. Gandhi upon certain administrative questions which had stood over for adjustment pending the enactment of the Indians’ Relief Bill. The Act which has now been placed on the Statute Book gives effect to those recommendations of the Indian Enquiry Commission which necessitated legislation. The remaining recommendations were such as could be dealt with departmentally. In regard to them the necessary action is promised in the enclosed correspondence and this promise is supplemented by assurances acceptable to Mr. Gandhi upon the other points which he had specified as essential to the attainment of a satisfactory settlement.

2. Mr. Gandhi’s statement that this correspondence, coupled with the passage of the Bill, finally closes the passive resistance struggle which began nearly eight years ago will be noted with much gratification. I am glad indeed in relinquishing my office here to know that the Indian troubles of South Africa which have occasioned so much anxiety not only to the Government and people of this country but also to His Majesty’s Government and the Government of India may now be expected to subside. In my judgment the Ministers and Parliament of the Union a well as Sir William Solomon and his fellow Commissioners have performed a great Imperial service by their several contributions to the present settlement.

3. It will be observed that while Mr. Gandhi accepts the agreement so far as he personally is concerned, he mentions in his letter a few other points which, in his opinion, remain to be dealt with at some future date. He does not, however, foreshadow a revival of agitation, and I cannot believe that any considerable portion of the Indian community will be so ill-advised as to make the concessions which have been afforded to them a new starting point for further demands. Some apprehensions in this respect seem to have been felt by the writer of a leading article in the Cape Argus, of which I attach a copy, but it is to be hoped that the Indians, after obtaining so much, will not commit the folly of displaying impatience because they have not obtained even more.

4. The further Press extracts which are enclosed will be read with interest. The first reproduces the text of two telegrams despatched from Johannesburg to Mr. Gokhale in England and to some addressee at Bombay, respectively. The former is signed by Mr. Cachalia, whose ultimatum to the Government, it will be remembered, formed the prelude of the Natal Strike and its concomitant movements towards the end of last year; the latter is signed by Messrs Cachalia, Gandhi, Kallenbach, and Polak. In both the words “final settlement” are used, and both are conceived in a spirit and couched in language to which the most querulous critic could take no exception.

The second extract reports Mr. Gandhi’s arrival at Durban and the adoption of a Resolution by the Natal Indian Association approving of his action.

The third summarises a farewell speech delivered by Mr. Gandhi at a reception given in the Town Hall of Durban under the presidency of the Mayor, on the 8th instant. You will observe that he expresses gratitude to the Union Government, acknowledges the help received from other quarters, and in speaking of the settlement appears to attach no qualifications to them.

The circumstance that he proposes to leave South Africa next week may perhaps be taken as implying that he regards his labours in this country as having been brought to an honourable conclusion.

I have, etc.,
GOVERNOR-GENERAL

Colonial office Records: 55l/58

APPENDIX XIX

THE STRUGGLE AND WHAT IT HAS MEANT

(BY THE EDITOR)

How oft by God’s will, hath a small host vanquished a large host, and God is with the patiently persevering.—Qur’an

Think ye to enter Paradise, when no such things have come

VOL. 14 : 26 DECEMBER, 1913 - 20 MAY, 1915
To survey, within a limited space, the origins and incidents of a movement that has occupied eight years of the history of South African Indians is a task impossible of satisfactory fulfilment. The present sketch will, therefore, be but a hasty outline, with here and there an indicator emphasising a noteworthy occurrence or a fundamental outline.

The origins of the Passive Resistance Struggle are to be sought, not in the agitation of 1906, but in that which commenced, in one of its phases, in the Transvaal, in 1885, and, in another, in Natal, in 1894. The old Republican Law 3 of 1885, whilst imposing various burdens upon Asiatics residing in the country, required that such of them as entered for purposes of trade should be registered at a fixed fee, and that, “for sanitary purposes”, they should reside in Locations specially set apart for them. To a large extent, both requirements proved a dead letter, but a great deal of friction with the British Government was engendered, resulting in Imperial intervention at the time of the War, when resident Indians, as British subjects, were promised complete redress of their grievances.

In Natal, a British Colony, the position had been complicated by the grave prejudice aroused by the presence of large numbers of Indian labourers brought at the instance of the European Colonists under indenture, and an agitation had arisen for the exclusion of free Asiatic immigration and the disfranchisement of all Asiatics. It became a question whether this was to be accomplished by specifically racial legislation or by general enactment differentially administered. The conflict of views represented by these two methods raged for some time, but at last, thanks to the statesmanship of Mr. Chamberlain, in 1897, the second method was adopted, and the famous “Natal Act” passed, imposing an educational and not a racial test. From then onwards, in Natal, racial legislation was a thing of the past, and hence the first signs of renewed trouble arose in the Transvaal, where the principle of statutory equality had not been accepted, owing to a different political conception of the status of Coloured people.

In the re-settlement that took place after the War, it was hoped that the burdens would be removed from the shoulders of the British Indian community, but Indians were dismayed to find the Imperial authorities endeavouring vigorously to enforce the obnoxious legislation against which they had strongly protested in pre-War days, a policy that was later weakly defended by Lord Selborne. Immigration of Indians was severely restricted by the Peace Preservation Ordinance. Registration of practically all adult male Indians, under Law 3 of 1885, was urged by Lord Milner, and was subsequently agreed to by the Indian leaders as a purely voluntary act, on Lord Milner’s definite promise¹ that this registration would be regarded as complete and final, and that the certificates issued would constitute a permanent right of residence to the holders and a right to come and go at will.

Meanwhile, Law 3 of 1885 was being enforced so as to compel all Indians to reside and trade in Locations, and the pre-War controversy was revived, resulting in an appeal to the Supreme Court, which reversed the old Republican High Court’s decision, and held that Indians were free to trade anywhere they pleased, and that non-residence in a Location was not punishable at law. This decision was a severe rebuff to the anti-Indian element in the European population that had its representatives even in the Government, which endeavoured to legislate to overcome the effect of the Supreme Court decision—without result, however, owing to the intervention of the then Secretary of State for the Colonies, the late Mr. Lyttelton. But the general public, by ingeniously manipulated statistics, were led to believe in a huge influx of unauthorised Asians into the Transvaal, to which some colour was lent by the dispersal of the Indian residents of the Johannesburg Indian Location throughout the Colony, after it was burnt down at the time of the plague outbreak in 1904, and meetings all over the Transvaal were held with the object of closing the door against all Asiatic immigration, and compelling Indians to trade and reside exclusively in Locations. In an atmosphere of prejudice and terror thus created, it was impossible effectively to protest one’s innocence, and the request of the Indian community for an open and impartial inquiry, whether by Royal Commission or otherwise, fell on deaf ears; so that when a draft ordinance was published in 1906 to “amend” Law 3 of 1885, requiring compulsory re-registration of the entire Indian community, men, women, and children, it was vociferously welcomed by the whole European population, whilst it fell amongst the Indian victims-to-be like a bombshell. The basic assumption, on the part of the authorities, for its necessity lay in the unquenchable belief in wholesale Indian immigration of an unlawful character, to which, in their opinion, resident Indians could not but be a party. So far as the general public was concerned, the measure was hailed as the first instalment of a scheme designed to drive Indians out of the Colony altogether, and Europeans in the neighbouring Colonies and territories eagerly looked on, as they had looked on, in 1903, at Lord Milner’s abortive effort to compel Indian trade and residence in Locations, so that they might take advantage of the results of the new policy to relieve themselves of their own Asiatic “incubus”.

Appalled by the magnitude of the disaster that threatened the community, the Indian leaders hastened to take steps to avoid it, if possible. They sought an interview with the responsible member of the Government, but succeeded only in getting women excluded from the operation of the measure, and, as a last resort, an Indian mass meeting² was held at the moment that the legislative Council was debating the clauses of the draft ordinance. Whilst the Council’s debate was perfunctory and prearranged performance, the whole business being concluded in less than a couple of hours, the crowded Empire Theatre rang with impassioned denunciations of the Government’s policy, which belied the solemn undertaking of Lord Milner in every important respect, assumed the guilt of the Indian community unheard and without proof, and adumbrated their virtual expulsion from the Colony, and, eventually, from South Africa. So fierce was the indignation aroused that, when the famous Fourth Resolution\(^1\) was put, committing all present, and those they represented, to go to gaol, if the measure should become law, until such time as it should be repealed or disallowed, the whole vast audience of three thousand persons rose as one man, and shouted a solemn “Amen,” when the oath of Passive Resistance was administered. Simultaneously, however, and as a last effort to avoid a terrible conflict, a deputation to England was arranged for.\(^2\) The delegates proceeded there to interview the Imperial authorities and arouse public opinion, and their efforts resulted in the suspension of the Royal Assent to the measure owing to the imminence of the inauguration of self-government in the Transvaal, and in the formation of the famous South Africa British Indian Committee, with Sir Mancherji Bhownaggree as its Executive Chairman, Mr. L. W. Ritch as its Secretary, and, subsequently, Lord Ampthill as its President.

¹ Vide “The British Indian Association and Lord Milner”, 11-6-1903.

The disallowance of the measure was, however, merely a temporary respite, for, taking umbrage at what was thought to be an impertinent intrusion on the part of the Imperial Government in the affairs of a practically self-governing British Colony, the European section of the population angrily demanded the immediate re-enactment of the ordinance, and almost the first action of the new Parliament was to rush it through all its stages in a single session of a unanimous House,\(^3\) entirely ignoring Indian opinion and Indian protests, for, as Indians were not directly represented in Parliament, nobody appeared to consider it necessary to take their feelings into consideration.

Still anxious to avoid a struggle that had appeared to be inevitable, the Indian leaders had urged the Government and Parliament not to proceed with the Bill, but to accept a voluntary effort of re-registration in a manner that might be mutually agreed upon, in which they proffered all possible assistance. But they were distrusted and ignored, and all the tragic possibilities of a prolonged conflict were forced upon the Indian community. In July 1907, the new Act came into force, and registration under it officially commenced, in compartments, the registration officers travelling from town to town throughout the Colony. Their efforts to induce registration were wholly unsuccessful, and an extension of the advertised time for registration was given by

---

\(^1\) Vide “The Mass Meeting”, 11-11-1906

\(^2\) This was in October-December, 1906.

\(^3\) Vide “Cable to Secretary of State for the Colonies”, 6-4-1907 the Government, as a last opportunity to comply with the law. But 95 per cent of the Indian community remained true to its oath. Meanwhile, a further effort had been made to avoid an extension of the trouble, and a petition, signed by some 3,000 Indians, had been addressed to the Government, imploring them to realise the depth of suffering into which it was threatened to plunge the Indian community, who once more offered voluntary re-registration if the Act was suspended. The petition was rejected contemptuously, and, at the end of the year, several of the leaders were arrested, ordered to leave the Colony, and, upon their refusal to do so, imprisoned for various periods. This process was repeated, until some hundreds of all classes were lodged in gaol, and the Government, realising that their efforts to crush the community had failed, opened up negotiations through the agency of Mr. Albert Cartwright, then Editor of The Transvaal Leader, with the result that, almost at the moment that H. H. the Aga Khan was presiding over a huge public meeting of protest in Bombay, a compromise was signed, whereby it was agreed to suspend passive resistance, to proceed with voluntary re-registration for a period of three months, during which the operation of the law was to be suspended, and, as the Indian signatories clearly understood, to repeal the hated Act if the re-registration was satisfactorily completed. In the meantime, the situation had been complicated by the passing of an Immigration Act that, operating jointly with the Asiatic Law Amendment Act, absolutely prohibited all Asiatic immigration, no matter how cultured the immigrant might be. Thus, at a stroke, the policy of non-racial legislation, that had been so strongly advocated by Mr. Chamberlain, was destroyed. The community, however, realised that, with the repeal of the Asiatic Act, the racial taint would disappear, and all efforts were, accordingly, concentrated upon that. The commencement of voluntary re-registration was signalised by a murderous attack upon Mr. Gandhi by a misguided countryman, and, for the moment, everything was in confusion. But a special appeal to the community was made and, with confidence restored and the promise of repeal, re-registration was duly completed by the middle of May, and Lord Selborne himself bore testimony to its satisfactoriness. Then the Government were called upon to perform their part of the compromise, but the promise of repeal was repudiated, and immediately the Indian community was thrown into a turmoil. The Government offered to repeal the Act provided that certain classes of Indians were treated as prohibited immigrants, and the racial bar remained in the Immigration Law. Naturally, these terms were indignantly rejected, and the community prepared for a revival of Passive Resistance. Mr. Sorabji Shapurji, an educated Parsee from Natal, was Imprisoned as a protest against the racial bar. The Natal Indian leaders entered the Transvaal, in order to cooperate with their brethren

---

1 Vide “Letter to Colonial Secretary”, 1-11-1907
2 Vide “My Reward”, 22-2-1908
there, and were arrested as prohibited immigrants and ordered to leave the Colony. But at a mass meeting held in Johannesburg, at which they were present, hundreds of certificates of voluntary registration were publicly burnt, and a challenge of wholesale imprisonment was thrown out to the Government, who took alarm at the situation, and a conference of leading members of the Government and Opposition, and of representatives of the Indian and Chinese communities, together with Mr. Albert Cartwright, as mediator, was held at Pretoria. The conference proved abortive, however, for though they were prepared to waive the other points upon which they had previously insisted, the Government proved adamant on the two main issues. They definitely refused either to repeal the Asiatic Act or to remove the racial bar of the Immigration Law. An amending Bill was passed through both Houses of Parliament, validating voluntary registration, and improving the Indian position in certain respects, but it being, in the main, unsatisfactory for the reasons given above, it was not recognized by the Passive Resisters, who resumed the struggle with energy. The new measure, however, strengthened the hands of the Government by giving them powers of deportation, which, however, were at first neutralised by their deporting Passive Resisters across the Natal border, whence they returned as fast as they were deported.

Into the many details and ramifications of the struggle at this stage it is unnecessary now to enter; suffice it to recall the Delagoa Bay incidents, when the Portuguese Government acted as the catspaw of the Transvaal, in preventing the entry into the Transvaal of returning Indians lawfully resident there, the various test-cases brought in the Supreme Court against the Government, some of which were lost and some won, the voluntary insolvency of Mr. A. M. Cachalia, the Chairman of the British Indian Association, who preferred to keep his oath and preserve his honour to the sordid joy of money-making, the imprisonment of Indians of all classes by hundreds, the appeals to India, where protest meetings were held in different parts of the country, the financial help of Natal, the arousing of enthusiasm amongst Indians all over the country, the activity of Lord Ampthill’s Committee in London, and of the British Press, the bitter controversies that raged in the Transvaal papers, the latent sympathy of not a few Transvaal Europeans, culminating in the formation of Mr. Hosken’s Committee that rendered such splendid and patriotic service in a number of ways, the public letter to The Times, the refusal of the Royal Assent to anti Indian measures passed by the Legislatures of Natal and Southern Rhodesia, the Indian mass meetings in Johannesburg and all over South Africa, the weakening of some sections of the Indian community and the strengthening of others, the amazing revelation of Tamil strength and fortitude, the energetic labours of the Indian women, the ruin and desolation of businesses and homes, the cruel gaol hardships whose purpose was to crush the spirit of the Passive Resisters, the magnificent courage of those who sought imprisonment again and again, the glorious religious spirit that was developed as the struggle moved on from phase to phase, the hopes and fears, the firm faith of the leaders in ultimate success—all these constitute a pageant of incidents and emotions that gave greatness to the Passive Resistance movement, and that bestowed upon its most distinguishing characteristics.

1 Vide “Speech at Mass Meeting”, 16-8-1908 & 23-8-1908

New life was given to the movement in the middle of 1909, when two deputations were authorised to proceed to England and India respectively, to cultivate public opinion there and to seek assistance. As the delegates were on the point of leaving, the majority of them were arrested and imprisoned as passive resisters, doubtless with the intention of preventing the departure of the remainder. But the community insisted that the deputations should go. In England, interest in the question was strongly revived, and, as Transvaal Ministers were there at the time in connection with the Draft Act of Union, the Imperial authorities strove to effect a settlement; but General Smuts proved obdurate, and flatly declined to remove the statutory racial bar and substitute for it general legislation, though it was clear that the Asiatic Act was doomed. The deputation, which had been led by Mr. Gandhi, therefore returned to South Africa, having accomplished only a part of what it had hoped to achieve, but having arranged for a body of volunteers who undertook to collect funds and keep the subject before the public.

The deputation to India, heralded by the tragic death of Nagappen shortly after his release from prison, was of a different character. Mr. Polak, who was the sole remaining delegate, placed himself unreservedly in the hands of the Hon. Mr. Gokhale, whose Servants of India Society arranged for meetings to be held in every part of the country, from Bombay to Rangoon, from Madras to Lahore. Tremendous enthusiasm was aroused, Indian patriotic pride in the sufferers in South Africa was awakened, and funds were energetically collected following the example of Mr. Ratan J. Tata, some £10,000 being contributed for the maintenance of the struggle, ruling princes sending generous subscriptions. All sections of the people united in demanding the intervention of the Imperial Government, and at the historic session of the Imperial Council at Calcutta, the Government of India announced its acceptance of Mr. Gokhale’s resolution, unanimously supported, to take powers to prohibit the further recruitment of indentured labour in India for Natal. After a thirteen months’ campaign, India had been educated on the South African Indian question to a degree that aroused the attention and anxiety of the Home authorities, and when angry protests came from every part of the country against the Transvaal Government’s action in deporting to India large numbers of Passive Resisters (many of them born in South Africa), with the object of breaking up the movement, the Imperial Government, upon the urgent representations of the Government of India, successfully implored the Transvaal—and, subsequently, the Union—Administration to cease to deport. The deportees subsequently returned to South Africa, but with the loss of Narayansamy, who died at Delagoa Bay after having been unlawfully denied a landing anywhere in British territory.

Meanwhile, the four South African Colonies had become Provinces of the Union of South Africa, and the Imperial Government, convinced at last of the justice of the Indian cause, and taking advantage of the possibilities of the new situation, addressed to the Union Government the memorable despatch of October 7, 1910, in which they powerfully recommended the repeal of Act 2 of 1907, the removal of the racial bar, and the substitution for the latter of the Indian suggestion of non-racial legislation modified by administrative differentiation, effectively limiting future Indian immigration to a minimum number annually of highly educated men, whose services would be required for the higher needs of the Indian community. To this dispatch was appended the condition that nothing that was done to settle the Transvaal controversy at the expense of the Indians residing in the Coast Provinces would be satisfactory to the Imperial Government. The Union Ministers responded in a friendly manner, the struggle became less acute, and ultimately, in 1911, a Union Immigration Bill was published, purporting to settle the controversy that had been raging for so long. The new measure, however, obviously did not serve its purpose, for, whilst repealing the Asiatic Act of 1907, saving the rights of minors that had been declared by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court in the Chotabhai case, the Bill did not remove the racial bar, but rather extended it throughout the Union, by reason of the Orange Free State entry question, and it took away other rights not only from Transvaal Indians, but from those resident in the Coast Provinces. A unanimous outcry arose from them, negotiations were re-opened, and the suggestion was thrown out by the Passive Resistance leaders that the Bill should be replaced by one limited to the Transvaal alone, which, however, was not adopted. Eventually it was found impossible to pass the Bill, and a provisional settlement was arranged, whereby the Indians undertook to suspend Passive Resistance, whilst the Government promised to introduce satisfactory legislation in the 1912 session of Parliament, meanwhile administering the law as though it had already been altered, and specially exempting, in terms of an earlier understanding, a limited number of educated entrants into the Transvaal.

Taking advantage of the full, and of the better feeling aroused at the time of the King’s Coronation in India, a further mission was sent there, in order to maintain public interest and to place before the Government the points upon which the Indian community insisted. The measure of 1912, however, met with no better fate than its predecessor, and the provisional agreement was extended for another year. It was then that preparations were made throughout South Africa to welcome the Hon. Mr.
Gokhale, whose tour in the subcontinent is still fresh in the minds of all. He succeeded, as no one else had yet done, in raising the discussion of the Indian problem to the Imperial plane, and won the admiration even of his opponents for his moderation and statesmanship. It was during this visit that Indians later alleged, on his authority, that a promise of repeal of the iniquitous £3 tax was made by the Government, in view of the fact that, for over a year, further indentured immigration from India had been prohibited by the Indian Government.

When the 1913 Bill, however, was introduced into Parliament, and the Indian leaders observed the spirit in which the Indian question was dealt with by the Union Ministers, grave fears were aroused that a situation, which had already become still further complicated by the position created by the Searle judgment, invalidating practically every Indian marriage, would once more develop into a catastrophe. The Government were warned that the marriage question must be settled if peace were desired, and that the racial bar must be finally removed from the measure. Amendments were introduced and accepted by the Government, purporting to settle the marriage controversy on the basis of the recognition of de facto monogamous marriages, but, even as passed, the Bill failed to satisfy the demands of the Passive Resisters, whilst the £3 tax remained unrepealed. A final attempt was made by the Indian leaders to avoid a revival of the struggle, and negotiations were once more opened with the Government, so as to obtain a promise of remedial legislation in the next session of Parliament. They were, however, interrupted by the European strike, during the heat of which Mr. Gandhi, as spokesman of the Passive Resisters, undertook to refrain from pressing the Indian case for the moment. Meanwhile, a mission had proceeded to England to co-operate with the Hon. Mr. Gokhale, at his urgent invitation, in order to bring home to the imperial Government and the British public the extreme gravity of the situation, and the certainty of the extension of the demands of Passive Resisters unless a settlement of the points in dispute were promptly arrived at. All these representations, however, failed to conciliate the Union Government, which proved obdurate, and a final warning was sent to them stating that unless assurances of the introduction of legislative and administrative measures, in the following session, were given to recognize in law the validity of de facto monogamous marriages to remove the racial bar, as regards the Free State, to restore the right of entry into the Cape Colony to South Africa-born Indians, to repeal the £3 tax, and to administer justly and with due regard to vested interests existing legislation operating harshly against Indians, Passive Resistance would be immediately revived. The warning was ignored, and the struggle was resumed in all its bitterness and on a much wider scale than before. Its incidents are too fresh in the public mind to need more than a brief mention—the campaign of the Indian women whose marriages had been dishonoured by a fresh decision of the Supreme Court, at the instigation of the Government, the awakening of the free and indentured labourers.
all over Natal, the tremendous strikes, the wonderful and historic strikers’ march of protest into the Transvaal, the horrible scenes enacted later in the effort to crush the strikers and compel them to resume work, the arrest and imprisonment of the principal leaders and of hundreds—almost thousands—of the rank and file, the enormous Indian mass meetings held in Durban, Johannesburg, and other parts of the Union, the fierce and passionate indignation aroused in India, the large sums of money poured into South Africa from all parts of the Motherland, Lord Hardinge’s famous speech at Madras, in which he placed himself at the head of Indian public opinion, and his demand for a Commission of Inquiry, the energetic efforts of Lord Amptill’s Committee, the hurried intervention of the Imperial authorities, the appointment over the heads of the Indian community of a Commission whose personnel could not satisfy the Indians, the discharge of the leaders whose advice to ignore the Commission was almost entirely accepted, the arrival of Messrs Andrews and Pearson and their wonderful work of reconciliation, the deaths of Hurbatsingh and Valliamma, the strained position relieved only by the interruption of the second European strike, when Mr. Gandhi once more undertook not to hamper the Government whilst they had their hands full with the fresh difficulty, and, when it had been dealt with, the entirely new spirit of friendliness, trust, and co-operation that was found to have been created by the moderation of the great Indian leader and the loving influence spread around him by Mr. Andrews as he proceeded with his great Imperial mission.

All these things are of recent history, as are the favourable recommendations of the Commission on practically every point referred to it and out of which Passive Resistance had arisen, the adoption of the Commission’s Report in its entirety by the Government, the introduction and passing into law of the Indians’ Relief Act, after lengthy and remarkable debates in both Houses of the Legislature, the correspondence between Mr. Gandhi and General Smuts, in which the latter undertook, on behalf of the Government, to carry through the administrative reforms that were not covered by the new Act, and the Indian protagonist of Passive Resistance formally announced the conclusion of the struggle and set forth the points upon which Indians would sooner or later have to be satisfied before they could acquire complete equality of civil status—and the final scenes of departure, enacted throughout the country, wherein the deaths and sufferings of the Indian martyrs, Nagappen, Narayansamy, Hurbatsingh, and Valliamma, were justified and sanctified to the world.

It is significant that, as Passive Resistance became stronger and purer, it succeeded more and more in bringing together the best representatives of the European and Indian sections of the population. With each new phase came new triumphs and new friends. Whilst every material gain has been but the restoration of that which was taken away, each gain of principle has been the concession of that which had been denied. The struggle commenced with a protest against the universal distrust and contempt for the Indian community. That distrust and contempt have been exchanged for trust and respect. It commenced with the complete ignoring of Indian sentiment. Gradually that policy, too, was altered, save that it revived acutely when the Commission was appointed over the heads of those mainly interested in its findings. To-day, however, the leaders are consulted in matters vitally affecting the welfare of the Indian community, and Passive Resistance has given for these disfranchised ones far more than the vote could have won, and in a shorter time. The movement commenced with a demand for the repeal of the Transvaal Act 2 of 1907. The Act was repealed and its threatened extension to other parts of South Africa was completely prevented. At the beginning, racial legislation against Indians was threatened, so as to drive them from the Colony. The Settlement has removed the possibility of racial legislation against Indians throughout the Empire. The system of indentured immigration from India, that had been regarded almost as a permanent feature of South African economics, has been ended. The hated £3 tax has been repealed and its attendant misery and insult destroyed. Vested rights, that were tending everywhere to disappear, are to be maintained and protected. The bulk of Indian marriages, that had never previously received the sanction of South African law, are henceforth to be fully recognized in law. But above and beyond all this is the new spirit of conciliation that has resulted from the hardships, the sufferings, the sacrifices of the Passive Resisters. The flag of legal racial equality has been kept flying, and it is now recognized that Indians have rights and aspirations and ideals that cannot be ignored. The struggle has more than proved the immense superiority of right over might, of soul-force over brute-force, of love and reason over hate and passion. India has been raised in the scale of nations, her children in South Africa have been ennobled, and the way is now open to them to develop their capacities in peace and concord, and thus contribute their quota to the building up of this great new nation that is arising in the South African sub-continent.

Golden Number, Indian Opinion, 1914

APPENDIX XX

LETTER FROM C. ROBERTS

[After August 14, 1914]

DEAR MR. GANDHI,

Lord Crewe desires me to thank you for your letter of the 14th, and to express his warm recognition of your loyal offer of services.

His Lordship desires to accept the offer in the spirit in which it has been made, and he has given his earnest consideration to the manner in which the services of the Indian community can be utilised to the best interest of the Empire.

He is disposed to think that it would not be advisable for Indian student to volunteer for military duties. If they enlist in the force which Lord Kitchener is now raising, they may not be able to leave it for three years' time. His Lordship is very averse to encouraging them without the sanction of their parents to take a step which would so seriously interrupt the purpose for which they came to this country, and which might prejudice their whole future. Neither is it possible to advise them to join the Territorial Force, as the establishment is now complete, and a long waiting list is already in existence, so that at the present it is impossible to secure enrolment in that force.

There is, however, another sphere of public duty not less important for which in this country we are in the habit of depending very largely upon voluntary assistance, and this consists in rendering aid to the sick and wounded. The number of these in the present war may, unhappily, be large, and if that should prove to be the case, the military hospitals and military staff may have difficulty in coping with the demands made upon them. It will, therefore, be necessary to create temporary and voluntary organisations to meet this emergency. This duty is already being undertaken by a very large number of Englishmen and women in the voluntary aid detachments of the British Red Cross Society, and it is to work of this kind that Lord Crewe would direct your attention.

His Lordship suggests that a committee should be formed among the Indian residents and visitors in London, and that they should undertake to get up an Indian voluntary aid contingent. It is understood that Mr. James Cantlie, who has taken an active part in the organisation of the voluntary aid detachments of the Red Cross Society, has offered to train and drill an Indian voluntary aid contingent if a sufficient number of persons are prepared to undergo a course of instruction. Lord Crewe notices that several of the signatories to your letter are qualified medical men, and if they will co-operate with Mr. Cantlie, there is reason to hope that the Indian voluntary aid contingent would become one of the most efficient detachments in the kingdom.

It is, of course, quite impossible at the present moment to guarantee that the services of the Indian voluntary aid contingent will be utilised in any given direction. If the number of sick and wounded should, fortunately, not be large, the ordinary military and charitable hospitals will be able to deal with them. But the prevalent feeling in this country, which, as your letter shows, is shared by Indians, is that we ought all to prepare ourselves to render efficient service to the empire should the necessity arise.

Yours truly,

CHARLES ROBERTS

Indian Opinion, 16-9-1914
1. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

AHMEDABAD,
May 21 [1915]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

Here am I now hoping to settle down. The boys are at the Gurukul, Hardwar, I have wired for them and they may be here any day. Two cottages have been placed at my disposal. They are isolated from this big city. There are 3 acres of ground attached to them. Living there I shall conduct the Institution along our lines and shall search for an agricultural plot.

I pleaded for admission to the Society after Mr. Gokhale’s death as I knew that such was his wish. Of course, my admission could not mean any alteration of my views. They are too firmly fixed to be altered. I find here nothing but confirmation. I am passing through a curious phase. I see around me on the surface nothing but hypocrisy, humbug and degradation and yet underneath it I trace a divinity I missed there as elsewhere. This is my India. It may be my blind love or ignorance or a picture of my own imagination. Anyway it gives me peace and happiness. It fills me with hope and confidence without which no man could work.

I wonder if you will stick to your carpentry and restaurant-keeping. Both are good education. Your diary does not even give me an idea of your monthly expenses. Does Polak continue to give you satisfaction by way of letters?

Do you do any reading at all? Have the rosary and Imitation of Christ disappeared from your view entirely?

With love,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

---

1 The Kochrab Ashram which was established on May 20, 1915 on the outskirts of Ahmedabad

2 Vide An Autobiography, Part V, Ch. VI.
2. LETTER TO UMIYASHANKER

AHMEDABAD,

Vaishakh Sud 7, Friday [May 21, 1915]\(^1\)

CHI. UMIYASHANKER,

I have your letter. I returned only yesterday, after visiting Rajkot and Limbdi. I have no personal relation with Hussain Tyobji so that I could write to him. However, Chhabildas should apply immediately, or you may do so on his behalf. You may mention my name and say that I know him well and will be ready to give a guarantee [on his behalf]. If he then inquires of me, I shall be able to say something.

Have you done anything about what you were to send me concerning Chhotu?

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 1635. Courtesy: C. K. Bhatt

3. LETTER TO KUNVARJI V. MEHTA

AHMEDABAD,

May 25, 1915

BHAISHRI KUNVARJI,

I do not see the least possibility of my being able to attend the conference this time. I feel there is need for me to stay here at present. I find I have been away from the students too long and should not therefore leave at once. I must therefore look for another occasion to visit Surat.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS GANDHI

From a photostat of the Gujarati G.N. 2662

\(^1\) Gandhiji returned to Ahmedabad on May 20 from Rajkot and Limbdi.
4. LETTER TO G. A. NATESAN

AHMEDABAD,
May 28, 1915

DEAR MR. NATESAN,

I have your letter enclosing cheque for Rs. 3,000 for which please find receipt herewith.

I notice that the Bangalore ‘talk’ has been much misrepresented and that Mrs. Besant has done me no justice whatsoever. I saw the ‘talk’ only the day before yesterday and it is a parody of what I actually said. I never sent Mrs. Besant any explanation for publication. I now hear that she has published what purports to be an explanation from me. Could you please send me the copies if you have seen them.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 2229

5. LETTER TO G. B. VEERASWAMY

AHMEDABAD,
May 30, 1915

DEAR MR. VEERASWAMI,

You may come here at any time you like and you will stay if we mutually agree. . . .¹ now nothing is obligatory. English books are stocked here in a large quantity and newspapers are also received. Those who are in the Institution² do write letters and stamps or post-cards are provided for them. The rest can be discussed personally if you decide to come. Servants of India Society may not admit you as you are only a matriculate.

Yours truly,
GANDHI

From a photostat: C.W. 11015. Courtesy: Balachandran

¹ The source is damaged here.
² The Satyagraha Ashram
6. LETTER TO P. G. BALASUNDARA SASTRI

AHMEDABAD,
June 1, 1915

DEAR SIR,

Mr. Natesan has sent me your letters addressed to him and to me. I thank you for both. Your son has been in correspondence with me. His last letter stated that he was driven away by you. I therefore wrote to him yesterday saying that in that case he was free to come to me. His ultimate aim seems to be to join the Servants of India Society. If your boy comes here and is found to be not of mature age so far as I am concerned he will be certainly sent back to you. I take no boys under age without the consent of their parents. You may therefore fully depend upon my co-operation with you.

Yours faithfully,

M. K. GANDHI

MR. P. G. BALASUNDARA SASTRI
GOVINDAPURAM VILLAGE
ADUTURAL POST
THANJAVUR DISTRICT, MADRAS PRESIDENCY

From a photostat C.W. 11016. Courtesy: Balachandran

7. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

AHMEDABAD,
June 4 [1915]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I feel like crying out to you ‘Do come and help me!’ Mrs. Gandhi is again down with her swellings. She has lost all power of resistance. She weeps like a child, is ever angry with me as if I was the party responsible for her swellings. I am over head and ears in work. This institution costs me much trouble. I wish I had the time to

1 G. A. Natesan
2 G. B. Veeraswamy
3 From the contents
describe to you the troubles I am passing through. I am not dejected but I feel lonely. You know what I mean. Heaven knows what will happen. There are so many sick people on the Farm. I want hours of solitude and have not a minute of it. Do ‘buck up’ and prepare for the struggle of the spirit when you are able to come here.

I know nothing about some honour\(^1\) that has been conferred upon me. I have just received a letter of congratulations. More in my next.

With love,

OLD FRIEND

---

1 The Kaisar-i-Hind Gold Medal; vide the following item.
mind or eyes are never disturbed.

2. I maintain truthfulness, but I cannot say that I am never guilty of exaggeration, consciously or unconsciously. To say what I like saying and not to say anything which I do like saying casts a shadow on the vow of truthfulness.

3. I make untiring efforts to control the palate but I observe that I extract the utmost pleasure from the five articles [I permit myself in a day]. But I do want to keep these and other vows inviolate and make progress in them day by day, and I am quite confident that I shall succeed. I feel that I am not likely now to depart from a literal observance.¹

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5685. Courtesy: Radhabehn Choudhri

9. LETTER TO RANCHHODLAL PATWARI

AHMEDABAD,
Vaishakh Vad 8 [June 5, 1915]²

RESPECTED SHRI RANCHHODBHAI,

Having been very busy with various affairs, I could not write earlier. Those at Hardwar were expected to arrive any day and so I could not go to Gondal nor could I stay on [at Rajkot]. I have taken up residence in two bungalows here. Efforts [for acquiring land] will now be taken up. Boarding expenses have to be found by me. Utensils, tools, etc., have been supplied by Ahmedabad. Things have not made as much progress as we would have liked, for the various articles take a long time in arriving.

Could you send from there someone to teach [us] how to operate an indigenous loom? Could you secure me such a loom and some sample of handloom cloth woven on it?

Do you know any teacher, a man of character, who can teach Sanskrit and Gujarati? We may pay him. We shall be satisfied if we get one for a short period.

¹ The letter is incomplete.
² From the references to the arrival from Hardwar of Maganlal Gandhi’s party at Ahmedabad and the draft constitution of the Ashram in the letter, it appears to have been written in 1915.
Herewith is a draft constitution for the institution. Please go through it and send your comments and suggestions. I am sending three copies. If you require more, ask for them. Which [name] do you prefer? Or, would you like to suggest a different one altogether?

How does Mr. Dwarkadas keep now?

Respectful greetings from

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 2796; also G. N. 4116

10. LETTER TO KUNVARJI MEHTA

AHMEDABAD,

Vaisakh Vad 9 [June 6, 1915]

DEAR SHRI KUNVARJI,

I have your letter. Read the enclosure and you will have the answers to your three questions. I place Mr. Gokhale in the front rank. I cannot judge about others. Come over here when you are free. I am leaving for Poona on the 10th. I shall return by the 15th.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 2661

11. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

AHMEDABAD,

June 7, 1915

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I am writing this early in the week as I may not be able at all to write at a later time. Mrs. Gandhi is again very bad with her swelling and has almost become a child. She has no restraint on herself. Then I have to go to Poona and attend to several other things. Distraction is very great. And I am hardly able to give you long letters.

Vide “Draft Constitution for the Ashram”, before 20-5-1915

This appears to have been written in 1915, for Gandhiji left Ahmedabad for Poona on June 10, 1915, and returned from there on June 16. Vide “Diary for 1915”.

VOL. 15: 21 MAY, 1915 - 31 AUGUST, 1917
I do not fear your internment. You will simply enjoy it. You will be able to make the best of it.

I understand that the Kaisar-i-Hind Gold Medal has been awarded to me. I have no official intimation as yet.

My difficulties here are of a different type altogether and some of them most trying. When I have greater leisure, I shall describe them to you.

For the time being, if I do not give you long letters, you will know that my whole time is given to organizing the Institution and looking after patients.

I do wish you would try to take up the course we had jointly devised. Where is Imitation of Christ? What about the rosary? What about the Song Celestial? And why not Gujarati?

With love,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

---

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

12. LETTER TO PURSHOTTAMDAS THAKURDAS

AHMEDABAD

Vaishakh Vad 11 [June 8, 1915]

DEAR SHRI PURSHOTTAMDASJI,

I saw your letter on Revashankerbhai. Thanks for your views.

You will know something about my activities if you go through the accompanying draft [constitution of the Ashram]. I shall be obliged to have your comments.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5700. Courtesy: Ramanlal Saraiya

---

1 Vide “Speech at Surat on place of English”, 3-1-1910.
2 From the reference to the draft constitution, the letter appears to have been written in 1915.
3 Sir Purushottamdas Thakurdas, economist, and a cotton magnate of Bombay
4 Vide “Draft Constitution for the Ashram”, before 20-5-1915.

---

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
13. LETTER TO RANCHOHDLAL PATWARI

AHMEDABAD

Vaishakh Vad 12 [June 9, 1915]

RESPECTED SHRI RANCHOHDBHAL,

I have your letter. Thanks for your criticism. The portion concerning parents is written with the best intentions but I shall make changes in it all the same. As for the other points, instead of carrying on a discussion in letters, I hope to have a full talk about them when we meet. I will sacrifice this life itself to uphold the sanatana dharma as I understand it.

I want coarse cloth as well as fine hand-woven cloth. I shall be glad, therefore, if you send it from there as well as from Palanpur. Please send the loom and the man who will teach how to operate it, as soon as they can possibly arrive.

Respectful greetings from

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 2798; also G. N. 4114

14. LETTER TO VIRCHAND SHAH

Thursday [On or about June 10, 1915]

BHAJI SHRI VIRCHAND,

I have your letter. I send herewith a copy of the scheme [of the Ashram]. Return it after you have gone through it. You may also send any comments you feel like making. If, moreover, there are any men of learning in Bhavnagar to whom copies should be sent, give me their names.

1 This was written after “Letter to Ranchhodlal Patwari”, 5-6-1915.
2 From the reference to the scheme of the Ashram, the letter appears to have been written at the same time as “Letter to Ranchhodlal Patwari”, 5-6-1915 and “Letter to Purshottamdas Thakurdas”, 8-6-1915.
3 Virchand Panachand Shah, Jain scholar and philosopher
RESPECTED SHRI RANCHHODBHAI,

I wrote to you yesterday in the midst of many preoccupations. I think some of your questions I should answer right now. I have a little time on hand today and, since I leave for Poona in the evening, I set down a few things this very moment.

There need be no congratulations on [the award of] the Kaiseri-Hind medal.\(^2\) One may get it and also lose it. I do want a medal, but of a different kind altogether. There is no knowing when I shall get it, if ever.

The English article which is sold as flour is often no flour but a mixture of other things. There is fraud in [the sale of] this article. The retailer, being a third party, may not perhaps be involved in it. Handloom cloth is only an example. The vow of swadeshi implies that every article should be swadeshi. Kindly permit me to say that the observance of this vow has a subtle moral bearing.

Arithmetic will certainly include oral sums and Indian accountancy.

It cannot be that Gujaratis will never look outside Gujarat. They will go everywhere in India. They are to serve the nation. If they do not know the languages of Madras, they can have no contact with the people there. As for English, it can be of service only to those who know English. Shankar\(^3\) had learnt all the languages of India. Vallabh\(^4\), who belonged to the land of the Dravids, had learnt Gujarati.

---

1. This was written on the next day after “Letter to Ranchhodlal Patwari”, 9-6-1915.
2. Gandhiji was awarded this medal on June 26 at Poona.
3. 8th-century philosopher
4. 15th-century philosopher
There are at present hundreds of Gujaratis in Madras who know Tamil. In Europe, people in the various countries know four or five European languages. It is very easy to acquire such proficiency in languages. The time wasted over English will, if saved, be sufficient for the purpose of these other languages.

Pupils are to receive education which will incline them to do nothing but national service when their studies are over. If, on growing up, they leave the Ashram, the education will have failed to that extent. Should any occasion of the kind arise, the student will be free [to follow his inclination]. It is not the aim, however, that the students should return to their parents and get lost in the sea of practical affairs.

I have had bitter experience that, when provision is made for exceptional circumstances, parents conveniently fall ill. While they are still in the stage of brahmacharya, students must not go to attend marriages. They are to be surrounded with a new kind of atmosphere and I always feel that, if there is frequent breaking away from this, building of character is impossible.

As for dress, a single uniform is prescribed for the present, it being necessary to do this for several reasons.

I think I have given very deep thought to the subject of milk. It is a legacy of our non-vegetarian past. It is objectionable from so many points of view that it ought to be avoided altogether. Quite a number of boys have gone through the experiment for several years and I have observed no ill-effects on their health. More [about this] when we meet.

I shall try to respect people’s sentiments in every way I can without compromising the aims of the Ashram.

We have secured four teachers. One of them will stay with us. Others live in the neighbourhood and come over daily for teaching. If a teacher is not a man of character, he will be of no use to us.

Respectful greetings from

Mohan Das

For washing clothes, I use for the present an Indian soap which is free from fat. I am looking out for a substitute.

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 2792; also G. N. 4117
16. LETTER TO KOTWAL

AHMEDABAD,

Jeth Sud 1 [June 13, 1915]

BHAISHRI KOTWAL,

You seem to have forgotten me. I send herewith a draft of the constitution for the Ashram. Please go through it and let me have your considered comments. Anna has arrived at Ahmedabad. You may also come when you have time and take a look at the Ashram.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 3607

17. LETTER TO MAHATMA MUNSHIRAM

AHMEDABAD

Jeth Shukla 2 [June 14, 1915]

MAHATMAJI,

As I was preoccupied with making all sorts of arrangements after the boys’ arrival from Gurukul, I could not write to you earlier. The boys can never forget the love you showered on them. I am highly obliged to you for giving shelter to my boys and colleagues.

I have started an Ashram at Ahmedabad at any rate for the time being. A Hindi version of its rules and regulations is being prepared, when ready, it will be sent to you for your opinion. I have not at all forgotten my promise to go to Hardwar again and spend a few days there.

1 From the reference to the draft constitution of the Ashram, the letter appears to have been written in 1915. Though Gandhiji was in Poona on this day, he wrote the letter as from Ahmedabad presumably because he was to leave Poona for Ahmedabad on this day.

2 Harihar Sharma, a teacher of the Ganganath Vidyalaya, Baroda, who joined Gandhiji at this time.

3 The boys and teachers referred to in the letter arrived in Ahmedabad with Maganlal Gandhi on May 23, 1915 from Gurukul; vide “Diary for 1915”. Though Gandhiji was in Bombay on this day, the letter is dated as from Ahmedabad, presumably because he was to leave Bombay for Ahmedabad the following day.
days with you. I will certainly come when I get the time.

Looking forward to your kindness,

Yours

MOHANDAS GANDHI

From a photostat of the Hindi original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 2208

18. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

AHMEDABAD,

June 15 [1915]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. The omission of your dairy altogether is, I feel, a regression. It was a good measure of discipline. Your diary gave me an insight into yourself for that particular week as nothing else could. Do please therefore resume your diary if you can.

This has been a sad week. Bombay has so weighed me down that I am in a most melancholy mood. If I had to live in Bombay for one year, I would die. I am glad just now you are not with me. I go about barefoot. There is hardly a road clean enough to make you feel safe about your tread. This has not got on my nerves so much hitherto because I have not had the opportunity of walking much. And the closets! I know you would vomit eternally if you merely looked at them. Now what is the duty of a reformer in this position? Can the city life be mended? If not, can he by working in a city perpetuate the life? Suppose he succeeded in getting clean roads and clean closets, not by any means an easy task, what will he have gained? How is he to deal with the filth within? How will he regulate the morality of the people? These are awful questions and I have to answer them, you have to answer them.

The enclosed is a partial or complete answer. Read it carefully and criticize freely and fully.¹ I will send you more copies later. I have a limited number by me here.

The life at Ahmedabad is good. There you would be perfectly at home. The boys are making progress. Only Mrs. Gandhi causes

¹ From the contents
² The enclosure probably was a copy of the draft constitution for the Satyagrah ashram; vide “Draft Constitution for the Ashram”, Before 20-5-1915.
trouble sometimes by her temper and sometimes by her sickness. You have known her in all her temperaments. So I do not need to describe her to you.

Andrews had a severe attack of cholera. He has survived it. He will take care of his health.

I can understand your liking for carpentry. You can be at home with your tools if you have full time given to you for your work. I envy you your occupation it would be perfect if only you could add some studies. Will you? Do please.

With love,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

19. LETTER TO J. B. PETIT

AHMEDABAD,

June [16]\(^1\), 1915

DEAR MR. PETIT,

I beg to submit herewith an account of the income and expenditure as up to the 31st January 1915 in connection with the passive resistance movement in South Africa.

Publication of the account has been delayed beyond my desire and expectation. It was Mr. Gokhale’s intention that the accounts should be published along with a statement about the disposal of the balance in hand. As he was the prime mover in India and remained in closest touch with the movement to the end, I never did anything without consultation with him, and through him with your Committee. It was his intention that before the accounts were finally published, I should confer with your Committee. The cruel hand of Death having removed him from us, the matter of publication has been further delayed, and it is only now that it has become possible to submit the accounts to the public.

\(^1\) This was sent to the addressee, Jehangir Bomanji Petit, who was Secretary of the South African Indian Fund, as a draft. It was eventually printed and made public on October 31, 1915, with additions and alterations indicated in footnotes.

\(^2\) Vide “Diary for 1915”.
The income includes not only the monies received through you but includes also those received from Madras, Rangoon, London and various parts of Africa, Passive Resistance School, etc. Thus, of the £27,324.0.7, £8,424.0.7 were monies other than those received through you.

As to expenditure, there are some items which require explanation. Relief which takes up nearly £3,000/- means assistance given to Passive Resisters or their families, and it is a recurring item. There are widows of Passive Resisters who died during the struggle without leaving anything for those left behind them. There are children of Passive Resisters and Passive Resisters themselves who require support. Farm upkeep and improvements mean expenses in connection with the Phoenix Settlement which became the Passive Resistance Farm after the transference to Phoenix of Passive Resisters from Tolstoy Farm belonging to Mr. Kallenbach. Phoenix Settlement consists of 100 acres of land originally bought by me for locating the printing works of Indian Opinion. Though the legal title vested in me for some years, I never made personal use of the property. During the struggle, however, I divested myself of the legal title and it is now held by Trustees for public purposes defined in a registered Trust deed. This property is still being used for housing Passive Resisters or their families. Settlers who are living on the land receive no wages but take out of the income from Indian Opinion, and other sources just enough for their maintenance. The journal has never been and can never become an entirely self-supporting proposition. The English portion of it is mainly of an educative character for the European public amongst whom it is distributed gratis. It was a powerful weapon in the armoury of Passive Resistance and continues to be the only recorder of accurately sifted facts about our countrymen in South Africa and of Passive Resistance movement. It is in no sense a commercial enterprise. This settlement will still need assistance.

The third item is Valiama Hall. This is an institution founded in the memory of the late Valiama, a girl of 17 who died shortly after her discharge from prison of fever contracted therein. Its use will be

1 The published letter here adds: “For these, disbursements will still have to be made.”

2 The two sentences that follow are omitted in the published letter.

3 In the published letter, this sentence reads: “It is to this settlement that assistance has been given to the extent mentioned in the account.”
chiefly educational. The Tamil portion of our countrymen have suffered most. Johannesburg is one of the largest Indian centres. It gave the largest number of Passive Resisters, and the Tamils were the foremost among them. The late sister belonged to Johannesburg. No better use of the Passive Resistance funds could be conceived than to have a permanent hall in Johannesburg for the public needs of the community. The institution will be registered in the name of Messrs Kachalia, the Chairman of the British Indian Association, Thambi Naidoo and Polak for the purposes mentioned above. This will cost probably £4,000. I hope that this disposal of the funds will commend itself to your Committee as being strictly in accordance with the purposes for which the monies were sent to South Africa, namely, relief of Passive Resisters and furtherance of the struggle. The available balance should, in my opinion, remain as it has done, in the names of Messrs A. H. West and Manganlal K. Gandhi as a trust with instructions to utilize the funds from time to time for furtherance of measures being adopted to secure just administration of local laws and the removal of the remaining disabilities and for relief of Passive Resisters, if further relief than what I have already adverted to is necessary. Co-operation of Messrs Cachalia, Parsee Rustomjee and other Passive Resisters is sought whenever extraordinary expenditure has to be incurred.¹

Whilst the actual courting of imprisonment has ceased, the struggle for removal of the remaining disabilities itself has by no means ceased and this brings me to a brief statement of its results.² In its last stages, nearly 25,000 Indians actively participated in it, that is, one sixth of the total Indian population in South Africa. The balance of the community practically but with few exceptions supported the struggle whether by contributions in cash or in kind or by holding meetings in support, etc. It began in the Transvaal with the passing of

¹ In the published letter, this paragraph is replaced by the following:

“Bulk of the unexpended balance, viz., Rs. 215,000 has been cabled to me from Durban. In accordance with the desire of your Committee, I have handed this sum to you. In my opinion, the saving of such a large sum shows that utmost economy has been used in handling the funds.

It is perhaps necessary at this stage to give in its briefest outline an account of the struggle to the maintenance of which the mother country contributed so generously.”

² In the published letter, this sentence reads: “Whilst the actual courting of imprisonment has ceased, the struggle itself has by no means ended.”

³ These two words are omitted in the published letter.
the now famous Asiatic Registration Bill in the year 1906, but as year after year the struggle rolled on with temporary settlements, it included many other things besides the Asiatic Registration Act, and covered the whole of South Africa till at the time of the settlement the points in Passive Resistance were as follows:¹

1. Repeal of the Asiatic Act.
2. Removal of the racial or colour disqualification as to immigration from the Union legislation.
3. Removal of the legal disabilities of Indian wives.
4. Removal of the annual Poll Tax of £3, which was payable by ex-indentured Indians, their wives and grown-up children.
5. Just administration of existing laws with due regard to vested rights.

All these points are covered by the settlement of the last year which are considered² to be a complete vindication of Passive Resistance and I venture to state that if more has not been gained, more was not and could not be asked³ for as an item in Passive Resistance, for a Passive Resister has to frame his minimum as well as his maximum and he dare not ask for more nor can he be satisfied with less.

But I do not wish to be understood to mean that nothing further remains to be done in South Africa, or that everything has been gained. We have only fought for removal of legal disabilities as to immigration, but administratively it tells more heavily upon us than other nations. In accepting administrative inequality, we have given due regard to existing conditions and prejudices.⁴ We fought to keep the theory of the British Constitution intact so that practice may some day approach the theory as near as possible. There are still certain laws in South Africa, for instance, the Law 3 of 1885, Trade Licence Laws of the Cape and Natal which continue to cause worry.

¹ In the published letter, this sentence reads: “... and covered the whole of South Africa. At the time of the settlement, the points of Passive Resistance were as follows:”
² The published letter has “I consider” instead of “are considered”.
³ In the published letter, this portion of the sentence reads: “... more was not—could not be—asked...”
⁴ In the published letter, these two sentences are replaced by the following:
“We have only fought for removal of legal disabilities as to immigration but administratively we have taken note of existing conditions and prejudices.”
Administration of the Immigration Law is not all it should be. For these, however, Passive Resistance [is not] applied and is at present inapplicable, its application being confined to grievances which are generally felt in a community and are known to hurt its self-respect or conscience. Any of our\(^1\) grievances referred to by me may any day advance to that stage. Till then only the ordinary remedies of petition, etc., can be and are at present being applied\(^2\). Letters received from South Africa show that difficulties are being experienced in some cases acutely by our countrymen and if not much has been heard of them in India just now, it is because of the extraordinary self-restraint of our countrymen in South Africa during the crisis that has overtaken the Empire.

This struggle has defined principles and removed disabilities which were in the shape of a national insult. The larger question of the treatment of British Indians who came there\(^3\) from outside can only be dealt with here\(^4\) and for the question of the local disabilities still unredressed, your Committee will have to exercise a ceaseless watch and assist as heretofore the efforts of our countrymen in South Africa.

I feel that I ought to place on record my strong conviction, based upon close personal observation extending over a period of twenty years, that the system of indentured emigration is an evil which cannot be mended but can only be ended. No matter how humane the employers may be, it does not lend itself to the moral well-being of the men affected by it. I therefore feel that your Committee should lose no time in approaching the Government of India with a view to securing entire abolition of the system for every part of the Empire.

Before closing, I am bound to mention that the struggle would not have ended so soon and even as satisfactorily as it did, but for the generous support rendered by the Motherland under the leadership of the great and saintly patriot whose death we all mourn and but for the very sympathetic and firm attitude taken by the noble man who at present occupies the Viceregal chair.

M. K. Gandhi’s South African Indian Passive Resistance Fund Accounts

---

1. The published letter has “the” instead of “our”.
2. The published letter has “adopted”.
3. This word is deleted in the published letter.
4. In the published letter, the sentence ends here and “and” is omitted.
5. Taken from the published letter.
AS UP TO JANUARY 31, 1915

EXPENDITURE

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Description</th>
<th>£</th>
<th>s</th>
<th>d</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Debit balance April 6, 1912 as per statement</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>rendered to Mr. Ratan Tata</td>
<td>43</td>
<td>1</td>
<td>3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Relief</td>
<td>2,868</td>
<td>10</td>
<td>1</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Legal expenses</td>
<td>235</td>
<td>2</td>
<td>9</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Telegrams and cables</td>
<td>705</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bank commission</td>
<td>117</td>
<td>4</td>
<td>6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Printing &amp; stationery</td>
<td>169</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Travelling</td>
<td>2,258</td>
<td>19</td>
<td>3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Johannesburg office</td>
<td>1,070</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Medical expenses</td>
<td>92</td>
<td>9</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stamps</td>
<td>20</td>
<td>19</td>
<td>3</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Railage and cartage</td>
<td>118</td>
<td>12</td>
<td>7</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maritzburg committee</td>
<td>125</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Farm upkeep &amp; improvement (expended)</td>
<td>976</td>
<td>19</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>—do— (unexpended)</td>
<td>2,023</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Newspapers</td>
<td>94</td>
<td>19</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Reporting commission sittings</td>
<td>183</td>
<td>10</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Durban office</td>
<td>1,068</td>
<td>11</td>
<td>2</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Commissariat</td>
<td>540</td>
<td>16</td>
<td>11</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Funeral expenses Passive Resisters</td>
<td>67</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>8</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Salaries</td>
<td>197</td>
<td>15</td>
<td>6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Valiama Hall (expended)</td>
<td>877</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>—do— (unexpended)</td>
<td>3,123</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>London Deputation</td>
<td>400</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>London Committee</td>
<td>240</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sundries</td>
<td>4</td>
<td>13</td>
<td>0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Grand Total</td>
<td>11600</td>
<td>16</td>
<td>10</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Balance in hand</td>
<td>15723</td>
<td>3</td>
<td>9</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>27324</td>
<td>0</td>
<td>7</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

1. In the published letter, income and expenditure are shown in parallel columns.
2. These entries have been omitted in the published letter.
3. The published letter has the following entries here:
Allocations to Valiama Hall, Passive Resistance Relief and furtherance [of] struggle including support to Phoenix Settlement 3 000 0 0
Allocation to Passive Resistance Relief 2 400 0 0
Balance in hand 4,300 2 11
23,023 17 8
£ 27,324 0 7

INCOME
Funds acknowledged in I.O. 1,054 17 6
Bombay 18,901 6 8
Madras 4,035 0 0
Rangoon 2,136 0 6
Nairobi 150 0 0
Zanzibar 33 6 8
London 386 11 10
Farm School fees refund 491 10 7
Goods sold 67 13 10
Johannesburg 64 17 0
Durban office refund 1 1 0
Travelling refund 1 15 0
£ 27,324 0 7

From a photostat of the handwritten draft with corrections in Gandhiji’s hand:
S.N. 6211; published letter: G.N. 8224

20. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

[June 19, 1915]¹

CHI. NARANDAS,

Chi. Shamaldas writes from Porbunder to say that Ba’s copy of the Ramayana, with Gujarati commentary, is lying there at Rajkot. If you come across it, bring it along, as also any Tamil books by Pope I may have lent to Jamnadas. Think over what I have written² to ¹ The subsequent entries under expenditure are omitted in the published letter.

² From the postmark
² This letter is not available.
respected Khushalbhai concerning you. If you have unshaken faith in the Ashram, take the plunge.

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

CHI. NARANDAS KHUSHALCHAND GANDHI
OPPOSITE MIDDLE SCHOOL PARA
RAJKOT

From the original post card in Gujarati in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5676.
Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

21. LETTER TO KHUSHALCHAND GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,

Jeth Sud 11 [June 23, 1915]¹

MU. BHAISHRI KHUSHALJIIVAN GANDHI.

For some time, I have been thinking about Chi. Narandas. That ultimately he is to live with me is his own desire as also yours and mine. My only purpose in employing Narandas in a job is that thereby he should earn something and contribute to your expenses. I feel that you should fix the figure of your needs, and that I should meet them and that you should then free Narandas. The Ashram needs one or two persons. If Narandas comes, the need will be met. I am looking for someone whom I can engage as a paid assistant. Why should I then not give the opportunity to Narandas? Maganlal and Manilal are kept fully occupied with the teaching of Sanskrit and they are quite engrossed in it. This being so, we are short of teachers. On myself also, I have placed an excessive burden, with the result that I have to leave undone some other things which require my attention.
Hence, if Narandas joins me, I will be saved from many difficulties.

Please do not think of the matter from a purely worldly point of view. Consider only what is good for Narandas and for us all in coming to a decision.

Since Narandas also will read this letter, I am not writing to him

¹ From the reference to Narandas, it appears that this letter was written before the one to the addressee dated September 24, 1915. Jeth Sud 11 in the year 1915 corresponded to June 23.
MY DEAR FRIEND,

Your letters, last two, have been brief and contained a trace of bitterness. The bitterness was due to the brevity of my letters. But if you knew the rush under which I have been living you would not have grumbled. You might have imagined that during that time the letters to you were the only writing work that I probably did. I hope however that your next letter will be less gloomy.

Your overlooking the diary is a fatal omission. The omission too is partly due, I fear, to anger. But it is again a fall. Do please resume the diary.

I am having extraordinary difficulties. I do not know that what they mean. I can only hope that they will chasten us all. The difficulties arise from our strangely simple life. The people around us do not understand us. There is one man who strikes and swears at the boys and prevents them even from using water we are entitled to. Things are getting better somewhat. But new situations give rise to new difficulties. This is the life. To rise at 5 a.m. Worship 6 a.m. Fruit breakfast (meagre) at 6.30 a.m. Manual work 7 to 8.30 a.m. School 8.30 to 10 a.m. Meal 10 to 12. School 12 to 3. Manual work 3 to 5. Meal 5 to 6.30 p.m. Worship 6.30 to 7 p.m. Sanskrit class for the grown-up ones between 7 and 9 p.m. There are 5 new admissions. We are in all 32 at the present moment. Maganlal, Maganbhai and Manilal are the real helpers.

Mrs. Gandhi’s health and her temper cause worry. My brother’s wives have proved obdurate. They have withdrawn their sons from my care.

Harilal is growing in impertinence. I am, may be, doing an injustice to the young man. But such is the impression created on my Mind by his letters. He ever succeeds in doing the wrong thing at the wrong moment.

\(^1\)From the contents

With love,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

23. LETTER TO GENERAL TRAFFIC MANAGER,
G. I. P. RAILWAY

[AHMEDABAD,
June 28, 1915]¹

THE GENERAL TRAFFIC MANAGER
G. I. P. RAILWAY
BOMBAY

SIR,

I travelled on the 27th instant from Poona to Bombay on 3rd class return ticket, taking the 16.45 train last Saturday from Kirkee. As my ticket was only as far as Dadar and as I wished to go as far as Victoria Terminus, I informed an official that I was travelling beyond my destination. I attempted to give the information at Dadar but succeeded in giving it only at Parel. The official, who I subsequently learnt was a brakesman, told me to inform the bada² Guard. I could not do so as he was in a far-off compartment. At Masjid the authorities collected from me the fare from Dadar and the usual penalty, notwithstanding my protest. They ascertained too from the brakesman that I had duly informed him. The authorities at Masjid said that in order to enable them to exempt me from the penalty, I should produce a certificate from the Guard or the Station Master. You will see that I could not procure the certificate without the risk of missing the train. I asked for the certificate from the only official whom I could safely approach. And he would not grant one. I bring this incident to your notice as I have often observed that 3rd class passengers are often punished without any fault of their own. I shall be obliged if you will kindly inquire into this matter. In my opinion, either Station Masters should be instructed not to charge penalties when information has been given about over-travelling to any railway official of the company or strict instructions should be given as to prompt issue of certificates by the officials concerned. If it was not competent for the brakesman to issue the certificate, was it not his duty to immediately inform the Guard that a passenger was over-travelling and that he had applied for the usual certificate?

¹ From the addressee’s reply
² Superior

I enclose herewith the receipt for this fare and the penalty.¹

I have the honour to be,

Sir,

Your obedient servant

From a photostat of the draft in Gandhiji’s hand: S.N. 6200

24. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

AHMEDABAD,

July 2 [1915]²

MY DEAR FRIEND,

Your letters are getting provokingly brief week after week. Do not give me up like that. You fret that I do not write at length. But imagine a person travelling almost continuously in a crowded 3rd-class compartment and being besieged by visitors immediately on landing. What is one to say in such circumstances? I did not during my travels get a moment to myself. And now too it is continuous work. But I can now attend to some of my correspondence.

Dr. Mehta asks me whether I am going to try for your entry here. It is an impossibility. Things are becoming stricter and there seems to be no way out of the difficulty. At the same time I am going to make a desperate effort when I meet the Viceroy in the natural course.

¹ In his reply dated July 18, the Acting Deputy Traffic Manager (Commercial) said: “From enquiries made, I find that you did not intimate at Dadar your intention to ride on to V. Terminus, and since you had already ridden as far as Parel before any intimation was given to the train staff, you were correctly encessed, and I cannot grant you any relief.”

² From the contents
The medal has worried me. It was announced without consultation. To refuse a medal would have been churlish. I therefore said nothing about it. I wrote a note to the Viceroy when at length a formal letter conferring the medal came to me. It is not considered the same as a title. It was presented last week at a Government at-home.

Mrs. Gandhi is lying in bed causing some anxiety. She is under the treatment of an Indian physician. She has lost faith in my treatment. She has become a most difficult patient.

I am receiving much criticism on the scheme. I may some day be able to send you copies of some of it. Here as you may imagine, I have no copying assistance.

I am myself keeping fairly well. Somehow or other I cannot regain my original vigour.

My food just now is only nuts and dried figs or dates and lemons. We are badly off for fruit in this place.

Yours sincerely,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

25. FRAGMENT OF LETTER TO MANILAL GANDHI

[After July 7, 1915]

[CHI. MANILAL,]

. . . I shall make some arrangement for your Tamil. It seems desirable that you get hardened a bit as a result of the difficult situation in which you find yourself, provided, of course, you go through the process intelligently. Let me know when you run short of funds. Keep writing to me. Don’t lose heart in any way. Keep in mind

1 On June 26 at Poona
2 Vaidya Jatashanker
3 The first page of this letter is missing.
4 The addressee went to Madras on July 7, 1915.
5 Second son of Gandhiji
what the poor do and bear yourself accordingly.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C W. 99. Courtesy: Sushilabehn Gandhi

26. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

AHMEDABAD,
July 9 [1915]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I must say I feel nothing about your being interned. It was to come. You have a rare opportunity for disciplining yourself and of affecting your neighbours. You will have plenty of time to think. This prolongation may mean more prolonged separation between us. But we shall learn to live together more intimately even though we may be separated bodily. In thousand and one things I miss you. In some experiences I feel glad you are not with me. In fullness of time, when we meet, we shall [have] grown, let us hope, better and better able to reach our common goal.

The life here has become most regular and nobody has leisure for idle talk. Boys who wanted to have their ambition fulfilled, I do not encroach upon their time for study. They appreciate this very much.

My diet just now consists of soaked figs, monkey-nuts and lemons. This is a somewhat trying place for cheap fruit. Those who were saltless remain so here also and some now and then become fruitarians for a week or so.

All are learning Hindi, Sanskrit, Tamil, Gujarati and Arithmetic. They have 4 hours of study, apart from their morning study.

How about your cabinet-making? This ought not to be interrupted. But I shall know more from week to week.

Yours,
OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

1 From the contents

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
27. SPEECH AT BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE,
POONA

July 11, 1915

MR. PRESIDENT, BROTHERS AND SISTERS,

Perhaps, it is impudent on my part to add anything to the feeling words that have been spoken by Mrs. Ranade. The fact that she is the widow of the master’s master adds solemnity to the proceedings, which I can only mar by any remarks I may make. But, claiming as I do to be one of Mr. Gokhale’s disciples, you will forgive me if I say a few words which are personal titbits.

It was on board the Cronprinz some years ago,² that I found myself in the master’s company together with a common friend, Mr. Kallenbach³, a German. Let me say that all Germans are not fiends, nor are all German soldiers Friend.⁴ Mr. Kallenbach is a German and a soldier, but I feel that no purer-minded person to-day walks the earth in Europe than Mr. Kallenbach. He was accepted as a worthy companion by Mr. Gokhale, who used to play with him the game of quoits. Mr. Gokhale had just then, during the voyage from England to Cape Town, picked up that game, and he very nearly gave Mr. Kallenbach a beating in the game. I fancy that was a drawn game between them, and, let me add, Mr. Kallenbach, so far as I am aware, is one of the cleverest players of quoits in South Africa. Just after that we had our meals at which Mr. Gokhale was talking to me with reference to the result of the game. He thought I never indulged in such sports and that I was against them. He expostulated with me in kind words and said, “Do you know why I want to enter into such competition with Europeans? I certainly want to do at least as much as ¹ While seconding the following resolution moved by Mrs. Ramabai Ranade: “The Conference places on record its sense of, profound grief at the irreparable loss the country and the Empire have sustained in the untimely and the universally mourned death of the late Mr. Gopal Krishna Gokhale, than whom no more self-sacrificing and devoted patriot and no more far-sighted statesman ever consecrated his life in the cause of his country.”

² In 1912

³ Gandhiji’s co-worker in South Africa, who had placed at the disposal of the satyagrahis the Tolstoy Farm; Vide “Letter to H. Kallenbach”, 30-5-1910.

⁴ During the First World War, Britain and, with her, India considered Germany as an enemy country.
they can do for the sake of our country. It is said, rightly or wrongly, that we are an inferior people in many matters, and so far as I can do it”—and this he said in all humility—“I certainly want to show that we are at least their equals, if not their superiors.”

That was one incident. On board the same steamer, we were engaged in a hot discussion in connection with our dear motherland, and he was mapping out for me, as a father would for his child, a programme that I was to follow in India if I ever happened to see the motherland again, and, in connection therewith, there was one thing he said: “We lack in India character; we want religious zeal in the political field.” Shall we then follow the spirit of the master with the same thoroughness and the same religious zeal, so that we can safely teach a child politics? One of his missions in life, I think, was to inculcate the lesson that whatever we do, we should do with thoroughness. This it is not possible for us mortals to imitate in any degree of perfection. Whatever he did, he did with a religious zeal; that was the secret of his success. He did not wear his religion on his sleeve; he lived it. Whatever he touched, he purified; wherever he went, he recreated an atmosphere around him which was fragrant. When he came to South Africa, he electrified the people there not only by his magnificent eloquence but by the sincerity of his character and by the religious devotion with which he worked. What was that devotion? Ailing though he was, he was awake the whole night practically when he was to have seen General Smuts; he did so in order to prepare the case for his countrymen with a thoroughness that surprised the leader of the Boer Government. What was the result? The result was that he got the promise from the South African Government that the £3 tax would be gone in a few years, and the £3 tax is no more. It is no more there to grind down so many thousands of our countrymen. Mr. Gokhale is dead, but it is possible for you and for me to make his spirit live in us and through us. (“Hear, hear.”) We are about to pass resolutions which would expect us, the chosen representatives, or, it may be, the self-elected representatives of the people to do certain things. Shall we discharge our trust with the master’s devotion? The people we represent will base their verdict not upon our speeches but upon our actions, and how shall we act? We have a right to pass this resolution if we act in the spirit of the master. With these words, I have much pleasure in seconding this resolution.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
28. LETTER TO SUNDARAM

MY DEAR SUNDARAM,

I was delighted to receive your letter. Do please come whenever you wish to. I have certainly not given you up entirely, whilst you are in Madras, you should help Manilal with his Tamil and find out for him a Tamil companion when you are away. We sing Mutti Nerē everyday without fail. Devdas\(^1\) has made fair progress in Tamil.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 3188

29. LETTER TO MANILAL GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,

Ashadh Sud 3 [July 15, 1915]\(^2\)

CHI. MANILAL,

I have your letter. I won’t let you be thrown on the streets; do not lose heart. I don’t like that you should feel helpless, even when dealing with me. You had better put up with your present difficulties. There are mosquitoes everywhere in Madras. You should sleep covered with a thin sheet. If you rub some kerosene on the face, mosquitoes will keep away. I hope you sleep in the open. If not, do so. Take a room in the neighbourhood, provided it is [airy] like a maidan.

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 112. Courtesy: Sushilabehn Gandhi

---

\(^1\) This appears to have been written after Manilal Gandhi went to Madras on July 7, 1915

\(^2\) In the original, Gandhiji has written in Tamil script these first two words of Tamil devotional song by Manikkavachagar.

\(^3\) Youngest son of Gandhiji

\(^4\) The letter is incomplete.

\(^5\) The addressee went to Madras on July 7, 1915.
30. LETTER TO V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI

AHMEDABAD,
July 16 [1915]

DEAR MR. SHASTRIAR,

Herewith copy of Mr. Andrews’ letter⁠ for your perusal. I think that the Society³ can inaugurate a big movement for seeking total prohibition⁴.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

Are you trying to secure me a Tamil teacher?

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 6293

31. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

AHMEDABAD,
July 16 [1915]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

There is no letter from you for this week.

There is a pencil letter from you complaining of want of news from me. Events have moved with me so swiftly that I did not know what to say and what to omit. Names of men and places I omitted as I could not give you the history of men and geography of places I visited. Bolpur I left as it never was the intention to settle down there. The boys’ services were required in the nursing department at a fair in a holy place and they left. They then went to Gurukul whilst I was touring through Madras. After finishing Madras I took up quarters at Ahmedabad and sent for the company. At Madras the two friends who interested themselves in the scheme are lawyers of note. But so many have interested themselves in it. Few are willing to adopt it themselves.

¹ From C. F. Andrews’ reference to his illness in the letter to which this is a reply, this correspondence seems to have taken place in 1915.
² Written to Gandhiji on July 11 from Simla where Andrews was convalescing. The letter is not reproduced here.
³ The Servants of India Society
⁴ Of recruitment of indentured labour in India
However I feel that it is the right thing. There is something noble in a 7-year-old lad thinking he is working for his meal and he is studying for his country. There is something great if a boy of seven does not look forward to leaving the place when he is learning and altering his life. After a number of years whether many will do this or not is not the question. What is of importance is that some are making a serious attempt to live such a life. There was a verse we read at the morning prayer today. ‘Pain and pleasure, happiness and misery are without doubt results of some previous causes set in motion by ourselves.’ This thought gives us the faculty for bearing pains without fear or anxiety. If we add to this the thought that what passes as a misery may not be misery at all but divine discipline. If a man about to commit a heinous crime is prevented by snake-bite from fulfilling his purpose, the bite was surely a blessing for him. Our analysis of events is often faulty. The remedy therefore lies in trying to remain unaffected by outward circumstances.

With love,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

32. LETTER TO KHUSHALCHAND GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,
Ashadha Sud 5 [July 16, 1915]

MU. KHUSHAL JIVAN.

I got your letter. After returning from Poona, I was about to write to you when I got yours. I am fully convinced that it will be for Narandas’s good in every way if he joins me. And he wishes so, too. I do think that he will not get anywhere else the opportunities he will get here of building up his character. The others agree to his joining. You need not at all fear that Narandas and others may have to starve here. As for your needs, you may depend upon their being met with 1 This sentence is left incomplete in the original.

2 From the reference to Gandhiji receiving the addressee’s letter after “returning from Poona”. Gandhiji was in Poona from July 10 to 12, 1915, and returned to Ahmedabad on the 14th. In 1915, Ashadha Sud 5 corresponded to July 16.
such unfailing regularity as pension for Government service is paid. It has been my experience on numerous occasions that any work embarked upon in a spirit of selflessness succeeds under all circumstances. It may not happen in our lifetime, but I believe that the step you have taken will greatly benefit the family in future. Whether or not it does, will depend upon the character of the four brothers and upon how long they live. I have no doubt on either point. The four brothers complement one another. I believe I will not be disappointed in my faith in Jamnadas. The other two, I have trained with the hardest tasks and Narandas has given me the impression of being quite mature in his character. With God’s grace, the country will see what the four brothers can do.

Respectful prostration by

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33106

33. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

AHMEDABAD,
July 22, [1915]¹

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter, also the cable sent by Mr. Turner to whom I am writing. I do not know that you expected any cable in reply.

My heart is with you. I have unpacked our goods and as a perpetual reminder I am using your favourite wooden pillow which you will recall you did not want to leave behind. In trying to reduce things to order, I ever think of you, I ever miss you. As it is, I am simply preparing the house as if I wanted to receive you. That is, you are positively with me when I am cleaning up the compound and the closets. I ask myself whether you would approve of my work and the method of cleaning. Your suggestions and your nose I miss so much.

But for better or for worse we must live for some time in physical separation. Only we must so act that we should be nearer in spirit if we have to put up with this enforced physical separation. Your internment has brought you nearer to me, if it is possible for you to be nearer than you were.

¹ Chhaganlal, Maganlal, Narandas and Jamnadas

Your life there must be a model for the others. How I would love to think that you are there vindicating your German birth, your ancestral faith and our joint ideals. You vindicate the first two if you realize the third. And I know you will not fail.

I shall expect from you a full description of the life there.

I hope you will allow anything there to irritate you and that you will act with the greatest calmness of mind and sufficient detachment.

Life here is growing sweeter I think. It is difficult but worth trying. More and more order is being evolved. Narandas, Maganlal’s brother, is also coming to us. That means that all the boys of this particular cousin of mine are to devote themselves to this kind of life. It is wonderful sacrifice. Narandas you will love when you see him. There is something so good about all the Chhaganlal brothers. My brother’s boys and their wives have disappointed me completely and so has my sister¹. This is strange. And yet not quite so strange. Harilal is more and more going away from me. What was before hard for him to follow is now not even worth following. He has come to the conclusion that there is nothing good in the institution. Such is the might of inertia.

I have unpacked all your books. They are somewhat damaged. I shall take care of what has been spared.

Yours,
OLD FRIEND

¹ Gandhiji’s elder sister, Raliatbehn, also known as Gokibehn.
34. LETTER TO CHHOTALAL TEJPAL

[AHMEDABAD.]
Ashadh Sud 11 [July 22, 1915?]¹

BHAISHRI CHHOTALAL,

I got your letter, but could not attend to it for want of time. Please forgive me.

The cause of your hardship is not the Customs Department. It originated with the Police Department. It is possible to file a suit against the police, but I don’t advise that. I think it will be better, for the present, to write to the Police Department. It will be advisable to have this done through some lawyer friend of yours there. You can also do it yourself. If you make a brief, factual statement in Gujarati, that will serve your purpose all right. That will be the basis.

It is necessary to leave the papers about Viramgam with me for the time being. I don’t propose to drop the matter.

Vandemataram from Mohanadas

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 2591

35. LETTER TO V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI

AHMEDABAD,
July 23, 1915

DEAR MR. SHASTRIAR²,

I hope you will succeed soon in getting me a Tamil teacher. I do not think holding meetings is necessary. But briefest representations shall go to the Viceroy from all the public bodies. These should be duly advertised in the press and there should certainly be vigorous newspaper agitation. The impending publication of my letter to the press regarding the S. A. accounts³ may be seized as a proper ¹ From the reference to the Viramgam papers, the letter could have been written either on July 22, 1915 or July 11, 1916 or July 1, 1917. On July 1, 1917, Gandhiji was in Motihari. We do not know where he was on July 11, 1916. He was in Ahmedabad on July 22, 1915.

² President, Servants of India Society

³ Vide “Letter to J.B. Petit”, 16-6-1915. opportunity for starting the campaign.

I hope Mrs. Shastriar is now free from her disease.

I am,

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a copy: C.W. 11331. Courtesy: T. N. Jagadisan

36. FRAGMENT OF LETTER TO
MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

AHMEDABAD,
Ashadh Sud 15, July 26, 1915

... The subject of physical contact [whether it is rightly prohibited] is a large one. I think we are committing a great sin in treating a whole class of people as untouchables and it is owing to the existence of this class that we have still some revolting practices among us. Not to eat in company with a particular person and not to touch him are two very different things. No one is an untouchable now. If we don’t mind contact with a Christian or a Muslim, why should we mind it with one belonging to our own religion? No defence of untouchability is possible now, either from the point of view of justice or that of practical common sense.

[From Gujarati]

Bapuni Prasadi

37. FRAGMENT OF LETTER TO
MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

July 26, 1915

... Your reading for M.A. seems to me, personally, so much unnecessary drain on your health. If you don’t need to work for a living, study Sanskrit and learn other Indian languages; this is necessary.

[From Gujarati]

Bapuni Prasadi
38. LETTER TO B. G. TILAK

AHMEDABAD,

July 27 [1915]

DEAR MR. TILAK,

I have your note. I have not given anyone any authority to use my name in connection with the interviews I had with you. I have not even read the things you are referring to. The conversations between us were private and must remain so. The draft sent by you hardly does justice to the interview. I never said that I spoke for the Congress party or with its authority. I simply came as a friend and admirer and for friends. I did not know what view the Congress party would take. I simply put a tentative proposal before you.

I hope you will respect my wish not to be drawn in a newspaper controversy and that you will in no case publish the interview.

I am,

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a facsimile of the original in Gandhiji’s hand published in Mahatma, Vol. I

39. LETTER TO CHHOTALAL TEJPAL

[AHMEDABAD,]

Ashadh Vad 5 [July 31, 1915]

The following is found in the issue of February 2, 1910 of The Times [of India]:

We could wish that His Excellency’s visit had synchronised with the removal of the Viramgam customs line, which is a blot upon the administration of India and very imperfectly serves the purpose for which it was designed.

1 This letter appears to have been written in 1915, for Gandhi had two interviews with Tilak on July 11 at Poona.

2 From the postmark
Please excuse me for the delay in searching this out.

Mohandas Karamchand
Shri Chhotalal Tejpal
Ramchandra Mansion
Sandhurst Road
Girgaum
Bombay

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N 2586

40. LETTER TO V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI

Ahmedabad,
August 1 [1915?]¹

DEAR MR. SHASTRIAR,

This will be presented to you by Mr. Raghavendra who is desirous of joining the Society in any capacity in which he may be found fit. He seems to have had a varied experience. I have known him for some time as a correspondent.

I am,

Yours sincerely,

M. K. Gandhi

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 6290

41. LETTER TO A. H. WEST

Ahmedabad,
August 3, 1915

MY DEAR WEST,

This is for you and Chhaganlal herewith Passive Resistance Fund a/c with my covering letter which speaks for itself. You may publish the a/c here. You will see some items allocated in anticipation. £2,023 have been allocated to the improvements there. This enables you to develop agriculture and keep the ground in such order as toenable

¹ This appears to have been written during the early years of Gandhiji’s stay in India after his return from South Africa. In 1917, 1918 and 1919, he was not in Ahmedabad on this date. We do not know whether he was in Ahmedabad on August 1, 1916 but we know that he was there in 1915 on this date.

² Vide “Letter to J. B. Petit”, 16-6-1915.
you to cope with emergency, it being understood that the property is open to receive more Passive Resisters than there at present. Of course you will not expend this amount if it is not required.

Allocation of £3,000 to Phoenix settlement includes assistance to Indian Opinion. This enables you to report cases of hardship and to help such cases also. You may even open a branch office in Durban and collect information about hard cases of immigrants and give them free help, you can engage men for reporting cases, etc. The expense will be justified only as far as you use the paper to attend [to] local relief. Allocation to passive resistance relief means relief given both here and there. I am supporting the widows, etc., you have there your cases in Phoenix and elsewhere. I have made a rough calculation.

For Valliama Hall up to £4,000 may be expended.

It is possible that there will be some talk about the Phoenix allocations. But I could not do otherwise than to deal with the whole matter as I have done. Your work if it is fruitful of results will silence cold criticism in the end. If there is any further information please let me know. I am having this letter copied so that I should know the contents if you referred to it in your correspondence.

Yours sincerely,

I have read Maganlal’s letter written on my suggestion. I approve of it. Please let me have your views upon it. Should any questions arise there regarding the accounts, you should refer the questions to Mr. Petit.

From a photostat of the handwritten office copy: S.N. 6215

42. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

AHMEDABAD,
Ashad Vad 10 [August 5, 1915]\(^1\)

CHI. MATHURADAS,

Please send me two dozen copies of Kavyavinod.\(^2\).

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

\(^1\) From the postmark
\(^2\) A Sanskrit primer
43. LETTER TO B. G. TILAK

AHMEDABAD,
August 17 [1915?]¹

DEAR MR. TILAK,

Immediately on receipt of your letter last week, I duly telegraphed² as requested. I hope you got my wire in time.

I am,
Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a facsimile of the original in Gandhiji’s hand published in Mahatma, Vol. I

44. LETTER TO CHHOTALAL TEJPAL

AHMEDABAD,
Shravan Sud 8 [August 18, 1915]³

BHAISHRI CHHOTALAL,

The right time for me will be when I can work in freedom. That cannot be during this year. The root cause of all this is the same. As we are against customs levy as such, whether or no there is police tyranny, we must emphasize the inherent injustice of the system. We would oppose the customs levy even if the police were gods.

I know you have no selfish end to serve.
I did not receive Jain Hitechchhu at all. I waited for it.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 2592

¹ In the source, this letter is ascribed to the years 1915-16. We do not know where Gandhiji was on August 17, 1916. He was in Ahmedabad on August 17, 1915.
² This telegram is not available.
³ This appears to have been written after “Letter to Chhotalal Tejpal”, 31-7-1915.
45. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,

Shravan Sud 11 [August 21, 1915]

CHI. NARANDAS,

I have your letter. I think your duty is simple. You have given due notice. They want to retain you longer for their own purpose; this, they cannot do. Even during September, you should have only to go for their case, for a day or two, at their expense.

Directors are always much too greedy and look at only one side of a question. They can take into account nothing but their own interest. Now that you know my view, it is entirely for you to decide what you will do.

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5677. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

46. LETTER TO V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI

AHMEDABAD,

August 23 [1915]¹

DEAR MR. SHASTRIAR,

Here is Manilal my second son. He will tell you why he finds himself in Madras. He is to complete his training in Tamil and handloom weaving there. Kindly guide him. Hanumanthrao can try his social service training on Manilal.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 6292

¹ Manilal Gandhi was in Madras at this time.

² He had been to Madras before for this training; vide “Letter to Sundaram”, on or after 13-7-1915.
47. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM: M. K. GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,

August 23 [1915]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I have not missed more than two weeks to my knowledge. So when you do not get my letters, you will presume that the fault is not mine.

I am glad you have received all the things in good order. Have you been using the sticks? Have the biscuits kept all right? If they have, I must send you more biscuits and sticks.

Chhaganlal has been here for some time. He is going today to his parents again. He has not yet decided how he will act in India. He does not feel like joining me. Jamnadas too has gone back to Rajkot. His is a pathetic case. He is most undecided. I can weave Indian tape. The mechanical arrangement is very simple. Here it is.

It represents a bunch of strings that receives the warp. A wooden knife serves to press the woof home. A bobbin made of reed unwinds the woof. The tape is from half an inch to two inches in width. Boys are also put on to that work. Presently I shall go to more difficult work.

With love from us all,

Yours sincerely,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

---

1 From the contents
2 A reproduction of the sketch by Gandhiji appears on an art-sheet facing page 224.
48. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M.K. GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,
August 26 [1915]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. The life here is becoming more and more intense. We have now a handloom on the premises. It is calculated that it will start work tomorrow. I hope to send you the pattern we may turn out. Manilal is fully occupied in that work.

Languages occupy most of the inmates. Thus there is hardly a minute free for anybody. They have all become very studious. Poor Ramdas has always some ailment or another and I find it difficult to get him to reach his original strength. I am trying hard. The others are keeping well. Manilal is becoming stouter. Maganlal is regaining his strength. Mrs. Gandhi has become very active again. I expect a collapse any day. Such is life here. Your presence can complete the life. We sang this evening “When I survey the wondrous cross”. How nice it would have been to have had you to join! The day will come some day and the reunion will be all the sweeter for this compulsory separation.

With love,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

49. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M.K. GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,
September 9 [1915]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I want to be brief today. I have three illnesses on hand today. They are all Tamils and in each case overeating is the cause. One has a very dangerous type of fever. The patient is better but by no means quite out of the wood yet. The other is Fakiri. The third is a new man from Madras. Then we have rearrangement in the Ashram as we have a paid carpenter now working in the premises. (Here I was so exhausted that I slept off for a few minutes.) Such is work here. And it is this work I want you to share as soon as you can, i.e., as soon as you are free.

With love,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

50. LETTER TO MADHURIPRASAD

AHMEDABAD,
Bhadrapad Shukla 1 [September 10, 1915]

DEAR SHRI MADHURIPRASAD,

I have received the letter written by Totaramji and you. I am sorry I have no time at present to visit Ferozabad. The Ashram work here will not allow me to go.

Yours sincerely,

MOHANDAS GANDHI

SHRI MADHURIPRASAD
Bharatibhuvan Karyalaya
FEROZABAD

From a photostat of the Hindi original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 2764

51. LETTER TO V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI

AHMEDABAD,
September 14, 1915

DEAR SHASTRIAR,

I think that the newspaper statement should be answered at once. I am prepared to relate the conversation I had with him in Cape Town and on other occasions. It is not possible to believe the signature story until we have seen the original application itself. A mischievous attempt is being made to bolster up what am I to call it!

1 Totaram Sandhya, who had lived twenty-one years in Fiji and written a book on his life there. Later, he joined Gandhiji’s Ashram at Sabarmati.

I am in the midst of a momentous step being taken in my life. I have no time today to write about it, some of that is about the Pariah question.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 6288

52. LETTER TO VIDYAGAURI R. NILKANTH

AHMEDABAD,

_Bhadarva Sud 6, [September 15, 1915]_

DEAR SISTER,

I am grateful to you as well as to Shri Ramanbhai for the translation you have sent. What I require, however, is the meaning of the bhajan. I want to have its spirit conveyed in our language.

We do not have an expression corresponding to देशमयी ज्योति (‘Kindly Light’) एक व्यतीती अश्व (‘Hope of one step’) does not convey the same sense as in ‘one step enough for me’. It should not be difficult for us to find from among our literary works an expression parallel to Newman’s thought.

Do not charge me while giving an inch with asking for an ell. Please do not take what I have said as criticism.

_Vandemataram from_

MOHANDAS KARAM CHAND

[From Gujarati]

Vidyabehn Nilkanth Jeevan Jhanki

---

1 The reference is to the admission of an “untouchable”; _vide_ “Letter to V. S. Srinivasa Sastri,” 23-9-1915.
2 The date is evident from the contents of the letter. _Bhadarva Sud 6_ in 1915 corresponded to this date.
3 Ramanbhai Mahipatram Nilkanth, addressee’s husband
4 ‘Hope of one step’
53. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

Bhadarwa Sud 7 [September 16, 1915]

CHI. NARANDAS,

I did not write to you only because I thought that you would soon be here. To wish you a long life will avail you but little. What I wish you is self-realization during this very life. You have my blessings and my help in your efforts to that end.

You will arrive here at a difficult time. It is for a time like this that I desired your presence. I believe you will not be discouraged by reports of the trouble. Worries from the side of one’s wife may be overcome only with gentle firmness. A husband or a wife has no right to obstruct the other in pursuit of a worthy aim. In the situation which has arisen, I indeed suffer outwardly but experience boundless inward happiness. I feel that it is only now that my life in India has started.

Blessings from
MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5678. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

54. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M.K. GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,

September 17, 1915

MY DEAR FRIEND,

Greater work than passive resistance has commenced. I have taken in the Ashram a Pariah1 from these parts. This is an extreme step. It caused a breach between Mrs. Gandhi and myself. I lost my temper. She tried it too much. She is not now allowed to take part in the kitchen. Navin has left the Ashram on the account. Many further developments will take place and I may become a deserted man. This tries the resources of the Ashram to an enormous extent. In spite of it all I am happy but a man without any leisure. I shall ask the others to write to you.

1 Dudabhai Malji Dafda
Harilal has come with his wife to the Ashram for a few days’ stay. His wife will stay longer.
Andrews is due here next week.
With much love,

Yours,
OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

55. LETTER TO V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI

AHMEDABAD,
September 23 [1915]

DEAR MR. SHASTRIAR,

When I took in Naiker, Mrs. Gandhi did not ‘kick’. Now I had to decide whether I was to take in a grown-up Gujarati Dhed with his wife. I decided to take him and she rebelled against it and so did another lady at the Ashram. There was quite a flutter in the Ashram. There is a flutter even in Ahmedabad. I have told Mrs. Gandhi she could leave me and we should part good friends. The step is momentous because it so links me with the suppressed classes mission that I might have at no distant time to carry out the idea of shifting to some Dhed quarters and sharing their life with the Dheds. It would mean much even for my staunchest co-workers. I have now given you the outline of the story. There is nothing grand about it. It is of importance to me because it enables me to demonstrate the efficacy of passive resistance in social questions and when I take the final step, it will embrace swaraj, etc.

Please share this with Dr. Deva and any other member you please.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 6291

1 Naiker referred to in the letter joined Gandhiji in 1915.
2 An untouchable
3 The reference is to Dudabhai, the first ‘untouchable’ who joined the Ashram with his family on September 26; vide "Diary for 1915". Gandhiji accepted him at the suggestion of Amritlal Thakkar. The event caused a stir in the socio-religious life of Ahmedabad and people thought of even boycotting the Ashram.
56. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M. K. GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,

September 24, 1915

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I have been regularly receiving your letters. I do not care to ask others to write to you as we are full up to the brim with work. I had seven patients last week, all more or less in a bad state. It was no ordinary illness. I am thankful to say they are all convalescent now. These included Ramdas and Devdas. They were all treated after our fashion partial or total starvation and hip-baths.

You know what a Pariah is. He is what is called an untouchable. The widow’s son whom I have taken is a Pariah but that did not shock Mrs. Gandhi so much. Now I have taken one from our own parts and Mrs. Gandhi as also Maganlal’s wife were up in arms against me. They made my life miserable so far as they could. I told them they were not bound to stay with me. This irritated them the more. The storm has not yet subsided. I am however unmoved and comparatively calm. The step I have taken means a great deal. It may alter my life a bit, i.e., I may have to completely take up Pariah work, i.e., I might have to become a Pariah myself. We shall see. Anyway let my troubles brace you up if they can.

Andrews and Pearson were with me for a day. I lent the latter some of your books. They are both on their way to Fiji in order to investigate the indenture question.

Harilal was here for a few days. He is gone. His wife is here with her children.

I am sending you a piece of cloth from what has been woven by us. It is Manilal’s work. Sewing is mine and Devdas’s. May it serve to wipe your hand and may the spirit that has prompted the gift serve to strengthen the inner man in you.

With love,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India
RESPECTED KHUSHALBHAI,

I realized after meeting Narandas that you repent having given him the permission and the chief cause for remorse is that I have admitted a learned dhea\(^1\) [to the ashram]. That would have hurt the feelings of Santok too. In fact, no one should feel bad about it because in Phoenix we shared food with everyone. But the same thing is viewed differently here.

There is no need for you to feel sorry. Narandas has taken a very good step. If I was not worried about the unhappiness of my sister-in-law, I would have boldly asked Narandas to come here. However, on considering everything, I thought it was better for Narandas to go to Madras with his wife. There Tamil....\(^2\) Santok and the two girls are going.

Maganlal is accompanying them to Bombay today.

By doing so, Narandas, Jamna, Santok and the girls would not be caught in the storm\(^3\) that threatens the Ashram. They would not be banished from the caste and so their sorrow will be a little less. Jamnadas is no doubt there. There is no need for him to come here.

It is Chhaganlal’s duty to stay on in Phoenix. Now remain Maganlal and his children. Let him be caught in the storm along with me. Those who live with me, should never expect that they will never have external problems because those who live with me should learn to welcome problems and realize that purification lies in that. I have told Maganlal that he should go to Madras for a short period if he wanted to. There is no objection if Maganlal goes to Madras and Narandas comes here. I have asked the two brothers to do what is convenient to them.

I am going to fulfil your desire once Narandas is relieved from his job.

---

\(^1\) Dudhabhai Dafda

\(^2\) A few words are illegible here.

\(^3\) As a consequence of Gandhiji’s decision to admit an untouchable family to the Ashram. Also vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 16-9-1915
I do not think that a more satisfactory arrangement can be worked out. It contains truth and dharma indeed is included in it.

I wish that you should be at peace.

I do want that Maganlal should go there.

Respectful prostration by

MHOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33105

58. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,

[Before September 26, 1915]¹

CHI. MAGANLAL,

I have again written² to respected Khushalbhai. You should handle the situation there quite calmly. Do what will please the self. If Santok wants to return, let her. It will be all right even if she goes to Madras. She need only observe all the Ashram rules there. If you want, you may stay on there [for some time] or go to Madras.

There have been two letters for you, which, for the present, I don’t send on.

Narandas should remain determined. He should be confident and fearless about the future.

Keshu came round very soon. Already, he is playing about today. Two of his different groups [of subjects] are under my charge. I am therefore in a better position to observe how he does. Purushottam³ has felt nothing. He had his usual meal.

Dudabhai will arrive on Sunday morning.

Things have been happening at Phoenix, it seems.⁴ Chhaganlal appears to have cut off his connection altogether. The price of Indian Opinion has been reduced to one penny. It seems he has been hasty. This also must be for a good end. More when you are here. You, of ¹ Dudabhai referred to in the letter arrived with his wife at the Ashram on Sunday, September 26, 1915.

² This letter is not available.
³ Son of Narandas Gandhi
⁴ Vide the following item.
course, ought not to allow yourself to be upset. The burden is on you.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5679. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

59. LETTER TO A. H. WEST

AHMEDABAD,
September 26 [1915]

MY DEAR WEST,

I have your typewritten letter.

I note the changes made and I accept them. The central idea is that Indian Opinion should be kept up at any cost. If you can be totally independent of public support, i.e., from the Passive Resistance Fund, so much the better.

This means revision of the account sent to you by me. Fortunately there was delay on my side. The new scheme requires a revision which I shall do shortly.

I am not going to keep the large sum with me but it will be handed over to the Trust.

As for part of the payment to Pragji and Imam Saheb being, debited to the P. R. Fund, I am inclined to think that they were present at the meeting, where the matter was settled. But if they object, the amounts could be debited to the P. R. Fund as assistance to Indian Opinion. In either case, the money has to come from the P. R. Fund. It was debited by way of relief as the whole amount could not be a legitimate charge against Indian Opinion. But for their being passiveresisters, we could not have availed ourselves of their services. But it was a matter of account keeping. I should be prepared to defend the outlay in any case.

Unless Chhaganlal is bodily incapable, his withdrawal from

---

1 This is in reply to West’s letter dated August 23, 1915. On West’s letter Gandhiji has written “Reply, 26th Sept.”

2 Vide “Letter to A. H. West”, 3-8-1915.

3 Pragji Khandubhai Desai, a passive resister during the South African struggle.

4 Imam Abdul Kadir Bawazeer; Muslim priest and passive resister; President of the Hamidia Islamic Society.
Indian Opinion is a bad sign. However I must not grumble. You who are on the spot must know what is best. The ideals we are working are common to us and you will work according to your own way. Hence the Phoenix Trust. I can only advise from this distance.

Auditing, if it is to cost anything appreciable, is useless. Our books contain all the transactions. The bank-balance represents the savings from the Fund, etc. However, even in this matter you know best what should be done.

Mr. Rustomjee’s warning is now superfluous as I shall not be handling the funds any more. For the Phoenix funds there are the trustees and they may, subject to the sanction of the schemers, do the needful.

This exhaust the points raised by you. The amount fixed for Polak should stand until he himself feels that he can dispense with it.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 4420. Courtesy: A. H. West

60. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M. K. GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,

October 3 [1915]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

No letter from you after your transference. Mr. Turner has however written to me.

The admission of a Pariah family continues to occupy me. I have been deserted by most helpers and the burden is all falling on my shoulder assisted by two or three who are remaining staunch. Poor Maganlal is simply torn asunder. He is in Bombay fixing up with his wife and mother. How it is a question whether Narandas will come. I have told you that a time may come when I may irresistibly take a step which may result in my being left alone. Well, I must still follow the light as I find it.

1 From the contents
Mr. Turner says you now better situated. I want your letter.

With love,

Yours

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

61. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M. K. GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,

October 8 [1915]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I have to make this Herculean effort just now under extraordinary difficulties. It is now nearing 9 p.m. Mrs. Gandhi who has been making my life hell for me is just now at me. But I must not miss this weekly communion. I give you this news to show that peace is not to be found from without. I am not at war with myself in spite of the disturbance I have mentioned above. She however does succeed in making me angry at times and throwing me off my balance. I am making a desperate effort to overcome this weakness. The whole situation has... because I have admitted a man who is every whit as good as she is. She is still talking and I must close.

With love,

Yours ever,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

---

1 From the contents
2 The source is damaged here.
62. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M. K. GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,

October 16 [1915]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I hope you have received my letter the one that did not reach you in time. There was no omission [on] my side. We are all so short-handed that I do not like to ask anyone to write to you.

Here there is no extensive piece of ground for cultivation hardly one acre. There are two roomy houses with little plots of ground attached. We are doing only a little vegetable gardening. Water is drawn from two wells. These are rustic wells, with primitive contrivances for drawing water. The dispute was paltry, out of cussedness. The man felt polluted because the boys fetched water from his side of the well. It was no water dispute.

We are now weaving our own cloth, sewing things, too, ourselves.

The buildings were ready for our occupation. They are hired houses. We are not on our own ground yet. Manilal has completed his weaving lessons. He has now gone to a village to complete his course. Maganlal too has nearly picked it up. Devdas is becoming an expert tailor. He is turning out a fine student.

But the life here owing to the untouchable problem has become most difficult for me. Mrs. Gandhi is the cause. And yet as I have told you I am internally at peace.

Now good-bye.

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

1 From the contents
63. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M. K. GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,

October 23 [1915]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. Mrs. Gandhi has become a little better but before she could regain her sanity I had to undertake partial starvation. I lived without nuts for a few days.

Just now we have about 40 guests. Of these 37 are from an institution about 150 miles from here. So we have been obliged for the last 4 days to cook for about 80 people. Fortunately there are some fine workers and the guests themselves do their share of the work. They assist in the kitchen, in water-carrying and grinding.

Carpentry is going strong. We are making sectional book-cases. I think I mentioned this to you. Your books will be housed in one of them. When you see these you will like them. There will be five sections to each. The cost will come to about £6 each. Cheap enough you will say. But according to the measure here £6 for a book-case is rather a heavy charge.

I wish I could give you a sketch of the handlooms but I cannot. It is an intricate affair. You cannot have any notion from my description because I cannot give you a technical description. Suffice it to say that it has as much string-work as wood-work. The cost of the simplest loom is under £7.

Maganlal is to leave for Madras in a day or two in order to finish his Tamil study and his handloom experience. There is a big and rather good handloom business in Madras.

Did I tell you that we all remain in the house bare-bodied? All we wear is dhotar the cloth round the waist. It is the sanest thing we could have done. I receive visitors, both English and Indian, in that condition. So you will see that the cost of clothing will be very little. We shall confine ourselves to our own production.

And now good-bye. The bell has gone to serve the boys. Do come soon and take your share in the serving.

Yours always,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

1 From the reference to Maganlal’s Tamil studies; vide "leeter to A. H. West", 5-11-1915
Mr. Gandhi, who was loudly cheered by the audience, said that the question of indentured labour was just now a topical question, because those true and real friends of India, Messrs Andrews and Pearson, were conducting an enquiry in Fiji. The Fiji Islands absorbed the largest number of indentured Indians at the present moment. Messrs Andrews and Pearson were not the first to interest the Indians in this question, but it was the deceased statesman, Mr. Gokhale, who first impressed Indians with the importance of their duties in connection with this question. Mr. Gandhi here read the resolution introduced by Mr. Gokhale in the Viceregal Council and his speech upon it demanding the total abolition of the indenture system and commented upon it at some length. The resolution which Mr. Gokhale brought before the Council was defeated by a majority, though all the non-official members of the Council voted for the abolition. However much a benign and sympathetic Viceroy wished to remove this abominable system of indenture from the Indian Statute Book, there was a very serious difficulty in his way and that was the report by the two Commissioners, who were sent by Lord Hardinge, namely, Messrs MacNeill and Chimanlal, which was contained in two bulky volumes. All might not care to wade through the rather dull pages of those volumes, but to him who knew what real indentured labour was they were of great interest. They might, however, take upon trust that the report recognised that indentured labour should continue just as it was, if certain conditions were fulfilled. Those conditions, Mr. Gandhi said, were impossible of fulfilment. And the recommendations, which these two great Commissioners made, showed that they really could not seriously have meant that the system of indenture which existed today in Fiji, Jamaica, Guiana and other colonies should be continued a minute longer than was actually necessary. The speaker here referred to the previous commission and said that the defects which Messrs MacNeill and Chimanlal had pointed out were patent to all. Their report contained nothing new. But there was unofficial investigation on behalf of some philanthropic body in England some forty years ago.

1 Under the auspices of the District Congress Committee at the Empire Theatre, Sir Ibrahim Rahimtullah presiding
2 The results were published in their Report on Indentured Labour in Fiji.
3 Recommending prohibition of recruitment of indentured labour in India; vide “Indenture or Slavery?”, December, 1915.
4 On March 4, 1912
5 22 in number
6 McNeill and Chimanlal were sent by the Indian Government to report on conditions prevailing in Jamaica, Trinidad, British Guiana and Fiji—Colonies where the indenture system was still permitted.
ago, and in that book an unvarnished tale was given, which told in graphic language what were the hardships under the system.

In this connection, Mr. Gandhi quoted a statement made by the Prime Minister of Natal in which he said that the system of indenture was a most inadvisable thing and that the sooner it was terminated, the better for the indentured labourer and the employer. Lord Selborne said the same thing when he was the High Commissioner in South Africa: he said that it was worse for the employer than the employed, because it was a system perilously near to slavery. Sir William Hunter\(^1\) wrote a beautiful series of letters in 1895 when he first brought himself to study the system personally and compared the system of indenture, after due investigation, to a state bordering on slavery. On one occasion he used the expression ‘semi-slavery’. Mr. Gandhi said if he erred in making these statements, he erred in Lord Selborne’s company. And it was in connection with this system that these two worthy gentlemen, the Commissioners, had seen fit to report and advise the fulfilment of certain conditions which in the very nature of the contract were impossible of fulfilment. The conditions were that unsuitable emigrants be excluded; the proportion of females to males to be raised from 40 to 50 per cent. The speaker could not understand what they meant by “unsuitable emigrants” being excluded. The Commissioners themselves told them that it was not easy to find labour in India. India was not pining to send her children out as semi-slaves. Lord Sanderson\(^2\) stated that it was the surplus population from India that went out from dissatisfaction with the economic condition in India. But they must remember that there were 500 recruiting licences issued in the year 1907. Could they conceive the significance of the extraordinary state of things which required one recruiter to 17 labourers? The Colonial Governments had their sub-agents in India for this indentured labour to be collected. They were paid a sum of Rs. 25 for each cooly recruited, and this sum of Rs. 25 was divided between the recruiter and the sub-agent. Mr. Gandhi thought the mental state of those recruiters must be miserable, who could send so many of their countrymen as semi-slaves. After having seen what the recruiting agents did and after having read the many gross mis-statements they made, he was not surprised that thousands and thousands of their countrymen were becoming indentured labourers. The Commissioners devoted several pages to the immorality prevailing on the estates. It was not forty women for sixty men, but the statement was made that these men did not marry these women, but kept them and that

\(^1\) (1840-1900), historian, an authority on Indian affairs and author of Indian Empire; served in India for 25 years, was sympathetic to Indian aspirations; member of the British Committee of the Indian National Congress in London

\(^2\) Chairman of the Committee appointed by the British Government in England to investigate conditions in the Crown Colonies of Jamaica, Trinidad, British Guiana and Fiji.
many of these women were prostitutes. Mr. Gandhi said he would decline to send his children out of the country under such an indenture, if he was worthy of his salt. But thousands of men and women had gone. What did they think of that in India?

The conditions were that rigorous provisions should be either expunged from the Ordinances and that the Protector should control employers. As for the regulations made to protect these labourers, they could take it from him, Mr. Gandhi said, that there were a great many flaws in them and a coach and four could be easily driven through these. The aim of the rules was to make the employer supreme. Here was capital ranged against labour with artificial prop for capital and not labour.

Mr. Gandhi condemned the “protectors” of emigrants. They were men belonging to that very class to which employers belonged; they moved among them and was it not only natural that they should have their sympathies on the side of the employers? How was it then possible that they could do justice to the labourer against the employer? He knew many instances when magistrates had meted out justice to the indentured labourer, but it was impossible to expect such a thing from the Protectors of Emigrants. The labourer was bound hand and foot to the employer. If he committed an offence against his employer, he first of all had to undergo a course of imprisonment; then the days that the labourer had spent in the jail were added to his indenture and he was taken back to his master to serve again. The Commissioners had nothing to say against these rules. There was nobody to judge the Protector of Emigrants if he gave a wrong judgment, but in the case of the magistrate he could be criticised. Again, the Commissioners said that these prisoners should be put into separate jails. But the Colonial Government would be bankrupt if they built jails for hundreds of prisoners that were imprisoned. They were not able to build jails for the passive resisters. Then the Commissioners said that the labourer should be allowed to redeem his indenture by payment of a graduated redemption fee. They made a mistake in thinking him to be an independent man. He was not his own master. Mr. Gandhi said he had known of English girls, well educated, who were decoyed, and who were not indentured, unable to free themselves. How was it then possible for an indentured labourer to do this? Then the Commissioners said the special needs of Indian children in the matter of primary education should receive consideration. As for education, Mr. Gandhi said, no doubt, some work of that kind was being done by some of the philanthropic missions, but nothing substantial was being done or could be expected. Mr. Balfour¹ compared the labourer under an indenture to a soldier. But the soldier was a responsible man and he could rise to a high position. But an indentured labourer remained a labourer. He had no privileges. His wife was also included under his disabilities, so also his son. In Natal the finger of scorn was pointed at these people. Never could an indentured Indian rise to a higher post than that of labourer. And what did the labourer bring when he returned to India? He returned a broken vessel, with some of the artificial and superficial signs of civilization, but he left more valuable things behind him. He might bring some sovereigns also with him. They should decline to perpetuate this hateful system of indenture because it robbed them of their national self-respect.

¹ Arthur James Balfour (1848-1930), British statesman, Conservative leader and Prime Minister

If they could consider well over what he had said, they would try and abolish the system in a year’s time and this one taint upon the nation would have gone and indentured labour would be a thing of the past. He wanted to remove the cause of the ill-treatment of Indians in the Colonies. However protected that system might be, it still remained a state bordering upon slavery. It would remain, said Mr. Gandhi, a state based upon full-fledged slavery and it was a hindrance to national growth and national dignity.

_The Bombay Chronicle, 29-10-1915_

65. FRAGMENT OF LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

[After October 28, 1915]

... the requirements will have been known that way. If we can do without oil, we shall have made a very important change. I have noted that in some institutions they use neither oil nor ghee.

Fakiri doesn’t like being in Ahmedabad. He had of course to be looked after, and it became something of a problem where he should be kept. I found the Nursing Home in Surat very good and so he is kept there. There is a letter from him today, in which he says that he is not well yet.

Manilal has gone to leave Chanchi at Rajkot. Her mother, wanted to have her there for a few days before she left for Calcutta.

Kaka is here. Revashanker has gone to fetch his wife.

---

1 The first two pages of the letter are not available.
2 From Gandhiji’s request to the addressee to procure a Tamil teacher, it would appear that the latter was in Madras. Maganlal Gandhi left for Madras on October 28.
3 The original is not clear at this point.
4 Naidoo
5 Chanchalbehn Gandhi, wife of Harilal, Gandhiji’s eldest son
6 Dattatreya Balkrishna Kalelkar (1885- ); educationist, writer and constructive worker; Padma Vibhushan; vide also “Circular Letter for Funds for Ashram”, 1-7-1917.
7 Sodha
Maganbhai has left for Dharmaj today to make arrangements for his son. We have two new persons in the Ashram. It has been decided not to admit fresh students for a year in any circumstances. We may as well give up hopes of Anna. The two new persons are grown-up men.

See if you can get a Tamil teacher to come over here. We may pay him. We shall not mind his living outside the Ashram. He must be a man of simple habits. We shall know the position from the Gurukul side, after they have been through the whole thing.

Blessings from

BAPU

Kitchin has committed suicide. Reason: Monetary loss.

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5690. Courtesy: Radhabehn Choudhri

66. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M. K. GANDHI

AHMEDabad,

October 30, 1915

MY DEAR FRIEND,

Not a week just now passes but has its surprises for me. Chhaganlal seems to be dangerously ill. He has been persistently coughing blood and says he is going down. He eats little. I had to telegraph saying he should be sent if still ill. Things at Phoenix are not moving well otherwise. Pragji has not much heart in the work. I do not know that I can spare anybody from here. Maganlal went on Thursday to Madras with his wife and the two daughters. Fakiri and another have joined him. Maganlal is to finish his Tamil course and handloom work. So he can be ill spared just now. Mrs. Gandhi continues to cause trouble. So you see my difficulties are fairly thick. They give me food for thought but no anxiety. I know that I can but do little.

You are afraid of the increasing intensity of life here. But I feel

1 Patel
2 Herbert Kitchin, a theosophist who edited Indian Opinion after Nazar’s premature death. Lived with Gandhiji for a time and worked with him during the Boer War sure you will like it when you come to it, especially after the experiences you are going through.

Yours sincerely,
OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

67. LETTER TO A. H. WEST

AHMEDABAD,

October 31 [1915]

MY DEAR WEST,

I have your indictment. If you do not speak out, who would? I value your friendship just because you always say exactly what you mean.

Now for the reply.

I could not consult anyone there as to allocations because I was not there. The Phoenix allocations were discussed between us there. Relief allocations needed no discussion. Valiama Hall allocation was settled there. The £1,000 for Polak’s expenses, should he have to return to England penniless, was a matter which was fixed there but I am not able to say that it was positively discussed. But I suggest that it is again an expense about which I should not deem consultation necessary. If the community has any respect for itself, it could not send them away starving. It would be pure passive resistance relief. I would not dream about publishing it in the accounts sheet. We are not bound to disclose the names of the resisters helped.

Mr. Petit’s statement was published after consultation with me. Mine was delayed at his instance. I have brought every item; including Polak’s £1,000 to the Committee’s notice. I am even going to bring to Mr. Petit’s notice your and Rustomji’s dissent.

You suggest that you could not take interest which is tainted nor would you take the help offered. I congratulate you. The stronger you are, the better. The allocations suggested by me were due to our collective weakness. But you will not find me weakening you if you

---

1 From the reference to Gandhiji’s cable to the addressee regarding Chhaganlal Gandhi, the letter appears to have been written in 1915.
are strong.

You suggest that for Phoenix’s improvement, I would have to send you money from elsewhere. This I could not do. Even when we discussed there, it was clearly understood that the charges should come out of the passive resistance funds, as we were running Phoenix as a P. R. farm and wanted to make it more and more a refuge for indentured Indians who may be in distress. If therefore you want the help, it can only come out of the fund.

I would certainly welcome any decision you may come to as to not receiving any help.

The money does not belong to South Africa. The Committee here has control over it. They asked that the funds be transferred to them, subject to such allocations as I may suggest. I am now having no definite allocations but shall receive monies for you in S.A. as you there may desire from time to time. This gives the Committee here the fullest control. I shall act as the go between.

As to books, you are quite wrong. Our books contain all the receipts and all disbursements. We need no audit, we owe nobody anything and no one has a legal right to ask us to do anything except the Committee. Individual subscribers may ask. Them we could satisfy. Not a penny has been yet spent which could not be brought within the scope of the fund.

Relief to resisters includes Polak, Thambi and even Mr. Cachalia. I do not think we have received the loan given to him. So will it include Chhaganlal, Maganlal, Pragji, etc. It will most decidedly include Naidoo’s and other passive resisters’ children. It will not include me and my family simply because our expenses are found otherwise. As I am or rather have been the controller of the funds, I have desired to remain free from personal help. But if I had no one else to help me, I should not hesitate to draw for self and children. Only then I would at least make that clear to the public. No such precaution is necessary regarding other passive resisters as I cover them.

I need not discuss your proposal to invest in land, as we no longer have the funds under our control.

I have cabled¹ you regarding Chhaganlal. He seems to be breaking up. If so, he should be sent here. And unless Pragji and

¹ Vide the following item.
Imam Saheb undertake the work, I must send someone from here. All I know is this that you must continue I.O. even if you have to labour in the streets and if you burn your boats, so much the better. If you cannot, you and your family, so long as you are at Phoenix turning out the paper, will be supported at all costs.

I think I have now exhausted all the material points raised by you. I mean material in view of the new state of things. Now you may all consider and let me know your decision. I have P. R. a/c to 31st Jan. If Chhaganlal is there or if Pragji can manage it, you should let me have further a/c.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 4421. Courtesy: A. H. West

68. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,
Aso Vad 11 [November 3, 1915]

CHI. MAGANLAL,

I sent a cable to say that Chi. Chhaganlal might be sent here if he was still ill. Khushalbhai was very pleased. The reply came “Chhaganlal better, West.” I can see from this that he is not likely to come in the near future. I am writing all the same that, if they can spare Chhaganlal, he may come away.

The printing of the satyagraha account is nearly over.

Keshu is enjoying himself. He had slight fever for a day. All the children sleep by my side. I take their lessons and that is a great advantage. I take all the lessons of Naransami and Parthasarathi with the exception of Sanskrit, and I intend to continue doing so for the present.

Ba has calmed down a little. But I observe she is smouldering inside. About untouchability she has relaxed a little.

Amritlalbhai Thakkar is in the Ashram at present.

---

1 This appears to have been written in 1915; vide the following item.
2 Not available
3 Popularly known as Thakkar Bapa, who dedicated his life to the uplift of the tribals and the untouchables.
Khushalbhai had offered to send Jamnadas if he was needed and so I have sent for him.\textsuperscript{1}

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: S. N. 6239

\textbf{69. LETTER TO A. H. WEST}

\textit{Ahmedabad, November 5, 1915}

MY DEAR WEST,

I forgot to mention that Valiama Hall had to go. I saw that the Committee\textsuperscript{2} do not like the idea. It would have sanctioned it if I had insisted, but I did not especially in view of the condition of the community there.

I have your wire about Chhaganlal.\textsuperscript{3} Letters recently received from Chhaganlal have been alarming. And I felt that if he was not keeping well, it was better to send him here. The latest from him says that even if he was well, he could not only be spared but that his retirement would cause relief. If he can be spared, he may be sent.

If you need [an] assistant from here, I would send after 3 months or thereabout.

I cabled\textsuperscript{4} too saying that audit was unnecessary. You could gain nothing by auditing especially now. If we decide not to take any public funds, our books can be only simple. All you will then have will be receipts from \textit{Indian Opinion} and book sales and expenditure. What is left for Polak is earmarked. If you would not handle it there, it now could be transferred here. But I hope that you will all consider that allotment to be necessary.

Valiama Hall ground may be kept or it may be sold and the proceeds returned here.

Maganlal has gone to Madras to finish his Tamil studies. His wife accompanies him and also Fakiri Naidoo.

\textit{Yours sincerely,}

M. K. Gandhi

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 4422. Courtesy: A. H. West

\textsuperscript{1} The letter is incomplete.
\textsuperscript{2} Committee for the South African Indian Fund; \textit{vide} “Letter to J. B. Petit”. 16-6-1915.
\textsuperscript{3} \textit{Vide} the preceding item.
\textsuperscript{4} This cable is not available.
70. LETTER TO KHUSHALCHAND GANDHI

[AHMEDABAD,
November 8, 1915]¹

WITH HUMBLE RESPECTS TO MY BROTHER,

There was no limit to the pain I gave you last year. Since I acted as I did in the sincere belief that that suffering was for the welfare of the country, the family and my own soul, I think I deserve pardon and so pray for your forgiveness. I crave your blessings for, if anyone among the elders of the family understands me, more or less, it is you. I also offer my most humble respects to my sister-in-law and pray for her blessings and forgiveness.

Most reverent regards from
MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5681. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

71. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

AHMEDABAD,
Kartak Sud 3 [November 10, 1915]

CHI. MATHURADAS,

I had forgotten your address.

Your post card indicates that you have not forgotten me. I have high hopes of you. That they may be fulfilled, may God give you greater moral strength.

Blessings from
MOHANDAS

[From Gujarati]
Bapuni Prasadi

¹ From the postmark
72. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

[AHMEDABAD.]

Saturday [November 13, 1915]¹

CHI. MAGANLAL,

As you address the letters in Gujarati, they go to the Dead Letter Office before they arrive here. If the name of the town is written in English, they will be delivered in time.

Dr. Deva² is here at present. He got your letter very late. He was touring. He asks you now to reply to Nogin Babu that he may go whenever he wants to, after giving eight days’ notice. Accommodation will be arranged by Dr. Deva. Does Manilal experience any difficulty in starching the yarn?

There is no new work on hand at present. Prabhudas³ has left off carpentry. I set him to work on the loom for as many hours as possible. Hajee Ismail Moosa is also here. A meeting was held this evening to honour Dr. Deva. There was a good attendance. I hope you are going on with your Tamil. I don’t think it is necessary to ask for a scholarship for you from the Doctor⁴. Jamnadas is not to come over here for the present. Did I send you a copy of [my] letter⁵ to Petit? We have two new persons here, one named Narandas Patel and another Bapuji Bhagat. The latter has his grandson also with him. Dana is also here. Everyone is working quite well. Krishnasamy Sharma arrived today.

Blessings from

BAPU

Inform Mr. Vrajlal that the money order for Rs. 25/- has not been received.

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5680. Courtesy: Radhabeihn Choudhri

¹ The meeting to felicitate Dr. Deva, referred to in the letter, took place on this day.
² Secretary of the Servants of India Society, Poona
³ Son of Chhaganlal Gandhi
⁴ Pranjivan Mehta
⁵ Vide “Letter to J. B. Petit”, 16-6-1915.
The entrusting of this resolution to me has given me a welcome opportunity to express my sentiments about Sir Pherozeshah in public. He was the lion of the Bombay Municipal Corporation and I too have sometimes heard the roaring of this lion. Many were the battles he fought with Sir George Clarke, Lord Harris, successive Viceroy's and many Governors in India. No wonder that the whole of India mourns the death of such a valiant leader. But there is selfishness behind this expression of grief. If many more among us could live and die as he lived and died we would in that case have nothing to grieve for. A little while ago, India was lamenting the death of the Hon’ble Mr. Gokhale. Before these tears had dried, we have had another stunning blow. It would not be fair to compare these two great men. They did their best, each according to his lights. Mr. Gokhale was a selfless man and as such deserved the title of rishi. There are two epithets which describe Sir Pherozeshah. In the first place, he was the Father of the Bombay Municipal Corporation and, in the second, he was the uncrowned king of Bombay, say rather, of the whole of India—a king chosen by the subjects themselves. He took the lead on every public issue and the people had come to have such confidence in him that they would do whatever he wanted them to do. That was because of the respect that people, not only of Bombay city but of the whole Presidency, had for his judgment. There was none to challenge his position in the Presidency. At a time when the people of India expect to win important political rights, no one is left, we may say, who could speak to the Government on our behalf. I have read somewhere that those who love their friends dearly love them all the more in their death; likewise, if we are overflowing with love at this moment, it is because of the great qualities of Sir Pherozeshah. We may have crossed him often enough when he was alive, spoken well or

---

1 Held in Premabhai Hall, Sir Chinubhai presiding; Gandhiji proposed the condolence resolution.
2 Lord Sydenham, ex-Governor of Bombay.
3 Ex-Governor of Bombay and chairman of the Consolidated Gold Fields of South Africa, vide “Lord Harris and British Indians”, 19-11-1903.
ill of him; but, now that he has gone, we are not to look at his faults. It is but our duty that we should hold a condolence meeting on his death. We must not, however, stop with this. It was Sir Pherozeshah’s desire that we, too, all of us, should render public service as he did and we shall have done our duty to him only if we render such service. His body, which was mortal, has perished but what he did will live on. His interest in public service was so keen that he would get his clients’ cases adjourned or let go his fees, suffer all manner of inconvenience even to attend meetings of the Bombay Municipal Corporation. He would sometimes not go to the Assembly; he considered the work of the Corporation of greater importance. He did not like being absorbed exclusively in political activities. It was his principle that whatever one took up, one must carry to success and he, therefore, gave his best attention to the work of the Bombay Corporation. There is no city in India in which a member has rendered such services in the field of municipal work as Sir Pherozeshah has done. The world has admired the services of Mr. Chamberlain as President of Birmingham Municipality, but Sir Pherozeshah did, single-handed, work for Bombay which it would have taken four Chamberlains to do. The right memorial to Sir Pherozeshah would be for all municipalities to work in the manner he did. The daily political discussions in Sir Pherozeshah’s office were unfailingly echoed immediately in the public at large, so important and influential were his views. He was more of an Indian than a Parsi and believed that the unity of India could be achieved only by turning the entire population into a single community. The discussions in his office were mainly concerned with how we could fight fearlessly for our rights. He had to suffer much while doing public service. He once gave me the best advice on this subject. I was insulted by an Englishman once and I was about to file a suit for damages against him. Sir Pherozeshah told me then that, if I wished to do any good to myself or the country, I should swallow the insult and that I should swallow similar insults in future as well. Indeed, I have had to swallow them on numerous occasions. I must admit that whatever capacity for work I possess I owe to this advice. If we pay tributes to him today, it is because of his good sense, his courage and faith. I feel like making a suggestion about how we may perpetuate the memory of this great man whom Ahmedabad mourns today. This public hall is so small that the city should be ashamed of it, for towns even one-fourth the size of Ahmedabad possess halls bigger than this. It is my submission, therefore, that the people of Ahmedabad should build a big public hall in memory of Sir Pherozeshah Mehta. His magnificence, too, deserves to be understood. He was lavish in spending money. Mr. Gokhale, Mr. Ishvar Chandra Vidyasagar\(^1\) and others held one view about how one should live and Pherozeshah held another, which, however, did no harm. Ahmedabad ought to put up a memorial to so great a man and I hope my appeal will find favour with the people of Ahmedabad.

1 Joseph

[From Gujarati]

_Prajabandhu, 21-11-1915_

74. LETTER TO MAGANBHAI H. PATEL

AHMEDABAD,

Kartak Vad 11 [November 17, 1915]\(^2\)

BHAISHREE 5 MAGANBHAI,

I continue to receive letters from you. I think it would be proper to give what Sundaram asks. You have not written about Shanti’s and Bhaiya’s cough.

My towel which I use as a _dhoti_ has been left behind. I had three. I left the one I had been wearing yesterday hung on the bathroom door. Ask Chi. Manilal to look for it. I have found the knife. Ask Ramdas to write to me in detail about his health and his studies. Other boys will be getting on with the lessons I have given. Tell them that I shall be deeply disappointed if they don’t do it. It will be good if _Namameeshameeshana_\(^3\) can be taught to all the boys. Quilts will have been got ready or should be.

You may get Krishnasamy’s watch repaired if it can be done for anything up to a rupee.

_Blessings from_

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 11006. Courtesy: Suryakant C. Patel

\(^1\) (1820-1891), educationist and social reformer of Bengal
\(^2\) The year has been inferred from the contents. _Kartak Vad 11_ corresponded to November 17 in 1915.
\(^3\) First line of a hymn by Shankaracharya
75. SPEECH AT RAJCHANDRA BIRTH ANNIVERSARY, AHMEDABAD

November 21, 1915

At a public meeting held at the Premabhai Hall, Ahmedabad, on November 21, 1915, to celebrate the birthday of the famous philosopher of Gujarat, Shrimad Rajchandra¹, Gandhiji, who occupied the chair, dwelt in the course of his opening remarks on the appropriateness of the celebration of the great philosopher’s birthday.

Dealing with the life of Rajchandra, Mr. Gandhi mentioned that he had come in close personal contact with him and, so far as he was competent to judge, he declared it to be his deliberate opinion that the deceased was one of the best religious philosophers of modern times in India. He was incomparable in true perception, he was free from attachment, and had true vairagya in him.² He followed no narrow creed. He was a universalist and had no quarrel with any religion in the world. In the West, the speaker had found Tolstoy and Ruskin among the best philosophers and he did not hesitate to put the deceased above both of them. The deceased outdid them in religious experience. The faith of the deceased was a robust faith, such as could only be based upon the true realisation of the self. Upon the speaker’s own life, the deceased had exercised a very powerful influence. There was a suitable and certain sublimity and genuineness about the writings of the deceased, which gave them peculiar charm and enabled them to have a powerful hold upon the reader.

Concluding, Mr. Gandhi hoped that those who had attended the celebration would take the trouble of studying the writings of the deceased Mahatma and he promised that they would feel all the better for their trouble.

The Bombay Chronicle, 23-11-1915

¹ Son-in-law of Revashanker Jagjivan Mehta, elder brother of Gandhiji’s life-long friend and supporter, Dr. Pranjivan Mehta. Gandhiji first met him in 1891 at the suggestion of Dr. Mehta. A business man and an expert jeweller, he lived his life in the spirit of karmayoga. His was the first profound influence on Gandhiji in his mature years, comparable to that of Ruskin and Tolstoy later; vide An Autobiography, Part II, Ch. I.

² Gujarati, 28-11-1915, has here: “He had gyana, vairagya and bhakti.”
76. FRAGMENT OF LETTER

[Before November 26, 1915]

The Ashram activities are in full swing. It has at present 33 inmates in all, three of whom are Dheds. These latter have become a serious issue. Ahmedabad is considered to be a stronghold of sanatana dharma. Hence the issue of the Dheds has led to a storm. At first we thought the entire Ashram would be outcast, and that may yet happen. The boys have made much progress in their study of Sanskrit, Hindi and Tamil. They are being taught carpentry and hand-weaving. Two carpenters are engaged in the Ashram. In a few days, we shall send you some cloth woven on looms by our own hands. The boys have made tables, etc. They are now working at book-cases for holding books.

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 26-12-1915

77. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M. K. GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,

November 26 [1915]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

You have asked me to tell you more about Andrews and Pearson than I have done. I came in very close touch with both of them in Santiniketan. We came nearer one another than we ever were. They are both now in Fiji investigating the indenture question. Before going, they passed some time here. They were quite happy. They are to be back in two months’ time. Pearson is a full-fledged teacher at Santiniketan. Andrews is the Poet’s mentor. He takes no part in

---

1 A part of Gandhiji’s letter received in Phoenix and reproduced in Prajabandhu from Indian Opinion, 26-11-1915

2 In which the caste system is accepted as one of the unchanging foundations of Hinduism teaching. Andrews was at death’s door recently having had a severe attack of cholera. He was better when he left.

Maganlal was upon his trial when the Pariah was admitted. He stood it well. He remains as much attached to the Ashram as ever. But what I said in my letter holds good. My soul may take me anywhere any day and I may find myself without the staunchest of my co-workers at that time. It will certainly be no fault of theirs. I cannot expect them to understand or follow me in all my flights.

Mrs. Gandhi still remains disturbed. She does not want to live away from me. If she could overcome the strong desire to live with me, she would have left me long ago.

Jeki had a son born to her in Fiji. She is now in Rangoon. I have not met her. Dr. Mehta was here the other day. He told me she was well.

Indian Opinion has been reduced in size. The price too has been reduced. It is 1d. now. Ritch has returned to South Africa.

This finishes the budget of news.

You say you have not influenced your surroundings, if anything you have been influenced by them. I do not gather it from your letters. In any event one certainly cannot be too much on one’s guard. True worth of a man seems to me to consist in his capacity to resist his surroundings. It is the measure of his self-realization. If we control ourselves we cannot be controlled by others, not even by our surroundings, not fashion, nor food, nor spectacles, nor games, nor company, nor hobbies. There is no true happiness without this real self rule. You have a unique opportunity of acquiring it. May it be your lot to do so.

With love,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India
78. SPEECH AT AHMEDABAD FUNCTION

November 28, 1915

I know that you will dislike my expressing, amidst all this gaiety, views which you will find unpleasant; I must, all the same, tell you what I feel. It may, of course, be questioned whether, holding the views that I do, I should have come to a gathering such as this; it is still more open to question whether I should express them. It is love which prompted me to come here and, again, it is love which has prompted me to stand up and speak. You are all very happy and I too am happy to see you honour Bhai Nanalal.

He has succeeded in gaining admission into the Indian Civil Service. . . .² He deserves to be honoured for his hard work. . . .³ But I should not like other students to follow his example and enter the civil service. Our students do not need at present the kind of example Civilians provide; they stand in need of the example set by the lives of Mr. Dadabhai, Mr. Gokhale and Mr. Pherozeshah Mehta. If I may use the words of the late Mr. Gokhale, what we need at present is characters not labels. Bhai Nanalal’s father spent Rs. 30,000 to make him a Civilian; I believe he could have put that money to better use instead; and Bhai Nanalal, even if he had remained an ordinary man, could have rendered better service to India in some other capacity, if he had so chosen. Civilians have to come to India in plenty, and many more will come; but it doesn’t look as if they have been particularly useful to the country. Bhoja Bhagat⁴ was a cobbler but, working as a cobbler, he succeeded in raising himself; and so also Akha Bhagat⁵, who was a goldsmith. Thus, if one wishes, one can progress spiritually even while pursuing one’s vocation. And so also Bhai Nanalal could have been more useful to the country if he had devoted himself to its service while pursuing some vocation. You are in love with labels and you think that it is something to have acquired one. On the contrary, as I believe, the man is crushed beneath them, loses his truth.

¹ In honour of N. C. Mehta, who had been admitted to the Indian Civil Service
² The source is damaged here.
³ ibid
⁴ A Gujarati poet, 1785-1850
⁵ A metaphysical poet of the 17th century, famed for his satire; vedantin and rationalist
We have no need at present of labels like B.A., M.A., Baronet, K.C.S.I., C.I.E., Sir, the Hon’ble, etc. We need men who will rise above the desire for all such honours and work. People need education which will enable everyone to express his thoughts with the utmost freedom. Today, all over the country there is an atmosphere of fear, so much so that we feel afraid, unnecessarily, even to express our views. We need an education that will blow up all such notions and make us truly fearless. We don’t need labels. I know many of you will not like this discordant note. But, whispering into my ear a little while ago, Bhai Nanalal asked me why the people in India are so much impressed by success at examinations. He said he could speak nothing of this but asked me if I wouldn’t like to say something. It is this hint from him which prompted me to say a few things which I had in mind. You may accept what appeals to you and throw away or leave behind in this hall what may seem rubbish to you. I wouldn’t mind it either way. I wish Bhai Nanalal all success in doing his duty, that is, in loyally serving the Government and comporting himself with the people, over whom he will be placed in authority, not as their superior but as one of them; for he should know that the people are not the slaves of the officers, it is the officers who are their servants. May God give Bhai Nanalal long life and may he fulfil all our dreams about his serving the country. If he does, I should be happy. If things do not turn out so and he goes the way others do, I wish that he then performs prayashchita¹ and, should I come to hear of it all, I too would do prayashchita for having attended this function and addressed it. It is not enough merely to acquire a means to a good income; there is much else one has to do afterwards and we need at present the character, the education and the men that will teach us how to do this.

[From Gujarati]

Kheda Vartaman, 8-12-1915

¹ Act of penitence
79. INDENTURE OR SLAVERY?

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM,
AHMEDABAD,

Girmit is a corrupt form of the English word agreement. The term cannot be dispensed with. What it suggests, “agreement” does not. There is no alternative word in the language. The document under which thousands of labourers used to emigrate and still emigrate to Natal and other countries on contract for five years is known by the labourers and the employers as girmit. A labourer so emigrating under girmit is a girmitio. About 12,000 such indentured labourers emigrate annually from India, mostly to the Fiji Islands near Australia, Jamaica near South America, British Guiana, Dutch Guiana and Trinidad.

The late Mr. Gokhale, a brave soul, held indenture to be a state bordering on slavery; it was described in the same terms by the famous historian, the late Sir William Wilson Hunter; the same analogy was used by Mr. Harry Escombe, a well-known former Minister of Natal.

Indenture is indeed a state of semi-slavery. Like the slave before him, the indentured labourer cannot buy his freedom. A slave was punished for not working; so also is an indentured labourer. If he is negligent, does not attend work for a day, if he answers back,—he will suffer imprisonment for any one of these lapses. A slave could be sold and handed over by one owner to another, so too the indentured labourer can be transferred from one employer to another. The children of a slave inherited the taint of slavery; much in the same way, the children of an indentured labourer are subject to laws specially passed for them. The only difference between the two states is that while slavery ended only with life, an indentured labourer can be free after a certain number of years. It should be noted, moreover, that indenture came after the abolition of slavery and that indentured labourers were recruited to take the place of slaves.

The following facts concerning indentured labourers have been

---

1 This appeared as an article in Samalochak.
2 Indenture
3 Indentured labourer established. In the countries to which they emigrate, they receive no moral or religious education. Most of them are unmarried. On every ship carrying indentured labourers, there is provision for taking women to the extent of 40 per cent. Some of these are women of ill fame. They do not, as a rule, enter into a marriage alliance. In this state of affairs, even if 20 per cent of the men wish to marry, they cannot. Going to lands so far away, they get into the habit of drinking. Women, who in India would never touch wine, are sometimes found lying dead-drunk on the roads.

After all this degradation, the profit which they point to is that the economic condition of these people improves. Everyone will admit that even though we may stand to gain economically by selling our souls, we ought not to do so.

How is it that this thing has been allowed to go on for fifty years now? None of us will be prepared to submit himself to a condition such as this. How then did we tolerate it for our own brethren? In raising this question, I have not the least desire to make people feel sorry for the past, but the question helps us to realize our duty in the present. The late Mr. Gokhale introduced, in March 1912, a resolution in the Imperial Legislative Council, asking for the repeal of the law governing indenture and demanding that the emigration of indentured labourers from India be stopped. At that time, 22 members took a pledge that “they would bring forward the resolution every year till indenture was abolished”. It is for us, the survivors, to fulfil that pledge. Mr. Andrews and Mr. Pearson have gone to Fiji for this very purpose. It is not too much to say, therefore, that every educated Indian is in duty bound to apply his mind to this question and join in discussing it so as to help in getting it finally settled.

This is not the place to go into details; for those, however, who wish to study the subject, there is literature in plenty and easily accessible: in particular, the debates in the Imperial Legislative Council on the resolution mentioned above, the Lord Sanderson Committee Report and the report of Messrs MacNeill and Chimanlal on the condition of indentured labourers. If any paper gets a special note prepared on this literature, it is bound to prove useful.

[From Gujarati]

Samalochak, December, 1915
80. SPEECH AT VIRAMGAM

December 1, 1915

Mohanlal Karamchand Gandhi arrived at Viramgaon on the 1st instant by the 1 Down Mail from Ahmedabad. He was received on the station by about 25 men of Viramgaon. After about an hour’s halt, Gandhi went on to Rajkot by train. During the time he was on the station at Viramgaon, he made a brief speech to the assembled people, explaining that he was going to Rajkot to collect subscriptions for a memorial to the late Mr. Gokhale. He requested the people of Viramgaon to contribute towards the memorial.

Gandhi was accompanied by his wife and one Chintaman Sakharam Davle, a member of the Servants of India Society.

Bombay Secret Abstracts, 1915, p. 316

81. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M. K. GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,

December 3 [1915]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I am today at a place\(^1\) in Kathiawad collecting subscriptions for the Servants of India Society. There is a member of the society with me. We have been accommodated in a beautiful cottage built on a splendid hill commanding a fine view of the country. The place has a population of 7,000 men. It has 300 handlooms. It is ruled by an Indian prince having limited jurisdiction within his own state.

I shall not see your letter yet for two days perhaps. It must have been received at Ahmedabad yesterday.

Mrs. Gandhi is with me.

Yours as ever,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

\(^1\) Wankaner
81. LETTER TO MAGANBHAI H. PATEL

GONDAL,
Kartak Vad 13 [Saturday, December 4, 1915]¹

DEAR MAGANBHAI,

I have your letter. Nearly Rs. 825 was collected at Wankaner.² With some more contributions coming in the amount may go up to a thousand. A meeting was held at Gondal too.³ What the result will be it is difficult to say. Jannadas is with me. Ba is at Rajkot.

With me being away the atmosphere may tend to change. You must work with faith to see that it does not change. Even if it should change, if you do not succumb to the change it will change automatically again. We must remember that the Ashram is still in its infancy.⁴ It is necessary for me to spend some time there. Will such an opportunity come?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 11001. Courtesy: Suryakant C. Patel

83. SPEECH AT GONDAL ON GOKHALE⁵

December 4, 1915

Gokhale was so great a man that his death is mourned by 330 million Indians. Right up to the moment of death, he thought only of service to the country; the Servants of India Society was his very life to him. I came into closer contact with him than others did and I observed that he was a man of great capacity. He knew both how to live and how to die.

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 12-12-1915

¹ Gandhiji was in Gondal on December 4, 1915 and Kartak Vad 13 corresponded to it. The source, however, has “Friday” evidently a slip.
² For the Gokhale Memorial Fund
³ Vide “Speech at Viramgam”, 1-12-1915.
⁴ The Satyagraha ashram was established at Kochrab near Ahmedabad on May 20, 1915.
⁵ The meeting was held for making an appeal for subscriptions to the Gokhale Memorial Fund, the State Diwan presiding.
84. SPEECH AT JETPUR ON GOKHALE MEMORIAL FUND

December 5, 1915

We have not come here to get contributions to the Fund. Pay something only if, after this account of his life, you feel that you should. You may send the amount later. We don’t want to shame anyone into paying. Pay only if you wish to.

[From Gujarati]

Kathiawar Times, 8-12-1915

85. LETTER TO MAGANBHAI H. PATEL

BHAVNAGAR,

Tuesday [December 7, 1915]

BHAISHRI MAGANBHAI,

You have asked good questions. Krishnasamy cannot thus ask for fresh rotis, nor send registered letters. He must read Gujarati. And if he has already decided to leave after one year, he cannot even stay there. You handle him as best as you can. Or leave the matter to await my return. He ought to be told to do grinding.

I do not think it is proper to remind Sundaram about his studies as long as he is ill.

You have not sent me the rules of the Ashram. I have to be at Bhavnagar till Thursday. I shall be at Amreli on Friday.

You must have received my other letters.

There is good progress everywhere. The collection at Wankaner will be Rs. 1,000. How are Shanti and Bhaiya?

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 110016. Courtesy: Suryakant C. Patel

1 A town in Saurashtra
2 The year has been inferred from the reference to the collection of funds at Wankaner. Gandhiji was in Bhavnagar from December 7 to 10. Tuesday in the interim fell on December 7.
Dignity of labour means that students should wash their own clothes and do their own personal work like cooking, cleaning of utensils and so on. They should abandon any false sense of shame in body-labour.

I am against machines because big industries like steel and coal dehumanize men. Rather than destroy big and small industries we must establish a balance between them and give first place to village industries.

I do accept the importance of primary education. But I know many person who cannot read and write, yet are able to work efficiently, because of their intuitive understanding. Hence, we cannot afford to wait for education.

History today teaches strife, treachery and intrigue, whereas it should give greater importance to noble deeds.

Man has no right to drink milk, because whether in human beings or animals nature has intended milk only for the young. Hence whatever the arguments, there is no justification for drinking milk.

I believe in varnasramadharma but I do not believe in castes. Vranshramadharma means that a man should find satisfaction in getting his livelihood from his ancestral occupation.

I am always in quest of truth. For the sake of truth I have abandoned many of my ideas and acquired new ones. I have never hesitated to give up the old and accept the new and will never hesitate as long as I live.

[From Gujarati]

Sevamurti, p. 33

---

1 With Veerchand Panachand Shah, Nanabhai Bhatt and others. This is a summary of the talk as Reported by Panachand Shah.

2 According to the source the talk took place at Bhavnagar towards the end of 1915. Gandhiji was in Bhavnagar from December 7 to 10 in 1915.
87. SPEECH AT BHAVNAGAR FOR GOKHALE MEMORIAL FUND

December 8, 1915

He [Gandhiji] expressed his great happiness at the unprecedented enthusiasm displayed by the people of Bhavnagar that day and the day before and offered them his heartfelt thanks. He gave very useful advice to students and youth in general, appealed to the people of Bhavnagar to subscribe to the Memorial Fund for his guru, the late widely-respected Hon’ble Mr. Gopal Krishna Gokhale and explained the aims of the Servants of India Society established by him as also the great things expected of it. Proceeding, he said:

I was invited four months ago by the people of Bhavnagar to visit this place, but I could not do so then owing to certain circumstances. But now that I am here, I see that my not coming here then has in a way furthered the purpose of my visit, for then Sir Prabhashanker was not here and, now that he is here, I have had the honour of receiving this address from the blessed hands of so popular an officer as he; what is more, there will be—I am perfectly sure of this—a most substantial gain to the Memorial Fund for the late Hon’ble Mr. Gokhale for which I have especially come here.

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 12-12-1915

88. SPEECH AT RECEPTION BY BHAVNAGAR MODH COMMUNITY

[December 9 1915]

I am grateful to all my friends of the [Modh] community, who invited me here, for the love they have shown to me. My Modh friends showed me the same love even when I landed in Bombay. I do not deserve it, for I have rendered no service to the community. Besides, my friends and members of the community ask me sometimes what good I have done to it, and accuse me of forsaking swadharma\(^1\) and taking up paradharma\(^2\). In reply, I shall merely say that I serve the

---

1. In reply to an address from the citizens, Sir Prabhashanker Pattani, the State Diwan, presiding
2. Duty natural to oneself; vide Bhagavad Gita, III. 35.
3. Duty natural to someone else country to the best of my ability and that, the community being but a part of it, I believe service of the country includes that of the community. You express unbounded love for me at the moment but remember, friends, not to obstruct me when I do something which you may not approve of. Even in those circumstances, I shall crave your blessings. I feel so sad that even my own people do not know me. I cannot keep with me a thing like this made of silver, since I observe the rule of non-possession. If I do, a thief may try to steal it and I may then have to resort to violence for protecting it; this, again, will violate my rule of non-violence. I will therefore get it melted and use the money for the purposes of the Ashram. I thank you all, gentlemen, and my friends of the community.

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 19-12-1915

89. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M. K. GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,

December 10[1915]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I have your two letters delivered at the same time. One of your letters complaints of absence of any letter from me. I can only tell you that I have not missed a single week.

Just now I have been travelling in connection with the Gokhale Memorial. Your letters have followed me at one of the places. You question whether you will be able to follow the life here after the experiences you are going through there and especially after the changes introduced here. Well, the temptations which I feared here have been no temptations and I fell all the stronger for my stay here. Will it not be so for you also? Anyway, do not anticipate any trouble please. I think you will find the life pleasant enough here. But when

---

1 The casket containing the address
2 The source is damaged here.
will that golden time come? I am praying for it to come soon and I know you are too.

With love,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

90. LETTER TO MAGANBHAI H. PATEL

AMRELI,
Magsar Sud 3 [December 10, 1915]

BHAIISHRI 5 MAGANBHAI,

I have your letter. If Danibehn’s\(^1\) cough has not gone she should reduce the intake of oily foods.

It is all right to give sugar separately to Chi. Chanchi and keep the shelf clean. Tell Sundaram that I have prohibited sugar for him. However, Sundaram does need to be given time.

There is no harm in opening the letters. Send Miss Schlesin’s\(^3\) letter too.

Tell Sundaram that if he leaves before I return it will be on his own responsibility. I am writing to him.

We are having good collections everywhere.

People at Bhavnagar were very enthusiastic. There is a similar atmosphere at Amreli. I am sending a telegram about our programme.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

\(^1\) From Gandhiji’s itinerary this letter appears to have been written in 1915. Gandhiji was in Amreli from December 10 to 12 in 1915. Magsar Sud 3 however fell on December 9.

\(^2\) Wife of Dudhabhai Dafda

\(^3\) Sonja Schlesin who joined Gandhiji as a steno-typist and later played an important role in the satyagraha struggle in South Africa.
[PS.]
Send more copies of the rules and regulations. Our programme is as follows:

Bagasara Sunday, Porbundar Monday evening, leave Porbundar
Tuesday and reach Rajkot Wednesday. Reach Wadhwan Thursday.
Send letter to me at Wadhwan at Free Library, Wadhwan City. I shall write later about the rest.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 11012. Courtesy: Suryakant C. Patel

91. LETTER TO MAGANBHAI H. PATEL

HADALA,
Sunday [December 12, 1915]

BHAISHRI 5 MAGANBHAI,

I have received your mail from Bagasara. If you wish to pay a visit to Dharmaj, you may do so after I come. I am worried all the time that Shanti has still not got over his cough and Shivprasad is not rallying; I fret about it night and day. I am making enquiries. I am also consulting vaidyas. Do we suffer from some major deficiency?
We must find out what it is and where it lies. The visit to Porbundar is off. We shall reach Limbdi on Monday evening. We shall go to Wadhwan on Tuesday. We shall be at Limbdi on Tuesday till 3 o’clock. Hence it will be all right if you send the next post to the Free Library at Wadhwan. From Wadhwan we shall go to Dhrangadhra on Wednesday, expecting to be back the same day. Hence that day’s post can also be sent to Wadhwan. We expect to reach Viramgam on Thursday. You may therefore send Wednesday’s post to Viramgam.
You can get the address from Punjabhai.

I am having wonderful experience everywhere. There is no time to write about it.

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 11011. Courtesy: Suryakant C. Patel

1 From Gandhiji’s itinerary it would appear that this and the following letter were written in 1915 Gandhiji was in Hadala on December 12, 1915
92. LETTER TO MAGANBHAI H. PATEL

HADALA,

Sunday [December 12, 1915]

BHAISHRI \(^1\) MAGANBHAI

I visited Bagasara today. I got another batch of letters there. There was one from Shivpujan too. His argument seems to be correct. We cannot experiment with the children who are put in our charge. Therefore, if you consider it necessary, please introduce immediately provision of ghee and milk for the sick and for others who desire to take these. Supply ghee to those who want it and arrange to get milk in sufficient quantity. I think there is need to effect this change and watch matters for a few months. It is certainly bad that so many should be in poor health. If anyone needs buttermilk, we should give it to him and see. Nobody should deprive himself of ghee from shyness. Only those who are under a vow may abstain from ghee, or those who even though not under a vow want to do without it. Shanti should not be given oil even in vegetables. The expenditure on dried fruit should be brought down.

Shivpujan complains of undercooking. Look into the matter. Everything should be cooked well even if it takes more time.

I have nothing to say about the money sent for Anna. Both of you enjoy a certain position and so what you have done at the moment can be justified. This cannot be done for Mama\(^2\). Payment could not be made to Krishnaswamy because there was no question of his becoming manager. Mama of course has almost reached the position of manager. Moreover in such work we must have one strict rule.

I am sending Shivpujan’s letter for you to see. Be more lenient, not less, in my absence. I do not wish that the students should have complaints to make against you. It is necessary that Shivprasad, Shanti, Chhotam and others should get well at once. Give milk to Sundaram. He can have only a dhoti which we all have. We cannot

---

\(^1\) V. L. Phadke, a teacher from Baroda, who joined Gandhiji along with Harihar Sharma give him one with a border. If cold rotis do not suit him it is better to avoid them.

\(^2\) ibid

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 11007. Courtesy: Suryakant C. Patel

93. SPEECH AT BAGASRA ON VIRAMGAM CUSTOMS CORDON

December 12, 1915

Mohanlal [sic] Karamchand Gandhi was in Bagasra on the 12th instant, coming _via_ Hadala from Amreli. He was accompanied by Darbar Shri Vajsurwala, of Hadala, Devchand Uttamchand, Bar-at-Law of Jetpur, his son and a man from Rajkot. Vakil Chhaganlal Ghordhan gave an address of welcome to Gandhi.

Gandhi in reply said he would now try his best to get Government to abolish the Customs arrangements at Viramgaon. His ostensible reason for touring Kathiawar was to collect subscriptions for the Gokhale Memorial Fund. He collected some Rs. 250 at the meeting.

On the 15th December Gandhi visited Wadhwan City and Camp when he addressed meetings and asked for subscriptions towards the Fund. He went to Dhrangadhra by the 1.15 p.m. train the same day.

_Bombay Secret Abstracts, 1916, p. 15_

94. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M.K. GANDHI
AHMEDABAD,
December 18, 1915

MY DEAR FRIEND,

There is no letter from you this week. I have just returned from my tour. I am unable therefore to give you a long letter this week.

Dr. Mehta is here for a few days. There is still sickness at the

---

1. At a meeting in the ginning and weaving factory of Ratilal Motichand which most of the inhabitants of Bagasra attended

2. Vide also “Speech on Viramgam Customs Cordon”, 23-10-1916.
Ashram. Somehow or other I cannot get rid of it. I am endeavouring to find out the cause. This time it is Parthasarathy\(^1\).

_Yours ever,_

_OLD FRIEND_

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

---

95. _DRAFT LETTER FOR V. G. DESAI_

[Before December 21, 1915]\(^1\)

I observe that Government servants are not allowed to attend the Indian National Congress session even as visitors. It is my intention to attend the Congress session as a visitor. I feel that the prohibition referred to is an undue interference with one’s personal liberty. If therefore you consider that I am a Government servant in the sense in which His Excellency the Governor has used the term, I beg herewith to tender my resignation.

From the original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5686. Courtesy: Valji Govindji Desai

96. _TELEGRAM TO V. G. DESAI_

_December 21, 1915_

_WITHDRAW RESIGNATION, ASK PERMISSION ATTEND CONGRESS._

From the original as delivered: C.W. 5682. Courtesy: Valji Govindji Desai

---

\(^1\) The name misspelt “Bharathsarathi” here and in a few other letters has been corrected to read thus.

\(^2\) Valji Govindji Desai, sometime lecturer in English, Gujarat College, Ahmedabad; resigned from service and joined Gandhiji; translated Satyagraha in South Africa and other works of Gandhiji

\(^3\) This evidently was drafted before “Telegram to V. G. Desai” and “Letter to V. G. Desai”, 21-12-1915.
97. LETTER TO V. G. DESAI

SERVANTS OF INDIA SOCIETY,
GIRGAUM,
[BOMBAY,]

Tuesday, December 21, 1915

BHAISHRI VALJI GOVINDJI,

I hope you got the telegram I sent you today. After coming here, I learn that any [Government] servant can go with the permission of his superior. I think it will be proper for you to apply for such permission. If it is refused, you may proceed to resign. In the telegram, I asked you to withdraw the resignation. As a matter of fact, however, your letter has not been treated as amounting to resignation. All the same, I think you should acquaint Robertson with the latest position.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5683. Courtesy: Valji Govindji Desai

98. SPEECH AT INDUSTRIAL CONFERENCE, BOMBAY

December 24, 1915

Mr. Gandhi in support of the Resolution\(^2\) said that they could not keep their industries if their industrial population went away from India and returned, if it ever did, a broken reed, a moral wreck. The two adjectives, “injurious” and “immoral” were not chosen haphazard but they bore the “imprimatur” of their deceased countryman, Mr. Gokhale. He urged them to insist on the abolition of the system even while the war was going on.

\(^1\) At the eleventh session, with Sir Dorab Tata as President and Sir Dinshaw Petit as Chairman, Reception Committee

\(^2\) Which read: “This Conference tenders its respectful thanks to H. E. Lord Hardinge, Viceroy of India, for all he has done for Indian labour outside India and for recommending its abolition to the Secretary of State and submits that, in the highest interests of the country, the system of Indian indentured labour is undesirable and urges its abolition, looking to the highly injurious and immoral effects of the same, as soon as possible.”
Mr. K. N. Aiya Iyer seconded the Resolution. He said that this wretched system no human ingenuity could mend and, therefore, must be ended.

Mr. Muzumdar, in supporting, said that no more despicable system could be invented by man.

The Hindu, 25-12-1915

99. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M.K. GANDHI

BOMBAY,

December 25, 1915

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I have come to Bombay for the Congress week. There is no sincerity about anything. ‘Much cry and little work’ proverb applies most appropriately. What I should have done I do not know. The boys are with me as volunteers and they are not wanted. I made a great mistake in bringing the boys at all. Mrs. Gandhi is not here. She does not yet appreciate my action about the Pariah friend. Manilal too has remained behind. Dr. Mehta is here. He is likely to be here yet for a few days.

Imamsaheb and young Sorabji have arrived from Natal.
More next week.

Yours ever,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

100. SPEECH ON INDIA AND THE COLONIES AT BOMBAY CONGRESS SESSION

December 28, 1915

Mr. M. K. Gandhi (Bombay) moved Resolution X regarding India and the Colonies on 28th December 1915 at the 30th Indian National Congress session held at Bombay.

He said:

MR. PRESIDENT AND FRIENDS,

The resolution that stands in my name reads thus:
This Congress regrets that the existing laws affecting Indians in South Africa and Canada have not, in spite of the liberal and imperialistic declarations of Colonial statesmen, been justly and equally administered and this Congress trusts that the self-governing Colonies will extend to the Indian emigrants equal rights with European emigrants and that the Imperial Government will use all possible means to secure the rights which have been hitherto unjustly withheld from them, thus causing widespread dissatisfaction and discontent.

May I please appeal to the Press to alter the word “equally” to “equitably” because that was the word given last night at the Subjects Committee meeting?

Friends, it is an irony of fate that, whilst this vast assembly will be regretting the attitude, the hostile attitude that has been adopted by the self-governing Colonies, a contingent of your countrymen formed in South Africa will be nearing the theatre of war in order to help the sick and the wounded. I am in possession of facts in connection with this contingent formed in South Africa, which shows that it is composed of the middle classes which, according to The Times of India, are going to form the future self-governing nation. These men are drawn from ex-indentured Indians and their children; they are drawn from the petty hawkers, the toilers and the traders—all these men compose this great contingent. And yet the Colonies do not consider it necessary to alter their attitude, nor do I see the logic in their altering their policy. It is the fashion now-a-days to consider that because we have taken our humble share in the war by not being disloyal to the Government at the present juncture, we are entitled to rights which have been hitherto withheld from us as if those rights were withheld from us because our loyalty was suspected. No, my friends. If they have been withheld from us, the reasons are different and those reasons will have to be altered. They are due, some of them, to undying prejudices; they are due, some of them, to economic causes and these will have to be examined. The prejudices will have to be borne down.

What are the hardships that our countrymen are labouring under in South Africa, in Canada and in the other self-governing Colonies? In South Africa, the settlement of 1914 secured what the passive resisters were fighting for and nothing more and they were fighting for the restoration of legal equality in connection with emigration from British India and certain other things. That legal equality has been restored, the other things granted, but the domestic troubles still remain, and if it was not the custom unfortunately inherited for the last thirty years that the language, the predominant language in the assembly, should be English, our Madras friends will have taken good care to learn one of the northern vernaculars and then there are men enough from South Africa who would tell you in one of our own tongues the difficulties that we have to go through even now in South Africa. They are in connection with the holding of landed property; they are in connection with men who, having been once domiciled in South Africa, return to South Africa; there are difficulties in connection with the admission of their children and in connection with trade licences. These are, it I may call them so, bread and butter difficulties. There are other difficulties which I shall not enumerate just now. In Canada, it is not possible for those brave Sikhs who are domiciled there to bring their wives and children. (Cries of “Shame”.) That is the difficulty in Canada. The law is the same but the administration is vilely unequal. I feel that this unequal administration will not be altered because of the splendid aid which India is said to have rendered to the Empire.

Then how are these difficulties to be met? I do not intend to go into details, but the Congress proposes that this difficulty can be met by an appeal to the sense of justice of Colonial statesmen and by an appeal to the Imperial Government. I fear that the Congress can only do this. Lord Hardinge, only a few months ago, made a fervent appeal to Indian publicists and to Indian statesmen for helping him to come to an honourable solution which will retain the dignity of India and at the same time not cause any trouble to the self-governing Colonies. Lord Hardinge is still waiting for an answer. That answer is not supplied by the Congress nor can it be supplied by the Congress. It has to be supplied by associations such as the Imperial Citizenship Association, the specialists, if I may call them so. The Congress has given them the lead and it is for these associations to frame the details in which they will have to examine the rival claims and offer to Lord Hardinge a detailed solution, a solution which will satisfy the Colonial Governments as well as the Indian people and will not take away any thing whatsoever from the just demands that this resolution makes. With these words, I have much pleasure in proposing this resolution. (Loud applause.)

Report of the Thirtieth Indian National Congress (Bombay), pp. 62-4
101. FRAGMENT OF LETTER TO RATANSHI SODHA

[1915]

Write a letter to Rajkot and leave Chi. Reva under my charge. I don’t expect, however, that you will do this, for I think that, while you are strong in some, you are very weak in other ways.

It is not at all necessary for you to send a suit for Chhotu. I get all the clothes we need made here. If you can save anything, send some money towards the expenditure on his account.

Due regards from

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 3420. Courtesy: Revashanker Sodha

102. DIARY FOR 1915

JANUARY 9, SATURDAY
Arrived in Bombay.

JANUARY 13, WEDNESDAY
Gathering at Mount Petit.

JANUARY 14, THURSDAY
Interview with Governor.

1 Only the last page of the letter is available.

2 The letter appears to have been written in 1915. The exact date cannot be ascertained.

3 Revashanker, son of the addressee

4 Another son of the addressee

5 In Gandhiji’s own hand, in Gujarati, the Diary is for the most part a factual record of Gandhiji’s movements and activities, the persons he met, the places and institutions he visited, the addresses received, the interviews given, the speeches delivered and the letters and telegrams sent. It also records, in some detail, developments during the year in regard to the Ashram he proposed to establish.

6 The pages of the printed Diary contain besides the English dates, the corresponding dates in the Vikram, Hijri, Saka and Parsi eras. Only the English dates are reproduced here.

7 Vide “Interview to The Bombay Chronicle”.

8 This should be under January 12; vide “Speech at Public Reception, Bombay”, 12-1-1915.
JANUARY 15, FRIDAY
Address from women. Left for Rajkot.

JANUARY 16, SATURDAY
Night at Vankaner. Chhotu joined. Umiyashanker came to see.

JANUARY 17, SUNDAY
Arrived in Rajkot in morning. Address¹, etc.

JANUARY 18, MONDAY
Saw Thakore Saheb.

JANUARY 21, THURSDAY

JANUARY 22, FRIDAY
Left Jetpur by special train. Address at Dhoraji.² Left Dhoraji. Reached Porbunder. Devchand Parekh accompanied.

JANUARY 24, SUNDAY
Address from Modh community.³

JANUARY 25, MONDAY
Address in Porbunder.⁴ Also one from women.

JANUARY 26, TUESDAY
Reached Gondal. Stayed at Patwari’s. Ranchhod, Shanti and Gokuldas joined at Porbunder.

JANUARY 27, WEDNESDAY
Went to see Thakore Saheb. Address⁵—Visit to Orphanage. Left for Rajkot.

JANUARY 28, THURSDAY
Meeting with Nagji Swami.

¹ Vide “Speech at Rajkot in Reply to Citizens’ Address”.
² Vide “Speech at Reception at Darbargadh”.
³ This should be under January 25; vide “Speech at Reception by Porbunder Modh Community”, 25-1-1915.
⁴ Vide “Speech at Porbunder in Reply to Citizens’ Address”.
⁵ Vide “Speech at Reception by Gondal Citizens”.
JANUARY 29, FRIDAY

Saw Mr. Sladen.

JANUARY 30, SATURDAY

Address from women at Rajkot. Took Ba to see Mrs. Sladen.

JANUARY 31, SUNDAY

Went to hear Nagji Swami’s lecture. Paid Rs. 1,650 to Fuli in full settlement of her claims. Decided to put it out to interest. Shukla paid the money. He decided to bear Fuli’s maintenance charges himself. Gangabhabhi to be paid Rs. 20 & sister Rs. 10 per month, with effect from today. Paid Rs. 8.5 as interest to Fuli. Paid Rs. 3 to Gokibehn for the month. Paid Rs. 14 to Gangabhabhi.

FEBRUARY 1, MONDAY

FEBRUARY 2, TUESDAY

Address in Ahmedabad. Met Bapubhai at his place. Went to Miyakhan’s & Patwari’s. Address from women—Talk with leaders regarding settling down in Ahmedabad. Jamnadas left for Bombay.

FEBRUARY 3, WEDNESDAY

Went to see land. Lunch at Ambalalbhai’s. Address by Modh community. Tea at the club in the afternoon. In the evening at Asharambhai’s. Met Akhandanand.

FEBRUARY 4, THURSDAY

Left Ahmedabad. Harilal and Gokuldas stayed on. Reached Bombay at night.

FEBRUARY 5, FRIDAY

Meeting with Patwari. Discussion about caste restrictions.

1 Millowners of Ahmedabad
2 Vide “Speech at Reception by Ahmedabad Citizens”.
3 Millowners of Ahmedabad
4 A sanyasin: founder of Sasta Sahitya Karyalaya, a publishing firm bringing out low-priced books on religion, etc.
FEBRUARY 6, SATURDAY

Saw Bhagvanlal. Paid him the full amount of Rs. 2900 in the matter concerning Modi. Settled the account with Modi. Total came to Rs. 6000/-. This settles the account with both brothers. Sent the documents about the house to Shukla. Another meeting with Patwari.

FEBRUARY 7, SUNDAY

Went to see School\textsuperscript{1} for untouchables. Amritlal\textsuperscript{2} & Kesariprasad stayed with me last night. Had a talk with them. Left at night for Poona.

FEBRUARY 8, MONDAY

Reached Poona, accompanied by Gokuldas. Discussion about my joining the [Servants of India] Society.

FEBRUARY 11, THURSDAY

Saw Prof. Barve’s institutions, etc. Had gone to Shri Tilak’s.

FEBRUARY 13, SATURDAY

Public meeting—women’s and general. Mr. Gokhale fainted.\textsuperscript{4}

FEBRUARY 14, SUNDAY

Went to Bombay. Gokuldas, Kunzru and Devadhar\textsuperscript{5} accompanied. Also Balvantrai. Talk with Gokhale from four in the morning. Presided at function of Sanatana Dharma Niti Mandal.\textsuperscript{6} Went to theatre. Meeting with Sorabji’s sister.

FEBRUARY 15, MONDAY

Meeting with Robertson. Visit to Kapol Hostel.\textsuperscript{7} Left for Bolpur accompanied by Nagindas.

FEBRUARY 16, TUESDAY

On the way.

\textsuperscript{1} Vide “Speech at Mission School, Bombay”.
\textsuperscript{2} Probably Amritlal V. Thakkar, a member of the Servants of India Society and a leading worker in the cause of depressed classes and aboriginal tribes \textsuperscript{3} Vide “Speech at Poona Public Meeting”.
\textsuperscript{4} Vide An Autobiography, Part V, Ch. II
\textsuperscript{5} C. K. Devadhar, a member of the Servants of India Society, and later its President \textsuperscript{6} Vide “Speech at Prize Distribution to Students in Bombay”.
\textsuperscript{7} Vide “Speech at Kapol Hostel, Bombay”.
FEBRUARY 17, WEDNESDAY
Andrews and Santokbabu came to see in Burdwan. Went to Khristi’s. Reached Bolpur at night. Had experience of old-style hospitality.¹

FEBRUARY 18, THURSDAY
Talk with Andrews.

FEBRUARY 19, FRIDAY
Further talk with Andrews.

FEBRUARY 20, SATURDAY
Received telegram about death of my political master.² Left Bolpur. Sent cable to J. B.³ Andrews accompanied up to Burdwan. Had a long talk. Talk with teachers about reforms. Difficulties on train.⁴ Maganlal, Nagindas & Ba accompanied.

FEBRUARY 21, SUNDAY
On the way.

FEBRUARY 22, MONDAY
Reached Kalyan at noon. Saw Mr. Kaul. Reached Poona at night. Brief talk with members [of Servants of India Society].

FEBRUARY 23, TUESDAY
Long talk with members. Wrote letters to Mahatmaji, Ranchhodbhai and others.

FEBRUARY 25, THURSDAY
Talk with Shinde about Bhangis⁵, etc.

FEBRUARY 26, FRIDAY
Discussion with members about this.

FEBRUARY 27, SATURDAY
Started Marathi. Tried to think out a solution to the problem of Bhangis.

¹ Vide “Speech at Santiniketan Reception”.
² Vide “Telegram to H. N. Kunzru” and “Telegram to Karsandas Chitalia”.
³ Johannesburg; vide “Cable to Transvaal B. I. Association”.
⁴ This should be under February 21; vide “Letter to Chief Traffic Manager, E. I. Railway”, 23-2-1915.
⁵ One of the communities traditionally regarded as untouchable
FEBRUARY 28, MONDAY
Offered oblations at river.¹ Maganlal went to Bombay,

MARCH 3, WEDNESDAY
Public meeting in Poona. Governor presided. The first resolution² in my charge. Left for Bombay by night train.

MARCH 4, THURSDAY
In Bombay in the morning—Saw Jehangir Petit and Narottamdas. Left Bombay at night. Tapidas and Mulji came along, latter with his wife.

MARCH 5, FRIDAY
Reached Santiniketan. Meeting with Gurudev. Fakiri had temperature on way.

MARCH 6, SATURDAY
Went down to Santiniketan. Meeting with Gurudev.

MARCH 7, SUNDAY
Went to Gurudev’s place with Andrews Talk with Harilal. Lecture by Gurudev.

MARCH 8, MONDAY
Gurudev left for Calcutta. Had a talk with Andrews about his conduct. Met teachers at night. Discussed education.

MARCH 9, TUESDAY
Went round with Sanitary Committee. No end of filth.

MARCH 10, WEDNESDAY

MARCH 11, THURSDAY
Hot words between Andrews & Sarod Babu. Andrews apologized. Left for Calcutta at night. Harilal and Ramdas accompanied. Met Gurudev at Station. Gave Rs. 200/- to Andrews on account of the boys. Took the money from Dattatreya³.

¹ Vide An Autobiography, Part V, Ch. VI.
² Vide “Speech at Gokhale Condolence meeting. Poona”.
³ Dattatreya Balkrishna Kalelkar
MARCH 12, FRIDAY
Reached Calcutta. Big crowd. Stayed at Bhupen Babu’s. Address from Gujarati Mandal.\(^1\)

MARCH 13, SATURDAY
Meeting of Marwaris. Meeting in Cassim Bazaar.\(^2\) Meeting with Moti Babu. Party at Bhupen Babu’s. Harilal’s final decision to separate.

MARCH 14, SUNDAY
Left for Rangoon with Ramdas, Rajangam, Chhagan, etc. No end to filth and over-crowding [on the boat].\(^3\)

MARCH 15, MONDAY
Wrote a good many letters.

MARCH 16, TUESDAY
Wrote more letters.

MARCH 17, WEDNESDAY
Reached Rangoon. Received, etc., same as usual.

MARCH 18, THURSDAY
Went round with Doctor\(^4\). There was a party in the evening at his place.

MARCH 19, FRIDAY
Visited garden. Wrote letters. Sent telegram to Malaviya about Gokhale Memorial. Suggested spending the amount for promoting Hindu-Muslim unity.

MARCH 20, SATURDAY
Visited park. Wrote letters. Walked the distance both ways.

MARCH 21, SUNDAY
Went to Mulla Dawood’s & Jamal Sheth’s. Latter was not present. Wrote letters to England. Visit to Chetty temple.

MARCH 22, MONDAY
Meeting with Sen. Dinner at Popatbhai’s.

\(^1\) Vide “Speech a Reception by Calcutta Modh Community”.
\(^2\) Vide “Speech at Calcutta Reception”.
\(^3\) Vide “Letter to Agents of B. I. S. N. Company”, 19-3-1915.
\(^4\) Dr. Pranjivan Mehta
MARCH 23, TUESDAY
Anna expressed desire to join me. Asked him to think further and tell me tomorrow morning. Told him about Kotwal’s and Maganlal’s vows. Public meeting—address.

MARCH 24, WEDNESDAY
Anna still of same mind. Expressed urgent desire to join forthwith. But Doctor advised against it. Garden party.

MARCH 25, THURSDAY
Went to see groundnut mill. To Jamal’s garden in the evening. Talk with him about reforms.

MARCH 26, FRIDAY
Left Rangoon. Popatbhai accompanied.

MARCH 27, SATURDAY
On the ship.

MARCH 28, SUNDAY
Reached Calcutta in the evening. Stayed with Mr. Das.

MARCH 29, MONDAY
Address by Hindu Sabha. Meeting with Mr. Holland. Party at Mr. Das’s.

MARCH 30, TUESDAY
Meeting with teachers of National College. Discussion with members of Indian Association. Meeting with Mrs. Roy, also with Mr. H. Bose and Kumar Babu.

MARCH 31, WEDNESDAY
Brief address to students.¹ Mr. Lyon in the chair. Left for Bolpur. Marwaris gave Rs. 300/- to cover expenses of journey to Bolpur. Reached Bolpur at night. Pranlal came along with me.

APRIL 1, THURSDAY
Visit to an ailing boy, Saw Andrews’ miserable position. Meeting with Gurudev.

¹ Vide “Speech at students’ Hall, Calcutta”.
APRIL 2, FRIDAY
Talk with Gurudev about Andrews and then with the teachers. Finally with Andrews in the presence of the teachers. Telegram from Kunzru asking us to reach Hardwar by the 5th. Attended on Nepal Babu.

APRIL 3, SATURDAY
Last meeting with boys with Gurudev as Chairman. Kept Maganlal and Ramdas at Bolpur to help in the kitchen. Left for Hardwar with the rest. Shanker Pandit accompanied.

APRIL 4, SUNDAY
In the train.

APRIL 5, MONDAY
Reached Hardwar in the evening. Accommodated in Sarvannath’s garden. Meeting with Kali Kamaliwala Bava Ramnath.

APRIL 6, TUESDAY

APRIL 7, WEDNESDAY

APRIL 8, THURSDAY
Visit to Jawalapur Mahavidyalaya. Visit to Hindu Sabha and Rishikul. Address from Gurukul students. Raojibhai arrived, also Kotwal.

APRIL 9, FRIDAY
Vow to have in India only five articles of food during 24 hours, and that before sunset. Water not included in five articles. Cardamom, etc., included. Groundnut and its oil to count as one article. Raojibhai vowed to abstain from milk and milk-products.

1 Vide An Autobiography, Part V, Ch. VIII.
2 Vide “Speech at Gurukul, Hardwar”.
APRIL 10, SATURDAY
Vow on this date—see entry under last date. Visit to other institutions. Dharsimal, whom I met on way to Rishikesh, seems to be gradually drawing closer.

APRIL 11, SUNDAY

APRIL 12, MONDAY
Arrived in Delhi—with Ba and. . . bhai¹, also Kotwal, Raojibhai, and Deodhar. Parted company with all except Deodhar. Meeting with Mr. Alwatt and Mr. Weston. Saw Kutub Minar. Many thoughts.

APRIL 13, TUESDAY

APRIL 14, WEDNESDAY

APRIL 15, THURSDAY
In the train.

APRIL 16, FRIDAY
In the train. Under police surveillance—interrogated.

APRIL 17, SATURDAY
Arrived in Madras in the evening. Large crowd at station. They drew the carriage. Meeting with Mrs. Besant. Stayed with Natesan.

APRIL 18, SUNDAY
started meeting people.

APRIL 19, MONDAY²
Met many people.

¹ Not legible here
² Vide “Speech on Arrival at Madras”.

100 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
APRIL 20, TUESDAY
Met many people.

APRIL 21, WEDNESDAY
Address by South African League.¹

APRIL 22, THURSDAY

APRIL 23, FRIDAY
Address from Mahajan Sabha.² Slept at Tyobji’s.

APRIL 24, SATURDAY
Meeting of Muslim League.³ Dinner with lawyers.⁴

APRIL 25, SUNDAY
Dinner with Bohra friends. Social Service League.⁵ Women’s meeting. Arya Vaishya Sabha.⁶

APRIL 26, MONDAY
Function at Mr. Subhramaniyam’s, the Rev. Father’s and S. Shrinivas Ayyangar’s.

APRIL 27, TUESDAY
Function at Mr. Simon’s. Function at Young Men’s Christian Association.⁸ Address from students.

¹ Vide “Speech at Public Reception, Madras”.
² Vide “Speech at Reception by Mahajan Sabha and Congress Committee, Madras”.
³ Vide “Speech at Reception by Muslim League, Madras”.
⁴ Vide “Speech at Madras Law Dinner”.
⁵ Vide “Speech at Social Service League, Madras”.
⁶ Vide “Speech at Reception by Arya Vaishya Mahasabha, Madras”.
⁷ Vide “Speech at Reception by Indian Christians, Madras”.
⁸ Vide “Speech at Y. M. C. A., Madras”.

VOL. 15: 21 MAY, 1915 - 31 AUGUST, 1917
APRIL 28, WEDNESDAY
Talk with teachers of Pachayappa College. Function at Mrs. Besant’s. Aluri Ramraj’s decision to join. Age 29, parents dead, language Telugu, no knowledge of Tamil, is a B.A., knows Sanskrit, has two elder brothers. Has always been a brahmachari. Vegetarian for 15 years. Prepared to take six vows. Doesn’t ask for railway fare. Will come in July.

APRIL 29, THURSDAY

APRIL 30, FRIDAY
Reached Mayavaram in morning. Left for Tranquebar in tonga. Stopped at Semnarkoil on the way. Meeting at Tranquebar in the evening. Address from Panchamas.

MAY 1, SATURDAY
Went to Ramapuram and Teliyadi in morning. Left for Mayavaram in evening. Address there. There are a thousand handlooms in Mayavaram, manufacturing women’s fabrics. Took train to Madras at night. Naiker, Selvan’s son, accompanied.

MAY 2, SUNDAY
Reached Madras. Talk with Nate[san] about Panchamas. Meeting with students.

MAY 3, MONDAY
Went for dinner at Mr. Shastriar’s. Left for Nellore in the evening. Stayed with De[wan] Ba[hadur] Ramchandra Rao there. Accompanied by Naiker and Ada. Mr. C. Srinivas Ayyangar gave Rs. 500/- Entrusted the amount to Natesan.

1 Vide “Speech at Reception by Gujaratis, Madras”.
2 Vide “Speech at Reception at Tranquebar”.
3 Vide “Speech at Reception by Depressed Classes Society, Tranquebar”.
4 Vide “Speech at Reception at Mayavaram”.

102 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
MAY 4, TUESDAY
Ada fell ill. He got tired of fruit-diet and ate cooked food. Gave it to Naiker also. Attended Conference. Saw Prahlad Akhyan in Telugu.

MAY 5, WEDNESDAY
Attended Conference. Also Social Conference. There was Sanatana Dharma Conference as well.

MAY 6, THURSDAY
Attended both Conferences. Saw swadeshi cloth. Resolution about us. Reply. Address again at night from students. Reply to it.

MAY 7, FRIDAY
Departure in morning. Reached Madras. League meeting. Also, drama on Harishchandra by Suguna Vilas Sabha. Accompanied by Sundaram. Left for Bangalore. . . a fraud. Forbade him to join. One student gave Rs. 10. Gokuldas gave a draft for Rs. 1,000/-.

MAY 8, SATURDAY
Reached Bangalore in the morning. Much excitement. Natesan accompanied, Met Surju’s wife. Arranged for Rs. 20 to be given to her. Have decided to pay her Rs. 10/- a month for 2__ years. Unveiled Mr. Gokhale’s bust in Bangalore. Public meeting. Meeting with Diwan Saheb.

MAY 9, SUNDAY
On the way.

MAY 10, MONDAY
Reached Bombay. Put up in Society. Gave the draft for 1,000/- to Mani. Left Bombay.

MAY 11, TUESDAY
Arrived in Ahmedabad. Ada gave Rs. 50/- towards his fare. It came to Rs. 66-7-0 up to Ahmedabad. Went with Jivanlal to inspect a house.

1 Vide “Speech at Nellore”.
2 Vide “Speech at Nellore,” 5-5-1915.
3 Vide “Speech at Students’ Meeting, Nellore”.
4 Vide “Statement at Indian South African League Meeting, Madras”.
5 V. A. Sundaram, later Secretary to Madan Mohan Malaviya
6 Vide “Speech at Bangalore”.
7 Vide “Speech at Civic Reception, Bangalore”.

VOL. 15: 21 MAY, 1915 - 31 AUGUST, 1917 103
Drew up estimate\(^1\) of expenditure and handed it over to Sheth Mangaldas.

MAY 12, WEDNESDAY
Talk with Sheth Mangaldas. He started a fast to cure his cough.

MAY 13, THURSDAY
Took Rs. 200/- from Sheth and sent to Maganlal. Wired to him to come away. Stayed a day longer at Sheth’s request. Meeting with Doctor Madhavlal.

MAY 14, FRIDAY
Left Ahmedabad.

MAY 15, SATURDAY
Came to Rajkot. Meeting with Ranchhodbhai.

MAY 16, SUNDAY
Spent in Rajkot.

MAY 17, MONDAY

MAY 18, TUESDAY
Shamaldas and Gangabhahbi signed Power of Attorney. Sent a telegram to Maganlal and another to Limbdi.

MAY 19, WEDNESDAY
Reached Limbdi. Shamaldas accompanying, also Santok and the girls.\(^2\) Met Thakore Saheb in the morning. A procession. Had a long discussion with Thakore Saheb in the evening, and also during afternoon, about education, etc.

MAY 20, THURSDAY
Reached Ahmedabad in the morning. Collected our things. Had a pot\(^3\) carried to the new house and performed vastu\(^4\).

---

\(^1\) Vide “The Ashram: An Estimate of Expenditure”.

\(^2\) Vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”.

\(^3\) It is the custom, while moving to another house or occupying a newly built house, to have first a pot filled with water carried to it by an unmarried girl or a married woman whose husband is alive.

\(^4\) A religious ceremony invoking the gods to make their abode in the house.
MAY 21, FRIDAY
Nanalal Kavi\(^1\) and others visited. Had an acute attack of superficial inflammation of the lungs.

MAY 22, SATURDAY
Inflammation has subsided. Went over to the new house. Received telegram that the boys had left. Wired to Kunzru.

MAY 23, SUNDAY
Maganlal and others arrived.

MAY 24, MONDAY
Shamaldas, Shanti, Ranchhod & Kaku left for Rajkot.

MAY 25, TUESDAY
Made some beginning in school routine. Doctor Mahadev Prasad and Bhogilal Kantharia started teaching.

MAY 26, WEDNESDAY
Received boards, etc., from Jivanlalbhai. Ranchhodbhai and Nanalal turned up. Letter from Natesan, with Rs. 1,000/-. Nanalal gave Rs. 300/-.

MAY 27, THURSDAY
Chhaganlal Master paid a visit. Gave Re. 1/-. Madhavdas came and left his son Vrajlal. Gave Rs. 1,450/- to Nanalal to be deposited with a Sharaf.

MAY 28, FRIDAY
Popatbhai and his adopted sister Gangabehn came. Some household things from Punjabhai arrived. Received a cheque for Rs. 3,000/- from Mr. Natesan.\(^2\) Manilal Kothari called.

MAY 29, SATURDAY, JETH VAD 1
Raichandbhai’s pupil, Manasukhbhai came to see. Pain again. Fasted. Narandas’s wife came.

\(^1\) An eminent Gujarati poet (1877-1946); son of Dalpatram, himself a poet, Nanalal was a prolific and versatile writer and distinguished himself as the greatest lyricist of Gujarat.

\(^2\) Vide “Letter to G. A. Natesan”.

VOL. 15: 21 MAY, 1915 - 31 AUGUST, 1917 105
MAY 30, SUNDAY
Saw Sheth Mangaldas. Attended Raichandbhai’s death anniversary. Popatbhai gave Rs. 100/-, Ranchhodbhai Rs. 10 & Manasukhbhai Rs. 1/-. Prof. Ramamurti came.

MAY 31, MONDAY
All went to Ramamurti’s show. Maganlal stayed behind to attend on Maganbhai. Vithalrai came. Some household things also. The rest where they are.

JUNE 1, TUESDAY
Maganbhai’s fever continues, though reduced. Besides, had been obliged to go to Ramamurti’s show. Noticed falsehood among the boys. And so started a fast. Lying admitted. Broke the fast in the evening. Maganlal brought the household things. Received Rs. 25/- from Keshavlalbhai.

JUNE 2, WEDNESDAY
Haribhai came with family.

JUNE 4, FRIDAY
Ranchhodlal, a teacher from Limbdi, came. Received Rs. 100/- from the Queen-mother of Rajkot. News of Kaisar-i-Hind Medal.

JUNE 5, SATURDAY
Went to see Ambalal, Dalpatbhai, Jamiatram Shastri, Bhaishanker, Nanabhai and others. Popatbhai came. Maneklal agreed to keep Rs. 3,000. Maganlal, Maganbhai and Manilal took the vow of truthfulness.

JUNE 6, SUNDAY
Boys from Vaghari school came. Attended kirtan at Popatbhai’s in the morning. He sent mangoes, puris, etc., for the boys. Madhavji Shastri and Girjashanker started teaching boys and teachers.

JUNE 7, MONDAY
Visit from Hirji Bhimji Chavda. The Limbdi teacher left yesterday. Maganbhai’s wife came back.

1 Physical culturist
2 Name of a socially and economically backward community
3 Devotional music
JUNE 8, TUESDAY
Amathalal, his wife and son came to see Ashram. Ba’s illness, serious.

JUNE 10, THURSDAY
Chavda left. Amathalal got tired and left. Raojibhai came, also Popatilal. Anna & his wife, too. Sundaram & I left for Poona by Mail.

JUNE 11, FRIDAY

[Rs. As. Ps.]\(^1\)
\[
\begin{array}{ccc}
9. & 8. & 0 \\
0. & 15. & 0 \\
5. & 10. & 6 \\
0. & 8. & 0 \\
\end{array}
\]
Mail fare—for two Conveyance to and from Petit
Fare to Poona
Conveyance

JUNE 12, SATURDAY
Mr. Shastriar’s speech.

JUNE 13, SUNDAY
I submitted brief report before members. Left Poona.

[Rs. As. Ps.]
\[
\begin{array}{ccc}
0. & 6. & 0 \\
2. & 11. & 0 \\
0. & 11. & 0 \\
0. & 4. & 0 \\
\end{array}
\]
Stamps
Poona to Bombay
Tram and tonga
Ticket to Colaba

20. 11. 6\(^2\)
[Total of entries under June 11 and June 13]

0. 14. 0
Fare to Bandra

0. 4. 0
Miscellaneous

21. 12. 6\(^3\)
[Grand total]

\(^1\) The accounts are given in the Diary at the end of the year under the dates (according to the Vikram era) written down in Gandhiji’s hand. They are reproduced here under the respective English dates.

\(^2\) This should be 20-9-6.

\(^3\) This should be 21-13-6.
JUNE 14, MONDAY
Stayed in Ghatkopar. Saw Ratanchandji Sadhu.
Telephone from Mr. Petit. Saw Hajibhai and Devkarandas.

JUNE 15, TUESDAY
Saw Mr. Ratan Tata. Paid condolence visit to Mr. Natarajan at Bandra. Left Bombay. Narandas came along.

JUNE 16, WEDNESDAY
Reached Ahmedabad. Sent estimate with draft letter to Mr. Petit.¹

JUNE 17, THURSDAY

JUNE 18, FRIDAY
Popatlal left for Limbdi.

JUNE 19, SATURDAY
Narandas left for home.

JUNE 20, SUNDAY
Nothing worth noting.

JUNE 21, MONDAY
Maneklal gave Rs. 10/-.

JUNE 22, TUESDAY
Narmadashanker started teaching. Mangaldas and Popatbhai came over.

JUNE 23, WEDNESDAY
Nothing new.

JUNE 24, THURSDAY
Governor’s letter. About the medal. Sent him telegram yesterday.

JUNE 25, FRIDAY
Left for Poona to receive the medal. Pandit Madhavji came over to stay in the institution. Nephew of Zaverchand of Dhoraji also came.

¹ Vide “Letter to J.B. Petit”.

[Rs. As. Ps.]
6. 7. 0 Ahmedabad to Bombay
JUNE 26, SATURDAY

Reached Bombay in the morning. Left for Poona. Met Lallubhai there. Received the medal. Pattani’ came to leave me at Kirki. Discussed rules and regulations with Shastriar.

[Rs. As. Ps.]

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Description</th>
<th>Amount</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Bombay to Poona</td>
<td>2.7.0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Masjid Bunder to Bori Bunder</td>
<td>0.2.6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Vairagya Prakarana, Abhanga and postage.</td>
<td>2.0.0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>[Total of June 25 and June 26]</td>
<td>11.0.6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bananas and labour charges</td>
<td>1.4.0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Porter at station</td>
<td>0.1.0</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

JUNE 27, SUNDAY

Reached Bombay. Talk with Station Master at Masjid Bunder. About fare. He apologized on recognizing me. Posted letters: Polak, Shastriar, Pragji, Miss Schlesin Langdale Smith.

JUNE 28, MONDAY

Back to Ahmedabad. Visit by Phadake.

[Rs. As. Ps.]

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Description</th>
<th>Amount</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Stamp—on account of ‘not-paid’</td>
<td>0.11.0</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

JUNE 29, TUESDAY

Bapubhai Dolatrai came to see me.

[Rs. As. Ps.]

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Description</th>
<th>Amount</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Porter charges for bedding</td>
<td>0.11.0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Miscellaneous</td>
<td>0.0.6</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>[Total of entries under June 25, 26, 28 and 29]</td>
<td>15.0.0</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Balance</td>
<td>5.1.0</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

20.5.0’ Account of Poona journey

1 Sir Prabashanker
2 This should be under the next date.
3 This should be 15-1-0.
JULY 4, SUNDAY
Speech by Mahadevprasad on health. I was in chair.

JULY 5, MONDAY
Amritlal Thakkar came. Maganbhai also. Ramanbhai came to see Ashram. Harilal, Mulchand and Trambaklal started teaching.

JULY 6, TUESDAY
Narandas came at night.

JULY 7, WEDNESDAY
Swami from Bihar paid a visit. Also Chandramani from Gurukul. Maganlal went to Viramgam & returned. Amritlal Thakkar left. Hathibhai came. Manilal came. He went back.

JULY 9, FRIDAY
Left for Poona. Hathibhai left. Narandas accompanied me.

JULY 10, SATURDAY
Reached Poona. Conference started.

JULY 11, SUNDAY
Saw Mr. Tilak in the morning & in the afternoon. Discussion with Akhandanand and Dayalji about various matters.

JULY 12, MONDAY
Paid a visit to Home for Destitute Students. Left Poona. Talk with Bhajekar. Bhaishanker came to Ashram.

JULY 13, TUESDAY
Reached Ahmedabad. Visit of Nagji Swami.

JULY 14, WEDNESDAY
Nagji Swami came over to stay in Ashram. He gave a talk in the morning.

JULY 15, THURSDAY
Nagji Swami left. Went to see Mr. Pratt. Talked about many things. Promised to help.

1 Bombay Provincial Conference, Poona; vide “speech at Bombay Provincial Conference, Poona”, 11-7-1915.
3 Commissioner, Northern Division of the then Bombay Presidency.
JULY 16, FRIDAY
Bhaishanker ill at ease because of his addictions.

JULY 17, SATURDAY
Started taking bath before morning prayers. Ba washed Deva’s dhoti. Seen doing so. Told a lie. Could not control my anger. Went at her. Vowed to fast for 14 days if she should wash anything of Deva’s, even a handkerchief. May God help. Bhaishanker Oza left because he could not give up his addictions.

JULY 19, MONDAY
Meeting with several gentlemen. Shyamlal came.

JULY 20, TUESDAY
Ratansinh Parmar started coming to help. Revashankerbhai came.

JULY 21, WEDNESDAY
Saw Painter, the Collector. Meeting with Mangaldas Sheth.

JULY 22, THURSDAY
Revashankerbhai left.

JULY 24, SATURDAY
Went to see Vadilal’s looms. Mistri started work. Fixed Rs. 40/- for 30 days.

JULY 25, SUNDAY
Went to see Judge Kennedy.

JULY 26, MONDAY
Shyamlal’s brother came. Nanalal Kavi and the ladies of his family paid a visit. Manilal started going to Vadilal’s looms. Carpenter did not come today.

JULY 27, TUESDAY
Carpenter left. Vanamali came. His son is with him.

JULY 28, WEDNESDAY
Mangal joined.

JULY 29, THURSDAY
Krisnaswami Sharma came.

JULY 30, FRIDAY
Vanamali left.
JULY 31, SATURDAY
Maneklal arranged dinner for all.

AUGUST 1, SUNDAY
Panditji asked for salary. Decided to pay him from July to December at the rate of Rs. 20/- p.m. It was arranged that in return he should give 3 hours and Sharadabehn 2 _ hours. The ladies went to Punjabhai’s. Professor Swaminarayan 2 paid a visit. Mangal disappeared.

AUGUST 2, MONDAY
Jamnadas arrived. Harilal and Trambaklal started living in the Ashram.

AUGUST 3, TUESDAY
Manasukhlal came. Punjabhai and another slept here. Ada fell ill & seemed to have failed in the test. Rallied.

AUGUST 4, WEDNESDAY
Krishnarao came. Manasukhlal took to nature cure.

AUGUST 5, THURSDAY
Jamnadas left for Surat.

AUGUST 6, FRIDAY
Krishnarao left Ashram. Shivaraman came.

AUGUST 7, SATURDAY
Babu _alias_ Madhavan all came. Jethalal and his brother Purushottam also.

AUGUST 8, SUNDAY
Amarsinh came. Paid a visit to Jivanlalbhai, Motilal Sheth and others. Vikramsinh came with his son.

AUGUST 9, MONDAY
Amarsinh left. Received Rs. 100/- from Sir Subramaniam. Pandit left

1 A social worker, sister of Vidyagauri Nilkanth, vide “Speech on Indian Women’s University”, 23-2-1916.
2 Professor of Mathematics, Gujarat College, Ahmedabad for 10 days.

AUGUST 10, TUESDAY
Started Tamil a little more seriously. Gomatibehn decided to give up wearing ornaments.

AUGUST 11, WEDNESDAY
Purushottam ran away. Keshu, Krishna and Navin were inattentive. Placed them and myself under Pradosha Vrata for tomorrow.

AUGUST 12, THURSDAY
Manasukhlal bought up Gomatibehn’s jewellery for Rs. 250/-.

AUGUST 13, FRIDAY
Mohan Soni came.

AUGUST 14, SATURDAY
Karunashanker Master¹ and others came to see me.

AUGUST 15, SUNDAY
Karunashanker Master and others came to see me.

AUGUST 16, MONDAY
Karimbhai Salwala of Palanpur came.

AUGUST 17, TUESDAY
Mulchand Parmar sent word that he would not be able to come to teach. Ratansinh Parmar asked for pay and, on being refused, he also stopped coming.

AUGUST 18, WEDNESDAY
Took five divisions today. Maganbhai fell ill. Maganlal observed a semi-fast, taking only one meal, for some fault of Parthasarathi’s.

AUGUST 19, THURSDAY
Abdul Karim Sheth came. Anna placed himself under vows: brahmacharya, truthfulness and abstaining from six articles, also from milk and its products. Read eleventh canto [of the Bhagavat] yesterday.

AUGUST 20, FRIDAY
Jamnadas & Parvati came.

¹ Literally, a teacher; Karunashanker was responsible for introducing Dr. Maria Montessori to Gujarat.
AUGUST 21, SATURDAY
Purushottam Patel [and] his brother came. Sundaram admitted his error.

AUGUST 22, SUNDAY
Jamnadas left.

AUGUST 23, MONDAY
Jamna & Purushottam came.

AUGUST 24, TUESDAY
Purushottam [and] brother left for Dharmaj.

AUGUST 25, WEDNESDAY
Ba and other ladies went to Sheth Mangaldas’s.

AUGUST 26, THURSDAY
Jamna left.

AUGUST 28, SATURDAY
Carpenter started work. Fixed Rs. 45/- for 30 days.

AUGUST 30, MONDAY
Received letter & draft from Chhaganlal.

AUGUST 31, TUESDAY
Sundaram’s temperature not coming down. Ramdas’s weakness also causing anxiety.

SEPTEMBER 4, SATURDAY
Dadabhai jayanti [birth anniversary]. Speech in Premabhai Hall. Vrajlal & Hirji Chavda came. Telegram for Krishnaswami about his mother’s illness. Anna & Mama left for Baroda.

SEPTEMBER 5, SUNDAY
Krishnaswami left for Madras.

SEPTEMBER 6, MONDAY
Anna & Mama returned.

SEPTEMBER 7, TUESDAY
Trambaklal & Harilal came back.
SEPTEMBER 9, THURSDAY
Amritlal, High Court pleader, came.

SEPTEMBER 10, FRIDAY
Karimbhai returned from Palanpur.

SEPTEMBER 11, SATURDAY
Dudabhai came from Bombay. There was quite a scene. Santok refused to eat, and I, too, therefore. Started a fast because Vrajlal had smoked.

SEPTEMBER 12, SUNDAY
Mr. Pratt and Advani paid a visit. Went to see Bhaichandji. Saw Nagji Swami. Also Sir Chinubhai¹. Feel the strain of the fast.

SEPTEMBER 15, WEDNESDAY
Dudabhai went to bring his wife. Harilal came. Attended party at Commissioner’s.

SEPTEMBER 16, THURSDAY
Chanchi & Nanubhai came. Pandit left. Also Navin.

SEPTEMBER 17, FRIDAY
Received Rs. 1/- from Shaan & Rs. 7 from Rangoon, Davis and Ambalal Sheth came.

SEPTEMBER 18, SATURDAY
Nichhabhai came.

SEPTEMBER 19, SUNDAY

SEPTEMBER 20, MONDAY
Andrews & Pearson arrived. Meeting of Committee. I was asked to preside. All went to see Dheds¹ houses. All three left for Ahmedabad.

SEPTEMBER 21, TUESDAY
Reached Ahmedabad. Leaders had come. At home, found sister, etc. There was a good meeting. The two friends left at night. Chunilal

¹ A leading citizen of Ahmedabad and a philanthropist came.

SEPTEMBER 22, WEDNESDAY
Chunilal and Dayalji left.

SEPTEMBER 24, FRIDAY
Maganlal and Santok & the girls left for Bombay.

SEPTEMBER 26, SUNDAY
Dudabhai and his wife came.

SEPTEMBER 27, MONDAY
Kaka, Gunaji and a student came. Vrajlal left for Rajkot. Maneklal came for two or three hours.

SEPTEMBER 28, TUESDAY
Deshpande came. Left in the evening. Gunaji also. Shivaraman left.

SEPTEMBER 29, WEDNESDAY
Left for Bombay. Devbhabhi and Jamnadas with me during the journey. Long talk with Devbhabhi.

SEPTEMBER 30, THURSDAY

OCTOBER 1, FRIDAY
Returned to Ahmedabad. Professor Valji came over to stay.

OCTOBER 3, SUNDAY
Joitaram left. Maganlal & Santok returned.

OCTOBER 4, MONDAY
Prakashanand came. Mistri (carpenter) started coming.

OCTOBER 5, TUESDAY

OCTOBER 6, WEDNESDAY
Devbhabhi & Jamnadas left.
OCTOBER 7, THURSDAY
Valji gave Rs. 15. Sent a cheque for Rs. 1,500/- to Mr. Petit.

OCTOBER 8, FRIDAY
Dahyabhai gave Rs. 8/-. Got excited again and lost temper with Ba. I must find a medicine for this grave defect.

OCTOBER 9, SATURDAY ASO SUD 1
Vrajlal ran away. Joitaram came. He won’t be able to stay.

OCTOBER 10, SUNDAY
Went to Sojitra. Saw the Boarding House there. Saw loom and other things, also the one at Petlad. Met Kavi’s brother on the way. He came to the Ashram with Mulchand Parmar.

OCTOBER 11, MONDAY
Harakhchand came. Jekibehn says she does not want to stay in the Ashram. Joitaram and Parmar left.

OCTOBER 12, TUESDAY
Manilal & Karimbhai left for Palanpur. Also Harakhchand left.

OCTOBER 17, SUNDAY
Madgaonker came. Santok left for Rajkot. Vrajlal’s brother Chhotalal stayed here today.

OCTOBER 19, TUESDAY
Dayalji & his students came from Surat. Manilal returned from Palanpur. The boys went to Sarkhej.

OCTOBER 23, SATURDAY
Vrajlal came.

OCTOBER 24, SUNDAY
Dayalji & his students left.

OCTOBER 25, MONDAY
Revashanker came.

OCTOBER 26, TUESDAY
Vithalji Dave and his sons came.

1 Daughter of Dr. P. J. Mehta
OCTOBER 27, WEDNESDAY

Maganlal, Santok, Radha, Rukhi, Vrajlal, Fakiri and I left for Bombay by the 5.30 p.m. train.

OCTOBER 28, THURSDAY

Maganlal and others left for Madras. Speech in Empire.¹

OCTOBER 29, FRIDAY

Returned to Ahmedabad. Jagjivandas Mehta and a Kapol boy came last evening. Left the same night.

OCTOBER 30, SATURDAY

Dayalji, his mother and his friends came. A student from Baroda named Pandurang, expressed keen desire to join Ashram. Stayed overnight.

OCTOBER 31, SUNDAY

Pandurang left, saying he would return after seeing his people. Jamnalal [Bajaj] from Wardha and Doctor Benjamin paid a visit.

NOVEMBER 1, MONDAY

Dayalji left in the morning.

NOVEMBER 2, TUESDAY

Amritlal Thakkar came at night. Finished one chapter of Doke’s book.

NOVEMBER 3, WEDNESDAY

Kanbi Naranji came in the morning.

NOVEMBER 4, THURSDAY

Mr. Painter came to see. Sharadabehn¹ had been to see Ashram.

NOVEMBER 5, FRIDAY

Amritlal Thakkar came.

NOVEMBER 6, SATURDAY

Amritlal left. Indulal Yagnik² came.

NOVEMBER 7, SUNDAY

Indulal left. Bapuji came with his two grandsons Bechar & Chatur.

¹ Vide “Speech on Indentured Indian Labour at Bombay”.
² An active political worker. Gandhiji later took over Navajivan from him.
NOVEMBER 8, MONDAY

Boys of Vaghari School, more than 125, came on a visit. Offered them fruits. Maneklal & Punjabhai each gave Rs. 5/

NOVEMBER 9, TUESDAY

Valji returned.

NOVEMBER 10, WEDNESDAY

Vrajlal Vora came.

NOVEMBER 11, THURSDAY

Doctor Deva came. Vrajlal left for Bombay.

NOVEMBER 13, SATURDAY

Sheth Ismail Moosa & a friend of his came. Arranged a function today to enable [friends] to meet Doctor Deva. Prof. Anandshanker\(^1\) and others came.

NOVEMBER 14, SUNDAY

Naranji left. Attended a meeting about Sir Pherozeshah.\(^2\)

NOVEMBER 15, MONDAY

Ismail Sheth and his friend left. A meeting of Gujarat Sabha at Govindrao Patil’s. Rules and regulations drafted.

NOVEMBER 16, TUESDAY

Felt burning sensation when passing urine.

NOVEMBER 17, WEDNESDAY

Trouble more acute. Naiker’s mother & his brother came.

NOVEMBER 18, THURSDAY

Did not eat in the morning. Passing much blood.

NOVEMBER 19, FRIDAY

Pain continues.

\(^1\) Prof. Anandshanker Bapubhai Dhruba, Sanskrit scholar and man of letters; Vice-Chancellor, Benares Hindu University (1920-37)

\(^2\) This should be under November 15, vide “Speech at Pherozeshah Mehta Condolence Meeting at Ahmedabad”.

VOL. 15: 21 MAY, 1915 - 31 AUGUST, 1917 119
NOVEMBER 21, SUNDAY
Raichand jayanti.¹ Less pain. Naiker & his mother left.

NOVEMBER 22, MONDAY
Another meeting about jayanti in the Ashram.

NOVEMBER 23, TUESDAY
Doctor came. Makkhanlal Gupta came.

NOVEMBER 24, WEDNESDAY
Mama left for Rajkot & other places.

NOVEMBER 25, THURSDAY
Doctor left for Rajkot. Valji came from Rajkot.

NOVEMBER 26, FRIDAY
Chandulal of Patidar Boarding spent a day.

NOVEMBER 30, TUESDAY
Mr. Devle², Chintaman Sakharam came.

DECEMBER 1, WEDNESDAY
Left Ahmedabad with Devle to go to Rajkot. Ba got ready at the last moment and came along. Punjabhai came as far as Wadhwan. Met the people of Wadhwan and Viramgam.³ Called on Gokibehn at Rajkot. Joined by Gopalji at Wadhwan.

DECEMBER 2, THURSDAY
Spent in Rajkot. saw Pandit. Approached Vithalraibhai for contribution He set down Rs. 20/-

DECEMBER 3, FRIDAY

DECEMBER 4, SATURDAY
Reached Gondal. Jamnadas, Khanderia and Purushottamdas

¹ Vide “Speech at Rajchandra Birth Anniversary, Ahmedabad”.
² Member, Servants of India Society; vide “Speech at Viramgam”, 1-12-1915.
³ Vide “Speech at Viramgam”.

120 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
accompanying. Saw Thakore Saheb. A function.\textsuperscript{1} Popatbhai came from Rajkot.

DECEMBER 10, FRIDAY
Left Bhavnagar. Reached Amreli. Public function. Asked Harilalbhai to auction caskets received with addresses.

DECEMBER 11, SATURDAY
Saw the jail, boarding houses, schools, etc., at Amreli.

DECEMBER 12, SUNDAY
Arrived in Hadala. Went to Bagasra. A function there.\textsuperscript{2}

DECEMBER 13, MONDAY
Came to Limbdi. Jamnadas parted company at Hadala. Called on Nanchandji Maharaj.

DECEMBER 14, TUESDAY
Reached Wadhwan. Left Limbdi. Function there, with Thakore Saheb as Chairman.

DECEMBER 15, WEDNESDAY

DECEMBER 16, THURSDAY

DECEMBER 17, FRIDAY
Devle & Gopalji left.

DECEMBER 18, SATURDAY
Asked Bapuji to leave Ashram.

\textsuperscript{1} Vide “Speech at Gondal on Gokhale”.
\textsuperscript{2} Vide “Speech at Bagasra on Viramgam Customs Cordon”.

VOL. 15: 21 MAY, 1915 - 31 AUGUST, 1917 121
DECEMBER 19, SUNDAY

Doctor and I dined at Popatlal’s. Observed that he & Punjabhai were not on good terms.

DECEMBER 20, MONDAY

Devchandbhai, A . . . bhai, Paramananddas, Chandulal & others came. Left for Bombay along with the students.

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 8221. Courtesy: Gandhi Smarak Nidhi

103 SPEECH AT SALEJ

January 1, 1916

I do not deserve the honour you are giving me, because, being a barrister, I am expected to be a man of understanding. Honour is due to those who, though illiterate, do their work, full of faith. We should honour men who have faith.

[From Gujarati]
Gujarat Mitra ane Gujarat Darpan, 9-1-1916

104. SPEECH AT SURAT

January 2, 1916

Please take it that the opening ceremony which I was invited to perform has been performed this very moment. May the inmates of the temple imbibe its beauty. I hope those who come to worship here and the members and admirers of the Arya Samaj, will acquire a fragrance that will endure even after this temple has come down some day. May it prosper and may its prosperity in turn ensure that of the devotees visiting it.

[From Gujarati]
Gujarat Mitra ane Gujarat Darpan, 9-1-1916

1 In reply to an address by the people of Salej, in Gujarat, the native place of Pragji Desai, who had worked with Gandhiji in South Africa
2 While declaring open the Arya Samaj temple
3 A socio-religious movement for reform of Hinduism, started by Swami Dayanand Saraswati (1824-83); vide the following item.
105. REMARKS AT PRIVATE RECEPTION

Surat,
[January 2, 1916]

Please expect no speech from me. I would rather that you imposed a vow of silence on me. Go ahead with your work without waiting for a speech. Kindly forgive me for the trouble you have been put to on my account and leave now.

[From Gujarati]

Gujarat Mitra ane Gujarat Darpan, 9-1-1916

106. SPEECH AT ARYA SAMAJ ANNUAL CELEBRATIONS,
Surat

January 2, 1916

You have laid me under a heavy debt by inviting me to attend this function and declare open the Arya Samaj temple and I am thankful likewise to the Samaj and to the people of Surat for asking me to preside over this celebration. Let me tell you at the outset that I am not an Aryasamajist, as members of the Samaj, and others as well, know. At the same time, I ought to say that I bear no ill-will to the Samaj either. I am not a member of this body just as I am not a member of any other body. There are numerous other bodies like the Arya Samaj in India and they all do their best by way of service, but I have especial respect for the Samaj. I have developed good relations with Munshiramji of the Gurukul at Hardwar. My sons and other friends of mine had occasion to stay in that Gurukul and it is not easy to forget the love which prompted all that was done for them. The whole of India knows its work as much as I do. Swami Dayanand, the adored founder of the Samaj, was a rare man and I must acknowledge that I have come under his influence. I have had occasion to talk about the Arya Samaj at many places. In my opinion, the Samaj could

1 Gandhiji arrived at Surat to perform the opening ceremony of an Arya Samaj temple on January, 2, 1916; vide”Speech at Salej”, 9-1-1916
2 The Phoenix party had stayed at Gurukul for some time and, in 1915 at the Kumbha Mela at Hardwar, it assisted the Volunteer Corps of the Servants of India Society. Later, Gandhiji also joined the party.
do very useful work if some change was brought about in it. What needs to be changed is this,—that some of the spokesmen of the Samaj seem to be only too ready to enter into violent controversy to gain their end. They could, however, achieve their purpose without recourse to controversy. I discussed this matter in Hardwar and mention it again here today. The service that the Arya Samaj renders is not different from that of the Hindu religion. If one examines different bodies like the Brahma Samaj, the Sikh Samaj, etc., one sees that all of them express the truths of the Hindu religion. Only the names differ. Just as individual persons are mentioned by name for the purpose of a census, so are the various sects listed with some public good in view. If you examine the basic principles of all the sects, they will be found to differ in no way from those of the Hindu religion. The trend of the discussions at present going on shows unmistakably that a time will certainly come when all the sects of Hindus will be included under the single term “Hinduism”. There are different religious groups in India like Hindus, Parsis, Muslims and so on, but for purposes of national work they all get united. This will show that the spirit of religion is active in all. Let it be remembered that without this spirit, no great task was ever ventured upon or ever will be. I shall now make a few observations I feel like making on this occasion. They will serve my own purpose and will also help me to discharge my duty. I have been given half an hour now and one hour in the evening, a total of one and a half hours, for speaking, but it is beyond me to speak so long and see that you digest all that I say. I like to have the shortest possible time for a speech and I have had good experience in the matter. I have been at a good many places during the last 30 years and I have noticed that where there is much speaking, there is little work. This charge has long been made against the whole of India. It is made by Europeans, that is, by people from the West. We deserve it. It has been remarked even at a session of the Congress that we are fed only on speeches and discourses. When shall we break free of this? We are very much at fault on this count and find ourselves in a miserable plight in consequence. As you know, there is much hunger in India, and it has always been hunger for spiritual food. If, on occasions of such celebrations, the day is spent merely in listening to speeches for seven or eight hours, when can we have time for work? If we had spent as much of our lives in work as we have in listening to speeches, how much could have been accomplished in India by now. If we had spent in doing sums in arithmetic all the time we wasted on speeches, I think India would be now on the threshold of swaraj. We shall never get swaraj by listening to speeches and discourses, sitting in pandals like this. It is to be had only through sacrifice of self and by making ourselves worthy of it. I brought up this matter for discussion in the Congress session, at Hardwar and wherever else I went and, having got this opportunity today, place it before you. Whenever I have occasion to speak, I have my say in brief and I shall continue to follow that practice. I appeal to the speakers [today] to proceed apace likewise. We arrange programmes of as many as seven hours of speeches at these gatherings. If the men who have assembled here were given a hoe and a shovel each and made to work at digging the land here for that number of hours, and the land were sown, we should certainly have a good crop next year. If I could take the leading workers of the Arya Samaj round the town and make them clean up the dirty spots, they would certainly earn the gratitude of the people of Surat. We see that the people of the West are more keen on work than on speeches. If at all you want to imitate them, imitate them in their good qualities. You will learn much therefrom. If, instead, you adopt foreign ways from them, you will invite your undoing. If we could reduce the programme of speeches today from seven to four hours and give the three hours thus saved to doing something useful, the time would be better spent. If merely listening to speeches could accomplish anything or cure our ailments, why, they arrange reading from the Bhagavat at so many places and these draw large audiences, but we shall find on several of these occasions that quite a few in the audience are dozing. If we could get everything by submitting to speeches, we need do nothing else. Only let the Brahmins go on with their readings from holy books and Puranas and our salvation would be assured. Indians, thus enjoy speaking and hearing others speak and paying compliments to themselves. They go to extremes in these matters. If, instead, we were to hold our tongues, there is much we could learn. Speaking hinders reflection. If, on the other hand, you do something, be it what it may, that will lead to a discussion and the people will be enabled to draw some lesson from it. I would, therefore, entreat you to employ every available minute in doing your duty. A great saint has said that, if at any time too many ideas rush into one’s mind, one should not lose one’s judgement. One should not act upon them immediately. One should sleep over them for a night and examine them with oneself from every point of view so as to cast out such of them as are of no value, discuss the rest with one’s wife, exchange views with her and cut out those which are found unsound. The idea that remains at the end, if one feels with all one’s soul that it is true, one may act upon it and place it before the world undeterred by any attacks that may follow. Only an idea that is held with such conviction can be translated into action, and no time will be wasted in consequence. I respectfully submit that it is very necessary to take full thought before embarking upon any course of action. It will be impudence on my part to tell you what ought to be done. By my saying so, moreover, the thing will not be done. What I have told you today is but my own experience and I would humbly request you, therefore, to accept from it only what may appeal to you as right. Rather than imitate the West, it would be far more profitable to us to reject everything that they offer us. If only you consider, they don’t have speeches in Europe as we have, for they get no time to listen to any. In order to make the progress that they are making, there are certain rights we must demand and secure from the Government. For that purpose, we must get ready for a struggle. I know that the honour people give me these days is because of the fight I gave to the Government for securing our rights and because of the suffering I went through in doing so. We have to deserve such rights. May you, therefore, read and think and learn from others in order to make yourselves so worthy and be fit to give a fight to the Government along the path of truth! If the workers of this Samaj take the lead in doing this duty, that would be more profitable. With these words I request your permission to resume my seat.

1 A socio-religious reform movement started by Raja Ram Mohan Roy

Replying to some observations of the speakers who followed him, Gandhiji said:

It is not enough that today, acting upon a hint from me, you did not indulge in long speeches to make things easy for me. It will make me happier to know that you will never do so. Pandit Ramchandraji put me an important question in the course of his speech. He asked me to say how the world of the Arya Samaj could be made more useful and popular. It is not only here that the question has come up. It was also discussed when I was at Hardwar. I have no time just now to answer it. I shall argue with Panditshri about it if he visits me at Ahmedabad. It will also be necessary to take into account the views of those who have different ideas on the subject. I was asked by my guru, the late Mr. Gokhale, not to get involved in such controversies and hence I avoid them. This is not a controversy, however, with people not one's own. I look upon members of this Samaj as my friends and I owe it to them to offer my advice. I have been tested on the anvil and have stood the test; it is my duty, therefore, to share my experience with my friends. We must strive every day for India's progress. In reply to one Balkrishna who argued against Gandhiji's advice to refrain from controversies, he said:

Following the advice of my guru, Mr. Gokhale, I do not enter into argument with anyone. With the new year, I must remind myself of this and, since the issue has come up, I shall say that it is a very delicate one and the question cannot therefore be answered without some discussion. I am not partial to anyone. If I feel that I can serve India better by becoming a member of the Samaj, I will become one and when I feel that way, I shall immediately say so in public. At the moment, I cannot give any reply to Mr. Balkrishna. However, if he comes to Ahmedabad any time, I shall discuss the matter with him and satisfy him.

[From Gujarati]

Gujarat Mitra ane Gujarat Darpan, 9-1-1916 and Gujarati, 9-1-1916

107. SPEECH AT SURAT ON PLACE OF ENGLISH

January 3, 1916

It is very surprising that students who deliver speeches in English do not see whether or not the audience can follow what they say. Nor do they consider whether those who understand English will feel interested or bored by their broken, incorrect English. It is a sad state of affairs that growing young people turn away from their own mother tongue and become such devoted lovers of a foreign language. Those who argue that a new era has come to prevail in our country through foreign contacts, how much do they care to explain their new ideas to the people around them? They ought to consider whether the new era will draw closer or recede farther by their prating in a language which their parents do not know, which their brothers and sisters do not know, and their servants, wives, children and

1 From Gujarat Mitra ane Gujarat Darpan
2 From Gujarati
3 On the occasion of the opening of the Jain Students’ Library
kinsfolk cannot follow. There are some who think that English is our national language and that sooner or later it will be the language of all the people of the country, but this does not seem correct to me. If we take a handful of persons who have received English education to be the nation, it must be said that we do not understand the meaning of the word “nation”. I am sure it can never happen that 300 million people will pick up English, so that it becomes our national language. Those who have been fortunate enough to acquire new knowledge and new ideas must explain their ideas to their friends' kinsfolk and fellow-countrymen. To those young men who argue that they cannot express their ideas in their own language, I can only say that they are a burden to the motherland. It does not become any son worthy of the name to slight his mother tongue, to turn away his face from it, instead of removing what imperfections it may have. If we of the present generation neglect the mother tongue, future generations will have occasion to feel sorry for us. We shall never cease being reproached by them. I hope that all the students present here will take a vow that they will not use English at home unless it is absolutely necessary to do so.

Parents also should be on their guard against being carried away by the tide of the modern age. We do want the English language, but we do not want it to destroy our own language. Our society will be reformed only through our own language. We can ensure simplicity and dignity in communication only through our own language. Students, and their parents as well, should all aspire for a high level of proficiency in their own tongue. If this library opened by me helps to weaken rather than nourish our language, I cannot help feeling sorry when I hear of the fact.

[From Gujarati]

Gujarati, 16-1-1916
108. SPEECH AT YOUTH ASSOCIATION, SURAT

January 3, 1916

What can the heart speak when it is attuned to other hearts? I was told by many even in South Africa that, when I returned to India, others might or might not help me, but that there was a Patidar Youth Association which would be only too ready to help me in my work. It was my wish all along to come here and visit this institution at the first available opportunity after returning to India and that makes me all the more delighted. How far this Association helps me will be seen when the time comes, but it certainly has men of character.

[From Gujarati]

Gujarati, 9-1-1916

109. SPEECH AT ARYA SAMAJ FUNCTION, SURAT

January 3, 1916

SISTERS AND BROTHERS,

I should have been here at two but I could not; kindly forgive me for that. I find myself in difficulties wherever I go. I have one or two days at my disposal and too many people to meet and too many places to see, with the result that I cannot always manage to be punctual. Nor can I deny myself to anyone. Yesterday, a subject was suggested to me for a speech, but I did not like to speak on it. It has again been suggested today. I shall, therefore, as desired, place before you what few ideas I can. We find everyone in India in a state of fear, so much so that a father and a son dare not speak frankly to each other. The reason for this, you will find, is that it has become difficult to speak the truth. One is always in doubt whether one’s words will please the other person or not. So long as this is our condition, we shall never be able to speak the truth. While this state of fear continues, we shall always remain backward and shall always be dogged by misery. From the prevalent atmosphere, it seems that the people are eager for something to be done. What is that something?

1 In reply to an address from the Surat District Patidar Youth Association
2 Landlord
3 On the second day of the celebration
Allow me to point out that we shall have to suffer whatever work we take up. In taking up any work, we must first decide on the course we want to follow and then go ahead fearlessly. We are afraid at the sight of a policeman. We feel afraid if it is but a station-master. Why this fear? It is there because we are afraid of speaking the truth. Though they are men in authority, they are in a way our servants, since their services are paid for from public revenues. Why, then, should we be afraid of those whom we have ourselves appointed? Only when people become fearless will they wipe out this charge of timidity. I would say that fear springs in a man from within, that no one puts the fear into him. If you stand by the side of a wild animal, like a tiger, utterly fearless, he will play with you; if you try to run away, he will kill you. If, for example, you run because of the barking of a dog, he will run after you, but he will play with you if you face him fearlessly. Government officers are in fact our servants. We should entertain no fear of them, though we should not behave rudely to them either. There must be courtesy even in dealing with servants. We should follow truth, and be fearless in doing so. A coward is himself afraid and fills others with fear. Such is the condition of affairs in families and communities. Where, then, shall we voice the demand for reform? Everyone who desires reform in his community only talks about the matter before others, saying: “Oh yes! There is need for such a reform, certainly. But you know what our community is like! The members would raise a storm.” To be afraid in this way and do nothing is no credit to one’s manliness. The other members of the community would not feel for our daughter as we do. I know the way caste affairs are managed; everywhere there is the same story. Parents remain in great fear for their daughters. Any reform that is necessary in this matter must be carried out. If that is not done, to what end do bodies like the Arya Samaj exist? The poet Akha has said; “Live as you will, Realize God anyhow, anyway.”

We are to seek Hari through these activities. We cannot attain Him till we have realized the self. This country is ever in the forefront with words, but hindmost in action. This charge against our country must go, however. It was my experience in South Africa that people spoke with a profuse flow of words at meetings, declared themselves ready in their speeches even for imprisonment, but, when the testing time came, they made themselves scarce. A man is one person when speaking and another when the time for action comes. Then, fear takes possession of his heart. Till you have driven out that fear, you will make no progress, material or spiritual. People in India will know real life only when they have shed all fear. The country has a population of three hundred million. Even if only a few of these come forward, they will give a lead to the rest. One good coin is of greater worth than millions of bad ones. With these words, I beg leave to resume my seat. I should tell you that I have yet another appointment elsewhere. Kindly give me leave, therefore, and go on with the rest of the programme.

\[1 \text{Vishnu}\]

[From Gujarati]

_Gujarat Mitra ane Gujarat Darpan, 9-1-1916_

110. SPEECH AT SURAT RECEPTION

January 3, 1916

SISTERS AND BROTHERS,

I have grown weary listening to my praises on this occasion and I am sure you too are tired, as it has grown so late, and you must be disinclined to hear a long speech. That you all shout ‘no’ means nothing in particular; I know it only signifies our good manners in India. I thank you very much indeed for the sentiments you have expressed about my wife. The reason, as far as I know for all that is being said about me and my wife is that the sentiments the high-souled Shri Gokhale expressed about us here\(^2\), in India, are still echoing. We, husband and wife, were not the only ones in South Africa to have gone to gaol; there were many others. A young girl of 17, fresh from _Vanitavishram\(^3_\), went to gaol, and her husband too. While in gaol, he died of an illness. It has become a custom in India to show respect to anyone who happens to be present. India needs to wake up; without an awakening, there can be no progress. To bring it about in the country, one must place some programme before it. The question then is: how to bring about awakening and spread understanding in the country. I had a key with me for this purpose; it was this: I first learnt the language of the people through whom I had

---

\(^1\) Under the auspices of the District Bar Association

\(^2\) While Gandhiji was in South Africa

\(^3\) A girls’ school to work and I told them, in their own language, of the situation in which I found myself, seeking from them the line of action which would best meet the needs of that situation. It was entirely because of this approach that they could appreciate the situation as I saw it and they came to my help. Then, again, once on coming out of gaol I received a letter, telling me that the leaders had left and asking me what I could do by myself. But lo! 20,000 men were afire without there being anyone to lead them—such is the experience I have had. What did it matter if all had left? If, therefore, you desire to work for the good of India, give primary education to its three hundred million people, not the kind of education that goes by that name at present but such education as will impart to them the knowledge that is required in these times. Teach them why it is that India is growing more and more abject. The poor and the illiterate should know that this is happening because they are being deprived of everything. In consequence of this abject attitude, men are in a constant state of fear and are afraid of anyone in authority, even a policeman. There is so much of fear in India today that a father and a son distrust each other and cannot exchange ideas. We should, therefore, spread the right kind of knowledge in order that we might end this state of affairs. I came by such knowledge in 1896 in a mantra I learnt from the late Mr. Gokhale. Surat is a city of heroes. Blessed by the poet Narmad, it enjoys immortal fame. It has suffered frequently from the ravages of fire and flood but it continues on its even course, fair to all. From the very same city of Surat came Ahmad Mahomed and Sorabji Shapurji, who carried on a brave fight in South Africa and were imprisoned again and again but did not lose heart in the least. Such are the heroes who belong to Surat and I have great respect for this town. When I returned to India, I wanted that my first visit should be to Surat but unforeseen circumstances prevented this. I am extremely grateful to the people of this city for the affection they have showered on me today. I hope that you will continue to give me the same love and help me whenever I need your services. I don’t propose to spend away what I have saved from my earnings, for I am a bania. I shall

1 Phrase with magical efficacy, accompanying rituals; here, an effective rule of conduct
2 The first poet of the New Age in Gujarat
3 Cachalia
4 Adajania; Parsi public worker and passive resister who suffered imprisonment and deportation during the satyagraha campaign in South Africa; vide Vol. XI, p. 7 fn.
use the amount in the service of the place where I earned it. I don’t ask for any money from you for my own purpose. But I only hope that anything that I may ask for a public cause, you will be generous enough to give. What I want from you is some contribution to the Memorial Fund for the late Mr. Gokhale. I have been able to collect thirteen to fourteen thousand from towns in Kathiawar and I hope I shall get a good sum from a city like Surat. I have heard that Surat has done nothing in this matter, I called today on Mr. Adwani, the District Judges and mentioned the matter to him. He told me that nothing had been done about it; but that he would be happy if something was done, that he encouraged such an effort and would agree to put down Rs. 50/- as his contribution. You know how very important this project is. It is necessary to preserve Mr. Gokhale’s legacy. And so let everyone, from the highest to the lowest, give anything he thinks fit. It has been said of Surat that it is slow to be roused but that, when need arises, it wakes up and does what no other city will be able to do. Once again, I thank the people of Surat for the great love they have shown me and beg leave to resume my seat.

[From Gujarati]

Gujarat Mitr ane Gujarat Darpan, 9-1-1916

111. SPEECH AT MAHOMEDAN ASSOCIATION, SURAT

January 3, 1916

This gathering reminds me of South Africa, where the Hindus, Parsis and Muslims had become one. I find here in Surat the same bond of brotherhood between Hindus and Muslims which I have found wherever I have moved in India. From among my old friends in South Africa whom I have met here, Abdul Kadir Bawazeer shared much suffering with me. If I were to speak about that, I would take long and I don’t have all that time. I shall, therefore, tell you in brief that I returned to India with the desire to render equal service to both the communities, Hindus and Muslims. We shall accomplish the tasks that face us in India only when my Hindu, Muslim and Parsi brethren feel that they are all one. It would be best if the community that happened to be in the majority [at any place] realized that it was for

1 In reply to an address by Saiyadpura Mahomedan Association and Islamia Library that community to see that there were no quarrels. The leaders of each community should regard themselves as belonging to both communities and lead any movement accordingly. With the growth of brotherly relations between these two communities, you will have better zeal for work. In South Africa, Hindus and Muslims live as brothers. In a right cause, a community can win even if it fights single-handed. It is the same God, service to whom ensures our salvation; if, then, our two communities live in harmony, we shall have all that we want dropping into our hands, so to say. To ensure this, we must behave with no fear in our hearts, and with a mind that is ever the same. Finally, I thank you for the kind things you have said in your address and in the speeches and pray to God that I may make no distinction of Hindu and Muslim and may ever serve both. May you also pray likewise.

[From Gujarati]

Gujarat Mitra ane Gujarat Darpan, 9-1-1916

112. SPEECH AT KATHOR

January 4, 1916

The places of birth of satyagrahis are for me places of pilgrimage, and so I am here on a pilgrimage. It would be greatly for India’s good if our people were like the late Mr. Hoosen Dawad\(^1\). You can achieve much if you follow his example. When in Surat, I called on Mr. Hudson, the Collector. On my requesting him to be of help to the Indians going to South Africa, he asked me how he could help those who wanted to secure false certificates on the basis of incorrect statements. I would advise you, therefore, not to follow such practices.
Going to South Africa is likely to bring you no great profit. We should rather strive to earn honestly whatever we can here in India. I shall value the honour you are now doing me only if I find when I visit this place again that you have followed my advice.

\(^1\) Small town near Surat in Gujarat, native place of Dawad Mahomed, President of Natal Indian Congress

\(^2\) Son of Dawad Mahomed, whom Gandhiji held in great regard. (vide “The Late Mr. Haji Hoosen Dawad Mahomed”, 1-10-1913) When on his death-bed, he had expressed a wish that Gandhiji should visit Kathor some time.
In conclusion, Gandhiji exhorted the Hindus and the Muslims to work unitedly.

[From Gujarati]

Gujarat Mitra ane Gujarat Darpan, 9-1-1916

113. SPEECH AT MOTA VARACHHA

January 4, 1916

I have come here to see an old friend of mine. Hindus and Muslims should become united; that is the desire I have expressed at every place. I hope both these communities will help me. When I started from Kathor in a small bullock-cart; I was in a hurry and as I wished, for the sake of my personal convenience, to reach here early, I did not mind when bullocks were struck with a goad. Hinduism, however, teaches us that we should not hurt cows and bullocks. The sacred book of Islam stresses the importance of compassion. I felt that it was cruel to strike bullocks with a goad. In England, this is a punishable offence, but here no action is taken in the matter. The scriptures of both the religions lay down that we should not inflict cruelty on even the meanest of creatures. I also will have to answer for this in the court of the Almighty. When I come here again, it will make me happy to see that the sticks are no longer spiked. If I do not find that you have done so, I shall prefer going on foot rather than in the bullock-cart. We should not strike animals which happen to be weak. Let us remember that if any person strikes us, we abuse him. Finally, I thank you for the kindness shown to me.

[From Gujarati]

Gujarat Mitra ane Gujarat Darpan, 9-1-1916

1 A village near Surat in Gujarat
114. SPEECH AT NAVSARI

January 5, 1916

Gentlemen, I am sorry I could not be here before you yesterday and you had all, therefore, to go back disappointed. We, satyagrahis, can have our way in everything on which we set our heart, but in the face of an accident we are helpless. I am grateful to you all for your being so full of love and respect for me. The credit for the work done by me in South Africa should go to Fakira Koli and others who helped me. What I did there was to explain dearly to my countrymen the new laws enacted there and get them amended through satyagraha. My efforts were for the most part successful. I could guide the people there along the right path. In India, I find things are different. Here, if I asked people to go through some suffering, they would turn their back in fear. I pray to God to give me strength that I might do some little service to my country and my countrymen. Navsari owes much to its Parsi population. I congratulate this small community, which plays a leading part in every field. Relatively to other [Indian] communities in South Africa, this community is so small that its members are as the little stones found in a heap of wheat. Even so, the Parsis played their part very bravely, and Parsee Rustomjee especially deserves great honour. I express my thanks to you all for the great honour the members of the Koli community and other gentlemen have done me.

Refusing the silver casket presented along with the address, Gandhiji said:

I do not keep with me such valuable articles. I want to put it to sale and use the proceeds for some good work.

[From Gujarati]

Gujarat Mitra ane Gujarat Darpan, 9-1-1916

1 As the newspaper report says, the cart carrying him had been overturned and he had missed the train in consequence.
2 He was with Gandhiji for a number of years.
3 A place on coastal Gujarat
4 The Times of India report adds here: “He (Gandhiji) declared himself highly satisfied with the work of the Daboo Parsi General Hospital and appealed to the Parsi community to help handsomely this institution.”
5 The casket, auctioned on the spot, was bought on behalf of the community for Rs. 145.
115. LETTER TO V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI

AHMEDABAD,
January 13, 1916

DEAR MR. SHASTRIAR,

You have anticipated me. I had told Dr. Deva that I would place my conclusions before you, if possible, during the Congress week. I was unable to do so. Now, however, that the members have already begun to consider the question, perhaps it is unnecessary for me to set forth my conclusions. The members are coming to a just decision in not having me as a member. Whilst there is possibility of co-operation when we are working independently, I can see that I would, as a member, become a disturbing factor. The methods of the Society as such are so totally different from mine in many respects. Our common discipleship would constitute an indissoluble bond though we would be following out Mr. Gokhale’s work from different viewpoints.¹

I am,
Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

Letters of the Rt. Hon. V. S. Srinivasa Sastri

116. LETTER TO SONJA SCHLESIN²

AHMEDABAD,
January 16, 1916

MY DEAR DAUGHTER,

You have at last favoured me with a letter. Even six letters in a year you do not call a brilliant performance. Do you? However I must ¹ Gandhiji writes in The Story of My Experiments with Truth: “I saw clearly that, when there was such a sharp division amongst the members of the Society over admitting me, by far the best course for me was to withdraw my application for admission and save those opposed to me from a delicate situation. Therein I thought lay my loyalty to the Society and Gokhale. . . . The withdrawal of my application made me truly a member of the Society.” Part V, Ch. VI.

² A Jewish girl, steno-typist and Private Secretary to Gandhiji for many years; made herself useful to Indian Opinion; was ardently interested in the Indian cause be content with what you may give me.

You might at least have given me the credit for uttering no such nonsense as Mrs. Besant’s correspondent attributed to me. Natarajan apologised for reproducing the calumny. What I did say bore a totally different construction. I made use of a Gujarati proverb in defence of my proposition that man continually did an injustice to woman by using her for his lusts.

I have taken such vow as you attribute to me about anger. And if I had, I agree with you that it would lose all point by being disclosed.

I quite agree with you that Polak has done more during the past 18 months than what he did even in India. I would certainly feel delighted if Thambi came. But it is not a nice thing to pay his debts out of the passive resistance funds.

Jeki is with her father quite settled down to the humdrum life of the home.

From a photostat of the draft in Gandhiji’s hand: S.N. 6262

117. SPEECH AT BAVLA

January 17, 1916

I had no idea whatsoever that you had planned to present an address to me on the last day of the celebrations. I have never received from anywhere else as much money as has been presented to me here at Bavla. Hereafter, I shall have occasions to accept such funds and they will always be rightly used. I have so far done no work in this country and yet the affection showered on me is beyond measure. Serving the motherland is not possible as long as one’s heart is not purified. Even those who fight with weapons are required to give up their attachment to life. Similarly, if we have some disease, we have to sacrifice our bodies for the sake of our souls.

After stressing the need for rousing the spirit of national service, Gandhiji

1 Kamakshi Natarajan, Editor of Indian Social Reformer, Bombay
2 Naidoo, a leading passive resister during the South African struggle
3 Jayakunvar, daughter of Dr. Pranjivan Mehta
4 In reply to an address presented to Gandhiji on the third day of the celebrations arranged by Janahitartha Karyalaya
5 A small town in Ahmedabad district concluded by saying:

I have no almirah in which to keep things like this casket, etc., and so I shall use the amount that will be realized from its sale for the purposes of the Ashram. It would be more convenient if people gave me money rather than such articles.

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 23-1-1916

118. LETTER TO VALJI G. DESAI

AHMEDABAD,

Monday, January 24, 1916

BHAISHRI 5 VALJI,

. . . And if someone who has been stung by a scorpion can save others by his own experience, then [my] bitter experience in England can well be sufficient for others.

You have got to take your LL.B. I would wish that no one helps you in becoming a barrister. If your health does not suffer in the process of becoming a lawyer. It should be a blessing for you.

The fact that you could think only of five poisons as medicines for your body is the bad effect of your past actions. Poison will not lose its property if you call it nectar.

If you translate Tolstoy’s What is Art for publication and read the proofs you will get Rs. 100. The work . . . will go on for two months at the rate of four hours a day. You must work only from there. I shall get the work done through you. I shall be able to arrange Rs. 50 for you there. If you engage for four hours in this, I doubt if you can appear for the second term of your LL.B. this year.

I shall be going to Banaras on the 31st. I shall be going to Madras on my return from there. I can take you to both the places if you are willing.

I may be detained anywhere any time in connection with the War effort. It would be nice if you could come.

---

1 A number of words in the first two or three sentences of the letter are illegible.

2 For the foundation-stone-laying ceremony of the Banaras Hindu University; vide “Speech at Benares Hindu University”, 6-2-1916.
I have received the letter from Viramgam.
I had been to Nadiad yesterday

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 11272. Courtesy: Valji G. Desai

119. MESSAGE OF GOKHALE’S LIFE

[Before February 4, 1916]

All that you do, and all you enjoy,
What you offer in sacrifice, what you give in charity,
All austerities that you go through,
Render up everything to me.
When, smiling and playing my way through life,
I see Hari revealed to me, a visible presence,
Then shall I consider my life
To have attained its true end.
Muktanand’s Lord, who sports with us,
O Odha! He is the thread of our lives.

The counsel Shri Krishna addressed to Arjuna was, as it were, addressed by Lady India to Mahatma Gokhale and taken to heart by the latter, such was the manner of life of this great, departed soul. It is a fact known to everyone that all his activities, all his joys and the sacrifices he made, all the suffering he went through, were dedicated to Mother India.

The state of Odhava’s mind with regard to Shri Krishna, as depicted by Muktanand, was that of the late Gokhale with regard to India.

What is the message of a life such as this? The Mahatma did not leave even this unsaid. When dying, he sent for the members of the Servants of India Society who were then present and told them: “Do

---

1 The article was originally published in Bhagini Samaj Patrika. Vide also the following item.
2 Bhagavad Gita, IX, 27
3 A Gujarati poet
4 A friend of Shri Krishna. The lines are spoken by the gopis.
5 Evidently, Gandhiji understood the verse in a different sense.
not occupy yourselves with writing my biography or spend your time in putting up my statues. If you are true servants of India, dedicate your lives to the fulfilment of our aims, to the service of India.” We know, too, what he felt in his heart about the meaning of that service. The Congress should of course be kept alive, the true condition of the country should be placed before the people through speeches and writings and efforts made to have education provided to every Indian. What was the aim behind all this? And how was it to be realized? In answering these questions, we get to know his point of view. Framing a constitution for the Servants [of India] Society, he laid down that the duty of its members would be to spiritualize political life in India. This embraces everything. His was a religious life. My soul stands witness that, in all that he did, at all times, he acted wholly in the spirit of religion. Some twenty years ago, this Mahatma’s sentiments sometimes appeared to be those of an atheist. He said once: “I don’t have Ranade’s faith. How I should like to have it!” Even at that time, however, I could see a religious bent of mind in his actions. It would not be wrong to say that his very doubt proceeded from such a bent of mind. He who lives in the manner of a sadhu, whose desires are simple, who is the image of truth, is full of humility, who represents the very essence of truth and has wholly renounced his ego, such a one is a holy soul, whether he knows it or not. Such a one was Mahatma Gokhale, as I could see from my twenty years’ acquaintance with him.

In 1896, I discussed [with leaders] in India the question of indentured labour in Natal. At that time, I knew the Indian leaders only by name. This was the first occasion when I had contact with he leaders at Calcutta, Bombay, Poona and Madras. The late Gokhale was then known as a follower of Ranade. He had already at this time dedicated his life to the Fergusson College. I was a mere youth, with no experience. The bond which developed between us on the occasion of our very first meeting in Poona never came to exist between any other leader and me. Sure enough, all that I had heard about Mahatma Gokhale was confirmed by my own experience; but especially the effect which the soft expression on his lotus-like face had on me has still not vanished from my mind. I instantly recognized him as dharma incarnate. I had an audience with Shri Ranade, too, at that

---

1 1842-1901, Indian judge, social reformer, author and one of the founders of the Indian National Congress time, but I could get no glimpse into his heart. I could only see him as Gokhale’s mentor. Whether it was that he was much senior to me in age and experience or that there were some other reasons, whatever the reason, I could not understand Shri Ranade as well as I could Gokhale.

After this contact with him in 1896, Gokhale’s political life be came my ideal. That very time he took possession of my heart as my guru in matters political. He edited the Quarterly of the Sarvajanik Sabha, he made Fergusson College illustrious by teaching there. He gave evidence before the Welby Commission¹ and demonstrated his true worth to India. He created so fine an impression on Lord Curzon² by his ability that the latter, who feared none, feared him. By his performance in the Central Legislative Assembly, he brought credit to India. At the risk of his life, he served on the Public Service Commission. He did all this and much more. Others have given a far better account of these things than I could hope to. Moreover, one cannot claim that his message, as I have understood it and defined it here, may be clearly deduced from these actions of his. I, therefore propose to conclude this article by relating what I have myself known and what exemplifies his message.

The satyagraha struggle made so profound an impression on his mind that, though his health absolutely forbade it, he decided to pay a visit to South Africa. He went there in 1912. The Indians in South Africa gave him a right royal welcome. On the very next day after his arrival in Cape Town, there was a meeting in the local Town Hall. The Mayor was in the chair. Gokhale was in no condition to attend meetings and make speeches. But he left intact all the countless and taxing engagements that had been fixed. Following this decision, he attended the meeting in the Town Hall. At that very first appearance, he conquered the hearts of the whites in Cape Town. Everyone felt that a great soul was visiting South Africa. Mr. Merriman³, a prominent leader in South Africa and a man of character and liberal views, had this to say when they met: “Sir, a visit by a person like you brings a breath of fresh air into this land of ours.”

¹ The Royal Commission on Expenditure (popularly known as the Welby Commission) appointed in 1894 to consider the question of apportionment of military expenditure between England and India
² (1859-1925), Viceroy of India, 1899-1905
³ (1841-1926), M.L.A., Union of South Africa
As the late Mr. Gokhale’s tour progressed, this first impression became stronger. At every place the distinction between whites and Coloureds was forgotten for the moment. There were meetings in all places like the one held in Cape Town. The whites and Indians sat in the same rows at these meetings and, according equal honour to the late Mr. Gokhale, earned similar honour for themselves. There was a dinner in his honour in Johannesburg. It was attended by nearly three hundred prominent whites. The Mayor was in the chair. The whites in Johannesburg are not likely to be awed by anyone. If they have some multi-millionaires among them, they have also men who know people’s worth. These vied with one another in shaking hands with Mr. Gokhale. There was only one reason for this. In his speeches, the audiences saw Gokhale’s overflowing love for his motherland and a sense of fairness, at the same time. He wanted his country to be treated with the fullest respect and honour but did not want that any other country should be humiliated. If he was anxious to see all the rights of his countrymen preserved, he was equally anxious to see that the rights of others were not jeopardized in the process. Because of this, everyone felt a genuine sweetness in his utterances.

Mr. Gokhale believed that he delivered in Johannesburg his best speech in South Africa. It lasted more than three quarters of an hour but I never felt that anyone in the audience was bored. How did he make this speech? He started preparing for it six days in advance. He acquainted himself with the history of the question, as much as was necessary for his purpose, posted himself with the relevant figures and, sitting up late the preceding night, got ready with his language. The result was as I have stated. He satisfied both the whites and his own people.

I shall never forget while I live the pains he took to prepare himself for his meeting with Generals Botha and Smuts in Pretoria, the capital of South Africa. On the day before the interview, he closely examined Mr. Kallenbach and me. He got up at three o’clock and woke us up. He had finished with the literature he had been supplied and now wanted to cross-examine me, in order to make sure whether he was fully prepared. I told him politely that he need not have exerted himself so much, that we would fight it out if we obtained nothing then, but that we did not want him to be sacrificed for our sake. But how would a man, who had made it a rule to throw himself heart and soul into everything that he undertook, listen to my words? How shall I describe his manner of cross-examining [me]? How shall I praise his thoroughness? Such pains could have only one result. The cabinet promised Mr. Gokhale that a Bill conceding the satyagrahis’ demands would be introduced in Parliament in the ensuing session and that the annual tax of £3 on the indentured labourers would be repealed. The promises were not kept at the time mentioned. Did Mr. Gokhale hold his peace thereafter? Not for a moment. I am sure his exertions in 1913 to secure the fulfilment of the promises must have shortened his life by at least ten years. This is what his doctors believe. It is difficult to give an idea of the labour he went through in that year in rousing India and collecting funds. India was in an uproar about the issue of South Africa. The power which brought this about was Mr. Gokhale’s. Lord Hardinge made a speech in Madras which will go down in history. This too was owing to Gokhale. Those who were the nearest to him bear witness that, worrying himself over the South African issue, he became permanently bed-ridden. Even so, till the very last he refused to rest. He would receive, at midnight, telegrams from South Africa as long as letters. He attended to them immediately and drafted a reply on the instant. A telegram would be sent to Lord Hardinge the same moment and a statement for the Press prepared. In attending to the question, he delayed his meal and delayed going to bed, ignored the difference between day and night. Such single-minded and selfless devotion would be possible only to an elevated soul.

---

1 In 1912

On the Hindu-Muslim question, too, his approach was ever the most religious. Once a man dressed as a sadhu went to see him, claiming to speak for Hindus. He would have the Muslims treated as

---

1 Replying to addresses of welcome of the Mahajan Sabha and Madras Provincial Conference Committee at Madras on November 24, 1913, Lord Hardinge said:

“Recently your compatriots in South Africa have taken matters into their own hands by organising what is called passive resistance to laws which they consider invidious and unjust—an opinion which we who watch their struggle from afar cannot but share. They have violated as they intend to violate those laws with full knowledge of the penalties involved and ready with all courage and patience to endure those penalties. In all this they have the sympathy of India deep and burning and not only of India but of all those who, like myself, without being Indians themselves, have feelings of sympathy for the people of this country.” Vide “Lord Hardinge’s Speech”, 3-12-1913.
inferior and the Hindus as superior. When Mr. Gokhale refused to play this game, he was accused of wanting in pride as a Hindu. Knitting his brows, he replied in a voice that pierced the heart: “If Hinduism consists in doing what you say, I am not a Hindu. Please leave me.” One sannyasi left another and walked off.

Mr. Gokhale possessed in an eminent degree the quality of fearlessness. Among the qualities that make for the religious way of life this occupies almost the first place. There was a reign of terror in Poona after the assassination of Lieutenant Rand. Mr. Gokhale was in England at that time. He made a famous speech there in defence of Poona. Some of the statements he made in that speech could not subsequently be proved. After some time, he returned to India. He apologized to the British troops against whom he had levelled charges. This action even displeased a section of the Indian people. Some persons advised the Mahatma to retire from public life. A few ignorant Indians did not even hesitate to accuse him of pusillanimity. To all of them, he replied in words at once earnest and gentle: “What I have undertaken at no one’s order, I can abandon at no one’s order. I should be happy to have popular opinion on my side while performing my duty; should I not be so fortunate, however, that too may be just as well.” He believed that one’s duty lay in working. I never observed that while doing anything, he considered its effect on popular opinion from the point of view of his personal fortunes. If it ever became necessary to mount the gallows for the sake of the country, I believe he had the strength to do so fearlessly and with a smile on his face. I know that, often enough, mounting the gallows would have been a far easier thing for him than to be in the condition he had to pass through. He was in such painful situations more than once but he never gave way.

All these instances would seem to point to this lesson, that if we would learn anything from the life of this great patriot, it should be to emulate his religious attitude. All of us cannot go into the Central Legislative Assembly, nor do we always observe that doing so necessarily means serving the nation. We all cannot join the Public Service Commission and all those who do are not patriots. We may not, everyone of us, acquire his learning, nor do we see that every learned person is a servant of the country. All of us, however, can cultivate virtues like fearlessness, truthfulness, fortitude, justice, straightforwardness, firmness of purpose, and dedicate them to the service of the nation. This is the religious way. This is what the *mahavakya*¹, that political life should be spiritualized, means. He who follows this line will always know the path he should take. He will earn a share in the legacy left by the late Shri Gokhale. It is the divine assurance that anyone acting in this spirit will come by all the other gifts he needs. The life of the late Shri Gokhale is an irrefutable proof of this.

1 In 1897, W. C. Rand, I.C.S., and Lieutenant Ayerst were assassinated in Poona while on plague duty. Damodar Hari Chapek and his brother were tried and executed for the murder.

[From Gujarati]

Mahatma Gandhi

Mahatma Gandhini Vicharsrishti

120. LETTER TO KARSANDAS CHITALIA

KASHJI,

Friday, February 4, 1916

BHAISHRI KARSANDAS,

I send with this a fresh article² altogether. I cannot write, at present at any rate, anything more or better than this. It is certainly better than what I sent earlier. If you find it difficult to decipher the handwriting, take help from Narandas Gandhi or Kalyandas. I shall correct the proofs if you send them to me. I shall reach Bombay on the morning of the 11th. I shall most probably go there via Ahmedabad.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

[From Gujarati]

¹ Memorable statement of a great truth, like tattvamasi (Thou art That) in the Upanishads

² Vide the preceding item.
121. LETTER TO MAGANBHAI H. PATEL

[February 4, 1916]¹

I have received your first letter. I have met the Secretary to the Viceroy and others. Nothing has been decided yet. Mr. Andrews had made arrangements to get all of them together. I shall write further. I cannot write more today in the midst of all the hectic activity. As for Fakiri, I have written to Raidas Karimbhai should certainly be given Rs. 15/- and food. He will have arrived there. If you like you may postpone the matter of his salary till I arrive. I hope to go to Bombay after coming there.

Blessings from
BAPU

BHAI MAGANBHAI PATEL
SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM
AHMEDABAD

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C. W. 10995. Courtesy: Suryakant C. Patel

122. SPEECH AT KASHI NAGARI PRACHARINI SABHA²

February 5, 1916

YOUR HIGHNESS AND BROTHERS,

I feel ashamed that before you I cannot speak well in Hindi. You know that I used to live in South Africa. It was there that I learnt a little Hindi while working with my Indian brethren. You will therefore forgive me my failing.

I had not thought that I would have to speak at this gathering. And I am not fit to deliver a speech. I have been told to say something. Although it is beyond my capacity to say much, I shall speak to you about a few things that come to my mind. You are perhaps not aware that I have with me thirty to thirty-five men and women. They have taken a pledge to use Hindi. I also corresponded with this body. I was in need of some books which I could not get. The Sabha has done something and I offer it my thanks and congratulations and pray to God that it may increase its membership every day. It should try to prepare the books that I wanted. Its office-holders are all M.A.’s and B.A.’s and LL.B.’s and they have read those books in English. From those of its office-holders who are lawyers, I want to know whether they do their court work in English or in Hindi. If they do it in English, I will say to them that they should do it in Hindi. To those young men who are students, I will say that they should take a vow to use Hindi for writing letters to one another.

¹ From the postmark
² Under the presidentship of the Maharaja of Kashmir

Freedom cannot be gained without literature. People should therefore bring to the masses the advanced thoughts and new ideas that are available in English. Tomorrow Dr. J. C. Bose will be making a speech. If he speaks in Bengali, I will have no quarrel with him. I will have a quarrel with him if he speaks in English. It is the duty of the Nagari Pracharini Sabha to translate into Hindi the books that Dr. Bose has written in English. When a learned book is published in Germany, the very next week it is translated into English. That is why that language is so mature. It should be the same with Hindi. However much people may exalt their own language, real glory will belong only to the language which produces great scholars and that language alone will spread in the country. If Tamil produces great scholars, we shall all begin to speak Tamil. The language in which a poet like Tulsidas wrote his poetry is certainly sacred and no language can stand before it. Our chief task is to learn Hindi, but even so we shall learn other languages also. If we learn Tamil, we shall be able to teach Hindi to Tamil-speakers also.

[From Hindi]

Mahatma Gandhi by Ramchandra Varma

123. SPEECH AT BENARES HINDU UNIVERSITY

February 6, 1916

The following is the full text of the speech delivered on February 4th on the occasion of the opening of the Benares Hindu University. Gandhiji, who edited the report for G. A. Natesan, wrote:

I have merely removed some of the verbiage which in cold print would make the speech bad reading:

Friends, I wish to tender my humble apology for the long delay

1 Misprint for 6th
that took place before I was able to reach this place. And you will readily accept the apology when I tell you that I am not responsible for the delay nor is any human agency responsible for it. (Laughter.) The fact is that I am like an animal on show and lay keepers in their over-kindness always manage to neglect a necessary chapter in this life and that is pure accident. In this case, they did not provide for the series of accidents that happened to us—to me, my keepers! and my carriers. Hence this delay.

Friends, under the influence of the matchless eloquence of the lady (Mrs. Besant) who has just sat down, pray, do not believe that our University has become a finished product and that all the young men who are to come to the University that has yet to rise and come into existence, have also come and returned from it finished citizens of a great empire. Do not go away with any such impression and if you, the student world to which my remarks are supposed to be addressed this evening, consider for one moment that the spiritual life, for which this country is noted and for which this country has no rival, can be transmitted through the lip, pray, believe me you are wrong. You will never be able merely through the lip to give the message that India, I hope, will one day deliver to the world. I myself have been “fed up” with speeches and lectures. I except the lectures that have been delivered here during the last two days from this category, because they were necessary. But I do venture to suggest to you that we have now reached almost the end of our resources in speech-making, and it is not enough that our ears are feasted, that our eyes are feasted, but it is necessary that our hearts have got to be touched and that our hands and feet have got to be moved. We have been told during the last two days how necessary it is, if we are to retain our hold upon the simplicity of Indian character, that our hands and feet should move in unison with our hearts. But this is only by way of preface, I wanted to say it is a matter of deep humiliation and shame for us that I am compelled this evening under the shadow of this great college, in this sacred city, to address my countrymen in a language that is foreign to me. I know that if I was appointed an examiner to examine all those who have been attending during these two days this series of lectures most of those who might be examined upon these lectures would fail. And why? Because they have not been touched. I was present at the sessions of the great Congress in the month of December. There was a much vaster audience, and will you believe me when I tell you that the only speeches that touched that huge audience in Bombay were the speeches that were delivered in Hindustani? In Bombay, mind you, not in Benares where everybody speaks Hindi. But between the vernaculars of the Bombay Presidency on the one hand; and Hindi on the other, no such great dividing line exists as there does between English and the sister-languages of India; and the Congress audience was better able to follow the speakers in Hindi. I am hoping that this University will see to it that the youths who come to it will receive their instruction through the medium of their vernaculars. Our language is the reflection of ourselves, and if you tell me that our languages are too poor to express the best thought, then I say that the sooner we are wiped out of existence, the better for us. Is there a man who dreams that English can ever become the national language of India? (Cries of “Never”.) Why this handicap on the nation? Just consider for one moment what an unequal race our lads have to run with every English lad. I had the privilege of a close conversation with some Poona professors. They assured me that every Indian youth, because he reached his knowledge through the English language, lost at least six precious years of life. Multiply that by the number of students turned out by our schools and colleges and find out for yourselves how many thousand years have been lost to the nation. The charge against us is, that we have no initiative. How can we have any if we are to devote the precious years of our life to the mastery of a foreign tongue? We fail in this attempt also. Was it possible for any speaker yesterday and today to impress his audience as was possible for Mr. Higginbotham? It was not the fault of the previous speakers that they could not engage the audience. They had more than substance enough for us in their addresses. But their addresses could not go home to us. I have heard it said that after all it is English-educated India which is leading and which is doing all the things for the nation. It would be monstrous if it were otherwise. The only education we receive is English education. Surely we must show something for it. But suppose that we had been receiving during the past fifty years education through our vernaculars, what should we have had today? We should have today a free India, we should have our educated men, not as if they were foreigners in their own land but speaking to the heart of the nation; they would be working amongst the poorest of the poor, and whatever they would have gained during the past 50 years would be a heritage for the nation. (Applause.) Today even our wives are not the sharers in our best thought. Look at Professor Bose\(^1\) and Professor Ray\(^2\) and their brilliant researches. Is it not a shame that their researches are not the common property of the masses?

Let us now turn to another subject.

The Congress has passed a resolution about self-government and I have no doubt that the All-India Congress Committee and the Moslem League will do their duty and come forward with some tangible suggestions. But I, for one, must frankly confess that I am not so much interested in what they will be able to produce as I am interested in anything that the student world is going to produce or the masses are going to produce. No paper contribution will ever give us self-government. No amount of speeches will ever make us fit for self-government. It is only our conduct that will fit us for it. (Applause.) And how are we trying to govern ourselves? I want to think audibly this evening. I do not want to make a speech and if you find me this evening speaking without reserve, pray, consider that you are only sharing the thoughts of a man who allows himself to think audibly, and if you think that I seem to transgress the limits that courtesy imposes upon me, pardon me for the liberty I may be taking.

I visited the Viswanath Temple last evening and as I was walking through those lanes, these were the thoughts that touched me. If a stranger dropped from above on to this great temple and he had to consider what we as Hindus were, would he not be justified in condemning us? Is not this great temple a reflection of our own character? I speak feelingly as a Hindu. Is it right that the lanes of our sacred temple should be as dirty as they are? The houses round about are built anyhow. The lanes are tortuous and narrow. If even our temples are not models of roominess and cleanliness, what can our self-government be? Shall our temples be abodes of holiness, cleanliness and peace as soon as the English have retired from India, either of their own pleasure or by compulsion, bag and baggage?

I entirely agree with the President of the Congress that before we think of self-government, we shall have to do the necessary plodding. In every city there are two divisions, the cantonment and the city proper. The city mostly is a stinking den. But we are a people unused

---

\(^1\) Sir J. C. Bose, F.R.S., botanist
\(^2\) Sir P. C. Ray, chemist to city life. But if we want city life, we cannot reproduce the easy-going hamlet life. It is not comforting to think that people walk about the streets of Indian Bombay under the perpetual fear of dwellers in the storeyed buildings spitting upon them. I do a great deal of railway travelling. I observe the difficulty of third-class passengers. But the Railway Administration is by no means to blame for all their hard lot. We do not know the elementary laws of cleanliness. We spit anywhere on the carriage floor, irrespective of the thought that it is often used as sleeping space. We do not trouble ourselves as to how we use it; the result is indescribable filth in the compartment. The so-called better class passengers over-awe their less fortunate brethren. Among them I have seen the student world also. Sometimes they behave no better. They can speak English and they have worn Norfolk Jackets and therefore claim the right to force their way in and command seating accommodation. I have turned the searchlight all over and as you have given me the privilege of speaking to you, I am laying my heart bare. Surely we must set these things right in our progress towards self-government. I now introduce you to another scene. His Highness the Maharajah, who presided yesterday over our deliberations, spoke about the poverty of India. Other speakers laid great stress upon it. But what did we witness in the great pandal in which the foundation ceremony was performed by the Viceroy? Certainly a most gorgeous show, an exhibition of jewellery which made a splendid feast for the eyes of the greatest jeweller who chose to come from Paris. I compare with the richly bedecked noblemen the millions of the poor. And I feel like saying to these noblemen: “Thereis no salvation for India unless you strip yourselves of this jewellery and hold it in trust for your countrymen in India.” (“Hear, hear” and applause.) I am sure it is not the desire of the King-Emperor or Lord Hardinge that in order to show the truest loyalty to our King-Emperor, it is necessary for us to ransack our jewellery-boxes and to appear bedecked from top to toe. I would undertake at the peril of my life to bring to you a message from King George himself that he expects nothing of the kind. Sir, whenever I hear of a great palace rising in any great city of India, be it in British India or be it in India which is ruled by our great chiefs, I become jealous at once and I say: “Oh, it is the money that has come from the agriculturists.” Over 75 per cent of the population are agriculturists and Mr. Higginbotham told us last night in his own felicitous language that they are the men who grow two blades of grass in the place of one. But there cannot be much spirit of self-government about us if we take away or allow others to take away from them almost the whole of the results of their labour. Our salvation can only come through the farmer. Neither the lawyers, nor the doctors, nor the rich landlords are going to secure it.

Now, last but not the least, it is my bounden duty to refer to what agitated our minds during these two or three days. All of us have had many anxious moments while the Viceroy was going through the streets of Benares. There were detectives stationed in many places. We were horrified. We asked ourselves: “Why this distrust? Is it not better that even Lord Hardinge should die than live a living death?” But a representative of a mighty Sovereign may not. He might find it necessary even to live a living death. But why was it necessary to impose these detectives on us? We may foam, we may fret, we may resent but let us not forget that India of today in her impatience has produced an army of anarchists. I myself am an anarchist, but of another type. But there is a class of anarchists amongst us, and if I was able to reach this class, I would say to them that their anarchism has no room in India if India is to conquer the conqueror. It is a sign of fear. If we trust and fear God, we shall have to fear no one, not Maharajahs, not Viceroys, not the detectives, not even King George. I honour the anarchist for his love of the country. I honour him for his bravery in being willing to die for his country; but I ask him: Is killing honourable? Is the dagger of an assassin a fit precursor of an honourable death? I deny it. There is no warrant for such methods in any scriptures. If I found it necessary for the salvation of India that the English should retire, that they should be driven out, I would not hesitate to declare that they would have to go, and I hope I would be prepared to die in defence of that belief. That would, in my opinion, be an honourable death. The bomb-thrower creates secret plots, is afraid to come into the open, and when caught pays the penalty of misdirected zeal. I have been told: “Had we not done this, had some people not thrown bombs, we should never have gained what we have got with reference to the partition movement.” (Mrs. Besant: “Please stop it.”) This was what I said in Bengal when Mr. Lyons presided at the meeting. I think what I am saying is necessary. If I am told to stop, I shall obey. (Turning to the Chairman) I await your orders. If you consider that by my speaking as I am, I am not serving the country and the Empire, I shall certainly stop. (Cries of “Go on”.)

1 The partition of Bengal, which took place in 1905, was annulled in December, 1911.
2 Vide “Speech at Students’ Hall, Calcutta”, 31-3-1915.
Chairman: “Please explain your object.”) I am explaining my object. I am simply (Another interruption.) My friends, please do not resent this interruption. If Mrs. Besant this evening suggests that I should stop, she does so because she loves India so well, and she considers that I am erring in thinking audibly before you young men. But even so, I simply say this that I want to purge India of the atmosphere of suspicion on either side; if we are to reach our goal, we should have an empire which is to be based upon mutual love and mutual trust. Is it not better that we talk under the shadow of this college than that we should be talking irresponsibly in our homes? I consider that it is much better that we talk these things openly. I have done so with excellent results before now. I know that there is nothing that the students are not discussing. There is nothing that the students do not know. I am therefore turning the searchlight towards ourselves. I hold the name of my country so dear to me that I exchange these thoughts with you and submit to you that there is no reason for anarchism in India. Let us frankly and openly say whatever we want to say to our rulers and face the consequences if what we have to say does not please them. But let us not abuse. I was talking the other day to a member of the much-abused Civil Service. I have not very much in common with the members of that Service, but I could not help admiring the manner in which he was speaking to me. He said: “Mr. Gandhi, do you for one moment suppose that all we, Civil Servants, are a bad lot, that we want to oppress the people whom we have come to govern?” “No”, I said. “Then, if you get an opportunity, put in a word for the much-abused Civil Service.”, And I am here to put in that word. Yes, many members of the Indian Civil Service are most decidedly overbearing, they are tyrannical, at times thoughtless. Many other adjectives may be used. I grant all these things and I grant also that after having lived in India for a certain number of years, some of them become somewhat degraded. But what does that signify? They were gentlemen before they came here, and if they have lost some of the moral fibre, it is a reflection upon ourselves. (Cries of “No”.) Just think out for yourselves, if a man who was good yesterday has become bad after having come in contact with me, is he responsible that he has deteriorated or am I? The atmosphere of sycophancy and falsity that surrounds them on their coming to India demoralises them as it would many of us. It is well to take the blame sometimes. If we are to receive self-government, we shall have to take it. We shall never be granted self-government. Look at the history of the British Empire and the British nation; freedom loving as it is, it will not be a party to give freedom to a people who will not take it themselves. Learn your lesson if you wish to from the Boer War. Those who were enemies of that Empire only a few years ago have now become friends.

[At this point there was an interruption and there was a movement on the platform to leave; the speech therefore ended here abruptly.]

Speeches and Writings of Mahatma Gandhi (4th Edit.), pp. 317-26

124. EXTRACT FROM LETTER TO MAHARAJA OF DARBHANGA

February 7, 1916

Speaking last night at one of the lectures inaugurated in connection with the University week in Benares, Mr. Gandhi referred to the precautions taken by the authorities to protect the Viceroy while he was in Benares. Mr. Gandhi was asked to explain briefly what he was about to say. Eventually all the princes present left in a body, and, though Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya explained that what Mr. Gandhi meant was that it was a shame to themselves that such a course was thought necessary because of the misdeeds of a few misguided youths, the meeting dispersed at once.

Mr. Gandhi, today, wrote a letter of explanation to the Maharaja of Darbhanga in which, after expressing his regret at last night’s incident, he says:

My sole object in referring to the Viceregal visit was to express the very strong views I hold against all acts of violence and so-called anarchy. In common with most of us, I felt deeply humiliated that extraordinary precautions should have been rendered necessary for the protection of the person of one of the noblest of Viceroy’s when he was, in a special sense, our honoured guest in this sacred city. My mission in life is to preach and assist in securing the utmost freedom for my country but never by violence to the person of any human being, even under the greatest provocation. My speech was conceived...

---

1 This was published under the caption: “The Hindu University: A Remarkable Incident”.
2 (1861-1946), founder of the Benares Hindu University; member, Imperial Legislative Council; twice President of the Indian National Congress
3 Who was in the chair at the meeting on February 6 to instill this lesson into the hearts of young men.

The Maharaja of Darbhanga, who presided at the morning lectures today, at which almost all the princes now in Benares were present, made a brief reference to last night’s incident. He observed that they had heard with grief and pain the remarks of Mr. Gandhi and he was sure they all disapproved the attitude Mr. Gandhi had taken up. (Voices: “We all disapprove.”)

The Pioneer, 9-2-1916

125. LETTER TO MAGANBHAI H. PATEL

BOMBAY,

Wednesday [February 9, 1916]

BHAISHRI MAGANBHAI,

Perhaps you did not receive in time a telegram I sent from Jabalpur; because a telegram sent here has not been received. Send Krishna by the Kathiawar Express. Get her a half-ticket for Grant Road. I shall go to receive her on that train. I shall leave for Madras by 9 o’clock in the morning on Friday. Ba will leave by the Kathiawar Express tomorrow. Somebody should receive her on the train.

I shall write about the trouble at Banaras later; there is no time now. It was interesting.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 1096. Courtesy: Suryakant C. Patel

1 From the postmark
2 For Gandhiji’s speech at the inauguration of the Banaras Hindu University and the furore it caused in political circles, vide “Speech at Benares Hindu University”, 6-2-1916.
126. INTERVIEW TO A.P.I. ON BENARES ‘INCIDENT’

February 9, 1916

Mr. Gandhi, who arrived in Bombay yesterday afternoon from Benares, being interviewed about the incident which interrupted his speech at Benares, said that he was unable to say what particular remarks of his were objected to, nor did Mrs. Besant point out any such remarks. She only appealed to the Chairman to stop him. Mr. Gandhi said his speech that evening was practically a repetition, in so far as it related to anarchism, of what he had said¹ at the Calcutta meeting last year of which the Hon. Mr. Lyons was Chairman. At this point, the audience wanted the speaker to go on, but Mr. Gandhi said that he would not do so unless he received the Chairman’s permission to continue. He also asked the audience not to resent, as it was inclined, Mrs. Besant’s interruption, as anybody who might feel aggrieved against the speaker’s remarks had a right to ask for a ruling from the Chair.

Continuing, Mr. Gandhi said:

And I proceeded with my speech only after the Maharaja of Darbhanga’s permission, which he gave after considering the matter for a while and cautioning me to explain matters briefly. I proceeded, but still noticed a stir on the platform, and that Mrs. Besant was whispering to the Princes who were sitting near her that I was neither withdrawing nor explaining and saying that they ought not to stay.² The next thing I observed was that the Princes rose one after another and as the Chairman also left, I could not finish my speech.

In reply to a question whether he would like to withdraw any of the remarks he had made at the meeting, Mr. Gandhi emphatically declared that every word was well-considered and well-weighed. Continuing, he said:

That I could ever endorse methods of violence is unthinkable. I was not eager to speak at all. I did so under great pressure from friends, as I was credited with having some influence over the student population of the country. I was asked to speak about the violence which has unfortunately been the creed of some impulsive youths, owing to which we had to witness the humiliating spectacle of extraordinary precautions having to be taken for the protection of the life of our honoured guest from ourselves. Throughout the whole of my remarks, there was not a word of endorsement of violent deeds. I did give the misguided youths credit for patriotic motives, but I showed that the action was all the worthier of condemnation, in that it did irreparable harm in the long run. In fact, the whole of my speech was intended to direct the searchlight towards ourselves and to show that for many of our difficulties, we were alone responsible. It is my firm belief that, but for Mrs. Besant’s hasty and ill-conceived interruption, nothing would have happened and my speech in its completed state would have left no room for any doubt as to my meaning.

¹ Vide “Speech at Students’ Hall, Calcutta”, 31-3-1915.
² New India, 10-2-1916, published along with the report of this interview, Mrs. Besant’s statement: “I did not suggest to the Princes to leave.” Vide “Annie Besant’s Explanation Regarding Benares Incident”, 10-2-1916.

Questioned as to whether it was a fact that the Hon. Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya apologised to the meeting after the incident had occurred, Mr. Gandhi replied:

Mr. Malaviya did address the meeting. But I could trace no apology in his remarks. He merely said that I had spoken at his special request and my sole intention was to show how suicidal methods of violence were.

The Bombay Chronicle, 10-2-1916

127. SPEECH ON SWADESHI AT MISSIONARY CONFERENCE, MADRAS

February 14, 1916

It was not without much diffidence that I undertook to speak to you at all. And I was hard put to it in the selection of my subject. I have chosen a very delicate and difficult subject. It is delicate because of the peculiar views I hold upon swadeshi, and it is difficult because I have not that command of language which is necessary for giving adequate expression to my thoughts. I know that I may rely upon your indulgence for the many shortcomings you will no doubt find in my address, the more so when I tell you that there is nothing in what I am about to say, that I am not either already practising or am not preparing to practise to the best of my ability. It encourages me to observe that last month you devoted a week to prayer in the place of an address. I have earnestly prayed that what I am about to say may bear fruit and I know that you will bless my words with a similar

---

1 Text of the paper read by Gandhiji. It was reprinted in Young India 21-6-1919 prayer.

After much thinking, I have arrived at a definition of swadeshi that perhaps best illustrates my meaning. Swadeshi is that spirit in us which restricts us to the use and service of our immediate surroundings to the exclusion of the more remote. Thus, as for religion, in order to satisfy the requirements of the definition, I must restrict myself to my ancestral religion. That is the use of my immediate religious surroundings. If I find it defective, I should serve it by purging it of its defects. In the domain of politics, I should make use of the indigenous institutions and serve them by curing them of their proved defects. In that of economics, I should use only things that are produced by my immediate neighbours and serve those industries by making them efficient and complete where they might be found wanting. It is suggested that such swadeshi, if reduced to practice, will lead to the millennium. And as we do not abandon our pursuit after the millennium because we do not expect quite to reach it within our time, so may we not abandon swadeshi even though it may not be fully attained for generations to come.

Let us briefly examine three branches of Swadeshi as sketched above. Hinduism has become a conservative religion and therefore a mighty force because of the Swadeshi spirit underlying it. It is the most tolerant because it is non-proselytising, and it is as capable of expansion today as it has been found to be in the past. It has succeeded not in driving, as I think it has been erroneously held, but in absorbing Buddhism. By reason of the swadeshi spirit, a Hindu refuses to change his religion not necessarily because he considers it to be the best, but because he knows that he can complement it by introducing reforms. And what I have said about Hinduism is, I suppose, true of the other great faiths of the world, only it is held that it is specially so in the case of Hinduism. But here comes the point I am labouring to reach. If there is any substance in what I have said, will not the great missionary bodies of India, to whom she owes a deep debt of gratitude for what they have done and are doing, do still better and serve the spirit of Christianity better, by dropping the goal of proselytising but continuing their philanthropic work? I hope you will not consider this to be an impertinence on my part. I make the suggestion in all sincerity and with due humility. Moreover, I have some claim upon your attention. I have endeavoured to study the Bible. I consider it as part of my scriptures. The spirit of the Sermon on the Mount competes almost on equal terms with the Bhagavad Gita for the domination of my heart. I yield to no Christian in the strength of devotion with which I sing, “Lead, kindly Light” and several other inspired hymns of a similar nature. I have come under the influence of noted Christian missionaries belonging to different denominations. And I enjoy to this day the privilege of friendship with some of them. You will perhaps therefore allow that I have offered the above suggestion not as a biased Hindu but as a humble and impartial student of religion with great leanings towards Christianity. May it not be that the “Go Ye unto All the World” message has been somewhat narrowly interpreted and the spirit of it missed? It will not be denied, I speak from experience, that many of the conversions are only so called. In some cases, the appeal has gone not to the heart but to the stomach. And in every case, a conversion leaves a sore behind it which, I venture to think, is avoidable. Quoting again from experience, a new birth, a change of heart, is perfectly possible in every one of the great faiths. I know I am now treading upon thin ice. But I do not apologise, in closing this part of my subject, for saving that the frightful outrage that is just going on in Europe, perhaps, shows that the message of Jesus of Nazareth, the Son of Peace, has been little understood in Europe, and that light upon it may have to be thrown from the East.

I have sought your help in religious matters, which it is yours to give in a special sense. But I make bold to seek it even in political matters. I do not believe that religion has nothing to do with politics. The latter divorced from religion is like a corpse only fit to be buried. As a matter of fact, in your own silent manner, you influence politics not a little. And I feel that if the attempt to separate politics from religion had not been made, as it is even now made, they would not have degenerated, as they often appear to do. No one considers that the political life of the country is in a happy state. Following out the swadeshi spirit, I observe the indigenous institutions and the village panchayats hold me. India is really a republican country, and it is because it is that it has survived every shock hitherto delivered. Princes and potentates, whether they were Indian-born or foreigners, have hardly touched the vast masses except for collecting revenue. The latter in their turn seem to have rendered unto Caesar what was Caesar’s and for the rest have done much as they have liked. The vast organisation of caste answered not only the religious wants of the community, but it answered too its political needs. The villagers managed their internal affairs through the caste system, and through it they dealt with any oppression from the ruling power or powers. It is not possible to deny of a nation that was capable of producing the caste system its wonderful power of organisation. One had but to attend the great Kumbha Mela at Hardwar last year to know how skilful that organisation must have been, which without any seeming effort, was able effectively to cater for more than a million pilgrims. Yet is it the fashion to say that we lack organising ability. This is true, I fear, to a certain extent, of those who have been nurtured in the new traditions. We have laboured under a terrible handicap owing to an almost fatal departure from the swadeshi spirit. We the educated classes have received our education through a foreign tongue. We have therefore not reacted upon the masses. We want to represent the masses, but we fail. They recognise us not much more than they recognise the English officers. Their hearts are an open book to neither. Their aspirations are not ours. Hence there is a break. And you witness not in reality failure to organise, but want of correspondence between the representatives and the represented. If during the last fifty years we had been educated through the vernaculars, our elders and our servants and our neighbours would have partaken of our knowledge; the discoveries of a Bose or a Ray would have been household treasure as are the Ramayan and the Mahabharat. As it is, so far as the masses are concerned, those great discoveries might as well have been made by foreigners. Had instruction in all the branches of learning been given through the vernaculars, I make bold to say that they would have been enriched wonderfully. The question of village sanitation, etc., would have been solved long ago. The village panchayats would be now a living force in a special way, and India would almost be enjoying self-government suited to its requirements and would have been spared the humiliating spectacle of organised assassination on its sacred soil. It is not too late to mend. And you can help if you will, as no other body or bodies can.

And now for the last division of swadeshi. Much of the deep poverty of the masses is due to the ruinous departure from swadeshi in the economic and industrial life. If not an article of commerce had been brought from outside India, she would be today a land flowing with milk and honey. But that was not to be. We were greedy and so was England. The connection between England and India was based clearly upon an error. But she (England) does not remain in India in error. It is her declared policy that India is to be held in trust for her people. If this be true, Lancashire must stand aside. And if the swadeshi doctrine is a sound doctrine, Lancashire can stand aside without hurt, though it may sustain a shock for the time being. I think of swadeshi not as a boycott movement undertaken by way of revenge. I conceive it as a religious principle to be followed by all. I am no economist, but I have read some treatises which show that England could easily become a self-sustained country, growing all the produce she needs. This may be an utterly ridiculous proposition, and perhaps the best proof that it cannot be true is that England is one of the largest importers in the world. But India cannot live for Lancashire or any other country before she is able to live for herself. And she can live for herself only if she produces and is helped to produce everything for her requirements within her own borders. She need not be, she ought not to be, drawn into the vortex of mad and ruinous competition which breeds fratricide, jealousy and many other evils. But who is to stop her great millionaires from entering into the world competition? Certainly, not legislation. Force of public opinion, proper education, however, can do a great deal in the desired direction. The handloom industry is in a dying condition. I took special care during my wanderings last year to see as many weavers as possible, and my heart ached to find how they had lost, how families had retired from this once-flourishing and honourable occupation. If we follow the swadeshi doctrine, it would be your duty and mine to find out neighbours who can supply our wants and to teach them to supply them where they do not know how to, assuming that there are neighbours who are in want of healthy occupation. Then every village of India will almost be a self-supporting and self-contained unit exchanging only such necessary commodities with other villages where they are not locally producible. This may all sound nonsensical. Well, India is a country of nonsense. It is nonsensical to parch one’s throat with thirst when a kindly Mahomedan is ready to offer pure water to drink. And yet thousands of Hindus would rather die of thirst than drink water from a Mahomedan household. These nonsensical men can also, once they are convinced that their religion demands that they should wear garments manufactured in India only and eat food only grown in India, decline to wear any other clothing or eat any other food. Lord Curzon set the fashion for tea-drinking. And that pernicious drug now bids fair to overwhelm the nation. It has already undermined the digestive apparatus of hundreds of thousands of men and women and constitutes an additional tax upon their slender purses. Lord Hardinge can set the fashion for swadeshi and almost the whole of India will foreswear foreign goods. There is a verse in the Bhagavad Gita, which, freely rendered, means masses follow the classes. It is easy to undo the evil if the thinking portion of the community were to take the swadeshi vow even though it may for a time cause considerable inconvenience. I hate interference in any department of life. At best, it is the lesser evil. But I would tolerate, welcome, indeed plead for, stiff protective duty upon foreign goods. Natal, a British colony, protected its sugar by taxing the sugar that came from another British colony, Mauritius. England has sinned against India by forcing free trade upon her. It may have been food for her, but it has been poison for this country.

It has often been urged that India cannot adopt swadeshi in the economic life at any rate. Those who advance this objection do not look upon swadeshi as a rule of life. With them, it is a mere patriotic effort not to be made if it involved any self-denial. Swadeshi, as defined here, is a religious discipline to be undergone in utter disregard of the physical discomfort it may cause to individuals. Under its spell, the deprivation of pin or a needle, because these are not manufactured in India need cause no terror. A swadeshi will learn to do without hundreds of things which today he considers necessary. Moreover, those who dismiss swadeshi from their minds by arguing the impossible forget that swadeshi, after all, is a goal to be reached by steady effort. And we would be making for the goal even if we confined swadeshi to a given set of articles, allowing ourselves as a temporary measure to use such things as might not be procurable in the country.

There now remains for me to consider one more objection that has been raised against swadeshi. The objectors consider it to be a most selfish doctrine without any warrant in the civilized code of morality. With them, to practise Swadeshi is to revert to barbarism. I cannot enter into a detailed analysis of the proposition. But I would urge that Swadeshi is the only doctrine consistent with the law of humility and love. It is arrogance to think of launching out to serve the whole of India when I am hardly able to serve even my own family. It were better to concentrate my effort upon the family and consider that through them I was serving the whole nation and, if you will, the whole of humanity. This is humility and it is love. The motive will determine the quality of the act. I may serve my family regardless of the sufferings I may cause to others, as, for instance, I may accept an employment which enables me to extort money from people. I enrich myself thereby and then satisfy many unlawful demands of the family. Here I am neither serving the family nor the State. Or I may recognise that God has given me hands and feet only to work with for my sustenance and for that of those who may be dependent upon me. I would then at once simplify my life and that of those whom I can directly reach. In this instance, I would have served the family without causing injury to anyone else. Supposing that everyone followed this mode of life, we would have at once an ideal State. All will not reach that state at the same time. But those of us who, realising its truth, enforce it in practice will clearly anticipate and accelerate the coming of that happy day. Under this plan of life, in seeming to serve India to the exclusion of every other country, I do not harm any other country. My patriotism is both exclusive and inclusive. It is exclusive in the sense that in all humility I confine my attention to the land of my birth, but it is inclusive in the sense that my service is not of a competitive or antagonistic nature. Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas is not merely a legal maxim, but it is a grand doctrine of life. It is the key to a proper practice of ahimsa or love. It is for you, the custodians of a great faith, to set the fashion and show by your preaching, sanctified by practice, that patriotism based on hatred “killeth” and that patriotism based on love “giveth life”.

The Hindu, 28-2-1916

---

1 This Latin legal maxim means: “Use your property in such a way as not to damage that of others.” Vide also An Autobiography, Part I, Ch. XXV.
MR. CHAIRMAN AND DEAR FRIENDS,

I have so often said that I am not myself fond of hearing my own voice and I assure you that this morning also I retained the same position. It was only, if you will believe me, my great regard for the students, whom I love, whom I respect and who I consider are the hope of future India that moved me to accept this invitation to speak to you this morning. I did not know what subject to choose. A friend has handed me a slip here asking me whether I would enlighten the students on the Benares incident. (“Hear, hear”.) I fear I shall have to disappoint that friend and those of you who associate yourselves with that view. I don’t think that you need lay any stress upon that incident. These are the passing waves which will always come and go. I should therefore this morning fear rather if I can possibly do so and pour my soul out to you with reference to something which I treasure so much above everything else.²

To many of the students who came here last year to converse with me, I said¹ I was about to establish an institution—an Ashram—somewhere in India, and it is about that place that I am going to talk to you this morning. I feel and I have felt during the whole of my public life that what we need, what any nation needs, but we perhaps of all the nations of the world need just now, is nothing else and nothing less than character-building. And this is the view propounded by that great patriot, Mr. Gokhale. (Cheers.) As you know, in many of his speeches, he used to say that we would get nothing, we would deserve nothing unless we had character to back what we wished for.

¹ With Rev. George Pittendrigh of the Madras Christian College in the chair.

² We have received several enquiries from our readers regarding Mr. Gandhi’s new organisation, the Satyagrahashram. We are glad to be able to give the following account of the Ashram from a special report of the speech that Mr. Gandhi delivered sometime ago in Madras. The report has since had the benefit of Mr. Gandhi’s revision and may, therefore, be taken as an authoritative exposition of the aims and objects of Mr. Gandhi’s Satyagrahashram.

³ Vide “Speech at Gokhale Club, Madras”, 20-4-1915.
Hence his founding of that great body, the Servants of India Society. And as you know, in the prospectus that has been issued in connection with the Society, Mr. Gokhale has deliberately stated that it was necessary to spiritualise the political life of the country. You know also that he used to say so often that our average was less than the average of so many European nations. I do not know whether that statement by him, whom, with pride, I consider to be my political guru, has really foundation in fact, but I do believe that there is much to be said to justify it in so far as educated India is concerned; not because we, the educated portion of the community, have blundered, but because we have been creatures of circumstances. Be that as it may, this is the maxim of life which I have accepted, namely, that no work done by any man, no matter how great he is, will really prosper unless he has a religious backing. But what is religion? the question will be immediately asked. I, for one, would answer, not the religion which you will get after reading all the scriptures of the world; it is not really a grasp by the brain, but it is a heart-grasp. It is a thing which is not alien to us, but it is a thing which has to be evolved out of us. It is always within us, with some consciously so; with others, quite unconsciously. But it is there; and whether we wake up this religious instinct in us through outside assistance or by inward growth, no matter how it is done, it has got to be done if we want to do anything in the right manner and anything that is going to persist.

Our scriptures have laid down certain rules as maxims of life and as axioms which we have to take for granted as self-demonstrated truths. The shastras tell us that without living according to those maxims, we are incapable even of having a reasonable perception of religion. Believing in these implicitly for all these long years and having actually endeavoured to reduce to practice these injunctions of the shastras, I have deemed it necessary to seek the association of those who think with me in founding this institution. And I shall venture this morning to place before you the rules that have been drawn up and that have to be observed by everyone who seeks to be a member of that Ashram.

Five of these are known as Yamas, and the first and the foremost is, the

1 “it” in New India
VOW OF TRUTH

Not truth simply as we ordinarily understand it, that as far as possible we ought not to resort to a lie, that is to say, not truth which merely answers the saying, “Honesty is the best policy”—implying that if it is not the best policy, we may depart from it. But here Truth, as it is conceived, means that we have to rule our life by this law of Truth at any cost. And in order to satisfy the definition, I have drawn upon the celebrated illustration of the life of Prahlad. For the sake of Truth, he dared to oppose his own father, and he defended himself, not by retaliation by paying his father back in his own coin, but in defence of Truth, as he knew it, he was prepared to die without caring to return the blows that he had received from his father or from those who were charged with his father’s instructions. Not only that: he would not in any way even parry the blows. On the contrary, with a smile on his lips, he underwent the innumerable tortures to which he was subjected, with the result that at last, Truth rose triumphant, not that Prahlad suffered the tortures because he knew that some day or other in his very life-time he would be able to demonstrate the infallibility of the law of Truth. That fact was there; but if he had died in the midst of torture, he would still have adhered to Truth. That is the Truth that I would like us to follow. There was an incident I noticed yesterday. It was a trifling incident, but I think these trifling incidents are like straws which show which way the wind is blowing. The incident was this: I was talking to a friend who wanted to talk to me aside, and we were engaged in a private conversation. A third friend dropped in and he politely asked whether he was intruding. The friend to whom I was talking said: “Oh, no, there is nothing private here.” I felt taken-aback a little, because, as I was taken aside, I knew that so far as this friend was concerned, the conversation was private. But he immediately, out of politeness, I would call it over-politeness, said there was no private conversation and that he (the third friend) could join. I suggest to you that this is a departure from my definition of Truth. I think that the friend should have, in the gentlest manner possible, but still openly and frankly, said: “Yes, just now, as you properly say, you would be intruding” without giving the slightest offence to the person if he was himself a gentleman—and we are bound to consider everybody to be a gentleman unless he

1 Prahlad was a devotee of God persecuted by his unbelieving father, the demon-king, Hiranyakashipu. Gandhi often spoke of him as an ideal satyagrahi.
proves to be otherwise. But I may be told that the incident, after all, proves the gentility of the nation. I think that it is over-proving the case. If we continue to say these things out of politeness, we really become a nation of hypocrites. I recall a conversation I had with an English friend. He was comparatively a stranger. He is a Principal of a College and has been in India for several years. He was comparing notes with me, and he asked me whether I would admit that we, unlike most Englishmen, would not dare to say “No” when it was “No” that we meant. And I must admit that I immediately said “Yes”. I agree with that statement. We do hesitate to say “No”, frankly and boldly, when we want to pay due regard to the sentiments of the person whom we are addressing. In this Ashram, we make it a rule that we must say “No” when we mean “No”, regardless of consequences. This, then, is the first rule. Then we come to the

DOCTRINE OF AHIMSA

Literally speaking, ahimsa means non-killing. But to me it has a world of meaning and takes me into realms much higher, infinitely higher, than the realm to which I would go, if I merely understood by ahimsa non-killing. Ahimsa really means that you may not offend anybody, you may not harbour an uncharitable thought even in connection with one who may consider himself to be your enemy. Pray notice the guarded nature of this thought; I do not say “whom you consider to be your enemy”, but “who may consider himself to be your enemy”. For one who follows the doctrine of ahimsa, there is no room for an enemy; he denies the existence of an enemy. But there are people who consider themselves to be his enemies, and he cannot help that circumstance. So, it is held that we may not harbour an evil thought even in connection with such persons. If we return blow for blow, we depart from the doctrine of ahimsa. But I go further. If we resent a friend’s action or the so-called enemy’s action, we still fall short of this doctrine. But when I say we should not resent, I do not say that we should acquiesce; but by resenting I mean wishing that some harm should be done to the enemy, or that he should be put out of the way, not even by any action of ours, but by the action of somebody else, or, say, by Divine agency. If we harbour even this thought, we depart from this doctrine of ahimsa. Those who join the Ashram have to literally accept that meaning. That does not mean that we practise that doctrine in its entirety. Far from it. It is an ideal which we have to reach, and it is an ideal to be reached even at this very moment, if we are capable of doing so. But it is not a proposition in geometry to be learnt by heart: it is not even like solving difficult problems in higher mathematics; it is infinitely more difficult than solving those problems. Many of you have burnt the midnight oil in solving those problems. If you want to follow out this doctrine, you will have to do much more than burn the midnight oil. You will have to pass many a sleepless night, and go through many a mental torture and agony before you can reach, before you can even be within measurable distance of this goal. It is the goal, and nothing less than that, you and I have to reach if we want to understand what a religious life means. I will not say much more on this doctrine than this: that a man who believes in the efficacy of this doctrine finds in the ultimate stage, when he is about to reach the goal, the whole world at his feet, not that he wants the whole world at his feet, but it must be so. If you express your love—ahimsa—in such a manner that it impresses itself indelibly upon your so-called enemy, he must return that love. Another thought which comes out of this is that, under this rule, there is no room for organised assassinations, and there is no room for murders even openly committed, and there is no room for any violence even for the sake of your country, and even for guarding the honour of precious ones that may be under your charge. After all, that would be a poor defence of honour. This doctrine of ahimsa tells us that we may guard the honour of those who are under our charge by delivering ourselves into the hands of the man who would commit the sacrilege. And that requires far greater physical and mental courage than the delivering of blows. You may have some degree of physical power—I do not say courage—and you may use that power. But after that is expended, what happens? The other man is filled with wrath and indignation, and you have made him more angry by matching your violence against his; and when he has done you to death, the rest of his violence is delivered against your charge. But if you do not retaliate, but stand your ground, between your charge and the opponent, simply receiving the blows without retaliating, what happens? I give you my promise that the whole of the violence will be expended on you, and your charge will be left unscathed. Under this plan of life, there is no conception of patriotism which justifies such wars as you witness today in Europe. Then there is the

Vow of Celibacy

Those who want to perform national service, or those who want to have a glimpse of the real religious life, must lead a celibate life, no matter if married or unmarried. Marriage but brings a woman closer together [sic] with the man, and they become friends in a special sense, never to be parted either in this life or in the lives that are to come. But I do not think that, in our conception of marriage, our lusts should necessarily enter. Be that as it may, this is what is placed before those who come to the Ashram. I do not deal with that at any length. Then we have the

Vow of Control of the Palate

A man who wants to control his animal passions easily does so if he control his palate. I fear this is one of the most difficult vows to follow. I am just now coming after having inspected the Victoria Hostel. I saw there, not to my dismay, though it should be to my dismay, but I am used to it now, that there are so many kitchens, not kitchens that are established in order to serve caste restrictions, but kitchens that have become necessary in order that people can have the condiments, and the exact weight of the condiments, to which they are used in the respective places from which they come. And therefore we find that for the Brahmins themselves there are different compartments and different kitchens catering for the delicate tastes of all these different groups, I suggest to you that this is simply slavery to the palate, rather than mastery over it. I may say this: Unless we take our minds off from this habit, and unless we shut our eyes to the tea shops and coffee shops and all these kitchens, and unless we are satisfied with foods that are necessary for the proper maintenance of our physical health, and unless we are prepared to rid ourselves of stimulating, heating and exciting condiments that we mix with our food, we will certainly not be able to control the overabundant, unnecessary, exciting stimulation that we may have. If we do not do that, the result naturally is, that we abuse ourselves and we abuse even the sacred trust given to us, and we become less than animals and brutes. Eating, drinking and indulging passions we share in common with the animals, but have you ever seen a horse or a cow indulging in the abuse of the palate as we do? Do you suppose that it is a sign of civilization, a sign of real life that we should multiply our eatables so far that we do not even know where we are; and seek; dish after dish until at last we have become absolutely mad and run after the newspaper sheets which give us advertisements about these dishes? Then we have the
VOW OF NON-THEIVING

I suggest that we are thieves in a way. If I take anything that I do not need for my own immediate use, and keep it, I thieve it from somebody else. I venture to suggest that it is the fundamental law of Nature, without exception, that Nature produces enough for our wants from day to day, and if only everybody took enough for himself and nothing more, there would be no pauperism in this world, there would be no man dying of starvation in this world. But so long as we have got this inequality, so long we are thieving. I am no socialist and I do not want to dispossess those who have got possessions; but I do say that, personally, those of us who want to see light out of darkness have to follow the rule. I do not want to dispossess anybody. I should then be departing from the rule of ahimsa. If somebody else possesses more than I do, let him. But so far as my own life has to be regulated, I do say that I dare not possess anything which I do not want. In India we have got three millions of people having to be satisfied with one meal a day, and that meal consisting of a chapati containing no fat in it, and a pinch of salt. You and I have no right to anything that we really have until these three million are clothed and fed better. You and I, who ought to know better, must adjust our wants, and even undergo voluntary starvation in order that they may be nursed, fed and clothed. Then there is the vow of non-possession which follows as a matter of course. Then I go to the

VOW OF SWADESHI

The vow of swadeshi is a necessary vow. But you are conversant with the swadeshi life and the swadeshi spirit. I suggest to you we are departing from one of the sacred laws of our being when we leave our neighbour and go out somewhere else in order to satisfy our wants. If a man comes from Bombay here and offers you wares, you are not justified in supporting the Bombay merchant or trader so long as you have got a merchant at your very door, born and bred in Madras. That is my view of swadeshi. In your village, so long as you have got your village-barber, you are bound to support him to the exclusion of the finished barber who may come to you from Madras. If you find it necessary that your village-barber should reach the attainment of the barber from Madras, you may train him to that. Send him to Madras by all means, if you wish, in order that he may learn his calling. Until you do that, you are not justified in going to another barber. That is swadeshi. So, when we find that there are many things that we cannot get in India, we must try to do without them. We may have to do without many things which we may consider necessary, but believe me, when you have that frame of mind, you will find a great burden taken off your shoulders, even as the Pilgrim did in that inimitable book, Pilgrim’s Progress: There came a time when the mighty burden that the Pilgrim was carrying on his shoulders unconsciously dropped from him, and he felt a freer man than he was when he started on the journey. So will you feel freer men than you are now, immediately you adopt this swadeshi life. We have also the

Vow of Fearlessness

I found, throughout my wanderings in India, that India, educated India, is seized with a paralysing fear. We may not open our lips in public; we may not declare our confirmed opinion in public; we may hold those opinions; we may talk about them secretly; and we may do anything we like within the four walls of our house,—but those are not for public consumption. If we had taken a vow of silence, I would have nothing to say. When we open our lips in public, we say things which we do not really believe in. I do not know whether this is not the experience of almost every public man who speaks in India. I then suggest to you that there is only one Being, if Being is the proper term to be used, Whom we have to fear, and that is God. When we fear God, we shall fear no man, no matter how high-placed he may be. And if you want to follow the vow of truth in any shape or form, fearlessness is the necessary consequence. And so you find, in the Bhagavad Gita, fearlessness is declared as the first essential quality of a Brahmin. We fear consequences, and therefore we are afraid to tell the truth. A man who fears God will certainly not fear any earthly consequence. Before we can aspire to the position of understanding what religion is, and before we can aspire to the position of guiding the destinies of India, do you not see that we should adopt this habit of fearlessness? Or shall we over-awe our countrymen even as we are over-awed? We thus see how important this “fearlessness vow” is. And we have also the

Vow Regarding the Untouchables

There is an ineffaceable blot that Hinduism today carries with it. I have declined to believe that it has been handed to us from immemorial times. I think that this miserable, wretched, enslaving spirit of “untouchableness” must have come to us when we were in the cycle of our lives, at our lowest ebb, and that evil has still stuck to us and it still remains with us. It is, to my mind, a curse that has come to us, and as long as that curse remains with us, so long I think we are bound to consider that every affliction that we labour under in this sacred land is a fit and proper punishment for this great and indelible crime that we are committing. That any person should be considered untouchable because of his calling passes one’s comprehension; and you, the student world, who receive all this modern education, if you become a party to this crime, it were better that you received no education whatsoever.

Of course, we are labouring under a very heavy handicap. Although you may realise that there cannot be a single human being on this earth who should be considered to be untouchable, you cannot react upon your families, you cannot react upon your surroundings, because all your thought is conceived in a foreign tongue, and all your energy is devoted to that. And so we have also introduced a rule in this Ashram that we shall receive our

EDUCATION THROUGH THE VERNACULARS

In Europe, every cultured man learns, not only his language, but also other languages, certainly three or four. And even as they do in Europe, in order to solve the problem of language in India, we, in this Ashram, make it a point to learn as many Indian vernaculars as we possibly can. And I assure you that the trouble of learning these languages is nothing compared to the trouble that we have to take in mastering the English language. We never master the English language; with some exceptions, it has not been possible for us to do so; we can never express ourselves as clearly as we can in our own mother tongue. How dare we rub out of our memory all the years of our infancy? But that is precisely what we do when we commence our higher life, as we call it, through the medium of a foreign tongue. This creates a breach in our life for bridging which we shall have to pay dearly and heavily. And you will see now the connection between these two things—education and untouchableness—this persistence of the spirit of untouchableness even at this time of the day in spite of the spread of knowledge and education. Education has enabled us to see the horrible crime. But we are seized with fear also and, therefore, we cannot take this doctrine to our homes. And we have got a superstitious veneration for our family traditions and for the members of our family. You say, “My parents will die if I tell them that I, at least, can no longer partake of this crime.” I say that Prahlad never considered that his father would die if he pronounced the sacred syllables of the name of Vishnu. On the contrary, he made the whole of that household ring, from one corner to another, by repeating that name even in the sacred presence of his father. And so you and I may do this thing in the sacred presence of our parents. If, after receiving this rude shock, some of them expire, I think that would be no calamity. It may be that some rude shocks of the kind might have to be delivered. So long as we persist in these things which have been handed down to us for generations, these incidents may happen. But there is a higher law of Nature, and in due obedience to that higher law, my parents and myself should make that sacrifice, and then we follow

Hand-Weaving

You may ask: “Why should we use our hands?” and say “the manual work has got to be done by those who are illiterate. I can only occupy myself with reading literature and political essays.” I think that we have to realise the dignity of labour. If a barber or shoe-maker attends a college, he ought not to abandon the profession of barber or shoe-maker. I consider that a barber’s profession is just as good as the profession of medicine.

Last of all, when you have conformed to these rules, I think then, and not till then, you may come to and dabble in them to your heart’s content, and certainly you will then never go wrong. Politics, divorced of religion, have absolutely no meaning. If the student-world crowd the political platforms of this country, to my mind it is not necessarily a healthy sign of national growth; but that does not mean that you, in your student-life, ought not to study politics. Politics are a part of our being; we ought to understand our national institutions, and we ought to understand our national growth and all those things. We may do it from our infancy. So, in our Ashram, every child is taught to understand the political institutions of our country, and to know how the country is vibrating with new emotions, with new aspirations, with a new life. But we want also the steady light, the infallible light, of religious faith, not a faith

Politics

---

1 One of the Hindu trinity, regarded as Preserver of the Universe which merely appeals to the intelligence, but a faith which is indelibly inscribed on the heart. First, we want to realise that religious consciousness, and immediately we have done that, I think the whole department of life is open to us, and it should then be a sacred privilege of students and everybody to partake of that whole life, so that, when they grow to manhood, and when they leave their colleges, they may do so as men properly quipped to battle with life. Today what happens is this: much of the political life is confined to student life; immediately the students leave their colleges and cease to be students, they sink into oblivion, they seek miserable employments, carrying miserable emoluments, rising no higher in their aspirations, knowing nothing of God, knowing nothing of fresh air or bright light, and nothing of that real vigorous independence that comes out of obedience to these laws that I have ventured to place before you.

Conclusion

I am not here asking you to crowd into the Ashram, there is no room there. But I say that every one of you may enact that Ashram life individually and collectively. I shall be satisfied with anything that you may choose from the rules I have ventured to place before you and act up to it. But if you think that these are the outpourings of a mad man, you will not hesitate to tell me that it is so, and I shall take that judgment from you undismayed. (Loud cheers.)

The Indian Review, February, 1916

129. SPEECH AT MADRAS SOCIAL SERVICE LEAGUE

February 16, 1916

I have been asked to speak to you this evening about social service. If this evening you find that I am not able to do sufficient justice to this great audience, you will ascribe it to so many engagements that I hastily and unthinkingly accepted. It was my desire that I should have at least a few moments to think out what I shall have to say to you but it was not to be. However, as our Chair Lady has said, it is work we want and not speeches. I am aware that you will have lost very little, if anything at all, if you find at the end of

---

1 This paragraph is from New India, 16-2-1916.
2 At its annual meeting held in the Madras Christian College
3 Mrs. Whitehead, who presided this evening’s talk that you have listened to very little.¹

For social service, as for any other service on the face of the earth, there is one condition indispensable, viz., proper qualifications on the part of those who want to render that service. The question to be asked is whether those of us who are already engaged in this kind of service and those who aspire to render that service, possess the necessary qualifications; because you will agree with me that servants, if they can mend matters, can also spoil matters, and in trying to do service, however well-intentioned that service might be, if they are not qualified for that service, they will be rendering not service but disservice. What are those qualifications? I imagine I should almost repeat to you the qualifications that I described this morning to the students in the Y.M.C.A. Hall;² because they are of universal application and are necessary for any class of work, much more in social service at this time of the day in our national life in our dear country. It seems to me that we do require truth in one hand and fearlessness in the other hand. Unless we carry the torch-light of truth, we shall not see the stall³ in front of us and unless we carry the quality of fearlessness we shall not be able to give the message that we might want to give and on proper occasion. When the occasion for testing us comes—and such occasions do not occur to men so often as they might imagine, they come but rarely, they are special privileges—when that supreme final test comes, unless we have this fearlessness in the other hand, I feel sure we shall be found wanting. But let me remind you also that these two qualities may be trained in us⁴ in a manner detrimental to ourselves and to those with whom we may come in contact. This is a dangerous statement almost to make, as if truth could be ever so handled, and in making that statement I would like you also to consider that truth comes not as truth but only as truth so called.⁵ You will recall the instance of Ravana and Rama and that of Lakshman and Indrajit in that inimitable book the Ramayana. Lakshman and Indrajit both possessed the same qualities. Both had performed austerities, both had attained a certain amount of self control. It was therefore most difficult to conquer Indrajit. We find

¹ This paragraph is from Natesan’s Speeches and Writings of Mahatma Gandhi.
² Vide the preceding item.
³ Natesan has “step”.
⁴ These two words are from Natesan.
⁵ This sentence is from Natesan.
what Indrajit possessed was mere dross and what Lakshman possessed was of great assistance not only to him, not only to the side on whose behalf he was fighting, but to us, to whom he has left a treasure to cherish and to value. What was that additional quality that Lakshman possessed? Lakshman was divinely guided. He had religious perception. His life was guided upon principle and based upon religion, and the life of Indrajit upon irreligion. Indrajit knew not where he was going. Life without religion is life without principle and life without principle is like a ship without a rudder. Just as a ship without a rudder and the helmsman will be tossed about from place to place and will never reach its destination, so will a man without religious backing, without the hard grasp of religion, be tossed about on this stormy ocean of the world without ever reaching its destined goal. So I suggest to every social servant not to run away with the idea that he will be able to serve his fellow-countrymen without these two qualities duly sanctified by religious perception and divine guidance. Immediately we have these two qualities, even our mistakes which we would still commit will not be mistakes that would redound to our discredit or injure the cause that we may handle or the persons of the communities we may want to serve.

Our Chair Lady was good enough to take me to the Pariah Village just behind the compound of the Bishop’s house and described to me the condition that little village was in before this League commenced its operations there. After seeing the village, I make bold to state that it is a model of cleanliness and order and it is much cleaner than some of the busiest and the most central parts of Madras. That is undoubtedly a creditable piece of work on the part of the Social Service League; and if the League can penetrate into the recesses of Madras and do the same kind of work, certain things which I have noticed in Madras will be conspicuous by their absence when I next pay my visit to this great city. (Cheers.) These things stare us in the face and have got to be remedied. When our Pariah brethren are amenable to reason and persuasion, shall we say that the so-called higher classes are not equally amenable to reason and persuasion and are not amenable to hygienic laws which are indispensable in order to live the city life? We may do many things with immunity but when we immediately transfer ourselves to crowded streets where we have

\[1\] Natesan has “by”.
\[2\] Natesan has “heart”.
hardly air to breathe, the life becomes changed, and we have to obey another set of laws which immediately come into being. Do we do that? It is no use saddling the Municipality with responsibilities for the condition in which we find not only the central parts of Madras, but of every city in India without exception. No municipality in the world will be able to override the habits of a class of people which have been handed to them from generation to generation. It is a work that can be done only by patient toil and divine guidance. With these two immutable weapons in our hands, it can be done only by such bodies as Social Service Leagues. We are pulsating with a new life and a new vision which will add dignity to our nationality and will carry the banner of progress forward. The question of sanitary reform in big cities is practically a hopeless task if we expect our municipalities to do this unaided by this voluntary work. Far be it from me to absolve the municipalities from their own responsibilities. There is a great deal still left to be done by them. Only the other day I read with a great degree of pain a report about the proceedings of the Bombay Municipality, and the deplorable fact in it is that a large part of the time of the Municipality was devoted to talking over trifles while they neglected matters of great moment. Municipalities will be able to do very little unless there is a demand for further improvement from the people themselves. In one of the model principalities in India, officials and others complained that in spite of their ceaseless vigilance and efforts, it was not possible for them to turn the people away from the ways they had adopted and which had become part of their being. Still the principality showed signs of visible progress. The Dewan of the place assured him that had it not been for the valuable assistance rendered by the Social Service League, people would not have done half of what they had done. Terrorism of officials is of no avail. I agree with that celebrated saint who said: “It is far better that people should even remain drunkards rather than that they should become sober at the point of the sword.” If a man, after an appeal is made to his heart and after due effort is made to redeem him from bad ways, continues to believe he must drink himself to death, I am afraid we must allow him to do so; we cannot help it; we are not going to heap evil upon evil. It is no use doing physical harm to the man. He may cease to drink for the time being, but he will return to it again and again. There is little merit in the physical denial when there is no mental co-operation. The streets of Kashi, the most sacred place for the Hindus, are dirty. The same dirt was to be seen even in the sanctuary where the din and noise was very great. In such a place there should be perfect orderliness, peace, silence, gentleness and humility. All these things, I regret to say, were conspicuous by their absence. The priests do not accept anything less than a rupee from the devotees. That could not have been the position of Kashi Viswanath in ages gone by. When people are transported to Kashi in a railway Express by millions and when the surroundings are altered, one condition of orderly progress is that people should respond to the new conditions. What is true of Kashi Viswanath is true in the majority of cases in our holy temples. Here is a problem for the Social Service League. It must not be a problem for Government or municipality. Immediately you begin going to schools, you leave temples alone. Before we fit ourselves for this work, we should revolutionise the educational system. We are today in a false position and I promise that we shall incur the curse of the next generation for this great tragedy enacted before us. It is a matter for thinking and redressing. The task may be Herculean, but this reward will be adequate.

1 These two sentences are from Natesan.
2 This sentence is from Natesan.

I have placed a few thoughts before you at random and I hope that they will sink deep into you and exercise your hearts. You should never rest satisfied until you have put your shoulder to the wheel and assisted to the best of your ability to bring about the necessary reform.

One other word of advice to the students who travel in third class compartments. Do not dominate those who wrongly think they are your inferiors, seeing your costume. If you do so, you will be disqualified for rendering social service.

The Hindu, 17-2-1916

130. REPLY TO MRS. BESANT

[Before February 17, 1916]

Mr. M. K. Gandhi writes to us:

Mrs. Besant’s reference in New India and certain other references to the Benares Incident perhaps render it necessary for me to return to the subject, however disinclined I may be to do so. Mrs. Besant denies my statement with reference to her whispering to the
I can only say that if I can trust my eyes and my ears, I must adhere to the statement I have made. She occupied a seat on the left of the semi-circle on the other side of the Maharaja of Darbhanga, who occupied the chair, and there was at least one Prince, perhaps, there were two who were sitting on her side. Whilst I was speaking, Mrs. Besant was almost behind me. When the Maharaja rose, Mrs. Besant had also risen. I had ceased speaking before the Rajahs actually left the platform. She was discussing the incident with a group round her on the platform. I gently suggested to her that she might have refrained from interrupting, but that if she disapproved of the speech after it was finished, she could have then dissociated herself from my sentiments. But she, with some degree of warmth, said, “How could we sit still when you were compromising everyone of us on the platform? You ought not to have made the remarks you did.” This answer of Mrs. Besant’s does not quite tally with her solicitude for me which alone, according to her version of the incident, prompted her to interrupt the speech. I suggest that if she merely meant to protect me, she could have passed a note round or whispered into my ears her advice. And, again, if it was for my protection, why was it necessary for her to rise with the Princes and to leave the hall as I hold she did along with them?

So far as my remarks are concerned, I am yet unable to know what it was in my speech that seems to her to be open to such exception as to warrant her interruption. After referring to the Viceregal visit and the necessary precautions that were taken for the Viceroy’s safety, I showed that an assassin’s death was anything but an honourable death, and said that anarchism was opposed to our shastras and had no room in India. I said then where there was honourable death, it would go down history as men who died for their conviction. But when a bomb-thrower died, secretly plotting all sorts of things, what could he gain? I then went on to state and deal with the fallacy that had not bomb-throwers thrown bombs, we should never have gained what we did with reference to the Partition Movement. It was at about this stage that Mrs. Besant appealed to the chair to stop me. Personally, I will desire a publication of the whole of my speech whose trend was a sufficient warrant for showing that I could not possibly incite the students to deeds of violence. Indeed it was

---

1 Vide “Annie besant’s Explanation Regarding Benares Incident, 12-2-1916
2 Vide “Speech at Benares Hindu University”, 6-2-1916.
conceived in order to carry on a rigorous self-examination.

I began by saying that it was a humiliation for the audience and myself that I should have to speak in English. I said that English having been the medium of instruction, it had done a tremendous injury to the country, and as I conceive I showed successfully that had we received training during the past 50 years in higher thought in our own vernaculars, we would be today within reach of our goal. I then referred to the self-government Resolution passed at the Congress and showed that whilst the All-India Congress Committee and the All-India Moslem League would be drawing up their paper about the future constitution, their duty was to fit themselves by their own action for self-government. And in order to show how short we fell of our duty, I drew attention to the dirty condition of the labyrinth of lanes surrounding the great temple of Kashi Viswanath and the recently erected palatial buildings without any conception as to the straightness or the width of the streets. I then took the audience to the gorgeous scene that was enacted on the day of the foundation and suggested that if a stranger not knowing anything about Indian life had visited the scene, he would have gone away under the false impression that India was one of the richest countries in the world—such was the display of jewellery worn by our noblemen. And turning to the Maharajas and the Rajahs, I humorously suggested that it was necessary for them to hold those treasures in trust for the nation before we could realise our ideals, and I cited\(^1\) the action of the Japanese noblemen who considered it a glorious privilege, even though there was no necessity for them, to dispossess themselves of treasures and lands which were handed to them from generation to generation. I then asked the audience to consider the humiliating spectacle of the Viceroy’s person having to be protected from ourselves when he was our honoured guest. And I was endeavouring to show that the blame for these precautions was also on ourselves, in that they were rendered necessary because of the introduction of organised assassination in India. Thus I was endeavouring to show, on the one hand, how the students could usefully occupy themselves in assisting to rid the society of its proved defects and, on the other, wean themselves even in thought from methods of violence.

I claim that with twenty years’ experience of public life in the course of which I had to address on scores of occasions turbulent audiences, I have some experience of feeling the pulse of my audience. I was following closely how the speech was being taken and I certainly did not notice that the student world was being adversely affected. Indeed some of them came to me the following morning and told me that they perfectly understood my remarks which had gone home. One of them, a keen debater, even subjected me to cross-examination and seemed to feel convinced by a further development of the argument such as I had advanced in the course of my speech. Indeed I have spoken now to thousands of students and others of my countrymen throughout South Africa, England and India; and by precisely the arguments that I used that evening, I claim to have weaned many from their approval of anarchical methods.

\(^1\) Not found in the available version of the speech

Finally, I observe that Mr. S. S. Setlur, of Bombay, who has written on the incident to The Hindu in no friendly mood towards me, and who I think in some respects totally unfairly has endeavoured to tear me to pieces, and who was an eye witness to the proceedings, gives a version different from Mrs. Besant’s. He thinks that the general impression was not that I was encouraging the anarchists but that I was playing the role of an apologist for the Civilian bureaucrat. The whole of Mr. Setlur’s attack upon me shows that if he is right I was certainly not guilty of any incitement to violence and that the offence consisted in my reference to jewellery, etc.

In order that the fullest justice might be done both to Mrs. Besant and myself, I would make the following suggestion. She says that she does not propose to defend herself by quoting the sentence which drove the Princes away and that that would be playing into the enemies’ hands; according to her previous statement, my speech is already in the hands of detectives so that, so far as my safety is concerned, her forbearance is not going to be of the slightest use. Would it not therefore be better that she should either publish a verbatim report if she has it or reproduce such sentiments in my speech as in her opinion necessitated her interruption and the Princes’ withdrawal?

I will, therefore, conclude this statement by repeating what I have said before; that but for Mrs. Besant’s interruption, I would have concluded my speech within a few minutes and no possible misconception about my views on anarchism would have arisen.

The Hindu 17-2-1916

---

131. LETTER TO “NEW INDIA” ON BENARES ‘INCIDENT’

[MADRAS,]

February 17, 1916

In your editorial note of even date, you suggested that I have reverted to the Benares incident under missionary influence. May I say that the missionaries had absolutely nothing to do with my statement¹, and that there has not been my conversation about it between any missionary and myself?

New India, 18-2-1916

132. SPEECH ON VERNACULARS AND EDUCATION, MADRAS

[February 17, 1916]

Last evening at the Anderson Hall, Madras, under the auspices of the Christian College Associated Societies, a joint debate was held on the subject, “Shall the Vernaculars be the Media of Instruction in our Schools and Colleges?” with Mr. M. K. Gandhi in the chair.

Mr. A. S. Rajam opened the debate on the subject in a short speech. . . .

The Chairman then wound up the debate and said that certainly the question of racial difference would not occur if vernaculars were to be made the media of instruction in schools and colleges. In our country, they were one Nation, and even before the English advent, they did form one Nation and had one common religion. There were histories to show that our sacred saga had travelled from one part of the country to another in those days for the purpose of religious gatherings, and thus brotherly feelings always existed among the people. For the real progress of the country and for the welfare of the masses, this problem ought to be solved by the authorities concerned at an early date. These objections against the introduction of vernaculars were all baseless and the best thing was for the people themselves to solve this question, and educate the masses of the country through the media of vernaculars. The rulers themselves would then have to learn the vernaculars of the country in the interests of proper administration.

A hearty vote of thanks to the Chairman terminated the proceedings.

New India, 18-2-1916

¹ Vide the preceding item.
133. SPEECH AT POONA ON GOKHALE ANNIVERSARY

February 19, 1916

A meeting to celebrate the anniversary of the late Mr. Gokhale's death was held in the Kirloskar Theatre, Poona City, on the 19th instant.

There were about 2,000 persons present.

Mr. H. W. Wadia, Bar-at-Law, presided.

Mr. Gandhi, who came down to Poona at the invitation of the Deccan Sabha, hoped that the anniversary would be celebrated with due regularity and it would take the form of stock-taking on the part of those who revered the memory of the deceased and wanted to show their reverence by taking some part of the activity of the deceased. Mr. Gokhale's work in the Imperial Council and on the Public Service Commission showed great ability and patriotism. He worked on the South African question regardless of his health and it had, in Mr. Gandhi's opinion, cost him ten years of his life. The speaker suggested that behind all the work of Mr. Gokhale lay his great spirituality. It was because Mr. Gokhale felt it necessary to spiritualise the political life of the country that he had brought the Servants of India Society into being. Mr. Gokhale once said to the speaker that there were moments when he doubted the efficacy of much of the political work and was distressed by severe disappointments, but he was saved from such a situation by a consciousness of the faith that he had deep down in him in the existence of the permanent element and it was this faith, thought Mr. Gandhi, which made him triumph over all disappointments and persist in the work.

The speaker said that he had toured the country during the past year in accordance with the wishes of Mr. Gokhale, and now without his advice to guide him, he was at a loss to know whether he was drifting in the right or the wrong direction. In the course of his travels, he found that the country was vibrating with a passionate spirit of patriotism, but the bugbear of "fear" loomed large on the horizon. Social endeavour was impeded by the overawing power of spiritual authority, and in the path of political activity lay the barrier of political authority. They were the slaves of circumstances, but they were themselves to blame. It had become impossible for them to voice in public the opinions uttered in their homes. The spiritual liberty of the people was usurped by the priests; in politics they were afraid to give expression to their views. This was a regrettable state of affairs and showed that they were lacking

---

1 New India, 21-2-1916, adds here: "and the speaker emphasised the fact that the deceased statesman was worthy of such activity on their part".

2 This paragraph is from The Bombay Chronicle, 21-2-1916.
in backbone. Until they had driven out this craven spirit from their hearts, they were unworthy of undertaking the great charge bequeathed to them. The heroes of the past were still with them in spirit. Faith in the lives of the great departed, sincerity, humanity and patriotism would enable them to weather the storm and establish their country in its destined place among the nations of the world.

The president in thanking Mr. Gandhi for his address said that he was not prepared to say anything about the apprehensions and hopes which Mr. Gandhi had spoken of, but would merely mention that he did not agree with him. He had considerable experience of politics and entertained the brightest hopes for India....

The Hon’ble Mr. R. P. Paranjpe proposed a vote of thanks to Mr. Gandhi and the Chairman.

The Bombay Chronicle, 21-2-1916 and Bombay Secret
Abstracts, 1916, P. 130

134. LETTER TO MAGANBHAI H. PATEL

*February 21, 1916*¹

I have expected to leave here² today and reach there tomorrow morning. But how can I meet Mr. Robinson today, it being Sunday?
So now I shall only leave on Monday and reach there on Tuesday.
Most probably I shall leave by the Gujarat Mail. If Santok accompanies me, I shall leave by the Kathiawar Express. Most Probably she will come with me. We shall talk when we meet.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 10997. Courtesy: Suryakant
C. Patel

¹From the postmark
²Gandhiji had gone to Poona for a meeting on the death anniversary of Gokhale; vide "Speech at Poona on Gokhale Anniversary", 19-2-1916.
Everyone here knows the gentleman who will soon address us. Hence I need not speak at length by way of introducing him. He has taken up the mission of founding a university for Indian women. The task will entail the revival of different regional languages. He proposes to start in June an examining and teaching university. It is said that in our society as it is today men suffer from ardhangavyu and this charge is by and large well founded because we are not able to make our ‘better halves’ keep pace with us. Circumstances are chiefly responsible for this state of affairs. Prof. Karve has undertaken this work in order to improve the condition of women and has set about it briskly. I must indeed admit that his enthusiasm is matchless. If I may introduce him in the words of Mr. Gokhale, he is truth incarnate. We are therefore confident that, even if his work is not crowned with all the success one may hope for, no harm is likely to result from it any time. He has devoted twenty years of service to the Fergusson College and has been managing a widows’ home for as many years. Now, at the age of 59, he has started on a new venture, a mark of the highest self-sacrifice and zeal. In Gujarat, we do not have the spirit of self-sacrifice that we find in Poona. This should make us feel ashamed of ourselves; Gujarat has, therefore, much to learn from the life of Prof. Karve.

Concluding the proceedings, Gandhiji said:

Mrs. Vidyagauri[’s] speech invites some comments. We shall accept equality of rights for women, but I think their education should differ from men’s, as their nature and functions do. In progressive countries, women receive the very highest education but, after it is over, they do not have to perform the same duties as men and in our country women have never to compete with men for a livelihood. The help this institution receives from us, whatever it be, will not go unavailing to us. When we start a school or a college here, we shall

---

1. Being the introductory and concluding remarks as Chairman on the occasion of a public lecture in Ahmedabad by Prof. D. K. Karve (1858-1962), founder of the University
2. Paralysis of one side of the body
3. Vidyagauri R. Nilkanth, a social worker

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
get back a part of what we donate. It is my earnest request, therefore, that we should give the best help we can to this institution.

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 27-2-1916

136. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,

Maha Vad 5 [February 23, 1916]

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I have just returned, having been to Madras, where I saw Chi. Maganlal and Jamnadas, and to Bombay, where I saw Shri Khushalbhai and others. Santok and the two girls have come away with me, for their work there was over and Maganlal had to be all over Madras. I have advised him to return, after completing his study of Tamil. He tells me he has done a good job of learning weaving. Jamnadas and his wife will stay on in Madras. One can’t say that Jamnadas’s health is normal again. The rest are flourishing.

Khushalbhai and all of us wish that you should now come away. It seems improper for you to engage in business there. Do what you think best about the house and the small farm. I don’t think anyone can be sent over from here just now, nor has there been any such demand. Rather, Mr. Pragji writes to say that, if anyone were to be sent, Bhaga would have to be relieved.

You need not be much concerned about your coming over here. It is but natural that I should want you to be with me. If you wish, however, I shall make other arrangements. Once you are here, everything will be managed.

I find that Khushalbhai and Devbhabhi have taken very well to Bombay. There is no limit to what I get from them, as though they owe a debt to me. I am not even allowed to feel that we are only cousins.

As to what happened in Kashi, I could fill pages with my 1 Gandhiji returned from Madras on this date in 1916. Maganlal Gandhi referred to in the letter was there at the time.

2 From South Africa

3 Addressee’s mother

4 The reference is to the ‘incident, during Gandhiji’s speech at the Benares Hindu University; vide “Speech at Benares Hindu University”, 6-2-1916. Kashi is another name for Varanasi or Benares.
reflections on it all, but I have no time. You will know when you are here.

Blessings from
MOHANDAS

Imam Saheb’s father is dead. Write a letter of condolence to him.

From a handwritten copy of the Gujarati original: C. W. 5692. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

137. INDENTURED LABOUR

The question of indentured labour is a seasonable subject for more reasons than one. Messrs Andrews and Pearson have just returned from Fiji after finishing their self-imposed labours for the sake of India which they have learnt to love as they love their mother-land. Their report is about to be issued. There Mr. Malaviya has given notice for leave to move a resolution in the Imperial Council which will, if adopted, commit the Government to a repeal of the system of indentured labour. Mr. Malaviya’s resolution will be, it may be recalled, a continuation of the late Mr. Gokhale’s work in 1912, when in a speech full of fervour and weighted with facts and figures, he moved his resolution demanding repeal of this form of labour. The deceased statesman’s resolution was thrown out only by the force of official majority. The moral victory lay with Mr. Gokhale. The death-knell of the system was rung when that resolution was moved. The Government, as it could not then abolish the system, outvoted Mr. Gokhale but did not fail to note that they must hurry forward to do so at an early date. Mr. Malaviya’s proposed resolution and the report of Messrs Andrews and Pearson, which latter, it is known, is to suggest total abolition of the system, will enable Lord Hardinge fittingly to close his most eventful viceroyalty removing this long-standing and acknowledged grievance.

These lines will be merely an attempt to give personal observations and to indulge in a few reflections upon the question. For facts and figures, the readers and the public workers must look up Mr. Gokhale’s speech referred to above and Messrs Andrews and

---

1 Imam Abdul Kadir Bawazeer
2 In March, 1916, Madan Mohan Malaviya moved a resolution in the Imperial Legislative Council for the abolition of the indenture system.
Indentured labour is admittedly a remnant of slavery. The late Sir William Wilson Hunter, when his attention was drawn to it in 1895, was the first to call it a state ‘perilously near to slavery’. Most legislation only partly reflects the public opinion of its time. Legislation abolishing slavery was really a bit in advance of public opinion, and that was a big bit. And its effect, like that of all such legislation, was largely neutralized by the dissatisfied slave-owner resorting to the dodge of indentured labour. The yoke, if it fell from the Negro’s black neck, was transferred to the brown neck of the Indian. In the process of transfer, it had to be somewhat polished, it had to be lightened in weight and even disguised. Nevertheless, in all its essentials, it retained its original quality. The hideousness of the system was forcefully demonstrated when the curse descended upon South Africa in the shape of indentured labourers from China for working the gold mines. It was no mere election cry that the late Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman had taken up when he made the British Isles from end to end ring with denunciation of the system. No cost was counted as too great for ridding South Africa of the evil. The great multi-millionaires of Johannesburg spared nothing to be enabled to hold on to the indentured Chinaman. They asked for breathing time. The House of Commons remained unmoved. Mine-owners had to shift for themselves. The interests of humanity overrode all other considerations. The mines were threatened to be closed. The House did not care. The millions promised to Mr. Chamberlain would not be forthcoming. The House laughed. Within six months of the passage of the measure for the abolition of Chinese indentured labour, every Chinese labourer had been repatriated bag and baggage. The mines survived the shock. They discovered other methods of life. And now be it said to the credit of the mine-owners as well as of the Conservatives who opposed the measure, that both these classes recognize that the abolition was a great deliverance.

Indian indentured labour is not less demoralising. It has persisted because its bitterness like that of a sugared pill has been cleverly though unconsciously concealed. The one great distinction between the two classes was that the Chinese were brought in without a single woman with them, whereas every hundred Indian labourers must include forty women among them. Had the Chinese remained, they would have sapped the very foundations of society. The Indian labourers confine the evil to themselves. This may be unimportant to non-Indians. But for us, the wonder is that we have allowed the sin to continue so long. This business about the women is the weakest and the irremediable part of the evil. It therefore needs a somewhat closer inspection. These women are not necessarily wives. Men and women are huddled together during the voyage. The marriage is a farce. A mere declaration by man and woman made upon landing before the Protector of Immigrants that they are husband and wife constitutes a valid marriage. Naturally enough, divorce is common. The rest must be left to the imagination of the reader. This is certain—that the system does not add to the moral well-being of India. And it is suggested that no amount of figures adduced to show that the labourer is far richer at the end of his contract of labour than when he entered upon it can be allowed to be any set-off against the moral degradation it involves.

---

1 Prime Minister of England, 1905-8
2 Joseph Chamberlain (1836-1914), British statesman; Secretary of State for the Colonies, 1895

There is another most powerful consideration to be urged against the continuance of this system. The relations between Englishmen and Indians in India are not of the happiest. The average Englishman considers himself to be superior to the average Indian and the latter is generally content to be so considered. Such a state of things is demoralizing to both and a menace to the stability of the British Empire. There is no reason why every Englishman should not learn to consider every Indian as his brother, and why every Indian should not cease to think that he is born to fear every Englishman. Be that as it may, this unnatural relationship is reflected in an exaggerated form outside India when the artificial state of indentured service under the white employer is set up. Unless, therefore, the relation between the English and ourselves is put on a correct footing in India, any transference of Indian labourers to far-off lands, whether parts of the Empire or otherwise, even under a free contract must harm both employer and employed. I happen to have the privilege of knowing most humane employers of Indian labourers in Natal. They were their men. But they do not, they cannot, give them more than the most favoured treatment that their cattle receive. I use this language in no uncharitable spirit. The humanest of employers cannot escape the limitations of his class. He instinctively feels that the Indian labourer is inferior to him and can never be equal to him. Surely no indentured Indian, no matter how clever and faithful he may be, has ever inherited his master’s state. But I know English servants who have risen to their master’s state even as Indian servants have risen to their Indian master’s state. It is not the Englishman’s fault that the relationship with his Indian employees has not been progressive. It is beyond the scope of these lines to distribute the blame, if there is any, on either side, or to examine the causes for the existence of such a state of things. I have been obliged to advert to it to show that apart from all other considerations, the system of indentured labour is demonstrably so degrading to us as a nation that it must be stopped at any cost and that now.

_The Leader, 25-2-1916_

138. SPEECH AT RECEPTION IN HYDERABAD, SIND

February 26, 1916

About seven thousand people led by the Hon’ble Mr. Bhurgri and the Hon’ble Mr. Ghulam Hussein, both Mahomedan members of the Bombay Legislative Council, gave a public reception to Mr. Gandhi at Hyderabad and a procession of fifty carriages took three hours to pass through the crowded streets owing to numerous stops for Mr. Gandhi to be garlanded. A eulogistic address in a sandalwood casket was presented to Mr. Gandhi at a public meeting, where all the speeches were in English except that of Mr. Gandhi, who preferred to speak in Hindustani.

Mr. Gandhi said that his political guru, the late Mr. Gokhale, had imposed on him one year’s silence and had bidden him to travel and see things. The period had passed now and he could speak. Self-government for India was in the air. A scheme was to be framed by the Congress and the League leaders at Allahabad, but how many knew what was wanted? It could not be given and taken mechanically. They could only get as much of swaraj as they fitted themselves for, they had to fulfil certain conditions and they could fulfil them. One condition was that they should adopt swadeshi whole heartedly. Swaraj and swadeshi must go together. Then their motto should be “Fear God rather than man, be the man King or Guru or Moulvi.” Then they must treat their depressed and poor brethren as human beings. Mr. Gandhi also reminded his hearers that they could best honour their leaders by copying the virtues which they ascribed to those leaders. He concluded with an appeal for funds being raised for the Servants of India Society.

At the conclusion of his speech, he was loudly cheered. At the end “Vande Mataram” and another national song of the famous Digambar1 were sung, the audience standing.

_The Hindu, 29-2-1916_

---

1 Vishnu Digambar Paluskar
139. SPEECH AT HYDERABAD, SIND

February 27, 1916

On 27th February, 1916, Gandhiji unveiled before a large gathering the portrait of the late Mr. G. K. Gokhale in the Holmstead Hall, Hyderabad (Sind). The Collector was also amongst those present.

Mr. Gandhi, speaking Hindustani, said that character was the cornerstone of Mr. Gokhale’s work and success. Not only public men, but Government officials, traders, clerks, coolies and others could elevate and serve the country if duty, and not authority or self, was the ruling motive. Want of a sense of duty and the spirit of service caused their miseries. Mr. Gokhale founded the Servants of India Society for development of character and he wanted to spiritualise political life. The leaders must not seek praise but serve the country as a duty.

If I did not emulate the virtues of Mr. Gokhale, I would prove myself unworthy of this unveiling of his portrait. And if you would not emulate his virtues, you would prove yourself unfit for joining in this ceremony.

In conclusion, Mr. Gandhi appealed for aid for the Servants of India Society.

The Bombay Chronicle, 29-2-1916

140. SPEECH AT HYDERABAD ON VACCINATION

February 28, 1916

During the course of the day, Mr. Gandhi visited the Narishala, Navalrai Hiranand Academy, Nava Vidyalaya High School, and Kundanmal Girls’ School. In the afternoon, Mr. Gandhi was the guest of the Gujarati and Deccani residents of Hyderabad, who had assembled in the house of Mr. P. G. Mankad in Hirabag. Mr. Gandhi was given an address and garlanded. After that he drove to the Central Jail accompanied by Diwan Wadhumal Belaram and his brothers, and strange to say that the request made to the Superintendent to allow Mr. Gandhi to see the inside of the Jail was ungraciously refused by him for reasons best known to him. Mr. Gandhi then went to the Holmstead Hall where he gave a short discourse on vaccination.

He said that he had not given special attention to the subject, but had bestowed some thought on it. He thought as the vaccine serum was obtained by a process which spelt torture to the cow, vaccination contravened the fundamental principle of 1 These two sentences are from Gujarati, 5-3.1916.

Hinduism which is ahimsa. He said that orthodox Hindus objected to vaccination, since injection through the arm was tantamount to taking through the mouth. He then said that vaccination with human lymph was open to objection not only on the same grounds, but also because it involved the risk of contracting infectious diseases. He said that it was not a fact that all those who were not vaccinated were attacked with small-pox, nor that those who were so attacked succumbed to it. He further stated that it was left to the choice of every individual to go in for vaccination or not. But if the law of compulsory vaccination was in force in a place and if some person objected to vaccination on religious grounds, every Indian should stand by him, for compulsion in one form might lead to compulsion in other directions also.¹

The Sind Journal, 1-3-1916, as quoted in Bombay Secret Abstracts

141. SPEECH IN REPLY TO ADDRESS, KARACHI

February 29, 1916

In reply to the welcome address presented by the Citizens’ Association, Karachi, on February 29, 1916, Mr. Gandhi spoke in Hindi to the following effect:

I have been travelling in various parts of India, and in the course of my travels, I have been struck with the fact that throughout India the hearts of the people are in a special degree drawn towards me. All brothers of Hindustan without distinction of creed or caste have been showing this attachment. But I feel convinced that this remarkable attachment to me is meant not for me but as a fitting tribute of admiration to all those noble brothers and sisters of ours in South Africa, who underwent such immense trouble and sacrifices including incarceration in jails for the service of the Motherland. It is undoubtedly this consideration which leads you to be so very kind to me. It was they who won the struggle and it was by reason of their unflinching determination to “do or die” that so much was achieved. Hence I take it that whatever tribute is paid to me, is in reality and in truth paid to them.

In the course of my tour in India, I have been particularly struck with one thing and that is the awakening of the Indian people. A new hope has filled the hearts of the people, hope that something is ¹The Bombay Chronicle, 1-3-1916, in its brief report had here: “He recommended passive resistance on the part of those having religious objection and said that the public should support those who were prepared for going to jail.”

going to happen which will raise the Motherland to a higher status. But side by side with this spirit of hope, I also had amongst my country-men, awe not only of the Government but also of heads of castes and the priestly class. As a result of this, we are afraid to speak out what is in us. So long as this spirit remains, there will be, and there can be, no true progress. You know that at the last session of the Congress, a re-resolution was passed about self-government. For the attainment of that ideal, you and I, all of us, must work and persevere. In pursuance of that resolution, the Committees of the Congress and the Moslem League will soon meet together and they will decide what they think proper. But the attainment of self-government depends not on their saying or doing anything but upon what you and I do. Here in Karachi, commerce is predominant and there are many big merchants. To them, I wish to address a few words. It is a misapprehension to think that there is no scope in commerce for serving the Mother-country. If they are inspired by the spirit of truth, merchants can be immensely useful to the country. The salvation of our country, remember, is not in the hands of others but of ourselves, and more in the hands of merchants in some respects than the educated people; for I strongly feel that so long as there is no swadeshi, there can be no self-government (“Hear, hear”), and for the spread of swadeshi Indian merchants are in a position to do a very great deal. The swadeshi wave passed through the country at one time. But I understand that the movement had collapsed largely because Indian merchants had palmed off foreign goods as swadeshi articles. By Indian merchants being honest and straightforward in their business, they could achieve a great deal for the regeneration and uplift of the country. Hence merchants should faithfully observe what Hindus call dharma and Mohammedans call iman in their business transactions. Then shall India be uplifted. In South Africa, our merchants rendered valuable help in the struggle and yet because some of them weakened, the struggle was prolonged somewhat. It is the duty of the educated classes to mix freely with Indian merchants and the poor classes. Then will our journey to the common and cherished goal be less irksome. (Prolonged applause.)

Speeches and Writings of Mahatma Gandhi (4th Ed.), pp. 327-8

1 Honesty
Unveiling the portrait of Gokhale at the Khalidina Hall, Karachi, on Tuesday the 29th February 1916, Mahatma Gandhi spoke as follows:

In Hyderabad, Sind, also, I was asked to unveil a portrait of Mr. Gokhale; and there I put to myself and to those present a question which I put to myself and to you now. That question is: What right have I to unveil the portrait of Mr. Gokhale and what right have you to join in the ceremony? Of course, to unveil a portrait or to join in it is nothing great or important in itself. But the question really involved in the ceremony is important, viz., are your hearts and is my heart in reality so much moved as to copy the glorious example of the great man? The function will have no real significance unless we follow in his footsteps. And if we do follow him, we shall be able to achieve a great deal. Of course, it is not possible for all of us to achieve what Mr. Gokhale did in the Imperial Legislative Council. But the way in which he served the Motherland, the whole-hearted devotion with which he did it day and night without ceasing all this it is in our power to do as the great one did. And I hope that when you leave this hall, you will bear in mind to follow him and the give expression to your regard for him. You know that the best achievement of Mr. Gokhale according to himself was the establishment of the Servants of India Society. This great institution he has left behind him; and it lies with us to support it and continue its noble work. It would be best if we could join the Society. But that will involve the question of our being fit for it. But if we are not in a position to join the Society, we can all do the next best thing, viz., render pecuniary aid and swell the funds of the Society.

Speeches and Writings of Mahatma Gandhi (4th Ed.), p. 1013
I am very grateful to the friends from Gujarat for the honour they have done me today. Wherever I have gone, Gujaratis have welcomed me as they have done here. They are more my neighbours—though all the people in the country are my neighbours— and I wish therefore to be of special service to them. However, I must tour the whole of India and it would not be right for me, therefore, to stay in Gujarat all the time. I have observed that Gujaratis have spread out as far as Calcutta, to the Madras as well as the Bengal Presidency for purposes of business. Even in South Africa, the major part of the business community is from Gujarat. In Karachi, the Gujarati population is much larger than at any of these places, so much so that, though the Sindhis are in a majority here, Karachi being a part of Sind, at first sight it might appear that the Gujarati population in the city was larger than the Sindhi.

There are three communities in Gujarat—Gujarati Hindus, Gujarati Parsis and Gujarati Muslims, and all these three have spread over different parts of the country, most of them for business. It is not the right way for a business man merely to earn and lay by money and get rich anyhow by exploiting the poor. In that way, even the Pindaris used to get wealthy by robbing people. I see no difference between a man who cheats in business and one who slaps another and forces him to part with his money. Business men should follow truth in their business and not bear hard on people through their operations. I don’t mean to suggest that this is what you do in your business. Whenever you may have committed sins, you must have felt the fear of God as well and you must have done kindness, too, now and then. It should be the chief aim of a business man to study this virtue of kindness. Our education is no education if it only makes us physicians or lawyers. We should try to develop our business. One living example of this is provided by Sir Dorab and Ratan Tata. Sir Dorab does not educate any of his sons for the profession of a physician or a lawyer. He will perhaps have quite a number of such physicians in his...

---

1 In reply to an address from the Gujarati Hindus of Karachi
2 Sir Dorabji Jamshetji Tata (1850-1932), brother of Ratan Tata; elder son of Sir Jamshetji Nasarwanji Tata (1839-1904), industrial pioneer and philanthropist employment. You should rather emulate the part he has played in the development of trade in this country. India has none to equal this man. Mr. Chamberlain of Birmingham was also a true business man and, though he is no more, his memory is still cherished in the business world. Business men may protest and say that they only know business and do not meddle with other things. They should not, however, take up any such attitude. They, too, should be in tune with the atmosphere around them. In fact, the very scriptures of Muslims, Hindus and Parsis enjoin them to serve the people while they carry on their business. He is no worthy business man who, in times of famine, raises the prices so high that the people simply break down. This kind of thing ruins both the people and the business men. The failure of the swadeshi movement is also to be attributed to the business men. Everyone blames it on the Bombay Presidency where the people, keen only on making money, took no interest in promoting the sale of swadeshi goods. Just as the Kshatriya’s duty is not killing [but protecting], so also the business man’s duty is not amassing wealth.

[From Gujarati]

Gujarat Mitra ane Gujarat Darpan, 12-3-1916

144. SPEECH AT KARACHI RECEPTION

March 2, 1916

Everyone should receive education through the mother tongue, giving to a foreign language the place merely of an optional subject. No other language can ever influence our life as powerfully as the mother tongue can.

[From Gujarati]

Gujarati, 12-3-1916

145. INTERVIEW TO PRESS AT KARACHI

March 2, 1916

In the course of my tour, I have observed that there is more of public life in Poona [than anywhere else]. True, public life in Madras is quite on a large scale but this is due to the much greater student population there. In Poona, on the other hand, I saw that there were

1 By Karachi Bandhu Mandal men who could identify themselves with the common people. It does not seem to be so in Madras. In the whole of India, it is in Poona that we come across persons from among whom a large number may emerge one day as leaders of the masses. In Bombay, things are so. Public life there depends on only one or two gentlemen. It is the charge of outsiders against Sind that its people are apathetic. I don’t think so. There is as much public spirit in this province as in any other. I think the public spirit in Sind will excel that of Bombay.

[From Gujarati]

_Gujarati, 11-3-1916; also Gujarat Mitra ane Gujarat Darpan, 12-3-1916_

146. SPEECH AT RECEPTION AT BADIN, SIND
March 3, 1916

In the course of his reply, Mr. Gandhi quoted Sir Sayed Ahmed to the effect that India must see with both eyes, that is to say, both through the Mohammedan eye and the Hindu eye, otherwise she was partly blind.

147. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M.K. GANDHI
AHMEDABAD,
March 11, 1916

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I have just come here to revive my breath and prepare for going to Hardwar. I shall be travelling yet for a while. I cannot send you the things you want as both Maganbhai and Manilal are away on business. There is no one else who knows anything about the things that are put away.

My life here is curious. I feel like a stranger in the midst of so many who think they know me. There is kinship only to a certain extent. Everything I say pleases often, sometimes wounds, rarely convinces and still more rarely is conviction followed by action. All this you will see some day when peace takes the place of this seeming-never-to-be-ending war. But I am quite happy in my aloofness. I feel that I am right. It is this inner happiness which I would like you to have. And your present position is just the experience that should give you the happiness I have described. You have leisure for introspection and no worry save what you will give yourself. ‘Man does not live by bread alone.’ Animal enjoyment is the least part of one’s life. But we have made it the most important of all indeed in some cases it has become the only important part of life. This ought to be changed. Each one of us can do it in our own case. Will you not use your opportunity?

Ramdas is now better. He is not yet sufficiently acclimatized. That accounts for his indifferent health. He is, however, gaining ground and is likely to be all right in a short time. Fakiri is still far from well. He does cause anxiety. He is unable to restrain his palate.

With love,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

148. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

Saturday [March 11, 1916]¹

CHI. MAGANLAL,

Herewith a letter² received here. Enclosed with it was an advertisement, which I need not send on. I shall leave on the 15th instead of on the 14th. I am thinking of taking along both Devdas and Prabhudas. Ramdas will of course be there.

You must put your heart in Tamil and get through with it. Shivram has left and there is no one to attend to Tamil now. I think, therefore, that the thing can be done only when one of us gets trained up. At present, I can only think of you. I have it in my mind to send others also to learn Tamil. It seems that Anna will not come at all.

Soyabean are grown in India. I saw the grain in the farms in Sind. They sell there whatever seed we want.

¹ Gandhiji was in Sind from February 26, 1916 and in Karachi on March 2, 1916. He reached Hardwar on the 14th accompanied by Ramdas, Devdas and Prabhudas, Chhaganlal Gandhi’s son. The letter seems to have been written a little before that date.

² Not available
Is Jamnadas quite all right now? Does he, too, go ahead with Tamil? Call on the Reverends Simon and Lazarus. I am sure you will find among the Christians someone who will be ready to teach. If you have gone far enough, make it a practice to read a newspaper. Krishnasami, it seems, lives there. He is penitent, indeed. See if you can get any help from him.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5693. Courtesy: Radhabehn Choudhri

149. LETTER TO MAGANBHAI H. PATEL

GURUKUL,
Friday [March 17, 1916]¹

DEAR MAGANBHAI,

I cannot forget Fakiri. We have a lot to learn from his death. I shall write about it when I have the leisure. I shall definitely be here till the 20th, and maybe till the 21st. The subsequent programme has not yet been fixed.

Manilal will have gone to Ajmer. If not, he should go at once.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

I wish you would make up your mind and come to a decision.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 11002. Courtesy: Suryakant C. Patel

150. SPEECH AT CONFERENCE FOR ELEVATION OF UNTOUCHABLES, GURUKUL

March 18, 1916

Even if Nanak Chand had not told us that the gotras of the Untouchables are the same as those of other Rajputs, even then we would not consider them untouchables. For it is our duty to love all.

¹ Gandhiji had stayed at Gurukul Kangri from March 14 to 20, 1916. Friday during this period fell on March 17.
Sir Sankaran Nair told me we had lost India through inequity to the Untouchables. I believe it so. We shall realize it if someone else gave us the same disgraceful treatment. No, we have really sinned grievously. For the sake of our souls, our own good, must we repent and be restored. We must undergo a prayaschit. And what is the prayaschit? What is the practical solution? I can tell you that in a minute. First, we must clearly realize that we have to attain not their salvation but ours by treating them as equals, by admitting them to our schools, etc. We only copy the missionaries. To those responsible for the active working out of the question, I would suggest simply to think and act more seriously and sincerely and find out what ought to be done.

_Vedic Magazine_, April-May, 1916

151. LETTER TO MAGANBHAI H. PATEL

_Thursday, Phagan 15 [March 19, 1916]_¹

_BHAISHRI MAGANBHAI,_

I have your letter. You are worked up. You have done well in expressing to me what you feel deeply. We have to act only according to our capacity. If therefore you cannot follow the pattern of life at the Ashram, it is only proper that you should leave.

It is futile to think about South Africa. You are physically not fit for a long journey. Then, Mr. Polak is not certain about himself. He is in an awkward situation. I am sure you can do nothing there. You cannot join the Servants of India Society with a view to earning money. There is only one way of earning money, which everyone else follows. In your case your health is a hindrance. My opinion is that unless you had resorted to stealing you could not have earned more money openly than you have been able to earn through the Satyagraha Movement. It cannot be said that your economic condition would have been better if you had not joined the struggle. Hence, if you cannot continue in the Ashram with a firm mind, you must explain the situation to your father. You must stay at home and agree to whatever solution your father suggests. You must follow his wishes and do as he says, whatever the gain may be. For your trouble, ¹ From the reference to Fakiri’s death it would appear that this letter was written in 1916; _vide_ the preceding item. Phagan 15 fell in this year on March 19.

you should do as he says. In the end even doing this will take you forward. Even in this kind of self-indulgence there is spiritual sublimity.

I feel much sympathy for you. It is as difficult for you to leave the Ashram as it is to continue there. Nobody else is in a situation like yours. Think maturely. I am abandoning the idea going to the Punjab and other places. I hope to reach there by Saturday evening or latest by Sunday.

We shall talk when we meet about what I have been feeling about Fakiri’s death.

I can understand that your wife cannot work. She has come this time with an ulterior motive. There really is a snare laid for you. May God help you.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 11008. Courtesy: Suryakant C. Patel

152. SPEECH AT PRIZE DISTRIBUTION, GURUKUL¹

March 20, 1916

These village schools have, I find, no common educational standard. Some are doing as good work as the schools for the rich but some impart very poor education. To be fair to the Untouchables, one must send one’s own children to such schools for depressed classes and make sure that the educational standard is not allowed to fall low. But one thing more. Let not the education be such as to transform these village workers into kphansamas, dirty hands, petty sub-clerks in unhealthy towns. Let the education enable them to follow the occupations of their fathers, to follow them more scientifically, to follow them with greater skill. Let the schools create an attachment for village life, for village crafts, for open air independence and for service among our own.

Vedic Magazine, April-May, 1916

¹ This is the available part of the speech.
153. SPEECH AT GURUKUL ANNIVERSARY

March 20, 1916

The following is the text of Mr. Gandhi’s speech at the anniversary of the Gurukul, as written out by himself:

I propose to reproduce only as much of it as in my opinion is worth placing on record with additions where they may be found necessary. The speech, it may be observed, was delivered in Hindi. After thanking Mahatmaji Munshi Ram for his great kindness to my boys to whom he gave shelter on two occasions and acted as father to them and after stating that the time for action had arrived rather than for speeches, I proceeded:

I owe a debt of gratitude to the Arya Samaj. I have often derived inspiration from its activity. I have noticed among the members of the Samaj much self-sacrifice. During my travels in India, I came across many Arya Samajists who were doing excellent work for the country. I am therefore grateful to Mahatmaji, that I am enabled to be in your midst. At the same time, it is but fair to state that I am frankly a Sanatanist. For me Hinduism is all-sufficing. Every variety of belief finds protection under its ample fold. And though the Arya Samajists and the Sikhs and the Brahmo Samajists may choose to be classed differently from the Hindus, I have no doubt that at no distant future they will be all merged in Hinduism and find in it their fullness. Hinduism, like every other human institution, has its drawbacks and its defects. Here is ample scope for any worker to strive for reform, but there is little cause for secession.

SPIRIT OF FEARLESSNESS

Throughout my travels, I have been asked about the immediate need for India. And, perhaps, I would not do better than repeat this afternoon the answer I have given elsewhere. In general terms, a proper religious spirit is the greatest and most immediate need. But I know that this is too general an answer to satisfy anybody. And it is an answer true for all time. What, therefore, I desire to say is, that owing to the religious spirit being dormant in us, we are living in a state of perpetual fear. We fear the temporal as well as the spiritual authority. We dare not speak out our minds before our priests and our pandits. We stand in awe of the temporal power. I am sure that in so doing we do a disservice to them and us. Neither the spiritual teachers nor our political governors could possibly desire that we should hide the truth from them. Lord Wellington, speaking to a Bombay audience, has been saying recently that he had observed that we hesitated to say ‘No’ when we really meant it and advised his audience to cultivate a fearless spirit. Of course, fearlessness should never mean want of due respect or regard for the feelings of others. In my humble opinion, fearlessness is the first thing indispensable before we could achieve anything permanent and real. This quality is unattainable without religious consciousness. Let us fear God and we shall cease to fear man. If we grasp the fact that there is a divinity within us which witnesses everything we think or do and which protects us and guides us along the true path, it is clear that we shall cease to have any other fear on the face of the earth, save the fear of God. Loyalty to the Governor of governors supersedes all other loyalty and gives an intelligent basis to the latter.

MEANING OF SWADESHI

And when we have sufficiently cultivated this spirit of fearlessness, we shall see that there is no salvation for us without true swadeshi, not the swadeshi which can be conveniently put off. Swadeshi for me has a deeper meaning. I would like us to apply it in our religious, political and economic life. It is not, therefore, merely confined to wearing on occasion swadeshi cloth. That we have to do for all time, not out of a spirit of jealousy or revenge, but because it is a duty we owe to our dear country. We commit a breach of the swadeshi spirit certainly if we wear foreign-made cloth, but we do so also if we adopt the foreign cut. Surely, the style of our dress has some correspondence with our environment. In elegance and tastefulness, it is immeasurably superior to the trousers and the jacket. An Indian, wearing a shirt flowing over his pyjamas with a waistcoat on it without a necktie and its flaps hanging loose behind, is not a very graceful spectacle. Swadeshi in religion teaches one to measure the glorious past and re-enact it in the present generation. The pandemonium that is going on in Europe shows that modern civilization represents forces of evil and darkness, whereas the ancient, i. e., Indian, civilization represents in its essence the divine force. Modern civilization is chiefly materialistic, as ours is chiefly spiritual. Modern civilization occupies self in the investigation of the laws of matter, and employs human ingenuity in inventing of discovering means of production and weapons of destruction; ours is chiefly occupied in exploring spiritual laws. Our shastras lay down unequivocally that a proper observance of truth, chastity, scrupulous regard for all life, abstention from coveting others’ possessions and refusal to hoard anything but what is necessary for our daily wants is indispensable for a right life; that without it a knowledge of the divine element is an impossibility. Our civilization tells us with daring certainty that a proper and perfect cultivation of the quality of ahimsa which, in its active form means purest love and pity, brings the whole world to our feet. The author of this discovery gives a wealth of illustration which carries conviction with it.

THE DOCTRINE OF AHIMSA

Examine its result in the political life. There is no gift so valued by our shastras as the gift of life. Consider what our relations would be with our rulers if we gave absolute security of life to them. If they could but feel that, no matter what we might feel about their acts, we would hold their bodies as sacred as our own, there would immediately spring up an atmosphere of mutual trust, and there would be such frankness on either side as to pave the way for an honourable and just solution of many problems that worry us today. It should be remembered that in practising ahimsa, there need not be any reciprocation, though, as a matter of fact, in its final stages, it commands reciprocation. Many of us believe, and I am one of them, that through our civilization we have a message to deliver to the world. I render my loyalty to the British Government quite selfishly. I would like to use the British race for transmitting this mighty message of ahimsa to the whole world. But that can only be done when we have conquered our so-called conquerors; and you, my Arya Samaj friends, are perhaps specially elected for this mission. You claim to examine our scriptures critically; you take nothing for granted and you claim not to fear to reduce your belief to practice. I do not think that there is any room for trifling with or limiting the doctrine of ahimsa. You dare, then, to reduce it to practice regardless of immediate consequences which would certainly test the strength of your convictions. You would not only produce salvation for India, but you would render the noblest service that a man can render to humanity—a service moreover, which you would rightly assert the great Swami\(^1\) was born for. This swadeshi is to be considered as a very active force to be ceaselessly employed with an ever-increasing

---

\(^1\) Dayanand Saraswati
vigilance, searching self-examination. It is not meant for the lazy, but it is essentially meant for them who would gladly lay down their lives for the sake of truth. It is possible to dilate upon several other phases of swadeshi, but I think I have said enough to enable you to understand what I mean. I only hope that you, who represent a school of reformers in India, will not reject what I have said without thorough examination. And, if my word has commended itself to you, your past record entitles me to expect you to enforce in your own lives the things of eternity about which I have ventured to speak to you this afternoon, and cover the whole of India with your activity.

WORK OF THE ARYA SAMAJ

In concluding my report of the above speech, I would like to state what I did not in speaking to that great audience and it is this. I have now twice visited the Gurukul. In spite of some vital difference with my brethren of the Arya Samaj, I have a sneaking regard for them, and it, and perhaps the best result of the activity of the Arya Samaj is to be seen in the establishment and the conduct of the Gurukul. Though it depends for its vitality entirely upon the inspiring presence of Mahatmaji Munshi Ram, it is truly a national and self-governing and self-governed institution. It is totally independent of Government aid or patronage. Its war chest is filled not out of monies received from the privileged few, but from the poor many who make it a point of honour from year to year to make a pilgrimage to Kangri and willingly give their mite for maintaining this National College. Here at every anniversary a huge crowd gathers and the manner in which it is handled, housed and fed evinces no mean power of organisation. But the most wonderful thing about it all is that the crowd consisting of about the thousand men, women and children is managed without the assistance of a single policeman and without any fuss or semblance of force, the only force that subsists between the crowd and the managers of the institution is that of love and mutual esteem. Fourteen years are nothing in the life of a big institution like this. What the collegiates who have been just turned out during the last two or three years will be able to show, remains to be seen. The public will not and cannot judge men or institutions except through the results that they show. It makes no allowance for failures, it is a most exacting judge. The final appeal of the Gurukul as of all popular institutions must be to this judge. Great responsibility therefore rests upon the shoulders of the students who have been discharged from the college and who have entered upon the thorny path of life. Let them beware. Meanwhile hose who are well-wishers of this great experiment may derive satisfaction from the fact that we have it as an indisputable rule of life, that as the tree is, so will the fruit be. The tree looks lovely enough. He who waters it is a noble soul. Why worry about what the fruit is likely to be?

INDUSTRIAL TRAINING

As a lover of the Gurukul, I may be permitted to offer one or two suggestions to the Committee and the parents. The Gurukul boys need a thorough industrial training if they are to become self-reliant and self-supporting. It seems to me that in our country in which 85 per cent of the population is agricultural and perhaps 10 per cent occupied in supplying the wants of the peasantry, it must be part of the training of every youth that he has a fair practical knowledge of agriculture and hand-weaving. He will lose nothing if he knows a proper use of tools, can saw a piece of board straight and build a wall that will not come down through a faulty handling of the plumber’s line. A boy who is thus equipped will never feel helpless in battling with the world and never be in want of employment. A knowledge of the laws of hygiene and sanitation as well as the art of rearing children should also form a necessary part of [the training of] the Gurukul lads. The sanitary arrangements at the fair left much to be desired. The plague of flies told its own tale. These irrepressible sanitary inspectors incessantly warned us that in point of sanitation all was not well with us. They plainly suggested that the remains of our food and excreta needed to be properly buried. It seemed to me to be such a pity that a golden opportunity was being missed of giving to the annual visitors practical lessons on sanitation. But the work must begin with the boys. Then the management would have at the annual gathering three hundred practical sanitary teachers. Last but not least, let the parents and the Committee not spoil their lads by making them ape European dress or modern luxuries. These will hinder them in their afterlife and are antagonistic to brahmacharya. They have enough to fight against in the evil inclinations common to us all. Let us not make their fight more difficult by adding to their temptations.

Speeches and Writings of Mahatma Gandhi (4th Ed.), pp. 329-35
154. SPEECH AT HARDWAR

March 23, 1916

The Dayanand Anglo-Vedic School boys were taken to the Arya Samaj hall in the evening and Mr. Gandhi addressed them for a short time only as he was feeling unwell.

He exhorted the audience to have the courage of their convictions, and in copying or imitating those who directed or ruled, not to be guided by outward show, such as styles, dress, or by customs, such as meat-eating. He exhorted them to be true to themselves and then they would be true to India.

Bombay Secret Abstracts, 1916, pp. 243-4

155. LETTER TO J. B. PETIT

March 30, 1916

DEAR MR. PETIT,

I have your letter covering check for Rs. 500 on a/c of passive resistance expenses for which I thank you.

I enclose herewith statement required by you. It is not [the] final list. For instance, the widows sometimes require travelling expenses. These are allowed when necessary. Such expenses were incurred only two months ago.

Imam Saheb has just lost his father and he was paid Rs. 300. He has not only lost all he had but he has incurred much odium from his erstwhile friends. The result is that he has lost the trade he used to carry on. He is now here. Until he is suited it may be necessary to give him help from time to time.

Maganlal Gandhi and his brothers are my nephews. They are training under me for national service. One of the brothers who is free is earning but not enough to bear the whole burden of supporting the parents.

Maganbhai Patel’s is a similar case. Moreover, he is a chronic sickbed. Then there is the case of Sorabji Adajania. He holds from a friend a scholarship. But owing to unforeseen circumstances he may need additional help up to say [Rs.] 500.

1 Narandas
The above exhausts the list of Passive Resisters for whom provision may have to be made at this end. What the requirements will be in South Africa I shall ascertain and let you know as soon as I receive the estimate.

I need hardly say that the information I am giving you is confidential. It relates to some public-spirited men who are accepting support after pressure from me. The rule has been never to disclose the names of those who have been receiving maintenance money. The only person apart from the few intimate co-workers in S.A. who knew anything about the support given was Mr. Gokhale. I have no objection to the Committee having the information but beyond them it ought not to march.

Yours sincerely,

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Name</th>
<th>Age</th>
<th>Rs.</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>Ayamal</td>
<td>35</td>
<td>15 for life</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Arulmayee</td>
<td>35</td>
<td>10 for life</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Naransamy</td>
<td>14</td>
<td>15 - 10 yrs.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Puroh</td>
<td>12</td>
<td>15 -</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Bala</td>
<td>10</td>
<td>15 -</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Shivpujan</td>
<td>20</td>
<td>15 -</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sibparsad</td>
<td>5</td>
<td>15 - 15 yrs.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maganbhai</td>
<td>28</td>
<td>15 - 5 yrs.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Revashankar</td>
<td>18</td>
<td>15 - 10 yrs.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Chhotam</td>
<td>7</td>
<td>15 - 15 yrs.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Maganlal</td>
<td>25</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Jamnadas</td>
<td>20</td>
<td>15 - 5 yrs.</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Imamsaheb</td>
<td>40</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Sorabji</td>
<td>35</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

From the draft in Gandhiji's hand: S.N. 6306
156. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M.K. GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,
April 1 [1916]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I am at last in Ahmedabad, for some weeks at any rate. Your things are now being collected. The next mail you should receive them. I am trying to manufacture biscuits without an oven. You will like them.

I never previous to the letter under reply received any letter regarding your things.

I never received the wooden pillow you have referred to in several letters of yours.

During the week I resolved not to admit to the Ashram for one year anyone either young or old. Newcomers have taxed me too much and they have disturbed the ever tenor of the life of the Ashram. I know you would have, had you been here, long ago pushed me to this decision. However, I have come to it after bitter experience.

We are now exactly 30, young and old. Of these Maganlal and Jamnadas are in Madras training in Tamil and hand-weaving. Jamnadas’s wife is also learning hand-weaving.

The Pariah member’s wife having proved untrustworthy has left the Ashram.

During the travels just completed, I went to a place called Dehradun. It is at the base of the Himalayas. You will love the place. The air is bracing and there are so many walks to the Himalayan hills. Of course I was there only for a day but was able to know much about the place. Ramdas, Prabhudas and Devdas were with me.

Have I told you that I have just begun to take cooked food? The price of fruitarian food is prohibitive here and one cannot get even dates and monkey-nuts at certain places for love or money. This is a sad discovery. It tells its own tale. It is there however and one has to put up with it. This is the 6th day of cooked food. I take rice and dholl, a vegetable and a lemon. This makes 4 articles. Today I am going to add oil. I have felt extremely weak during the six days and not half as satisfied as with the fruitarian meal. I shall see what the addition of oil does for me. Later on I shall take wheat or some other corn.

1 From the contents

Chhaganlal is due here about the middle of the month. West and Pragji are in charge at Phoenix.

I have written to Polak about you. Every one of our company is just now involved in his own special troubles. This war has naturally disturbed individuals in all parts of the world.

Ramdas is getting stronger. Devdas has lost in health. He thinks too much. He has developed a tremendous sense of responsibility. And he has become such a fine student. I have been trying to wean him from his studies. I do not know how far I shall succeed. Budri is due here today. Sivpujan too has become a regular student but not so accurate as Devdas.

Fakiri’s death was a glorious death. I have seen few dying such a peaceful death. He was conscious to the last moment. He was screaming with pain. I said, “Fakiri, take the name of God”. He began to utter the sacred syllable and went off to sleep from which he never awoke. The cremation ceremony was the simplest. We gave information to nobody. We fasted for half the day. We chanted hymns before the body was taken to the crematorium.

With love to you from us all,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

1 On March 12, 1916
TO
THE HONORARY SECRETARY
GUJARAT VERNACULAR SOCIETY
AHMEDABAD
SIR,

As I desire to be enrolled a life-member of the Gujarat Vernacular Society, I hope my name will be placed before the Committee and I shall be so enrolled.

I send herewith a sum of Rs. 25/- (rupees twenty-five only) as fee for life-membership, which please acknowledge. Name: Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi

Signature: Mohandas Karamchand Gandhi
Age: 46 years
Education: Passed qualifying examination for enrolment as barrister
Address: (Permanent) Satyagraha Ashram (Present) Near Kochrab
Ahmedabad

Being a teacher living on my labour, I think I may count as one with a pay of less than thirty rupees a month. Accordingly, I send Rs. 25/-

[From Gujarati]
Buddhi Prakash, January-March, 1948

1 The application was made on a printed form.
2 The sum of Rs. 25 accompanying the application is found credited to the Deposits Account in the Society’s books under this date. The deposit was refunded on April 26 after the Managing Committee had, by a special resolution passed at a meeting held on the 19th, nominated Gandhiji an honorary life member.
3 A footnote to the printed form says that women and teachers with pay of less than thirty rupees a month will be enrolled life-members on payment of Rs. 25. The ordinary subscription for life-membership was Rs. 50.
158. LETTER TO MOHAMMED ALI

AHMEDABAD,
April 14, 1916

DEAR MR. MOHAMMED ALI1,

I have a reply from the Commissioner saying that under instructions from the Government of India my application for permission to see you must be rejected. The authorities have evidently failed to appreciate my motive in wanting to see you. The only thing I as a passive resister can do in circumstances such as these is to bow to the decision of the Government of India.

I do hope your disease is now under control.

With regards to you all,

Your sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From the original: Mohammed Ali Papers: MOH/L2397-8. Courtesy: Jamia Millia Islamia Library

159. SPEECH AT CONDOLENCE MEETING, AHMEDABAD2

April 16, 1916

Mr. Patil was one of the ornaments of Ahmedabad. If Ahmedabad had appreciated this, the people would have filled this hall to crowding. When I received the invitation to settle in Ahmedabad, leaving Bombay, one of my friends assured me that, Mr. Patil being one of the signatories to the invitation, it was safe to accept it. This showed that Mr. Patil was true to his word and modest as well. Next, as for the premature death of Mr. Patil, I would suggest that we should inquire why political leaders die at an early age. In my opinion, such deaths are due to their neglecting their health.

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 23-4-1916

1 The addressee, editor of The Comrade, had been interned in October, 1914, along with his brother, Shaukat Ali, for publishing an article entitled “Evacuate Egypt”.

2 On the death of Govindrao Appaji Patil, a lawyer and social worker

3 Vide the following item.
THE EDITOR,
PRAJABANDHU

SIR,

I write this hoping that you will permit me to place before your readers some of the many reflections which have occurred to me, and still occur, by reason of Bhai Govindrao Appaji Patil’s death at a premature age.

I have purposely used the adjective ‘premature’ to denote the age of the deceased. Any age below 50 should be considered premature, and Bhai Govindrao died before he was 50. It is a matter of no small grief that the untimely death of our first leaders deprives us of the benefit of their ripest years. It seems we suffer from a kind of vanity. We and our leaders seem to believe that there is some virtue in remaining more or less ailing and, accordingly, if the leaders leave us in their premature age, we see an especial virtue in the fact. I think our leaders, and others too, but particularly our leaders, should consider it a sin to be taken ill or to remain ill, even if illness should come to them while serving the public. If we go over all such cases among the leaders, right from the late Justice Telang down to Bhai Govindrao we shall find that the illness of many of them was such as could have been prevented. It is the duty of every one of us, especially of our leaders, to know how to maintain sound health.

I know from experience that we ourselves, in many cases, sow the seeds of premature death in our very childhood and, in some measure, our parents do this for us out of their ignorance and inordinate affection. We generally depart from physical brahma-charya, through marriage, or even otherwise, right in our childhood. We choose many articles of food merely for their taste or only for the purpose of putting on fat. The diet of those who have to use mental

---

1 Published under the caption, “Why Do We Die Prematurely?”
2 Of the Bombay High Court, one of the founders of the Indian National Congress energy and who lead a sedentary life should differ in its composition from that of others. As a matter of fact, the diet of such people is seldom chosen in the light of this consideration. I believe that, in a climate like that of Ahmedabad, excessive use of ghee is sure to damage the health of those who work only with the brain. They should use pulses in very small quantities. Those who have to do physical labour cannot do without a liberal use of pulses, but to others who do little physical work, too much of pulses will be like poison. Almost all students complain of constipation, the reason being that they have in their diet an excessive quantity of spices, pulses and such other things, which are bound to lead to constipation. They then damage their stomach by taking castor oil, Epsom salt or fruit salt, and ultimately fall a prey to death. Our normal diet does not contain the vitamins which fresh fruits provide. If we regularly ate fresh fruits in place of the usual diet, on a particular day of the week, constipation would disappear and our blood would become pure. I do not suggest that a major change should be introduced in our diet at once. I realize that our people would not agree to do so. But they can, in order to ensure good health, reduce the quantity of spices, make a cautious use of pulses and begin taking fruits, etc. It cannot be argued that this will require any very strenuous efforts. The habit of taking tea or cocoa is really very dangerous. I think those who insist on having tea would do well to study what the people of the tea drinking countries do and how they prepare tea. But we have made no such study. I do not know if people elsewhere consume all the tannin in tea, as we do here. The Chinese do not allow tea leaves to remain in boiling water for more than half a minute; they strain the tea soon after adding the leaves. The colour of the mixture would show that very little tannin had been absorbed in the water. It should not be allowed to become more yellow than blades of hay, and never reddish in any case. This is the kind of tea which millions of Chinese drink. They never use milk in their tea. They do not know what it is to milk cows. They rarely use sugar in their tea. If at all tea can be prepared so as to cause no harm, this is the way. Here is what a man, highly experienced and famous, Doctor Cantlie by name, has to say. He believes that the Chinese take tea because it is the easiest way of drinking pure water. Below the boiling point, water cannot absorb the colour of tea, and so they take tea in place of simple water; that is, they use water which has been tested [for its temperature].

We are as careless about exercise as about diet. To stroll one or two miles at a leisurely pace is no exercise. To hit a billiard ball one or two hundred times with a cue is also no exercise. When exercise is taken in this manner in a room with foul-smelling air, the effect is bound to be harmful. In our predicament, when no other form of exercise is convenient, walking is the best exercise. But exercise is worth the name only if one can walk six miles at a stretch in the morning and again in the evening. The walking should be done briskly, at a speed of four miles an hour. Thoreau used to walk for eight hours daily when he wrote his best book. Tolstoy testifies to the fact that while writing his best books he never used to sit at his desk before he had had plenty of exercise. He always used to work on a farm. [Some people say:] ‘We cannot spare a minute from the lients’ work or from public work, and take exercise.” Such talk is sheer vanity. It would seem to proceed from a belief that but for us public work would go to the dogs. The Grand Old Man of India, Dadabhai, has been observing all the general rules of hygiene and has never departed from his routine of exercise, etc. Hence, we see him alive to this day, and it would be in no way surprising if this rishi were to live a hundred years like those of old times. We violate one of the precepts of the Gita and suffer dire consequences. It says that a person who eats without performing yajna is a thief; the true meaning of yajna here is physical labour on a farm. If we would make it a rule to work hard, to work, that is, with a shovel for four hours every day in a field, for the purpose of digesting our food, and would observe other rules [of hygiene], premature deaths might be far fewer among us.

When we begin to feel ashamed of falling ill, we shall undoubtedly acquire good health. In my humble opinion it is the person, whether man or woman, that has discovered, by experiments, the rules to be followed in order to preserve his or her health even while engaged in public work, who can render any great service to the country.

Yours

MOWHANDAS Karamchand Gandhi

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 23-4-1916

1 Naoroji
2 Vide Bhagvad Gita, III. 12.
161. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M. K. GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,

April 22 [1916]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

If you were here, you would go out into the jungle and like Job give way to crying bitterly. Such is the misery we are passing through just now. Naransamy still obstinately clings to his fever, the after-effect of smallpox. Chhotam is down with it and so are Bala and Parthasarathy. Maganlal is sick. Vrajlal (one of the strongest workers) is sick. Two more are on the sick-bed and I have an attack of pleurisy which may develop heaven knows to what extent. The only sound ones are Maganbhai, Manilal, Jamnadas and Mrs. Gandhi. And they may collapse any day. Our trust is in God. He has a right to try us. May we have the strength to go through the fire. And let our sorrows bring you some comfort. Yours are of a different type and avoidable. Do then rise from them and learn that those who are near and dear to you are also suffering in their own way. There is no escape from it in this wide, wide world.

The parcel containing biscuits and sticks is leaving today. I shall await your criticism.

With love,

Yours ever,

OLD FRIEND

[PS.]

Some home-made cloth is being packed in your parcel containing biscuits. Did I ever tell you that I never got the wooden pillow you mentioned?

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

1 From the contents
162. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M. K. GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,

April 27 [1916]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

Sickness is still there. Thambi has written recalling his other boys. I have told him that if such is his final decision I shall certainly send them.

Round the dark cloud the silver lining just now is made by Mrs. Gandhi, Ramdas and Maganlal. Mrs. Gandhi has just now risen to her fullest height. She keeps well and uses herself for the Ashram. Maganlal is engaged in developing the weaving industry. Ramdas makes an excellent uncomplaining nurse. Manilal is, of course, all right. But I have specially singled out the three as outstanding personalities just now. At the time of writing my pleurisy is still a cause of care if not also of anxiety.

You ask why I have taken up [the] 5 articles vow. Well, Hardwar is a holy place. The Fair I attended occurs only every 13 years. I felt that I ought to do something. Hence the vow. I have now been on cooked food for over a fortnight. I do not know that I feel appreciably the worse for it. Some say in appearance I have improved. Cooked food had not a fair chance yet. I have taken very little oil. In fact mostly I avoid oil altogether. The cost is only 1 d. The difference in cost is tremendous. These are the places I have visited. It is a very rough map but perhaps you will follow:

I have marked only those I can recall at present.

Surely you had a right to ask for biscuits and they are gone. I hope you will receive them in good order. With them has been packed a piece of towel made at the Ashram. A bundle of sticks too has left and so [has] a box containing your clothes. I have asked Maganbhai

1 From the contents
2 Reproduced on an art-sheet facing p. 22 to send you a full list.

And now good-bye,

With love,

Yours ever,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

163. LETTER TO GANGADHARAO DESHPANDE

[Before April 29, 1916]]

Nothing but death can prevent me from going to Belgaum and attending the Conference.

Majhi Jivan Katha

164. SPEECH AT BELGAUM

April 30, 1916

A large gathering of people (about 1,000) assembled in Khotibis Wada in Raviwar Peth, Belgaum, on the night of the 30th of April, to hear Mr. M. K. Gandhi speak on the subject of “The Depressed Classes”. The audience was mainly composed of Lingayats and “Untouchables”. R. S. Shivmurti Swami Kanabargi presided. . . .

Mr. Gandhi then rose and said that as he was ill, he would only speak to them for a minute. He deprecated their opposition to the holding of the Provincial Conference in Belgaum. The principal object for the holding of the Conference was to effect a reconciliation between the two political parties. Home Rule must be granted to India and all classes should present a united front in demanding it. If Home Rule should be granted, no particular class would dominate, otherwise it would not be Home Rule. He for one would oppose any party or class that wanted to set itself above the others. He made no distinction between the higher and the lower classes and did not look with disdain upon a man simply because he was a sweeper or a barber, nor did

---

1 A political worker of Karnatak, popularly known as “Lion of Karnatak
2 Gandhiji arrived in Belgaum on April 29 to attend the Bombay Provincial Conference.
3 Gandhiji had accepted the invitation to attend the Conference but later on there were rumours that he might not attend it. On an enquiry from the addressee, Gandhiji wrote this reply.
4 Vide the following item.
he look up to anyone merely because he was a Brahmin. His religion taught him to consider all men alike, without distinction of class or creed. Home Rule would not be granted so long as there were differences between them. He promised to do all in his power to remove their disabilities.

Bombay Secret Abstracts, 1916, p. 330

165. SPEECH AT BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CONFERENCE
AT BELGAUM

May 1, 1916

Mr. Gandhi spoke as follows in Hindustani.... He was an outsider in the sense that he was not a member of the nationalist party or for that matter of any party. He had no mental desire for listening to the speeches or to his own voice but he had felt it his duty as an aspirant for national service to study all the institutions he could and hence it was that he found himself at the Belgaum Conference. He was desirous of being present there as he was anxious to see the inauguration of an era of peace between the two great parties which, he was assured, would take place at Belgaum. It was a matter to him, therefore, of great pleasure that the foundation for unity was being laid at the Conference. He heartily supported the resolution moved by Mr. Tilak. He was sure he was not expected to endorse every word of the resolution on the report that was adopted. It should be enough that he found himself in agreement with the main draft of the resolution. Had the wording of the resolution been in his own hand, he would probably have omitted some expressions. Mr. Tilak’s speech left nothing to be desired and he if worked as he was sure he would, and the nationalist party as a whole also worked truly in the spirit of the resolution and Mr.

1 This Conference, held from 29th April to 1st May, was attended by leading Nationalists from Bombay, C.P. and Berar and was held after the Poona meeting of January 16, 1916, which had postponed settlement of the question of limitation on the number of delegates from political bodies of two years’ standing which had received automatic affiliation after the amendment of the Congress constitution in 1915.

2 Tilak’s resolution, carried unanimously, read as follows:

“That this conference adopts the reports of Messrs Belvi, Baptista and Tilak, and as in the interest of our Motherland under the present circumstances it is desirable to unite, resolves to accept, the constitution of the Congress as amended at its last sessions, though the amendment is highly unsatisfactory, and appoints a Committee composed of the following gentlemen, to do further work from within: G. S. Khaparde, J. Baptista, D. V. Belvi, B. G. Tilak and N. C. Kelkar (Secretary).”

Tilak’s remarks, he was sure that the coming union would be a great blessing to the motherland. It was for that reason that he found himself in disagreement with Mr. Baptista, who seemed to be so much in tune with the pleaders. If they approached the question in the pleaders’ spirit they would be constantly picking holes. What was needed was to approach the national question as common men. They would then overlook the faults and defects in their erstwhile opponents but would ever seek points of agreement and contact. Indeed if the party returned to the Congress fold with an absolutely honest and selfless spirit, ever thinking of the country and its cause and never thinking of party or personal gain, God would be with them and with God with them the nation could then [go] forward in the face of the world’s opposition.

The Bengalee, 3-5-1916

166. LETTER TO STUDENTS OF BHAVNAGAR JAIN BOARDING HOUSE

AHMEDABAD,

Vaishakh Sud 11 [May 13, 1916]

I am sending some wheat-powder to be taken in place of tea. How it may be prepared is explained in my book on Health. It has been only recently published by the Sastun Sahitya. Trusting that you will consult it, I do not say anything about the matter here.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

From the original postcard in Gujarati in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5703.

 Courtesy: Pramod Virchand Shah

---

1 Sent in reply to Virchand Shah’s enquiry as to what can be taken as a substitute for tea
2 From the postmark
3 Vide “General Knowledge about Health [-x]”, 8-3-1913
4 Sastun Sahityavardhak Karayalaya, Ahemedabad, founded by Bhikshu Akhandanand to publish low-priced, good-quality books.
167. LETTER TO KOTWAL

AHEMEDABAD,

Vaishakh Vad 4 [May 21, 1916]

BHAISHRI KOTWAL,

There is not a single letter of yours which I have not answered. It is not a rule with me to write about happenings in the Ashram myself and so it didn’t occur to me to write about Fakiri. His death was sublime.

Anna is lost to us for the present. He says that he will not be able to come over for at least a year and that he doesn’t know what he will do thereafter. Maganbhai is also leaving, having found it difficult to follow the Ashram rules. Mama’s continues here.

I am glad you have found a job, and sorry, too, in equal measure. You have succumbed to a bad temptation. I wish you could save yourself from that. There is only one way. While in service, make the ultimate good your only concern: indulge in no pleasures and, as much as you can, render disinterested service to others; so, you will have some inward peace. Reflect Constantly on Bharata’s life.

Rest assured there is not an hour when you are out of our minds.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

Mr. Shyamji Sahay may certainly come over and bring his wife. There will be no harm if other students also come. As for going to Indore, I don’t know when it will be possible.

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 3609

---

1 Anna and Maganbhai Patel referred to in the letter left the Ashram at this time.

2 Mamasheeb Phadke, a teacher of the Ganganath Vidyalaya, Baroda, who joined Gandhiji along with Anna a\textit{lias} Harihar Sharma

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
168. LETTER TO VIRCHAND SHAH

Ahmedabad,
Vaishakh Vad 6 [May 25, 1916]

Dear Shri Virchand Panachand Shah,

They are good questions you have asked me.

There must be occasions when I feel agitated.

I do get the unworthy thought sometimes that it would have been better if events had followed a different course from what they did. Regret I feel often enough.

I may be guilty of partiality sometimes, but so rarely that I don’t recollect any such instance.

I am not able to do everything I want to.

I see my imperfections every moment and am constantly struggling to get rid of them.

You may ask me any further questions you think fit.

Vandemataram from

Mohandas Gandhi

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5702.

Courtesy: Pramod Virchand Shah

---

1 The addressee in his letter dated May 20, 1916 had asked:

“(1) Do you ever get agitated?
(2) Do you ever feel that it would have been better had events taken a different course than they did? Do you ever feel regret?
(3) Do you ever become partial?
(4) Are you able to do all that you want to (in matters not dependent on others but concerning your own plans on which you have made up your mind)?
(5) Do you observe any particular imperfections in you? If yes, do you strive to get rid of them?”
MY DEAR FRIEND,

I have two letters this week from you. You want all the news from here. I think I have supplied you with it. Today Harilal’s wife, who has been here for a few days, leaves for Calcutta to join her husband. Manilal goes as escort. We shall be today 20 in the Ashram when Chanchi has gone. Maganlal is doing well with his handloom work. Ramdas and Devdas are going forward with their studies, which consist of Sanskrit, Gujarati, Tamil and Hindi. I am their sole teacher. Pra-bhudas is with his father just now. I do not know what Chhaganlal will do in the end. Maganbhai has left the Ashram for good. He could not as he said bear the responsibility. He could not comply with all the rules. So now Maganlal is the only responsible man left with me barring Manilal. There are other new men. They are good but still untired. What I have said may yet come true everyone may find it necessary to leave me. I think I have strength to face that situation. You say you are morose there. Can you not see much in the above to give you strength and comfort? To be confined ought not to make the difference it seems to make in your life. Oh, if you could but see there are millions much worse off than you are. What of the combatants themselves? What of the families they leave behind? I wish you could get out of the Slough of Despond and make the best use of the situation as it faces you.

With love,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

1 From the contents
I am tired of conferences and speeches and now of hearing my own voice as well. When Lord Buddha decided to work for the emancipation of the world, he did not convene a conference and get it to pass resolutions. Nor did Jesus Christ do anything of the sort. But not being blessed with such greatness, we convene such conferences because, I think I am right in this, we lack the requisite strength for our work. This happens all over the country; and so I don’t say that yours is the only instance.

There is something novel about the origin of this conference and its procedure of work. I believe at the same time that it does serve a useful purpose. The work here is not done through long speeches. I am glad to see that everyone speaks to the point and keeps himself to the subject. We must have formed the habit of speaking briefly and to the point through the business atmosphere of Gujarat. In the changes taking place today in our communities, we have observed [their] rise and fall through their own actions and deserts. Champaneri Banias were once Vaniks; then by vocation they became Ghanchis. In the caste set-up of India, it is in no way impossible that through better education and economic advance they may again become Vaniks or attain even a higher status, or that they may be degraded to a level lower than that of Ghanchi.

Our sin in despising the Antyajas degrades the entire Hindu society. Dhulabhai Dhed, who stays with me and who has accompanied me here, once asked a woman for some water. On the woman inquiring about his caste, Dhulabhai replied that he was Dhed. The lady said: “I don’t believe it. You are quite well dressed and clean; you do not look like a Dhed. Here is water for you.” So saying

---

1 At the Conference of Friendly Associations of Communities
2 Members of a Hindu caste traditionally engaged in trade, commerce and banking
3 Those who make and sell seed-oils
4 Lowest caste among Hindus traditionally charged with sanitary duties
5 Probably a misprint for Dudabhai, who had joined the Ashram on September 26, 1915; vide “Diary for 1915” she gave him water to drink. But Dhulabhai, after drinking the water, told her again that he was a Dhed and that he did not wish to deceive her. In bearing with the abuses she then showered on him, Dhulabhai showed courage and strength of mind. In just the same way, the entire Hindu society despises the Dhed people and, as long as this does not change, we shall not be able to convince the whites of South Africa and elsewhere of the utter injustice of the aversion they show for us.
Today I take a pledge that, if I am wrong in any belief of mine and if someone from amongst you proves it, I will accept the correction in all humility. But, at the same time, I also take another pledge that I will not rest till I make you change this wrong belief of yours in regard to the Antyajas.

[From Gujarati]

_Gujarati, 11-6-1916_

171. SPEECH ON CASTE SYSTEM, AHMEDABAD

June 5, 1916

I am in India to learn what I ought to do and I cannot say how long I shall take to do so. Even in standing now before you to speak, my aim is to learn something. I have not come prepared to speak on the subject; I thank you all the same for this opportunity to express my ideas. Newspapers report my speeches, but sometimes I am not rightly understood and my meaning is distorted, which is not good for a satyagrahi which I claim to be. I shall be happy, therefore, if reports of my speeches are shown to me before they are published: this is my request. I was quite pleased with the work of the Conference yesterday, for people spoke briefly and to the point. I for one believe that the time for conferences is long past and the time has now come for us to show some results and hold our peace; our words, when they follow such action, will have an effect all their own. This was the way of the divinely-inspired Buddha, Jesus, Mahomed and others and of Martin Luther likewise. I have devoted much thought to the subject of the caste system¹ and come to the conclusion that Hindu society cannot dispense with it, that it lives on because of the discipline of caste. Societies all over the world are organized on the principle of ¹ On the second day of the Conference, vide the preceding item.

² Vide also “The Hindu Caste System”, October, 1916.
caste or varnayavastha. Our society was organized in this manner for the purpose of self-control, that is, for self-denial. Certainly, there is a difference between varnayavastha in the West and among us; but there is varnayavastha everywhere, all the same. So long as there are among human beings impulses which tend to a godly life and those which tend to a demoniac life, so long will the division of society into communities remain. It is a vain effort to replace this structure by one single community. Communities, too, may be born and may die. Mr. Lyall has affirmed in a book of his not only that among Hindus communities have made their appearance and died out, but also that, while outsiders may have joined the Hindu fold, there is no evidence that the Hindu society converted others to the Hindu faith as Christians did to theirs. Members of non-Hindu faiths and sects became Hindus in course of time. the status of a community depends on its function in society and not on the scriptures. It need not be imagined that caste rests on the idea that members of a community may eat together and marry among themselves. If friendly relations depended on eating together and inter-marriage, the German and the British would not be fighting against each other. The Rajputs of Kathiawar do sit together at meals and marry among themselves but have no end of internecine strife and fighting. Of course, these caste restrictions have something of value in them. It is but natural that a father and daughter want to remain in the same social group and hence communities or groups naturally come to have their distinctive organizations. But the evils which have found their way into the various communities must be eradicated without delay. Though it is important that we apply our minds to the social problems concerning unmarried girls, widows, widowers, etc.,—and they do require capacity to think —this has nothing to do with a knowledge of letters. There are 60 million untouchables in our country. It is necessary to improve their condition, because this is a blot on Hindu society, one which India will have to atone for at a heavy price. During my campaigns in South Africa, the whites used to ask me what right we had to demand better treatment from them when we were guilty of ill-treating the untouchables among us. The late Mr. Gokhale and Sir Sankaran Nair

---

1 Division of society into classes on the basis of vocations
2 Community which formed the ruling class in medieval India
3 Sir Chettur Sankaran Nair (1857-1934); President, Indian National Congress, 1897; Judge of the Madras High Court; appointed Member of the Viceroy’s Executive Council in 1915 held the same view about the imperative need for the uplift of this down-trodden class. In the Punjab, people treat the untouchables fairly well when they need their services but, when the need is over, they return to their old ways. Conduct of this kind has nothing religious in it. We must maintain good relations with these classes all the time; success will assuredly be ours in anything we do from a religious motive.

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 11-6-1916

172. LETTER TO NARHAR SHAMBHURAO BHAVE

[AHMEDABAD, After June 7, 1916]¹

Your son Vinoba¹ is with me. Your son has acquired at so tender an age such high-spiritedness and asceticism as took me years of patient labour to do.

[M. K. GANDHI]

Life of Vinoba. p 8

173. LETTER TO A. H. WEST

AHMEDABAD, June 15 [1916]⁴

MY DEAR WEST,

We must agree to differ as to the accounts. All I want is passive resistance expenditure after the date of the last account published and bank balance. Surely this is all in your books. I should despair if you told me that we had no passive resistance a/c in our ledgers. I know that this is not so. Will you kindly send me these items? So much for the business part. Your conversational letter I have. It is naturally full

¹ Acharya Vinoba’s father, then at Baroda
² Vinoba met Gandhiji at the Kochrab Ashram on June 7.
³ Vinoba Bhave (1895-) “Saint on the march”, Sarvodaya leader, founder of the Bhoodan movement, author of Talks on the Gita and other works of you as I have known you. I never doubted that you would be able to make your way among the officials by your very bluntness. The novelty of resistance may shock them at first but pleases them afterwards. Even they must get tired of ‘nodders’ if one may coin that noun. And you will have to continue to do that work whether the people appreciate it or not or rather want it or not. Appreciation need not be looked for. Do please send me all the correspondence you wish to. I promise to go through it all. Do not think that South Africa disappears from my mind. How can it? I owe much to S.A., i.e. to friendships formed there. In my moments of sadness recollection of friends working there is no small comfort. Your successes and your failures are alike matters of deepest interest to me.
⁴ From the reference to the passive resistance accounts in the letter, it could have been written either in 1915 or 1916. In 1915 Gandhiji was not in Ahmedabad on June 15.

Is your little school still going on? How is Granny¹ doing? Is she still as fresh as before? The very thought of her and her working away is an inspiration. Just now I am reading to the Ashram at prayer time Pilgrim’s Progress. I often think of Mrs. West’s sweet voice and want her to sing to us “When I survey the wondrous cross”! The whole of Phoenix rises before us whenever we sing our favourite hymns.

With love to you all,

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 4419. Courtesy: A. H. West

174. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M.K. GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,

June 24 [1916]²

MY DEAR FRIEND,

This letter will make you sick. Yet I must give you the information Manilal has deceived me again. He gave some money to Harilal and disowned all knowledge of it when I questioned him. He had no leg to stand on. He confessed his fault immediately. But the ¹ Mother-in-law of A. H. West whom everyone in Phoenix called “Granny” and “felt that she was really related so to him”. Vide Satyagraha in South Africa Ch. XXIII.

² From the contents
incident showed the boy’s extreme weakness. He has therefore left the Ashram for Madras and has to throw himself on his own resources. If he makes proper use of this disciplinary period, one may yet make something of him. He is a very weak boy. I have been fasting during the week. I fasted 3 days. I broke it yesterday. The last day found me very weak and suffering much. I am all right now and not much the worse for the fast. You will please therefore not worry about me or Manilal. Apart from this incident the Ashram is going forward. The handloom-weaving is being pressed forward for all it is worth. We hope to make the place self-supporting in a year’s time. This I know you will like immensely.

Of shifting to Dehradun or elsewhere, only when you are here. The climate of Ahmedabad is by no means so bad or at all bad. Only the boys were becoming acclimatised and I had not yet found out the food proper for the climate. Now I think I have hit upon it. All the smallpox patients are now hale and hearty and probably by the time you are here, the marks will have all gone. Naransamy has gained. He has almost lost his deafness and he is daily growing fatter. There are some new men whom you will be delighted to meet. They are strong and conscientious workers. Of old and experienced hands Maganlal is the only one left. But then he is a host in himself and he is not likely to desert me.

I do hope that by this time at least you are in possession of all your things.

Good-bye and much love,

Yours,
OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

175. SPEECH AGAINST PRESS ACT

June 24, 1916

A public meeting of the citizens of Bombay was held in the Empire Theatre on the evening of Saturday, the 24th June 1916, ‘to uphold the liberty of the Press and protest against the Press Act of 1910’, under the auspices of the ‘Indian Press Association’. Mr. B. G. Horniman, Editor of the Bombay Chronicle, presided.

1 A brief report of this appeared in The Bombay Chronicle, 26-6-1916.
It was a very largely-attended meeting. There were not a few Hindu—Deccani and Gujarati—ladies among the audience. Principal among them was the wife of the Honourable Mr. Chimanlal Setalvad with her daughters and daughters-in-law.

Messrs Gandhi, Horniman and Jamnadas D. Dharamsey were received on arrival with loud cheers. In the case of Mr. Gandhi cheers were called for ‘once more’ by an occupant of one of the upper galleries. Mr. Gandhi delivered his address in Gujarati, urging that that was the true way of being faithful to his motherland. . . .

Mr. Gandhi said:

MR. PRESIDENT, DEAR SISTERS AND BROTHERS,

I see that in this hall there are several persons laughing, because I have commenced to speak in Gujarati. (Laughter.) You see we want to have swaraj; and when we get it, I am sure you will agree with me that we ought to carry on our business in the Gujarati tongue. (Laughter.) Crores and crores of our people for whom the swaraj will have to be carried on, it is impossible to deal with in English, to which they are quite foreign. It is undoubtedly the fact that in this assembly we have to speak to a majority of English-speaking people, and to them I beg to tender an apology for venturing to address the meeting in my own native tongue. (Laughter.) It may be said that besides those who know English in this hall, there are not a few who speak Marathi. I know that there are those who speak that language, but to them I would respectfully say that hereafter they should learn the Gujarati language, so that when they have occasion to hear my Gujarati speech, they will be able to follow me somehow or other. (Laughter.) The resolution that is placed in my hands runs thus:

That this meeting of loyal and law-abiding Indian subjects of His Majesty the King-Emperor, believing the existence of a free public Press to be one of the first essentials of a healthy and progressive State and necessary to the proper development, political and moral, of civilized peoples; and further that the extension and maintenance of freedom in all departments of public life is the surest guarantee of popular progress and contentment and of mutual trust between the Government and the people, asks that the Press in this country should enjoy the utmost liberty of expression, subject to the legal restraints of the ordinary law and of penalties inflicted only after proper trial and conviction. (Cheers.)

(Mr. Gandhi explained the resolution in Gujarati.)

Up to now, this Press Act was considered to be innocent and innocuous, so far as the high-class journalists were concerned; in fact, that was the promise given by the Government at the time when this law was passed to the elected members of the Legislative Council of His Excellency the Viceroy and Governor-General. Those members accepted the enactment under that promise. They were assured that the law would be made operative against only offending journalists. But from what has now happened in the case of New India, it may be said that the promise was illusory. We are here disillusioned now as to the real character of this law on account of the attack made by the Government against Mrs. Annie Besant. (Cheers.) That circumstance has awakened us to the true nature of the law. Where is the security from this law when zulum\(^1\) is practised under it on respectable journalists? Remember that it is said that at this moment our Government are in a troublous condition. Remember also that we, the people of this country, say that what is a troublous condition of the Government is a troublous condition to us. (“Hear, hear.”) And yet in the midst of this condition if Government are prepared to drag us into the clutches of these severe laws, what would be our fate after the war is over? What will then happen to us is on the knees of the gods. (Laughter.) What can we now but to bear our fate with resignation? That is our only duty. We must take heart that our present fate will change for the better in the future. It must. I have no faith in these meetings and in these resolutions. (Laughter.) It is simply a waste of time to hold these meetings and carry these resolutions. But what else can we do? There is no alternative for us—the subject people—to do aught but place on record our view on a given subject. And, therefore, I have come here in response to an invitation. I feel that something should be done in this matter—something done so that our complaint may reach the ears of the Government. (“Hear, hear.”) Whatever we may say here with a view to expressing our feelings on the subject, it is an undoubted fact that we cannot express a hundredth part of what we actually feel in our minds on account of this outrageous enactment. We read newspapers. Yes, we do. But are you sure that you read the real thoughts of the editor. I think not. Independent views of writers are not published. What is published is otherwise and, therefore, one can say that it is advisable to read the opposite into the words that appear in the newspapers. (Laughter.) I am not at all exaggerating. I have myself been editor of a newspaper for several years and can

\(^1\) Repression
explain from personal experience the difficulties which the editor has to undergo in the true discharge of his duties I am not disputing the fact that some restraint is necessarily to be exercised on newspapers, but there is this to be remembered that in the exercise of such a restraint, discretion and limit should not be lost sight of. It is only with unwarranted restraint that I quarrel. For flimsy reasons, Government officials ought not to exercise restraint on the people’s right to express their views. (Cheers.) Restraint means inducement to indulge in fallacious or misleading thoughts. That leads one to become the enemy of my Government. (Laughter.) My genuine feelings are suppressed; I cannot give free vent to them; I write the reverse of what I feel. By reason of such enactments, there cannot be an unalloyed affection for our rulers among the 30 crores of our countrymen. There should be pure justice administered in India. (Cheers.) The Government are like- our trustees or protectors. To speak the truth I do not like the word ‘trustee’. India is no longer in a state of childhood, and, therefore, she does not require a trustee or a protector. India is one of the most ancient countries; she is one of the most experienced countries; can her subjects be said with propriety to be inexperienced or in a state of childhood? No; we Indians stand in no need of a protector. All that he need do for us is to dispense pure justice. We, the people of India, are as liberal in our views as we are innocent of any mischievous tendencies; all that we are is that we are despondent. But we will never be guilty of anything disloyal. Under these circumstances, I beg to appeal to the Government to do everything that is just and righteous; if that is done, there would be no necessity for these meetings. (‘‘Hear, hear’’ and laughter.) That is a general request. My special request to them is on behalf of the newspaper writers. I say, ‘Do not harass the respectable editors and proprietors.’ I further say, ‘Treat us as generously as you would the English people. We the people of India are not a race of hypocrites. (Laughter.) We are enlightened, good and civilized people.’ (‘‘Hear, hear.’’) To my newspaper-writer brethren I say, ‘Say openly whatever you have to say.’ (‘‘Hear, hear.’’) That is our duty. We should rely on ourselves to expatiate on our grievances, but we must not forget that we have to do that under certain restrictions born of politeness and sobriety. Whenever we are face to face with a political catastrophe, we should never hesitate to say in as clear terms as possible what we feel and desire to say. (‘‘Hear, hear.’’) For such plain-speaking and honest pleading of our cause if we are punished by the Government, well, let them do so. ("Hear, hear" and laughter.) What can they do if the worst comes to the worst? They will take our bodies at best. (Laughter.) Very well, if our bodies are taken away, our souls will become free. ("Hear, hear" and roars of laughter.)

Bombay Secret Abstracts, 1916, p. 506

176. LETTER TO C. F. ANDREWS

AHMEDABAD,

June 30 [1916]

MY DEAR CHARLIE,

It is no use having Tota Ram there. I have met him. He will not help. Indenture system has to go because it is bad in itself and is a remnant of slavery. If it can be done away with today, it should be without considering any interest whatsoever.

With love

MOHAN

From the original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5734. Courtesy: Rajmohini Rudra, Allahabad

177. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M. K. GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,

July 24, 1916

MY DEAR FRIEND,

The wooden pillow you describe never reached me. I am asking Dr. Jivraj Mehta. All of us appreciated the portrait of yourself and companions you have sent. We all think that you are looking well. But I know that you are not mentally as happy as you ought to be. I have been reading Pilgrim’s Progress to the boys. Christian and Hopeful are in the grip of Giant Despair. The latter suggests to them suicide. Christian half succumbs to the suggestion. Hopeful strenuously fights against it and argues that when we find ourselves in a tight corner, we should think of those who might be in a still tighter [one]. The argument is good. There are millions in a much worse condition than you are in. And then, after all, happiness is a mental state. And no one but ourselves can control that state. In the midst of plenty a man may be most miserable and another amid penury may be as happy as the smiling sun. Why worry about your South Africa affairs? After all you were ready to let them go. Let them go. So much the less burden.
Whilst under restraint you are looked after. When the restraint is removed, you will come to the Ashram and bring with you a pair of sturdy hand and feet. We are employing ours to make us self-sustained. You will find yourself in such an independent comm-unity and take your natural place.

With love,

Yours,
OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

178. RAILWAY PASSENGERS

[Before July 26, 1916]¹

No one doubts that railway passengers are put to many hardships. Against many of these, we have the remedy in our own hands. Unity is in the air all over India. If we did no more than resort to this, quite a few of the hardships could be overcome. This article makes some suggestions on how they could be. Those into whose hands this may fall are requested to read it carefully and afterwards to read it out to others who cannot read. The reader will easily guess that the cost of paper and printing must have been met by someone with a public spirit and, in view of that at any rate, he will realize that the article should not be treated lightly merely because he has got it free.

To the authorities, I shall say:

If you are a station master, you can remove many of the hardships of passengers.

Using courtesy in your dealings with poor passengers, you set an example to your subordinates.

If you are a ticket collector, with a little reflection you will realize that the poor should receive the same time and attention that

¹ This was published as a pamphlet and distributed gratis in Gujarat during 1916-17.
² A summary of this pamphlet appeared in Kathiawar Times, 26-7-1916.
you give to first and second-class passengers.

The railways depend on the poor for their existence and you owe your salaries largely to the money received from them.

Some booking clerks abuse the poor, address them slightly, and on top of that delay issuing tickets to them as long as they can. This is no way of showing one’s importance. Issuing a ticket without delay to anyone asking for it saves the latter’s time and you lose nothing by doing so.

If you are a policeman, you should refrain from accepting bribes, resolve not to shove the poor people about but behave towards them with kindness. You should understand that you are servants of the people and not their masters. It is your duty to help them out of their difficulties. That you should yourself become the cause of difficulties is sheer injustice.

To educated passengers, I shall say:

Most of you like showing that you are educated and that you have some patriotism in you. If you use your patriotism in doing good to the illiterate and poor passengers with whom you come into contact, you will be doing national service without having to search for an occasion.

For instance, if a passenger is being ill-treated, you can help him in a number of ways. Even if you do not generally travel third-class, your doing so occasionally just to get experience is likely to benefit the third-class passengers very much.

If you go in their midst, without disclosing your status, for purchasing tickets, etc., it will be easy for you to find a remedy for the difficulties you will experience in the process and the facilities offered to you will be available before long to the people at large.

Sometimes educated people themselves become the cause of injustice to third-class passengers. They are impatient to get their tickets first, may enjoy special facilities in trains and occupy more space than they need; the poor are put to difficulties in consequence. The educated class must certainly refrain from making itself a cause of injustice in this manner, if it can do nothing else.

It is your duty to write to the authorities about any deficiencies that you may observe on stations or trains.

To passengers in general, I shall say:

No matter what category of passengers you belong to, educated or uneducated, rich or poor, if you bear in mind the following suggestions, 75 per cent of the hardships of passengers will disappear in a moment:

1. You will lose nothing, and others will gain through your restraint, if, instead of pushing yourself forward when getting to the platform or boarding the train, you don’t mind being the last and act accordingly.

2. Having taken your seat in the train, you should know that, up to the number indicated, others have as much right to a seat [in the compartment] as you. Hence, if you stop others from entering, you will violate the moral law through falsehood and will also break a Railway regulation.

3. If you have with you only as much luggage as third-class passengers are entitled to carry, others will be able to sit in comfort. If you can afford to carry more luggage, you had better put the excess in the luggage van and pay the additional charge.

4. Your luggage should be of a kind that can be easily stowed away under a bench or placed on the shelf.

5. If you are well-to-do and have no philanthropic intentions, you should seek your comfort by purchasing an upper-class ticket. By purchasing a third class ticket out of sheer miserliness, you will make yourself a burden on the poor. But even if you do not want to travel upper-class, you should certainly not use your funds so as to make your luggage and yourself a nuisance to your fellow-passengers.

6. You should bear in mind that all long-distance passengers are entitled to some facility for sleeping; you can have, therefore, no more than your share of sleep.

7. If you are a smoker, you should consider that, being in a train, you can smoke only with others’ permission and so as not to inconvenience them.

8. If, when you want to spit, you do so where the passengers rest their feet, the place will become extremely dirty and there is a risk of one contracting some disease; those other passengers, moreover, who are particular about rules of cleanliness will find your dirty habit intolerably painful.

9. If you use the railway lavatories with due care, everyone will be the happier for that. In using them carelessly, you take no thought of the passengers who may follow you.
10. Instead of making distinctions when you travel, such as that you are a brahmin or a Vaisya or a Sudra and someone else belongs to another class or that you are a Hindu and another a Muslim, or that you are from Bombay Presidency and another from Madras Presidency, and creating ill-will in consequence, if you think of all as children of India who have for the once assembled under one roof, and cherish a brotherly feeling for all, you will be happy this very moment and bring glory to India.

[From Gujarati]

Mahatma Gandhini Vicharsrishti

179. SPEECH ON ‘THE SECRET OF SATYAGRAHA IN SOUTH AFRICA’

July 27, 1916

In brief, the significance of satyagraha consists in the quest for a principle of life. We did not say to anyone in so many words that our fight was in pursuance of this quest. If we had said so, the people there would only have laughed at us. We only made known the secondary aim of our movement, which was that the Government there, thinking us lowly and mean, was making laws to oust us from the country, and that it was right for us to defy these laws and show that we were brave. Suppose the Government passes a law saying that Coloured persons shall wear yellow caps; in fact, a law of this kind was made in Rome for the Jews. If the Government intended to treat us in a similar fashion and made a Law that appeared to humiliate us, it was for us to make it clear to the Government that we would not obey such a law. If a child says to his father: ‘Please put on your turban the wrong side up for me’, the father understands that the child wants to have a laugh at his expense and at once obeys the command. But when someone else, with uncharitable motives, says the same thing, he clearly answers, ‘Look, brother, so long as my head is on my shoulders, you cannot humiliate me in this manner. You conquer my head first and then make me wear my turban in any fashion you please.’ The Government there in a similar way, thinking the Indians lowly, wanted to treat them as slaves and as far as possible to prevent their coming into the country. And with this end in view, it began inventing ever new laws such as putting names of Indians in a separate register, making them give finger-prints in the manner of thieves and bandits, forcing them to live in particular areas, forbidding their movement beyond a specified boundary, making rules for them to walk on particular foot-paths and board specified carriages in trains, treating their wives as concubines if they could not produce marriage certificates, levying from them an annual tax of forty-five rupees per capita, etc., etc. Often a disease manifests itself in the body in various forms. The disease in this case, as has been explained, was the evil purpose of the Government of South Africa, and all the rules and regulations mentioned above were the various forms that it took. We, therefore, had to prepare ourselves to fight against these.

---

1 In reply to a question during a post-prayer meeting at Satyagraha Ashram near Kochrab, Ahmedabad

There are two ways of countering injustice. One way is to smash the head of the man who perpetrates injustice and to get your own head smashed in the process. All strong people in the world adopt this course. Everywhere wars are fought and millions of people are killed. The consequence is not the progress of a nation but its decline. Soldiers returning from the front have become so bereft of reason that they indulge in various anti-social activities. One does not have to go far for examples. In the Boer War, when the British won a victory at Mafeking, the whole of England, and London in particular, went so mad with joy that for days on end everyone did nothing but dance night and day! They freely indulged in wickednesses and rowdyism and did not leave a single bar with a drop of liquor in it. The Times, commenting, said that no words could describe the way those few days were spent, that all that could be said was that “the English nation went amafficking [a-Mafeking]”. Pride makes a victorious nation bad-tempered. It falls into luxurious ways of living. Then for a time, it may be conceded, peace prevails. But after a short while, it comes more and more to be realized that the seeds of war have not been destroyed but have become a thousand times more nourished and mighty. No country has ever become, or will ever become, happy through victory in war. A nation does not rise that way, it only falls further. In fact, what comes to it is defeat, not victory. And if, perchance, either our act or our purpose was ill-conceived, it brings disaster to both belligerents.

1 The London crowds behaved extravagantly on the relief of Mafeking (May 17, 1900).
But through the other method of combating injustice, we alone suffer the consequences of our mistakes, and the other side is wholly spared. This other method is satyagraha. One who resorts to it does not have to break another’s head; he may merely have his own head broken. He has to be prepared to die himself suffering all the pain. In opposing the atrocious laws of the Government of South Africa, it was this method that we adopted. We made it clear to the said Government that we would never bow to its outrageous laws. No clapping is possible without two hands to do it, and no quarrel without two persons to make it. Similarly, no State is possible without two entities [the rulers and the ruled]. You are our sovereign, our Government, only so long as we consider ourselves your subjects. When we are not subjects, you are not the sovereign either. So long as it is your endeavour to control us with justice and love, we will let you to do so. But if you wish to strike at us from behind, we cannot permit it. Whatever you do in other matters, you will have to ask our opinion about the laws that concern us. If you make laws to keep us suppressed in a wrongful manner and without taking us into confidence, these laws will merely adorn the statute-books. We will never obey them. Award us for it what punishment you like, we will put up with it. Send us to prison and we will live there as in a paradise. Ask us to mount the scaffold and we will do so laughing. Shower what sufferings you like upon us, we will calmly endure all and not hurt a hair of your body. We will gladly die and will not so much as touch you. But so long as there is yet life in these our bones, we will never comply with your arbitrary laws.

It all began on a Sunday evening in Johannesburg when I sat on a hillock with another gentleman called Hemchandra. The memory of that day is so vivid that it might have been yesterday. At my side lay a Government Gazette. It contained the several clauses of the law concerning Indians. As I read it, I shook with rage. What did the Government take us for? Then and there I produced a translation of that portion of the Gazette which contained the said laws and wrote under it: “I will never let these laws govern me.” This was at once sent for publication to Indian Opinion at Phoenix. I did not dream at the time that even a single Indian would be capable of the unprecedented heroism the Indians revealed or that the satyagraha movement would gain the momentum it did.

Immediately, I made my view known to fellow-Indians and many of them declared their readiness for satyagraha. In the first conflict, people took part under the impression that our aim would be gained after only a few days of suffering. In the second conflict, there were only a very few people to begin with but later many more came along. Afterwards when, on the visit of Mr. Gokhale, the Government of South Africa pledged itself to a settlement, the fight ceased. Later, the Government treacherously refused to honour its pledge; on which a third satyagraha battle became necessary. Gokhale at that time asked me how many people I thought would take part in the satyagraha. I wrote saying they would be between 30 and 60. But I could not find even that number. Only 16 of us took up the challenge. We were firmly decided that so long as the Government did not repeal its atrocious laws or make some settlement, we would accept every penalty but would not submit. We had never hoped that we should find many fellow-fighters. But the readiness of one person without self-interest to offer himself for the cause of truth and country always has its effect. Soon there were twenty thousand people in the movement. There was no room for them in the prisons, and the blood of India boiled. Many people say that if Lord Hardinge had not intervened, a compromise would have been impossible. But these people forget to ask themselves why it was that Lord Hardinge intervened. The sufferings of the Canadian Indians were far greater than those of the South African Indians. Why did he not use his good offices there? Where the spiritual might of thousands of men and women has been mustered, where innumerable men and women are eager to lay down their lives, what indeed is impossible? There was no other course open for Lord Hardinge than to offer mediation and he only showed his wisdom in adopting it. What transpired later is well known to you: the Government of South Africa was compelled to come to terms with us. All of which goes to show that we can gain everything without hurting anybody and through soul-force or satyagraha alone. He who fights with arms has to depend on arms and on support from others. He has to turn from the straight path and seek tortuous tracks. The course that a satyagrahi adopts in his fight is straight and he need look to no one for help. He can, if necessary, fight by himself alone. In that case, it is true, the outcome will be somewhat delayed. If I had not found as many comrades in the South African fight as I did, all that would have happened is that you would not have seen me here in your midst today. Perhaps all my life would have had to be spent in the struggle there. But what of that? The gain that has been secured would only have been a little late in coming. For the battle of satyagraha one only needs to prepare oneself. We have to have strict self-control. If it is necessary for this preparation to live in forests and caves, we should do so.

The time that may be taken up in this preparation should not be considered wasted. Christ, before he went out to serve the world, spent forty days in the wilderness, preparing himself for his mission. Buddha too spent many years in such preparation. Had Christ and Buddha not undergone this preparation, they would not have been what they were. Similarly, if we want to put this body in the service of truth and humanity, we must first raise our soul by developing virtues like celibacy, non-violence and truth. Then alone may we say that we are fit to render real service to the country.

In brief, the aim of the satyagraha struggle was to infuse manliness in cowards and to develop the really human virtues, and its field was the passive resistance against the Government of South Africa.

[From Hindi]

Mahatma Gandhi by Ramchandra Varma

180. LETTER TO H. S. L. POLAK

AHMEDABAD,
August 8, 1916

DEAR MR. POLAK,

This will introduce to you Mr. Kunverji V. Mehta whom I have known as a public worker chiefly devoting his time to the Patidar community. He is going to S. A. to collect [funds] for his Society¹ among the Patidars there. Please help him to enter the Union.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

H. S. L. POLAK, ESQ.
BOX 6522
JOHANNESBURG

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 2664.

¹ Known as Patidar Mandal

242

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
181. LETTER TO KUNVERJI MEHTA

AHMEDABAD,

[August 8, 1916]

DEAR SHRI KUNVERJI,

You may use the enclosed letter.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS GANDHI

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 2664

182. LETTER TO J. B. PETIT

[AHMEDABAD,]

August 19, 1916

DEAR MR. PETIT,

I have yours of the 11th instant. I have been a few days answering your letter as I have been able only today to spare a few minutes for going into a/cs. As a result I feel that the minimum required for the Passive Resisters here who are receiving support is likely to be Rs. 15,000.

In going through the accounts I observe that I have overdrawn on the Passive Resistance account more than Rs. 500. Will you therefore kindly favour me with the cheque for Rs. 1000 on a/c.

I have not received the balance from South Africa. As I have already informed you, disbursements have still to be made there. It will be some time before they would be able to say what sum they would require there in South Africa.

I am

Yours sincerely,

From the draft in Gandhiji’s hand: S.N. 6320

1 Vide the preceding item.
2 Vide the following item.
MY DEAR MILLIE,

I have your letter today. Even if Henry comes, you will be there to receive this letter. I had Henry’s long letter but I did not wish to interfere with his plans, so I said nothing. I quite share your feeling that if his stay there can only increase the bitterness of his soul, it is better that he should not be so near the fire. All the same it will be a calamity for South Africa, his permanent withdrawal. Both the races will lose a common friend. But at times, it is better to lose one’s friends. We sometimes know them only after the are gone.

Yes, you will feel very lonely. I fear very much that you will never have a really settled life. You will, therefore, have to find peace in preparedness to move on when required. I do not share Henry’s optimism about the London practice. Anyway I shall be perfectly useless in helping him in that direction. I know not a soul to whom I could appeal for such help. If however, he cannot find his way to settle in London, he will find little difficulty in doing so here. There is ample scope for his energy in India. But I will not anticipate the future. I do not fear the intimate issue. We have a common belief in the goodness of God. Though the path immediately in front of us may be full of darkness, as to the destination to be reached, there never would be any doubt.

Of course, I shall go to Bombay to meet Henry unless his coming synchronizes with the Provincial Conference meeting here.

Morgan-Bush affair is a sad thing. Thambi never wrote again to me. I am ready to send the boys if he wants them.

We are here a busy nine all engaged in hand-weaving. To me it appears as a great thing. But we shall see. Just now we expect that we shall be self-supporting in a year’s time through this work.

With love to you all,

Yours,

Bhai

---

1 From the references to the Provincial Political Conference which was held in Ahmedabad in October 1916, and Polak’s arrival; Gandhiji received him at Bombay on November 13, 1916; vide also the following item.
184. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M.K. GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,

September 10, 1916

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I was examining yesterday one of your boxes to see if time had done any damage. I did not see much damage done but it brought to mind the old days when we cooked our own meals. I compared those times to the present ones. It saddened me to think that you were not here to share the greater simplicity. Everything in the box that I examined betrayed greater luxury than is allowed at present. I cannot give you an adequate picture of it. The life has to be seen. There is much left undone before the life can become grandly simple. There is a shoddiness about it which I would like to get rid of. But that cannot be until we have built our own cottages.

News from South Africa show that Polak may leave South Africa in October for India. He does not want to settle here. He wants to see if he can get Indian connections for practice in London. There is not much hope of it.

I know you write regularly but the delivery has become irregular. There is again nothing from you this week. I hope mine you receive regularly.

There is again a storm in the Ashram. The Pariah family had temporarily gone. They returned yesterday. Mrs. Maganlal therefore suddenly decided to leave. I offered no opposition and she with her children has gone to Rajkot. Poor Maganlal! He is going through the most terrible times of his life. He feels most keenly this separation from those that [are] nearest him. He does not know what his duty is. He does not want to leave me and he can hardly bear the present blow. The Maganlal of olden days = robust, jovial, quickhanded and quick-witted is no more to be seen. He has aged. He is careworn. He is rarely healthy. He is absent-minded, without hope, without peace. I do not

[PS.]

Manilal does not yet knew his own mind.

From the original: Gandhi-Polak Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India know what to do for him and how to help him. One can only trust that time will heal all the wounds and that he will yet be his old self again.

Manilal is at Madras ever finding out ways of ease and luxury.
The life of discipline is gone for him. That of indulgence has begun.
He has seen friends. They have begun to fondle him. He has not been able to resist them. Heaven knows what he will now be when he returns from Madras.

Most of the inmates of the Ashram have gone out for a picnic.
They have taken roasted wheat and gram flour with them for food with radishes as a salad. The distance is only five miles. They return in the evening.

Yours ever,
OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

185. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M.K. GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,
September 14, 1916

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I was assisting the carpenter yesterday. Here carpenters have to practically make their own tools. They make their own handles. They turn one tool into some other. The carpenter here wanted a handle to his screwdriver. I had to assist him at that. He made it out of a piece of ebony. I thought he had turned out a piece of art in about two hours.
You will probably laugh at it. As I was sitting opposite the carpenter, I thought of you and asked myself what you would say to it all = the manner of working it, pressing two hours in the middle of his work, giving so much time to a mere handle! Such is life here. For me there is poetry in it. There is no mad rush in this sort of life.

Polak is expected here in a month’s time. There is no cable yet.
I may receive one any day.

Naransamy, Parthasarathy and Bala are all down. The first two have a violent attack of indigestion. Naransamy is out of danger now.
The other two have been very severely ill but they were never in the danger zone. All have yielded to home treatment.
I had two letters from you delivered at the same time.
With love,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

186. LETTER TO A. H. WEST:

AHMEDABAD,

September 14, 1916

MY DEAR WEST,

I have your letter and copy of letter to Mr. Rustomjee. You know that my heart is with you. I will say nothing about your letter except to say that it hurts me to think that you felt so hurt. For once you have taken Mr. Rustomjee seriously. I know that you must soon after writing that letter have regained your usual gaiety and philosophic calm. In any event this is merely to say that you have the power to vote to yourself as much as you need per month. Please use it without hesitation. Funds you have there. I shall answer for you and your use of them. I see nothing wrong in your using the funds. They were sent for the struggle. You and a few others now are in the struggle which must be maintained. I hope therefore that you will not argue with me again about the rightness of the act. Imam Saheb now sees the thing properly.

Mr. Petit has asked me more than once for the balance of the fund. What is the balance there now. Do please also send me the items of expenditure after the date up to which the accounts were rendered. We return only the balance which is left after providing for your losses there.

It is sad to think that Polak leaves South Africa. He is a big asset.
We are mad after handloom work. So more later. With love,

Yours,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 4423. Courtesy: A. H. West 187. LETTER TO MRS. A. H. WEST

AHMEDABAD,

September 14, 1916

DEAR MRS. WEST,

You were right in writing to me and reminding me of my promise. You have never been out of [my] mind. I have not been a regular letter writer as other duties have claimed me almost exclusively.

My heart goes out to you all. You have my full sympathy and support. I entirely agree with you that you must have enough to maintain yourselves. Albert has the power in his own hands, and I am asking him to use it freely.

You will learn more from my letter¹ to Albert. Do let me have a cheerful letter in reply. I would ask you not to mind what Mr. Rustomjee or anybody else says.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

¹ Vide the preceding item.

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 4424. Courtesy: A. H. West

188. LETTER TO DURLABHDAS SHYAMJI DHRUVE

AHMEDABAD,

Bhadarva Vad 6, Samvat 1972, Sunday [September 17, 1916]

VAIDYA KAVISHRI.

I do not believe that there is need for girls to be taught English. In my view, for women as well as men, Tulsi’s Ramayana seems the best. All Hindus must be conversant with the Gita. Complete education here must include elementary arithmetic and geography. Moral education too is to be included and that would cover the duties of a housewife. I have not found it necessary to give any special importance to music, drawing, etc. Keeping in view the conditions in the country I feel a general knowledge of agriculture, and weaving, and health education should be included in the education for every body. Weaving in my view is a great asset for every family. So long as we cannot create schools giving such education, all parents should themselves educate their children or engage private tutors. Married women should be educated by their husbands who should find time for it.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI

[From Gujarati]

_Gujarati, pp. 12-14_

189. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M. K. GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,

October 1 [1916]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

These sheets are old and pleasant reminders. I am using up all this stock.

I do not know that I shall welcome your exchange. That may mean complete cutting off. At the same time probably you are right in having accepted the exchange when you had the choice. I shall eagerly await your letters until the fate is decided. Yes, Polak is coming. He has not yet left South Africa for there is no cable. He has not been appreciated. Here we are still at the looms more concentrated than ever.

Parthasarathy and Bala I am presently sending to South Africa. They want to go. Mrs. Naidoo asks me to send them. Thambi says nothing.

With love,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

---

1 From the contents
MY DEAR FRIEND,

My Yours, sorrows are coming thick on me. Sickness I cannot get rid of in spite of the greatest care and precaution. Ramdas is down again. So is Maganlal and two others. Prabudas is more or less an invalid. Fatima and Amina are rotting with boils. Imam Saheb is just recovering. The three Naidoo boys only just recovered. This means nearly half the company needing attention. If I had only doctoring and nursing to attend to I should not mind but the kitchen and the looms and some public work ≈ this fills the cup. And yet I know I should not mind. I need Job’s patience. All this news should make you see that yours is by no means the worst state and yet if you feel miserable it is clearly a case of “mind is its own place, it can make heaven of hell and hell of heaven”.¹

Andrews has returned from Japan and may be coming to Ahmedabad shortly.

With love,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

¹ The quotation from John Milton’s Paradise Lost, I, 253, reads thus in full: “The mind is its own place and in itself can make a heaven of hell, a hell of heaven.”
191. ON AHIMSA: REPLY TO LALA LAJPAT RAI

October, 1916

Had Lala Lajpat Rai\(^1\) first ascertained what I had actually said on ahimsa, his remarks\(^2\) in The Modern Review for last July would not have seen the light of day. Lalaji rightly questioned whether I actually made the statements imputed to me. He says, that if I did not, I should have contradicted them. In the first place, I have not yet seen the papers which have reported the remarks in question or those wherein my remarks were criticised. Secondly, I must confess that I would not undertake to correct all the errors that creep into reports that appear in the public press about my speeches. Lalaji’s article has been much quoted in the Gujarati newspapers and magazines; and it is perhaps as well for me to explain my position. With due deference to Lalaji, I must join issue with him when he says that the elevation of the doctrine of ahimsa to the highest position contributed to the downfall of India. There seems to be no historical warrant for the belief that an exaggerated practice of ahimsa synchronised with our becoming bereft of many virtues. During the past fifteen hundred years, we have as a nation given ample proof of physical courage, but we have been torn by internal dissensions and have been dominated by love of self instead of love of country. We have, that is to say, been swayed by the spirit of irreligion rather than of religion.

I do not know how far the charge of unmanliness can be made good against the Jains. I hold no brief for them. By birth I am a Vaishnavite\(^3\), and was taught ahimsa in my childhood. I have derived much religious benefit from Jain religious works, as I have from scriptures of the other great faiths of the world. I owe much to the living company of the deceased philosopher Raja Chand Kavi\(^4\) who was a Jain by birth. Thus though my views on ahimsa are a result of my study of most of the faiths of the world, they are now no longer

\(^1\) (1865-1928), social reformer, writer and political leader; deported in 1907; founder of the Servants of People Society; President, Indian National Congress 1920

\(^2\) For the article “Ahimsa Paramo Dharmah—A Truth or a Fad”, vide “Lane’s Letter to Gandhiji”, 21-4-1911.

\(^3\) Follower of Vishnu (the Preserver)

\(^4\) Shrimad Rajchandra; vide “Speech at Rajchandra Birth Anniversary”, 21-11-1915.
dependent upon the authority of these works. They are a part of my life and if I suddenly discovered that the religious books read by me bore a different interpretation from the one I had learnt to give them, I should still hold to the new of ahimsa as I am about to set forth here.

Our shastras seem to teach that a man who really practises ahimsa in its fullness has the world at his feet, he so affects his surroundings that even the snakes and other venomous reptiles do him no harm. This is said to have been the experience of St. Francis of Assisi.

In its negative form, it means not injuring any living being, whether by body or mind. I may not therefore hurt the person of any wrong-doer, or bear any ill will to him and so cause him mental suffering. This statement does not cover suffering caused to the wrong-doer by natural acts of mine which do not proceed from ill will. It, therefore, does not prevent me from withdrawing from his presence a child whom he, we shall imagine, is about to strike. Indeed the proper practice of ahimsa required me to withdraw the intended victim from the wrong-doer, if I am in any way whatsoever the guardian of such a child. It was therefore most proper for the passive resisters of South Africa to have resisted the evil that the Union Government sought to do to them. They bore no ill will to it. They showed this by helping the Government whenever it needed their help. Their resistance consisted of disobedience of the orders of the Government, even to the extent of suffering death at their hands. Ahimsa requires deliberate self-suffering, not a deliberate injuring of the supposed wrong-doer.

In its positive form, ahimsa means the largest love, the greatest charity. If I am a follower of ahimsa, I must love my enemy. I must apply the same rule to the wrong-doer who is my enemy or a stranger to me, as I would to my wrong-doing father or son. This active ahimsa necessarily includes truth and fearlessness. A man cannot deceive the loved ones; he does not fear or frighten him or her. vHk;nu (Gift of life) is the greatest of all gifts. A man who gives it in reality disarms all hostility. He has paved the way for an honourable understanding. And none who is himself subject to fear can bestow that gift. He must therefore be himself fearless. A man cannot then practise ahimsa and be a coward at the same time. The practice of ahimsa calls forth the greatest courage. It is the most soldierly of a soldier’s virtues. General Gordon¹ has been represented in a famous statue as bearing only a stick. This takes us far on the road to ahimsa. But a soldier, who needs the protection of even a stick, is to that extent so much the less a soldier. He is the true soldier who knows how to die and stand his ground in the midst of a hail of bullets. Such a one was Ambarish who stood his ground without lifting a finger, though Durvasa did his worst? The Moors, who were being powdered by the French gunners, rushed into the guns’ mouth with ‘Allah’ on their lips, showed much the same type of courage. Only theirs was the courage of desperation. Ambarish’s was due to love. Yet the Moorish valour, readiness to die, conquered the gunners. They frantically waved their hats, ceased firing and greeted their erstwhile enemies as comrades. And so the South African passive resisters in their thousands were ready to die rather than sell their honour for a little personal ease. This was ahimsa in its active form. It never barters away honour. A helpless girl in the hands of a follower of ahimsa finds better and surer protection than in the hands of one who is prepared to defend her only to the point to which his weapons would carry him. The tyrant, in the first instance, will have to walk to his victim over the dead body of her defender, in the second, he has but to overpower the defender, for it is assumed that the canon of propriety in the second instance will be satisfied when the defender has fought to the extent of his physical valour. In the first instance, as the defender has matched his very soul against the mere body of the tyrant, the odds are that the soul in the latter will be awakened, and the girl will stand an infinitely greater chance of her honour being protected than in any other conceivable circumstance—barring, of course, that of her own personal courage.

If we are unmanly today, we are so, not because we do not know how to strike, but because we fear to die. He is no follower of Mahavira, the apostle of Jainism, or of Buddha or of the Vedas, who being afraid to die, takes flight before any danger, real or imaginary all the while wishing that some body else would remove the danger by destroying the person causing it. He is no follower of ahimsa (I agree with Lalaji) who does not care a straw if he kills a man by inches by deceiving him in trade, or who will protect by force of arms a few cows and make away with the butcher, or who in order to do a supposed good to his country does not mind killing off a few officials. All these are actuated by hatred, cowardice and fear. Here love of the cow or the country is a vague thing intended to satisfy one’s vanity or soothe a stinging conscience.

¹ Lord Gordon of Khartoum (1833-85), British soldier and administrator, a Governor-General of the Sudan; vide “Johannesburg Letter”, 29-2-1908.

Ahimsa, truly understood, is, in my humble opinion, apanacea for all evils mundane and extra-mundane. We can never overdo it. Just at present, we are not doing it at all. Ahimsa does not displace the practice of other virtues, but renders their practice imperatively necessary before it can be practised even in its rudiments. Lalaji need not fear the ahimsa of his father’s faith. Mahavira and Buddha were soldiers, and so was Tolstoy. Only they saw deeper and truer in their profession, and found the secret of a true, happy, honourable and godly life. Let us be joint sharers with these teachers and this land of ours will once more be the abode of gods

M. K. GANDHI

The Modern Review, October, 1916

192. THE PRESENT SYSTEM OF EDUCATION

The word ‘education’ is on everyone’s lips these days. The schools—whether Government or private—are packed with students. There is not enough accommodation in colleges. A number of students seeking admission to Gujarat College had to go back disappointed. Despite this infatuation for education, hardly anyone pauses to consider what education really is, whether the education we have so far received has done us any good, or good commensurate with the effort put in. We think as little about the meaning of education, as about its aims and objects! For most people the main aim seems to be to qualify for some kind of a job. Usually, people belonging to different trades or vocations, on receiving this education, give up their traditional modes of earning a livelihood and look instead for jobs and, when they succeed, think that they have risen a step higher. In our schools we find boys belonging to various vocational communities such as masons, blacksmiths, carpenters, tailors, cobblers, etc. But, on receiving education, instead of improving the standards of their traditional vocations, they give them up as something inherently inferior and consider it an honour to become clerks. The parents too share this false notion. Thus, disloyal both to caste and to the functions most natural to us, we sink deeper into slavery. During my tours, I found this condition prevailing everywhere in India and it has often made my heart bleed.

---

1 The translation is based on that in The Problem of Education, Navajivan Publishing House, Ahmedabad.

Education is not an end in itself but only a means and that alone can be called education which makes us men of character. No one can claim that the education being given in our schools produces this result. Rather, we shall come across many instances of young people having dissipated their character while at school. An impartial English writer has said that as long as there is no continuity between schools and homes in India, the pupils will not have the benefit of either. Our youths learn one thing from parents at home and from the general environment, and another at school. The pattern at school is often found incompatible with that in the home. The lessons in our readers are regarded as of little relevance to conduct. We cannot put the knowledge so acquired to any practical use in our daily life. The parents are indifferent to what is taught at school. The labour spent on studies is considered useless drudgery which has to be gone through that one might take the final examination, and once this is over we manage to forget as quickly as possible what we had studied. The charge levelled against us by some Englishmen that we are mere imitators is not entirely baseless. One of them, in his arrogance, has likened us to blotting-paper in relation to civilization. He believes that as blotting-paper absorbs the superfluous ink, even so we take in only the superfluities, that is the evils of Western civilization. That, indeed, we must admit, is our condition to some extent. Thinking about the causes of this condition, I have come to the conclusion that the chief fault lies in education being imparted to us through the medium of English. It takes about twelve years to get the matriculation certificate. We acquire precious little of knowledge over this long period. Our main effort is not directed towards integrating any such knowledge with our work and putting it to practical use, but towards gaining, somehow, command of the English language. It has been stated by experts that, if what has to be taught to the students up to the matriculation class was imparted to them through their own mother tongue, there would be a saving of at least five years. At this rate, on ten thousand matriculates, the people are put to a loss of fifty thousand years! This is a very grave situation. Not only that, we also impoverish our own languages in this way. When I hear people say—as they often do— that “Gujarati is a poor language”, it makes me feel indignant. If Gujarati, a beloved daughter of Sanskrit, is poor, the fault is not that of the language, but of ourselves who are its guardians. We have neglected it and despised it. How can it then acquire the lustre and strength which it ought to have? A gulf has been created between us and our families. To our parents, to others in our families, to our women, and to our domestics—with whom we live for the greater part of our time—our school education is as some hidden wealth. Its use is denied to them. It should be easy enough for us to see that where conditions are so unnatural, the people can never hope to rise. If we were not mere pieces of blotting-paper, after fifty years of this education we should have witnessed a new spirit in our masses. But we have no bond of understanding with them. They look upon us as modernized and keep away from us and we look upon them as an uncivilized lot and despise them.

Turning to higher education being imparted in colleges, we find the same state of affairs. We waste a good deal of our time there, seeking to put our knowledge on a surer foundation. We begin there to grow indifferent to our own language. Many of us even develop a feeling of contempt towards the mother tongue. We communicate with one another in English, full of errors in pronunciation and grammar. We have not yet coined in our own languages correct technical terms for various sciences, and we do not fully understand the English terms. By the time we have done with our college education, our intelligence loses all vigour and our bodies their strength. The medicine bottle becomes our life-long companion. And yet the people think, and we too, that we are their ornament, their guardians and the makers of their future.

If the young men of Gujarat who pass out of various colleges seriously mean to become as guardians to the people, I should regard them as brave. Although I have drawn a very gloomy picture of our system of education, yet in this gloom lie seeds that may grow into hope. I do not mean to suggest in this article that no Indian should know English. Let us; do what they have done in Russia and what they are doing in South Africa and Japan. In Japan, a few selected people acquire a high knowledge of English, translate whatever is worth importing from European civilization into their own language and so make it accessible to all, thus saving the people from the useless labour of having to learn English themselves. Quite a large number among us are familiar with English. They may further increase their knowledge of it. And those whose health allows it and whose mental vigour is still intact may undertake to translate into Gujarati such ideas from English and other foreign languages as are likely to do good to our masses. If we strive long enough, we can change the present trend of education and impart the knowledge of new sciences and new ideas only through the medium of Gujarati. It is not impossible to impart the knowledge of the sciences of medicine, navigation and electricity through Gujarati. It is absurd to think that one can have a knowledge of anatomy or perform an operation of bone surgery only after one has acquired a knowledge of English.

Not less than eighty-five per cent of India’s population are engaged in agriculture. Ten per cent are engaged in various other crafts and a majority of them are weavers. The remaining five per cent belong to the various professions. If these latter really desire to serve the people, they must acquire some knowledge at least about the occupations of the ninety-five per cent of the people. And it should be the duty of the ninety-five per cent to acquire a proper knowledge of their traditional occupations. If this view be correct, our schools must provide for the teaching of these two occupations—agriculture and weaving—to the pupils from childhood onwards. In order to create the right conditions for imparting a good knowledge of agriculture and weaving, all our schools should be located, not in the densely populated parts of towns or cities, but in places where big farms may be developed and where classes may be conducted in the open air. In such schools, sports for the boys will consist in ploughing the fields. The idea that, if our boys and youths do not have football, cricket and such other games, their life should become too drab is completely erroneous. The sons of our peasants never get a chance to play cricket, but there is no dearth of joy or innocent zest in their life. Thus, it is not difficult to change the present trends in education. Public opinion must be in favour of this change. The Government then will have no option but to introduce changes. ‘Those who like the above scheme should come forward to undertake experiments on these lines while public opinion is in the making. When the people see the happy results of these experiments, they will of their own accord want to take them up. I think such experiments will not entail much expenditure. I have not, however, written this article with a commercial mentality. My chief object was to ask readers to consider the meaning of real education and I shall hold my effort to have been duly rewarded if this article is of any help to them.

[From Gujarati]

Samalochak, October, 1916; also The Problem of Education
193. \textit{THE HINDU CASTE SYSTEM}^{1}

The Hindu social structure has endured, I believe, on the foundation of the caste system. Sir William Hunter says in his \textit{History of India} that, thanks to the continuing existence of the institution of caste, there has been no need for any law for the poor (pauper law) in India. This seems to me a sound view. The caste system contains within it the seed of swaraj. The different castes are so many divisions of an army. The general does not know the soldiers individually but gets them to work through the respective captains. In like manner, we can carry out social reform with ease through the agency of the caste system and order through it our religious, practical and moral affairs as we choose.

The caste system is a perfectly natural institution. In our country, it has been invested with a religious meaning; elsewhere, its utility was not fully realized and so it remained a mere form, with the result that the countries concerned did not derive much benefit from it. These being my views, I am opposed to the movements which are being carried on for the destruction of the system.

However, any defects in the caste system which we may find must certainly be removed and for that purpose we must first study its real nature. As I pointed out earlier, we have given a religious meaning to the system. It is merely an agency for ensuring self-control. The caste defines the limits within which one may enjoy life; that is to say, we are not free to seek any happiness outside the caste. We do not associate with members of other communities for eating or enter into marriage relationships with them. With an arrangement of this kind, there is a good chance that loose conduct will be kept down. The idea that coming together for purposes of eating promotes friendship is contradicted by experience. If it did, the great war being waged today in Europe would never have started. The bitterest quarrels are among relatives. We have needlessly exaggerated the importance of eating. The process of eating is as unclean as evacuation, the only difference being that, while evacuation ends in a sense of relief, eating, if one’s tongue is not held in control, brings discomfort. Just as we attend to evacuation, etc., in private, we should likewise eat and perform other actions common to all animals always in private. The purpose of eating is to sustain the body. If this statement is correct, obviously, the less ostentation we make about it, the better.

---

\footnote{The article was originally published in \textit{Bharat Sevak}, a Marathi monthly, in its issue of October, 1916.}

The same thing is true of marriage. Prohibition of marriage with anyone not belonging to one’s community promotes self-control, and self-control is conducive to happiness in all circumstances. The larger the area over which the net is cast, the greater the risk. That is the reason why I see nothing wrong in the practice of choosing the husband or the wife from among persons of equal birth. Even in countries where class differentiation does not rest on religion, they guard against hybrid unions. This is the meaning of the phrase ‘blue blood’ in England. Lord Salisbury used to boast that he belonged to the same stock as Elizabeth. It was a fact which seemed to him and the British people worth being proud of.

In this way, the restrictions in regard to eating and marriage are, as a general rule, wholesome. There is, of course, and there will always be, room for exceptions. This has been accepted by Hindu society, whether it knows the fact or not. Rightly considered, however, there are no exceptions. If I eat in the company of a Bhangi, there being, from my point of view, greater self-control in doing so, the community should have nothing to do in the matter. Or, if I fail to get a suitable bride from my own community and I am likely, if I remain unmarried, to contract vicious habits, it will, in these circumstances, be an act of self-control on my part to marry a girl of my choice from any community and hence my action will not be a violation of the fundamental principle of the caste system. It would be for me to demonstrate that my purpose in taking such a step in disregard of the general rule was discipline of the flesh, and this would appear from my subsequent conduct. Meanwhile? however, I should not resent being denied the usual privileges that go with membership of a community but ought to continue doing my duty by it.

The caste system has other laws besides those relating to eating and marriage. It has, ready at hand, the means for providing primary education. Every community can make its own arrangements for [such] education. It has machinery for election to the Swaraj Sabha

1 1830-1903, Prime Minister of England, 1885-6, 1886-92, and 1895-1902
2 Sweeper
Every community with some standing may elect its own representatives. It has ready provision for arbitration and tribunals to solve disputes. Each community should itself resolve disputes among its own members. If it becomes necessary to raise an army for war, we have already as many battalions as we have communities. The caste system has struck such deep roots in India that I think it will be far more advisable to try to improve it, rather than uproot it. Some may argue that, if these views about the caste system are right, one will have to admit that the more numerous the communities, the better it would be, and that, if that came about, every ten persons would form a community. There is no substance in this argument. The rise and disappearance of communities does not depend upon the will of particular individuals or groups. In Hindu society, communities have been formed, have disappeared and have gone through improvements according to the needs of the times and the process is taking place even today, visibly or invisibly. The Hindu caste system is not merely an inert, lifeless institution but a living one and has been functioning according to its own law. Unfortunately, today we find it full of evils like ostentation and hypocrisy, pleasure seeking and quarrels. But this only proves that people lack character; we cannot conclude from it that the system itself is bad.

[From Gujarati]

Mahatma Gandhini Vicharsrishti

194. LETTER TO PARAMANAND K. KAPADIA

Ahmedabad,

Aso Sud 12 [October 8, 1916]

Dear Paramanand,

I have received your letter. You and your friends may come with pleasure and stay in the Ashram. It would be more convenient if you could bring your bedding, plate and bowl and a jug. Bhai Virchand has also written to me about you.

Mohandas Gandhi

Paramanand Kunverji Kapadia

Manhar Building

Princess Street

Bombay

From the Gujarati original G.N. 11583

1From the postmark
I am grateful to the Reception Committee for giving me this privilege of proposing the election of the President today. When I was in Delhi some days ago, I happened to read a Persian couplet in the beautiful Divan-e-Am and Divan-e-Khas there. The couplet means; “If there is a paradise anywhere on this earth, it is here, it is here, it is here.” The thoughts which the couplet aroused in me then revive in my mind as I move this proposal. The words proceeded from the pride of kingly power and wealth. There can be no such paradise on this earth, because in the course of time even that place is bound to be destroyed. If, however, we turn to good use this occasion of our meeting, we may some time get into the paradise that is invisible. It is a matter of no little pride for us that moderate and extremist leaders have met together today. India is a country situated in the temperate zone. We desire that this conference should give birth to a temperate party which would secure for us all that we demand. Ahmedabad is a commercial city and it is but natural that its business acumen should be manifest in every undertaking. It has chosen as President a person who holds a respected position in the eyes of both parties. It decided accordingly that it would be in the fitness of things to elect as President a learned Muslim gentleman. This is not for the first time that Ahmedabad has shown such wisdom. It has done so on many previous occasions. Our President, Mr. Jinnah, is an eminent lawyer; he is not only a member of the Legislature but also the President of the biggest Islamic Association in India. He has placed us under a great obligation by accepting the presidency of this small conference. All of you must have rejoiced at it as much as I have done. We should feel, in regard to all, that they belong to us. The feeling which we outwardly show, that moderates or extremists, Surtis or Kathiawaris or Ahmedabadis, Hindus or Muslims, all are our brethren, should be there in our hearts, Muslims and others will then be so enslaved by our love that there will be no need to establish societies for the protection of animals. Instead, our Muslim brethren

---

1 Held on October 21, 22 and 23. M. A. Jinnah presided.
2 At the Red Fort, Delhi will of their own accord put a stop to animal slaughter in consideration of the religious susceptibilities of their Hindu brethren. If we develop such feeling, this occasion, indeed the whole movement, will yield the expected result as a matter of course. I know the President’s job is like walking on the edge of a sword; let him utilize to the full the advantages he enjoys in virtue of the important position which he occupies. I pray to God to grant him the necessary strength, wisdom and ability to guide the work of this conference.

[From Gujarati]

Gujarati, 29-10-1916

196. SPEECH ON DEFENCE OF INDIA ACT

October 22, 1916

At the Bombay Provincial Conference held in Ahmedabad, Gandhiji moved, on October 22, 1916, the following resolution:

That this Conference views with deep concern and alarm the working of the Defence of India Act as exemplified in the recent cases of Mrs. Besant and others and strongly urges upon Government the immediate necessity of providing in connection with the Defence of India Act the same safeguards as exist in England in relation to the Defence of the Realm Act. It respectfully requests that Government may also be pleased to cancel at an early date the order prohibiting Mrs. Annie Besant from entering the limits of this Presidency.

Speaking in Gujarati, Mr. Gandhi said he thought the only thing Mrs. Besant seemed to have done was that she had been actively conducting the Home Rule agitation in India, and if that was the reason why the Bombay Government had prohibited her, then their late Viceroy Lord Hardinge was equally liable to be prohibited from entering the Presidency because it was His Lordship who had first raised this question. Apart from that, there were three other grounds on which they should stand by Mrs. Besant, viz., gallantry, pity, and self-interest. Government had, as it were, laid its hands on a lady and, as a nation noted for chivalry, they should do all they could do to remove the indignity. Then there was the question of pity. They felt pity for Government because, with all its powers to bring the offending person to justice under the existing laws, it had found it necessary to resort to this measure against a lady. Lastly, the question of self-interest lay in the fact that they wanted Mrs. Besant in their Presidency because nobody could carry on the agitation better than she. The fact that no reason was given for the Government order was significant. He warmly commended the resolution for acceptance.

The Bombay Chronicle, 24-10-1916

197. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,

Aso Vad 12 [October 23, 1916]

CHI. MAGANLAL,

I received your two letters together. You will receive this on a new year’s day. May the new year help you to know your inner self, help you become an outstanding observer of our vows and give you the strength to realize all these. Please convey my similar wish to Santok and tell her that whatever harsh words I had said were said out of love. . .

We will hold here [special prayer] on Saturday, Sunday and Monday. It has been decided that everyone will get up at 4 a.m. daily and from 5 to 6.30 in the morning, will recite the Bhagavad Gita. We have ordered . . . special dry fruit for the occasion. I do not want to do anything more than this.

The school is doing very well. Krishna will return today—there is a letter to that effect from him. Jamnalal has not arrived so far.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Teach Tamil music to Fakiri. We have to see that she is very particular about her Tamil.

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32924

---

1 The year ‘1916’ is as suggested in the source. Aso Vad 12 in that year corresponded to October 23.

2 A few words are illegible here.

3 Presumably to celebrate the Gujarati New Year to which Gandhiji refers in the 2nd sentence above; the Gujarati New Year in 1916, began on 27th October, a Friday.

4 A few words here are illegible in the source.
198. RESOLUTION ON INDENTURE SYSTEM, AHMEDABAD

October 23, 1916

On 23rd October, 1916, the third and concluding day of the Bombay Provincial Conference at Ahmedabad, Gandhiji moved the following resolution:

That this Conference strongly urges the necessity of abolition of the indenture system as early as possible, the system being a form of slavery which socially and politically debases labourers and is seriously detrimental to the economic and moral interests of the country.

Mr. Gandhi, in moving the resolution, spoke in Gujarati explaining the various difficulties existing at present.

The Bombay Chronicle, 24-10-1916

199. SPEECH ON VIRAMGAM CUSTOMS Cordon

October 23, 1916

Gandhiji moved the following resolution:

This Conference brings to the special notice of Government the inconvenience, hardship and annoyance caused to persons coming from Kathiawar into British territory by levy of customs duties and especially by the stringency of the rules and the manner of their enforcement for such levy at the Viramgam Railway station and at other stations which border on Gujarat and earnestly prays for the removal of the levy at an early date.

Moving the resolution, Gandhiji said:

The people of Kathiawar are under the authority of two governments. They are subjects of Indian Princes and the latter are subject to the authority of the British Government. The idea behind the levy was to prevent the smuggling of goods from foreign countries. Since arrangements for that purpose exist at the ports, why should the people have to bear this tax? A petition was made by Shri Gokuldas against the customs levy at Ranpur This levy is a source of

1 At the Bombay Provincial Conference
2 Reproduced from Bombay Secret Abstracts, 1916, p. 907 great hardship to women. We have endured this kind of thing for twelve years.

[From Gujarati]

Kathiawar Times, 1-11-1916

200. LETTER TO AJIT PRASAD

AHMEDABAD,
November 1, 1916

DEAR MR. AJIT PRASAD,

I well remember having met you at Bombay.

I took action about Pandit Arjan Lal in the early part of the year but I understood then that the Government had positive proof in their possession of a damaging nature. Since then I have become lukewarm. I would like to discuss the matter further with you before taking further steps. I know the argument that we ask not for an unconditional discharge but for a proper trial. The most effective appeal can however be based only on real innocence of the party concerned. If I come to Lucknow during the Congress meet, we shall discuss the whole matter.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 100
201. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M.K. GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,
November 6 [1916]¹

MY DEAR FRIEND,

Today is the Hindu year’s last day. We are therefore all busy as you may imagine. I can only therefore send you our greetings and wish that we may soon join.

With love from all,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

202. SPEECH ON RAJCHANDRA JAYANTI, WADHWAN²

November 9, 1916

Shrimad [Rajchandra] led his life in a spirit of the highest detachment. There are two classes of people in this meeting. In one class are those who look upon Shrimad Rajchandra with a feeling of devotion; and in the other those who are here only as spectators at a show. Whether or not this jayanti will be successfully celebrated depends essentially on the former. Those who revere Shrimad should show this reverence in their own dealings. If the followers of Shrimad show themselves virtuous in their behaviour, that would have a great effect on society. Religion rests on conduct. If you can improve your manner of living, you will be able to improve society. Shrimad has had a profound influence on me. I would, therefore, say to his followers that Shrimad’s name is in their hands. They should emulate, in the right spirit, the ideals and the conduct of Shrimad. Otherwise, an element of hypocrisy will creep into such jayanti celebrations. Strive as much as you can to avoid being hypocritical. If there is a true feeling of devotion in them, those who are here as mere spectators will go back infected by it. The success of a jayanti celebration depends ¹ The letter has been placed here serial-wise among those of 1916.

² In Saurashtra
essentially on the followers. And it is my humble request that they should prove themselves men of the purest character.

[From Gujarati]

Kathiawar Times, 12-11-1916

203. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M.K. GANDHI

AHMEDABAD, November 12 [1916]

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I am today in an out-of-the-way place. I had your doleful letter. You have lost nothing and therefore you have gained nothing. That there has been loss in your affairs is no virtue of yours. You would have prevented the loss if you could have. I appreciate your anxiety to be and feel totally independent before you can live in comfort with me.

All I say is when the agony of the war is over, you will first hasten here and then arrange your programme. That is what I shall hope and pray for. Polak is due any day now. When he arrives I shall confer with him and write to you fully. Meanwhile let this be your comfort. The loss that millions have sustained is nothing compared to yours. And a man’s worth is tried not in his prosperity but adversity. Do therefore cheer up.

With deep love,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

---

1 From the contents. Polak arrived in Bombay on November 16, 1916, and Gandhiji who went there to receive him had stopped by at Umreth on November 12.

2 The reference obviously is to the ravages of World War I. The sentence, it would appear, should read: “The loss you have sustained is nothing compared to that of the millions”; vide also “Letter to Dr. Pranjivan Mehta”, 11-3-1912
204. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M. K. GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,

November 14 [1916]¹

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I cannot get rid of illness from the Ashram. I am making experiments but they do not answer completely. The slightest indulgence tells upon the boys. Naicker, Purshottam (a new boy), Parthasarathy and Ramdas are down and so is Anna’s wife. Anna is the Tamil friend who has joined the Ashram. They are most of them down with fever. This is the fever season, but we ought to be immune. This illness taxes me much. The introduction of the Pariah family had already put an undue strain on me and now comes the sickness. However we make merry and go on. Only I should like you to be with me on such occasions. But what are we when we consider the thousands who are just now separated! We must make the best of it and exercise the patience of a Job.

The new bookcase is ready and is a complete success. It looks strong and decent. It is easily portable. Sivpujan and Coopoo have been at it. Evidently you too will be learning cabinet-making there in a way you would not have done elsewhere. Your experiences will all be useful in later life.

With love,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

¹ From the contents

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

268 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
MY DEAR FRIEND,

So, this will reach you in your new surroundings. You are having the richest experiences of your life. Those of us who are unwilling spectators of this mighty tragedy may, if we will, learn the true lesson of life. You say you have lost during these two years. I am sure you will not have when we come to the end of it all. You have never wanted to live an aimless and selfish life. Those who want to find happiness in realizing essential oneness of all life, as I know you do, cannot fail to gain a great deal from the experiences such as you are having. Anyway all you learnt is now being tested in a manner least expected by you or me. But do not worry over your South African affairs. It will be time to do so when the war is over. Your next few letters will now be my special care. Remember ‘Lead Kindly Light’. Lay stress upon ‘one step enough for me’. It is not given to us to peep into the future. If we but take care of the present, the future will take care of itself.

All but Polak, a member, and I have gone a picknicking today. It is a Sunday and it is at the present moment about 4 p.m. This is our winter season and the weather is superb. This is just the time of the year when one could walk out for the whole day.

With love from us all,

Yours always,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

\(^{1}\text{Vide also “Speech at Farewell Meeting”, 9-3-1912.}\)
MY DEAR WEST,

This is not the draft letter that Polak refers to in his letter to you herewith. But what I am now saying is in substance what is in the draft letter.

We have all thought over your proposal and feel that we can no longer rely upon support from the P. R. fund. The Phoenix trustees are not all agreed upon the support being so received. The Committee here will at the most just tolerate the withdrawal of fund[s] for sustaining Indian Opinion. And the public there will also look upon such support with strong disfavour. In the circumstances, we can only fall back upon local support or failing that reduce the paper to any extent we choose. In this matter you should have absolute control. By you, I mean you, Devi\(^1\) and Sam\(^2\) and anyone who may be sent from here.

I observe that Pragji must now leave. He wants to. Bhaga too goes. Chhaganlal is ready to come over and work under you loyally. Or if you will not shoulder the responsibility, he will work the paper with your loyal co-operation. I do hope you will agree to Chhaganlal’s return. If you don’t, Chhaganlal will come with his family to work on the same terms as above. And if you do not favour Maganlal’s return, Manilal and Ramdas can be sent. They of course can only work under your directions. Manilal should find no difficulty in gradually editing the Gujarati part. For the time being, he will simply translate what you want him to.

If you favour Chhaganlal’s return, cable simply ‘Chhaganlal’ and I shall know. If you want Maganlal, cable simply ‘Maganlal’. And if you want Manilal and Ramdas, cable simply ‘Manilal’. If you want only Manilal, you may cable ‘Manilal without Ramdas’.

I shall write later about the accounts. We do not need to publish

\(^1\) The addressee’s sister, Ada West; Devi was the Indian name given to her by Gandhiji.

\(^2\) “Sam” was Govindaswami, a machine foreman in the International Printing Press at Phoenix and a shikari.
them now. I have only to inform Mr. Petit how we propose to deal with the balance. Transvaal Indian Women’s Association funds are not with me. They are in the balance with you. Even if you disagree, you should bank the amount due separately in consultation with Miss Schlesin and hand the receipt to her. They want it banked to bear interest. And they are right.

Polak has gone to Madras. I am preparing for the Congress. I want to write on many matters, not about the press or Phoenix. But this must wait till after my return from Lucknow.

I wrote1 to Pragji when he told me that you all did not want Chhaganlal, that I would not send him. So said Polak too. But after consultation with Chhaganlal and examining the situation here, I came to the conclusion that I must at least let you know it and let you decide one way or the other.

With love to you all,

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 4425. Courtesy: A. H. West

207. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M.K. GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,

December 17, 1916

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I have two letters from you together. I hope that by the time this reaches you, uncertainty about your fate will have vanished and that you would feel settled so far as it is possible to feel like that in these times. You have added up your gains and losses. It is a difficult task. We often deceive ourselves and what may appear to be losses may be gains in reality and vice versa. The measure of progress is the measure of resistance to temptations. The world may judge us by a single fall. But we might in spite thereof have risen if we have resisted numerous temptations previous to the fall and after the fall we are conscious of it and sincerely desirous of retracing the steps. To count losses and gains therefore is not an easy matter by any means.

1 This letter is not available.

Dr. Mehta has been here for a few days. Polak is returning tomorrow from Madras. Manilal and Ramdas will be soon with me, as they will be going to South Africa to help West. I think I have already informed you of this move. Of the four boys I shall therefore have only Devdas.

With best love,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

208. SPEECH AT MUIR COLLEGE ECONOMIC SOCIETY, ALLAHABAD

December 22, 1916

Mr. M. K. Gandhi delivered an instructive lecture on ‘Does economic progress clash with real progress?’ at a meeting of the Muir Central College Economic Society held on Friday evening in the physical science theatre. The Hon. Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya presided. There was a good gathering of ladies and gentlemen, European and Indian, besides a large number of students. Among those present were Dr. E. G. Hill, the Hon. Dr. Sundar Lal, the Hon. Mr. A. W. Pim, the Hon. Mr. H. C. Ferard, the Hon. Dr. Tej Bahadur Sapru, the Hon. Mr. E. H. Ashworth, Mr. H. S. L. Polak, Prof. Gidwani, Prof. Stanley Jevons, Prof. Higginbottom, the Hon. Mr. C. Y. Chintamani, Mr. B. H. Bourdillon, Mr. Mackenzie, Prof. Moody, Prof. Dunn, Prof. Redford, Pandit Baldeo Ram Dave, Mr. Lalit Mohan Banerji, Pandit Rama Kant

1 Amaranatha Jha’s Diary has the following entries:

December 22, 1916

From 3 to 5 stayed at Malaviyaji’s house, talking to Mr. Gandhi and Mr. Polak. Then to the college physics theatre where Mr. Gandhi read his paper before the Economic Society. I took his paper from him which was written on sheets on which was printed his South African address, “Tolstoy Farm, Johannesburg”. He asked me to request Mr. Chintamani [Editor, The Leader] to send to him the proofs for correction.

December 23, 1916

From 11 to 4 stayed at Malaviyaji’s house, talking to Mr. Gandhi and Mr. Polak, Ramdas Gandhi, Mr. Medh (who has been several times to jail for passive resistance). Mr. Chintamani sent the proofs of Mr. Gandhi’s lecture for correction. I asked for and obtained from Mr. Gandhi the original manuscript. He said, “This lecture is worthier of the waste-paper basket than your desk.” —Amaranatha Jha: A Memorial Volume, Ed. K.K. Mehrotra.
Dr. Hill proposed the Hon. Pandit Malaviya to the chair and welcomed Mr. Gandhi in their midst.

The Hon. Pandit Malaviya in introducing Mr. Gandhi said that his was a name honoured throughout India and wherever Indians lived. His name was also appreciated by a large number of Europeans who understood his character. It was always an instruction to him to read of the work he had done and of the life he had led.

Mr. Gandhi then delivered the following lecture:

When I accepted Mr. Kapildeva Malaviya’s invitation to speak to you upon the subject of this evening, I was painfully conscious of my limitations. You are an economic society. You have chosen distinguished specialists for the subjects included in your syllabus for this year and the next. I seem to be the only speaker ill-fitted for the task set before him. Frankly and truly, I know very little of economics, as you naturally understand them. Only the other day, sitting at an evening meal, a civilian friend deluged me with a series of questions on my crankisms. As he proceeded in his cross-examination, I being a willing victim, he found no difficulty in discovering my gross ignorance of the matters. I appeared to him to be handling with a cocksureness worthy only of a man who knows not that he knows not. To his horror and even indignation, I suppose, he found that I had not even read books on economics by such well-known authorities as Mill, Marshall, Adam Smith and a host of such other authors. In despair, he ended by advising me to read these works before experimenting in matters economic at the expense of the public. He little knew that I was a sinner past redemption. My experiments continue at the expense of trusting friends. For, there come to us moments in life when about some things we need no proof from without. A little voice within us tells us, “You are on the right track, move neither to your left nor right, but keep to the straight and narrow way.” With such help we march forward slowly indeed, but surely and steadily. That is my position. It may be satisfactory enough for me, but it can in no way answer the requirements of a society such as yours. Still it was no use my struggling against Mr. Kapildeva Malaviya. I knew that he was intent upon having me to engage your attention for one of your evenings. Perhaps you will treat my intrusion as a welcome diversion from the trodden path. An occasional fast after a series of sumptuous feasts is often a necessity. And as with the body, so, I imagine, is the case with the reason. And if your reason this evening is found fasting instead of feasting, I am sure it will enjoy with the greater avidity the feast that Rao Bahadur Pandit Chandrika Prasad has in store for you for the 12th of January.

Before I take you to the field of my experiences and experiments, it is perhaps best to have a mutual understanding about the title of this evening’s address: Does economic progress clash with real progress? By economic progress, I take it, we mean material advancement without limit and by real progress we mean moral progress, which again is the same thing as progress of the permanent element in us. The subject may therefore be stated thus: “Does not moral progress increase in the same proportion as material progress?” I know that this is a wider proposition than the one before us. But I venture to think that we always mean the larger one even when we lay down the smaller. For we know enough of science to realise that there is no such thing as perfect rest or repose in this visible universe of ours. If therefore material progress does not clash with moral progress, it must necessarily advance the latter. Nor can we be satisfied with the clumsy way in which sometimes those who cannot defend the larger proposition put their case. They seem to be obsessed with the concrete case of thirty millions of India stated by the late Sir William Wilson Hunter to be living on one meal a day. They say that before we can think or talk of their moral welfare, we must satisfy their daily wants. With these, they say, material progress spells moral progress. And then is taken a sudden jump: what is true of thirty millions is true of the universe. They forget that hard cases make bad law. I need hardly say to you how ludicrously absurd this deduction would be. No one has ever suggested that grinding pauperism can lead to anything else than moral degradation. Every human being has a right to live and therefore to find the wherewithal to feed himself and where necessary to clothe and house himself. But, for this very simple performance, we need no assistance from economists or their laws.

“Take no thought for the morrow”¹ is an injunction which finds an echo in almost all the religious scriptures of the world. In well-ordered society, the securing of one’s livelihood should be and is found to be the easiest thing in the world. Indeed, the test of orderliness in a country is not the number of millionaires it owns, but the absence of starvation among its masses. The only statement that has to be examined is whether it can be laid down as a law of universal application that material advancement means moral progress.

---

¹ St. Matthew, VI, 34

Now let us take a few illustrations. Rome suffered a moral fall when it attained high material affluence. So did Egypt and so perhaps most countries of which we have any historic record. The descendants, kinsmen of the royal and divine Krishna, too, fell when they were rolling in riches. We do not deny to the Rockefellers and the Carnegies possession of an ordinary measure of morality but we gladly judge them indulgently. I mean that we do not even expect them to satisfy the highest standard of morality. With them material gain has not necessarily meant moral gain. In South Africa, where I had the privilege of associating with thousands of our countrymen on most intimate terms, I observed almost invariably that the greater the possession of riches, the greater was their moral turpitude. Our rich men, to say the least, did not advance the moral struggle of passive resistance as did the poor. The rich men’s sense of self-respect was not so much injured as that of the poorest. If I were not afraid of treading on dangerous ground, I would even come nearer home and show you that possession of riches has been a hindrance to real growth. I venture to think that the scriptures of the world are far safer and sounder treatises on laws of economics than many of the modern text-books. The question we are asking ourselves this evening is not a new one. It was addressed to Jesus two thousand years ago. St. Mark beholding him, loved him and said unto him: “One thing thou lackest. Go thy way, sell whatever thou hast and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasure in heaven—come take up the cross and follow me.” And he was sad at that saying and went away grieved—for he had great possessions. And Jesus looked round about and said unto his disciples: “How hardly shall they that have riches enter into the kingdom of God.” And the disciples were astonished at his words. But Jesus answereth again and saith unto them: “Children, how hard it is for them that trust in riches to enter into the kingdom of God. It is easier for a camel to go through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter into the kingdom of God!” Here you have an eternal rule of life stated in the noblest words the English language is capable of producing. But the disciples nodded unbelief as we do even to this day. To him they said as we say today: “But look how the law fails in practice. If we sell all and have nothing, we shall have nothing to eat. We must have money or we cannot even be reasonably moral.” So they state their case thus. “And they were astonished out of measure saying among themselves: ‘Who then can be saved?’” And Jesus looking upon them saith: “With men it is impossible but not with God, for with God all things are possible.” Then Peter began to say unto him: “Lo, we have left all, and have followed thee.” And Jesus answered and said: “Verily I say unto you there is no man that has left house or brethren or sisters; or father or mother, or wife or children or lands for my sake and the Gospels, but he shall receive one hundred fold, now in this time houses and brethren and sisters and mothers and children and lands with persecutions and in the world to come eternal life. But many that are first shall be last and the last first.” You have here the result or reward, if you prefer the term, of following the law. I have not taken the trouble of copying similar passages from the other non Hindu scriptures and I will not insult you by quoting in support of the law stated by Jesus passages from the writings and sayings of our own sages, passages even stronger if possible than the Biblical extracts I have drawn your attention to. Perhaps the strongest of all the testimonies in favour of the affirmative answer to the question before us are the lives of the greatest teachers of the world. Jesus, Mahomed, Buddha, Nanak, Kabir, Chaitanya, Shankara, Dayanand, Ramakrishna were men who exercised an immense influence over and moulded the character of thousands of men. The world is the richer for their having lived in it. And they were all men who deliberately embraced poverty as their lot.

1 Ch. X, verses 17-31
I should not have laboured my point as I have done, if I did not believe that, in so far as we have made the modern materialistic craze our goal, in so far are we going downhill in the path of progress. I hold that economic progress in the sense I have put it is antagonistic to real progress. Hence the ancient ideal has been the limitation of activities promoting wealth. This does not put an end to all material ambition. We should still have, as we have always had, in our midst people who make the pursuit of wealth their aim in life. But we have always recognised that it is a fall from the ideal. It is a beautiful thing to know that the wealthiest among us have often felt that to have remained voluntarily poor would have been a higher state for them. That you cannot serve God and Mammon is an economic truth of the highest value. We have to make our choice. Western nations today are groaning under the heel of the monster-god of materialism. Their moral growth has become stunted. They measure their progress in £. s. d. American wealth has become the standard. She [sic] is the envy of the other nations. I have heard many of our countrymen say that we will gain American wealth but avoid its methods. I venture to suggest that such an attempt if it were made is foredoomed to failure. We cannot be ‘wise, temperate and furious’ in a moment. I would have our leaders to teach us to be morally supreme in the world. This land of ours was once, we are told, the abode of the gods. It is not possible to conceive gods inhabiting a land which is made hideous by the smoke and the din of null chimneys and factories and whose roadways are traversed by rushing engines dragging numerous cars crowded with men mostly who know not what they are after, who are often absent-minded, and whose tempers do not improve by being uncomfortably packed like sardines in boxes and finding themselves in the midst of utter strangers who would oust them if they could and whom they would in their turn oust similarly. I refer to these things because they are held to be symbolical of material progress. But they add not an atom to our happiness. This is what Wallace, the great scientist, has said as his deliberate Judgement.

In the earliest records which have come down to us from the past, we find ample indications that general ethical considerations and conceptions, the accepted standard of morality, and the conduct resulting from these were in no degree inferior to those which prevail to-day.

1 “Who can be wise, amazed, temperate and furious./ Loyal and neutral, in a moment? No man.”—Macbeth, II, iii.
In a series of chapters, he then proceeds to examine the position of the English nation under the advance in wealth it has made. He says:

This rapid growth of wealth and increase of our power over nature put too great a strain upon our crude civilization, on our superficial Christianity, and it was accompanied by various forms of social immorality almost as amazing and unprecedented.

He then shows how factories have risen on the corpses of men, women and children, how as the country has rapidly advanced in riches, it has gone down in morality. He shows this by dealing with insanitation, life-destroying trades, adulteration, bribery and gambling. He shows how, with the advance of wealth, justice has become immoral, deaths from alcoholism and suicide have increased, the average of premature births and congenital defects has increased, and prostitution has become an institution. He concludes his examination by these pregnant remarks:

The proceedings of the divorce courts show other aspects of the result of wealth and leisure, while a friend who had been good deal in London society assured me that both in country houses and in London various kinds of orgies were occasionally to be met with which would hardly have been surpassed in the period of the most dissolute emperors. Of war, too, I need say nothing. It has always been more or less chronic since the rise of the Roman Empire; but there is now undoubtedly a disinclination for war among all civilized peoples. Yet the vast burden of armaments, taken together with the most pious declarations in favour of peace, must be held to show an almost total absence of morality as a guiding principle among the governing classes.

Under the British aegis, we have learnt much, but it is my firm belief that there is little to gain from Britain in intrinsic morality. That if we are not careful, we shall introduce all the vices that she has been a prey to, owing to the disease of materialism. We can profit by that connection only if we keep our civilization, and our morals, straight, i.e., if instead of boasting of the glorious past, we express the ancient moral glory in our own lives and let our lives bear witness to our past. Then we shall benefit her and ourselves. If we copy her because she provides us with rulers, both they and we shall suffer degradation. We need not be afraid of ideals or of reducing them to practice even to the uttermost. Ours will only then be a truly spiritual nation when we shall show more truth than gold, greater fearlessness than pomp of power and wealth, greater charity than love of self. If we will but clean town houses, our palaces and temples of the attributes of wealth and show in them the attributes of morality, we can offer battle to any combinations of hostile forces without having to carry the burden of a heavy militia. Let us seek first the kingdom of God and His righteousness and the irrevocable promise is that everything will be added with us. These are real economics. May you and I treasure them and enforce them in our daily life.

An interesting discussion followed in the course of which several students put questions to the lecturer.

Prof. Jevons said it was necessary for economists to exist. It was not their business to lay down what the end should be. That was the business of philosophers.

Prof. Gidwani, president of the society, thanked the lecturer for his address.

Prof. Higginbottom said that there was no economic problem which could be separated from the moral problem.

Mr. Gandhi in the course of his remarks referred to Mr. Jevons’ remark about the need for economist and said that it was said that dirt was matter misplaced. So also when an economist was misplaced, he was hurtful. He certainly thought that the economist had a place in the economy of nature when he occupied the humble sphere for which he was created. If an economist did not investigate the laws of God and show them how to distribute wealth so that there might not be poverty, he was a most unwelcome intrusion on the Indian soil. He would also suggest for the reflection of their economic students and professors that what might be good for England and America need not necessarily be good for India. He thought that most of the economic laws which were consistent with moral laws were of universal application, but there might be in their restricted application some distinction and difference. So he would utter the note of warning that Indian conditions being in some respects so essentially different from the English and American conditions, it was necessary to bring to bear on the matters that presented themselves to the economists a fresh mind. If they did so, both Indians and the economists would derive benefit.

Mr. Higginbottom, he said, was studying the real economics that were so necessary for India and reducing his studies inch by inch to practice and that was the safest guide to follow, whether they were students or professors. Referring to a question by a student, he said that a man should not hoard money for selfish ends, but if he wished to hoard money as a trustee for the millions of India, he would say that he might have as much riches as he could. Ordinarily, economists prescribed laws for the rich people. It was against those economists that he would always cry out.

As regards another question, whether factories should not be replaced by cottage industries, Mr. Gandhi spoke approvingly of the suggestion but said that the economists should first of all examine with patience their indigenous institutions. If they were rotten, they must be wiped but and if there were remedies which could be suggested for their betterment, they should improve them.

As regards intercourse with other nations, he said that he did not think that they necessarily advanced one little bit in their moral growth by bringing their masses with others into physical contact and pointed to Indians in South Africa as an instance. The rapid locomotion such as steamers, trains and others dislocated so many of their ideals and created a great deal of mischief.

As regards the question what was the minimum and the maximum wealth a man should have—he would answer in the words of Jesus, Ramkrishna and others who said ‘none’.

The Hon. Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya in his concluding remarks offered a cordial vote of thanks to Mr. Gandhi for his excellent address. The ideals which Mr. Gandhi put before them, he said, were so high that he did not expect that all of them would be prepared to subscribe to all of them. But he was sure they would agree with the main object he put before them, namely, that they should go for the welfare of man as the test of all economic questions with which they dealt. . . .

The Leader, 25-12-1916

209. SPEECH AT ALLAHABAD ON EDUCATION, ANCIENT AND MODERN

December 23, 1916

Mr. Gandhi addressed in Hindi a public meeting at Allahabad at Munshi Ram Prasad’s garden under the chairmanship of the Hon. Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya. The gathering was a record one even for Munshi Ram Prasad’s garden where some of the largest public meetings have been held.

Mr. Gandhi, who on rising was greeted with loud and prolonged cheers, said that that he should have felt difficulty—of which he was ashamed—in addressing the meeting in Hindi, was a striking commentary on the system of modern education which was a part of the subject of his lecture that evening. He would, however, prefer to speak in Hindi although he had greater facility of expression in English. Describing the modern system of education, he said that real education was considered to have begun at the college at the age of 16 or 17. The education received in school was not useful. For instance, an Indian student, while he knew well the geography of England, did not possess a sufficient knowledge of the geography of his own country. This history of India which they were taught was greatly distorted. Government service was the aim of their education. Their highest ambition was to become members of the Imperial Legislative Council. The boys abandoned their hereditary occupations, and forsook their mother tongue. They were adopting the English language, European ideas and European dress. They thought in English, conducted all their political and social work and all commercial transactions, etc., in English and thought that they could not do without the English language. They had come to think that there was no other road. Education through English had created a wide gulf between the educated few and the masses. It had created a gulf in the families also. An English-educated man had no community of feelings and ideas with the ladies of his family. And, as had been said, the aspirations of the English-educated men were fixed on Government service and at the most on membership of the Imperial Legislative Council. He for one could never commend a system of education which produced such a state of things and men educated under such system could not be expected to do any great service to the country. Mr. Gandhi did not mean that the English-educated leaders did not feel for the masses. On the other hand, he acknowledged that the Congress and other great public movements were initiated and conducted by them. But, at the same time, he could not help feeling that the work done during all these years would have been much more and much greater progress would have been made if they had been taught in their mother tongue. It was unfortunate, said the speaker, that a feeling had come over them that there was no path to progress other than that which I was being followed. They found themselves helpless. But it was not manliness to assume all attitude of helplessness.

Mr. Gandhi then described the ancient system of education and said that even elementary education imparted by the village teacher taught the student all that was necessary for their occupations. Those who went in for higher education became fully conversant with the science of wealth, Artha Shastra, ethics and religion, Dharma Shastra. In ancient times, there were no restrictions on education. It was not controlled by the State but was solely in the hands of the Brahmins who shaped the system of education solely with an eye to the welfare of the people. It was based on restraint and brahmacharya. It was due to such a system of education that Indian civilization had outlived so many vicissitudes through thousands of years, while such ancient civilizations as those of Greece, Rome and Egypt had become extinct. No doubt the wave of a new civilization had been passing through India. But he was sure that it was transitory, it would soon pass away and Indian civilization would be revivified. In ancient times, the basis of life was self-restraint but now it was enjoyment. The result was that people had become powerless cowards and forsook the truth. Having come under the influence of another civilization, it might be necessary to adapt our own civilization in certain respects to our new environment but we should not make any radical change in a civilization which was acknowledged even by some western scholars to be the best. It might be urged that it was necessary to adopt the methods and instruments of western civilization to meet the material forces of that civilization. But the forces born of spirituality, the bedrock of Indian civilization, were more than a match for material forces. India was pre-eminently the land of religion. It was the first and the last duty of Indians to maintain it as such. They should draw their strength from the soul, from God. If they adhered to that path, swarajya which they were aspiring to and working for would become their handmaid.

_The Leader, 27-12-1916; also Mahatma Gandhi: His Life, Writings & Speeches, pp. 192-5_

210. SPEECH AT LUCKNOW CONGRESS

_December 28, 1916_

Mr. M. K. Gandhi (Bombay) moving Resolution No. IX on “Indentured Labour” on 28th December 1916 at the 31st Indian National Congress Session held at Lucknow said:

MR. PRESIDENT, BROTHER-DELEGATES, LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,

I notice that there is an appeal made to me by my Tamil brethren that I should speak to them in English and I am going partly to accede to their importunity, but I want to make an appeal in return that during the next year if they do not learn the _lingua franca_, which I know will be the _lingua franca_ (“Hear, hear”), when swaraj is granted to the whole of India, if you do not do so during the ensuing year, you will do so at your peril, so far as I am concerned. (Cheers.) I shall read the resolution in English, which I propose to read afterwards in Hindi also. The resolution runs as follows: (a) This Congress strongly urges that indentured emigration should be stopped by prohibiting the recruitment of such labour within the ensuing year.

(b) In the opinion of this Congress, it is highly desirable that at least one representative Indian selected after consultation with associations voicing Indian public opinion be appointed by the Government of India to take part in the forthcoming inter-departmental Conference to be held in London for the consideration of this question.

(c) This Congress earnestly requests that the reports of Mr. Marjoribanks and Hon’ble Mr. Thambi Marakkyar and of the inter-departmental Committee be published for general information and discussion before any action is taken thereupon.

The pressmen and the delegates who have copies of the resolution with them will kindly note that there is a verbal alteration in clause (a), that instead of the word “during”, the resolution will read “within”. It is made at the instance of a friend who is afraid that the Government might consider that we would be satisfied if indentured emigration was suspended during the ensuing year, whereas our meaning is that it should be abolished for ever. In clause (b) also, you will note that there is an addition of the word “Indian” before the words “public opinion”.

Mr. Gandhi read the resolution in Hindi and explained the object of the resolution.

211. SPEECH AT ALL-INDIA COMMON SCRIPT AND COMMON LANGUAGE CONFERENCE, LUCKNOW

December 29, 1916

What I have got to say I shall say afterwards. I shall begin with the lessons I have learnt from the speakers who have preceded me. I hail from Gujarat. My Hindi is broken. I speak to you, brothers, in that broken Hindi of mine, because even if I speak a little of English, I have the feeling that I am committing a sin. I need not speak to you about the glories of Hindi. Your desire to hear from me about the glories of Hindi is as if someone who regularly bathes in the Ganga should invoke that river to come to him. If someone living in Rajputana were to make such a supplication, it would be different. That you should study Hindi and master Devnagari is not for me to tell you. It is as absurd as asking Muslims to learn Urdu. You say, I am a man not of speech but of action. Then do what I say. Gentlemen, you see that the Christian Literature Depot and Bible Society is going all round the world. It scatters its books everywhere. It has them translated into all the languages and then distributes them at the right places. Even to the aborigines and working people in Africa it provides the Bible in their own languages. It spends crores of rupees on this job. They do not simply hold conferences like we do.

1 Gandhi presided at the Conference.
Sometimes they do meet but only to collect money or to submit their reports. If we had men to teach Hindi, to do work, even the people of Madras would be knowing Hindi today. It is not mere conferences but work that we need—work such as the Christian Literature Depot and Bible Society is doing. All work requires money. But there is no paucity of money. There is paucity only of workers. If we have workers, people in Gujarat, Madras, South India and elsewhere can learn Hindi. Let more and more books be translated into Hindi, let people go out and teach, and let those coming in be taught. If workers are sent to the South or to Gujarat to teach and disseminate Hindi, they will not be entirely unpaid, they will get subsistence wages. In olden times, the age of the rishis, there was great self-sacrifice, and learning was imparted without payment. I wanted to learn Hindi but found no one in Ahmedabad to teach me. I learnt my Hindi from a Gujarati gentleman who had only a working knowledge of the language and who had spent 15 or 20 years in Benares. If the conference sends out men, a large number of people will be able to learn Hindi. You want swaraj. So do I. But the way to gain swaraj is a different one altogether [from what is usually adopted]. Swaraj cannot be got by mere talking. You must first do some work yourselves and then only seek aid from the Government. Government aid will not be forthcoming before that. If you first go forward on your own, the Government will follow you. A Government never of itself takes the first step. You go out and teach Hindi to people and put in earnest work. Only when you have done some work will the Government listen to you, otherwise it will throw your applications aside. The task is a big one, but if you have the will you can construct the edifice of swaraj. Panditji (Malaviyaji) has dwelt at length on our past glory. English first had a vocabulary of a thousand words. Now it has increased to a hundred thousand. There are books in that language on all subjects, such as jurisprudence, medicine, etc. People say Hindi has nothing and that we cannot do without English. At times people have to put up with great inconvenience owing to ignorance of English. I grant that it is so. On the trains people have to suffer much on account of English. So much so, that people like me get pushed about for speaking Hindi. But those who have work to do cannot take notice of it. However backward Hindi may be as compared to English, we must advance its status. Our ancient rishis lived under rigid rules of conduct. They showed great self-sacrifice. We must gird up our loins and do them honour by renouncing all self-interest. In Government councils English alone counts. It is said that the Viceroy and others know no language except English and that therefore it is necessary to use only English. But I assert that if I know how to speak and if there is something in my speech from which the Viceroy may benefit, he will certainly hear it even if it is made in Hindi. If necessary he will get it translated. Or a C.I.D. man will come and take a report of it. It is from the people themselves that I ask for swaraj If you have received this swaraj from the people, you will get it also from the Government. Once you have done this, you will become truly fearless and your aspirations will be fulfilled.

[From Hindi]
Pratap, 1-1-1917

212. PRESIDENTIAL ADDRESS AT ALL-INDIA COMMON SCRIPT AND COMMON LANGUAGE CONFERENCE, LUCKNOW

December 29, 1916

BROTHERS,

Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya has dwelt at length on the past glory of Hindi. But this in itself will not make for the spread of the National Language. You cannot get the merit of a dip in the Bhagirathi\textsuperscript{1} by merely saying that the glory of the Bhagirathi is great. \textit{Bhagirath prayatna}\textsuperscript{2} is required if we want Hindi to spread. Which language do you employ when you petition the Viceroy or the Government? If you have not been employing Hindi, do so now. You may say that you will not be heard if you use that language. I say to you: Speak in your language, write in your language. If they have got to hear what you say, they shall hear. I will say what I have to say in my own language. He who has to listen will listen. If you act on this resolve, the status of Hindi will rise. Hindi has not made much headway in all provinces so far. The \textit{rashtra-bhasha}\textsuperscript{3} is not yet popular in the \textit{rashtra-sabha}\textsuperscript{4}. Whose fault is it? I say it is yours. I \textsuperscript{1} Bhagirath, after heroic efforts, brought down the Ganga from heaven; hence the river is also called Bhagirathi.

\textsuperscript{2} Herculean efforts
\textsuperscript{3} National language
\textsuperscript{4} National Congress needed and still need some one knowing Hindi to teach me the language. But there was none to be found in Ahmedabad who could give lessons to me and to those in my Ashram. Hindi has not spread in Madras yet. You have made no effort to that end. Please find five or ten people who will go to Madras and spread Hindi. Pay them proper remuneration. It is not difficult to find the funds for, after all, you spend so much money on these conferences. If such an effort is made, Hindi is bound to spread everywhere.

[From Hindi]

Mahatma Gandhi by Ramchandra Varma

213. INTERVIEW AT LUCKNOW

[About December 29/31, 1916]

NATIONAL LANGUAGE

Q. Do you consider it necessary that the business of the Congress should be conducted in Hindi, our national language?

A. I do. So long as public business is not conducted in Hindi, the country cannot make progress. So long as the Congress does not use Hindi for all its work, swaraj is not possible.

Q. But how can it be possible for people of all the provinces all of a sudden to learn Hindi and start speaking it?

A. I do not say that the provinces should all give up their own languages and start speaking, and writing Hindi. In provincial matters, the provincial languages may be used. But national questions ought to be deliberated in the national language only. It is not a very difficult matter. It can be easily done. We should use Hindi for the work that we are today doing in English.

SWARAJ OF CONGRESS

Q. What do you think of the swaraj resolution passed by the Congress and the way it is going to be implemented?

A. It may be good or it may be bad, but I do not have any high opinion of it.

Q. Why so?

A. Because ill-will is inherent in it.

Q. There wouldn’t seem to be any ill-will in it and if it has it is only towards the bureaucracy.

A. It may be towards the bureaucracy, but it is ill-will all the same. Therefore I have no high opinion of it. But I cannot say that the venture is unworthy or that it will fail. Ill-will does not everywhere do harm. Ill-will has to be shown towards ill-will when we wish to remove it from our hearts. But this is not my way. This is not the Indian way—the ancient, traditional way; this is the Western way.

Q. Then what is your or rather our own Indian way?
A. We shall not go into it now.

INSTITUTION OF “VARNA SHRAM”

Q. What are your views on the system of the four varnas?
A. It is a very good institution. It has done much good to the country. It must be preserved.

Q. If there are only four varnas in Hindu society and if they are to remain as they are, in which varna would you include the untouchable castes?
A. The untouchable castes owe their existence to the excesses of the system. The four varnas ostracised them through undue excesses. Their place is inside the system.

Q. If that is so, in which varna ought they to be placed?
Answering this question, Gandhiji explained at length how in the normal flow of society they would all find the varnas to which they were entitled.

“SHUDDHI” MOVEMENT OF ARYA SAMAJ

Q. What will be the solution of the Hindu-Muslim question?
A. This question cannot be solved finally. What happened in other countries will happen here. Hindus and Muslims will remain as two communities and this will do no harm to the country.

Q. The Arya Samaj converts Muslims to Hinduism through shuddhi. If this practice does not violate religion and if one can conceive that through it all the Muslims can become Hindus, will it not solve the question?
A. But it is not the right path. It is not the path of religion. It is not natural and the dream of converting all the Muslims to Hinduism is a vain one.

[From Hindi]

Mahatma Gandhi by Ramchandra Varma
214. SPEECH AT MUSLIM LEAGUE CONFERENCE, LUCKNOW

December 31, 1916

The Muslim League resumed its sitting this morning, the attendance being as large as yesterday. Mr. Wazir Hassan, Secretary of the League, presented the report of the reform committee appointed at Bombay last year. The report was on the same lines as the report that was placed before the National Congress this year.

A resolution protesting against the treatment of Indians in the Colonies was next put from the chair (Mr. Jinnah) and carried.

At this stage, Mr. Gandhi who was present at the meeting was asked to address the meeting.

He exhorted them to conduct their proceedings in Urdu if they wished to carry out their resolution to maintain Urdu as the lingua franca of India. He further urged them to take some interest in Hindu literature which would enable them to arrive at a permanent rapprochement with the Hindus. In the Colonies, Hindus and Mussalmans had always co-operated in taking concerted measures and, if that example was followed in India, the coveted prize would soon be theirs. He also advised them that in the course of their propaganda they should not be afraid of the Government because it was in the nature of Englishmen to bow before the strong and ride over the weak.

The Leader, 3-1-1917

215. FRAGMENT OF LETTER

[1916]¹

... keep in. . . At present, your work is to supervise everything, assign everyone his work and, finishing the accounts, you have to train Mr. Fulchand³ [in accounts]⁴. If buttermilk does not agree with everyone and they all prefer *rab*⁵, go back to it. The general level of health is good these days. We don’t want to lose it. The harmonium must have arrived by now. Sankalchandbhai⁶ had promised to look

¹ The first two pages are not available.
² The letter appears to have been written in 1916. The exact date cannot be ascertained.
³ Fulchand Kasturchand Shah, a political and constructive worker of Saurashtra
⁵ A semi-liquid preparation of wheat
⁶ Sankalchand Shah, formerly Professor of Physics, Gujarat College, Ahmedabad; later, took charge of Gandhiji’s National School for the land; remind him of that. Go and look at the small farm of the Orphanage. I am trying again to secure it. We should consider whether it will serve our purpose.

Blessings from

BAPU

Read the accompanying letter¹ and send it on to Jamnadas.

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C. W. 5694. Courtesy: Radhabejn Choudhri

216. LETTER TO V. G. SARAIYA

AHMEDABAD,

Posh Sud 10 [January 3, 1917]²

I returned from Lucknow³ only last night. You should bear whatever happens in patience and even submit to death while maintaining moral principles. There is no other consolation I can give.

MOHANDAS GANDHI

BHAI VRIJLAL GOVINDLAL SARAIYA
TODA POLE IN RAJA MEHTA POLE
AHMEDABAD

From the original post card in Gujarati in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 2820. Courtesy: Vinaychandra Govindlal Saraiy

¹ Not available
² From the postmark
³ After attending the Congress session held in December, 1916
217. LETTER TO SAM HIGGINBOTTOM

AHMEDABAD,
January 4, 1917

DEAR MR. HIGGINBOTTOM,

I have just returned to find the book so kindly sent by you. I thank you for it. Can you now pay the promised visit to the Ashram? If you can come, will you address a public meeting?

I am,
Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: Higginbottom Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

218. LETTER TO ESTHER FAERING

AHMEDABAD,
January 11, 1917

DEAR ESTHER¹,

I was delighted to have your note from Bombay. I assure you that we miss you both very much. You were hardly guests to us; you had become members of the family. Hope Miss Peterson² is quite herself again. I redirected a batch of letters yesterday and am doing likewise today.

With regards to both of you,

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

My Dear Child, p. 3

¹ Miss Esther Faering and Miss Anne Marie Peterson, members of the staff of the Danish Missionary Society in South India, had visited Gandhiji’s Ashram as a preparation for their educational work. Esther grew to be like a daughter to Bapu; vide “Letter to Esther Faering”, 15-4-1917 & 17-4-1917.
² ibid
219. LETTER TO KALYANJI MEHTA

AHMEDABAD,

Posh Vad 4 [January 12, 1917]¹

I write this assuming that you are still in Surat. I wonder if you have purposely dropped the matter about the customs cordon at Viramgam. The rest seems all right. A resolution can also be passed saying that education should be given through the mother tongue. It is very difficult for me just now to leave Ahmedabad. What can I do by going there? I would request you to leave me alone.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

I am returning the copy of the resolutions.

BHAISHRI KALYANJI VITHALBHAI MEHTA²

PATEL BANDHU OFFICE

SURAT

From a photostat of the original postcard in Gujarati in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 2663

220. STATEMENT ON LIONEL CURTIS’ LETTER

[Before January 14, 1917]³

It turns out that the discoverer of Mr. Lionel Curtis’ letter⁴ to the Secretary of the Round Table was Mr. Gandhi. New India writes: “An Ahmedabad correspondent writing to the Hindustan of Bombay gives details of an explanation given by Mr. Gandhi at his Ashram at Ahmedabad regarding the “private” letter of Mr. Curtis, Mr. Gandhi says:

¹ From the postmark
² A Congress leader of Surat district
³ Gujarati, 14-1-1917, also published this
⁴ Member of the Round Table group touring India; formerly, Town Clerk, Johannesburg, 1902-3, Assistant Colonial Secretary for Urban Affairs, Transvaal, 1903-6; member, Transvaal Legislative Council, vide “Interview to the Star”, 6-1-1908.
⁵ Dated 13th December 1916, reproduced in New India, 27-12-1916. The letter contained proposals “to subordinate India to the control of the Dominions”.

VOL. 15: 21 MAY, 1915 - 31 AUGUST, 1917 291
It was at Agra that this letter came accidentally to my hands. It was printed in the Government press and was marked ‘private’. But it came to my hands through the mistake of some pressman along with a book. The moment I saw it I was startled, and on seeing the danger that stood before the country, I resolved to expose the conspiracy before the Congress somehow or other, and I handed it over to Mr. Horniman. But at that time I made a suggestion that Mr. Curtis should be given 24 hours’ notice to make any explanation which he thought fit. But others thought it was one’s duty to publish it then and there, and that there was no necessity to give such a notice; I also agreed to this. If underneath our houses somebody digs a mine and fills it with explosives, and if our enemy thinks of blowing it up when there is a gathering there, and he sends a chit round marked ‘Private and confidential’, it is our duty to catch hold of it and expose it. I know Mr. Curtis for a long time. His brother was in South Africa. I think that because of the publication of this letter, the game of putting India under the dominance of the Colonies will not come to pass.

The Indian Social Reformer, 21-1-1917

221. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M.K. GANDHI

AHMEDABAD, January 14, 1917

MY DEAR FRIEND,

Your post has become irregular nowadays. I have missed two weeks. I was at Lucknow and so besieged by visitors and filled with appointments that I had no time left. I hope you will forgive me.

The Ashram has never been so free from illness as it is at present. Everybody is enjoying good health except myself. I suffered from malnutrition in Lucknow and have not thrown off the effect yet. But I too am steadily gaining ground. I tried there to live on monkey-nuts and dates only. It brought on constipation.

Chhaganlal has accepted service in a mill in Baroda. He is leaving us tomorrow. Manilal and Ramdas will leave for Phoenix next month. Mrs. Gandhi has gone to Porbunder to stay with her brother for a few weeks. Imam Saheb returns to us in a week’s time. This

---

1 B. G. Horniman, Editor, The Bombay Chronicle, Bombay about gives you an idea of the composition of the Ashram at the present moment. Polak is in Allahabad staying with some friends.

With love,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

222. LETTER TO ESTHER FAERING

AHMEDABAD,

January 15, 1917

DEAR ESTHER,

I was pleased to receive your nice letter and hear that Miss Peterson had thrown off her cold entirely.

I am glad you found peace in the Ashram. Yes, both of you we regard as members of the family. You will come whenever you wish to and can.

Ramdas¹ is a noble boy. He is the one going to South Africa.² I feel sure that he will give a good account of himself there. By way of preparation he has been attending a printing press here, practising at the compositor’s desk.

I have learnt enough of you to know that you will put your whole heart into your studies and soon be talking enough Tamil for your purpose.

Pray keep the rules³ as long as you like. There is no occasion to hurry over sending them. With kind regards,

Yours,

M. K. GANDHI

My Dear Child, pp. 3-4

¹ Gandhiji’s third son
³ Rules drawn up for the members of the Ashram; vide “Draft Constitution for the Ashram”, before 20-5-1915.
223. LETTER TO S. HIGGINBOTTOM

AHMEDABAD,

January 16, 1917

DEAR MR. HIGGINBOTTOM,

You will see from the enclosed what fate befell my poor post card. Since writing the post-card, I have read the book. It was a perfect treat for me. It has enabled me almost to take a definite step in matters educational. You will hear about it probably very soon and perhaps give me the benefit of your advice.

Hoping you will be able at an early date to visit the Ashram,

I am,

Yours truly,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 8933

224. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,

Posh Vad 9 [January 17, 1917]¹

CHI. NARANDAS,

I have resolved on two changes: one, that in buying land for the farm our object should be to have a good return by way of yield, the object being that even a man with a family may be drawn to this work; two, to start a national school², be it on a big scale or small, and engage well-educated teachers for it. Paid men should be engaged for both these purposes and the payment should be at market rates. You can also be taken as a paid man. The idea is to entrust you mainly with the accounts of these departments. This is not final, though. What is certain is that you should be engaged on payment. You will be able to live in the Ashram if you wish to. If you want to live apart, you can do that also. You can be paid a salary which you consider necessary to meet the expenses in Ahmedabad. If you want to join this work, think over the matter and let me know. There is no particular need for ¹ Manilal and Ramdas Gandhi referred to at the end of the letter went to Natal early in 1917.

² Vide “National Gujarati School”, after 18-1-1917.
hurry. If you are favourably inclined, seek Khushalbhai’s advice and have a discussion among you brothers. If there is anything more you want to know, write to me or come over on a Sunday. I shall not go into further details just now.

Try to see Harakhchand again. The doctor must get a definite reply.

Krishna and Kashi are here. Chhaganlal is thinking of joining the work I have mentioned above (on payment) and with that end in view he has gone to Baroda to obtain Motichand’s permission. There is a letter from him, though, saying that Motichand is putting heavy pressure on him. Let us see what Chhaganlal does.

Manilal and Ramdas will shortly leave for Natal and relieve Pragjii.

Blessings from

M OHANDAS G ANDHI

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5691. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

225. LETTER TO KALYANJI MEHTA

AHMEDABAD,

Posh Vad 10 [January 18, 1917]¹

[DEAR SHRI KALYANJI,]

I shall further explain my difficulty to you. I am busy these days preparing a big educational scheme and that takes up all my time. I have to meet a number of people and discuss things with them. Please consider whether I should go ahead with this work or interrupt it for four or five days, whether it will be more profitable for me to carry on with it or to attend your conference. Answer this question yourself before you put pressure on me.

Vandemataram from

M OHANDAS G ANDHI

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 2668

¹ Krishnadas, son of Chhaganlal Gandhi
² Wife of Chhaganlal Gandhi
³ This appears to have been written after “Letter to Kalyanji Mehta”, 12-1-1917
⁴ Vide the following item.
226. NATIONAL GUJARATI SCHOOL

[After January 18, 1917]

PROSPECTUS

For many years past, several friends and I have felt that our present education is not national and that in consequence people do not get from it the benefit they ought to. Our children languish as a result of this education. They become incapable of any great achievement and the knowledge they acquire does not spread among the masses—not even in their families. Nor do the young people have any aim in mind in taking this modern education except to get a job and make money. It is one of the fundamental principles of education that it should be planned with a view to the needs of the people. This idea finds no place at all in our schools.

Wherever I have travelled in India, I have discussed this question with the leaders and, without exception, almost every one has admitted that our educational system must change.

To look to the Government for this will be sheer waste of time. The Government will wait on public opinion and, being foreign, move very timidly; it cannot understand our needs, its advisers may be ill-informed or they may have interests of their own to serve. For a variety of such reasons, it will probably be quite long before there is any serious change in the present system; the time that passes meanwhile is so much loss to the people.

It is, however, not intended to suggest here that we should not try to get the Government to move. Let petitions be made to it and let public opinion be ascertained. But the best petition to the Government will be an actual demonstration by us and this will also be the easiest way of cultivating public opinion. It has accordingly been decided, in consultation with some educated gentlemen, to start a national school.

Education in the School

Basic principle: The education will be physical, intellectual and religious.

For physical education, there will be training in agriculture and hand-weaving and in the use of carpenter’s and blacksmith’s tools incidental to these. That will provide sufficient exercise for the pupils.

1 Vide the preceding item.
In addition, they will be given drill, which is both an entertainment [and a practical utility] and, as part of this, they will be taught how to march in squads and how each one may work with quiet efficiency in case of accidents such as fire.

They will have instruction on how to preserve health and on home remedies for ordinary ailments, with as much of physiology and botany as may be necessary for the purpose.

For intellectual training, they will study Gujarati, Marathi, Hindi and Sanskrit as compulsory subjects. Urdu, Tamil and Bengali will also be taught.

There will be no teaching of English during the first three years.

In addition, the pupils will be taught Mathematics (Arithmetic, Algebra and Geometry). Instruction in multiplication tables, Indian book-keeping and the measures, weights, etc., currently in use will begin at once and the rest of the curriculum will be covered progressively.

There will be instruction in History, Geography, Elements of Astronomy and Elements of Chemistry.

By way of instruction in religion, pupils will be taught general ethical principles and we are hopeful that the teachers will demonstrate by their conduct that the essence of religion is good character.

All teaching will be through Gujarati, right up to the highest stage, and most of it will be oral during the first few years. The intention is to put across to the children, before they learn to read and write, quite a few things orally by way of stories, as was the practice in old days, and so help their minds to grow, and to give them some general knowledge as they play about, rather than repress them by doing nothing more than remarking, “Oh dear, dear! How dirty”, and so on.

EXPLANATION

The aim at present is that after a few years of such education, the student’s equipment will approximate to that of a well-informed graduate. That is, he will have a reduced load by way of learning English and, during the time so saved, he will be given all the useful knowledge a graduate acquires. He will be freed from the fear of examinations. All the students will be tested from time to time, but that will be by the teachers of the school itself. The use to which the student puts his abilities after leaving school will be the true measure of the worth of his education. Every opportunity will be taken to rid his mind of the fallacious notion that the aim of education is to get employment. And, finally, every pupil joining this school is likely to develop such self-confidence in a few years that he will not be troubled with doubts or fears about how he will make a living. A pupil who has been in the school for five years will be fixed up, if he so desires, in some work in the school itself and be paid for it. The school will make arrangements with some factories, etc., so that they provide training in vocations and give a start to those who wish to set themselves up independently. If, after ten years of study, anyone wants to pursue a subject further, necessary arrangements for the purpose are left to the future.

---

1 The original is very faint here.

FREE EDUCATION

No fees will be charged in this school, the expenses being met from donations received.

TEACHERS

Paid teachers will be engaged and will be, all of them, grown-up men who have reached the college level or possess equivalent attainments. The idea is that children should have the best teachers in the early stages.

SYLLABUS FOR FIRST YEAR

The following syllabus is reproduced as a specimen:¹

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: S. N. 6195a

227. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M.K. GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,

January 21, 1917

MY DEAR FRIEND,

After some weeks I have a letter from you. It is full of complaints against me regarding absence of any letter from me. Well, I have missed but two weeks. Last week I gave you my reasons for it. Otherwise I have written regularly but to the Switzerland address. You insisted on my writing to you there in view of your impending transfer. We are well here. From the health point of view the condition of the Ashram has been never so good as now. This letter I am sending to your English address. I met Andrews in Lucknow. Polak is in Allahabad. Today everybody has gone out for a picnic. Only Ramdas and I and a friend remain behind. I have already told you in one of my letters that Manilal and Ramdas are about to go to Phoenix to replace Pragji and Bhayat.

¹ Not available.

With love,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

228. LETTER TO DR. H. S. DEVA

AHMEDABAD,

January 31 [1917]

DEAR DR. DEVA,

I have your p.c. I feel that every time we met to celebrate the anniversary, we should take a step in advance in keeping with the ideals for which Mr. Gokhale stood. Such is the suggestion I have made locally and it has been accepted. This year, therefore, here we shall probably publish a Gujarati translation of all Mr. Gokhale’s speeches. I make a similar suggestion for Poona. There we may resolve at the meeting to translate his speeches in Marathi if they are not already translated or do some other practical thing. I would so like that he may live more and more in us and through us and thereby through the whole nation. This will not happen unless at such functions we take progressive steps. I am pulled in opposite directions by two attractions—one from Poona and the other from Ahmedabad. There are reasons for which I should like to be in Ahmedabad that day. There are equally good reasons which tell me I should go to Poona. You shall decide as to what I should do. Friends here have left

1 The original has “a”.
2 From the reference to the translations of Gokhale’s speeches and the indenture meeting, this letter appears to have been written in 1917.
3 Secretary of the Servants of India Society me free to do as I think best.

For the business meeting after the celebration, I think there should be two. Both may be the same day with sufficiently long intervals. The first may be confined only to the usual friends. The other may be of a more general character to which the Tilak group may come.

I hope the indenture meeting¹ will be a success.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5789

229. INTRODUCTION TO “VERNACULARS AS MEDIA OF INSTRUCTION”

[February 1, 1917]²

The following is the introduction written by Mr. M. K. Gandhi to Dr. P. J. Mehta’s ‘Self-Government Series’ Pamphlet No. I entitled Vernaculars as Media of Instruction in Indian Schools and Colleges:

It is to be hoped that Dr. Mehta’s labour of love will receive the serious attention of English-educated India. The following pages were written by him for the Vedanta Kesari of Madras and are now printed in their present form for circulation throughout India. The question of vernaculars as media of instruction is of national importance; neglect of the vernaculars means national suicide. One hears many protagonists of the English language being continued as the medium of instruction pointing to the fact that English-educated Indians are the sole custodians of public and patriotic work. It would be monstrous if it were not so. For, the only education given in this country is through the English language. The fact, however, is that the results are not at all proportionate to the time we give to our education. We have not reacted on the masses. But I must not anticipate Dr. Mehta. He is in earnest. He writes feelingly. He has examined the pros and cons and collected a mass of evidence in support of his arguments. The latest pronouncement on the subject is that of the Viceroy. Whilst His Excellency is unable to offer a solution, he is keenly alive to the necessity of imparting instruction in our schools through the vernaculars. The Jews of Middle and Eastern Europe, who are scattered in all parts of the world, finding it necessary to have a common tongue for mutual intercourse, have raised Yiddish to the status of a language and have succeeded in translating into Yiddish the best books to be found in the world’s literature. Even they could not satisfy the soul’s yearning through the many foreign tongues of which they are masters; nor did the learned few among them wish to tax the masses of the Jewish population with having to learn a foreign language before they could realise their dignity. So they have enriched what was at one time looked upon as a mere jargon—but what the Jewish children learnt from their mothers—by taking special pains to translate into it the best thought of the world. This is a truly marvellous work. It has been done during the present generation, and Webster’s Dictionary defines it as a polyglot jargon used for inter-communication by Jews from different nations.

¹ In Bombay on 9-2-1917
² The printed Gujarati Introduction (S.N. 6341) bears this date.

But a Jew of Middle and Eastern Europe would feel insulted if his mother tongue were now so described. If these Jewish scholars have succeeded, within a generation, in giving their masses a language, of which they may feel proud, surely it should be an easy task for us to supply the needs of our own vernaculars which are cultured languages. South Africa teaches us the same lesson. There was a duel there between Taal, a corrupt form of Dutch, and English. The Boer mothers and the Boer fathers were determined that they would not let their children, with whom they in their infancy talked in Taal, be weighed down with having to receive instruction through English. The case of English here was a strong one. It had able pleaders for it. But English had to yield before Boer patriotism. It may be observed that they rejected even the High Dutch. The school masters, therefore, who are accustomed to speak the polished Dutch of Europe, are compelled to teach the easier Taal. And literature of an excellent character is at the present moment growing up in South Africa in the Taal, which was only a few years ago the common medium of speech between simple but brave rustics. If we have lost faith in our vernaculars, it is a sign of want of faith in ourselves; it is the surest sign of decay. And no scheme of Self-Government, however benevolently or generously it may be bestowed upon us, will ever make us a self-governing nation, if we have no respect for the languages our mothers speak.

The Leader, 25-5-1917, quoting The Rangoon Mail
230. A FOREWORD

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM,
AHMEDABAD,

Maha Sud 10, Samvat 1973, [February 1, 1917]

I wish Bhai Karsandas' success in his endeavour. Eating or drinking, awake or asleep, sitting or standing, Bhai Karsandas Chitalia always has the Bhagini Samaj uppermost in his mind. He believes that the service of women is the service of the country and that the service of women is possible through the Bhagini Samaj. That is why Bhai Karsandas has become the moving spirit of the Bhagini Samaj. In doing so, he is fully keeping the pledge he has taken for the Servants of India Society. This is his belief. Once Bhai Deodhar remarked in jest that some way would have to be found to cure Bhai Karsandas of the obsession. This remark was by way of a homage and the homage was genuine. India badly needs persons who can be so totally dedicated to their work. I know Karsandas to be such a person, so I could not decline his request to write the foreword.

Since I had to write the foreword, I was forced to read the book by Bhogindrarao Divetia. Many problems concerning women have been discussed in this work in a beautiful, easy and concise language. Instead of asserting his views, Devatia has merely expressed them by way of suggestions. It has struck me as a distinctive trait of Divetia’s writing. In a book about women, for that matter even about men, meant for the general reader, assertions become a hindrance. I hope that the reader will not infer that because I am writing this introduction I approve of all the reforms the author advocates. Bhai Divetia has placed his views before the reader in an interesting manner. Hence, it may be hoped that his writing will be widely read.

In his dialogues the writer has depicted the husband as a teacher to his wife. This seems pretty realistic. We desire girls’ education. But we have yet to discover what type of education it should be. For the present, we are only experimenting. But we are not going to bring about women’s education merely through girls’ schools. Thousands

---

1 To Striyon ane Samajseva, written by Bhogindrarao Divetia
2 Karsandas Chitalia, who was associated with the Bhagini Samaj, Bombay, and the Servants of India Society of girls disappear from before our eyes by becoming victims to child marriage as early as at the age of twelve. They become housewives! So long as this sinful custom does not disappear from amongst us, men will have to learn to be the teachers of women. [The fulfilment of] many of our hopes lies in their education in this respect. So long as our women do not cease to be objects of our lust and our cooks and do not become our better halves, sharing our happiness and misery, all our efforts will be futile. Some people regard their wives as animals. Some of the things in our old Sanskrit texts, as also a famous couplet of Tulsidas, are to blame for this. Tulsidas has written in one place: “drums, boors, shudras, animals and women, all are fit to be beaten.” I am a devotee of Tulsidas. But my devotion is not blind. Either the above couplet is an interpolation, or if it is really by Tulsidas, he must have written it without thought, only expressing the prevalent attitude. As for the utterances in the Sanskrit texts, the idea seems to have become fixed that every verse coined in Sanskrit is the word of the scriptures. We must get rid of this false notion and do away with this age-old attitude that regards women as inferior creatures. On the other hand, some of us, blinded by passion, worship women as a goddess or treat her as a doll and decorate her with ornaments as we decorate the idols every day. It is necessary for us to free ourselves of this wrong worship also. Shiva had Uma, Rama had Sita, Nala had Damayanti. When our women, too, participate in our discussions, argue with us, understand and support our utterances, with their extraordinary intuition, understand and share our external troubles and bring to us the balm of peace, then, and not till then, will our salvation become possible. There is very little chance of bringing about such a situation merely through girls’ schools. So long as we carry round our necks the millstone of child-marriage, husbands will have to act as teachers to their wives. And such education must not be confined to a knowledge of letters. Gradually they can be introduced to subjects like polities and social reform. Literacy should not be a precondition to this. Husbands will have to change their attitude towards their wives. Is it not possible for a woman to remain a student till she attains maturity and for the husband to observe brahmacharya till such time? Unless we were crushed with insensibility and inertia, we would certainly not subject a girl of twelve or fifteen to the great strain of child-bearing. The very thought should make us shudder.

There are classes for married women and lectures are arranged for them. All this is fine. Those who are engaged in such activities are sacrificing their time and that too is a matter of credit to them. At the same time so long as men do not do their duty as stated above, we are not likely to get very good results. With a little thought, everyone will find this self-evident. Hence, it may be expected that if the Bhagini Samaj can spread among husbands the desire to educate their wives, its objectives can be attained faster.

MOHANDAS KARAMCHAND GANDHI

[From Gujarati]

Striyon ane Samajseva

231. SPEECH AT ANTI-INDENTURE MEETING, AHMEDABAD

February 4, 1917

Today we, men, have assembled here to register our protest against this system and tomorrow there is to be a meeting of women in the Mahadev temple of Sathodara Nagars. These women’s meetings started with the one at Kanpur. As Mr. Polak and Mr. Andrews report, women labourers suffer very much in the Colonies and hence women too should join in the protest. I have seen in Natal the conditions of indentured women and know what they suffer. Girmit [agreement] is an English term and means binding oneself under a contract to work as a labourer. But the Indian labourers in the Colonies understand by the term girmitio a slave, because they feel their condition to be no better than that of slaves. When the British people had succeeded in putting an end to legalized traffic in slaves, they required another race to work as slaves for them. They have been recruiting these from among Negroes and our people. As Mr. Curtis says, we are only a little better than Negroes. The law permitting recruitment of indentured labour came into being 50 years ago. It had the result of placing Indians in the same condition as slaves. The late Sir William Hunter himself described it as slavery. It was in 1896 that a protest was first made against this enslaving law. It had no effect then and things remained as they were up to 1911. In that year, the practice was prohibited only in respect of Natal. In Fiji, however, the condition of

---

1 As Chairman at the meeting, which was also addressed by Andrews and Polak
2 God Shiva
3 A Brahmin community of Gujarat
4 Vide “Statement on Lionel Curtis’ Letter”, before 14-1-1917.
Indian labourers has been worse than it was in Natal. There was a strong public opinion in Natal, but there is none in Fiji. Lord Hardinge declared last year\(^1\) that the law would be repealed very soon. We had hoped then that it would go after a year or 50. But we hear now, one and a half years after the declaration, that the law will remain for five more years and that afterwards they would see what could be done. This report has revived our concern for the sufferings of our fellow-countrymen and it has become our duty now to raise a strong protest to ensure the immediate repeal of the law. The agitation was launched at Allahabad and, meetings having already been held at Madras, Poona and other places, we also have met here to register our protest. Mr. Andrews has dedicated his life to this struggle. Mr. Gokhale had the fullest confidence in him and, at his instance, Mr. Andrews and Mr. Pearson went to Fiji to see things for themselves. He [Mr. Andrews] had £300 with him—this was all he had—and this he made over to the Satyagraha Fund at Lahore. He no longer wants to be styled Reverend, but thinks it an honour to be known as Tagore’s disciple. Mr. Polak is known to you. He is young, and if the young people here were to do even a tenth of what he has done, we should have swaraj this moment.

[From Gujarati]

_Prajabandhu, 11-2-1917_

232. STATEMENT ON ABOLITION OF INDENTURED LABOUR

[After February 7, 1917]

There is no doubt that we are engaged in a severe struggle for the preservation of our honour and that, if we do not take care, the promise made by Lord Hardinge that indentured labour should soon be a thing of the past may be reduced to a nullity. The Viceregal pronouncement just made\(^1\) seems to set at rest one fear that the system may be prolonged for a further period of five years which, as Sir Ramakrishna Bhandarkar showed at Poona, would in reality mean ten years. We are thankful to Lord Chelmsford for his assurance. And we are thankful, too, to that good Englishman Mr. C.F. Andrews, for the lead that he gave us in the matter. So soon as he gained the

---

\(^1\) Vide the following item.

\(^2\) During the address to the Imperial Legislative Council on 7-2-1917 information from Fiji that five years’ extension was taken by the planters of those lands as a settled fact, he forsook his sick-bed and his rest at Shantiniketan and sounded for us the call of duty.

But if one cloud that threatened to destroy our hopes seems to have disappeared, another equally dangerous looms on the horizon. The conditions of abolition as stated by Lord Hardinge last March1 are these:

On behalf of His Majesty’s Government, he the Secretary of State has asked us, however, to make it clear that the existing system of recruiting must be maintained until new conditions under which labour should not be permitted to proceed to the Colonies should have been worked out in conjunction with the Colonial Office and the Crown Colonies concerned; until proper safeguards in the Colonies should have been provided and until they should have had reasonable time to adjust themselves to the change, a period which must necessarily depend on circumstances and conditions imperfectly known at present.

Those of us who know anything of the system knew that it was well-nigh impossible to find new conditions which would be economically sound for the planters and morally sound for us. We felt that the Government would soon find this out for themselves and that, in view of Lord Hardinge’s whole-hearted disapproval of the system, his view of the nearness of the end would coincide with our2 own. But now a different situation faces us. Nearly a year has gone by and we discover that the planters of Fiji have been led to believe that they will have five years more of the system and at the end of it new conditions may after all be a change in name but not in substance. Let Mr. Bonar Law’s3 despatch speak for itself. Writing under date March 4, 1916, to the Acting Governor of Fiji, he says:

The Secretary of State for India is satisfied that it would not be possible for the Government of India to continue to defeat by a bare official majority resolutions in their Legislative Council, urging the abolition of indenture; that in his opinion the strong and universal feeling in India on this

---

1 In the Imperial Legislative Council on March 20, 1916, accepting Madan Mohan Malaviya’s resolution urging abolition of the indenture system
2 Andrew Bonar Law (1858-1923), Conservative British statesman, Secretary of State for the Colonies and later Chancellor of the Exchequer and Prime Minister
3 Andrew Bonar Law (1858-1923), Conservative British statesman, Secretary of State for the Colonies and later Chancellor of the Exchequer and Prime Minister subject makes it a question of urgency and that he has accepted the conclusion that indentured emigration must be abolished.

He then proceeds:

Though, from the point of view of the Colonies concerned, the decision which the Indian Government and the Secretary of State for India have taken is to be regretted, I recognize that the final decision upon this question must rest with the Indian Government.

Thus, the humanities of the question are tacitly supposed to be no concern of the Colonies.

Now mark this significant paragraph culled from the same illuminating despatch:

I have, therefore, agreed to the appointment of an inter-departmental committee to consider what system should be substituted for the system of indenture, should be allowed for a further period of five years and should cease at the end of that period. . . . The Secretary of State for India is anxious that the change of system should be brought about with the least disturbance as possible to the economic interests of the Colonies and that he has made it clear that the existing system must be maintained until a properly safeguarded system has been devised.

Mr. Andrews has been twitted for having referred to the five years’ extension. Let his critics explain away Mr. Bonar Law’s emphatic pronouncement published in the Fiji newspapers. What with the official statement and the Secretary of State for India’s solicitude for the economic interests of the planters, our cause may easily be lost if we are found unwatchful.

In the light of the Viceregal speech and Mr. Bonar Law’s despatch, our duty seems to be clear. We must strengthen the Government’s hands where necessary and even stimulate their activity so that this inter-departmental committee is not allowed to frustrate our hopes. It is a body wherein the influence of the Crown Colonies and the Colonial Office will be preponderant. It is a body which has to find a substitute which would be acceptable to us. As I hold, it will be a vain search if the mere well-being of the labourer is to be the primary consideration. But if the planters can have their own way, we know that they will urge an impossible substitute and, in the event of its rejection by us, they will, in accordance with Mr. Bonar Law’s despatch, claim continuance of recruiting under indenture. It must therefore be clearly understood that the onus of producing an acceptable substitute rests with them and not with us. They have had more than a year already. Lord Hardinge’s despatch urging total abolition is dated the 15th October 1915. The committee is to sit in May next. This period for finding a substitute is long enough in all conscience. Either Mr. Andrews’ harrowing picture of the conditions of life in Fiji is true or it is untrue. We believe it to be true and it has never been seriously attacked. And in waiting for over a year, we shall have waited almost beyond the point of endurance. Substitute or no substitute, we are entitled for the sake of our own honour and reputation and indeed that of the Empire to the unconditional abolition of this last remnant of slavery. Natal stopped\footnote{The indenture system was brought to an end in Natal by the Indian Government’s refusal in 1911 to allow recruitment.} the system without the provision of a substitute. Mauritius has done likewise. The Johannesburg mines survived not only the shock of an abrupt termination of Chinese labour but the withdrawal of every Chinese labourer from the country as fast as transport could be got ready.

Capital is both bold and timid. If only we shall do our duty, if only the Government of India will steel their hearts against the blandishments of the Fijian and West Indian planters, there is no doubt that these people will know how to save millions without India’s having to go to their rescue.

\textit{Speeches and Writings of Mahatma Gandhi} (4th Ed.), pp. 113-6

\textbf{233. SPEECH AT ANTI-INDENTURE MEETING, BOMBAY} \textit{February 9, 1917}

At a public meeting held at the Excelsior Theatre, Bombay, on February 9, 1917, under the presidency of Sir Jamsetji Jeejibhoy, a resolution, moved by Sir N.G. Chandavarkar, demanding the immediate abolition of indentured labour, was unanimously passed. Mr. H. A. Wadia then proposed that the chairman of the meeting be authorised to communicate the resolution to His Majesty’s Secretary of State for India and H. E. the Viceroy and Governor-General of India by telegram.

Mr. M. K. Gandhi supporting the resolution said that, yielding to the command of his friends on the platform, he had undertaken to speak to them in English on that occasion. The resolution which he supported asked that the preceding resolution be sent to the Secretary of State for India and H. E. the Viceroy by telegram. What was the meaning of this? They had fixed with great deliberation the 31st of May of this year as the last date on which this remnant of slavery should come to an end. (Applause.) It meant that they had slept for nearly 50 years and allowed this system to continue, but that immediately they were awakened to their sense of responsibility and duty, they did not like to sleep for a day longer and it was, therefore, that they wished that the resolution should be wired without a moment’s delay. In passing that resolution, they were strengthening the hands of the Government and were awakening the Colonies to a sense of their duty to consider India as an integral part of the Empire. It would also strengthen the Viceroy’s hands, and H. E. the Viceroy could say that he would no longer govern India if they were not ready to remove the blot of indentured labour before the 31st of May. (Applause.) The honour of the people of India was at stake and they were bound to think of it, waking or sleeping. He asked them to remember the 31st of May. Till then let them not sleep. (Applause).

The Bombay Chronicle, 10-2-1917

234. SPEECH AT ANTI-INDENTURE MEETING, BOMBAY

February 11, 1917

Announcing that the proceedings of the meeting would be in an Indian language, Gandhiji, who was in the chair, said:

The system of indenture under which helpless, illiterate sisters and brothers from our country are reduced to utter misery must end forthwith. We shall fix May 31 as the date by which it should be stopped. Clapping our hands will not avail us much. We shall succeed in our aim only if we approach the intending recruits themselves in their homes and dissuade them from joining up; and this task is yours.

[From Gujarati]

Gujarati, 18-2-1917

1 Held under the auspices of the Home Rule League, Bombay
235. STATEMENT TO THE PRESS ON GOKHALE ANNIVERSARY

DELHI,

February 17, 1917

SIR,

Upon the advice of the Hon. Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya and other friends, I venture to draw public attention to a suggestion I have made to my Ahmedabad friends regarding the celebration of the Gokhale anniversary on the 19th instant. It is to the effect that we should at these meetings take a definite practical step from year to year to promote some public object in keeping with the teachings of the deceased patriot. Ahmedabad will probably raise subscriptions for translating and publishing in Gujarati Mr. Gokhale's speeches to be ready for circulation at the latest on the next anniversary. Other centres may translate other works or may raise subscriptions to found scholarships for some special training. If some such definite and not very ambitious steps are taken at the hundreds of meetings that will be held yearly, the educational advance we shall have in a few years will, it is held, be not inconsiderable.

The Leader, 19-2-1917

236. LETTER TO V. A. SUNDARAM

DELHI,

February 17, 1917

MY DEAR SUNDARAM¹.

May your wishes be fulfilled!

Yours truly,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji's hand: G.N. 3174

¹ One of the earliest inmates of Satyagraha Ashram at Kocharab, Ahmedabad
237. FRAGMENT OF LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

Monday [Before February 19, 1917]

... give ... and if, in consequence, you find it necessary to take more milk, do.

You are right in what you say about education. It is good that you should go on harassing me on the subject. That will keep me more vigilant. I shall not misunderstand your worrying me or be impatient with it.

Tell Dr. Hariprasad that it looks as if I can bring along the article for Gokhale’s death anniversary only when I go there. He should make the necessary arrangements to get it printed on Monday. Whatever collection is possible, he should make at the meeting itself.

You are right in saying that, since the school curriculum provides for Marathi, we too should start learning it. You may discuss with me this and other points concerning education on the day I return from Godhra. Make a note of such points. It is for you to get Popatlal and Fulchand to do any work connected with teaching.

I hope you have completed the accounts and made Fulchand familiar with them.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5709. Courtesy: Radhabehn Choudhri

238. SPEECH ON GOKHALE ANNIVERSARY AT GODHRA

February 19, 1917

Gandhiji presided at a crowded meeting held at Godhra on February 19, 1917 in connection with the Gokhale anniversary, when a resolution was moved appointing a committee to take steps to keep green the memory of Gokhale by furthering the cause of education in the district which was so dear to his heart.

1 The first two pages of the letter are not available.
2 Gandhiji arrived in Godhra on February 19 and presided over the Gokhale death anniversary meeting.
3 Vide “National Gujarati School”, after 18-1-1917.
After the resolution was supported and adopted, Mr. Gandhi rose to deliver his presidential address. The first point he touched was the religious catholicity of Mr. Gokhale, who, on one occasion, rebuked a seeming sadhu who drew a sharp line of difference between Hindus and Mahomedans. Religious convictions were fast dwindling in this country everywhere, but then another religion was developing and that was love of country. Mr. Gokhale cultivated this religion to the highest level to the point where he laid down his life in the service of the Motherland.

Mr. Gandhi dwelt in his own inimitable and impressive manner on two great qualities of Mr. Gokhale which should always go with patriotism: love of truth and fearlessness. Whilst most people expressed opinions which would be palatable to the hearers, Mr. Gokhale always gave to the officials and the public the result of his mature studies and deliberation.

Mr. Gandhi advised all officials, high or low, to take a leaf from the career of Mr. Gokhale who, though highly placed in life as a member of the Imperial Legislative Council, was always kind and gentle towards all his fellow-countrymen. Mr. Gandhi remarked that the feeling of patriotism which pervaded thousands of men, young and old, was running to waste like the river Ganges, which flowed from the Himalayas into the Bay of Bengal, for want of the sterling qualities of truthfulness and fearlessness.

Finally, Mr. Gandhi urged the people of the city to support energetically the Committee which had been appointed to further the cause of education in the district and thanked all who had given him such a magnificent and hearty welcome to the city.

The Bombay Chronicle, 23-2-1917

239. SPEECH AT AHMEDABAD ON SAROJINI NAIDU

---

Seeing sister Sarojini today, I was reminded of Lord Colin Campbell who came out to India as Commander-in-Chief at the time of the Mutiny in 1857. In those days, military officers used camels very freely for transporting luxury articles and they were not available in sufficient number for carrying provisions, etc. Lord Colin Campbell, therefore, kept only one camel for himself and thus tacitly

---

1 At a meeting where an address was presented to Sarojini Naidu on behalf of the local “Students’ Brotherhood”.

2 Mrs. Sarojini Naidu, (1879-1949), poet, patriot, Congress leader and a close associate of Gandhiji reminded the other officers of their duty. This had the effect of reducing in some measure the discontent among the troops. Though Sarojini travels first class, the luggage she carries is contained in just two boxes. I have observed her life at home and come to respect her for that. She has had four children, the youngest being now 13. At present, therefore, she lives very nearly like one in the vanaprastha\(^1\) stage of life. Though a millionaire’s daughter and a millionaire’s wife, she runs her house with great skill. She yearns for one thing only, India’s advance. If she has lashed out at us, it is to urge us to strive for perfection. Hindus and Muslims are the same to her. English has almost become her mother tongue. But she believes we shall make no progress unless Indian languages come into their own. Let us purge ourselves of all our weaknesses and make her lofty ideals our own.

[From Gujarati]

_Prajabandhu, 25-2-1917_

240. _SPEECH AT SURAT ON INDENTURE_

_February 26, 1917_

SISTERS AND BROTHERS,

It is obvious that I, a resident of Ahmedabad, can have no knowledge of civic affairs in Surat. When I arrived here, it was suggested to me that I should take the chair. I was rather surprised. I felt that I was not the proper person to do so. As I knew little about the civic affairs here, I respected the suggestion of local friends and told them that they could put forward my name if my taking the chair would help matters. I am quite conscious of my responsibility. I cannot claim, moreover, that I have come here prepared for the matters to be debated and the resolutions to be passed. This is why I feel I am not the proper person. I shall request you all, sisters and brothers, to overlook any deficiency that you may observe in me. Before I start the proceedings, I shall deliver Mrs. Sarojini Naidu’s message. When she was in Ahmedabad, I told her it would be good if she could go to Surat. But she said she had an important engagement on Sunday. Later, there was a telegram from Dr. Hora and I told her

---

1. The third of the four stages of life, when one prepares for complete renunciation
2. The meeting was held under the auspices of the District Association again that Surat should not feel disappointed and asked her to come along. I also found out from her the nature of her engagement to see if I could urge her to come. The lady has been in bad health for several years past. She has such strength of mind, however, and such is her love for the motherland, that, when occasion demands, she makes it possible to meet it. God alone knows from where she gets the strength, but she who looked worn out just a moment earlier betrays no signs of suffering on her face when she is at work. So wonderful is her strength. There is to be a big meeting in Bombay on the 27th and she must conserve her health to be able to make a complete success of it. As her coming to Surat would have made this impossible, she did not know how to manage it. Even so, we should make every sacrifice and agitate on this issue; if for no other reason, out of consideration for this lady who, an ornament to India, goes up and down all over the country taking no thought of her health. There is no religion among us which does not forbid our undertaking a second task before we have completed the first. You have come forward at this meeting to take upon yourself a great responsibility. But one has no right to assume an additional burden before one has fully discharged a duty already undertaken. What I have in mind is this: I was here last year and you promised to collect a fund for the saint-like Gokhale. I have heard nothing further about it. Mr. Adwani put down Rs. 50/- and the matter never went beyond that. I met him in Godhra but did not have the courage to mention the subject to him. It is not yet too late for you to raise something for the fund, though, of course, collections for the Fund in the charge of Mr. Jehangir Petit are over. I think even the Trust Deed in respect of that Fund is ready. It is still open to you, however, to send contributions to the Servants of India Society. And so everyone should pay, each according to his means. Perhaps Surat, the object of Narmadashanker’s praises, thought that it would either pay in thousands or nothing. But I would say that, if you subscribe Rs. 100/- this time, you will be able to pay Rs. 1,000/- next time. The matter is important for this reason: Mrs. Naidu has been sacrificing herself for the cause. Besides, Mahatma Gokhale was drawn into it in 1896 and in 1912 he made the cause his own. I know also that his speeches at the time affected his health. You should, therefore remind yourselves of your promise to raise a fund in memory of this man who had even sacrificed his life for this cause, and give to it to the best

---

1 A Gujarati poet also called Narmad of your means. The gentleman who proposed me [to the chair] said that, of the two questions, that concerning volunteers [for the Army] was the more important one. I shall say, though, that the question of indenture is more important. It is of course right that we express satisfaction over the right of offering ourselves as volunteers, but the satisfaction will avail us nothing unless we follow up the expression of it with necessary action. In regard to the issue of indenture, on the other hand, it is our unceasing duty to see that no town or village, known or unknown, goes without a protest against this system. You know that I have come from Delhi. I have had meetings with His Excellency the Viceroy and other leaders of the nation. Like Mrs. Sarojini Naidu and the late Mr. Gokhale, Mr. Andrews too has made sacrifices. As he pondered over this problem, he was so upset in mind that he took ill. Even his speech, which has been translated into every language, had to be read out by Mr. Polak. We should now hold public meetings for the purpose. We do not at all embarrass the Government by doing so; on the contrary, we strengthen its hands. The Government itself has admitted that the system is immoral and brings no benefit whatever. Possibly there is some economic gain but, in view of the moral degradation it has brought about, it must be ended. This is an issue on which there is no difference of opinion. The Editor of The Times of India asks who should solve this problem and when. Pat will come the reply: that is exclusively India’s right. On this matter, we can imagine things far more vividly than the Viceroy. I shall give only one illustration of this. The worthy Baji Gauri is ill and her younger sister has been attending on her and has suffered in health in consequence. I, as a resident of Ahmedabad, will not feel this as much as people here, and none will feel as much as the younger sister. If it were otherwise, I would be by her bed-side all the time. In the same way, the Viceroy cannot imagine as well as we can the condition of our own brothers and sisters. We should lay down a time-limit and say that we would tolerate the system up to May 31 and that, if it continued even a day longer, thousands will lay down their lives. The system has been in existence for fifty years. It is a matter of shame for us that, in all these years, it is only recently that we have taken up discussion of a resolution like this. I do not, however, wish to go into that matter. I have had 20 years, experience of this problem and it is but natural, therefore, that my heart should cry out before you and my imagination grow active; I hope you will forgive me if I set out these things before you at such length. The system is but a form\(^1\) of slavery. We have in it, under the British Empire, elements of the very system which England claims proudly to have abolished; this system can be described as slavery for a limited period. All the essential elements of the earlier system are present in this, and one more. It makes one shudder to know all. The system brings India’s womanhood to utter ruin, destroys all sense of modesty. That in defence of which millions in this country have laid down their lives in the past is lost under it.

I am not here to excite your feelings. Mr. Andrews can be far more effective in that way than I. He has given quite a vivid picture. I wish that, when you read the literature on this subject which I have here, you feel as excited as I do. I pray for Smt. Baji Gauri again; may God help her to a speedy recovery. However, her suffering is nothing as compared to that of our sisters beyond the seas. If, to our misfortune, Baji Gauri’s \textit{atman} should leave her body, it would have ascended to a higher existence. But which astronomer here, in this hall, can predict the future of the thousands of her sisters who suffer moral degradation? Every one of us has it in him to treat this disease. We should be ready to sacrifice our all to that end. We should respectfully tell the Viceroy that the practice must be abolished before May 31. Let us take a pledge today that we will not suffer the thing beyond that date. I shall close this chapter here.

I confess myself ignorant in the matter of the right of joining as volunteers. When I first took up the issue, I wondered why India had been denied this right. Perhaps we did not deserve it. The right is now ours. Today, the educated class in India understands my ideas. I am entirely opposed to fighting with arms. I have no faith in the thing. Possession of arms for our or others’ defence will serve no useful purpose; nor have we the requisite strength. I believe that, in place of the strength of a Kshatriya pitted against an armed opponent, soul-force will prove far more potent. There was a great British warrior, General Gordon by name. The man who drew his portrait has won high praise [for his work]. He put into Gordon’s hand neither a sword nor a gun, but only a stick: I would even say that, had the painter drawn him with folded hands and put light in his eyes, on the lips and the entire face, to suggest that the whole world could not shake him from his purpose, that would have been the true Kshatriya character. Such are my views, but all do not find them acceptable.

\(^1\) Literally, a shadow
Some of them have little use for these views and others perhaps do not have the strength to follow them in practice. In this matter, your duty is [not to run away from an enemy]; it will be a grave lapse if you do, saying in excuse ahimsa paramo dharmah. You wish destruction of your enemy some way or other. Because you cherish belief in non-violence, it does not mean that you are effectively observing the rule, for in that rule there is no place for running away in fear. It is your duty to defend those among the Indian people who want themselves, their women, their moral standards and their wealth to be defended. How to do this? Those who have no faith in the principle which is dear to me and which I embrace may certainly take up arms.

It is for this reason that I welcome the right of enlisting as volunteers which has been granted to us. I shall advise the people in this hall to join up. If anyone asks me whether he would be offered a commission or not, I would tell him to reserve such grumbling for the future, and not be too particular for the present and so miss the opportunity offered. Let us tell the Government that we are ready. That will be worthy of us. I now request Advocate Mr. Bejanji to move the first resolution.

Concluding, Gandhiji said:

Before dissolving the meeting, I thank you and the organisers. One thing more: I wanted to make a suggestion concerning collections for the Gokhale Fund, a suggestion which I have made elsewhere. Those who are ready to work as volunteers for this purpose should now post themselves at the gate, and anyone who wants to pay something may give it to them. If this is done, the credit for it will go to Surat. I have with me the resolution of which Mr. Thakoraram wanted a translation. I shall send the translation on to him and he can publish it with necessary changes.

[From Gujarati]

Gujarat Mitra ane Gujarat Darpan, 4-3-1917

---

1 The report of the speech is defective here,
2 Non-violence is the highest virtue.
3 Probably a reference to the resolution on indenture introduced in the Imperial Legislative Council
241. TELEGRAM TO MAHARAJA OF KASIMBAZAR

[AHMEDABAD,
On or after February 26, 1917]

MAHARAJA OF KASIMBAZAR
CALCUTTA
PROCEEDING KARACHI KEEP APPOINTMENT FRIDAY. SEEMS IMPOSSIBLE, REACH CALCUTTA SIXTH.\(^2\) ACCEPTED KARACHI RELYING ON SEVENTH. WIRE KARACHI CARE DURGADAS ADWANI\(^3\).

GANDHI

From a photostat of the draft in Gandhiji’s hand: S.N. 6347

242. TELEGRAM TO C. F. ANDREWS

[AHMEDABAD,
On or after February 26, 1917]\(^4\)

PROCEEDING KARACHI KEEP APPOINTMENT FRIDAY. ACCEPTED SAME THINKING CALCUTTA MEETING\(^5\) SEVENTH. FIX BARNES CONFERENCE DATE SUIT ME. WIRE KARACHI CARE DURGADAS ADWANI. LOVE

GANDHI

From a photostat of the draft in Gandhiji’s hand: S.N. 6348

---

1. This was sent in reply to the Maharaja’s telegram of February 26, which read: “Public meeting sixth March. Kindly stay in Calcutta as my guest. . . .”
2. Gandhiji could reach Calcutta on March 6; vide “Speech at Anti-Indenture Meeting, Calcutta”, 6-3-1917.
3. A Sindhi leader, who suffered imprisonment in the national cause
4. This was sent in reply to Andrews’ telegram of February 26, which read: “Barnes holds conference with Pandit others about March 8th. Needs your presence. . . .”
5. Vide the preceding item; also “Speech at Anti-Indenture Meeting, Calcutta”, 6-3-1917.
243. SPEECH AT HOME RULE LEAGUE
HEADQUARTERS, KARACHI

March 2, 1917

In the course of the day (2nd instant), Gandhi visited the Home Rule League Headquarters twice. On both occasions he spoke to the members, associates and college students on passive resistance and austerity. The love of dress, which Gandhi has noticed among Sindhis, has impressed him unfavourably. One of the members asked him why he went about bare-footed. He replied that unless he maintained austerity, he could not expect the masses to believe in his sincerity. He said that India was too poor and that those who could afford to spend money on dress should refrain from spending it in that way and give it to the poor. Jethmal\(^1\), of the \emph{Hindvasi}, questioned him about passive resistance and Gandhi explained its value by examples from his South African experiences.

He also visited the Hardevi Bai Girls’ Schools and said a few words to the children on education.

He met the Cutchhi and Gujarati community at the Parsi Theatre in the afternoon and told them about indentured labour.

Bombay Secret Abstracts, 1917, p. 146

244. SPEECH AT PARSI THEATRE, KARACHI

March 2, 1917

On his visit, Mr. Gandhi made a definite pronouncement with regard to the duty of Indians to join the Defence of India Force in the Parsi Theatre public meeting, Karachi. He said that Indians had been pressing for admission in the army, time and again, and now as the permission had been granted, they should join in overwhelming numbers, and thus fulfil their duty to the Motherland. Mr. Gandhi said that, in speaking as he had done, he had spoken not as a Passive Resister, but as one claiming to know the Indian mind and understanding India’s present conditions. He held very strong views about the use of weapons even in self-defence but he knew that his views were not shared by those of his countrymen who had for years past been agitating for the reform that had now come. It is an opportunity of a life-time that no lover of his country should miss. Sir Satyendra Sinha\(^2\), in his Presidential address,

\(^1\) Jethmal Parsram, Editor of the \emph{Hindvasi}, a Sindhi man of letters and political worker who later suffered imprisonment in the national cause

\(^2\) Satyendra Prassano Sinha (1864-1928), lawyer, statesman and first Indian to become a member of the Government of India; presided over the Bombay session of the Indian National Congress in 1915 laid stress firstly and chiefly on this point. Sir Krishna Gupta exhorted Indians to first demand entrance in the army, and now as the door had been opened, if they did not avail themselves of this golden opportunity, they would disgrace themselves, their leaders and their country. Business men ought not to allow their business to stand in the way of their duty. Rather, should they know that after all they would be protecting their own business in protecting their own country. If the enemy took possession of their country, because they did not care or were unable to defend it, their business would pass. In Mr. Gandhi’s opinion, this Bill\(^1\) was the first instalment of swaraj, and if they rejected the Government’s advances, they would be rejecting swaraj. It should be accepted unconditionally. It would be time enough, after the whole-hearted acceptance of the scheme, to attack its defects and to purge it of them.

New India, 5-3-1917

245. SPEECH AT ANTI-INDENTURE MEETING AT KARACHI

March 2, 1917

Under the auspices of the Citizens’ Association, Karachi, a public meeting was held in the Khalikdina Hall on the 2nd instant to protest against the continuance of the system of indentured labour. The Hon’ble Mr. Harchandrai, President of the Association, was in the chair....

M. K. Gandhi arrived after the time fixed and informed the audience that he could not attend throughout as he had to catch the mail train to Calcutta, having been invited by the Maharaja of Cassimbazar to be present in that city on the 6th instant.

After speaking in Hindi for half an hour, he left the Hall.

He began by requesting the assembly to send a telegram of condolence to A.
M. Kachalia, who had just lost his nephew\(^2\), and explained how much Mr. Kachalia had done for Indians in South Africa. Gandhi then spoke on indentured labour. After mentioning the various evils of the system, he told the audience that Indians must insist on its abolition by the 31st of May this year. If their request were not acceded to, all practical steps should be taken to prevent Indians from leaving the country for labour in Fiji. Every effort should be made to teach the people to hate the system and to clamour for its suppression.

Bombay Secret Abstracts, 1917, P. 146

---

\(^1\) The Indian Defence Bill

\(^2\) Son, vide the following item.
246. SPEECH AT ANTI-INDENTURE MEETING, CALCUTTA

March 6, 1917

At a public meeting held at the Town Hall, Calcutta, on March 6, 1917, under the presidency of Maharaja Manindra Chandra Nandi, Gandhiji made a statement on indentured emigration to South Africa.

Mr. M. K. Gandhi, in seconding the resolution moved by the chair, said they all expressed their sympathy to Mahomed Kachalia who had recently lost his son. Mr. Kachalia was the president of the Transvaal British Indian Association. He was one of the passive resisters and went to jail again and again. Mr. Gandhi said that the Government did not allow Mr. Malaviya to introduce his Bill because the Government wanted to introduce a measure which would satisfy the people. They all knew that the Viceroy was in sympathy with them, but the Secretary of State for India was opposed to them. He was to weigh the interests of Colonial planters at the cost of the Indians in a scale of gold. Sitting at a long distance, the Secretary of State could not understand the feeling of the Indians. India believed that Mr. Andrews’ report was true. The planters had engaged their best men to go to England and they were pressing for time. If India did not rise to the occasion, the planters would gain the day. It was not the Secretary of State for India but the people who could say when this system should be abolished and they fixed the 31st May for its abolition. They could not contemplate with calmness the shifting of dates from season to season. It was their duty to say that India could not tolerate this wrong a minute longer than the 31st May. No substitute to be brought forward by the London Conference was acceptable to India.

Amrita Bazar Patrika, 7-3-1917

247. LETTER TO MANILAL GANDHI

Ahmedabad,

Wednesday [Before March 7, 1917]¹

CHI. MANILAL,

It was more painful for me to let you go than it was, perhaps, for you to go. But I have often to make my heart harder than steel, for I think that to be in your interest. It will be all to the good if you should get into proper shape there. I want you to learn to think for yourself and, when you find it necessary to resist me, to do so with courage. Make yourself altogether a labourer. That is, I believe, the way to our welfare.

¹ Report on indentured labour in Fiji; vide “Speech on Indentured Indian Labour at Bombay”, 28-10-1915.

² This appears to have been written before the following item.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 111. Courtesy: Sushilabehn Gandhi

248. LETTER TO MANILAL GANDHI

_Ch. Manilal, Phagan Sud 14 [March 7, 1917]_

You must have by now grown an old hand there. Medh’ and Pragji will be with you in a few days so that you will feel the atmosphere of India for some time longer yet.

Do not worry yourself but at the same time take proper treatment for your cough. By way of treatment, deep breathing and a teaspoonful of olive oil will suffice. You will be able to increase the quantity by and by. It can be taken as it is, mixed with a tomato. If you can give up tea, coffee and cocoa, that will help all the more in getting rid of the cough completely. Think carefully about these things and carry them out. Do not neglect deep breathing for any reason. Keep up your studies in the way I have shown you. Do not give up doing sums on any account. A few must be done every day. I would advise you not to pass over any, believing that you know the method. As you do more and more sums, both of the simple and the difficult kind, you will grow more proficient. Do not be slack about them. The same about Sanskrit, and finally, English. In regard to this last, for the present ponder over what I have taught you from Ruskin. Go on reading _Lycidas_\(^3\) and write to me about anything in it which you may not understand.

If you make it a practice to write to Miss Schlesin in English, she will reply to you in English and will also correct your English and

---

\(^1\) The addressee went to South Africa early in 1917.
\(^2\) Surendrarai Medh, a leading satyagrahi during the South African struggle
\(^3\) An elegy by John Milton (1608-74) return to you the letter with the corrections. It will be hard indeed if you cannot find at least two hours every day for study. It is also necessary to form the habit of reading Gujarati books and reflecting over them. All this will be easy if you become regular and get over the habit of day-dreaming.

Blessings from
BAPU

Do not worry about things here.

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 109 Courtesy: Sushilabehn Gandhi

249. FRAGMENT OF LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKAMJI

Ahmedabad, Phagan Vad 11 [March 19, 1917]

The news of Chi. Ramkunvar’s death gives rise to many reflections. Sister Anand’s burden of sorrow is growing heavier, but I know she has the strength to bear it all calmly. You are, yourself, an enlightened man. Make use of your knowledge and preserve your calm.

[From Gujarati]

Bapuni Prasadi

250. LETTER TO ESTHER FAERING

Ahmedabad, March 20, 1917

DEAR ESTHER,

I have an English lady friend1 and her sister’s children who during the hot weather are to live at some hillside place. You are going to some such place. Could you befriend them if they went to the same station as you? Of course they will bear their own expenses. The thing wanted is good companionship. And I thought of you. If you will befriend them, will you please tell me where you would go, when you would leave, where you would stay and whether they could reside and board at the same place as you will? You will also please give me an idea of the expenses there. You have heard of Mr. Polak. The friend is his sister-in-law. While Mr. and Mrs. Polak travel on public business, they are anxious to locate their children in some hillside place where Mr. Polak’s sister-in-law could find suitable company. She is a stranger to India.

1 Miss Graham; vide “Letter to Esther Faering”, 31-3-1917.

With much love from us all,

Yours sincerely,
M. K. Gandhi

The Polaks leave Ahmedabad probably on Monday. I would like you please therefore to wire to me.

If you will address
Gandhi,
Ahmedabad,
the wire will reach me.

M. K. G.

My Dear Child, pp. 4-5

251. OUR SYSTEM OF EDUCATION

March, 24, 1917

It has become customary with us to judge whatever we do by Western standards. We claim that oriental civilization is superior to the occidental, but our behaviour is contrary to what we say. That is why the education of Indian children has become hybrid. Our educational institutions do not produce heirs to the traditions of our saints and seers. It is very sad. I have been thinking on the matter for a long time and I put before the readers the conclusions to which I have come.

No one will quarrel with the principle that pupils should be imparted a general knowledge of the basic occupations of the country. According to this principle, all our boys should be taught farming and weaving, for nearly 95 per cent of the country’s population is engaged in agriculture, while 90 per cent of these used to be engaged in weaving.

So long as the educated among us do not pay attention to these two important matters, we cannot have any idea of the misery of our tens of millions of agriculturists and hundreds of thousands of weavers, nor can there be any improvement in these two pursuits.

We shall not be able to do any work if our body is not healthy. So it is necessary to educate boys in the principles of health and hygiene right from childhood.

Dharma is the basis of everything. A correct knowledge of the scriptures, however, is not possible without a knowledge of Sanskrit. Therefore, every Hindu boy must also learn some Sanskrit. But I think it is very difficult to establish gurukuls everywhere. General education should end with the imparting of general knowledge. Special arrangements can be made for boys who are endowed with extraordinary capacities.

In teaching history and geography, the method followed by the Government should be changed. In teaching these subjects, the emphasis should generally be on knowledge concerning India. My experience is that many a boy knows where Middlesex is but he has no idea about Kathiawar or Sorath. In history they are given a comprehensive knowledge of the United Kingdom, but our Shivaji they consider merely a bandit.

Our boys can solve intricate mathematical problems but are ignorant of simple arithmetic useful in business. They have very little knowledge of the indigenous tables.

Instruction to pupils in all provinces should be given in their mother tongue. Besides this, they should acquire knowledge of two or three other Indian languages.

English should be taught only to a small number of boys and as a foreign language. I am convinced that so long as we are not free of our fondness for English, we cannot achieve real swaraj. Some friends tell me that in the ordinary business of life, like travelling by train or reading a telegram, we are at sea if we do not know English. But we ourselves are responsible for this state of affairs. If through a feeling of inferiority we ignore our religion, our serfdom will only become worse. And millions of our brethren who are never likely to learn English will be reduced to slaves and an unbridgeable gulf will form between them and the English-educated.

The education that is in vogue has no impact on our homes either, although as a rule the whole country should be influenced by the lives of students. Even a little of perfume will spread its fragrance all round. It should be so with the life of a student. In my opinion, the key to swaraj lies not so much in the hands of the Government as in our system of education.

[From Hindi]

Satdharma Pracharak, Gurukul Number, 24-3-1917

252. LETTER TO ESTHER FAERING

AHMEDABAD,
March 31, 1917

DEAR ESTHER,

I am putting you to a lot of trouble on behalf of Mrs. Polak’s sister. But you have chosen the privilege of letting me be your brother. And I have the credit for being most exacting of those who are nearest and dearest to me. Having made the choice, you must be content to suffer.

Miss Graham, that is the sister’s name, may be able at once to go to Ooty. It is necessary for her and young Polak to be on a hillside without delay. I much fear that I shall not be able to go to Madras in April. If I am able to do so at all this year, it will be after your descent from the hills.

With love to you and Miss Peterson from us all,

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

My Dear Child, p. 5

253. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M.K. GANDHI

AHMEDABAD,
March 31, 1917

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I have not written to you for the last 4 weeks. I have been incessantly travelling. You will understand this when I tell you that out of 24 days, I was for 17 nights in the train. Every mail day found me out of reach of the mail steamer. And I was too preoccupied to anticipate the mail day. The reason for this rush was the indenture question which took up all my energy. The question is now satisfactorily solved. The Viceroy has done nobly in the matter.

Your post has become most regular now. For weeks I have only one letter. Health at the Ashram is now quite good. I have partly found the key. Oil did not suit the inmates. From 1/2 lb. per day, I have increased the quantity of milk to 19 lb. per day! Manilal and Ramdas have gone to South Africa to replace Pragji who has returned for his marriage. Maganlal, Devdas, Prabhudas and Maganlal’s children are the only old hands now remaining. Chhaganlal may come. Harilal is getting on nicely at Calcutta. Jamnadas is at Rajkot. Reva-shankar, having finished his training as a weaver, has establi- shed himself at Rajkot.

We have done no agriculture work yet as we have not yet secured a piece of ground.

Polak is in India doing a good deal of travelling. He must have written to you. I shall inquire.

With love,

Your,
OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

254. LETTER TO MILLIE GRAHAM POLAK

AHMEDABAD,
April 4 [1917]

DEAR MILLIE,

After having conferred with Mr. Ambalal, I have come to the conclusion that it is no use relying on the Tyabjis. Ceilia will definitely leave Bombay on the 6th instant. I am sending Mama of the Ashram with her as far as Ooty. The extra expense is a trifle in comparison. Mama will travel in the servants’ compartment attached to the 1st and 2nd-class carriages. He is a most capable and resourceful man for such purposes and he is a much-travelled man.

You will have wires from different places and you need have no anxiety on this score.

I am going to Bombay in advance of Ceilia. I shall not be in Bombay to see her off. But as Mama is with her, I am at ease and I hope you will feel likewise. I must be off now.

With love,

Yours ever,

Bhai

From the original: Gandhi-Polak Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

255. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

BANKIPUR,

Chaitra Vad 3, Samvat 1973, Tuesday [April 10, 1917]

CHI. MAGANLAL,

I got two letters from there, both on the same day. One of them was too heavy and so I had to pay a penalty. I am returning Chi. Narandas’s statement of accounts. You will be able to judge whether the credit entries are correct. It is clear that the amounts debited to Narandas are to be credited to Narandas and debited to Polak. Prabhudas has stayed on at Calcutta. He said he was happy there. It was good that I did not bring him here. The man1 who has brought me here doesn’t know anything. He has dumped me in some obscure place. The master of the house is away and the servants take us both to be beggars. They don’t even permit us the use of their latrine, not to speak of inviting us to meals. I take care to provide myself with a stock of the things I need and so I have been able to maintain complete indifference. I have swallowed a good many insults and the queer situation here does not trouble me. If things go on this way I am not likely to see Champaran. So far as I can see, my guide can give me no help and I am in no position to find my own way. In this condition, I cannot give you my address. Even if I had brought anyone from there for help, he would only have been a burden on me. In addition to carrying my own burden, I would have had to carry his as well. I am only describing the uncertainty of my position. None of you need feel anxious, for I am enjoying a kind of solitude. The house is not so bad. There is facility for bathing and so

1 Rajkumar Shukla, a cultivator of Champaran the body is served well enough. As for the self, this helps it grow.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5710. Courtesy: Radhabehn Choudhri

256. REJOINDER TO RAMSAY MACDONALD

April 11, 1917

We would wish to give our own personal evidence in answer to Mr. Ramsay Macdonald’s suggestion that Mr. Gokhale would probably have signed the majority report of the Public Services Commission if he had lived. We have both of us distinct recollection of Mr. Gokhale himself saying that though he had not given up all hopes of bringing the other members of the Commission, or at least some of them, to his point of view, yet he was afraid that he would be obliged in the end to draw up a minority report in conjunction with Mr. Abdur Rahim.

The Modern Review, May, 1917

257. LETTER TO L. F. MORSHEAD

C/O BABU GAYA PRASAD SINGH,
MUZAFFARPUR,
April 12, 1917

DEAR SIR,

Having heard a great deal about the condition of the Indians working in connection with indigo plantation, I have arrived here to ascertain, so far as is possible, for myself the true position. I would like to do my work with the cognisance and even co-operation, if I

1 Issued after C. F. Andrews had met Gandhiji at Motihari.
2 Issued as an Associated Press despatch from Bankipore on April 11, 1917.
3 Ramsay Macdonald, who was a member of the Royal Commission on Public Services in India, had said: “I am of opinion that he [Gokhale] would have added his signature to ours, and would have contented himself by appending memoranda of his own, indicating detailed points of disagreement.”
4 A judge of the Madras High Court, and a member of the Commission. submitted a separate minute.
can secure it, of the local administration. I shall be obliged if you will kindly grant me an interview so that I may place before you the object of my inquiry and learn whether I may receive any assistance from the local administration in furtherance of my work.

_I am,_
_Yours faithfully,_

M. K. GANDHI

L. F. MORSHEAD, ESQ.
COMMISSIONER
TIRHUT DIVISION

From the original in Gandhiji’s hand in the National Archives of India; also Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 13, p. 57

258. LETTER TO L. F. MORSHEAD

MUZAFFARPUR,
April 13, 1917

DEAR MR. MORSHEAD,

In accordance with my promise made this morning I send you a letter addressed to me by the inviting friends who are at present here.

I fear that I might have failed to convey to you the exact scope of my mission. I therefore re-state it here. I am anxious to test the accuracy of the statements made to me by various friends regarding indigo matters and to find out for myself whether I can render useful assistance. My mission is that of making peace with honour.

_I am,_
_Yours truly,_

M. K. GANDHI

I enclose too a note just given by Babu Arikshan Sinha.

M. K. G.

From the original in Gandhiji’s hand in the National Archives of India: also Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 16, p. 59

---

1 Vide “Enclosures to Gandhiji’s Letter to L.F. Morshead”, 13-4-1917

330 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
259. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

MUZAFFARPUR,

Sunday, April 15, 1917

CHI. MAGANLAL,

The situation here is more serious than I had imagined. It seems to be worse than in Fiji and Natal. However, we shall know better as we proceed with the inquiry.

I have seen the authorities. They may be thinking of apprehending me. I have not a minute to spare here. I am leaving for Champaran right now, and am writing this just as I am leaving. I cannot say when I shall be able to return even if I am not arrested. If I go to jail, this will be my last letter for the present. Whatever happens you will know by wire. Nobody need think of coming here and going to jail. Tell Prof. Shah that we should make the experiment of the national school as planned. Let him begin with Kaka, Fulchand and Chhaganlal. Let somebody from the Ashram help in teaching weaving.

You will receive another Rs. 1,500 from Mr. Petit within a month or two. You may draw Rs. 3,000/- every year. A resolution has been passed to enable us to draw up to Rs. 15,000/- from him. The expenses on account of the satyagrahis and their families have to be met from this amount. If more money is needed, we shall get it.

Help Devdas satisfy his craving for study. Keep writing to the addresses I have given. You may stop after you hear what happens to me.

Blessings from

BAPU

It was very good that I did not bring Prabhudas with me. He was happy in Calcutta. Do write to Doctor.

From a photostat of a handwritten copy of the Gujarati original: S.N. 9815
260. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

MOTIHARI,
Sunday [April 15, 1917]

CHI. MAGANLAL,

I hope you have received my letter from Muzaffarpur. So far nothing has happened. I have arrived at Motihari. Share the news in my letter only with those with whom you deem it proper to do so. If you want to refer anything to me, please do so. I shall reply if I am free. It appears I shall have to stay long here. Let all of you be calm. Share this with all the inmates of the Ashram.

Blessings from

BAPU

Narhari is translating Gokhale’s speeches. So also is Govadia. Make inquiries of them and ask them to do it quickly. Chhaganlal may keep in touch [with their progress].

From a photostat of a handwritten copy of the Gujarati original: S.N. 9816

261. LETTER TO ESTHER FAERING

MOTIHARI,
CHAMPARAN
April 15, 1917

DEAR ESTHER,

Your sweet letter has followed me all the way here. I am almost at the base of the Himalayas. I am studying the condition of the people working under the indigo planters. My work is most difficult. My trust is in God. We can but work and then be careful for nothing.

Pray do not worry about Miss Graham. She has been fixed up at Ooty.

You may address me as Bapu if you like. It means father. In the Ashram it has become a term of endearment. I value your affection very much indeed. You may continue to use the Ahmedabad address.

With love,

Yours sincerely,

M. K. G.

My Dear Child, p. 6
262. LETTER TO H.S.L. POLAK

C/O BABU GORAKH PRASAD,
MOTIHARI, CHAMPARAN,
April 16 [1917]1

DEAR HENRY,

I am here today. Nothing untoward yet. You must have received my letter from Muzaffarpur. I have heard nothing like what I have been experiencing here.

Please forward copy of my letter to Mr. Shastriar and Mr. Petit also. I think that the Imperial Citizenship Association should take it up when the time comes for it. My letter ought not to be made public unless something happens. No private steps too should be taken.

With love,

Yours,

Bhai

From the original: Gandhi-Polak Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

---

1From “Motihari, April 16” in the date-line
2To the Private Secretary to the Viceroy; vide “Letter to Private Secretary to Viceroy”, 16-4-1917.
263. LETTER TO H.S.L. POLAK

FROM M.K. GANDHI

April 16 [1917]

MY DEAR HENRY,

The enclosed will tell you its own tale. I have drawn up [a] memorandum of instructions\(^2\) for the workers here. You will get that also. I may get time to write another letter.\(^3\) I have sent copies to Shastriar, Andrews and Natrajan. Am sending one to the Ashram.

With love,

Yours,

Bhai

From the original: Gandhi-Polak Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

264. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

April 16, 1917

CHI. MAGANLAL,

Please send my gold medal by registered parcel to the Private Secretary to H. E. the Viceroy, Simla. An order to leave the District has been served upon me and I have refused to obey. It is likely that a warrant of arrest or something like it will be served upon me any moment. Lakshmi\(^4\) has come to apply the auspicious \textit{tilak}\(^5\) sooner than expected and I have not stopped even to wash my hands. None of us could have imagined that I should be sent to jail in Bihar, a province hallowed by the footsteps of Ramchandra, Bharata\(^6\), Janaka\(^7\) and Sitaji\(^8\). Even Shri Rama did not know [what would happen

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to J.B. Keiplni”, 17-4-1917 This appears to be a slip for ‘Maganlal’.
\(^2\) ibid
\(^3\) ibid
\(^4\) Goddess of fortune
\(^5\) Vermilion mark. The saying runs, “When Lakshmi comes to put the \textit{tilak} on you, do not go to wash your face.”
\(^6\) Well-known characters in the \textit{Ramayana}
\(^7\) \textit{ibid}
\(^8\) \textit{ibid}
the following morning].

Blessings from

BAPU

If any inquiries are made there about my property, tell them I do not own any.

From a photostat of a handwritten copy of the Gujarati original: S.N. 9818

265. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

MOTHIARI,

Chaitra Vad 9 [April 16, 1917]

CHI. MAGANLAL,

I have already dropped you a postcard, which you will get along with this. I wrote it immediately on receiving the order. Since they have not yet arrested me, I am writing more in this. It is literally true that I did not stop even to wash my face. The Police Inspector [actually] said, “You may wash your face, etc., before you send your reply”, while I said to myself, “I shall do so only after sending my reply.” They arrested me when I was on my way to a village for carrying on the inquiry. They then put me in a bullock-cart and were taking me away. A senior police officer met us on the way and served the order upon me. At first he only said, “The Collector wants you.” I turned back saying nothing. I have refused to leave the District. The penalty for this crime is six months’ imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 1,000. I am awaiting further developments.

Herewith the statement of accounts up to date. Let Chhaganlal make the credit and debit entries accordingly. I have given the necessary details. Prabhudas not being with me is a great comfort.

This part of the country is worth seeing. I shall describe it to you when we meet. It is less hot than there. People are very poor. What a sad plight for the region where Shri Ramachandra lived, enjoyed himself and performed deeds of valour! To go to jail here under such circumstances is a great joy to me. It suggests an auspicious outcome.

I wish your work goes on with double speed. Carry on the experiment of the school; teach the twelve or more students from Kochrab or elsewhere. Purchase land, if all of you approve. If Shastri’s land has sufficient water, I personally like it very much.
Chhaganlal may engage himself in the building work. He may take a monthly payment if he needs it. I wish he takes to his work whole-heartedly and with a glad heart.

Muljibhai ought to stay on in the Ashram until he is quite well. I take it Punjabhai will now be thoroughly engrossed in the Ashram life.

Consult Polak, Andrews or Malaviyaji whenever you feel the need. Do keep writing to Doctor in detail. Write to Mr. Kallenbach giving him all the news. His address is: Dongeas Aliens Camp, No. 3612, Isle of Man. Write to Miss Winterbottom also. More I shall write if I can. I shall send copies, if possible. Inform Dr. Hariprasad and others.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of a handwritten copy of the Gujarati original: S.N. 9817

266. LETTER TO DISTRICT MAGISTRATE, CHAMPARAN

Motihari,

April 16, 1917

SIR,

With reference to the order\(^2\) under section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code just served upon me, I beg to state that I am sorry that you have felt called upon to issue it and I am sorry too that the Commissioner of the Division has totally misinterpreted my position.\(^3\) Out of a sense of public responsibility, I feel it to be my duty to say that I am unable to leave this District but if it so pleases the authorities, I shall submit to the order by suffering the penalty of disobedience.

I must emphatically repudiate the Commissioner’s suggestion that my ‘object is likely to be agitation’. My desire is purely and simply for a genuine search for knowledge. And this I shall continue

---

2. Vide “Order under Section 144 Cr. P.C.”, 16-4-1917.
3. ibid
to satisfy so long as I am left free.

I have the honour to be,

Sir,

Your obedient servant,

M. K. GANDHI

THE DISTRICT MAGISTRATE

MOTIHARI

From the original in Gandhiji’s hand in the National Archives of India; also Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 21, pp. 63-4

267. LETTER TO PRIVATE SECRETARY TO VICE ROY

NOT FOR PUBLICATION

CARE DISTRICT MAGISTRATE,

MOTIHARI,

April 16, 1917

DEAR MR. MAFFEY,

I have come to this district to learn for myself whether there is truth in the allegations of the ryots against the planters. I saw the Secretary of the Planters’ Association and then the Commissioner of the Division, and sought their co-operation. Both politely rejected my advances and dissuaded me from my pursuit. I could not accept their advice, and have been proceeding with my work. The Magistrate has served upon me an order asking me to leave the District. The grounds for the order are such as I cannot subscribe to. I have therefore been reluctantly obliged to disobey the order and tell the magistrate that I shall suffer the penalty for the breach.

My motive is national service and that, too, so long as it is consistent with humanitarian dictates. I understand, because my South African work was considered to be humanitarian that I was awarded the Kaisar-i-Hind Gold Medal. So long as my humanitarian motive is questioned, so long must I remain undeserving of holding the medal.

1 W. B. Heycock
2 Private Secretary to the Viceroy, Lord Chelmsford
3 Vide “Letter to L.F. Morshead”, 12-4-1917.
4 Vide Order under Section 144 Cr.P.C.”, 16-4-1917.
5 Vide the preceding item.
6 Vide entries for June 4 and June 26, “Diary for 1915”.

VOL. 15: 21 MAY, 1915 - 31 AUGUST, 1917 337
I am therefore asking my people to return the medal to you,¹ and I shall feel honoured to receive it back if it is returned to me when my motive is no longer questioned.

As to the question itself, so far as I have been able to examine the evidence, given to me, it shows that the planters have successfully used the Civil and Criminal Courts and illegal force to enrich themselves at the expense of the ryots, and that the ryots are living under a reign of terror and that their property, their persons, and their minds are all ‘under the planters’ heels. One man graphically said to me: “We belong to the planters, not to the Sirca’. Thana¹ is nowhere, the planters are everywhere. We take what they allow, and we keep what they permit.” I had hoped that a deeper examination would have toned down the impression formed by me. Had I been left free, I would have concluded my studies and placed the results at the disposal of the authorities. I wish that His Excellency would consider the matter serious enough to have an independent inquiry made. The local administration admit that they are sitting upon a mine so dangerous that they cannot tolerate my presence. And yet they manage to be satisfied with the slow inquiry of a settlement officer. Everything will depend upon swiftness and the proper choice of the members of the Committee of Inquiry. This is the least that the ryots are entitled to. Will you please place this before the Viceroy and ask for his forgiveness for sending such a long letter in the midst of many imperative calls upon his time. The urgency of the matter is the sole excuse for this letter.

I am, etc.,

M. K. GANDHI

From a copy of the original: C. W. 7596. Courtesy: H. S. L. Polak

¹ Vide “Letter to Maganlal Gandhi”, 16-4-1917.
² Government
³ The police office
268. INSTRUCTIONS FOR WORKERS

[April 16, 1917]

The programme of study should be gone through as if I was not imprisoned, that is

1. Villages should be visited systematically and notes of evidence of everyone examined should be taken.

2. Where the party consents to sign the notes, his signature or thumb impression should be taken.

3. Evidence should be taken even where the parties decline to sign. Reason for refusal should be noted.

4. Evidence of pleaders who had anything to do with the case of the ryots should be requested and it should be after the pattern suggested for Gorakh Babu.

For this, evidence as many workers as would come forward should be taken. It is to be wished that many workers who would come forward would not be deterred from pursuing their inquiry even though they may receive notice of removal.

They should quietly go to gaol if they are summoned and tried for disobedience. I suggest that no defence be offered.

The ryots should be instructed definitely not to use violence whether regarding their own grievances or regarding imprisonment of those who may come to assist them. But they can be and should be told that where they know they are being unjustly treated, that is, required to plant indigo when they need not, rather than go to law, they should simply refuse to plant indigo and if for so refusing they are imprisoned they should suffer imprisonment. This requires very careful explanation. Where the workers do not understand the working of this quiet resistance or do not appreciate the force of it, they may drop this point of the programme.

When the workers of this first class are exhausted or not found at all, second class workers should be enlisted to collect evidence at

---

1 About continuance of work in Champaran, as Gandhiji, who defied the order of the Magistrate to leave the district, expected he would be imprisoned
2 Prepared on the night of the 16th; vide "Letter to H.S.L. Polak", 17-4-1917.
3 Gorakh Prasad (1869-1962), a pleader of Motihari, for sometime host of Gandhiji in Motihari centres where their presence is not resented. Ryots may be quietly asked to come to such centres and give evidence. All documents should be collected and classified. The work ought not to take more than six weeks. At the end of the inquiry the whole of the evidence oral or documentary should be printed for private circulation. In the first instance if no one will print it, it should be typed. All the papers and evidence should be collected at one spot and sifted and marshalled under one man’s direction. Babu Brijkishore Prasad\(^1\) should take it up unless Mr. Andrews arrises and does the marshalling.

Further action should be taken after consultation with a small all-India committee under Panditjee\(^2\) or Mr. Shastri\(^3\). There should be a demand for an impartial inquiry containing a number (equal with that of the planters’ representatives) of Indians representing the ryots. Our representatives must be of our choice.

Pending inquiry planters should institute no civil suits for damages, etc., and an impartial person should be present at the time of distribution of wages daily or otherwise.

Workers should be paid where necessary. If funds cannot be raised locally, the Imperial Citizenship Association should be asked.

From a facsimile of the original given in Mahatma, Vol. I

269. LETTER TO ESTHER FAERING

MOTIHARI,

April 17, 1917

MY DEAR ESTHER,

I know you will want me to tell you that I am about to be imprisoned. I have come here to remove some labour grievances. The authorities do not want me. Hence the impending imprisonment. Do ask Mr. M. at the Ashram to send you some papers, and you will know. I am absolutely joyed to think that I shall be imprisoned for the sake of conscience.

Yours

(if you want me to sign)

BAPU

My Dear Child, pp. 6-7

---

1. Leading advocate of Darbhanga, member, Bihar and Orissa Legislative Council and active co-worker of Gandhiji
2. Madan Mohan Malaviya
3. V. S. Srinivasa Sastri
270. LETTER TO HERMANN KALLENBACH

FROM M.K. GANDHI

MY DEAR FRIEND,

I am on one of the loveliest spots of the earth very near the Himalayas and yet I cannot get a glimpse of them. Just now it is 3 a.m. I have been writing the whole night. I have come here to settle some labour troubles. The authorities do not want me. They have asked me to leave. I do not go. I am therefore to be tried for contempt.¹ You will not hear from me now for some months, perhaps. I have asked Chhaganlal² to write to you. There is nothing from you.

With love,

Yours,

OLD FRIEND

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

271. LETTER TO H. S. L. POLAK

FROM MOTIHARI,

MY DEAR HENRY,

I know you are saying “well done” all the time. I am recalling the best days of South Africa. And to have them in a place where Rama and Janaka lived! The people are rendering all assistance. We shall soon find our Naidoos³ and Sorabjis⁴ and Imams⁵. I don’t know that we shall stumble upon a Cachalia⁶.

I am still without the necessary summons for contempt. Evidently they little expected the answer⁷ I have given.

¹ V. S. Srinivasa Sastri
² This appears to be a slip for ‘Maganlal’; ibid
³ Valiant fighters in the satyagraha struggle in South Africa
⁴ ibid
⁵ ibid
⁶ ibid
⁷ Vide “Letter to District Magistrate, Champaran” 16-4-1917.
I sent you last night the papers to your Allahabad address. The papers ought to have gone to Bankipore last night. But they did not somehow. I am now sending you a special messenger. Please show them to Muzharul Haque too. He has telegraphed offering to come if required. I have replied saying he may come after my imprisonment. Whilst I am free, I want only volunteers who will go from village to village and hear what the people have to say.

From the memorandum of instructions hurriedly drawn up last night you will observe what is wanted. Two things may be done by the leaders there: urgent demand for an impartial quick inquiry, a body of staunch learned volunteers (100) who would go to different villages and live there protecting the people from molestation and gathering information. If the authorities object to the volunteers, they should not take ‘no’ for an answer. The volunteers should be, so far as possible, Beharees. Theirs should be the credit.

I still feel that so far as you are concerned, you need not throw yourself into the fray. I have asked Andrews to come. I want you to feel free and prepared to go to England and settle there. I cannot go into all the reasons just now.

Gorakh Prasad Babu here will give you all the information during my absence. If there is no summons I disappear in the villages tomorrow and may not return for two days.

With love,

Yours,

Bhai

Later—

You will see from the magistrate’s reply that I am to be ‘fixed up’ tomorrow. So I do not go to the villages.

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 2821

---

1 (1866-1930), nationalist leader of Bihar; one of the founders and, later, President of the Muslim League; a member of the Congress delegation to England, 1914; supported Gandhiji during the Champaran and non-co-operation movements

2 Vide “Instructions for Workers”, 16-4-1917.

3 Vide “Letter to District Magistrate, Champaran”, 17-4-1917
272. LETTER TO J. B. KRIPALANI

MOTIHARI,
April 17 [1917]

MY DEAR FRIEND¹.

I read your affection in your eyes, in your expression, in your postures. May I be found worthy of all this deep love! Yes I know you want to help. You shall have your choice. Either go to Ahmedabad and work there for the experimental school or come and work here even at the risk of imprisonment. All this if I am imprisoned. If you want me to choose for you seeing that you are here, your natural place is not to quit the place until the ryots have their freedom to breathe like men. For me now Champaran is my domicile. Every day’s inquiry confirms me in my opinion that the position in many respects is worse than in Fiji.

There is no summons yet for contempt.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. Gandhi

Prof. Malkani has to give me the statistics.

M. K. G.

I gave to the teacher of the Training School or some school my only copy of the Hindi rules under promise to return. Please trace it and if you find it, send it to Ahmedabad.

M. K. G.

From a photostat: G. N. 2822

273. LETTER TO DISTRICT MAGISTRATE, CHAMPARAN

MOTIHARI,
April 17, 1917

THE DISTRICT MAGISTRATE
MOTIHARI
sir.

As I have no desire to do anything without the knowledge of the authorities, I beg to inform you that (assuming there is no service of summons for appearance before the court tomorrow) I am going to Shampur and the surrounding villages tomorrow morning. The party hopes to start about 3 A.M.

¹ Acharya J. B. Kripalani; vide “Letter to Kaka Kalelkar”, 2-5-1917.

I observed yesterday that a police officer followed the party all the way. I may state that we court the fullest publicity and therefore beg on my own behalf and that of my colleagues to say that we shall welcome the presence, if we may not have the assistance, of the police in the course of our mission.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
M. K. GANDHI

From the original in Gandhiji’s hand in the National Archives of India; also Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 23, p. 67

274. ACKNOWLEDGEMENT
April 17, 1917

Received a letter from the District Magistrate.

M. K. GANDHI

From the original handwritten signed and dated by Gandhiji in the National Archives of India

275. LETTER TO DISTRICT MAGISTRATE, CHAMPARAN

MOTIHARI,
April 17, 1917

SIR,

In reply to your note of even date, I beg to state that I shall gladly remain in Motihari tomorrow and await summons.

I have the honour to be,
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
M. K. GANDHI

From the original in Gandhiji’s hand in the National Archives of India; also Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 25, p. 68
Mr. Gandhi appeared before the District Magistrate on Wednesday, the 18th instant. He read the statement printed below, and being asked to plead and finding that the case was likely to be unnecessarily prolonged, pleaded guilty. The Magistrate would not award the penalty but postponed judgement till 3 p.m. Meanwhile he was asked to see the Superintendent and then the District Magistrate. The result was that he agreed not to go out to the villages, pending instructions from the Government as to their view of his mission. The case was then postponed up to Saturday, April 21. With the permission of the Court, I would like to make a brief statement showing why I have taken the very serious step of seemingly disobeying the order made under Section 144 of the Criminal Procedure Code. In my humble opinion, it is a question of difference of opinion between the local administration and myself. I have entered the country with motives of rendering humanitarian and national service. I have done so in response to a pressing invitation to come and help the ryots, who urge they are not being fairly treated by the indigo planters. I could not render any help without studying the problem. I have, therefore, come to study it with the assistance, if possible, of the administration and the planters. I have no other motive and I cannot believe that my coming here can in any way disturb the public peace or cause loss of life. I claim to have considerable experience in such matters. The administration, however, have thought differently. I fully appreciate their difficulty, and I admit too, that they can only proceed upon information they receive. As a law-abiding citizen, my first instinct would be, as it was, to obey the order served upon me. I could not do so without doing violence to my sense of duty to those for whom I have come. I feel that I could just now serve them only by remaining in their midst. I could not, therefore, voluntarily retire. Amid this conflict of duty, I could only throw the responsibility of removing me from them on the administration.

I am fully conscious of the fact that a person, holding in the public life of India a position such as I do, has to be most careful in setting examples. It is my firm belief that in the complex constitution under which we are living, the only safe and honourable course for a self-respecting man is, in the circumstances such as face me, to do what I have decided to do, that is, to submit without protest to the penalty of disobedience. I have ventured to make this statement not in any way in extenuation of the penalty to be awarded against me, but to show that I have disregarded the order served upon me, not for want of respect for lawful authority, but in obedience of the higher law of our being—the voice of conscience.¹

The Leader, 22-4-1917, also Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 28, pp. 69-70

277. TELEGRAM TO ASHRAM, AHMEDABAD

MOTHARI,
April 18, 1917

TO GANDHI
AHMEDABAD

MAGISTRATE POSTPONED JUDGEMENT DESPITE PLEA GUILTY. HAVE AGREED NOT GO VILLAGES TILL SATURDAY PENDING INSTRUCTIONS GOVT. REGARDING MISSION NO PUBLIC AGITATION SHOULD BE STARTED JUST YET.

GANDHI

From a photostat of the telegram as delivered: S.N. 9819

278. LETTER TO S. K. RUDRA

MOTHARI,
April 18, 1917

DEAR MR. RUDRA².

You will expect a word from me before I am locked up. Our people here are sinking and if I can remain free only by removing myself from the ryots here, I should deem it a privilege to be imprisoned. Of this place, perhaps, it could be truly said what Bishop ¹Vide Appendix “Enclosures to Gandhiji’s letter to L.F. Morshead”, 13-4-1917.

² Sushil Kumar Rudra, Principal, St. Stephen’s College, Delhi
Heber’ (was it not?) wrongly said of Malabar and Ceylon—“Every prospect pleases, man alone is vile.”1 In some respects, conditions are much worse than in Fiji. I assume that you know something about what is happening to me. For more, please ask Andrews to send you the papers. I have not the time to say more.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From the original: C. W. 5795. Courtesy: Raj Mohini Rudra

279 LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

BABU GORAKH PRASAD’S RESIDENCE,
MOTIHARI, NORTH BIHAR,
Chaitra Vad 13 [April 19, 1917]1

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

God’s ways are inscrutable. Those who wish to go to jail are unable to do so. Those who want to keep out, find themselves inside. You are aware of all the facts.4 Mr. Andrews arrived here last night. Messrs. Polak and Mazharul Haque also called. Mr. Andrews will leave in a day or two. He wanted to stay on, but I did not agree. He will now go to Fiji.

From now on, write to me at the above address. I have got word that Government officials have been asked to co-operate with me fully.5 So it would seem that my having to go to jail has been postponed for the time being. The work here is heavy. It is very much to my liking. The situation is much like what it was in Natal. I go

---

1 Reginald Heber (1782-1826), Bishop of Calcutta
2 The actual lines are:
   “What though the spicy breezes
   Blow soft o’er Ceylon’s isle,
   Though every prospect pleases,
   And only man is vile.”
3 The year has been inferred from Gandhiji’s stay at Motihari. Chaitra Vad 13 corresponded to April in 1917.
4 Gandhiji was served with a notice to leave Champaran District by the first available train. He appeared in the District Magistrate’s Court on April 18 and the case was postponed till April 21; vide “Letter to District Magistrate, Champaran”, 16-4-1917, “Statement Before the Court”, 18-4-1917.
5 The Government withdrew the proceedings against Gandhiji; ibid about my work surrounded by hundreds of labourers. I have resumed taking cooked food from today. Fruit diet seems very expensive. there is scarcity of fruit even in such a fertile land.

I do not see any chance of my going back in the immediate future. It may be that I shall have to spend six months here. It is another matter that I may go over there briefly for a day or two. In that eventuality we have to consider whether anyone should come here. Whoever comes cannot hope to study. He can only gain experience of the place. In my view, nobody need come. I am able to get whatever help I need. I feel that it is essential that the activities of the Ashram should be carried on well. But I would not interfere. Should anyone decide to come here, he should consider his step from all angles. I think it would be best to withdraw the amount that stands in my name in the bank and credit it to Chhaganlal’s account.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 11169. Courtesy: Chhaganlal Gandhi

280. LETTER TO W. B. HEYCOCK

MOTHARI,
April 20, 1917

DEAR MR. HEYCOCK,

Will you please tell me where I have to wait on you tomorrow? I forgot to ask you when you gave me the appointment.

I am,
Yours truly,
M. K. GANDHI

From the original in Gandhiji’s hand in the National Archives of India; also Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 39, p. 79
281. TELEGRAM TO PRIVATE SECRETARY TO LT. GOVERNOR OF BIHAR AND ORISSA, PURI

MOTHARI,
April 21, 1917

BEG THANK HIS HONOUR WITHDRAWAL PROCEEDINGS AND INSTRUCTIONS LOCAL OFFICIALS GIVE ME FACILITIES DURING INVESTIGATION.

Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 41, p. 80

282. STATEMENT TO THE PRESS

BANKIPUR,
MOTHARI,
April 21, 1917

The proceedings are withdrawn under instructions from Government. Official assistance during the conduct of my enquiry has been promised and I feel grateful to Government for the withdrawal of the proceedings and promised assistance. I am being splendidly helped by local pleaders and others and messages of sympathy and promise of help have been received from many quarters, which encourage my fellow-workers and myself. During my stay here, I have already visited some villages and seen hundreds of ryots. The officials have shown every courtesy throughout. While I am carrying on this enquiry, no public agitation is necessary. The issues involved are tremendously great. I hope to place my final conclusions before Government and the country.

The Leader, 23-4-1917; also Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 46 (E), pp. 86-7

1 According to Bombay Secret Abstracts, 1917, p. 254, ‘on 22nd April in the morning a wire was received at the Ashram from Gandhi, summarising the statement’ and adding ‘This may be published’. S.N. 9820.
283. LETTER TO W. B. HEYCOCK

MOTIHARI,
April 22, 1917

DEAR MR. HEYCOCK,

I thank you for your kind note of yesterday. I am writing to Mr. Cox today.
I leave for Bettiah this afternoon.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From the original in Gandhiji’s hand in the National Archives of India; also Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 45, p. 83

284. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

MOTIHARI,
Vaishakh Sud [1] [April 22, 1917]

CHI. CHHAGANLAL.

I have your letter. You must have received my telegram. Meetings with the Magistrate, etc., have started. I visualize the same situation here as was there in South Africa. Perhaps the result may be quicker here. I am going to Bettiah today and may spend about eight days there. Keep on writing to me at the Motihari address. You would have by now returned the Kaiser-i-Hind medal. That news . . . Mr. Andrews has left for Bombay.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32885

1 Herbert Cox, of Paddumkair factory, Secretary of the District Planters’ Association
2 From the contents and ‘Motihari’ and Vaishakh Sud in the date-line. Gandhiji says in the letter that he is “going to Bettiah today”. In the year 1917, he left Bettiah on April 22, which corresponded to Vaishakh Sud 1. Also vide “Letter to W.B. Heycock”, 22-4-1917.
3 A few lines here are illegible in the source.
285. LETTER TO H.S.L. POLAK

BETTIAH,
April 26 [1917]

DEAR HENRY,

We are getting together extraordinary evidence.¹ No more today than hasty chit. Keith’s¹ comments and minutes ought not to be published. Hope Millie and Waldo are better. Mama writes saying that he was not leaving Ceilia before the Petits arrived and that attitude was not nice for her.

With love,

Bhai

H.S.L. POLAK
C/o DOCTOR SAPRU
ALLAHABAD

From the original: Gandhi-Polak Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

¹ From the post-mark, Gandhiji was in Bettiah on this day.
² Gandhiji had begun his investigations into the agrarian conditions of the ryots of Champaran; vide also “Statement of Peasants taken by Gandhiji”, 19-5-1917 & “Government notice inviting Evidence before Champaran Agrarian Enquiry Committee”, July 1917.
³ A.B. Keith, a constitutional lawyer of England
286. LETTER TO MAHATMA MUNSHIRAM

BETTIAH,
Vaishakh Shukla 5 [April 26, 1917]¹

MAHATMAJI,

I was very glad to receive your letter. The new name² you have adopted is really most appropriate.

The work here is enormous. Tyranny, by God’s grace, will end. But I shall certainly have to stay over here for four to six months. Babu Brajkishore Prasad and others who are helping me are all worthy people.

Yours,

M OHANDAS G ANDH I

From a photostat of the Hindi original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 2209

287. LETTER TO W. H. LEWIS

BETTIAH,
April 28, 1917

DEAR MR. LEWIS³,

I have your note of even date. I thank you for having sent me your letter⁴ to Mr. Heycock for perusal, I appreciate the frankness that pervades it, and it is, on the whole, a very fair summary of what has happened between us.

As to the guns, I think you are somewhat unnecessarily offended. I mentioned the matter to you on Mr. Heycock’s suggestion, and if you admit the propriety of my having spoken to you about the matter, I could not be blamed for having told the aggrieved parties that there was a probability of their getting back their guns. This, if anything, was done to create a good impression about yourself—an impression which, I am happy to say, I carried with me when I first met you and which I have had no reason to ¹ Gandhiji was in Bettiah on this day.

² Swami Shraddhanand
³ Sub-divisional Officer of Bettiah
⁴ Select Document No. 52, not reproduced here

352 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDH I
change since. There was certainly no interference on my part with your authority.

I venture to think that your deduction, too, that in the estimation of the raiyats I am superseding local authority is hardly warranted by facts. My mission is to invoke the help of local authority in their aid, and to stimulate its interest in them more fully than heretofore.

I anticipate no trouble, because I always make it a point to seek an interview with the planters wherever I go, to tell the people that relief is to come not from me but from the planters and the Government, and that they are in no case to use violence or stop work but continue it as before as if there was no enquiry being made by me, and also because the enquiry is absolutely open and attended by representatives of the police department, as also the planters.

You are less than fair to Babu Brajkishore Prasad. Together with other friends from Bihar, he is helping me very materially. In this enquiry he has no status apart from me: hence he and the other friends have not called on you. But I must state that their assistance has been of the greatest value to me.

Perhaps it is but fair to the planters to say that Mr. Still\(^1\) has of his own motion invited me to visit his dehat\(^2\) and remain there as long as I like and that Mr. Cox has written to me saying that he is arranging a meeting with some leading planters, and concludes “you may be sure that we wish to assist you in your enquiry”. This perhaps is in conflict with your statement, “By the planters he (I) is regarded with great suspicion as their natural enemy.”

I wish to serve my countrymen and the planters through the Government where their assistance is necessary.

Yours truly,

M. K. GANDHI

Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 51, pp. 98-9

---

\(^1\) C. Still of Sathi indigo concern

\(^2\) Dehat or dihat the adjoining area under the influence of an indigo factory
288. LETTER TO DR. H. S. DEVA

BETTIAH,
CHAM PARAN,
April 29 [1917]

DEAR DR. DEVA,

Your Geography is at fault. This is not Assam. This is North Bihar. This is the land of Janak to which Vishwamitra took those two youngsters, Rama and Lakshman. Nature’s bounty has been lavished as unstintingly as man has abused his power. The position is so bad that I dare not leave here even for a day. I have cancelled all appointments. I cannot be with you in Nasik, much as I should like to be.

We are taking the statements of men who come to us as fast as we can. In a few days, I may have something to report. I have kept Mr. Shastriar supplied with all the information to date.

Although I am not in gaol, I shall still look up to you to finish the programme about the translation of Mr. Gokhale’s speeches.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5797

289. LETTER TO TURNER

AHMEDABAD,
April 30 [1917]

DEAR MR. TURNER,

I was indeed delighted to hear from you and hear about our

1 From the reference to the geographical situation of the place, the letter seems to have been written soon after Gandhiji first visited Champaran.
2 Inferred from the reference to withdrawal of proceedings against Gandhiji during his tour of Bihar in 1917; vide “Letter to W.B. Heycock”, 20-4-1917

354 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
friend. Yes, I have felt anxious about him these months having heard nothing from or of him. I have been writing most regularly to him. He gave me, when his departure was imminent, his new address and I wrote several letters to that address. Having received no acknowledgement of these letters I resumed writing to his Douglas address. But I have practically no acknowledgment of all these letters of mine. Pray tell him that we all think of him and miss him so often. I miss him most of all. Just now I am in the northern part of India. It is a country “Where every prospect pleases, man alone is vile.” Here at first my presence was resented by the local authority. I received a summons to leave the country. I declined. I was summoned to answer a charge of contempt. I pleaded guilty. But the court had not the courage to sentence me. Meanwhile came instructions from the superior authority that the proceedings against me should be withdrawn and that I should be allowed to proceed with my work. My work is to examine the condition of the peasantry who are working under the indigo planters who are alleged to be treating the peasantry in a most high-handed manner. I have been carrying on my inquiry and I find the position to be as bad as it was painted. I am still going on with the inquiry. It is here I miss our friend’s presence. I cannot imagine myself doing this class of work without him. I know he would have been delighted to be in the thick of it. He would have walked with me to the villages and lived with me among the simple folk. He would have seen the planters. He would have made friends with them and would have played an important part in bringing about a settlement. But that was not to be. He must pay the penalty that modern civilization exacts from us —man against man to gain man’s so-called freedom. It is like darkness being used to dispel darkness. We are living in an age of materialism. We are always hoping for the best to happen though unconsciously doing the opposite to achieve the best. I hope with you that the agony will soon end. But the hope is against my reason. My reason tells me that the peace which we shall have will be mockery; it will be an armed truce to me, it will be the outcome not of one party admitting being in the wrong but both being fairly exhausted and deserving rest. Such a peace is bound to 1 Herman Kallenbach, who left South Africa for India with Gandhiji was not allowed by the British Government to go to India because of the War and was interned in London.

2 The actual lines by Reginald Heber are: “Though every prospect pleases/And only man is vile.”

VOL. 15: 21 MAY, 1915 - 31 AUGUST, 1917 355
lead to a bloodier strife unless the intervening period brings about a change of hearts. Whilst I write this setting on a stool in a hamlet, I am not forgetful of the distress you are passing through there. We are only a glimpse of what you are going through. We wish that all this great sacrifice had been made for a better cause. But nature has her own ways. Good often comes out of evil. Let us hope it will in this case also.

I am glad our friend is flourishing so far as his bodily health goes. Pray tell him not to worry over his South African affairs. He left them in the best hands available and there they must rest. The circumstances that will face him on his release will provide their own remedy.

I hope you will make sure of this reaching our friend even if it means your having to go to him. If you will give me the privilege of paying for your journey, I should be glad to do so.

Now that you have commenced writing, I hope you will allow yourself to be the link between our friend and me. Unless there is anything of importance I shall not write to you until I hear from you. To make sure of this reaching you, I am having the letter sent by registeres post.

Thanking you most sincerely for having written to me about our friend.

Yours ever,

M. K. GANDHI

From the original: Gandhi-Kallenbach Correspondence, Vol. III, pp. 922-7. Courtesy: National Archives of India
290. LETTER TO KASHI GANDHI

BETTIAH,

Vaishakh Sud [April, 1917]¹

CHI. KASHI,

I have your letter. If you feel it is necessary for you to go to Madhavpur for the sake of your health, do go. Ahmedabad would be very hot these days. Will Krishna have to accompany you or will he stay behind? It will take time for you to get rid of the weakness. At the moment I cannot advise you to take porridge of boiled fruits. There is nothing wrong in your taking almonds. The more you worry about gaining strength enough to do your work, the more time you will take to get well. Come to Ahmedabad as soon as it starts raining there. . . ²

From the Gujarati original S.N. 33085.

291. LETTER TO W. B. HEYCOCK

MOTHARI,

May 2, 1917

DEAR MR. HEYCOCK,

I came to Motihari last night. You may be aware that I am to meet the planters this morning at 10.45. You will please let me know if you want me.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From the original in Gandhiji’s hand in the National Archives of India; also Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 58, p. 110

¹ From ‘Bettiah’ and Vaishakh Sud in the date-line; Gandhiji was at Bettiah in the month of Vaishakh only in the year 1916. In 1918, he went there just for a day and is unlikely to have written the letter then.
² The letter is incomplete.
292. LETTER TO ESTHER FAERING

MOTIHARI,
CHAMPARAN,
May 2, 1917

DEAR ESTHER,

I have just received your letter from Ahmedabad. To say ‘I thank you’ would be in your case an empty form. Your interest is much deeper. My experiences here give the greatest joy. The suffering I see around me gives me equal pain. I know that you feel for me because you would like to be in the thick of it all yourself. But your work is cut out for you. For those who are at a distance from you, you can but pray. And that you are doing with all your heart.

I may not be able to leave this place for six months. One of these days, I shall describe to you the nature of the work I am doing here.

Do please go to the Ashram whenever you can. It is one of your homes if one may have more than one.

You may write to me at the address given at the top.

With love,

Yours,

BAPU

My Dear Child, p. 7

293. LETTER TO KAKA KALELKAR

BETTIAH,
MOTIHARI,
Vaishakh Sud 11 [May 2, 1917]¹

BHAISHRI KAKA,

I have your letter. It is good you went over to the Ashram. I may perhaps need you here² but I will not ask for your help. Your work at present is to lose yourself in the National School experiment.

¹ The addressee went over to the Ashram in 1917.
² In Champaran, where Gandhiji later started schools and welfare activities
I think it is a very important experiment. I should like you to see Prof. Shah and start work immediately. Write to Mr. Sadashiv to tell him that he may possibly be needed. I will call him up then. Is he ready to come along with his family? He must give at least six months. Perhaps more.

If Shastri’s plot is not otherwise inconvenient and the water there is good, it should be secured without any delay. Do you think it will be possible to put up tents or thatched huts while Construction work is under way? I don’t care if the analyst’s report on the soil is not favourable. The water must be good. For the school, we want 12 to 20 pupils for the present. It will be better if they are drawn from good families. Rather, let them be what they are. If it is decided to settle on Shastri’s plot, boys from adjoining villages may be invited. However, so long as we can get them from Ahmedabad city, it will be preferable not to bring in villagers to join the experiment. But one need not be particular in this matter; we should carry on with any boys who may join.

If the teacher has any real worth in him, the mechanical side of education will take care of itself. If they tell stories from the Ramayana, everyone will follow them as well as he can. In agriculture, they will acquire equal proficiency. Spiritual awakening will require [a mind disposed that way through] early influences. How can we know whether we shall come upon such influences in cities or villages? Show this to Prof. Shah and request him on my behalf to take up this work in all earnestness. I shall write to him if I find time.

Kripalani is in Muzaffarpur. He wanted to know from me what he should do. I told him that, since he was here, he should join in the work here. There has been no reply from him.

Vandemataram from Mohandas

Reassure [them] about Chintamani Shastri that, so long as Sind needs him, we shall not ask him to join us.

From a copy of the Gujarati original: C.W. 5712. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

1 Vide “Letter to J. B. Kripalani”, 17-4-1917.
294. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

BETTIAH, CHAMPARAN,

Vaishakh Sud 11, [May 2, 1917]¹

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

It will do if for the present you write to me at the above address. Letters are received both at Motihari and Bettiah. I am enclosing Kaka’s² letter. Read it and do the needful. Pay whatever salaries, etc., are due. There is no need at all to feel nervous because I am away. Are the Hindi teachers doing well? How are they? How many attend the lessons? Give me all the details.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of Gujarati: C.W. 11170. courtesy: Chhaganlal Gandhi

295. LETTER TO MILLIE GRAHAM POLAK

BETTIAH,

May 6 [1917]³

DEAR MILLIE,

Your letter and wire were redirected here and come into my hands today. Henceforth, please write at the above address. Simply Bettiah, Champaran will do.

I am sorry to hear the news about Henry’s illness. Somehow I do not share your gloomy forebodings. He has marvellous recuperative powers and I think he will quickly recover his original vigour. What I do feel, however, is that both of you should join Ceilia at Ooty. Mama too wrote saying that Ceilia was not keeping well. But I go further to say that even if she were well, she ought not alone to have charge of a child, especially a child so wonderful as Leon. Ooty will do Henry good and may do you also good. If the high altitude does not suit you all, you should go to Bangalore. It has perhaps the finest climate in India. Even Belgaum or Poona will be alright for ¹The year has been inferred from Gandhiji’s stay at Champaran. Vaishakh Sud 11 corresponded to May 2 in 1917.

²D. B. Kalelkar
³From the contents
you. But somehow or other, I prefer Banglore. Change to any such place will be the best tonic for Henry. And he must live on the plainest foods such as we have at the Ashram. Everything simply boiled.

As for Waldo, I must differ from your views. It is because Waldo is a trust that you may not play with him. I would not mind your being vaccinated if you chose to be. But to add a weakness-causing operation to an already weak constitution is to do infinite harm to it. It is not obligatory on you to travel or to live in insanitary surroundings. By all means take all reasonable precautions that the science of hygiene may suggest. If the worst fear is realized and Waldo has smallpox, why should you consider yourself guilty? It is not a dangerous disease. And natural smallpox if properly treated does not leave the patient debilitated. But the purest lymph is not as pure as you may imagine. By having him vaccinated, you will expose Waldo to an additional risk to his health. Pock marks, if you are afraid of them, are really nothing. By proper treatment, in course of time they disappear. Did you see Bala and Naransamy? They had confluent smallpox of the most virulent type. The marks are growing or were growing fainter daily under the treatment of anointing with oil and rubbing thereafter. Pray read my plan for Waldo twice, then pray and then do as the voice within you bids you.

Do please write to me frequently if you cannot write to me daily about Henry’s health. It is God’s mercy that when every member of the family is down, you are keeping well. I do hope you won’t have a nervous breakdown after Henry rises from his sick-bed which he will soon do, I am sure.

My work is steadily progressing. I have come in touch with many planters too and often meet the collector, etc. I cannot leave this place for some months to come.

With love to you all,

Yours,
Bhai

[PS.]

Pray remember me to Dr. Sapru.1

From the original: Gandhi-Polak Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

1 Tej Bahadur Sapru (1875-1949); lawyer and statesman
MY DEAR MILLIE,

Just a line before leaving for Bettiah. Your telegram of yesterday has frightened me. Immediately on receipt of your wire, I wrote to you a long letter about Henry and Ceilia. I do still hope that [you] have received it. The postal hours in Bettiah are most inconvenient. I have to trust to chance friends to post the letters and it is possible that the one who takes the letter might have missed the post for which my letter to you was intended.

It alarms me to find that fever has not yet left Henry and I have telegraphed to you to wire or write to me at Bettiah.

I came in yesterday on the invitation of the Government to see Hon’ble Mr. Maude¹. I had two hours’ interview. I shall write more about this later. The matter is critical. I dare not gone down to you. Please use the wire freely if necessary. I shall expect at least a postcard from you daily.

With love,

Yours,

BHAi

From the original: Gandhi-Polak Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

¹ From the contents
² W. Maude, Member of the Executive Council, Bihar and Orissa
297. LETTER TO HARILAL DESAI

BETTIAH,

Vaishakh Vad 5 [May 11, 1917]¹

BHAISHRI HARILAL DESAI².

Your letter has come to me here. I remember our meeting. You can stay here with me if you wish to. I shall be in this province for some months. If you wish to stay in Ahmedabad in my absence, it could be arranged. Do whatever is convenient to you. You can come here via Kanpur or Patna.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS GANDHI

BHAISHRI HARILAL MANEKLAL DESAI

TAPINI KHADKI

KAPADWANJ

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 1867

298. LETTER TO MILLIE GRAHAM POLAK

BETTIAH,

May 12 [1917]¹

MY DEAR MILLIE,

On my return yesterday I found your telegram but not of yesterday’s date. I do hope you received my wire from Bankipore and I am sending another one just now. How I wish I could be by Henry’s side. But it cannot be. The position here is so serious that I dare not leave this place. I had an important interview with a member of the Government. I am preparing a general letter of which you shall have a copy.⁴

Do you want anybody to come from Ahmedabad? Do please give me the fullest information.

¹ Gandhiji was in Bettiah on this day.
² Harilal Maneklal Desai (1881-1927), educationist and social worker. He left his job in 1920 to join the non-co-operation movement under Gandhiji’s guidance and dedicated his life to khadi and village uplift work.
³ From the contents
⁴ Vide “Report on Condition or Ryots in Champaran”, 13-5-1917.
In the hope that you might have received my long letter, I am not repeating what I have said in it.

With love,

Yours,

Bhai

From the original: Gandhi-Polak Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

299. LETTER TO JAMNADAS GANDHI

BETTIAH,
CHAMPARAN,

Vaishakh Vad 6 [May 12, 1917]¹

CHI. JAMNADAS²,

I had been waiting for a letter from you, as one waits for the rains. I got one and I am satisfied. The same post brought a letter of yours sent on by Narandas. I shall keep on writing to you. I shall be measured by your success. If you should not come up to my expectations, my judgment would be rated at zero; I have staked so much on you. My conscience would also tell me that I am not at all a good judge of men. You will therefore always have my blessings and my encouragement. I pray God may give you all necessary strength. If the two of you live an ideal life, you will be the saving of many a young man. It is very much my desire that all of you, on whom I have placed my hopes, should be not merely what I am but free of all my faults, that you may do better than I. There will be nothing wrong in your aiming so high. It is not much of a miracle that a son should preserve the capital, what pleases the father more and brings greater credit to himself is that he should add to it.

For some time yet I shall have no choice but to stay on here. You must be getting all the news through Doctor Saheb, so I don’t give any here. If the food there does not disagree with you, be in no hurry to make too many changes in it. Your duty at present is to see that you flourish in health and that you teach the boys and raise them

¹ Gandhiji was in Bettiah on this day.
² Brother of Chhaganlal Gandhi up and give satisfaction to Doctor Saheb in other ways.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C. W. 5675. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

300. LETTER TO ESTHER FAERING

BETTIAH,
May 13, 1917

MY DEAR ESTHER,

Pray do not apologize for writing to me. Your letters are most welcome.

I am sure that your duty is to fulfil your undertaking with the Mission with all your heart. You can come to the Ashram only when they relieve you and when you feel in the clearest possible terms that you will come to render the service of humanity in greater fullness. When that time comes, the Ashram will receive you as one of its own. Meanwhile you are of course always free to go [to] the Ashram and stay there as long as you like.

At the Ashram, we are now trying an experiment in education to serve as a pattern. When you go there, I am sure you will like the teaching staff. They are all, I think, good men and sane.

My work here gives me greater and greater joy day by day. The poor raiyats delight in simply sitting round me, feeling that they can trust me to do the right thing. I only hope I am worthy of all this love. I constantly see the planters and do not despair of appealing to their sense of justice on behalf of the raiyats who have groaned under the weight of oppression all these long years. I shall send you a copy of my representation¹ to the Government. You may not understand some points in it. Do not hesitate to ask me please.

With love,

Yours,
BAPU

My Dear Child, p. 9

¹ Vide the following item.
In accordance with the suggestions made by Hon’ble Mr. Maude, I beg to submit herewith the preliminary conclusions which I have arrived at as a result of the inquiry being made by me into the agrarian condition of the raiyats of Champaran.

At the outset I would like to state that it was not possible for me to give the assurance which Mr. Maude would have liked me to have given, viz., that the vakil friends who have been assisting me would be withdrawn. I must confess that this request has hurt me deeply. It has been made ever since my arrival here. I have been told, that is, after the withdrawal of the order of removal from the District, that my presence was harmless enough and that my bona fides were unquestioned, but that the presence of the vakil friends was likely to create ‘a dangerous situation’. I venture to submit that if I may be trusted to conduct myself decorously, I may be equally trusted to choose helpers of the same type as myself. I consider it a privilege to have the association, in the difficult tasks before me, of these able, earnest and honourable men. It seems to me that for me to abandon them is to abandon my work. It must be a point of honour with me not to dispense with their help until anything unworthy is proved against them to my satisfaction. I do not share the fear that either my presence or that of my friends can create ‘a dangerous situation’. The danger, if any exists, must lie in the causes that have brought about strained relations between the planters and the raiyats. And if the causes were removed, there never need be any fear of a dangerous situation arising in Champaran so far as the raiyats are concerned.

Coming to the immediate purpose of this representation, I beg to state that nearly four thousand raiyats have been examined and their statements taken after careful cross-examination. Several villages have been visited and many judgments of courts studied. And the inquiry is, in my opinion, capable of sustaining the following

---

1 This was sent to the Chief Secretary, Bihar & Orissa.
2 Member of the Executive Council, Bihar & Orissa, in his talk with Gandhiji on 10th May; vide “Note By Hon’ble W. Maude on Interview with Gandhiji”, 10-5-1917.
conclusions:

Factories or concerns in the district of Champaran may be divided into two classes—(1) those that have never had indigo plantations, and (2) those that have:

(1) The concerns which have never grown indigo have exacted abwabs known by various local names equal in amount at least to the rent paid by the raiyats. This exaction, although it has been held to be illegal, has not altogether stopped.

(2) The indigo-growing factories have grown indigo either under the tinkathia system or khuski. The former has been most prevalent and has caused the greatest hardship. The type has varied with the progress of time. Starting with indigo, it has taken in its sweep all kinds of crops. It may now be defined as an obligation presumed to attach to the raiyat’s holding whereby the raiyat has to grow a crop on 3/20 of the holding at the will of the landlord for a stated consideration. There appears to be no legal warrant for it. The raiyats have always fought against it and have only yielded to force. They have not received adequate consideration for the services. When, however, owing to the introduction of synthetic indigo the price of the local product fell, the planters desired to cancel the indigo sattas. They, therefore, devised a means of saddling the losses upon the raiyats. In lease-hold lands they made the raiyats pay tawan, i.e., damages to the extent of Rs. 100/- per bigha in consideration of their waiving their right to indigo cultivation. This, the raiyats claim, was done under coercion. Where the raiyats could not find cash, hand-notes and mortgage bonds were made for payment in instalments bearing interest at 12 per cent per annum. In these the balance due has not been described as tawan, i.e., damages, but it has been fictitiously treated as an advance to the raiyat for some purpose of his own.

In mukarrari lands, the damage has taken the shape of sharahbeshi sattas, meaning enhancement of rent in lieu of indigo cultivation. The enhancement according to the survey report has in

---

1 Agreements
2 A permanent tenure.
the case of 5,955 tenancies amounted to Rs. 31,062, the pre-enhancement figure being Rs. 53,865. The total number of tenancies affected is much larger. The raiyats claim that these sattas were taken from them under coercion. It is inconceivable that the raiyats would agree to an enormous perpetual increase in their rents against freedom from liability to grow indigo for a temporary period which freedom they were strenuously fighting to secure and hourly expecting.

Where tawan has not been exacted, the factories have forced the raiyats to grow oats, sugarcane, or such other crops under the tinkathia system.

Under the tinkathia system, the raiyat has been obliged to give his best land for the landlord’s crops; in some cases the land in front of his house has been so used; he has been obliged to give his best time and energy also to it, so that very little time has been left to him for growing his own crops—his means of livelihood.

Cart-hire sattas have been forcibly taken from the raiyats for supplying carts to the factories on hire insufficient even to cover the actual outlay.

Inadequate wages have been paid to the raiyats whose labour has been impressed, and even boys of tender age have been made to work against their will.

Ploughs of the raiyats have been impressed and detained by the factories for days together for ploughing factory lands for a trifling consideration and at a time when they required them for cultivating their own lands.

Dasturi has been taken by the notoriously ill-paid factory amlas out of the wages received by the labourers, often amounting to a fifth of their daily wage, and also out of the hire paid for carts and ploughs.

In some villages, the chamars have been forced to give up to the factories the hides of dead cattle belonging to the raiyats. Against the carcasses the chamars used to supply the raiyats with shoes and leather straps for ploughs and their women used to render services to the latter’s families at child-birth. Now they have ceased to render

---

1 A customary but illegal commission.
2 Staff.
3 Member of the caste dealing in hides and skins
these valuable services. Some factories have for the collection of such hides opened hides godowns.

Illegal fines—often of heavy amounts—have been imposed by factories upon raiyats who have proved unbending.

Among the other (according to the evidence before me) methods adopted to bend the raiyats to their will, the planters have impounded the raiyats’ cattle, posted peons on their houses, withdrawn from them barbers’, dhobis’, carpenters’, and smiths’ services; have prevented the use of village wells and pasture lands by ploughing up the pathway and lands just in front of or behind their homesteads, have brought or promoted civil suits, or criminal complaints against them, and resorted to actual physical force and wrongful confinements. The planters have successfully used the institutions of the country to enforce their will against the raiyats and have not hesitated to supplement them by taking the law in their own hands. The result has been that the raiyats have shown an abject helplessness such as I have not witnessed in any part of India where I have travelled.

They are members of District Boards and assessors under the Chaukidari Act and keepers of pounds. Their position as such has been felt by the raiyats. The roads which the latter pay for at the rate of half an anna per rupee of rent paid by them are hardly available to them. Their carts and bullocks which perhaps most need the roads are rarely allowed to make use of them. That this is not peculiar to Champaran does not in any way mitigate the grievance.

I am aware that there are concerns which form exceptions to the rule laid down, but as a general charge the statements made above are capable of proof.

I am aware, too, that there are some Indian zamindars who are open to the charges made above. Relief is sought for in their cases as in those of the planters. Whilst there can be no doubt the latter have inherited a vicious system, they with their trained minds and superior position have reduced it to an exact science, so that the raiyats would not only have been unable to raise their heads above water but would have sunk deeper still had not the Government granted some protection. But that protection has been meagre and provokingly slow and has often come too late to be appreciated by the raiyats.
It is true that the Government await the Settlement Officer’s report on some of the matters covered by this representation. It is submitted that when the raiyats are groaning under the weight of oppression, such as I have described above, an inquiry by the Settlement Officer is a cumbersome method. With him the grievances mentioned herein are but an item in an extensive settlement operation. Nor does his inquiry cover all the points raised above. Moreover, grievances have been set forth herein which are not likely to be disputed. And they are so serious as to require immediate relief.

That tawan and sharahbeshi sattas and abwabs have been exacted cannot be questioned. I hope it will not be argued that the raiyats can be fully protected as to these by recourse to law. It is submitted that where there is wholesale exaction, courts are not a sufficient protection for the raiyats and the administrative protection of the Sarkar as the supreme landlord is an absolute necessity.

The wrongs are twofold. There are wrongs which are accomplished facts and wrongs which continue. The continuing wrongs need to be stopped at once and a small inquiry may be made as to past wrongs, such as damages and abwabs already taken and sharahbeshi payments already made. The raiyats should be told by proclamation and notices distributed broadcast among them that they are not only not bound to pay abwabs, tawan and sharahbeshi charges but that they ought not to pay them, that the Sarkar will protect them if any attempt is made to enforce payment thereof. They should further be informed that they are not bound to render any personal service to their landlords and that they are free to sell their services wherever they choose and that they are not bound to grow indigo, sugar-cane or any other crop unless they wish to do so and unless it is profitable for them. The Bettiah Raj leases given to the factories should not be renewed until the wrongs are remedied and should, when renewed, properly safeguard the raiyats’ rights.

As to dasturi, it is clear that better paid and educated men should substitute the present holders of responsible offices and that no countenance should be given to the diminution in raiyats’ wages by illegal exaction of dasturi. I feel sure that the planters are quite capable of dealing with the evil, although it is in their language ‘as old as the Himalayas’.

1 Government
The raiyats being secured in their freedom, it would be no longer necessary to investigate the question of the inadequacy or otherwise of the consideration in the indigo sattas and cart-hire sattas, and the wages. The raiyats by common agreement should be advised to finish indigo or other crops for the current year. But thenceforth, whether it is indigo or any other crop, it should be only under a system of absolute free-will.

It will be observed that I have burdened this statement with as little argument as possible. But if it is the desire of the Government that I should prove any of my conclusions, I shall be pleased to tender the proofs on which they are based.

In conclusion, I would like to state that I have no desire to hurt the planters’ feelings. I have received every courtesy from them. Believing as I do that the raiyats are labouring under a grievous wrong from which they ought to be freed immediately, I have dealt, as calmly as is possible for me to do so, with the system which the planters are working. I have entered upon my mission in the hope that they as Englishmen born to enjoy the fullest personal liberty and freedom will not fail to rise to their status and will not begrudge the raiyats the same measure of liberty and freedom.

I am sending copies to the Commissioner of the Tirhut Division, the Collector of Champaran, the Subdivisional Officer of Bettiah, the Manager of the Bettiah Raj, the Secretaries, respectively, of the Bihar Planters’ Association and the District Planters’ Association. I am circulating them also among those leaders of public opinion in the country who have kept themselves in touch with the work being done by my colleagues and myself. The copies are being marked not for publication, as there is no desire to invite a public discussion of the question unless it becomes absolutely necessary.

I need hardly give the assurance that I am at the disposal of the Government whenever my presence may be required.

Select Documents of Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran. No. 72, pp. 126-31
CONFIDENTIAL

Since the withdrawal of the order of the Magistrate served on Mr. Gandhi, the work of recording statements has continued without interruption. Nearly 4000 statements have been taken. Rayats have flocked to the two stations, Mothari and Bettiah. The rush has been so great that the volunteers have not been able to cope with the work from day to day.

The volunteers are all local pleaders who have performed their work with great zeal and devotion. Babu Brajakishore Prasad has superintended this part of the work. The names of the other volunteers are: Babu Rajendra Prasad, Babu Dharianidhar, Babu Gorakh Prasad, Babu Ramnawami Prasad, Babu Sambhusaran and Babu Anugrah Narain Sinha. Chance comers have also assisted occasionally. Several villages have been visited and hundreds of rayats have been seen in their homes.

Planters have been always invited to attend the meetings with the rayats. They have, however, not attended. Their jamadars have. Planters have been individually seen by Mr. Gandhi and there was a conference between representative planters and him. The planters were quite courteous but uncompromising. They overstated their case, 1 These appear to have been prepared by Gandhiji from time to time to brief his co-workers and also (vide Note III) editors of the sympathetic papers to enable them to write with understanding of the real situation in Champaran. Numbers III, V and VI in this series are signed by Gandhiji; No. IV has not become available and it is not clear if this is No. I or II of the series.

---

2 (1884-1963), statesman and scholar; Chairman, Constituent Assembly of India, 1946-9; first President of India

3 A pleader and Congressman of Darbhanga

4 A Muzaffarpur lawyer who took up cases against Bihar indigo planters; later joined Champaran campaign and non-cooperation movement

5 (1892-1931), a lawyer and Congressman of Bihar; took part in the Champaran, non-cooperation and Khilafat movements

6 (1889-1957), a lawyer, legislator and Congress leader of Bihar; took part in the freedom movement; Minister in Bihar, 1946-57

7 Steward, chief of peons inasmuch as they claimed that they had always acted as benefactors of their rayats and that they had protected them from the rapacity of moneylenders. Frequent interviews have taken place between the local officials and Mr. Gandhi. The former have been more open than the planters and have certainly shown a desire for amicable settlement. The officials have never concealed their opinion that they did not approve of the mission. Some of them only reluctantly carried out the Government instructions to give Mr. Gandhi every facility. The result has been that it has not been always an easy matter to obtain information from them. They have expressed stronger disapproval of the presence of the helpers mentioned above. The Sub-divisional Officer at Bettiah often said that he was afraid of a conflagration taking place any day by reason of the inquiry. He said that the rayats had grown bolder and had formed a highly exaggerated notion of the results of the mission. He even reported to the Government that unless the inquiry could be stopped, he could not be responsible for the peace of the district under his charge. Some planters, too, went to Ranchi to complain to the Government that they were afraid of their own safety if the inquiry was continued. It was on account of this that Mr. Gandhi was invited to meet Hon’ble Mr. Maude at Bankipur on the 10th instant.

An outwork has been burnt down. The planters grew nervous and even suggested that it might be due to our inquiry. There seems to be no connection between the fire and the inquiry.

Mr. Maude suggested that the inquiry might now usefully be closed entirely and that Mr. Gandhi might submit his report to the Government. and that if the inquiry could not be stopped, Mr. Gandhi should withdraw the ‘pleader-friends’ from the district. Mr. Gandhi stated that the inquiry could not be entirely stopped but that he had advanced far enough to enable him to frame preliminary conclusions, that he could not as a point of honour think of dispensing with the help of the pleader-friends whom he considered to be as sober and honourable as himself and who were of the greatest assistance to him in his work. Mr. Maude was quite conciliatory in his conversation.

3 Vide Appendix “Note By Honble W. Maude on Interview with Gandhiji”, 10-5-1917
The enclosed representation is the result of the interview. The inquiry continues except to the extent that, instead of statements being recorded as heretofore by the volunteers, Mr. Gandhi will himself, as soon as he is free to be able to do so, sit for a few hours daily among the rayats and after hearing their statements record his impressions.

The representation is deliberately an understatement. The condition of the rayat is far worse than is pictured there. It is not capable of being understood by a layman. The planters’ rule has practically supplanted the rule of the local Government. Nobody has the courage to speak up for the rayats. The latter do not readily get the assistance of the local mukhtars. Many have privately come to Mr. Gandhi and told him much worse stories of oppression than have been recorded in the statements. In Fiji and Natal, the evil was represented by a single law. The evil was dealt with, if the law could be removed. In Champaran, the evil is like a weed growing everywhere and anyhow and in growing has smothered all law and order. The very laws for the protection of the rayats have been used by the planters to reduce them to serfdom. As the planters have placed themselves above law, even decrees of courts have had no binding effect on them in many cases. The evil, therefore, will require a tremendous effort before it is checked. No stone is being left unturned to induce the planters to do justice without the necessity of a great and very serious public agitation. The desire is, by inviting the Government to deal with the planters firmly, to avoid the publication of a report which is bound to stagger India. Public men and women of India will never be able to sit still if the report has ever to be published until the wrongs it will narrate are remedied. The mere narration is calculated to rouse passions and therefore every effort is being made to bring about a settlement without any public agitation.

If the settlement comes or even if it does not, it is necessary to post volunteers in villages to act as links between the planters and rayats, to steel the latter’s hearts and by their very presence to protect them from the tyranny of the amlas, etc. The volunteers will be expected to remain in the villages for at least six months.

Their work will be smooth, if the Government approve of their

1 Vide the preceding item.
3 Attorneys
pre-sence; it will be risky if they do not. It is to be done in any event. Whilst they are in the villages, they will teach the village boys and girls and will give the rayats lessons in elementary sanitation. It may be stated that the rayat are the most backward and ignorant of almost any in India. Education is admittedly in the lowest stage in this dis-trict. Sanitation is of the worst type. Children are ill-looking because they are ill fed. The adult population suffers from some disease or other. Many suffer from an ugly growth on the throat called goitre. They have no physical or moral stamina. Even the Rajputs are seized with a fear which it is humiliating to observe. The present volunteers are pledged to the work above sketched. It is not expected that Bihar will contribute many more volunteers of the type required. The greatest care is being exercised in choosing them. They have to be learned, responsible and sober men. Those who will receive these notes are expected kindly to use their influence in securing volunteers and getting them to send their names. At least a hundred such volunteers are required. Those who need support for their families will have it given them, so far as it is on a moderate scale.

From the typewritten office copy: S.N. 6352

303. LETTER TO W. MAUDE

BETTIAH,
May 14, 1917

MY DEAR MR. MAUDE,

As promised by me, I have sent today my representation' to the Chief Secretary. I do hope that it will receive urgent consideration.

I am making arrangements as fast as possible to alter the method of enquiry also in terms of my undertaking.

I am,

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 73. p. 131

304. LETTER TO L. F. MORSHEAD

BETTIAH,
May 14, 1917

DEAR MR. MORSHEAD,

I beg to send you for your information a copy of my representation to the Government.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From the original in Gandhiji’s hand in the National Archives of India; also G. N. 4617

305. LETTER TO W. B. HEYCOCK

BETTIAH,
May 14, 1917

DEAR MR. HEYCOCK,

I beg to send you for your information a copy of my representation to the Government.

Yours truly,
M. K. GANDHI

From the original in Gandhiji’s hand in the National Archives of India; also G. N. 4611

306. LETTER TO W. B. HEYCOCK

May 14, 1917

DEAR MR. HEYCOCK,

I beg to refer you to the enclosed. All kinds of rumours have come before me. Pressure is being put upon me to make a statement but I don’t want to make any unauthorised statement. Will you kindly let me know for purposes of publication the damage caused by the fire, the nature of the outwork burnt, whether it was inhabited or otherwise protected and whether any connection has been shown between my presence in Champaran and the fire. I am sending a special messenger who will await answer.

Yours truly,

M. K. GANDHI

Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 79 (A), p. 136

307. LETTER TO MILLIE GRAHAM POLAK

BETTIAH,

May 14 [1917]¹

DEAR MILLIE,

I have just received your letter. Matheran is not habitable in the month of June. And Bombay is likely to suit Ceilia best then. If you are not living with the Petits, a flat in Colaba will give you a splendid breeze.

It is difficult for me to believe that Henry can be so bad as you have described him. It is indeed a great relief that he is where he receives a brotherly attention and has best possible medical advice. I shall anxiously await a daily bulletin from you. If you do not give me a letter, give me only p.c. please.

Is Waldo alright now? How do you find the weather there? Does the doctor say that both Henry and Waldo will be entirely free from the poison? You know what the doctors generally say. They say that once the poison has entered the system, it does not leave it for years. Of course I do not believe it and Henry’s body being so pure cannot be so shattered as to be liable to a recurrence of the attack. However, the greatest care has to be used during convalescence if complete cure is to be attained.

Is Leon keeping well?

With love to you both,

Yours,

Bhai

¹From the contents
308. LETTER TO ASSOCIATED PRESS OF INDIA

[On or after May 14, 1917]

Mr. Gandhi has addressed the following letter to the Associated Press of India:

In view of your recent message to the Press in connection with my mission here, I enclose for publication the following correspondence between the District Magistrate of Champaran and myself.

Mr. Gandhi’s Letter

The correspondence speaks for itself. It only remains for me to add that, so far as I am aware, there is not the slightest connection between the fire and myself. Your message says that a whole factory has been burnt down, whereas the District Magistrate’s letter shows that a portion only of the outworks has been affected by the fire.

Yours faithfully,

M. K. GANDHI

The Biharee, 17-5-1917, as quoted in Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 79 (A), pp. 136-7

---

1 Vide the preceding item.
2 Dear Mr. Gandhi.

Your letter of 14th May, 1917, I am able to give you the following information. Olaha factory is an outwork of the Tarkalia concern. The buildings burnt down were the engine room, press house and cake house. The value of the buildings has been roughly estimated at twenty thousand rupees but this is only a very rough estimate. No manager or Assistant Manager is in residence at the outwork. There are, however, factory servants to look after the buildings. The outwork is situated about twenty miles south-west of Motihari. The fact that the buildings were burnt down shortly after you came to the district and that your visit of enquiry has caused considerable excitement, etc., may possibly account for the rumours of all kinds which you say have come before you.

Yours sincerely,

W.B. HEYCOCK
309. LETTER TO J. P. EDWARDS

BETTIAH,
May 17, 1917

DEAR SIR,

Butai Sahu Halwai, Gulli Sahu Kanu, and Bhardul Thakore Badai of Raxaul Bazar have shown me receipts they hold for lands leased them by you. They say that their houses are burnt down and that they are now being prevented from rebuilding and are being asked to vacate the lands in their possession. Will you kindly let me know whether there is any truth in the above statements and if so why they are being prevented from rebuilding?

Yours faithfully,

M. K. GANDHI

Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 76, p. 133

310. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

BETTIAH,
Vaishakh Vad 11, May 17, 1917

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

There is no harm in sending the report of the Benares speech as revised by me.¹

You need not henceforth send Jamnadas’s letters here for he has resumed writing to me. The one you sent this time, I am forwarding to Narandas. He doesn’t seem to have seen it. You may inform me if there is anything particular in his letter.

You need not send a puggree for me here. I am carrying on with what I have. If you have not made the dhotis, get them ready. I see that I shall need them. I hope you have supplied more yarn to Umreth. See that you don’t drop that work. I am of the opinion that, if Saiyad Mahomed and others agree to come on the same terms as Lalji, they should be admitted. I see that we shall have to produce

¹ Manager of Hardiya Kothi, Champaran
² Vide “Speech at Benares Hindu University”, 6-2-1916.
plenty of cloth. We should also not take upon ourselves the responsibility for winding the bobbins. Let them bring along their children. If any poor people send their children to learn, these should be paid. We may engage them in work only for some time; during the rest of the time we should teach them. In short, I feel it is necessary that we should start a workshop. By and by, we shall see our way. In this connection, I also think sometimes that, if we can get some honest, paid men, it would be advisable to engage them. They can be set to domestic chores and those [of us] who are at present occupied with this work can be released. I think of this again and again. But the idea will have to be carefully weighed. It will perhaps be convenient, for our purpose, to engage an elderly widow, if we know of any. I keep thinking along these lines during moments of leisure; however, since I think of these things so far away from you, you need not attach much weight to them. If you carry them out, it will be on your own responsibility. Seek all possible help from Vrajlal on this question. He will be especially in a position to say something about it since the responsibility is his.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji's hand: C.W. 5704. Courtesy: Chhaganlal Gandhi

311. LETTER TO NARAHARI PARIKH

BETTIAH,
Vaishakh Vad 11 [May 17, 1917]

BHAISHRI NARAHARI,

I have your letter. I went through it carefully. I do believe that you have done nothing wrong in taking the step you have taken. I am writing to Chhaganlal straightaway to pay you Rs. 75 a month. It would be a great thing if you can live in such a way as to be able to carry on without needing more. You will have to exercise enough self-control even to do so. I see that the time has not come yet when we have people who will manage without money or with the barest minimum of it. For that a change in the entire atmosphere in every family is necessary. This criticism is especially applicable to 1 Gandhiji was in Bettiah on this day.

Gujarat.

I doubt whether you will be able to bear the combined burden of your teaching work and translating Gokhale’s speeches. My ideas about education are very exacting. If we want to pour our souls into the pupils, we should constantly exercise our mind on how to teach them. We should not get angry with them. Passing on to them in the best possible language from day to day whatever we wish to give them, will take up much of our time. Moreover, we must for the present think of teaching methods as well. Everything will have to be taught in a new way. All the same, you have no option now but to finish the translations. I say this only to point out your future responsibilities and those of all other teachers.

I have not treated Geography as a separate subject. That is why I have said that those who teach History should also teach Geography. However, if you think that they should be treated as separate subjects for the time being, you may do so. We will make what changes we find on experience to be necessary.

The teachers will have to come together at least once a week to exchange ideas and make such changes as may be called for. The intelligent students should be consulted and their suggestions invited about methods of teaching.

The students’ health is the collective responsibility of the teachers; the main responsibility, however, will rest on the teacher in charge of hygiene.

The teachers should read up the subjects in the curriculum which they do not know. Especially Hindi. I can see from my work here how very essential Hindi is. I find that I shall have to ask for volunteers from other places. Difficulties will arise about those of them who do not know Hindi. I see it proved every day that education is altogether incomplete without Hindi.

It would be good, I think, if Anandshankarbhai or Keshavlal-bhai could spare one hour daily or a few hours every week so that the teachers’ Gujarati may attain a really high standard and they may follow old Gujarati books without any difficulty. We may consider in this hour what progress we can at present make in Gujarati, which books should be considered good and what equivalents for unfamiliar

---

1 Dewan Bahadur Keshavlal Harshadray Dhurva, a Gujarati scholar and writer
[English] words should be adopted. We can enter deep into Akha’s\(^1\) or other serious works and resolve the difficulties which the teachers experience from day to day in explaining certain things. These pillars of the Gujarati language will also be better enlightened in this way and have occasion to think about some matters to which they have given no thought. The teachers’ technical vocabulary will become uniform and points about spelling, etc., will be settled. At present, each of us has his own rules, or has no rules at all, to go by.

No doubt you will show this to the other teachers as well.

\textit{Vandemataram from Mohandas}

From a photostat of the Gujarati original: S.N. 6355

\section*{312. LETTER TO MILLIE GRAHAM POLAK}

\textit{Bettiah,}

\textit{May 18 [1917]\(^2\)}

DEAR MILLIE.

Your description of Henry still sounds unbelievable. The mind simply refuses to think that he can be so pulled down. I shall still retain my faith in the vitality of his system and believe that he will quickly regain his original strength.

My heart goes out to poor Waldo. It must be terrible for him to be without a companion.

I like Dr. Sapru’s advice which does not apply to Henry at all. He has never dreamt impossible dreams, he has always settled down like a respectable man as a conscientious man can feel settled in this unsettled world and he has always been a practical man of affairs and as such won esteem. His life up to the present is unimpeachable evidence of all this. I have found that most people here and elsewhere are highly unpractical, and falsely believing themselves to be matter-of-fact men, render themselves incapable of dreaming dreams impossible or otherwise and therefore remain totally dry as dust. Good dreams are to the soul what fresh air is to the body.

I am pushing forward. Hundreds of men are being examined

\(^{1}\) Gujarati poet

\(^{2}\) From the contents
every day. I have sent the papers bringing the position to date to Mr. Kunzru and have asked him to show them to Henry when he wishes to and is allowed to see them.

With love to you all,

Yours,

BHAI

[PS.]

Mr. Andrews sends his love to you both.

From the original: Gandhi-Polak Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

313. LETTER TO A. K. HOLTUM

BETTIAH,
May 19, 1917

DEAR MR. HOLTUM,

I thank you for having come to Sariswa and having sent your carriage.

After you and Mr. Lewis had withdrawn, I sat with the people who must have numbered over 500 and talked to them. I told them that you wanted to do justice, that you were ready to take back the zirat lands and that you considered that it was more profitable to you to get it back. I told them too that in your opinion the people had taken the zirat lands from your predecessor not only willingly but most eagerly, that it was given to the raiyats not in lieu of indigo cultivation but it was given in order to relieve the raiyats from liability to supply labour to the landlord. I further told them that you had shown me Mr. Barclay’s letter to Mr. Gourlay confirming the view and finally told them, whilst on this point, that if they returned the

---

1 Hriday Nath Kunzru
2 Manager of Dhokraha and Loheria concerns
3 Gandhiji visited this place on May 16.
4 Land under the khas (special) cultivation of a zamindar
5 J. Barclay was the proprietor of the concerns.
6 W. R. Gourlay, Director of Agriculture, Bengal and former S.D.O. of Bettiah, who conducted in 1908 a confidential enquiry into the affairs of indigo plantations in Champaran at the instance of the Bengal Government and submitted his recommendations the following year zirat lands, you expected them to grow indigo again as before up to the termination of the period of their contracts and I assured them that I would plead with you that it would be quite unfair to ask for raiyats to revert to indigo-growing (for reasons to be presently stated). I then invited those who wanted to abandon the zirat at once, although they had paid for the full agricultural year. As a result, over 175 gave in their names there and then and men have been streaming in during the two days. The total has reached nearly 500 up to the time of writing.

In going through the khatians¹, the receipts and the amounts charged against the zirat land, I find in 70 tenancies that on an average the raiyats are paying you Rs. 24.5.3 per bigha² of zirat land. The largest amount charged is Rs. 91.7.3 per bigha and the smallest is Rs. 7.8.0 per bigha. Incidentally, I observe that whilst 27 bighas of kasht³ land pay Rs. 59.13.6, 27 bighas of zirat land pay you Rs. 659.7.0. It seems that in the vast majority of cases, the raiyats hold less than one bigha of zirat land. The rate fixed varies with the extent of their kasht holding and not with the quality of the zirat. And they are paying as much as Rs. 1-8-0 per bigha of kasht land in addition to from six annas to 12 annas per katha⁴ of zirat. And the kathas of zirat seem to vary with the bighas of kasht and in no case amounting to more than 3 kathas per bigha. The average worked out for fifty villagers comes to 1_ kathas per bigha. This, in my opinion, hardly bears out Mr. Barclay’s contention. It rather bears out the raiyats’ contention that the settlement of zirat is another form of the tinkathia and was designed to cover the losses suffered by the concern when the price of indigo fell. The raiyats insist that pressure was effectively put upon them to take zirat land. Their contention seems to be borne out by the readiness with which they have come forward to surrender it. For the last ten years, the raiyats have been paying what according to the above view amounts to tawan for not growing indigo. And the concern has on that account an average of more than Rs. 100 per bigha of tinkathia. In the circumstances and regard being had to the fact that you believe it to be advantageous for you to receive back the zirat land, I hope you will not press for reversion to indigo-growing.

¹ Records of rights
² A measure of land: 1,600 sq. yds. In Champaran, the bigha is much larger.
³ Cultivated land; tenure
⁴ One-twentieth part of a bigha
I notice that in some cases damages have been settled on kathas taken out of the kasht land of the raiyats. I venture to think that, if you would see your way to accept my suggestion, take back the zirat and forgo the future damage whether tacked on to the zirat or to the kasht land, one of the sorest points of dispute between the concern and the raiyats would be amicably settled and you will have set an example which would be advantageously followed by the other planters.

In describing the process adopted by the concern for recovering losses on indigo from the raiyats, I have hitherto confined myself to your mukarrari land. On tikka land, you seem to have accepted the system followed elsewhere. You have taken handnotes for balance of tawan payable by the raiyats bearing heavy rate of interest. I suggest that the outstanding handnotes may be cancelled. The raiyats for the sake of peace and compromise should say nothing as to refund either on the hunda above referred to or the tawan already collected and of which the handnotes represent the balance.

As to the fines, I must confess that there is overwhelming evidence to show that they have been imposed on recalcitrant raiyats. This complaint is almost universal. I told the raiyats that you said that only nominal fines were imposed when the raiyats came to you for adjustment of their mutual quarrels and that you refunded these to the winners. The raiyats resolutely protested and said that the fines even as much as Rs. 25 at a time and more were imposed for the so-called offences against the concern.

The raiyats are equally firm in their complaint against your jamadar, Gokul Missir, and I would be pleased to place the evidence before you if you will care to go further into the matter.

With reference to the method (I understand only recently adopted) of the charging for permission to build new buildings or to rebuild, you justified the charge on the ground that the earth on the raiyats’ tenement belonged to the landlord and if the raiyats used it for building purposes, they must pay for it. I find, on looking up the Bengal Tenancy Act, that the law allows the raiyats to build without any interference from the landlord so long as they build for the benefit of their holdings. It seems to me that the charge is not warranted by law and I hope that you will waive it in future.

There remains then the question of cutting trees. The section of the Bengal Tenancy Act dealing with the subject clearly allows the raiyat to cut without previous notice to or permission of the landlord. But I understand that of late years the landlords have all over been receiving half of the timber cut. I do not know whether the custom has been proved; this is a large question which can await settlement.

I await papers promised by you regarding Kodai Pan. As to Sitaram Tewari¹, I think Rs. 36 on 11 kathas is a clerical error and I venture to suggest that it would be graceful on your part to recognize the error and take the rent at the usual assessment rate.

I would beg of you to carefully consider the points mentioned herein and, if you can grant relief to your raiyats in accordance with the suggestions made above, I do not doubt that it will lead to a lasting peace between your concern and its raiyats and, what is more, it will be a simple act of justice.

I am,
Yours truly,
M. K. GANDHI

Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 83, pp. 141-3

314. LETTER TO ESTHER FAERING

BETTIAH,
May 19, 1917

MY DEAR ESTHER,

Your letter does credit to your heart. I really do not need the Rs. 501/- at the

Yours,

Bapu present moment. Just now we have more than we need. If you cannot think of using it for any other purpose you can think of, send it to the Ashram to be kept for an emergency fund. The Ashram too has no present need of money. You will not perhaps be surprised to learn that all the pecuniary assistance in my work has come, in a way, in answer to prayer. I have not been obliged to beg, i.e., for conducting the missions I have undertaken. But this is a long story into which I cannot go.

The work here continues as usual.

¹ One of the tenants
Do please remember me to Miss Peterson when you write to her and tell her I shall still expect her promised long letter.

WITH LOVE,

My Dear Child, p. 10

315. LETTER TO W. B. HEYCOCK

BETTIAH,
May 20, 1917

DEAR MR. HEYCOCK,

I have hitherto refrained from bringing to your notice statements, which have continued to stream in, to the effect that the raiyats are being prevented from coming in to me and that those who have come in have been subjected to all kinds of pinpricks by the kothi amlas and in some cases by the managers themselves. I have discounted some of the statements. I have taken down a few. But if what I have heard about the doings of the Belwa and the Dhokraha concerns is true, it is calculated to end on one side at least, the friendly spirit in which the inquiry has hitherto been carried on. I am most anxious to continue and to increase the friendly spirit. I am straining every [nerve], so far as in me lies, to so conduct my mission that nothing but good-will should be left behind, when its labours are finished. I send you the statements\(^1\) taken regarding the Belwa and the Dhokraha concerns. If the statements are true, they do not reflect any credit upon the concerns in question. I enclose, too, my letter\(^2\) to Mr. Holttum which was written before I heard of the fire and which was despatched before I took the statements of the Dhokraha men last evening after 6.30 P.M.

I can understand and even appreciate the feelings which are bound to fill those who are called upon to contemplate the prospect of having to forego huge incomes which they have hitherto been in the habit for a long time of receiving from their raiyats. One cannot, therefore, mind any legitimate effort on their part to hold on to what they have considered as their rights. But what is reported to have happened at the Belwa and Dhokraha dehats does not in my opinion fall under such a category.

---

\(^1\) Vide Appendix “Statements of peasants taken by Gandhiji”, 19-5-1917.

It is a known fact that the desire of the planters generally is, that my friends and I should not carry on our work. I can only say that nothing but physical force from the Government or an absolute guarantee that the admitted or provable wrongs of the raiyats are to stop for ever, can possibly remove us from the District. What I have seen of the conditions of the raiyats is sufficient to convince me that if we withdrew at this stage, we would stand condemned before man and God and, what is most important of all, we would never be able to forgive ourselves.

But the mission is totally of peace. I cannot too often give the assurance that I bear no ill-will against the planters. I have been told that this is true of myself but that my friends are fired with an anti-English feeling and that for them this is an anti-English movement. I can only say that I do not know a body of men who have less of that feeling than my friends. I was not prepared for this pleasant revelation. I was prepared for some degree of ill-will. I would have held it excusable. I do not know that I have not been guilty of it myself under circumstances which have appeared to me most provoking. But if I found that any of my associates were, in the conduct of this mission, actuated by any ill-will at all, I should disassociate myself entirely from them and insist upon their leaving the mission. At the same time, the determination to secure a freedom for the raiyats from the yoke that is wearing them down is inflexible.

Cannot the Government secure that freedom? This is a natural exclamation. My answer is that they cannot, in cases like this, without such assistance as is afforded to them by my mission. The Government machinery is designedly slow. It moves, must move, along the line of least resistance. Reformers like myself, who have no other axe to grind but that of reform they are handling for the time being, specialize and create a force which the Government must reckon with. Reformers may go wrong by being overzealous, indiscreet or indolent and ignorant. The Government may go wrong by being impatient of them or over-confident of their ability to do without them. I hope, in this case, neither catastrophe will take place and the grievances, which I have already submitted and which are mostly admitted, will be effectively redressed. Then the planters will have no cause to fear or suspect the mission of which I have the honour to be in charge and they will gladly accept the assistance of volunteers who will carry on the work of education and sanitation among the villagers and act as links between them and the raiyats.
Pray, excuse the length of this letter as also its argumentative character. I could not avoid it, if I was to place my true position before you. In bringing the two matters which have necessitated this communication, I have no desire to seek legal relief. But I ask you to use such administrative influence as you can to preserve the friendly spirit which has hitherto prevailed between the kothis and my friends and myself.

I do not wish to suggest that the kothis in question are responsible for the fire. That is the suspicion of some of the raiyats. I have talked to hundreds of them about the two fires. They say that the raiyats are not responsible for them, that they have no connection with the mission. I readily accept this repudiation because we are incessantly telling the raiyats that this is not a mission of violence or reprisals and that any such thing on their part can only delay relief. But if the kothis may not be held responsible for them, they may not seek to establish a connection between them and the mission. Fires have taken place before now, and, mission or no mission, they will take place for ever. Neither party may blame the other without the clearest possible proofs.

There is talk, too, about the lives of the planters being in danger. Surely this cannot be serious talk. Anyway, the mission cannot render them less safe than they are. The character of the mission is wholly against any such activity. It is designed to seek relief by self-suffering, never by doing violence to the supposed or real wrongdoer. And this lesson has been inculcated among the raiyats in season and out of season. Lastly, there is, I fear, ample proof of intimidation such as is described in the statements thereto attached. Intimidation can only mean more trouble all round without meaning the slightest relief to the planters in the shape of retention of the present system.

I seek such help as you can vouchsafe in the circumstances I have ventured to place before you.

I am sending a copy to Mr. Lewis.

Yours truly,

M. K. GANDHI

From the original typewritten copy signed by Gandhiji in the National Archives of India; also Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi's Movement in Champaran No. 84, pp. 144-6
316. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

BETTIAH,

Vaishakh Vad 14 [May 20, 1917]\(^1\)

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I have been waiting for your letter since you reached Rajkot. Hope respected Khushalbhai is well. Doctor writes to say that you have not yet received article No. 3. How can that be? All the articles should be there only. Mr. Polak has nothing with him. He has gone through all the articles. Hope they are not mixed up. You would have given article No. 2 to the press for printing. You would have received the article published in Madras. It is good if a Gujarati write-up on it appears in Prajabhandhu and Gujarati Panch. Entrust this work to Dr. Hariprasad. Send the copy of the booklet to all the libraries. You can get the list from Akhandanandji. For more addresses, get the Times of India directory from the G.V.S.\(^2\) and look for the name of newspapers in that. Make a list of the names where you have sent the booklet and send that to Doctor. Finish the work soon.

You must have seen in my article about this place what I have written on volunteers. It is necessary to keep a list of all those who are prepared to come. They should arrive within minutes of receiving intimation.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I have again received a letter from D.S.\(^3\) about the land. Take it if you want to.

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32860

---

\(^1\) Vaishakh Vad 14 in the year ‘1917’ to which the letter evidently belongs, corresponded to May 20. Also vide “Letter to W. Maude”, 14-5-1917 and “Note on the situation in Champaran—III”, 21-5-1917.

\(^2\) Gujarat Vernacular Society

\(^3\) Doctor Saheb
317. NOTES ON THE SITUATION IN CHAMPARAN-III

(Dated Bettiah, the 20th May 1917)

BETTIAH,
May 21', 1917

CONFIDENTIAL

This is the 3rd note on the situation in Champaran.

The planters are, it is evident, trying to quash the mission or to discredit it.

The first remedy to secure their end was to tell the Government that their lives were in danger, owing to the presence of the mission in Champaran, and to suggest that there should be a commission appointed to investigate the relations between the planters and rayats.

Their lives are no more in danger now than they were before. The rayats are too docile, and too much cowed down to attempt any such thing even if they wished it; moreover, the creed of the mission is absence of violence under every conceivable circumstance.

Mr. Gandhi himself, in his letter\(^1\) to the Viceroy, written just after his arrival, suggested a commission, when he was about to be imprisoned. But in the light of the discoveries since made, any commission can only delay relief. And the leaders, after knowing the situation as it is partly disclosed in the representation to the Government already sent to them, cannot contemplate the possibility of the grievances continuing for an indefinite time. Most of the serious grievances are admitted. They have not disappeared because the Government have been supine. They have been afraid to apply the remedies with firmness. They have placed too much reliance upon the good faith of the planters. And the planters have disregarded both the laws and the Government instructions. No commission can deal with such a situation. The Government alone can do it, if they wish or are forced. It is clear that the planters want a commission, which would supplant and extinguish the activities of the mission. The workers in the cause cannot, without doing the greatest violence to their conscience, retire in favour of a commission. The appointment of the \(^1\) Gandhiji appears to have begun this note on the 20th and to have concluded it on the 21st.

\(^2\) Vide “Letter to Private Secretary to Viceroy”, 16-4-1917.
commission can, therefore, be accepted only if the continuing wrongs are remedied now, and if the members appointed on the commission are such as to inspire confidence, and this on the understanding that the mission is to continue its work. The scope of it will be changed if a commission is appointed, i.e., the mission instead of conducting the enquiry will be collecting evidence to be placed before the commission, and taking the villagers’ statements. The wrongs that must be redressed before a commission is accepted are (i) the abolition, not in name but in reality, of abwabs or illegal cesses exacted by the planters, (ii) the abolition of the damages in lieu of the indigo cultivations whether in a lump sum or by way of sharahbeshi, (iii) the abolition of tinkanthia in every shape or form, (iv) the abolition of the custom of imposing fines on raiylas, (v) the abolition of force in exacting labour or other obedience to the planters’ will.

What, therefore, the commission will enquire into will be: (1) the condition of the tenure of planters; (2) the propriety and possibility of securing for the rayats a refund of the illegal cesses already taken by the planters; (3) the condition under which labour has been received by the landlords; (4) the sufficiency or otherwise of the wages received by the labourers; (5) the causes of the deep poverty of the masses and their utter helplessness.

The above points have merely to be mentioned to know that the planters contemplate a commission totally different from the one we should accept.

The safest plan, therefore, for the Press and the public, in so far as it may be necessary to give an opinion, is to insist on the redress of the admitted wrongs first, and then accept appointment of a commission, if found necessary, it being always understood that the workers continue their work, in any event.

The second method adopted by the planters is to seize or create incidents in order to make the Government nervous about the mission and to intimidate the mission and its helpers.

One fire\(^1\) has already been so used. The popular belief is that the damage done is slight and that it is the work of the planters themselves. But that idea may be dismissed. The fire may be accepted as an accident or the act of an incendiary, not in any way connected with the mission. Mr. Heycock’s letter, in answer to Mr. Gandhi’s question, shows that (1) the damage done is at the most Rs. 20,000; he himself emphasises the fact that it is a rough estimate, i.e., given by the planters; (2) he has no evidence that there is the slightest connection between the enquiry and the fire.

\(^1\) At the Olaha factory

To this may be added the fact that no member of the mission has gone to these parts, and that the outwork was not in use, when the fire broke out. Another fire broke out on the 19th instant. A katcheri has been burnt down. It is not known whether it has been utilised by the planters for the end suggested above. That fire did take place in a place just newly visited by the mission. Mr. Gandhi went there on Wednesday and the fire broke out, on Friday last. Immediately on the outbreak of the fire, information was brought to Mr. Gandhi that it was probably the work of the kothi people. A statement has been recorded to the effect that a factory man was seen the very evening removing a bundle of papers—the inference being that the papers were removed prior to setting the katcheri on fire. Support is lent to the story from the fact that the manager and the Sub-Divisional Officer were present at the enquiry for a short time on Wednesday, that the rayats mentioned—firmly that they were forcibly made to take zirat land, which was made to bear the losses which the concern suffered owing to the fall in the price of indigo, that the manager in bravado said that he would gladly take the zirat back, that Mr. Gandhi promptly invited the names of those who wanted to surrender the zirat land. This mishap (to the concern) must have (so the theory runs) enraged the manager, and in order to discredit the enquiry, he must have instigated the fire. On Thursday, the day previous to the fire, the manager went to a neighbouring village, and spoke roughly to the people, insomuch as they had surrendered their zirat, and threatened them by saying he would insist on their re-growing indigo. The rayats remained unmoved. This would be an additional reason for starting the fire. This, however, is purely an impression which may have no foundation in facts. One thing is certain that the mission has 1 Vide footnote 2 to “Letter to Associated Press of India”, on or after 14-5-1917.

3 At Dhokraha
4 An office building
5 Vide Appendix “Statements of Peasants taken by Gandhiji”, 19-5-1917.
nothing to do with the fires. The value of the katcheri is unknown. It is not likely to be more than Rs. 200.¹

The third method adopted is continuous pinpricks administered to the villagers. The latest instance of organised intimidation is where factory amlas went to a village, and molested the labourers of a small zamindar, who is a co-sharer in a small zamindari with the factory, and who declines to surrender his share to it, and who is alleged to have circulated among the rayats the news of the mission. Statements have been received abundantly proving the alleged intimidation. Reports are continuously being received from individual rayats to the effect that they are threatened with all kinds of penalties for going to Mr. Gandhi and they come at considerable risk to themselves.

Needless to say that nothing will deter the workers from continuing their work. To abandon it would mean a terrible wrong done to the rayats. The presence of a body of workers, always listening to the simple but pathetic tale of their woes, and the knowledge that they are striving to help them and that the latter would go to them in the hour of need have buoyed them up and have given them hope and courage. The workers will be unworthy of their cause and country, if through fear or anything else, they for a moment thought of withdrawing until the rayats are able to breathe free.

Mr. Gandhi has addressed to the District Magistrate of Champaran a letter² on the incidents above set forth. Copies of this letter and other documents will be sent herewith or will shortly follow. The precautions thus taken may restrain the planters in their plan of intimidation. But the situation may develop at any moment and lawlessness may break out in intense form. It will now be understood that if this happens, the fault will in no way be that of the members of the mission, and that the public will understand that the mission will continue its work.

The foregoing emphasises the need for getting volunteers ready, so that they may start at a moment’s notice. The volunteers must be grown up, responsible, sober and educated men. They should be inured to hardships or ready to bear hardships; they should come prepared to see the struggle through, they must have workable knowledge of Hindi (Tamils alone are, therefore, ineligible, unless they have picked up a little Hindi), they must be prepared to go to the villages and live in the midst of the rayats. It is estimated that they will have to work for at least 6 months.

¹ Vide enclosure to “Letter to W. B. Heycock”, 22-5-1917.
² Vide the preceding item

M. K. GANDHI

From the typewritten office copy signed by Gandhiji: S.N. 6352. Courtesy: Gandhi Smarak Nidhi

318. LETTER TO MILLIE GRAHAM POLAK

BETTIAH,
May 21 [1917]

MY DEAR MILLIE,

I see that as your labours are about to finish (thank God) the heat is beginning to tell on you. It is ever thus. Somehow or other Providence is the kindest when it puts us through the sorest trials. Please tell Henry he ought to have sent me the speeches to which he has written his eloquent preface. But if the preface is eloquent it is not written from the depth of his heart. If he had, he would have shown the sham underlying it all without wounding anybody. The preface leaves on one the impression that there was no other side to the picture. And yet it obtrudes itself on one wherever we go. So, I shall charitably assume that Henry thought he might for once at least leave it alone.

With love,

Yours,

Bhai

[PS.]

Mr. Kunzru brings you the news from here.

From the original: Gandhi-Polak Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

1From the date-line and post-script; vide also the preceding item.
319. LETTER TO DR. H. S. DEVA

BETTIAH,
May 21 [1917]

DEAR DR. DEVA,

I observe that you do not open Mr. Shastriar’s letters and that therefore you do not see the documents I have been sending. I have therefore put your name down also on the list of those to whom papers are being sent. This enables you to show them to anybody you choose. The object that nothing should appear in the papers at the present juncture should be kept in view. That condition being observed, you may show the papers to anyone you like.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: C. W. 5798

320. LETTER TO J. P. EDWARD

BETTIAH,
May 21, 1917

DEAR MR. EDWARD,

I thank you for your letter of the 20th instant. I have told the men the contents of your letter.

Yours,
M. K. GANDHI

Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 86, p. 152

1 It was in 1917 that Gandhiji was in Bettiah on May 21.
2 Such as the preceding item
321. LETTER TO W. B. HEYCOCK

BETTIAH,
May 22, 1917

DEAR MR. HEYCOCK,

I send herewith a further statement about Dhokraha fire which speaks for itself.

Yours truly,

M. K. GANDHI

[ENCLOSURE]

BETTIAH,
The 21st May, 1917

This morning at about 10 a.m. some men came from Dhokraha and informed Mr. Gandhi that some officers had been there. He was questioning them on the occurrence, when one of them said that he had heard that the doors of the kachahri had been removed by the factory men before the fire. I suggested that a local inspection might give us useful information. Mr. Gandhi accepted the suggestion and asked me to go to Dhokraha personally. Accordingly, I proceeded to the scene at once. I reached Dhokraha at about 11.30 a.m. In the kothi I found only a cartman. He denied having been present during the time the fire was raging and informed me that the chaukidar was. I asked him to fetch the chaukidar. Meanwhile I proceeded to inspect the kachahri.

This kachahri is situated inside the compound of the residential bungalow of the manager of the concern. It consists of a single room about 21 feet by 15 feet roughly. . . .

The entire roof work has come down. The walls are made of bricks, plastered with mud. The whitewash on the walls, both inside and outside, is unaffected. Black was noticeable at the top at four or five places only. The appearance of the upper portion of the wall gives one the impression that the rafter of the roof must have been pulled away to prevent the spreading of the fire. The roof was thatched with straw over which was placed a covering of country tiles. . . . At places in the heap of rubbish were noticeable charred rafters, both outside and inside the room. There was found a heap of partly burnt papers. I examined them. They were all siahas and sattas. The siahas were for the

---

1 Watchman
2 Account books
year 1313 Fasli and the year 1315 Fasli. None of these were completely destroyed. (. .

. . . The doors as well as the frames of the three windows were altogether untouched by fire. The door C was not found in the buildings, nor was its framework there. This door is about 7_ feet by 5 feet. There were clear indications of the framework of the door being removed. The plaster had given way. The mud underneath the framework was quite clean. At the door D, the framework was charred all along, but not damaged much. There were a few hinges sticking to it. I examined them and the fresh removal of the rust from them clearly suggested that the screws had been taken out of them.

One or two screws were found still in the holes. The door appertaining to this framework was not there. There were no indications in the debris of the frame or the door in their burnt condition. No panes were found at C. There were about half a dozen small pieces of glass.

This room is said to have been formerly used as an office where rent was collected. About 2 or 3 years back, it was stated, this office was closed and all the papers of the concern were removed to Loheria. Only a chaukidar remains in this compound. A house about a hundred yards away from the residential bungalow is occupied by the kothi men.

The examination of the debris showed that the contents of the room when the fire broke out could only have been meagre. I estimate the damage to be under Rs.
200.

BINDHYABASINI PRASAD VERMA
B.A., LL.B.

Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi's Movement in Champaran, No. 92, pp.
158-9

322. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

BETTIAH,
Jeth Sud 1, May 22, 1917

CHI. CHHAGANLAL.

This letter is only for you two brothers. We must not turn away from the temper of the times. Whatever your parents may say, deep down they do wish that their devoted son and their daughter-in-law should be with them. One of you two brothers should certainly stay with them. If they are unwilling to come to Ahmedabad you should 1 A harvest era introduced by Akbar. The year 1315 Fasli corresponds to (1315+593) 1908 A.D.

2 The addressee and his younger brother Maganlal go to Rajkot. If the times were not awry why would families break up? Hence, I am convinced that if Khushalbhai does not come to Ahmedabad, one of you brothers must stay at Rajkot.

We assume that there is nothing wrong in our women going to their in-laws or their parents for delivery. This too I think is not right. Why should Narandas send Jamna to Rajkot? Why can’t you see that if the delivery cannot take place in Bombay, it is not a fit place to live in? Who will see Jamna through her delivery? Had Dev Bhabhi not been an invalid it would have been simple. Now she cannot be expected to attend to such jobs. It is our duty to make our parents feel in their old age that it is not only we who are their children but that they are the progenitors of the world at large. This can happen only when we do not make them slave for us. It is the duty of a husband to be with his wife during child-birth. (This last is a separate idea but I am mentioning it here.)

Why is Santok at Morvi? I am troubled by the information. Her duty solely was to serve the sick at Rajkot. She should not have left the house at Rajkot even for a single moment. That is my view. I realize that if Santok does not feel so she cannot be forced to do it. I am writing this for consideration of the matter to the extent that Maganlal has sympathy with it. Maganlal too is one of us. All that he can say is: ‘this is worth doing and this is not.’ He cannot go beyond that. It occurs to me that I should put before you two the question whether our education has in some way harmed the purity of filial devotion.

If you think it proper let Narandas read this letter. My mind is otherwise occupied and right now I have some other work to attend to. Hence, I have not found the peace of mind that is requisite for writing this letter. Usually I have peace at this time. It is just six o’clock in the morning. I am hesitating for fear that Narandas may not realize the import of my writing. You two know me quite well and so I do not hesitate to put my jumbled ideas before you. Jamnadas may read this letter.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: S.N. 32328. Chhaganlal Gandhi Papers. Courtesy: Chhaganlal Gandhi

1 Addressee’s mother
323. LETTER TO REVASHANKAR SODHA

BETTIAH,

Jeth Sud 1 [May 22, 1917]\(^1\)

CHI. REVASHANKAR,

I have your postcard. If the Bhadla property goes, I shall blame you alone. You ought to have taken immediate steps. I sent you the reply which had been received. Why did you not apply right then? You should now give the enclosed letter to Behcharbhai. Take him with you and submit an application to the proper authority.

As for the expenses on the looms which you ask for, write to Chi. Maganlal. He will send what he thinks fit. You don’t say what progress you have made. I don’t know whether you devote all your time to your work. You are growing more proficient in weaving day by day; you should both devote yourselves entirely to that work. Then alone will-you succeed.

You may, if so inclined, send Chi. Chhotam to Ahmedabad. Send him only if he is agreeable. It is necessary to win him over. Don’t force him to go. It is because he was very eager to go with you that I allowed him. He will get along in Ahmedabad only if he is himself willing.

I shall never approve of your going to South Africa. I see nothing but harm in your submitting to Ratanshi’s\(^2\) desire in this matter. He keeps on writing but so far he has not sent a single pie. If you go there, I think your life will be wasted as his has been. If you wish, you may send this letter to Ratanshi.

I think weaving has a bright future, if only you two devote yourselves to it.

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 3421. Courtesy: Revashankar Sodha

\(^1\) Gandhiji was in Bettiah on this day.
\(^2\) Addressee’s father
324. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

BETTIAH,
[After May 22, 1917]¹

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

There is a letter from Revashankar² in which he asks for permission to send Chhotalal and also for some monetary help. I have told him that he should write to Chi. Maganlal about money and that he should send Chhotalal only if he is himself willing to come.

The accompanying papers will show that the situation here may take a serious turn any moment. Dr. Hariprasad and others who are ready to come here must give some time to learning Hindi. I think I have already written about this.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: S. N. 6358

325. LETTER TO W. B. HEYCOCK

MOTIHARI,
May 24, 1917

DEAR MR. HEYCOCK,

I arrived here last night and hope to remain in Motihari up to Sunday afternoon. I should be at your disposal during the time.

Yours truly,

M. K. GANDHI

From the original in Gandhiji’s hand in the National Archives of India; also Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 96, p. 165

¹ From the reference to Gandhiji’s asking Revashankar to write to Maganlal about money, the letter appears to have been written after the preceding item.

² Sodha
326. LETTER TO W. S. IRWIN

Motihari,
May 24, 1917

DEAR SIR,

Lakhan Rai and Kawaldhari, both raiyats of Baratola village Basatpur, in your elaka, tell me that their crops were uprooted and removed by your men on Sunday and Monday last, and that the removal took place in your presence. They further state that this was done as a punishment for their having come previously and made statements before my colleagues at Motihari. I may say that several men have come forward who have corroborated Lakhan Rai’s statement as to the uprooting and removal of crops. I shall be obliged if you will be good enough to let me know whether there is any truth in the statements made.

Yours faithfully,

M. K. GANDHI

Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 98, pp. 165-6

327. LETTER TO CHIEF SECRETARY, BIHAR AND ORISSA

Bettiah,
May 25, 1917

TO
THE CHIEF SECRETARY
THE GOVERNMENT OF BIHAR AND ORISSA
RANCHI

SIR,

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letters of the 19th and the 21st instant.

I am grateful for the letters and the assurances contained therein.

1 A leading planter; manager of the Motihari Indigo concern, the oldest in Champaran
2 Jurisdiction

402 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
I am suggesting that [as] the matters complained of by me required immediate treatment, it was not contemplated that the Government could pass orders without receiving reports from the local officers and without hearing the landlords. Had I intended otherwise, the sending of copies of my note to the local officers and the Planters’ Associations would have been purposeless. If I may be permitted to say so, the instructions to the local officers and the invitation to the Planters’ Associations to send in their reports or observations, as the case may be, before the 30th June next largely meets the situation in point of time.

With reference to the legal aspect and the decisions of courts, they have not escaped attention. But I venture to submit that legal decisions or legal technicalities cannot for a moment be allowed to perpetuate wrongs suffered by vast masses of people. With much respect, but every confidence, I submit that the situation presented by me raises grave moral issues which in order that justice may be done might necessitate disregard of legal technicalities and legal decisions where they are in conflict with real justice. The vast inequality between landlords and rayats renders it well-nigh impossible for courts of law or even Settlement Officers to arrive at the truth in cases brought before them. I see illustrations of the proposition just submitted multiplying before me every day. Instances are not wanting of wrongs having been rectified in spite of their having been countenanced by courts of justice.

Regarding abwabs, I may be permitted to point out that the inclusion of a penalty clause in the forthcoming Bettiah Raj leases will grant only partial and tardy relief. For the leases will not cover the whole of the tenancies affected, and with respect to a wrong which has been unanimously admitted, the postponement of relief till the termination of and the renewal of the leases means unnecessary delay. I take it that the leases will not be renewed until the agrarian condition is placed on a sound basis. It may be added that a penalty clause in his lease is no remedy against a landlord who places himself above law. In my humble opinion, therefore, the issue of a notice warning landlords against exacting abwabs, salami, fines, etc., or impressing labour, carts, or ploughs and informing raiyats that they ought not to pay them and that they are not bound to give their landlords their labour or carts or ploughs will be most appropriate at the present moment, will ease the raiyats’ minds and will be an earnest of the Government’s desire to grant them speedy relief where relief is deemed necessary.

---

2 Presents

I have the honour to be,

Sir,

Your most obedient servant,

M. K. GANDHI

From a typewritten copy. Courtesy: Gandhi Smarak Nidhi

328. LETTER TO W. B. HEYCOCK

MOTHARI,
May 25, 1917

DEAR MR. HEYCOCK,

I have just now before me men from Ramsingh Chhatauni who tell me that they were beaten by Mr. Irwin on Sunday night. They say there are men too who saw an assault committed on a third man and themselves by the factory men.

Another man tells me that over fifty bighas of their own land was taken away from them by the kothi in exchange for some other land for which they did not then care and do not now care. If these statements are true, they are serious. As there appears to be some tension, I want as far as is possible to avoid for a little time having to go to the dehats. But I feel however that I should visit Chhatauni this evening. And I shall leave here at 5.30 p.m. precisely unless you desire me to adopt any other course.¹

Yours truly,

M. K. GANDHI

From the original in Gandhiji’s hand in the National Archives of India; also Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 101, p. 168

¹ Heycock replied: “I prefer to leave it to you to do as you think best.”
329. LETTER TO W. B. HEYCOCK

MOTIHARI,
May 26, 1917

DEAR MR. HEYCOCK,

I thank you for your note of yesterday’s date. I received it at 6.45 a.m. today.

My messenger who took my note told me that you were away and brought the information that you were expected back at about 2 p.m. After waiting up to 6 p.m. I decided to go to Chhatauni as I was anxious to pay a surprise visit and as I had prevented the man who had come to me from preceed[ing] me.

Yours truly,

M. K. GANDHI

From the original in Gandhiji’s hand in the National Archives of India; also Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 101 (A), p. 169

330. LETTER TO ESTHER FAERING

BETTIAH,
May 26, 1917

MY DEAR ESTHER,

Your letter is so good that I am taking the liberty of sending it to the Polaks to read and then forward it to Ahmedabad. I hope you, don’t mind my having taken the liberty.

Those who do not grow indigo, also want to make illegal gains. Hence they force the raiyats on their land to labour for them at a trifling wage or none at all at times and make them pay extras apart from rents. Yes, the condition is no better than that of slaves. The further papers I have sent you will throw more light on the question. I must say that the planters are not alone to blame. The planters happen to be English. Indian landlords are not better and some of them are much worse. It is undoubtedly the ignorance on this point of public men that has permitted the wrong to continue so long. Governments rarely move except under pressure.

1 The letter is damaged here.
For you no doubt Tamil takes precedence of every other language. But it will be most helpful if you could master the Devanagari script. It is easy and it is the most perfect alphabet in the world in that each letter represents only one sound and almost all the sounds are represented by it.

Yours,
BAPU

My Dear Child, pp. 10-1

331. LETTER TO MILLIE GRAHAM POLAK

May 26 [1917]¹

MY DEAR MILLIE,

This illness of Henry’s must have been the greatest trial of his life. He need not allow the illness to upset his belief in a guiding providence. Nala is said to have been bitten by a cobra. The cobra when asked by Nala, told him that he was bitten so as to transform his appearance and so enable him successfully to hide his identity during his banishment.² I do believe that our illnesses often comes to us as disciplinary measures.

After a long silence I received a letter from Natesan³ today in which he says that he has been away in Ooty, etc. This may account for his silence. But he is, I know, very careless about answering letters. I am not excusing him. I am describing his limitations.

You will be glad to read the enclosed letter.⁴ I do hope that Kothagiri is near enough for Ceilia to meet Miss Faering. She is a most kind-hearted girl. Do write to her if you feel inclined. Miss Esther Faering, Spring Cottage, Kothagiri. Please send the letter to Ahmedabad after you have done with it.

With love,

Yours,
BHAI

From the original: Gandhi-Polak Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

¹From the contents
²The story is told in the Mahabharata.
³G.A. Natesan
⁴This was a letter from Esther Faering; vide “Letter to Esther Faering”, 26-5-1917.
Hindi alone can become the common language of the educated people of India. All that has to be considered is how this can be brought about. The place that English is trying to usurp today, and which it is impossible for it to take, must be given to Hindi; for it alone has the right to it. This place cannot go to English, for it is a foreign language and very difficult for us to learn. Learning Hindi is child’s play in comparison. The number of those speaking Hindi is almost 65 million. The Bengali, Bihari, Oriya, Marathi, Gujarati, Rajasthani, Punjabi and Sindhi languages are sisters of Hindi. People speaking these languages can understand and speak a little of Hindi. If we include these, the number is almost 220 million. How then can English, which even a hundred thousand Indians cannot speak correctly, compete successfully with a language which is so widely used? That to this day we have not even begun conducting our national business in Hindi is because of our cowardice, lack of faith and ignorance of the greatness of the Hindi language. If we give up our cowardice, cultivate faith and realize the greatness of the Hindi language, Hindi will begin to be used for the work of our national and Provincial councils and Government organizations. The beginning should be made in the Provinces. If there is some difficulty in this, it is for people speaking the Dravidian languages like Tamil, etc., but we have the remedy for this too. Hindi-knowing men who are zealous, brave, full of self-respect and energetic should be sent to Madras and other provinces to teach Hindi without receiving payment. With the help of such heroic missionaries, the educated people of Madras, etc. can learn Hindi in a very short time. If we have the right spirit, the solution is as simple as the rule of three.

The more instructors are sent, the faster will be the spread of Hindi. Besides the sending of teachers, self-instruction books should also be prepared. These books should be distributed free. Famous speakers should also be sent to bring home to the people the importance of learning Hindi.

What it is necessary to do in Tamil Nad for the spread of Hindi, it is desirable to do in Bombay and other provinces. Hindi books should be prepared for people speaking Marathi, Gujarati, etc., and

---

332. SPREADING HINDI

---

1 This article in Hindi was sent for publication to various papers in May 1917.
workers should be sent to those areas.

This work requires money. The well-to-do among us should not take it as a burden. It is their duty to assist in this gigantic enterprise. It is necessary to set up a small committee to organize this. It will be proper to see that only active workers are put on it.

One important matter is implied in this submission and that is that no distinction is made between Hindi and Urdu. Indeed, why should we quarrel with our Muslim brethren? They may use the Persian script. A few among us know the Persian script and more will learn it. So long as our Muslim brethren have not learnt the Devnagari, both the scripts will continue to be used for national work. However, this is a matter we can decide in a fraternal spirit with our Muslim brethren. Right now the chief task is to spread the national language throughout India in the Devnagari script.

[From Hindi]

Pratap, 28-5-1917

---

333. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

BETTIAH,

Tuesday [May 29, 1917]¹

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I am sending you a letter from Prabhudas. He is not with me at present. I am going to tell him that he has written the letter half-heartedly. He should write on a good paper without smudging it and in detail. I will tell him that. You too may write to him something to that effect. I do not want to hurt him, still I want him to make progress. He is very happy here-goes for walks. He complains of headaches in the afternoon. It seems there is some problem with his eyes. He may require glasses after his eyes are examined. His health is improving here. He is able to eat well. He takes ghee, curd, fruit, etc., in plenty.

I am sending Mahatmaji’s letter² for all of you to read.

¹ The letter appears to have been written before the one to the addressee dated May 30, 1917; Vide “Guide to London”, 1893-94. The Tuesday preceding May 30 was May 29, which may well be the date when this letter was written.

² Presumably the one referred to in “Letter to W.b. Heycock”, 22-4-1917 in which Mahatma Munshiram had informed Gandhiji that he had adopted the name ‘Shraddhanand’
I hope cleanliness is maintained there scrupulously. There should not be cobwebs and things scattered all over the house, toilets flooded with water and their walls and doors as well as the doors of your room dirty.

The more dirt I see outside, the more I think of the Ashram.

Chi. Maganlal had written to Khushalbhai. What reply has he received?

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32871

334. STATEMENT TO THE PRESS ON CHAMPARAN COMMITTEE

BANKIPORE,
May 29, 1917

With reference to The Pioneer's statement announcing the Bihar Government's intention to appoint a committee of enquiry into the relations between zamindars and tenants in general and European planters and their ryots in particular, Mr. Gandhi has issued the following statement to the Press.

If the continuing known wrongs are immediately redressed, any inquiry covering definite issues with a time-limit as to its findings is likely to meet the existing situation. The work of my colleagues and myself will then for the time being mostly consist in marshalling leading evidence before the enquiry committee.

The Pioneer, 31-5-1917
335. LETTER TO W. B. HEYCOCK

BETTIAH,
May 30, 1917

DEAR MR. HEYCOCK,

I beg to enclose herewith for your information copy of my letter to Mr. Irwin.

I have received a summon to wait on the L.-G. at Ranchi on the 4th June.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From the original in Gandhiji’s hand in the National Archives of India; also Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 107, p. 173

336. LETTER TO W. S. IRWIN

BETTIAH,
May 30, 1917

DEAR SIR,

Owing to certain statements made by your raiyats of Tola Gujpura Ramsingh, Chhatauni, I paid on Friday last a surprise visit to the Tola at about 8 p.m.

I met over fifty villagers and they pointed out to me a piece of land said to be 51 bighas in extent which (they said) had been recently converted by you into zirat. They said that in most cases they were given an equivalent in extent but not in quality. They pointed out the village pasturage bordering on the converted zirat which (they said) had now become practically inaccessible owing to the fear of their cattle being impounded. They showed me also the only way (according to their statement) leading to the cattle pound, and said that they could not for the same fear use it as it passed by the zirat. The men bitterly complained that the dispossession which they hold was forcible had caused them a great loss. They stated that at the time of conversion they were made to put their thumb impressions to certain documents the contents of which they did not know and the

1 Lieutenant-Governor
copies of which they were not given.

Hiraman Lohar, who was one of the party, told me that he was assaulted on Sunday, the 20th instant, by your employees for having remonstrated with them on their trying to take his bhusa, and that he was only released on the importunity of the villagers who intervened on his behalf. Nepali and Japal, nephew and son, respectively, of Hiramman, told me that as a result of the occurrence they were on their way to me. The cry was raised that they were going to the thana. Your men thereupon ran after them, seized them (so it is stated) and took them to you. They added that you whipped them. One of them showed strong marks on his calves and on his back. They were sent by you to the murghikhana and were fined Rs. 10 each. They were released at midnight on their promising to secure the fines in the morning. For these fines a guarantee was given by Mahajan Liladhar Sah to your representative the next morning.

Jadu Rai, of village Katha, son of Man Singh Rai, came to me at Motihari on the 26th instant and said that he held six bighas of land, that he had paid Rs. 75 as tawan in lieu of indigo cultivation, that for failure to supply a plough to the factory and to pay a fine of Rs. 10 in default he was dispossessed of his land and made to sign a document. He showed me a receipt No. 102 dated 1323 [sic] for Rs. 14.6.9.

I feel it but right that I should bring to your notice matters of the character above referred to. I should esteem it a favour if you would throw light on the incidents I have described.

Yours faithfully,
M. K. GANDHI

Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi's Movement Champaran, No. 108, pp. 173-4

1 The husk of grain; chaff
2 A fowl-house
BETTIAH,
May 30, 1917

I have the honour to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 27th instant on the agrarian situation in Champaran.

I shall be pleased to wait on His Honour at Ranchi on Monday next, the 4th June, at midday.

Your letter raises issues which it is impossible for me to ignore if I am faithfully to serve the cause that keeps me in Champaran.

It is part of the raiyats’ case that the planters will stop short of nothing to gain their end. I have noticed ever since my arrival the very great and undue influence that the planters enjoy over everybody and in everything. They have striven their best to have me removed from Champaran. They have not hesitated to impute motives to the honourable men who at considerable personal sacrifice have been giving me valuable assistance. They have without doubt used at least “moral suasion” in keeping the raiyats from coming to me. At Dhokraha I witnessed the sorrowful spectacle of two or three men declaiming, in the presence of the Manager and the Subdivisional Officer, on the virtues of the kothi in front of a crowd of nearly 500 men who complained bitterly against the kothi about zirat land forced-on them and fines exacted from them for disobedience. These witnesses were brought by the Manager from Loheria to say that Loheria had no complaint and that the Dhokraha complaints were due to the machinations of one or two agitators. Since then many Loheria raiyats have come and complained precisely in the same manner as Dhokraha men. It should be noted that if full justice is done to the raiyats, planters stand to lose huge yearly incomes and many privileges they have hitherto enjoyed. In the circumstances, I do not entirely discount the statement the raiyats make to me that the fires have been instigated by the kothis in question to discredit my mission and to remove me from their midst. The raiyats add that they might be given some credit for selfishness and that their self-interest should deter them from incendiaryism or such other acts. I have submitted to the District Magistrate the results of my inquiry1 into the Dhokraha fire. I beg to enclose copy of my letter to Mr. Heycock2.

1 Vide “Letter to W.B. Heycock”, 22-5-1917.
2 ibid
am, however, willing to disbelieve the raiyats’ theory and put down the fire to natural accidents. I may add, however, that in the Dhokraha fire, it was the roofing alone that was burnt. But I venture to suggest that even if it is the wilful act of a maniacal raiyat done in the excitement caused by my presence; it would be no justification for my removal, unless the Government are satisfied that I have been directly or indirectly instrumental in causing the fires. Finally, there have been fires in the kothis before my arrival and that the excitement in Champaran as admitted by the Commissioner was in existence long before I entered Bihar. I wish respectfully to warn the Government that they will have utterly misunderstood the position if they remove me from the raiyats. I have no desire to do aught except promote peace between the planters and the raiyats so as to secure to the raiyats the freedom and dignity that should belong to all mankind.

I ask the Government to dismiss from their minds the theory suggested by the planters that the present excitement is caused by mischievous persons for private reasons. Planters are too powerful to be touched by any person, no matter how mischievous he may be. The raiyats say that they never deserved the police guards that were placed in their villages and that they were part of the policy of repression pursued by the planters. It is admitted that in Sathi the Manager was more to blame than the raiyats, and yet the raiyats had to pay with their blood and money. It is all peace there now, because the Manager knows his work. I have before me statements from over 7,000 raiyats from all parts of Champaran. I have seen all of them though I have found it impossible personally to take down their statements. It is difficult for me to believe that they all tell lies at the instigation of a few mischievous men.

I enclose copies of my letters addressed to the Manager of the Motihari concern. I have not had any reply to my first communication. Probably there is the other side to the story, but the incidents described show at what risk the raiyats come to me. I quote what Mr. Johnston, one time Subdivisional Officer in Bettiah Subdivision, had to say in 1914 regarding the methods adopted by planters to bend the raiyats to their will:

There are four methods prevalent in this subdivision compelling recalcitrant tenants to pay up. The commonest way is by putting peons on, the petitions do not

1 Vide letters to Irwin, 24-5-1917 & 30-5-1917.
2 Edward Hamilton Johnston, I.C.S., Subdivisional Officer, Bettiah, in 1913-4 allege that this has been done. The next way is to attach crops standing on khalihan, but this also is not alleged. Then sometimes the barbers and washermen are stopped from rendering their services; the petitioners only fear this, it has not been done yet.
Finally, a very effective means is to impound the raiyats’ cattle either in a private pound or if the D. B. pound is leased out to the landlord then in it.

The report itself is otherwise hostile to the raiyats. I am of opinion that it did not do justice to the raiyats. I give this opinion in all humility and after having thoroughly gone into the situation. It is often forgotten that it is not necessary for the planters to resort to force actually in every case. The fact that it is there to be used on the slightest attempt at the show of independence is enough to prevent recalcitrancy. I respectfully submit that planters have had it their own way long enough [so] that the raiyats are in a condition of paralysis.
They are worthy of patient care and attention from the Government.
But the latter will not render that help, unless they are prepared to believe the raiyats’ story (exaggerated no doubt it will be) in preference to the planters”.

I tender my apology for the length of this communication. If I have been over-frank, the cause I espouse must be my excuse. It is too great to admit of tinkering. I hope that at a crisis like the one that faces the Government and the people of India, the Government do not wish me to conceal my feelings.

I am deeply grateful to His Honour that he has decided to have a personal conversation with me. I shall hope for the sake of the raiyats that nothing I may say or do will adversely affect their cause, and that I shall find the right word in His Honour’s presence so that he can appreciate the awfulness of the raiyats’ position even as I do.

Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 109, pp. 174-7

---

1 The threshing floor
CONFIDENTIAL

The matters seem to be reaching a crisis as will appear from the enclosed letter\textsuperscript{1} from the Government and reply\textsuperscript{2} thereto. If Mr. Gandhi and his colleagues are removed, it is expected that the leaders will one after another step into the breach. In order to do this, it is necessary to realize the inner situation here. It is this: raiyats are so paralysed and have suffered so long that they had begun to believe that deliverance was never coming. They now feel the warmth of the proximity of their own countrymen who are at least willing to listen to them if they can render no effective help. This has been enough to rouse their drooping-spirits. It will be cruel to leave them unguarded until the question is settled and their independence guaranteed to them. Forcible removal of the mission is likely to lead to terrorism and under it to recantation of the statements hitherto made. A further note with the papers referred to in the reply to the Chief Secretary will follow.

M. K. GANDHI

From the typewritten office copy signed by Gandhiji. Courtesy: Gandhi Smarak Nidhi

\textsuperscript{1} Chief Secretary’s letter of 27-5-1917; \textit{vide} Select Documents, No.103, p. 170

\textsuperscript{2} Vide the preceding item.
BHAISHRI SANKALCHAND.

I happen to be free at the moment. I read your letter again, and also the time-table. A time-table always gives me a headache. I have made no attempt to remember this one.

I think history and geography, which have been mentioned as separate subjects, should be included under Gujarati. We want to develop the intellect through the Gujarati language. For that purpose, we may use a language book one day and a text on history the next. We should orally go over the matter to be taught and then make something to teach on it. This will reduce the quantum of literature by a little, but that should not matter. If the history and the geography being taught are of the same country, the latter will be easy to learn and prove interesting. As for history, to the extent that we treat it as literature, we may give some well-phrased pithy sentences. For instance, “We look upon Ramachandra as an avatar, as God Himself. The term avatar is of Sanskrit origin. Avatru means to descend. God’s descent (to this earth) is his avatar. But at the moment we are not thinking of Rama as an avatar. We shall only consider the Rama of history.” Whether these sentences have any life in them, you teachers know best. But they are good enough to illustrate my point. This will cover literature all right. We may compose many such sentences as we narrate the history of Ramachandra. We may first dictate them or write them out on the blackboard and then tell the story. We may deliberately use some difficult words, as we do so. The pupils will want to know their meanings and so the discussion will proceed. Since he was born in Ayodhya, it will be necessary to explain its geography. There will of course be a map. How far it is from Ahmedabad, how one may arrive there, what it is like today, whether it answers to the poet’s description of it—all this is literature, history, and geography combined. You must

1 Gandhiji was in Bettiah on this day.
2 Of Gandhiji’s National School; vide “National Gujarati School”, after 18-1-1917.
first make up your mind, while telling a story like this, how much literature you wish to teach, how much of history and how much of geography and then be as one with the pupils. Sanskrit should be simplified and, if it is grouped with Marathi and the two taught on alternate days, there will be some saving of time. It may not be that there will be one or the other of the two languages every day, but the principle will apply. We must reduce the hours for each. So long as we have only the Ashram boys in the school, there is no need to provide separately for religious instruction. It will suffice to tell them the stories we want to at prayer time.

I am of the view that, if Kaka¹ is an expert in drill, the classes should start and end with it. It will be enough to have it for five minutes at the commencement and five minutes at the end. This is to be followed after the movements have been learnt. Time should be found on one of the week days for teaching the movements. What is taught on that day may be practised for a week.

Agricultural work will be difficult till some land has been obtained. Perhaps it will be best to drop it for the time being. The man who teaches us should be one who has himself been a successful farmer. If a gardener is available, he should remain on the farm and teach us various techniques, which we, teachers and pupils, may learn for a year or two. We may then go into the science of agriculture. It will not be possible to provide for some hours of agricultural work to all the boys every day. But they can learn the work only if every week different classes are given two or three days by turns. Forty minutes are not enough for the purpose. They may suffice for learning the science of agriculture theoretically. The same is true of weaving. Both will require constant practice. It will be necessary, therefore, to set apart days on which pupils can give at least two hours at a stretch. If Shri Pandya knows both the theory and the practice of agriculture and if he agrees to join, no doubt he will be very useful. As a rule, a man coming from a Government agricultural school cannot, I believe, be of much help to us. Ask Maganlal to tell the story of Nagin Babu of Santiniketan. It was not his fault. How could he help it?

It is not necessary to teach carpentry till a boy is twelve. A child is not able even to lift or use a hammer. At a later age, we shall have no option but to teach it. It should be treated as a part of agriculture.

¹ Kalelkar
This is not done in India. It is, however, a kind of work which we shall not be able to do till we have moved to our own land.

You must find a Gujarati equivalent for “workshop”. Will karakhanu do? Someone had mentioned “metric system” in the curriculum. Henceforward, we should be careful about using such terms. There are so many points like these over which we have to break our heads. If you do that, our children will enjoy the fruits.

It will be enough to give every division one hour weekly for hygiene. The teacher should keep a watch whether the things taught in these hours are acted upon during the rest of the week. Because the pupil doesn’t have another hour for the subject on the other days, it does not mean that the teacher has forgotten what he taught in that week. If a boy attends the school with his nails grown and filled with dirt, the teacher can ask him, even during the period for arithmetic, why his nails are dirty and what he had been taught on this point.

It is certain that Professor (what is the Gujarati for this? Or, will it have to be retained in the language just as it is?) Kripalani will join. He will take a trial for some time. If the thing is not beyond his capacity, he will join. For the present, he just cannot get away from here.

I have written at length on some points, saying things which may appear rather silly. My anxiety to make myself quite clear was the reason.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

Something remains yet.

Music will have to be left out till we get a teacher for it. Since due weight is not attached to it, the thing has remained with actors and bhaktas. We must consider before taking in an actor. A bhakta we are not likely to get. Write to the Gandharva [Maha]vidyalaya and see if you succeed. Will you please send a list of the equipment needed for science? I hesitate to buy costly equipment before we have become stable. If any books are wanting, it will be good if you make a list of them as well.

Please treat all my observations as no more than suggestions for consideration. Whether or not they should be implemented is left to the inclinations of you all.

1 Devotees of God
I am returning your letter and the curriculum.

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: S.N. 6360

340. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

BETTIAH,

Jeth Sud 9, May 30, 1917

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I have received letters of both of you. The situation here has taken a serious turn.¹ Hence I shall not be able to write fully.

If it is absolutely necessary to go to Rajkot, it seems proper that you go there. Maganlal certainly cannot leave. I very well realize that even you cannot leave. But I am certain that one of you should be there. If something untoward happened all of us would repent. If Fulchand can be persuaded to go to Ahmedabad you should entrust him with your work and go. And I suggest appointing another clerk.

If it is possible to shift to a new place for the monsoon this should be done. But do not insist upon it too much. If the curriculum seems too strenuous, some adjustments should be made. However, neither weaving nor agriculture should be neglected.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I have consulted a doctor for Prabhudas. I have ordered spectacles for him. He has learnt cycling. He cannot go there for the present. He will go if all of us are arrested.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Chhaganlal Gandhi Papers. Courtesy: Chhaganlal Gandhi

¹ Attempts were being made by European indigo-planters to remove Gandhiji from Champaran while he was negotiating with the Government for the redress of the peasants’ grievances. Vide also “Letter to Chief Secretary. Bihar”, 30-5-1917.
341. LETTER TO SANKALCHAND SHAH

BETTIAH,
Jeth Sud 9 [May 30, 1917]¹

BHAISHRI SANKALCHAND.

I have your letter. The problem here has suddenly taken so serious a turn that it has become doubtful whether I will get the time to look into the papers you have sent me. You will read the report of the whole affair².

This at least I feel . . .³ it can be taken after some time. You too have been informed accordingly. There is no doubt that all this experience we are getting is invaluable. One or two additional teachers will be needed. Look for them. Take care of your health at least for the sake of the school.⁴

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

[PS.]
If Pandya comes, I think it will be right to engage him.

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33116

342. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

Jeth Sud 10 [May 31, 1917]¹

CHI. MAGANLAL,

I am sure you would have paid attention to the construction of the houses and factories of the jail also to the condition of kitchen, etc. Someday, when I reach there, I will make arrangement for the ¹ From the combination of place-name and Gujarati month and day, the year is evidently 1917. Jeth Sud 9 in that year corresponded to May 30.

² Presumably in newspapers regarding progress of the Champaran Satyagraha in which Gandhiji was involved at the time.

³ Some words here have faded out in the source.

⁴ The National School in the Ashram at Kocharab; vide letter to the addressee, “Letter to Sankalchand Shah”, 30-5-1917, in which, however, the date is wrongly given as May 30, 1917. Jeth Sud 1 was May 22 and not May 30.

⁵ Jeth Sud 10 in the year 1917 corresponded to May 31. The year is evident from the contents vide Vol. XIII and footnotes 1 and 2 on the following page.
children, too.

I think they do everything except making the woof in the jail. I feel that we should see how a woof made of yarn works. If the instrument meant for use as woof can be made of yarn, it may be necessary to have it for finer work like that of silk.

At present we have to see how much we can weave without the help of machines. Seek the opinion of Lalji also in this connection.

Did you again get information regarding the goods sent to Shivpujan? These things should not get misplaced in transit. Have you again received a letter from Shivpujan? Write to him. Let him return the goods. I have received the bundle of clothes.

I hope you know that one has to obtain permission from the Collector before building a house. I enclose herewith a letter to the bank.

I will leave for Ranchi on Saturday\(^1\) and reach there on Monday. At present, the headquarters of the Bihar government is Ranchi. Keep sending the post as you have been doing till now. There will be some new development in Ranchi\(^2\).

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

[PS.]

I have written from here a letter of request to respected Khushalbhai.

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32923

343. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

_BETTIAH_

[May, 1917]\(^3\)

CHI. MAGANLAL,

I have your letter. You did well in writing to respected Khushalbhai. If you have faith in our common kitchen and no less in Khushalbhai, it is bound to be rewarded. You may even go further and

---

\(^1\) That is, June 2, 1917

\(^2\) Where Gandhiji was to hold discussions with the Lt. Governor from 4th to 6th June

\(^3\) This is given by the addressee on the letter.
tell him that we may introduce any rules of cleanliness he suggests. You should explain to him politely but firmly that dharma does not consist in these notions about being defiled by contact—with this or the other thing. As Akha has sung: “That one may be defiled by touch of others, like a superfluous limb is this notion.” Here, I am being showered with love. There is no end to people’s suffering. I am getting a wonderful experience of villages.

If Mavji is otherwise a good man, fix a pay for him. It is necessary that such men get trained and pick up everything about weaving, so that we can employ thousands of them.

Show all the accounts to the gentleman who has come forward to pay the expenses of the Ashram. If he does, I see nothing wrong in accepting what he gives. I am writing to Prabhudas to tell him that he may now come here if he wants to. It is quite true that, had Chhaganlal been late this time, he would have been too late to be of any help. As things have by chance come off in time at the last hour, one feels as if everything has been all right.

You want to know when my work here will be over. From the magnitude of the task, it would seem that it might take years. If I go by my faith, I think it will take six months. I have here men of sterling worth to help me. More are likely to join. I continue to have God’s mercy in abundance. It is not true that Prabhudas’s brain has grown dull for want of milk. Chi. Chhaganlal wonders if this is so. The reason is to be found in Prabhudas’s passing from one phase of growth to another. When passing through an important change of this kind, many people feel disturbed in one way or another. Moreover, as I could see while teaching Prabhudas, he worked very hard competing with Devdas. He has some excellent qualities. He has exerted himself beyond his limits, considering his age and capacity. He feels exhausted now.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5711. Courtesy: Radhabehn Choudhri

---

1 This letter is not available.
344. LETTER TO W. B. HEYCOCK

BETTIAH,

June 1, 1917

DEAR MR. HEYCOCK,

I think I promised to refer you to the report from which I had quoted to you regarding the methods the factories adopted to make the raiyats to do their will. This report is dated the 22nd July 1914 and is signed by Mr. E. H. Johnston, S.D.O., Bettiah. It is a report about the Bettiah factory.

Yours truly,

M. K. GANDHI

From the original in Gandhiji’s hand in the National Archives of India; also Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 110, p. 190

345. LETTER TO V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI

MOTHIARI,

CHAMPARAN,

June 1917

DEAR MR. SHASTRIAR,

I wonder if the enclosed has reached from another source. I know you would like it. Hoping you are keeping well.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: G.N. 6296

---

1 For this quotation, vide “Letter to Chief Secretary, Bihar”, 30-5-1917.
2 Not available.
CHI. MAGANLAL,

The friend Kishorelal about whom Chandulal wrote has arrived here. But his health is not too good and I am sending him back. He is a fine man. I have suggested to him that he may join the school. I take it that you will let him join.

In the letter I posted this morning, I could not complete the point towards the end. If Fulchand and Narahari were not included among the inmates, the idea was to suggest that, at the critical hour, they should be free to get some experience of jail here if they so desire. It is because of Sankalchand that the school has started. Even if he wants to, he cannot come here. I cannot imagine the school without Kaka at present. Sankalchand cannot run it by himself. And so Kaka must remain. He doesn’t have anything more to learn here. I think he is a veteran. He can work hard enough. What he has to learn is to serve, tied down to one spot, and he has now such an opportunity. Mama can work half the time in the school and half on the loom or he can work all the time on the loom. He is much in the same position as Kaka. All that is to be learnt here is to suffer, when the hour comes, and go to jail. Mama has passed the test in this school. Without Chhotalal, how could you run the loom by yourself? For him, moreover, going to jail is a kind of indulgence, so to say. Jail is no hardship to him. If there is hardship anywhere, it is there. That, too, he bears and will go on bearing. If Santok remains there, the girls will be looked after and Vrajlal can also be free of the kitchen. Chhaganlal can be spared if Khushalbhai has gone over there. Punjabhai will then keep accounts as well as he may. Who will be asking for them? This is the arrangement that occurs to me. No one from among the teachers is obliged to join in work of this kind, nor do I expect them to. All that I have suggested is that, even if any of them want to join, only two can be spared. For the immediate present, however, I don’t see the need for anyone besides Devdas to come. When you, Mama and Chhotalal have acquired full mastery over the loom, you yourselves will take up the fight, without depending on me, for the uplift of handloom workers. When Sankalchand and others are in full command of the National School, the teachers will themselves take up the struggle for the spread of that type of education everywhere. If I am a free man and alive, I shall join in that effort too. If not, this struggle will have shown the way to you all.

One-pointed is the intellect that functions with a purpose, son of Kuru!
Many-branched and infinite are the movements of the intellect devoid of purpose.¹

This covers everything.

Once we have decided what we want and are resolved not to be deterred by anything that may follow, the developments will show us the way. There is not much to be learnt in how I listen to people’s tales [of suffering] and take the, statements. This contains a reply to Mama’s letter too. Show him the whole letter. It seems you have forgotten about the letter to Narandas, or the one from him, that you were to send to me. You may employ any labour that may be necessary except for weaving. As to the charges, we can go as far as reasonable market rates. What you say about the plan of the house seems all right to me. If you go to live there, put up the hedge immediately. What it will be of, you may consider and decide. I have already given the plan I should like. See that the verandahs around the house are wide enough. It will be all right to have the teachers’ rooms in front, as also those for Lalji and others. I can’t think [about the arrangement] for respected Khushalbhai. You may do so yourself. It also remains to be seen what he decides in response to my letter². I think we shall have to spend up to Rs. 20,000 on the buildings; we can manage that. We shall be receiving Rs. 2,000 annually from Doctor Saheb. He has not so far paid the sum [for this year] but I take it that he will do so now. Let him know your needs. I am treating the land as a separate item. If you think it necessary to use full-baked bricks for the construction of the buildings, do so. The Executive Engineer there is Mr. Tyobji. He will help you. Punjabhai was with me when he took me to see the jail.

Yes, it is quite right to pay the salaries from the Ashram reserves.
We shall see what to do when some one donates money for the school. The teachers’ quarters will also be constructed out of

¹ Bhagvad Gita, II.41
² Not available
the Ashram funds. They should, if they can, pay rent at the rate of six per cent, or any other rate which may be considered reasonable, on the cost of the land and all the other expenses. This answers all your points.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

What Chhaganlal says about Jivanlalbhai having been paid up to the 15th is not right. I have already arranged that a fortnight’s salary should be remitted to him in advance and that subsequently he should be paid on the first of every month. You can make sure by looking into the cheque book and consulting Fulchand. It is not our idea that we should meet our expenses in the future out of the interest. As far as possible, we shall live within whatever we receive, unasked, for the expenses. But, to the extent that we fail in our _tapascharya_, we shall appeal for donations. This is the way all great undertakings in the world are carried on. Institutions which are maintained out of interest lose vitality in the end. People will maintain any institution that they need. If the Shriji [temple] were without its rich wealth, the priests would be more concerned with their spiritual state. The teachers need not get alarmed by this view of mine or by the proposed arrangement. In the notes lying with Shukla Saheb' and Revashankarbhai, there is sufficient reserve to meet their needs for four years. I have, all the same, written to the Doctor asking him to undertake the responsibility of meeting all the expenses for the present, and I think he will. Send him a complete estimate for the year. When I am outside [jail] the question does not arise.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5713. Courtesy: Radhabehn Choudhri

---

1 D. B. Shukla
DEAR MAHARAJA SAHEB BAHADUR.

In accordance with your suggestion, I reduce to writing my views about the proposed inquiry.

In my opinion, simultaneously with the appointment of a Committee of Enquiry (or arbitration, as suggested herein below), there should be declaration regarding the various points referred to in my letter to the Government dated the 13th May last. 'Tinkathia in every shape and form, hand-notes being balances of tawan and hundas as in the Dhokraha kothi, should be declared as abolished or cancelled.

I have no desire, if I can help it, to lead evidence as to the coercive methods adopted by the planters to bend the raiyats to their will except in so far as it may be necessary regarding sharahbeshi and tawan. I am anxious to see cordial relations established between the planters and the raiyats. And in any inquiry that is the result of a mutual understanding, an investigation into methods of coercion can find no place.

There would then remain only the question of sharahbeshi, sattas and individual hardships, in the shape of raiyats having been dispossessed of their lands, etc., and the refund of tawan and sharahbeshi already taken. These the Committee will investigate. Sharahbeshi payments should meanwhile be suspended.

The Committee will confine its attention to sharahbeshi sattas not covered by the forthcoming judgment of the High Court, the latter to be accepted as final by both the parties. Inquiry into sharahbeshi sattas will then naturally be postponed till after the judgment of the High Court.

Upon the Committee being appointed, the scope of our work will be altered. It will then consist in collecting, collating and leading evidence and in simultaneously carrying out the educative and protective programme sketched before you.

1 Of Darbhanga, Member; Executive Council, Bihar and Orissa

Such a Committee, then, may be in the nature of an arbitration of which the planters’ and the raiyats’ nominees (one of each) will be members with the right to them to appoint an umpire. The decision of the arbitration should be treated as final and binding on both the parties. Behind it, in the place of judicial authority, will be that of the Government, if either party failed to carry out the award of the arbitration. This is a domestic quarrel and if it is settled in the manner indicated by me, it will create a healthy precedent.

If, however, it may not be in the nature of an arbitration, it will then be a Committee appointed by the Government, two members being the same as under the arbitration scheme and the president being a High Court Judge.

If there is any point herein which requires elucidation and if it is so desired, I shall be prepared to wait on the Council at any time required.

I remain,
Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 115, pp. 198-9

348. INTERVIEW WITH LT.-GOVERNOR OF BIHAR

June 5, 1917

I discussed with Mr. Gandhi this afternoon, Chief Secretary being present, the question of the step to be taken in connection with the Champaran situation. I explained to Mr. Gandhi that he had now had ample time to obtain all the information he needed, and that the raiyats were getting in an excited state, and it was necessary in some way to put an end to a situation which was rapidly becoming a dangerous one. It is impossible for Mr. Gandhi himself to settle the questions which have been raised, as the planters would not recognise his authority; also for him to attempt to do so would be assuming the functions of Government. Government had intended to postpone their consideration of the points at issue until the settlement report had been received, but they recognise that, in present circumstances, this is no longer possible. It was decided, therefore, to appoint a Committee consisting of a senior 1 This is a note by Lt.-Governor, shown to Gandhiji and altered by him.

revenue officer from another province (Mr. Sly) as President, and the following members:—Mr. Rainy, Deputy Secretary, Financial Department, Government of India; Mr. Adami, Legal Remembrancer; Mr. D. Reid, representative of the planters on the Legislative Council; Raja Harihar Prasad Narayan Singh of Amawan, as the representative of the zamindars; and Mr. Gandhi himself as the representative of the raiyats. The appointment of the last three gentleman, of course, could only be made with their consent, and I asked Mr. Gandhi if he would agree to serve. He said at first that he would prefer to remain outside the Committee, so that he might lead the evidence. But, after some discussion, he admitted that there were advantages in his being on the Committee, provided that it was recognised by Government that he had his own pronounced views which he might not readily change, and also that he would wish to place his own evidence before the Committee in the form of a written statement, on which the other members of the Committee would of course examine him. He also wished that he might be given freedom to produce witnesses for examination. I said that even if he were on the Committee, he would have as much freedom in these respects as if he had remained outside it. Mr. Gandhi then asked for time to consult Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya, and promised to let me know his decision as soon as he had seen that gentleman at Bankipore.

Mr. Gandhi agreed that the following terms of reference to the Committee were suitable, namely:

“To enquire into the relations between landlord and tenant in the Champaran district as also into all disputes arising out of the manufacture and cultivation of indigo. The Committee to examine the material already available, supplementing it by such further enquiry, local and otherwise, as they consider desirable. They should report their conclusions to Government, if possible by the 15th October, and state the measures they recommend in order to remove any abuse or grievance which they might find to exist.”

Mr. Gandhi asked if it might be taken as certain that the above terms of reference covered all the points I mentioned in his note of 13th May¹, including the question of sharahbeshi sattas, although a case relating to them is pending in the High Court. I replied in the affirmative.

Mr. Gandhi presumed that the term “material already available” would include any evidence which he might wish to tender. I again replied in the affirmative.

Mr. Gandhi said that in his opinion the proceedings of the Committee should be of an informal and summary nature. I said I was inclined to agree but thought this might be left to the discretion of the Commissioners.

Mr. Gandhi, on his part, undertakes at once to put a stop to his enquiry and to abstain henceforth from taking a single statement, and also from visiting any dehat or allowing any of his assistants to do so. Mr. Gandhi does not want the raiyats to feel that ‘A’ he has deserted them, and is unwilling on that account to leave the district altogether, pending the assembly of the Committee. But he undertakes not to go beyond Bettiah and Motihari; after short visits to these places, he will go on a visit to Ahmedabad.

Mr. Gandhi asked that orders should issue at once putting a stop to illegal acts, such as the levy of abwabs and the impressment of labour. I said we could not do this unless at the same time we issued a notice which the planters asked us to issue, stating that Mr. Gandhi had no official recognition. Mr. Gandhi said he would be quite willing to see both statements made; but finally he agreed that in lieu of any such notice precise instructions should be issued to the local officers to take vigorous action to prevent all abuses that may come to light. For instance, the taking of abwabs must, as far as possible, be finally stopped, use being made where necessary of the power of refusing to renew leases. Similarly, the illegal impressment of labour, carts and ploughs must by all means be prevented wherever it comes to notice.

Mr. Gandhi asked that warnings should be sent to planters not to impress carts or coolies or collect abwabs, etc., during the interval which will elapse before the report of the Committee is received. I replied that the planters would take offence, if Government were to issue such a warning, as it would imply a prejudging of their case, but said that when the planter-member of the Committee is appointed, I would point out to him the harm that would be done if such practices occurred, and ask him to consider the desirability of making such a communication to his brother-planters.

The following action should now be taken:

(1) The Government of India should be informed briefly of the decision arrived at, and it should be mentioned that Mr. Tanner has been selected as Secretary instead of Mr. Tallents.

(2) Mr. Reid and the Raja of Amawan should be asked if they will serve on the Committee.

(3) A letter should be sent to the Commissioner informing him of the fact that it has been decided to refer the whole question of the agrarian conditions in Champaran to a Committee, the constitution of which will be communicated to him as soon as possible and that, meanwhile, Mr. Gandhi has agreed (as at ‘A’ above). The Planters’ Association should also be informed of the decision arrived at.

(4) A short resolution to be drafted appointing the Committee, so that it may be issued as soon as possible after the constitution has been finally settled.

E. A. G[ait]
5-6-1917

I have kept original draft signed by His Honour and altered by Mr. Gandhi.

H. McPherson

Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 117, pp. 203-6

349. TELEGRAM TO CHIEF SECRETARY, BIHAR

BANKIPORE,
June 7, 1917

SUBJECT RESERVATIONS\(^2\) AGREED I HAVE MUCH PLEASURE IN ACCEPTING NOMINATION PROPOSED COMMITTEE TO DEAL WITH AGRARIAN QUESTION CHAMPARAN. REGRET COULD NOT WIRE EARLIER AS HON’BLE PANDIT MALAVIYA ARRIVED JUST NOW HAVING MISSED TRAIN CONNECTION.

Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 118, P. 207

350. TELEGRAM TO CHIEF SECRETARY, BIHAR

BANKIPORE,
June 8, 1917

WHAT PURPORTS TO BE THE AUTHORITATIVE INFORMATION APPEARS AS ASSOCIATED PRESS TELEGRAM TODAY’S “ENGLISHMAN”\(^3\) IF PLANTERS DESIRE OPEN ENQUIRY I AM ENTIRELY SATISFIED; MY SUGGESTION REGARDING PRIVACY WAS WHOLLY IN THEIR INTEREST: CANNOT HELP EXPRESSING REGRET APPEARANCE INFORMATION MAKES MY POSITION DELICATE WITH FRIENDS WHO THOUGH ENTITLED TO INFORMATION CANNOT RECEIVE IT FROM ME PROCEEDING

\(^1\) Chief Secretary to the Government of Bihar and Orissa

\(^2\) Vide the preceding item.

\(^3\) This mentioned, inter alia, the appointment of a Committee of Enquiry, and attributing to Gandhiji suggestions for enquiry in private and a time-limit for the Committee’s report.
351. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

BETTIAH, June 8, 1917

CHI. CHHAGANLAL.

All of us arrived here today. The indigo planters are out to make trouble and therefore my return might be delayed. I will see.

Herewith a postcard. If, as slated in it, the man comes there, take him in. If he knows Hindi, entrust him with teaching work. Otherwise, any other work you think him fit for. I have asked him to go there directly.

As for your going to Rajkot, do what you think is proper.²

Prabhudas’s body is getting quite strong. Though he still suffers from headaches, that does not matter.

Very fine work was done at Ranchi.³ Devdas has given you a full report. I myself am not in a position to write more. The reports which Devdas sends also should not appear in the newspapers.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Bhai Pragji has asked for money. I have told him that volunteers must not be enlisted by paying them. Boarding and lodging is all that may be offered to them. The travelling expenses also should be borne by them. I see no harm in the matter relating to the Doctor being printed in Rajkot. But the cost must not exceed what it would be in Ahmedabad.

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33099

¹ From the combination of place-name, Gujarati date-line and contents
² Also vide “Guide to London”.
³ The Lt. Governor of Bihar had agreed to appoint an Official Committee to inquire into the grievances of the peasants who were compelled to cultivate indigo on 3/20th of the land rented to them by the European indigo planters. Gandhiji was appointed a member of the Committee as a representative of the peasants.
MY DEAR ESTHER,

As you will have seen from the papers sent to you, I have been to Ranchi, from which place I returned only yesterday to find your letters.

Yours is a difficult question to answer. The total effect of European activity has not been for the good of India. The general body of Europeans who have come to India have succumbed to the vices of the East instead of imposing their own virtues on the East. It could not well be otherwise. Religion has not made a lasting impression on them, as we see demonstrated even by the present war. My theory is that modern civilization is decidedly anti-Christian. And what Europeans have brought to India is that civilization, not the life of Jesus. You and a handful of others are striving to represent that life. It is bound to leave its mark upon the soil. But it must take time. “The mills of God grind slowly.” You and people like you are not affected by the evil that stares you in the face. You get behind it, discover the good lying underneath and add it to your own stock, thus producing a perfect blend. What I want is a reciprocity of that method. And so I welcomed your visit to the Ashram, as I welcome that of many European friends who are true to their best traditions and are broadminded enough to take in the best that this land has to give. Have I made myself clear? Please discuss this further and freely with me.

I am likely to serve on the Committee the Government are about to appoint. I am presently framing a general note which will give you the details of the visit to Ranchi. It was a good thing I went.

Mrs. Gandhi and Devdas are here now and so is Polak. Had I been arrested, Mrs. Gandhi and Devdas would have worked among the poor raiyats and heartened them for the struggle. I am most anxious for you to meet Mrs. Gandhi at the earliest moment.

Please don’t think that I am killing myself with work.

With love from us all,

Yours,

BAPU

My Dear Child, pp. 11-3

1 Vide “Note on the Situation in Champaran—VI”, 17-6-1917.
353. LETTER TO H. McPHERSON

BETTIAH,
June 10, 1917

DEAR MR. McPHERSON,

I thank you for your note enclosing His Honour’s note.

I enclose herewith the envelope in which your letter was enclosed. I was able to extract the contents without much difficulty.

The taking of statements in Bettiah has been stopped as from yesterday. I am going to Motihari tomorrow to stop the taking of statements there.

I am,
Yours truly,
M. K. GANDHI

From the original in Gandhiji’s hand in the National Archives of India; also Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 125, pp. 212-3

354. LETTER TO RAOJIBHAI M. PATEL

BETTIAH,
Jeth Vad 5, 1973 [June 10, 1917]

BHAISHRI [RAOJIBHAI].

I have your letter. I was a little sad to read it. You depict your condition to be very miserable. One does so to some extent and then gets out of it. But this letter of yours instead of showing such spirit creates an impression that you are never going to get out of your melancholy. I shall be very much disappointed if such is going to be the result. I have entertained high hopes about you and expected that you will ultimately get strong and will most certainly put up a fight.

There is no need of volunteers just now. They will be required after four months. You will be able to play your part as a volunteer only if you shake off your melancholy and get strong. You will have to do the work without any remuneration. Will M[anibhai] allow you

1 Of June 8, from Ranchi
2 Vide “Interview with Lt.-Governor of Bihar”, 5-6-1917.
to join? If you cannot do so in a commendable way it will be enough if you stay there and become proficient in the work there. Ba, Prabhudas and Devdas are here.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 5788. Courtesy: Raojibhai M. Patel

355. LETTER TO H. McPHERSON

BETTIAH,
June 11, 1917

DEAR MR. McPHERSON,

I thank you for your letter of the 9th instant. The Associated Press message\(^1\) becomes a perfect mystery if it is taken for granted, as I think it must be, that the leakage could not have taken place from my side. Apart from the intrinsic evidence the message bears of not having been received from my side, I may say that I had given the details of the interview to no one in Bankipore before 6 p.m., i.e., till after the arrival of the Hon’ble Pundit Malaviyaji and several things alluded to in the message were not even mentioned during the conversation\(^2\) I had with Mr. Malaviyaji and four other friends.

I am,
Yours truly,
M. K. GANDHI

From the original in Gandhiji’s hand in the National Archives of India; also Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 127, p. 216

356. LETTER TO ESTHER FAERING

MOTTHARI,
June 11, 1917

MY DEAR ESTHER,

I am here for a day. I received your booklet\(^3\) as I was going to the station. It put me in mind of some of the happiest hours I used to \(^1\) Vide “Telegram to Chief Secretary, Bihar”, 8-6-1917.

\(^2\) On 7th June
\(^3\) Corinthians, XIII.
have years ago in South Africa. I read the booklet years ago when I found myself in the company of some very dear Christian friends. I have read it again today with better appreciation if one may write in this manner of a sacred work like this. For me truth and love are interchangeable terms. You may not know that the Gujarati for passive resistance is truth-force. I have variously defined it as truth-force, love-force or soul-force. But truly there is nothing in words. What one has to do is to live a life of love in the midst of the hate we see everywhere. And we cannot do it without unconquerable faith in its efficacy. A great queen named Mirabai lived two or three hundred years ago. She forsook her husband and everything and lived a life of absolute love. Her husband at last became her devotee. We often sing in the Ashram some fine hymns composed by her. You shall hear and one of these days sing them when you come to the Ashram.

Thank you for the precious gift. I need such thoughts as are contained in the work.

With love,

Yours,

BAPU

PS.

I am going to follow Drummond’s prescription to read the verses on Love\(^1\) daily for three months.

My Dear Child, p. 13-4

\(^1\) The Greatest Thing in the World by Henry Drummond
357. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

MOTIHARI,

Jeth Vad 6 [June 11, 1917]

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I have come to Motihari for a day. I have noticed that by mistake, Devdas has put the letter in my bag. I am returning it. I saw here the Nitishatak which was sent for Prabhudas. It carries a shloka, the meaning of which is given thus: ‘Just as a good woman wants her breasts pinched with nails as sharp as sword, similarly a brave man wants his chest—the symbol of victory, attacked by swords as sharp as nails’. I felt very unhappy on reading it. There is hardly any book which does not carry something that needs to be omitted before we put it into the hands of the children. How could Bhartrihari write such shlokas in his Nitishatak. Only in an age of extreme debauchery can one think of such thoughts. I find it simply impossible that any woman, leading a disciplined life, would want her breasts pinched or any good man would enjoy making such assaults. That suggests a highly debauched state. A good woman can never be in such a state. Such comparison cannot even be thought of while writing shlokas for the Nitishatak. That such shlokas and ideas are found even in good collections, brings to mind two things. First, that in our original books, the periods of debauchery and self-control have been mixed up. Second, that the compilers of this age give little thought to the contents of the literature they place before the society. Under these circumstances, we have to give books to the children after careful consideration of the contents. After reading the above mentioned shloka, an innocent child like Prabhudas would feel that to pinch a young woman’s breasts is not something bad and that even a righteous man can derive such pleasure. We will have to make great efforts to improve this atmosphere and save our youth. Some of these writings should be shown to the young people and then the viciousness pointed out. For, we cannot keep such vicious books hidden from them for long. So I feel that whatever book we give to 1 From the place-name, Gujarati day and month as given in the dateline as also the first sentence of the letter; Gandhiji was in Motihari for one day on Jeth Vad 6 only in the year 1917 and it corresponded to June 11.

---

our children should bear our correction and comments. I feel the need for our teachers to deliberate over such books. They, too, have to learn quite a lot and think quite a lot. Even books like the Bhagawat should be read out to the children and they may not be allowed to keep it with them.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I have received a parcel of cloth. There is a dhoti in it. But the dhotis woven by Valji have spoiled me. The ‘spoiled me’ hesitated to wear coarse cloth. I will try to console myself arguing that one should not differentiate between fine and coarse cloth in a gift of hand-woven khadi which is a rare thing.

Devdas too has given me some pieces. It is difficult for me to say whether I will be able to come there or not.

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32875

358. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL GANDHI

MOTIHARI,
Jeth Vad 7, June 12, 1917

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

It appears from Bhai Chandulal’s postcard that he wants you to get this published. Send it only to the newspaper which... They should publish your... letter before publishing... I believe it will happen that way as you would have already written personal letters to the editors.

There is no need to keep big offices at two places. Also, it is necessary for me to stay in Motihari. So, the office will be shifted there on Friday. I am in Bettiah today. That is why I sent you a

\[1\] Which read: “We have received the news from the Satyagraha Ashram that the order asking Mr. Gandhi to leave Champaran has been revoked. Subsequently His Excellency the viceroy has also returned the Kaiser-i-Hind medal to Mr Gandhi”

\[2\] The source is damaged at these places.

\[3\] ibid

\[4\] ibid

\[5\] Vide also “Letter to H. Mcpherson”, 13-6-1917.
telegram yesterday.

The government decision has not been announced. Therefore it seems to me that there is some manoeuvering going on the part of the indigo merchants, or, the government have not been able to collect all the names. As long as the bill is not drafted, I cannot leave Champaran. These days, considerable debate on it is going on in newspapers like the Englishman, Pioneer, etc.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32901

359. LETTER TO H. McPHERSON

BETTIAH,

June 13, 1917

DEAR MR. MCPHERSON,

I went over to Motihari yesterday and formally stopped the taking of statements. I have told the _raiyats_ that the Government are about to appoint a committee of inquiry which is likely to commence its work about the middle of July next and which will listen to their tale in so far as it may be necessary. And I have told them that in view of the above mentioned decision of the Government, it is no longer necessary for me to take their statements.

I am shifting the headquarters to Motihari where my work and that of my colleagues will consist in studying and analysing the evidence we have already collected and in putting it in a presentable form. The _raiyats_ will still continue to come to us for information and guidance. I do notice that to allow them to talk to us in any manner they choose is a great relief to them and they readily accept the advice that is given to them. They are being told not to disturb the existing situation pending the inquiry except where it is manifestly illegal and in no case to take the law in their own hands.

I am not leaving for Ahmedabad till the resolution¹ appointing the committee is published and the hot controversy going on in the Press has subsided a little. If you could please drop me a wire as to when the resolution is likely to be gazetted, I shall be obliged.

¹_Vide_ Appendix “Report of Champaran Agrarian Enquiry Committee”, 3-10-1917.
Pray send all letters to Motihari after receipt of this. I am in Bettiah all day tomorrow (Thursday).

I am,

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From the original in Gandhiji’s hand in the National Archives of India; also Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 131, p. 219

360. NOTE ON THE SITUATION IN CHAMPARAN-VI

CONFIDENTIAL AND NOT FOR PUBLICATION

MOTIHARI,

June 17, 1917

As it will be remembered, prior to the publication of the Government Resolution\(^1\) appointing the Committee of Inquiry, Mr. Gandhi was summoned to Ranchi, the Government intention then being to remove him and his co-workers from Champaran. There was an exhaustive discussion\(^2\) of the whole situation between the Lieutenant-Governor and Mr. Gandhi. The latter saw also the other members of the Executive Council\(^3\) and after two days’ discussion the Government desired to appoint a Committee and suggested that, in that event, Mr. Gandhi should stop taking statements. He readily accepted the suggestion. The Lieutenant-Governor inquired if he would then withdraw his co-workers and himself from Champaran. Mr. Gandhi said he could not do so, and his colleagues and he would be occupied in marshalling the evidence and preparing for the Committee. They could not do this well, out of Champaran. Moreover, he could not let the raiyats\(^4\) think that he had, in any way, deserted them. The Lieutenant-Governor then did not press the point but hoped that, pending the meeting of the Committee, neither Mr. Gandhi nor his companions would go to the villages. This, too, was agreed to. The taking of statements and visits to the villages have now been entirely stopped. The headquarters have been removed to \(^1\) Vide Appendix “Report of Champaran Agrarian Enquiry Committee”, 3-10-1917.

\(^2\) Vide “Interview with Lt.-Governor of Bihar”, 5-6-1917.

\(^3\) Vide “Letter to Maharaja Bahadur Sir Rameshwar Singh”, 4-6-1917.
Motihari and one of the workers remains at Bettiah to attend to the raiyats who may desire information or assistance. In all cases, they are being advised, pending the result of the inquiry, not to disturb the existing situation and it is Mr. Gandhi’s firm opinion that whilst the mission has undoubtedly strengthened the raiyats in their resolve to combat coercion and heartened them for a struggle to gain their freedom, its presence serves to restrain any excess on the part of the raiyats who without guidance might easily be betrayed into action which might harm them in the end. The Committee meets about the 15th of July.¹ During the interval, Mr. Gandhi is paying a flying visit to Ahmedabad, returning to Motihari at the latest on the 28th instant.

As to the constitution of the Committee, Mr. Gandhi has accepted his own appointment on the clear understanding that he should be free to give his own evidence and prepare and give the evidence of the raiyats and be as to this in the same position in which he would be if he was not a member of the Committee. He has done so with the approval of the Hon’ble Pandit Malaviyaji and Bihar friends, whom he met at Bankipore on his return from Ranchi. The other nominations seem to have been made by the Government with much care and with a view to secure an equitable finding by the Committee. There was throughout the discussion at Ranchi a deep desire on the part of the Lieutenant-Governor to arrive at a fair settlement.

An unauthorised statement has been circulated by the Associated Press to the effect that Mr. Gandhi has advised private inquiry. In substance the report is true. Evidence collected is of an inflammatory nature and a heated newspaper discussion of the evidence is bound to create an atmosphere which will interfere with the conducting of a dispassionate inquiry. The mission has no wish to unnecessarily injure the planters’ interest and so in their interest and to demonstrate that the mission desired nothing but justice for the raiyats, a private inquiry was suggested. The raiyats could not be hurt by this procedure. It is not to be inferred that the report was to be withheld from the public. On the appearance, however, of the Associated Press statement, Mr. Gandhi wired² to the Government saying that, as the suggestion was wholly in the planters interest, he withdrew

¹ Vide Appendix “Government notice inviting evidence before champaran agrarian enquiry committee”, July 1917.
² Vide “Telegram to Chief Secretary, Bihar”, 8-6-1917.
it and would welcome a public inquiry if the planters so desired. It should be understood that whilst no more volunteers are required at present, no matter what the final result of the Government inquiry is, they will be required soon after the publication of the Government’s decision on the Committees report. Their work will be the most important and lasting and therefore it will be the final and essential stage of the mission. Volunteers should, without any advertisement in the Press, be got ready and where they do not know Hindi but possess other qualifications, they should be advised to learn Hindi sufficient for the purpose. They have to be grown up, reliable, hard-working men who would not mind taking the spade and repairing or making village roads and cleaning village cesspools and who will in their dealings with the landlords guide the raiyats aright. Six months of such training cannot fail to do incalculable good to the raiyats, the workers and the country at large.

M. K. GANDHI

From the typewritten office copy signed by Gandhiji: Courtesy: Gandhi Smarak Nidhi

361. LETTER TO ESTHER FAERING

MOTIHARI,
June 17, 1917

MY DEAR ESTHER,

I am going to Ahmedabad for 4 days. I return on the 28th instant at the latest. There is no secret about what I have and you have every right to ask. My faith in Truth and Love is as vivid as in the fact that I am writing this to you. To me they are convertible terms Truth and Love conquer all.

Yours sincerely,
BAPU

My Dear Child, p. 14
362. TALK WITH TEACHERS OF THE NATIONAL SCHOOL

[AHMEDABAD, June 23, 1917]

I take it that all of you have dedicated your lives to the school and I should like, therefore, to acquaint you with the present state of our finances. We have Rs. 10,000 in cash in the Ashram Fund. Besides this, I have jewellery and other gifts worth Rs. 20,000 given to me when I left for India. A friend, again, has promised to buy and donate land and this should mean Rs. 10,000. We have thus a total of Rs. 40,000 or thereabouts. It is my wish that the gifts I have received should not be put to sale in my life-time, though of course they will be used in the service of the nation and we may dispose of them if we find that necessary. This means that, even if we get no help just now and the position continues as at present, we have enough money to meet our needs for four years. I am confident, though, that we shall get all the money we need. It may happen, however, that we displease everyone as a result of our principles and that we get no money. At such a time, the teachers will have two courses open to them. One that they leave the school and take up some other work. As for this, none of you is so entirely good for nothing that he cannot make a living somehow. The other course is to continue to run the school, no matter what happens, maintaining yourselves, if need be, on no more than the plainest bread. If it becomes necessary for you even to go begging for money, you should. In other words, you should be ready to turn yourselves into beggars for the sake of the school.

OBJECTS OF SCHOOL

1. To adopt a new method of education.
2. To pay special attention to character-building, the aim being that ten per cent of the pupils at any rate get trained for national service.
3. To raise the status of the Gujarati language.
4. To work for the spread of the national language, Hindi.
5. To open schools of the new pattern in every place, and make this school a model for them, and for Government as well, to

---

1 Gandhiji was in Ahmedabad on this date, having left Motihari on the 18th. He was in Bombay on the 24th and returned to Motihar on the 28th.
copy. The aim is to have teachers trained in this school who will then go to villages and run schools there.

6. To get the new pattern adopted by the Government.

Requirements for Teachers

1. Knowledge of Hindi and Marathi
2. Proficiency in weaving
3. Well-preserved health
4. Travel in India
5. Readiness for other work besides that in the school, that is, for work in the Ashram or as secretary to Bapu

Work to be Attended to by Teachers, Apart from Teaching

1. Text-books
2. Vocabulary of technical terms

Co-education

I am myself in favour of co-education, but I don’t insist on it if the teachers hold a different opinion.

I am not in favour of common residence. Girls should not be kept in a hostel. I am of the view that they must live under the constant supervision of their mothers and nowhere else.

There should be holidays in summer and the school should be shifted to a cooler place. This, I believe, will enable the teacher and the pupils to work very much better at other times. The teachers and the pupils should spend the holidays together.

English should be an optional subject. One should know good, at any rate correct, English. It would be excellent if we could get an English teacher for the purpose, but I can think of no one at present except Miss Schlesin. If only she would come, we could want nothing better. She is a very capable person. A pupil of the school should be able to talk in English with any Englishman without being nervous.

Drawing will be taught not as a fine art but because the pupil should be able to draw for practical purposes, draw maps, for instance, and straight lines, have a good hand-writing and should know memory drawing.

---

1. Gandhiji, the report being indirect at this point
2. Gandhiji uses the English terms.
Rules should be framed for discipline in the school, but no compulsion should be used to enforce obedience to them; they [the pupil] should feel inclined to obey them on their own. One should keep a watch on them whether they do. If any of them does not, we should express our disapproval and advise him.

To start with, 100 pupils should be admitted to the school, all of whom can pay for their own expenses. Nothing may be spent from the School Fund for any of the pupils. If there is a good but poor student, we may secure help for him from one of our friends and beg of another for his fees; but the School Fund cannot be used for the purpose.

History, Geography, Science and Hygiene can be part of Gujarati.

We have necessarily to come into contact with people from the South, and this is to our benefit too; everyone should, therefore, know Marathi.

From a photostat of the handwritten copy: S.N. 6318

363. LETTER TO H. McPHERSON

MOTHARI,
June 29, 1917

DEAR MR. McPHERSON,

Your letter of the 18th instant followed me whilst I was travelling. I returned from Ahmedabad yesterday afternoon after an absence of eleven days. My co-workers have not made it a point of absenting themselves from Champaran but most of them have been absent off and on for their own businesses. They have not been in evidence as their work has been confined to preparing for me a digest of the evidence collected by me and giving information to the inquirers. There is I think complete absence of stir as the taking of evidence and visits to the dehats have been religiously avoided.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From the original in Gandhiji’s hand in the National Archives of India; also Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 138, p. 241

1 Gandhiji uses the English terms.
364. LETTER TO W. B. HEYCOCK

MOTIHARI,
June 29, 1917

DEAR MR. HEYCOCK,

I have arrived here yesterday afternoon. Dr. Deva of the Servants of India Society has been appointed by the Society to serve with me during the rest of my stay and work in Champaran. Though his services are not required at the present moment, he has come to study my method of work so that his work may be the easier when the volunteers go out to the villages to render assistance. Dr. Deva is naturally anxious to report himself to you and to wait on you whenever you can send an appointment for him.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From the original in Gandhiji’s hand in the National Archives of India; also Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 139, p. 248

365. LETTER TO SHANKERLAL BANKER

Ashadh Sud 9 [June 29, 1917]

DEAR SHANKERLAL,

I am impressed by your patriotism. May God grant you good sense, strength, spirit of sacrifice and health.

I have written to Bhai Jehangirji Patel. I enclose a copy of the letter. You must, in all humility but with firmness, have the resolution passed. When the time comes, those who are desirous of going to jail will find innumerable ways to do so. Everyone at Prayag and Bankipur will welcome our resolution.

Vandemataram from
M OHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32712

1 Ashadh Sud 9 in 1917 corresponds to this date, when Gandhiji was in Motihari.

446 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
SIR,

I have hitherto successfully resisted the temptation of either answering your or Mr. Irwin’s criticism of the humble work I am doing in Champaran. Nor am I going to succumb now except with regard to a matter which Mr. Irwin has thought fit to dwell upon and about which he has not even taken the trouble of being correctly informed. I refer to his remarks on my manner of dressing.

My “familiarity with the minor amenities of western civilization” has taught me to respect my national costume, and it may interest Mr. Irwin to know that the dress I wear in Champaran is the dress I have always worn in India except that for a very short period in India I fell an easy prey in common with the rest of my countrymen to the wearing of semi-European dress in the courts and elsewhere outside Kathiawar. I appeared before the Kathiawar Courts now 21 years ago in precisely the dress I wear in Champaran.

One change I have made and it is that having taken to the occupation of weaving and agriculture and having taken the vow of swadeshi, my clothing is now entirely hand-woven and hand-sewn and made by me or my fellow-workers. Mr. Irwin’s letter suggests that I appear before the ryots in a dress I have temporarily and specially adopted in Champaran to produce an effect. The fact is that I wear the national dress because it is the most natural and the most becoming for an Indian. I believe that our copying of the European dress is a sign of our degradation, humiliation and our weakness; and that we are committing a national sin in discarding a dress which is best suited to the Indian climate and which, for its simplicity, art and cheapness, is not to be beaten on the face of the earth and which answers hygienic requirements. Had it not been for a false pride and equally false notions of prestige, Englishmen here would long ago have adopted the Indian costume. I may mention incidentally that I do not go about Champaran bare-headed. I do avoid shoes for sacred reasons, but I find too that it is more natural and healthier to avoid them whenever possible.
I am sorry to inform Mr. Irwin and your readers that my esteemed friend Babu Brijkishore Prasad, the “Ex-hon. member of council,” still remains unregenerate and retains the provincial cap and never walks barefoot and “kicks up” a terrible noise even in the house we are living in by wearing wooden sandals. He has still not the courage, in spite of most admirable contact with me, to discard his semi-anglicised dress and whenever he goes to see officials puts his legs into the bifurcated garment and on his own admission tortures himself by cramping his feet in inelastic shoes. I cannot induce him to believe that his clients won’t desert him and the courts won’t punish him if he wore his more becoming and less expensive “dhoti”. I invite you and Mr. Irwin not to believe the “stories” that the latter hears about me and my friends, but to join me in the crusade against educated Indians abandoning their manners, habits and customs which are not proved to be bad or harmful. Finally, I venture to warn you and Mr. Irwin that you and he will ill-serve the cause both of you consider is in danger by reason of my presence in Champaran if you continue, as you have done, to base your strictures on unproved facts. I ask you to accept my assurance that I should deem myself unworthy of the friendship and confidence of hundreds of my English friends and associates—not all of them fellow-crank—if in similar circumstances I acted towards them differently from my own countrymen.

M. K. GANDHI

The Pioneer, 5-7-1917

367. LETTER TO ESTHER FAERING

MY DEAR ESTHER,

I have your two letters before me. I returned from Ahmedabad on the 28th. I had a nice time there.

The city life I have always found, to be chilling; the village life, free, invigorating and godly.

‘Why has God given us so many gifts, powers, skill to invent if we are not to use them?’ You have asked a question which I have asked myself and thousands are always asking. My humble opinion is that God has placed temptations in our way the strength of which is the same as that of the possibilities of rise in moral grandeur. We may use our inventive faculty either for inward growth or for outward indulgence. I may devote my talents for utilizing the falls from the Himalayas; I only increase mankind’s facilities for indulgence. I may use my talents for discovering laws which govern the falls from the Himalayas within me; I serve myself and mankind by adding to the permanent happiness. You will make up for yourself countless illustrations showing that all our talents are to be utilized only for inward growth which can come from self-restraint alone.

Do please remember me to Mr. Bittmann\(^1\) and thank him on my behalf for permitting you to come to the Ashram whenever you are free.

Your experience of the young man is nothing extraordinary. Pray do not be impatient to reform men and women whom you meet. The first and the last thing we have to attend to is to reform ourselves. In trying to reform, we seem to be judging. These young men often become worse for our handling. The safest course is to let such men leave us when they are found wanting. I have not sufficiently expressed myself. But you will understand. If not, please ask.

\textit{Yours,}\n\textit{BAPU}

My Dear Child, pp. 14-5

\textbf{368. LETTER TO FULCHAND SHAH}\n
\textit{MOTIHARI,}\n\textit{Ashadh Sud 11 [June 30, 1917]}

\textbf{Bhai Fulchand,}\n
I gave you one letter of Mrs. Besant to keep. I am sending you another. I hope you are preserving cuttings from the papers there.

Miss Faering’s letter this time is worth reading. Her love for the Ashram adds to our responsibility. We would do well to cultivate and maintain the purity which comes naturally to a heart of transparent honesty like hers. Such striving is the only justification for our existence.

\textit{Vandemataram from}\n
\textsuperscript{1} A senior member of the Danish Mission in South India
Mohandas The very day I wrote to you, Surendra fell ill. The mistake was mine. I gave him full freedom all at once. His stomach had not improved enough to digest everything. He fasted yesterday. Today he is better. Everyone here has observed ekadashi\(^1\) today.

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: S.N. 6364

369. LETTER TO V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI

MOTHARI,

June 30 [1917]

DEAR MR. SHASTRIAR,

Thank you for sending Dr. Deva and for your letter. I did want encouragement from you. If Dr. Deva does not find himself in gaol, you will know that it won’t be for want of effort on my part. He is to see the District Magistrate tomorrow.

I want to write to you at length about your letter to Dr. Sapru\(^2\) and I shall do so if I find the time. Meanwhile I send you copies of draft prepared for the Bombay friends and may write to Mr. Petit\(^3\).

I do want to write a strong letter of protest against your ill-treatment of your body.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the original in Gandhiji’s hand: G. N. 6295

370. LETTER TO J. B. PETIT

MOTHARI,

June 30, 1917

DEAR MR. PETIT,

After much careful consideration, I am unable to suggest any other act of universal application with a view to inviting imprisonment, save a vigorous propaganda among the masses, going to the villages, speaking to them, distributing among them leaflets, etc. The descent at

---

\(^1\) Eleventh day of each dark and bright fortnight, observed with a fast

\(^2\) Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru (1875-1949), lawyer and statesman

\(^3\) Vide the following item.
the present moment upon the villages by you, Mr. Jinnah and such other leaders cannot but end in arrests. This propaganda must be carried on in spite of Government prohibition and to that extent it may be considered illegal but for a passive resister not unlawful. There are various other methods which I am unwilling to advise until passive resistance in its present form has soaked into us a bit.

This, however, I should like to add that in this method there is no idea of punishment of the wrong-doer. There can, therefore, be no retaliation and no boycott. But there should be swadeshi of the purest type, not as a retaliatory measure but as the law of our being. We are bound in honour, being Indians, to prefer Indian goods to any other.

I do hope that whatever shape our action takes, the time-limit resolution will be accepted by you and our friend, and that we will not rest until the interned\(^1\) are released.

I take it you will show this to Mr. Jinnah.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat of the typewritten office copy: S. N. 6365

371. LETTER TO ESTHER FAERING

MOTHARI,
July 1, 1917

MY DEAR ESTHER,

I have just received your letter telling you had entered upon a new year, you do not say what year. I appreciate your passion for the Ashram. May it satisfy all your wants and may it prove a place of joy and peace and of love such as you would find near your parents’ hearth. Every year that closes upon us may be so much valuable time gained or lost as we have well or ill used it. To us who want to walk in the fear of God, every added year is added responsibility.

Please tell me what books you are reading for Tamil examination and what you are paying your munshi, if you have any.

Yours ever,

BAPU

My Dear Child, p. 16

\(^1\) The reference is to Mrs. Besant and others who were arrested at Madras on June 16 and interned.
DEAR FRIEND,

All these days the expenses on the Satyagraha Ashram and its various activities could be met entirely from help voluntarily given by some friends; but these activities have now expanded so much that it does not seem possible to meet the expenses without asking for help.

The activities of the Ashram can be divided under the following heads:

1. Boarding and lodging expenses of the Ashram inmates: The present strength of the Ashram, including adults and children, may be put down at 30. The expenses on their account, including rent, amount to Rs. 400/- a month. This figure includes expenditure on guests.

2. Hand-weaving: No one in the Ashram knew this two years ago. Today practically everyone knows something of it. Some of them may actually be regarded as experts. There are seven looms working in the Ashram and five more under its supervision. This activity has taken up a capital of Rs. 3,000/-. Cloth gets sold as soon as it is produced. Cloth worth Rs. 500/- has been sold up to this time. This work has enabled four families which had given up weaving to resume it and in all 17 persons make their living by it. One family has learnt weaving recently and taken to it for a living. It cannot be said yet that it makes enough for a livelihood. The expectation is that in ten years thousands of weavers who have given up weaving as a profession will have resumed it. It is admitted on all hands that, even if the textile mills stay, there is sufficient scope in the country for hand-weaving. This activity involves some loss at present but ultimately there should be none. The current expenditure may be put down at Rs. 100/- a month.

Vide “Letter to Fulchand Shah”, 3-7-1917, which says: “I sent one copy to Ambalalbhai yesterday.” The printed copy, however, bears the date Ashadh Vad 9, Samvat 1973, corresponding to July 13, 1917.
The third activity is the National School. We in the Ashram believe that the great harm that is being done to the country will continue so long as education is not given along national lines. Accordingly, a National School has been started as an experiment. The aim is to give higher education through the mother tongue and in a manner that will impose no strain. If the experiment succeeds, the intention is to ask the Government itself to provide such education, and to carry on ceaseless agitation for the purpose. Likewise, if the success of the experiment can be demonstrated, it is likely that private enterprise may start other experiments of a similar nature. In this experiment, both mental and physical education is provided. A curriculum extending over 13 years is visualized. This will include, besides training corresponding to a graduate’s, instruction in the Hindi language, in agriculture and weaving. The responsibility for conducting this experiment has been undertaken by Professor Sankalchand Shah, formerly Professor of Science at Gujarat College. He has worked for ten years with Professor Gajjar¹. His assistants are Shri Narahari Parikh, LL.B., Shri Dattatreya Kalelkar, B.A., Shri Fulchand Shah, B.A., Shri Kishorelal Mashruwala², B.A., LL.B., and my nephew, Chhaganlal Gandhi. We are looking for one or two more teachers, who should be men of character. In the study of Sanskrit, Shastri Girijashankar of Ahmedabad has been giving help. Professor Anandshankar Dhruva supervises the experiment and makes suggestions. Help is also sought from other men of learning. The teachers draw maintenance allowance according to their needs. The experiment costs at present Rs 500/- a month. This does not include rent since it has been included in the expenditure for the Ashram. The number of students at present is 12. The experiment has reached such a stage that it is proposed to admit day students now. So far, the students were either boys from the Ashram or sons of the teachers.

The fourth activity is propagation of the Hindi language. There is no room for any difference of opinion about Hindi being

¹ Tribhuvandas Kalyandas Gajjar (1863-1920), Professor of Chemistry, Baroda College, Baroda; pioneer of chemical industry in Western India
² Constructive worker and associate of Gandhiji; Editor of Gandhiji’s weekly, Harijan; author of Gandhi and Marx entitled to the place which is at present usurped by English, but, to our misfortune, such a difference does exist. The educated class must have a common language and that can only be Hindi. It will be easy to work among the masses through it. And therefore the delay in Hindi gaining its rightful place means so much of harm to the nation. Efforts are being made in the country to stop this harm. The work by the Ashram will add one more to these efforts. The first step in this work consists mainly in securing Hindi teachers and training them. I estimate the monthly expenditure on this work at not less than Rs. 200/-.

The fifth category consists of my political activities, on such matters only in which I can see my way. The only expenditure in this is on railway fare for me and my co-workers. It hardly comes to Rs. 100/- a month. So far, I have had to make no effort to find it. All the same, I include it here.

Thus, the total monthly expenditure comes to: Rs.

For running Ashram 400
Weaving 100
School 500
Propagation of Hindi 200
My railway fare 100

1,300

approximately.

The expenditure on the National School will increase by and by, so that it will not be an over-estimate to put the total expenditure at Rs. 1,500/-. A large plot of land is required for all these activities. Such a plot, admeasuring about 55 bighas, has already been purchased on the banks of the Sabarmati near the Sabarmati jail. Efforts are proceeding to buy some more. A workshop for weaving, living rooms, kitchens for the Ashram and a building for the National School are to be constructed on this land. This is likely to cost Rs. 100,000. The responsibility for supervising the building construction has been taken over by Shri Amritlal Thakkar of the Hind Sevak Samaj.

My needs, therefore, adding a year’s expenses to the cost of the buildings, come to Rs. 118,000. For the land, I have drawn upon the funds with me. There will be a trust for this land and the buildings.

1 Servants of India Society

If these ventures meet with your approval, I have no option but to hold out my hand to you and you have none but to give, to the best of your means, and induce others to give to the best of theirs. If you desire to help only in regard to a particular item in the programme, your contribution will be spent accordingly. Even if, however, you see nothing but eccentricity in all my activities, it is my request that all those who know me should help me that I may satisfy my own self. So long as I do not myself see my error, these activities will remain my very life. They sum up my services to the country. I wanted to go myself and see you personally but I see no possibility of my being free to leave Champaran for about nine months. The activities will continue meanwhile and so also the expenses.

I don’t want at present to go a-begging through newspapers. Before doing so, it is necessary to make some progress with the work and gather more experience. Kindly send what help you can directly to Satyagraha Ashram, Ahmedabad; alternatively, you may send it to me at the Motihari address. I also request you to obtain some help from your friends, if you possibly can. If you are not in a position yourself to offer monetary help, I would like you to solicit such help from friends who can. I do not want anyone to move outside his own circle for the purpose.

Careful accounts are maintained for all categories of activities. It is intended to circulate an abstract of the accounts among friends every year.

You may ask me any questions you like to.

Vandemataram from

Mohanandas Karamchand Gandhi

From the Gujarati original draft in Gandhiji’s hand. Courtesy: Radhaben Choudhri: S. N. 6378. Also a printed copy
373. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

MOTIHARI,
Ashadh Sud 12 [July 2, 1917]

CHI. MAGANLAL,

I have written\(^1\) to Mr. Ewbank\(^2\) and told him that my ignorance of the subject is profound. I shall be busy in Champaran for some months. If, all the same, he wants me to speak, in the hope that I shall have the time, and if he sends me literature on the subject, I shall try to write out something\(^4\).

Never mind if you have kept on the house-maid for some time longer. I had a letter from Fakira. In reply\(^5\), I have asked him to go there. You and Chhotalal must get rid of cooking and miscellaneous chores. Unless that is done, I am, afraid, we shall make no progress in weaving. How this can be brought about, it is for you to consider. Set Satyadevji\(^6\) to the quern. It doesn’t matter if he has been supplied chillies. That is a yajna\(^7\) for us on his account. Let us see if it is rewarded. I wonder. One needn’t worry if he takes chillies only for the sake of health. A yajna must be performed cheerfully. We have done what we have done because we think it right and so must we do everything and supply him [the chillies] with love and in cheerfulness.

I am sending the enclosed cutting to be preserved. You must have ordered Pataliputra there. I heard in Prayag that the best paper is supposed to be Pratap. I was also told that its editor\(^8\) is a man of utter self-sacrifice.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5720. Courtesy: Radhabeen Choudri

---

\(^1\) Gandhiji was in Motihari on this day.
\(^2\) This letter is not available.
\(^3\) Registrar of Co-operative Societies, Bombay
\(^4\) Vide “The Moral Basis of Co-operation”, 17-9-1917
\(^5\) Not available
\(^6\) Swami Satyadev Parivrajak, who taught Hindi at the Ashram
\(^7\) Act of sacrifice
\(^8\) Ganesh Shankar Vidyarthi. He met a martyr’s death, being killed during the Hindu-Muslim riots at Kanpur in 1931.
374. LETTER TO FULCHAND SHAH

MOTIHARI,
Ashadh Sud 13 [July 3, 1917]¹

BHAISHRI FULCHAND,

Let the enclosed letter² be read by all of you and then passed on to Punjabhai. More copies are being made ready. It is possible the figures in the letter need to be revised. If so, revise them and let me know. If you have anything to suggest about the ideas, the arguments, etc., do so. I sent one copy to Ambalalbhai³ yesterday. I am sending one for Punjabhai today. The other copies will be despatched tomorrow. I invite your comments, all the same. The English version⁴ is also getting ready.

Did you make the soap? How many come to learn Hindi? How do you find the teaching? How many attend the evening prayers?

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: S. N. 6366

375. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

MOTIHARI, BIHAR,
Ashadh Sud 13, July 3, 1917

CHI. RAMDAS.

I have your letter. You need not feel shy in writing to me freely. I have no desire to put any kind of pressure on you. Go on expressing freely your views. I see no difficulty in your taking a salary from Phoenix. Now Phoenix will not get help from the public. It has to depend for its ventures entirely on subscriptions. Still, if you do not wish to continue in the press, you may do what you want after consulting Ch. Manilal and Mr. West. Never make important changes

¹ Gandhiji was in Motihari on this day.
² Vide “Circular Letter for Funds for Ashram”, 1-7-1917.
³ Ambalal Sarabhai an industrialist of Ahmedabad who took keen interest in Gandhiji’s activities
⁴ Vide the following item.
without sufficient thought. Also do not leave at a time when the press needs help. Whatever the circumstances, remain cheerful. Let me know how your health is now. You can adopt our dress when you have made up your mind. The world will talk and then be quiet. Ba, Devdas and Prabhudas are with me. This time I paid a visit to Madras. I have brought along Surendra from there. He had been suffering from constipation. Here too we have introduced Ashram rules. The work goes on smoothly. The activities the Ashram have expanded considerably. There is hope that the national school will grow into something beautiful. We shall see what the final outcome is. The activity is making good progress. Ba keeps very good health. She appears to be liking it here very much. Let me know if you have kept up any kind of reading or not. Did you write to Cachalia Seth and Mr. Naidu? Do write to Phillips also. Manilal should write to Dr. Gul. What happened to Naransamy Parthasarathi? What does he do? What is Kuppu doing? Does he write sometimes? Have you kept up walking? Send me your daily diary. Do you do the morning prayer? Remember as much as you can of our rules. Follow them to the extent you can. It will be useful in the long run.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Motana Man, pp. 11-12

376. CIRCULAR LETTER FOR FUNDS FOR ASHRAM

MOTIHARI,
CHAMPARAN,
[On or after July 3, 1917]

DEAR MR. SHASTRIAR,

I have been conducting the Satyagraha Ashram at Ahmedabad now for the last two years. The object of the Ashram is to bring together men, women and children whose aim or whose parents’ aim for their children is national service for life. The Ashram at present contains after much weeding out 30 inmates including men, women and children. So long as its activity was confined to self-training, its expenses were met from support given by friends without the necessity of a formal appeal being made to them. The expenses including those of a considerable number of temporary visitors have amounted to Rs. 400/- per month on an average.

\[Vide\] the preceding item.

But its activity has gradually widened and includes (i) weaving by means of handlooms, (ii) an experiment in evolving a national type of education, (iii) spread of Hindi as a common medium for educated India.

These activities mean much greater expenditure of money than has come to me as above stated. For developing them a permanent habitation on a fairly large plot of land is a necessity. Out of funds already in my possession over fifty bighas of land has been purchased on the banks of the Sabarmati on a healthy site some distance from the central gaol. It affords an easy access to the College students who have in ever-increasing numbers been making use of the Ashram Library which contains a fair volume of selected literature and newspapers and magazines, the latter being kindly supplied free of charge by the respective publishers. According to a rough estimate made by Mr. Amritlal Thakkar of the Servants of India Society, who is drawing up the plans, the cost of the buildings will be Rs. 100,000. The educational experiment is costing Rs. 500/- per month. The handloom industry Rs. 100/- per month. The Hindi propaganda for the ensuing year will cost Rs. 200/- per month. The educational and Hindi expenditure are a progressive charge. To these may be added my own travelling expenses Rs. 100/- per month in connection with one public activity or other. These last are easily met. Thus the whole figure comes to capital expenditure of Rs. 100,000 and Rs. 1,300, say Rs. 1,500, allowing extra Rs. 200/- per month for progressive expenditure, making rupees 18,000/- for the next twelve months.

I shall attempt only the briefest description of the activities mentioned above.

The handloom weaving is in a dying condition. Everyone admits that whatever may be the future of the mill industry, the handlooms ought not to be allowed to perish. Dr. Mann1 in his recent pamphlet says that probably one of the causes of the growing poverty observed by him in particular villages was the destruction of handlooms which complemented agricultural occupation. The object of the Ashram, therefore, is for every inmate to learn hand-weaving

---

1 Of Poona Agricultural College; author of Land and Labour in a Deccan Village and thus study at first hand the secrets and defects of the art and then find out the means of saving the industry. Every inmate, though none belongs to the weaving class, now knows something of the art. And a few have attained considerable skill in the art. The Ashram is already supporting weaving families numbering 17 souls and one family having learnt the art at the Ashram has set up independently and is trying to support itself from the business. Seven looms are working at the Ashram. It has involved a capital expenditure of Rs. 3,000/-. It ought soon to be self-supporting. Nearly Rs. 500 worth of stuff has already been sold by the Ashram and many who have hitherto used the shoddy mill-made stuff, whether foreign or home-made, are using the durable Ashram-made cloth. This enterprise is expected in 10 years’ time to resuscitate hundreds of weavers who have for the moment abandoned their trade in hopeless despair. The system of education at present in vogue is, it is held, wholly unsuited to India’s needs, is a bad copy of the western model and it has by reason of the medium of instruction being a foreign language sapped the energy of the youths who have passed through our schools and colleges and has produced an army of clerks and office-seekers. It has dried up all originality, impoverished the vernaculars and has deprived the masses of the benefit of higher knowledge which would otherwise have percolated to them through the intercourse of the educated classes with them. The system has resulted in creating a gulf between educated India and the masses. It has stimulated the brain but starved the spirit for want of a religious basis for education and emaciated the body for want of training of handicrafts. It has criminally neglected the greatest need of India in that there is no agricultural training worth the name provided in the course. The experiment now being carried on at the Ashram seeks to avoid all the defects above noted. The medium of instruction is the provincial vernacular. Hindi is taught as a common medium and handloom-weaving and agriculture are taught from the very commencement. Pupils are taught to look up to these as a means of livelihood and the knowledge of letters as a training for the head and the heart and as a means of national service. The curriculum has been mapped so as to cover all the essentials of the graduate course in the existing institutions within a period of 13 years. The experiment is in the hands of Professor Shah, late of the Gujarat College. Mr. Shah was associated with Professor Gajjar for 10 years. He is assisted by Mr. Narhari, B.A., LL.B., Mr. Fulchand Shah, B.A., Mr. Dattatreya Kalelkar, B.A., Mr. Chhaganlal Gandhi and Mr. Kishorelal Mashruwala, B.A., LL.B. All but the last named have pledged themselves exclusively to he work for life on a pittance enough to support them and their families. Mr. Kishorelal has given his services free for one year, having means of his own, and will if he finds the work congenial at the end of the year cast in his lot with the rest. The experiment is confined to about 12 lads including two girls belonging to the Ashram or being children of the teachers. It is being supervised by Professor Anandshankar Dhruba, Vice-Principal of the Gujarat College. I build the highest hopes upon it. My faith in it is unquenchable. It may fail but if it does, the fault must not be in the system but with us the workers. If it succeeds, voluntary institutions after its model can be multiplied and the Government called upon to adopt it.

That Hindi ought at the earliest moment to displace English seems to be a self-demonstrated proposition. Hindi can not only become the common medium between the educated classes but it opens the door to the hearts of the masses in a way which no other vernacular does and English certainly never can. Madras alone presents a difficulty but I have sufficient faith in the spirituality and the imaginative faculty of the southerners to know that they will not be long before they take up Hindi as the common medium. No presidency in India has the same aptitude for learning languages that Madras has. That is my South African experience. Although the preponderating element there is Dravidian, the Tamils and the Telugus picked up Hindi instead of the Hindustani-speaking races picking up Tamil or Telugu.

It is then for these experiments that I ask for your pecuniary support. I hope you will send me what you can, if you at all agree with any of the activities. You may earmark your donation if you wish.

A trust will be created of the land and buildings. Accurate account of the expenditure in the various branches is being kept and an abstract will be rendered to the donors.

I do not want if I can help it as yet to make an appeal through the Press. The activities have not advanced far enough to warrant such an appeal. But I do not hesitate to approach with confidence those who know me personally either to assist me themselves or advise their friends to do so.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat of the typewritten original signed by Gandhiji: G. N. 6297; also a photostat of the office copy: S. N. 6378 377. LETTER TO PRIVATE SECRETARY TO VICEROY

BANKIPORE,

July 7, 1917

DEAR MR. MAFFEY,

I am on my way to Ranchi in connection with the work of the Champaran committee. I write this regarding the Annie Besant agitation. As I am taking part in it by keeping myself in touch with the leaders and pressing on their attention my views regarding it,¹ I feel that I could not do so without His Excellency knowing the fact and knowing also my position in the agitation.

In my humble opinion, the internments are a big blunder. Madras was absolutely calm before then. Now it is badly disturbed. India as a whole had not made common cause with Mrs. Besant but now she is on a fair way towards commanding India’s identity with her methods. Having had breathing time, I had gone down to Ahmedabad for some work connected with the institution I am conducting there, I passed through Bombay and Allahabad on my return and I was able to gauge the situation. I myself do not like much in Mrs. Besant’s method. I have not liked the idea of the political propaganda being carried on during the War. In my opinion, our restraint will have been the best propaganda. But the whole country was against me. And no one could deny Mrs. Besant’s great sacrifice and love for India or her desire to be strictly constitutional, nor could the country’s right to carry on the propaganda be denied if it chose to do so. Many of us have respectfully differed from Mrs. Besant but all have recognised her powers and devotion. The Congress was trying to ‘capture’ Mrs. Besant. The latter was trying to ‘capture’ the former. Now they have almost become one. I plead with all the earnestness I can command for the boldest policy, i.e., to acknowledge the blunder in the frankest manner and to withdraw the orders of internment and to declare that the country has the right to carry on any propaganda that is not subversive of the British Constitution and is totally free from violence. Such an act will be a demonstration of strength, not of weakness. Only a government having the desire always to do the right and the power to crush the wrong can do it.

¹ Vide “Letter to J. B. Petit”, 30-6-1917.
If unfortunately timid counsels prevail, there will be no rest in the country and the cult of violence will surely spread. Open violence one could understand and deal with. That may not be practised, but secret violence would be attempted. No one would be or feel responsible for it. Young minds without any lead from anybody in particular are, I regretfully observe, drifting in that direction. My life is dedicated to the preventing of the spread of the disease and its uprooting in so far as it has gained a foothold. I have presented to the youths and to Indians in general in my humble way a better and more effective method and that is the method of soul force or truth force or love force which for want of a better term I have described as passive resistance. And I am asking the leaders to adopt this method fully and boldly at this critical juncture. It involves self-suffering and that alone throughout. No government in the world can afford continually to imprison or molest innocent men; the British Government cannot afford it. It is its great secret and character that even when it does wrong, it seeks to justify it before the world on moral grounds. I think I have sufficiently explained myself. I hope, I shall not be misunderstood. I ask for forgiveness for the presumption in writing this letter and earnestly pray for the acceptance of my proposal.

Please place this before His Excellency. If my presence is required at Simla, I am at H.E.’s disposal.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

PS.

I shall be in Ranchi care of Hon’ble Mr. Sahay up to the 11th instant, and then at Motihari, Champaran.

M. K. G.

From a photostat of the original draft in Gandhiji’s hand: S. N. 6372
378. LETTER TO ESTHER FAERING

RANCHI,
July 8, 1917

MY DEAR ESTHER,

I have come here in connection with the Committee work. I leave here on the 11th for Motihari. This is supposed to be a healthy place being on a plateau.

Here is a copy of a letter1 I wrote to The Pioneer. I know you will like it. The letter has created quite a stir here. It has been favourably received so far.

Could you send a copy of The Greatest Thing in the World² to Mr. Polak? I cannot procure it here. I copied out the verses and sent them to him. He now asks for the booklet. The book with me is being used.

Yours,
BAPU

My Dear Child, pp. 16-7

379. LETTER TO RAMNAVAMI PRASAD

RANCHI,
[About July 8, 1917]³

DEAR SHRI RAMNAVAMI PRASAD,

My heart cries out at what Babu Brij Kishore tells me about your physical condition. You ought not to be ill. There is much work to be done for the country, and what will happen if the country’s soldiers become ill? Keeping this in mind, I hope, you will try to rid yourself of the ailment. Physicians will not be able to remove the ailment. The cause of the illness is self-indulgence, its cure restraint. We are not always able to spot out self-indulgence and do not always know the

---

1 Vide “Reply regarding Dress to The Pioneer”, 30-6-1917.
2 By Henry Drummond; vide “Letter to Esther Faering”, 11-6-1917.
3 Gandhiji was in Ranchi between July 8 and 11; vide the preceding item.
kind of self-control we should exercise. But on a little reflection we can see both.

Yours

MOHANDAS GANDHI

From a photostat of the Hindi original in Gandhiji’s hand: G. N. 734

380. LETTER TO FULCHAND SHAH

RANCHI,
Sunday [July 8, 1917]

BHAI SHRI FULCHAND,

A letter similar to the one I sent to Punjabhai has been sent or will be sent to the following persons: Ambalal Sarabhai, Ranchhodbhai Patwari, Becharlal Kalidas, Kunvarji Anandji, Govindji Dahyabhai, Barrister Shukla, Barrister Devchandbhai. Dr. Mehta, Mangaldas Sheth, Narottamdas Morarji, Lallubhai Shamaldas, Dr. Edul Behram, Revashankarbhai, Mansukhlal, Ramjiibhai [of] Madras, Sitaram Pandit, Ratilal Sheth, [Mohanlal] Kameshvar Pandya, Amritlal Thakkar, Gopalji Thakkar, Krishna Rao, Pattani, and Shankarlal Banker. If you or Maganlal or others think of any names besides these, let me know. I am thinking of sending a copy to Mr. Popatlal Chudgar as also to our Popatlal. I am sending an English version.

1 From the reference to the letter sent to Punjabhai, this letter appears to have been written after “Letter to Fulchand Shah”, 3-7-1917. Again, Gandhiji was in Ranchi on Sunday, July 8, and from there he reached Motihari on Thursday, July 12.
2 Vide “Circular Letter for Funds for Ashram”, 1-7-1917.
3 Dalpatram Bhavanji Shukla of Rajkot, a fellow-student of Gandhiji in London
4 Parekh, a fellow-student and life-long friend of Gandhiji
5 An industrialist of Ahmedabad who gave financial assistance to Gandhiji at the time of the latter’s settling down in Ahmedabad
6 A business man and liberal politician of Bombay who took keen interest in Gandhiji’s activities
7 A business man and liberal politician of Bombay; pioneer of co-operative movement in Western India
8 Zaveri
9 A barrister-friend of Gandhiji practising at Rajkot
10 A business man of Bhavnagar
11 Shankarlal G. Banker, publisher of Young India. He was convicted with Gandhiji in 1922.
12 A practising barrister of Rajkot; for long associated with the States’ People’s Movement; retired as Judge of the Saurashtra High Court herewith. Copies of it have been sent to non-Gujaratis at Madras and other places. If any reply or help is received from them, let me know.

There was a letter in The Pioneer from Mr. Irwin. Having got a chance of criticising it, I sent a reply¹ which you must have of course seen there. I have received a good many cuttings, however, and so I send one to you. That letter has proved more effective than any number of speeches could have been. I hope all cuttings are being preserved. You may not have the cutting from The Bengalee; I am sending one.

I am here up to Wednesday. I will then go to Motihari. Your letters should continue to be directed there. There is a possibility that I may have to go to Bombay before the 29th in connection with [the internment of] Annie Bai². Do tell me every time how Muljibhai keeps. Punjabhai was to leave for Marwar. Has he left? Have the books expected from Bombay arrived?

Has any arrangement been made concerning Shivpujan’s³ box? Chi. Maganlal knows about this. Are the Ashram inmates able to utilize the presence of Swamiji for learning Hindi? I suppose the women are not able to do so.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

Got your letter after I wrote this. Received the statement. I see that this is a laborious job. You should inform me only when there is some notable item of expenditure or income. . . . Otherwise don’t worry. Rs. 20/- is sent [every month] for. . . . ’s mother. The amount should be debited to the Ashram account.

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: S.N. 6376

ⁱ Vide “Circular Letter for Funds for Ashram”, on or after 3-7-1917.
⁴ Vide “Reply regarding Dress to The Pioneer”, 30-6-1917.
² Mrs. Annie Besant
³ A boy who came to India from Phoenix with Maganlal Gandhi in August, 1914
381. A FEW WORDS TO ORPHANAGES

[Before July 11, 1917]

In the course of my travels in India, I have examined a number of orphanages, some of them closely and others cursorily, and have expressed my views on some of them before the managers. Like anyone else, I also think well of my ideas and I feel that it will not be amiss to place them before the public.

An anathashrama may be correctly defined as a place which gives shelter to those who are anatha and makes them sanatha. In respect of such institutions, the term anatha is especially applied to children who have no living parents or guardians. Their claim is, or ought to be, to make good the want of a guardian. Anathashram is a translation of the English term ‘orphanage’. Though this is the meaning of the term anatha, besides children, young men who can earn their livelihood are also accommodated in orphanages. In addition, the disabled, the lame, the crippled and the blind are also admitted and now even foundling-boxes have been introduced in orphanages. It is my opinion that this way one of the purposes is served fully. Though, superficially considered, it might suggest a more philanthropic attitude, on deeper reflection it will be seen that this state of affairs comes of a commercial mentality. I have no doubt that the future of the orphanages is the same as that of misers who would earn the highest interest on their moneys and so ultimately ruin themselves. I have used the word ‘future’ only to be on the safe side. Personally, I see their degradation in the present. An arrangement like this is a sign of our fear, of our lack of faith. We assume that, for all our institutions, we get help from the rich only with the utmost efforts. “We cannot but protect the disabled and we are bound to take care of babies born in secret; so let us manage that from whatever we have received.” This is an abject attitude. I am convinced that for a good cause money will be available even in this poor country of India. It is for those in charge to prove that the cause is good. Institutions have

---

1 The article originally appeared in Chitramaya Jagat, a Marathi journal, under the title “A Few Words to Orphanages”. Its publication was noticed in Kheda Vartaman of 11-7-1917.
2 Unprotected
3 Protected
declined not for lack of funds but for lack of organizers with steadfastness, faith and integrity. Whether or no this view is right, one thing is certain, that, in trying to ride three horses at once the orphanages succeed in managing none.

In these conditions, how can the ‘orphans’ cease to be ‘orphans’? They are constantly reminded of the fact of their being such. We would never want to leave our children in charge of these institutions. Here is the real test of an orphanage. We would not welcome the companionship of the disabled, the blind, or the crippled for our children. If these institutions were [really] the guardians of those without any guardians, we would find the manager’s children among the inmates. They would have no hesitation in placing their children in the midst of the orphans, if for no other reason, at least in order to test themselves. I submit, on the strength of my extensive experience, that this is not too excessive an expectation. That the orphans are placed with the disabled is not all; the other arrangements also are mostly such that the children are constantly reminded of their destitute condition. If orphanages were reserved for orphans alone, they could be self-supporting in a very short time. We have much to learn from the Salvation Army\(^1\) in this respect. The orphanages which they run have a soul in them. Ours are by comparison soulless. They have given refuge to thousands of children, have made men of them, have found employment for them. The children in our orphanages have not been given this sense of security. Some have been found petty jobs. These may be left out of account. The general practice in our orphanages is to send away the children when they come of age. Not so with the Salvation Army. In its institutions the orphans, when they come of age, start working in its factories, in the same way that a son in the family who has grown up is regarded as an additional shield and support for the family. It is necessary that such a family feeling be injected in our institutions too.

We can educate them in the institutions and find work for them in the factories of the institutions even as we provide them with lodging, boarding and clothing. We can launch great national experiments in the institutions, can impart education on national lines, teach them crafts, teach them agriculture, and save the professions which are dying out. If affairs are managed in this manner, the orphans of today can become teachers, artisans, and leaders in their own orphanages. We can also raise an Indian Defence Force suited to our conditions from among the inmates of such orphanages.

\(^1\) Organisation for religious philanthropic work founded by William Booth in 1880.

If I am right in these calculations, a common standard can be set up for all the institutions by bringing together the heads of all the institutions, or at least of those in the Bombay Province, and consulting their views. If there is a central executive body for all, it can supervise them and make such changes as are called for by experience. If we are not ready for such an integrated scheme, a policy like the one indicated above can surely be introduced in those institutions which have more of life in them.

In some institutions, I noted a tendency to coax children into staying on there. To me this seems to be an ill-considered thing to do. The boys who do not want to continue in the orphanages are not orphans but free persons [who can look after themselves]. The worth of an orphanage should not be judged by the number of inmates, but rather by the number of citizens it turns out.

There are enough institutions to meet the needs of the disabled. That, wherever necessary, such institutions should be set up separately, requires no elaborate proof.

The problem of admitting foundlings is a serious one. I am not yet convinced that providing for such admissions is ethically sound. I have a kind of feeling that such facilities lead to increase in indulgence. It can in no way be proved that keeping alive every creature that is born, no matter how, is a part of humanitarianism. It is indeed futile to make such an effort. One detects a hidden pride behind it. I, for one, realize every moment from experience that the term ‘humanitarianism’ is not easy to understand. I have in some measure made that subject my own and hence I have ventured to be so emphatic. Humanitarianism does not mean saving a definite number of lives. It is the very property of the soul. Because of this fact, living creatures in the presence of a compassionate soul have an immediate and direct experience of its compassion. There is no room for arithmetic in humanitarianism. Unclean flour is infested with numberless lives. To preserve such flour is no humanitarianism. It lies rather in covering up the flour with earth or destroying it, though either way the vermin in the flour perish. Numberless vermin perish even in the process of keeping our bodies clean. Pure humanitarianism will seek ways to prevent the infesting of the flour and keeping the body from becoming unclean. So also, pure humanitarianism will look for the cause of surreptitious admissions and take measures to promote moral purity. It will not encourage and shield laxity by accepting the burden of such admissions.

I need hardly say that my criticism is only meant to be helpful and is not prompted by a desire to cast aspersions. It is also not true that all the comments apply to every institution. The sole purpose of this article is to see that all the institutions attain the highest possible level.

In almost all our institutions, we notice more of the attitude of the vanik than anything else. It is imperative to keep this in the background and give prominence to the (venturous) spirit of the Kshatriya, to the (far-sighted) vision of the Brahmin, above all, to the Sudra’s spirit (of service).

[From Gujarati]

Mahatma Gandhini Vicharsrishti

382. LETTER TO ESTHER FAERING

Motihari,

July 14, 1917

MY DEAR ESTHER,

I have just returned from Ranchi to find your letter awaiting me.

You never told me you had taken to vegetarianism. I am sure it is the proper thing for this climate, apart from its religious value. A convert to vegetarianism is often told to eat of pulses, butter, cheese and milk more than during the meat-eating period. This is a mistake. Pulses may be eaten only sparingly. If one takes a fair quantity of milk, very little butter is required.

In my opinion, it is wrong to possess unnecessary things; they presuppose defence of things possessed against those who may covet them. They require care and attention which might well be devoted to more important matters and loss of them always leaves a pang, no matter how detached you may feel about them.

The sittings of the Committee commence on Monday.

---

1. Trader
I was delighted to see your thoughtful gifts to Mrs. Gandhi.
With love from us all,

Yours,

BAPU

My Dear Child, pp. 17-8

383. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

MOTHARI,
Ashadh Vad 11, Samvat 1973 [July 15, 1917]

CHI. MAGANLAL,

Put into a box whatever cloth, and of whatever type, you can spare there and send it to Motihari.

Have it made into pieces and state the price per yard; you will also do well to attach [price-]slips with gum. Dhotis are needed, as many as you can send, 10 yards by 50 inches and 10 yards by 45 inches. Napkins and handkerchiefs too are needed. Also some kind of cloth for scarves. And caps as well. Can’t the women living there be asked to work on these? They may be paid a small amount. The caps must be hand-stitched, even if they cost more. Did you get my letter¹ about Santok? It has not been acknowledged. Tell Fulchand not to send me the accounts every week. It will be enough if he sends, from time to time, items of special note.

1. How much Hindi, and how well, is the Swamiji able to teach?
2. How many turn up to learn it?
3. Have you opened a class in the city?
4. Has AnandshankarbhAI turned up again, as he was to? Has he started teaching?
5. What came out of the proposal to buy new land?
6. Has it been possible for Chhotalal to be completely free from cooking?

Either you or Fulchand may please answer these questions.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5719. Courtesy: Radhabehn Choudhri

¹Not available
THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI

384. SPEECH AT CHAMPARAN ENQUIRY COMMITTEE MEETING

BETTIAH, July 19, 1917

The Champaran Agrarian Enquiry Committee resumed their sitting today. At the outset the Chairman¹ said some of the written statements put before them contained events relating to specific acts of coercion alleged to have occurred many years ago. Some were about twenty or twenty-five years old. It was quite impossible for them for their inquiry to extend back to such remote periods. Their inquiry related to the present agrarian conditions of Champaran District and their concern with the past history would be inasmuch as it would elucidate present conditions. He did not think any advantage would accrue by inquiring into individual cases that occurred a long number of years ago and he ruled the Committee should confine itself to more recent events for the reason that there was a special inquiry made by Mr. Gourlay in 1909 which dealt with all agrarian conditions prior to that date and he proposed the Committee should undertake only an inquiry of conditions after Mr. Gourlay’s inquiry. That seemed to him to be the reasonable time to adopt. The second point he wished to put forward was that certain incidents referred to matters which had been the subject of decisions of judicial courts of the country. Again, it would be useless for them to attempt to review those cases. Already those cases had been heard and decided by judicial courts and it was not in the province of the Committee to revise the decisions of the judicial courts of the country. Therefore, so far as those cases were concerned, all that they could consider was the judicial record and not any extra facts connected with it.

Mr. Gandhi said he wished to say just a few words on the subject as he was responsible for putting in those statements. He bowed to the Chairman’s ruling but he thought it was necessary to put those matters in statement as otherwise he would not have done justice to those men unless he allowed them to give their story in its historical sequence. He did not wish the Committee to go behind judicial decisions, but he thought the Committee should have an opportunity of having the full story of the ryots.

The Chairman said they could not enquire into allegations that judgements of courts were based on false facts.

Mr. Gandhi said he agreed, but he thought it was proper not to withhold anything from the Committee.

The Hindu, 20-7-1917

¹ Sir Frank George Sly
385. QUESTIONS DURING EVIDENCE BEFORE
CHAMPARAN ENQUIRY COMMITTEE

July 23, 1917

Mr. Gandhi, who questioned witness [Mr. A. Ammon], said the case about Sant Raut was not that his house was looted, but that when he returned in January he found his field granaries, grain, utensils, sal tree logs, etc. looted.

Witness replied that it was not true, so far as he knew. He did not know that Sant had filed a petition a few days before the alleged occurrence before the magistrate saying he was in fear of these things being looted. He heard of the loot for the first time from the newspapers.

The Pioneer, 25-7-1917

386. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

MOTHARI,
Shravan Sud 5, 1973 [July 24, 1917]

CHI. MAGANLAL,

Your birthday has come and gone. That means your body has one year less to live. I have built on you hopes much like Shaikhchalli’s, so that in wishing continuing growth of purity in you, I serve my interest as well. You are all that I have and all I desire. It is my prayer to God and my blessing to you that you realize all your high aspirations, live long and grow healthier, that you become an ideal for your family, for the country and the world at large.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C.W. 5721. Courtesy: Radhabejn Choudhri

1 Manager of the Belwa Factory
2 The young man in the folk tale who, going out to sell some ghee, dreamt of setting up a poultry farm with the proceeds and by and by becoming the head of a family.
387. LETTER TO SECRETARY, PASSENGERS’ GRIEVANCES COMMITTEE, RANGOON

MOTHARI,
July 25, 1917

To
THE SECRETARY
PASSENGERS’ GRIEVANCES COMMITTEE
RANGOON

SIR,

I have the honour to submit the enclosed note on the matter before your Committee for its consideration.

I am,
Yours faithfully,

[ENCLOSURE]

NOTE

PART I

GRIEVANCES

The undersigned has considerable experience of travelling, having travelled in several parts of the world during the past 25 years.

The undersigned had occasion during 1901¹ and again in 1915² to travel to Burma. The undersigned used to travel, as a rule, first class up to nearly 4 years ago. Latterly he has travelled as a deck passenger. In the opinion of the undersigned:

1. Deck passengers making use of the British India Steam Navigation Service do not receive adequate attention from the Company’s employees or the police.
2. The passengers are hustled about by both, are spoken to roughly, often sworn at and not unoften assaulted.
3. The employees do not put themselves out for receiving complaints.
4. The crew maltreat the passengers and almost invariably take bribes.

5. Passengers are huddled together anyhow, there being absolutely no supervision as to how and where they seat themselves; the result is that the strongest or the richest secure the best accommodation.

6. Female passengers are similarly treated as in clause (5) and have no privacy of any kind reserved for them.

7. The deck is often in a filthy condition.

8. There is no control over the passengers’ behaviour; the result is that dirty passengers spit and eat anywhere and anyhow, much to the discomfort of the cleanly ones.

9. Closets are filthy beyond description; closets allotted for females are often used by men; Mrs. Gandhi had to be specially accompanied each time she wanted to use the closets. There are, as a rule, no locks to the doors.

10. Bathing accommodation, such as it is, is often taken up by the crew. There is hardly any facility for washing clothes.

11. Accommodation referred to in (9) and (10) is too little for the number of passengers taken.

12. During his voyages, the undersigned felt that the passengers taken were too many for the space reserved for deck passengers.

13. There seemed to be no control over the disposition of the luggage of the passengers; the result was that much space was taken up by the passengers’ luggage.

14. The undersigned found that through ignorance, fear, laziness and such other causes, passengers seemed to be reluctant to make complaints.

REMEDIES

PART II

In the opinion of the undersigned:

1. There should be special, trusted representatives of the Company approved by the Government who would go out of their way to understand deck passengers and their grievances.

2. For the wharves assistance of trustworthy volunteers should be sought from known organisations conducted in the interest of the passengers.

3. Deck, closet and bathing accommodation should be increased.
4. The representatives mentioned in clause (1) of Part II should inspect every ship and satisfy themselves as to [clause] (3) [of] Part II.

5. The representatives aforesaid should meet every steamer and inquire of the passengers as to their experiences.

6. Medical Officer on board should be empowered and be expected to look after the physical comforts of the passengers in every way. The undersigned was told by a medical officer that the looking after the accommodation of passengers, their cleanliness, the closet arrangement, their condition did not fall within his province.

7. An instruction book in several vernaculars should be issued for the passengers and a copy handed to each passenger on his receiving his ticket.

Should the Committee desire further information from the undersigned, he will gladly endeavour to give it.

From a photostat of the typewritten draft with corrections in Gandhiji’s hand:
S. N. 6382

388. LETTER TO W. B. HEYCOCK

MOTHARI,
July 25, 1917

DEAR MR. HEYCOCK,

I thank you for your confidential note of the 23rd instant just received. I had no intention of misconstruing your silence. But I appreciate the absolute fairness of your warning. The step I wish to take after a settlement of the question is, I know, full of possibilities and I wish to give you the assurance that nothing will be done by me without the fullest details being known by the Government and without due regard to every material circumstance.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From the original in Gandhiji’s hand in the National Archives of India; also Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 150, pp. 280-1 1 It was in reply to “Letter to W. B. Heycock”, 29-6-1917 and said: “... my silence should not be construed as an indication that Government approve of your idea. I am not aware what attitude Government will adopt towards the proposed importation of volunteers. ...”; vide Select Document No. 149.

DEAR SHANKERLAL AND JAMNADAS,

I have already replied to the telegrams from both of you. Except for going there, I have done everything I could. And I would have gone if it had at all been possible. The Champaran Committee has been working without interruption. Its tenure is for three months. The time limit has been set by me. How can I ask it to suspend its functioning for a week? And how can I remain absent? If this task is accomplished you can take it that it will be a great step forward towards swaraj. I must not harm it in any way.

However, I am sure that if all of you remain firm on the path of truth, nothing will go wrong there either. I am prepared to fight by your side even in the face of the opposition from the whole country. I do not have the strength to handle the work single-handed. After settling the affairs there, both or either one of you should come over if possible. More I shall explain. I wish you would come.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

[PS.]

I shall be at Bettiah from Friday to Monday. I get my mail at both the places. Get acquainted with the geography of the place. Motihari comes first. Bettiah comes later. The two places are thirty miles apart.

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32701

1The year has been inferred from the contents of the letter.
The only witness examined today by the Champaran Agrarian Enquiry Committee was Mr. W. S. Irwin, Manager of Motihari Limited. Examined by the Chairman, witness said his concern consisted of six factories. It was an indigo concern before, but it was not now. He converted the tinkathia system in 1911 by taking their tawan of sharabheshi. Under the tinkathia obligation every ryot had to work three cottahs\(^2\) of indigo. The claim was against every ryot. Witness had taken sharabheshi in mukarrari villages and tawan in thikadari villages.

Asked whether he claimed that an exclusive right was created because the Raj had allowed it, witness said that the Raj had taken a good deal more than they were allowed to collect under the terms of their leases. When he said Government recognised the obligation he meant that they recognised it tacitly, because they said that so long as indigo was grown rents could not be raised.

Witness then gave similar evidence to the previous witnesses about the imposition of fines and employment of labour.

To Mr. Gandhi, witness said he had not fined any person Rs. 500/- when told that Mr. Gandhi had a man who alleged witness had fined him a thousand rupees. Witness said:

“If Mr. Gandhi were to remain in this part of the country for the length of time I have (and it is 35 years), he would be convinced what a consummate liar the Champaran ryot is.” There were several good qualities in the Champaran ryot, but certainly truth was not one of them. Before his letter to The Pioneer, there was not a single complaint made against him.

Mr. Gandhi said that from Mr. Heycock’s (Collector’s) summary, it appeared during the last four years, 27 petitions had been sent to the Collector from 20 different villages against the factory.

Witness said he had thirty thousand tenants, and if in four years 27 petitions were sent, it was natural they might not come to his notice.

Witness was next questioned about specific cases of oppression and in one it was alleged he had destroyed the crop of one Lakhan Rai.\(^3\)

---

1 This report is included in full as a sample of such reports.
2 Katha, a measurement of land equal to 1/20th of a bigha
Witness said that in November 1914 at a court auction sale he had purchased a certain plot of one Alam. A portion of the holding was in Lakhan Rai’s name as a sub-ryot, but at the attestation Lakhan Rai told the Settlement Officer he was no longer a sub-ryot. Witness here produced a certified copy to substantiate his statement and aid that at the time there was a crop of oats on the land and he let Lakhan Rai have half of it. In May last he ordered the whole of this land to be prepared for indigo and it was then discovered that in two cottahs in a corner Lakhan Rai had surreptitiously sown china. This he had absolutely no right to do, and witness’ man ploughed up the whole land. The crop was of very poor quality and the damage was very slight.

With regard to a second incident about which he was asked, witness admitted that to a certain extent he was in the wrong. The story relating to this incident, he said, was that about the 23rd May last his Gumashta reported to him that three factory carts had gone to complainant’s village to bring the factory’s half share of batai bhusa. There at the instigation of Bataidar, his cartmen assaulted and the bhusa was thrown from the carts. When the men went to witness he admitted he gave them a few cuts on the leg with a light riding cane, but he was very angry at the time. They had assaulted his men badly. It was true he had threatened to fine them, but he had not actually done so. As for their being shut up in witness’s hen house, it was absolutely false. The men were nowhere near it.

MR. GANDHI: Then half of the ryot’s story is true?

It was true he had converted some of the ryots’ lands into zirat lands, but he had given lands in exchange and there was no complaint about it. On the exchange lands, the ryots had actually sown and reaped their crops. Witness had to convert these lands, as it was necessary to have all zirat lands in one place to ensure effective supervision. It was the practice in all zamindaris to effect this exchange of lands.

This concluded witness’s evidence and the Committee shortly after left for Bettiah to go to villages in the interior where they intend to have local inspection.

The Pioneer, 28-7-1917

1 Agent
391. EXTRACTS FROM MINUTES OF CHAMPARAN COMMITTEE MEETING

GUEST HOUSE,
BETTIAH,
July 27, 1917

* * *

POUNDS—Mr. Gandhi considered that pounds should be directly managed by the Board and not auctioned. . . .

(1) Cost of Cultivation:—Mr. Reid said it cost planters Rs. 7 to Rs. 8 per acre for zirat cultivation. Raja Kirtyanand Sinha\(^1\) confirmed this from his own experience. Mr. Gandhi said that raiyats estimated it not below Rs. 20 or Rs. 25 per acre, but he would examine the question further after seeing the factory book. . . .

. . . Mr. Gandhi urged that voluntary contracts should be limited to one year. . . .

SHARAHBESHI—As regards enhancement of rent in lieu of tinkathia (sharahbeshi) recognized at the resettlement, Mr. Gandhi thought that it ought to be revised and reduced to the ordinary enhancement allowed for rise in prices. The President and other members were not prepared to agree and it was pointed out that under the law the enhancement could not be touched in most cases.

TAWAN—All agreed that tawan was an unjustifiable practice and should be stopped for the future. The question was then discussed as to what action, if any, should be taken in cases where it had already been taken. Mr. Gandhi thought that where sums had already been paid, no action could be taken, but that factories should be required to cancel all outstanding debts on this account. He recognized that this could only be applied to factories which were still the property of the persons who had taken the bonds and had not been sold in the meantime. This could be enforced by the Court of Wards refusing to renew the leases of thikadars\(^2\) who refused to agree to this arrangement. Other members felt that there were difficulties in the proposal which required further consideration.

* * *

\(^1\) Of Banaili, a member of the Bihar and Orissa Legislative Council, who was appointed on July 9, 1917 a member of the Champaran Agrarian Enquiry Committee on the resignation of Raja Harihar Prasad Narayan Singh

\(^2\) Contractors
Mr. Gandhi’s proposals were:

1. That the Court of Wards should not extend the thika system.

2. If in the case of existing thikas the estate decided to renew the leases, (they) should contain conditions enforcing the recommendations of the Committee, including

   (1) no indigo to be grown except in a voluntary system,

   (2) no abwabs to be taken,

   (3) no hurja1 or tawan to be taken.

These proposals were accepted.

Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 152, pp. 287-9

392. LETTER TO JAMNALAL BAJAJ

MOTHARI,

Shravan Shukla 1 [July 28, 1917]2

DEAR SHRI JAMNALALJI,

I have your letter and draft for Rs 1,500/-. I am grateful. Your donation will be earmarked for the spread of Hindi. If some other people send [money] for this specific purpose and some amount is saved, your donation will also be spent on other activities. I shall let you know if I have to go to Wardha again.

Yours

MOHANDAS GANDHI

From a photostat of the Hindi original in Gandhiji’s hand: G. N. 2833

1 Demurrage
2 Gandhiji was in Motihari on this day.
3 (1889-1942), whom Gandhiji regarded as his fifth son; Treasurer of the Indian National Congress for a number of years; identified himself with Gandhiji’s constructive activities
393. CONFIDENTIAL NOTE TO CHAMPARAN COMMITTEE MEMBERS ON SHARAHBESHI

BETTIAH,
July 29, 1917

In my humble opinion (1) the existence of the committee is due to the evils of the tinkathia system; (2) its chief function is to deal with it in an equitable manner; and (3) it is expected to make such recommendations as would settle the matter once for all, would restore harmony between zamindars or thikadars and the raiyats and would prevent future disputes whether in the shape of law suits or otherwise.

If tinkathia is abolished for a consideration, the committee will have neglected its primary duty. The committee has been appointed in spite of the tinkathia system being the subject-matter of a law suit.
The committee has overwhelming proof before it to know that tinkathia has bound the raiyat like the coil of a serpent from which whether it be legal or not the raiyats have ever striven to get free and from which the Government have hitherto made unsuccessful attempts to free them. Official evidence before us goes to show that it has taxed the officials’ wit to the utmost in their endeavour to get out of it; they attribute everything to tinkathia. There is much truth in Mr. Whitty’s remark that though he can produce no direct evidence to show that tinkathia is responsible for the abwabs, etc., he has felt it to be so. In the circumstances the committee, I venture to submit, is bound to condemn it in unequivocal terms and advise its abolition without any consideration whatsoever being paid by the raiyats. The legality of slavery, when once its sinfulness was recognized, did not require a price from the slave for his freedom.

It is submitted therefore that the least the committee can do is:
(1) to abolish tinkathia unconditionally;
(2) to abolish sharahbeshi without interference with the past collections at the sharahbeshi rates;
(3) to cancel sharahbeshi whether registered as a matter of contract or compromise subject however to enhancement of the pre-sharahbeshi rent as in kham\(^1\) or thika villages.

\(^1\) An estate under direct management
The result of such a settlement will mean withdrawal of the High Court case and lasting peace so far as tinkathia and sharahbeshi are concerned.

The result of leaving the matter to be decided as a matter of law pure and simple will be a fruitful source of interminable disputes in which the longest purse alone must win. It will promote bitterness between parties and reopening of many cases in the event of the raiyats winning, decided under the Sweeney’s Settlement and will mean a loss to the landlord of the enhancement offered under the foregoing scheme. Neither the Government nor the committee can contemplate with equanimity such a state of things. Finally, if tawan is bad, sharahbeshi is worse from the raiyats’ standpoint. The former has pinched the present party, the latter leaves a legacy to generations yet unborn. We know too that sharahbeshi was proposed and taken when indigo was no longer a profitable proposition for the planter and that the Rajpur concern has shown that khuski indigo has been taken up practically without any extra cost to the planter. So with sharahbeshi he has a fair prospect of having obtained the utmost enhancement in his rents and a continuance of profits from indigo under another form.

M. K. GANDHI

From the typewritten original signed by Gandhiji in the National Archives of India; also Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran. No. 153, pp. 290-1

394. LETTER TO FULCHAND SHAH

MOTHARI,
Shravan Sud 13 [August 1, 1917]

BHAISHRI FULCHAND,

Preserve this letter after reading it. The money has been sent to Revashankarbhai. Debit it to his account. All the letters received yesterday have been misplaced by Devdas. One of them gave the figure for cloth. Send it again when you write next. The bale has not been received yet.

You will manage to publish Gokhale’s speeches only if you start

1 J. A. Sweeney, Settlement Officer, North Bihar
2 Gandhiji was in Motihari on this day.
the work right from today, and you must do so.

Vandemataram from

Mohandas

Prabhudas has left today. He should reach there by Saturday, 8.30 p.m.

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: S. N. 6386a

395. LETTER TO ESTHER FAERING

Nadiad,
August 3, 1917

MY DEAR ESTHER,

You have raised big questions. I think the command of Jesus is unequivocal. All killing is bad for one who is filled with love. He will not need to kill. He will not kill. He who is filled with pity for the snake and does not fear him will not kill him and the snake will not hurt him. This state of innocence is the one we must reach. But only a few can reach it. It seems to me to be impossible for nations to reach it. Equal progress in all is an inconceivable situation. Nations will therefore always fight. One of them will be less wrong than the other. A nation to be in the right can only fight with soul-force. Such a nation has still to be born. I had hoped that India was that nation. I fear I was wrong. The utmost I expect of India is that she may become a great restraining force. But she must acquire the ability to fight and suffer before she can speak to the world with any degree of effect. The pertinent question for you and me is what is our duty as individuals. I have come to this workable decision for myself, ‘I will not kill anyone for any cause whatsoever but be killed by him if resistance or his will render my being killed necessary.’ I would give similar advice to everybody. But where I know that there is want of will altogether, I would advise him to exert his will and fight. There is no love where there is no will. In India there is not only no love but hatred due to emasculation. There is the strongest desire to fight and kill side by side with utter helplessness. This desire must be satisfied by restoring the capacity for fighting. Then comes the choice.

Yes, the very act of forgiving and loving shows superiority in the doer. But that way of putting the proposition begs the question, who can love? A mouse as mouse cannot love a cat. A mouse cannot be commonly said to refrain from hurting a cat. You do not love him whom you fear. Immediately you cease to fear, you are ready for your choice—to strike or to refrain. To refrain is proof of awakening of the soul in man; to strike is proof of body-force. The ability to strike must be present when the power of the soul is demonstrated. This does not mean that we must be bodily superior to the adversary.

This is not a satisfactory letter but I think you will follow my argument. But in matters such, as these, prayer is the thing.

With love,

My Dear Child, pp. 18-9

---

396. LETTER TO POPATLAL

Shravan Vad 5 [August 7, 1917]

BHAISHRI POPATLAL,

I was extremely happy to read of your going to the Ashram. Take whatever subject suits you after consulting everyone there. Be careful that you do not spoil your eyes.

I hope to be back there next week.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: S. N. 6384

---

397. EXTRACTS FROM MINUTES OF CHAMPARAN COMMITTEE MEETING

BETTIAH,

August 8, 1917

* * *

Mr. Gandhi suggested that the report should specify the more general kinds of abwab, so that there could be no doubt as to their condemnation. This was agreed to.

* * *

FINES—The outstanding point to be settled about fines was the recommendation in respect of cases to which the landlord was a party. The President...

* * *

---

1 Found with Gandhiji’s correspondence of 1917, the letter is placed in that year. Again, Gandhiji left Bettiah for Ahmedabad on August 16.
said that, in his opinion, to adopt Mr. Gandhi’s suggestion that in all such cases the matter should go to a court would be injurious to the raiyats and would moreover require legislation. He thought Mr. Gandhi’s objection might be met if it were clearly laid down and understood—

1. That the payment was entirely voluntary,
2. That if the raiyat thought he was not liable, or that the payment was excessive, it was open for him to refuse to pay.

... Mr. Gandhi said that as the fines were few, so also would be the number of cases in which the landlords would have to report to the court. He thought the power of the landlord over the raiyats was so great that it would be difficult to ensure that payments were voluntary. After some discussion it was agreed, on the suggestion of Mr. Reid, that the assessing of damages should be left to arbitration....

Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 156, pp. 293-4

398. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

MOTHARI,

Shravan Vad 7 [August 9, 1917]

CHI. [MATHURADAS].

I got your letter. It has been misplaced; moreover, being very busy with my work, I forgot all about it. I can hardly keep an account of births and deaths. In these matters, I have ceased to be of any use to the family. These tides and ebbs scarcely affect me either. This is the third death in the family I have heard of in recent days. I think for a moment and then the thing goes out of my mind. This condition has come to me with no effort on my part but I feel it is worth while cultivating it. Death is but an inevitable transformation of the present state. Why should it occasion fear? Birth is also a sign of the same process of change. Why do we hail it with joy? The aspiration for deliverance from both the contingencies, for us as well as for the whole world, is described as supreme purushartha. Such being the case, what consolation shall I give to Anand? She is given to religious 1Deliverance from both birth and death is the last of the four ends of life, viz., dharma, artha (material prosperity), kama (pleasure), moksha (liberation).

devotions. This is a very good occasion for her to understand the true meaning of religion.

Blessings from
M OHANDAS

[From Gujarati]
Mahatma Gandhini Vicharsrishti

399. EXTRACTS FROM MINUTES OF CHAMPARAN COMMITTEE MEETING
August 10, 1917

* * *

(1) Cost of Cultivation:—Mr. Gandhi said that he had not yet got certain figures from Mr. Jameson but subject to anything new that these might disclose, it was recorded as the conclusion of the Committee that the maximum cost was Rs. 15 per bigha (8 hath laggi) or Rs. 10 an acre.

* * *

(2) Mr. Gandhi said the cost of seed of country crops was small but the President remarked that for rabi crops, it was a considerable item.

Khuski Indigo—Mr. Gandhi suggested that a minimum rate should be fixed for khuski indigo. Mr. Reid thought that there might be a danger of this suggestion extending to other crops, e.g., sugarcane. After discussion it was agreed that during the transition stage in view of the past history of indigo, it was desirable that the Association, with the approval of the Commissioner, should fix a minimum rate for khuski indigo, the transition stage being considered to last until Government was satisfied that the raiyats knew that they need not grow indigo unless they liked.

* * *

Compensation for abolition of tinkathia—The next point for discussion was whether on abolition of the system, compensation was to be allowed in case where the growing of indigo was recorded as an incident of the tenancy. The President, in putting his view before the Committee, said he was anxious to remove anything unjust to the raiyats. He thought that perhaps Mr. Gandhi from his experience of a

1 The subject under discussion was tinkathia indigo.
2 J. V. Jameson, Manager, Jallaha Factory
3 A unit of land measurement used in Champaran
4 Winter crops
raiyatwari tract had not fully appreciated the landlord’s position. The proposal he put before the meeting was that a special court should be created to deal with these cases. This court would decide, subject to appeal to a special judge,

(a) if the incident of tenancy existed, and if so
(b) a fair rate for commutation of the incident.

The commutation should be made by an addition to rent and not by a lump sum.

In fixing a fair rent as commutation, the court should

(a) consider the loss incurred by the raiyat undertinkathia
(b) the actual enhanced rents paid in similar circumstances for commutation, and
(c) in no circumstances fix a total rent which was not fair and equitable

The enhancement might be made progressive if it exceeded 25 per cent.

Mr. Gandhi said he did not wish to enter into legal points but merely to regard the question from the point of view of equity. The result of the proposal would be that raiyats in villages under direct management would be placed in a better position than raiyats in indigo villages, although the latter had borne this heavy burden in the past which was inequitable. He thought that the evil of the system had not been properly recognised by the Committee. Government had never agreed that indigo-growing was an obligation, and all the papers showed that the system and its accompaniments formed an intolerable burden on the raiyats. The proposal did not free the raiyats; on the other hand, it was a free gift to the planters, it was the planters who wished to give up indigo because, whatever might be the case now, indigo was not paying when the conversions were made, and it was not fair to the raiyats to make them pay for giving up indigo. He had considered the matter from the landlords’ point of view, as was shown by his agreement in the matter of tawan. In the present question, he could not separate the raiyats of mukarrari villages from those of thika villages. They were in the same position and should be regarded in the same way. He could not therefore agree to anything beyond an enhancement of rent under the ordinary provision of the law, and opposed any special enhancement in lieu of tinkathia. He foresaw complications in the action proposed. A settlement by a special court would take some months, which was undesirable in the present state of unrest. An immediate and automatic remedy was required, and this would be the merit of his suggestion of an enhancement at a fixed rate on the ground of the rise in prices, that is, of 3 annas in the rupee all round. . . .

The President pointed out that in comparing the position of the non-indigo raiyats with the indigo raiyats, it had to be considered that in villages where abwab were taken, they were higher than sharabheshi, and, that where abwab were not taken (e.g., Madhuban Estate), the rent was enhanced to a higher pitch than elsewhere. Admittedly in Bettiah kham villages these considerations did not apply but it was impossible to secure absolute equality, and in any case the proposal would improve the position of the raiyat who had been growing indigo. As to the criticism that the proposal was a free gift to planters, he said that it was only proposed to allow an enhancement where the legal property of the planter existed and even then the full value of this property was not being given. He did not think the difficulties of the special court would be great. The settlement records would give a good basis and the area to be dealt with was not large.

. . . Mr. Rainy\(^1\) said the proposal was similar to that adopted in Chhota Nagpur where legislation compelled the computation of predial conditions. He denied that Government had never recognised the fact that the obligation might be an incident of tenancy, for section 29 proviso (iii) was clear evidence that they had and so was the Board’s letter No. 5032-R(A) dated the 16th October, 1912, regarding Mr. Irwin’s sharabbeshi. Mr. Gandhi said that if the legal right was not consistent with equity or had been grossly abused as in this case, no compensation should be given. . . .

Mr. Reid said that most of the raiyats took their holdings under an agreement to grow indigo. Mr. Gandhi said the complaint was not against indigo itself but against the manner and method of growing it. . . . the complaint was not against the system but against the moral and intellectual damage caused by it to the raiyats by keeping them backward. The President pointed out that his proposal gave much to the raiyats, viz., freedom

1. from growing indigo if they did not wish,
2. from having their best lands selected for indigo,
3. from supervision by factory servants,
4. from paying compensation for this freedom except in cases where the obligation was the legal property of the landlord and even then full compensation would not be given.

Mr. Gandhi said that this included nothing that was not offered by the planters themselves but Mr. Rainy pointed out that whereas the planters offered their own terms, the proposal contemplated that they should be compelled to accept terms fixed by a court.

The President said that Mr. Gandhi’s position practically amounted to the proposition that the raiyats should get off paying an equitable rent on the ground of past oppression, which position did not appear to him to be sound.

At this stage, the meeting adjourned.

Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 158, pp. 296-300

\(^{1}\)Sir G. Rainy, member, Champaran Agrarian Enquiry Committee
400. EXTRACTS FROM MINUTES OF CHAMPARAN COMMITTEE MEETING

August 11, 1917

Resuming the discussion of the previous day, Mr. Gandhi said that the average amount of sharahbeshi taken was about 50 per cent of the rent. The note circulated by Raja Kirtyanand Sinha suggested a compromise of an enhancement of four annas in the rupee to cover sharahbeshi and ordinary enhancement on the score of rise in prices. He was anxious to meet the views of his fellow-members so far as that was possible, and he was prepared to agree to a small enhancement over and above that admissible for a rise in prices but would not support a penal enhancement. The greatest difficulty would be as regards the sharahbeshi already taken. He thought that anything very much larger than the enhancement allowed for the rise in prices would be near the danger point. . . . The President said that he understood the proposal to be that, in cases where the obligation to grow indigo existed as an incident of tenancy or had been commuted by sharahbeshi, a slight enhancement though not a penal one in excess of the enhancement generally admissible for a rise in prices should be allowed. He pointed out that it was impossible to fix a definite figure for the total enhancement, because it was still uncertain what enhancement would eventually be allowed by the courts on account of the rise in prices. The proposal therefore could only refer to the amount of enhancement above this figure. He asked Mr. Gandhi to what extra enhancement he was prepared to agree. Mr. Gandhi said he thought not more than one anna in the rupee.

. . . The President said that the facts were that by a settlement between the planters and raiyats, there had been a sharahbeshi enhancement of 50 per cent, which Mr. Gandhi thought excessive because the legal property in exchange for which this enhancement was taken was inequitable and therefore the enhancement should be reduced. Mr. Gandhi added that there was also the fact that the tenants were not paying rents and in one case their resistance had been successful. By adopting his suggestion, the Committee would put a stop at once to the present trouble and it was not open to the Committee to shift responsibility by suggesting another tribunal. Mr. Adami held the view that one anna was not sufficient and, considering the difficulties which had been pointed out by Mr. Rainy, he would be inclined to adopt the suggestion of a general settlement of rents in mukarrari villages by a special tribunal in all cases where the obligation still existed or where it had been converted. Raja Kirtyanand Sinha supported the proposal in his note for an enhancement of four annas in the rupee. Mr. Gandhi remarked that if Mr. Adami’s proposal was accepted, the Committee would only have half done its work, but his main objection to it was that it would add to a ferment which already existed. The Committee had the right to confer with the planters and he thought it would be far better if they could come to some agreement with the planters without the necessity of appointing any tribunal which would delay a final agreement. Mr. Reid pointed out that the three concerns mainly affected were Motihari, Pipra and Turkaulia and he was prepared to put the proposal before these three concerns. The President remarked that it should first be decided whether the proposal was to be put before the planters as a final one which they could adopt or not or merely as a basis for discussion. He inclined to the latter. There was a tremendous advantage in getting the question settled without reference to any court and, as he himself doubted whether one anna was adequate, he thought the suggestion should be used as a basis for discussion. Mr. Gandhi said that he would not go so far as to say that he could not agree to anything above one anna, but at the same time he could not say that he would go beyond this point. The one anna was pure concession on his part, because he did not think the raiyats should be called upon to pay any enhancement beyond that allowed by the rise in prices. Mr. Reid doubted if the planters would agree to anything under eight annas enhancement and pointed out that even in Pipra which had taken the biggest enhancement, the rents were only Rs. 2 an acre.

Mr. Reid then suggested that it would be a fairer proposal if the amount of sharabbeshi was reduced by a fixed percentage, say, by 25 per cent. Mr. Gandhi said he would be very willing to consider that as a basis for a settlement and would be prepared to go a long way to get good will established. It was generally agreed that this was a fairer basis for discussion than the original proposal, and that Messrs Irwin¹, Hill², and Norman³ should be asked to come on the following day in order that the proposal might be put to them.

Tawan—The proposal left over for decision from the first meeting was that no action should be taken in cases where tawan had been already paid but that outstanding bonds on account of tawan should be cancelled. The President said one difficulty about this proposal was that some bonds were mixed and included amounts taken on accounts other than tawan, and some sort of enquiry would therefore be necessary before the question of these bonds could be finally disposed of. The other difficulty was that the proposal worked unequally both on raiyats and planters. Mr. Gandhi pointed out that the first difficulty could be got over by examining the factory books, and he would leave it to the Betthia Raj to satisfy itself that outstanding amounts on account of tawan had been foregone. Mr. Reid said that he thought the only factory where such mixed bonds were taken was

¹ W. S. Irwin of Motihari Factory
² J. L. Hill, Manager, Turkaulia Concern
³ J. B. Norman, Manager, Pipra Indigo Concern

491 VOL. 15: 21 MAY, 1915 - 31 AUGUST, 1917
Bairia where in some cases the debts of raiyats had been taken over and added to the tawan. He would be inclined to apply the same suggestion to tawan that he made in the case of sharahbeshi, namely, to deduct a percentage from outstandings and to refund a percentage on the tawan already paid. This would only apply to thika villages. . . .

The next point considered was whether the Raj could claim an enhancement of rent in cases where tawan had been taken. Mr. Rainy said he was inclined to agree to the proposal that no enhancement should be applied for in such cases, but the President felt that the interests of the Bettiah Raj also needed consideration. He would propose that the Raj should not be debarred from claiming an enhancement of rent in cases where tawan had been taken but that for a period of years, say five, the enhanced rent should not be realized. Mr. Gandhi suggested that the enhancement of rent should be foregone until the following settlement. Mr. Rainy remarked that the 15-year period could not be justified if the amount of tawan taken did not cover 15 times the enhancement. His idea was that the Raj should forego enhancement so far as it was covered by the tawan. Mr. Reid pointed out that the Raj was to blame to some extent for the position. After discussion, it was decided to recommend that in cases where tawan had been taken, the Raj was not to be debarred from claiming enhancement but it would forego realisation of the enhancement for a period of seven years. . . .

* * *

Mr. Gandhi made the following proposals:

(1) That the Committee should make a general recommendation that the orders passed by Government on the Committee’s report should be communicated in the vernacular to the raiyats. This was accepted.

(2) That the kerosene oil monopoly should be stopped. This was agreed to.

(3) He proposed that raiyats should be informed that dasturi was illegal. It was agreed to say in the report that it had been brought to notice that amla took commissions on payments which were entirely illegal and that every effort should be made to stop them and to recommend that a proclamation should be issued to the raiyats, informing them that this dasturi was not legally payable.

(4) He suggested that some officer should be deputed to enquire periodically if the orders of Government on the Committee’s recommendations were being carried out. It was agreed that a paragraph should be included to emphasise that an important part of the duties of the district staff would be to see that Government orders on the recommendation were carried out which would apply especially to the staff of the Bettiah Raj until Government was satisfied that the full effect of these orders had been secured. . . .

Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 159, pp. 300-5
At the resumption of the discussion, Messrs Irwin (Motihari), Norman (Pipra) and Hill (Turkaulia) were present by invitation. The President explained that this discussion must be entirely confidential. The Committee had come to the unanimous conclusion that the tinkathia system should go and should be replaced by the khuski system under short-term agreement. It had, therefore, been necessary to consider the question of the commutation of the indigo obligation both in cases where it still existed and in cases where it had already been commuted... Mr. Gandhi had said that he was prepared to consider the possibility of a settlement on certain lines. He, therefore, asked Mr. Gandhi to put his proposal before the planters present. Mr. Gandhi said that his object was to promote harmony; he had no doubt that sharabheshi had caused considerable difficulty to the raiyats, seeing the large numbers that had protested against it. At the time of conversion of the obligation, indigo was not profitable and it was mutually beneficial to both parties to cancel the obligation. Any burden imposed; therefore, on the raiyats beyond the ordinary legal enhancements was one against which they were justified in protesting. As to the amount of the ordinary enhancement about which on the previous day there appeared to be some doubt, he referred to the judgment of the special judge in special appeal No. 14 of 1916, and said that it appeared from that that the enhancement eventually decided on would be three annas and not four annas eight pies. He had suggested as a concession an extra anna on account of sharabheshi. The planter would no doubt consider that it called for considerable self-denial on their part to give up anything of the sharabheshi which they had already obtained, but he appealed to them to think of the raiyats' position; he would be prepared to accept a proposal on the basis of an all-round reduction in the sharabheshi already taken which was perhaps a better basis for discussion. He pointed out how desirable it was that some figure should be agreed upon between the parties because, in the event of this not being done either of the ways suggested, the only course remaining was the settlement of rents by a special tribunal which would give rise to endless quarrels, and would postpone settlement of the disputes over a considerable period. If, however, the planters would prefer to have a special tribunal, he would be prepared to consider the proposal. The President remarked that so far as the discussion had gone, the Committee favoured a settlement on the lines of proportionate reduction of sharabheshi taken rather than the proposal to an all-round enhancement of a certain amount on the original rents, because the former was more equitable table in view of the varying conditions of different concerns... Mr. Reid said he had a long talk that morning with the three planters present. At first they had been averse from agreeing to any decrease to the enhancement which had been mutually agreed upon and approved by the Settlement Court. Their view was that they had valuable property which the Committee was asking them to give up in part. He had put the view to them that it was extremely desirable to avoid future litigation and trouble even if it involved some sacrifice on their part. Finally, they had agreed reluctantly to remit a certain proportion. Mr. Hill, however, had pointed out that his enhancements were low and that he thought that the reduction in his case should be less than in that of others. Mr. Gandhi said he was prepared to accept the principle of a different rate of reduction for different concerns but the difficulty was that the Committee had not got the figures before them and he doubted if the settlement records would give them sufficient data for arriving at a proper variation in the reduction without further enquiry. The President said that the advantage of getting a settlement by agreement was immense not only to the planters but also to the raiyats . . . If the Committee could decide on a particular percentage of reduction, they would get a long way towards settlement and he, therefore, thought that an endeavour should be made to get down to a particular figure. The alternative to a settlement by agreement was one which would lead to increased bitterness of feeling and even then the decisions of the special court might not be accepted with good-will. He would, therefore, ask the planters to state what was the outside figure of the reduction of the sharahbeshi enhancement to which they are prepared to agree. Messrs Irwin and Norman said they were prepared to forego 25 per cent and Mr. Hill said he was prepared to forego 20 per cent as a maximum. Mr. Gandhi said that he was not in a position at present to say off hand what percentage of reduction he would consider to be fair and he was not sure whether the Committee were in a position to arrive at a figure at the present moment. . . . Mr. Gandhi wanted to know if the planters would agree to leave the percentage to be fixed by the Committee. The planters explained their position to be that if the Committee recommended any deduction up to 25 per cent, they would accept it; if the Committee recommended a higher figure than 25 per cent, they would oppose it; and on the understanding that this would be binding on all with no possibility of litigation outside such agreement. The President remarked that he thought that any agreement would require binding by legislation and that it now remained for the Committee to try and arrive at some agreement on the percentage. He pointed out that in all these sharahbeshi cases, the enhanced rents had been passed by the Settlement Courts as fair and equitable, so that the Committee could be quite certain that any rents fixed after such a reduction of sharahbeshi as was proposed would be a fortiori fair to the raiyats. In disputed cases, the rent had only been passed as fair and equitable by the Settlement Courts where they held that the tinkathia obligation was proved and the original rent was low. He thought, therefore, that there was no fear that the new rents after reduction would not be fair and equitable. Mr. Gandhi observed that the Settlement Officer was, in his opinion, wrong in the decisions he gave and had misinterpreted the law. He doubted whether the Settlement Court’s decisions would stand legal scrutiny. He also thought that the settlement decisions were wrong in equity and again referred to the judgment of the Special Judge in Special Appeal No. 14 of 1916 in which the contention of the Settlement Officer that Re. 0-4-8 per rupee was an unfair enhancement had been upheld by the Special Judge. If the Settlement Courts had considered Re. 0-4-8 to be an unfair enhancement and had allowed only 3 annas, how could they in other cases hold enhancements rising as high as 100 per cent to be fair and equitable? . . . Mr. Rainy thought that Mr. Gandhi was confusing a legal enhancement with a fair and equitable rent. The applications of the Bettiah Raj for the settlement of their rent depended on the presumption that the existing rents were fair and equitable. In the sharahbeshi cases, that presumption did not arise because the rents were specially low. It was necessary to distinguish carefully the legal and equitable points of view.

Mr. Gandhi said that in determining what was a fair and equitable rent, the outturn of the soil alone should not be taken into consideration. It did not follow because the rent was only a small proportion of the produce, that it was too low. His difficulty was that his viewpoint and that of the planters were different and there were no cases so difficult to settle by agreement as those in which the viewpoint differed. He could not agree to a penal enhancement and the proposal of a 25 per cent reduction at present appeared to him to involve a penal enhancement. He wanted an opportunity to examine the figures before deciding. Mr. Irwin instanced the case of Bisambaharpur, a village belonging to petty maliks and not in lease to him although entirely surrounded by Bettiah Raj villages which he held in lease; the rates of rent in Bisambaharpur varied from Rs. 9 to Rs. 14 a bigha, whereas the rate of rent in the surrounding villages in lease to him only averaged Rs. 4 to Rs. 5 a bigha, even including the sharahbeshi. He did not see how it was possible to contend that from the raiyats’ standpoint, the proposal was a favourable one, as it would give them a considerable advantage. Mr. Gandhi, however, said that the legal position from the raiyats’ stand-point was not hopeless.

* * *

Mr. Gandhi said that he worked out the figures as follows:

The sharahbeshi enhancement varied from 19 or 20 annas up to 30 or 32 annas per bigha. A 25 per cent reduction would reduce these enhancements to amounts varying from 14 annas 9 pies or 15 annas to 22 annas 6 pies or 24 annas. According to his calculation, if the rent rate was Rs. 2-6-0 per bigha, the enhancement under his proposal would be 10 annas per bigha only and the difference between this and the results of the other proposal was very considerable. The President said that in

---

1 Owners or proprietors
Motihari, the sharahbeshi was 60 per cent of the former rent. It was now proposed to reduce it to 47 per cent, whereas Mr. Gandhi’s proposal would give only 25 per cent; the difference was, therefore, one of 20 per cent. Mr. Rainy pointed out that it was misleading in some cases to judge by percentage because in cases where the percentage was high, e.g., Pipra, the absolute amount of the rent was low. The President pointed out that both in Turkaulia and Motihari the raiyats had paid enhanced rents for 6 years with no objections, save in a very few cases, and he thought that a reduction of 25 per cent was a very considerable concession to the raiyats. Mr. Gandhi said that he looked at it from the point of view of what the raiyats had the right to demand 6 years ago, because it was only through their ignorance of their legal position that they had not raised any objections before. The President said that he saw no other way of avoiding a tribunal except settlement by consent, and it was very uncertain whether the raiyats would get such good terms from the tribunal as those now offered. Even if Mr. Gandhi was not satisfied that the present rent including sharahbeshi reduced as proposal was fair and equitable, could he not be satisfied that rent was capable of being easily paid? Mr. Gandhi said that he thought the Champaran raiyat was poor and he was not prepared to admit that the rent could be paid easily. . . . Mr. Gandhi said that the class of raiyats had to be considered as well as the possibilities of the soil and the Champaran raiyat was by nature a bad cultivator. In his opinion, if rents were apparently low, there was generally a very good reason for it. He considered that the raiyats had fully paid for this concession of abstention from rent enhancement and his view of the legal position was that the raiyats could free themselves from the obligation without paying any compensation. In saying this, he did not mean to imply that he wished indigo to disappear; he would advise the raiyats to grow indigo, provided they got reasonable rates for it. . . . Mr. Rainy said on the basis of Mr. Sweeney’s figures of produce the Pipra rents were very low, the Motihari rents moderate and even the Turkaulia rents were not high; if 25 per cent of the sharahbeshi was taken off, it would give an ample margin of safety. Mr. Gandhi said he could not bring himself to accept the proposal of a 25 per cent reduction. Mr. Reid inquired whether the alternative to a settlement by agreement was the suggestion of a tribunal. Mr. Gandhi said that if the Committee could not come to an agreement, he would be prepared to accept the suggestion of a tribunal, but he asked whether the Committee could not recommend a higher reduction. The President said that he thought the Committee had got the highest possible figures out of the planters and he was not prepared to agree to higher figure. He could not imagine that any raiyats would ever regret having accepted this proposal; the only raiyats who might be discontented were the few raiyats who still grew indigo. Mr. Gandhi said that the raiyats thought that they could get rid of sharahbeshi by legal methods even in cases where it had been settled under section 10 (C). He did not see, therefore, that they would regret not accepting the present proposal.
Mr. Gandhi enquired what was to be done in the case of the Jalaha concern in the event of the Committee reaching a conclusion on the general question. In that concern, sharahbeshi had been taken by making tenants surrender their holdings which were then resettled with their relatives on an enhanced rent. The Civil Court had held in some cases that the old tenants should be restored at the former rent. The President said that this was the first occasion that the matter had been brought to his notice and he thought that they ought to ascertain the facts and hear what Mr. Jameson had to say before coming to any conclusion about it. . . .

Returning to the general question, Mr. Adami said that the equity of the position would be to wash out the past 50 years and put the parties back in the position they would have been if indigo had not been grown. Mr. Gandhi said that this could not be done as the raiyat had given up far more than he had gained during that period. Mr. Rainy pointed out the high rents in Madhuban Babu’s estate. Mr. Gandhi admitted that Indian zamindars had enhanced their raiyats’ rents. . . . The President then said that as Mr. Gandhi could not agree to the 25 per cent reduction, there were two courses open—the Committee could recommend the view of the majority that a 25 per cent reduction was fair; Mr. Gandhi would in a note of dissent give his reasons for thinking that a higher figure was required and it could be left to Government to decide between these two views and legislate accordingly. That course, however, could only be adopted if he was satisfied that the decision of Government whatever it might be would be accepted. If it was not accepted, the position of strife and unrest would still remain and in that event the Committee would have to recommend the alternative procedure of settlement of rents by a special tribunal. He hoped that in the interest of peace, it would be possible to adopt the first alternative, it being understood that whatever Government decided would be loyally accepted. Mr. Gandhi said that he could promise to accept the decision of Government and would refrain from advising the raiyats to resist it. Mr. Reid enquired what should be done as regards pending legislation. Mr. Gandhi said that he thought it desirable to forward their recommendation to Government at once, so that a decision might be reached and pending legislation stopped as soon as possible. Mr. Adami pointed out that the legislation would take time and the President added that Government would probably decide first to publish the Committee’s report and give time to the public and the parties to consider the proposals. It would facilitate the preparation of the report and possibly increase the chance of Government being able to arrive at a decision if Mr. Gandhi could put before the Committee the reduction to which he was prepared to go. Mr. Gandhi said that he would go through the figures again and give his minimum figure.
MY DEAR ESTHER,

I have a moment to spare today. The lines you send are good and true. Belief and hope are great. They are indispensable for success. But love is greater. I find here that too great a strain is put upon it. Only this morning a powerfully built man came to me and insisted on my giving him help which was not in my power to give him. He would not leave me. I begged of him. He began weeping and beating his breast. His case is nothing. He came out of hope and love. How would I, wanting to love him, treat him? Assuming that his weeping was sincere, must I put up with his presence and go on talking to him? Such problems arise every day. Love has to be patient. How to apply the injunction in cases such as I have quoted? The only safe guide is the monitor within if one is pure-minded and sure of one’s sincerity. We often deceive ourselves.

You may write for the time being to Ahmedabad which I expect to reach within a week from now. The Committee will have finished its deliberations within 3 days from today.

What treatment did you receive when you had the snake bite? How did you manage to get bitten? Where did it bite you? Was the snake caught and killed? I am always interested in the question of snake-bites and snakes.

With love from us all,

Yours,

BAPU

My Dear Child, p. 20
403. LETTER TO SHANKERLAL BANKER

BETTIAH,

Shravana Vad 10 [August 12, 1917]

DEAR SHANKERLAL,

I have your letter. The work of the Committee is likely to be completed in two or three days. After that I shall pay a short visit to Ahmedabad. Perhaps we can meet then.

It is true that you have not been able to come here because of pressure of work. You are carrying on a great campaign. Bear in mind that even if thousands of people have to go to jail there may not be any tangible gain. I am giving this warning so that in future you do not lose patience and faith.

Bhai Chandulal must have received my letter of yesterday.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS GANDHI

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32711

404. LETTER TO H.S.L. POLAK

BETTIAH,

August 12, 1917

MY DEAR HENRY,

Here are two letters. I cannot think of anyone else. If you do please tell me. You will use the letters as you please.

I am in the thick of committee work. I cannot therefore send you a love letter. That shall be reserved for Millie and she will need it in your absence. Of course she knows that she has more slaves than one to be at her service.

Yes, I will send you duplicates. I may be able to leave for Ahmedabad during the next 4 or 5 days.

With love,

Yours,

Bhai

1 The year has been inferred from the contents of the letter.
2 For the minutes of the Champaran Enquiry Committee meeting.
3 The Champaran Agrarian Enquiry Committee
You will let me know Millie’s wants in your absence.

Bhai

From the original: Gandhi-Polak Correspondence. Courtesy: National Archives of India

405. LETTER TO CHAIRMAN, CHAMPARAN COMMITTEE

BETTIAH,
August 13, 1917

DEAR MR. SLY,

I have thought, slept, prayed and read 1 Cor. XIII which latter I always do before coming to the committee meetings. I have discussed the question with my friends too. I was surprised to find in Babu Brajkishore the strongest supporter of Mr. Rainy’s energetic defence of the fairness of the enhancement so far as it is measured by the outturn. All the others resisted him. Babu Brajkishore to my astonishment held his ground and said that on the score of lowness of rent he was entirely at one with Mr. Sweeney’s finding. His argument however is totally unconvincing. But all my friends held that I would sell the raiyats’ cause, if I agreed to the planters’ proposition. They unanimously appreciated the fact that the planters who are so strong in every way had at all accepted the idea of a reduction of sharahbeshi. The majority of them would have me to buy peace from the committee even though it may mean a big sacrifice. I thought that I ought to mention these pleasing incidents. They augur well for the future. My friends who represent, as I hold, the culture of Bihar are not fanatics as planter-friends have so often urged. There is no greater fanatic among us than myself.

Now for my offer which is absolutely final. My last state was to accept the Raja Saheb’s proposition¹. That reduced to percentage represents a reduction of 55 per cent as against the planters’ 25 per cent. And if I am to write a dissenting minute, I should write in defence of that offer with the clearest conscience. For the sake of securing unanimity among ourselves, I am prepared to accept a reduction of 40 per cent only, i.e., 15 per cent more than the planters’

¹ Raja Kirtyanand Sinha’s proposal circulated to members, Select Document No. 161, not given here
offer. For me this borders, in my language, upon the penal. Under the planters’ offer, they get Re. 0-6-7 per rupee, under mine Re. 0-5-3 per rupee. My final offer therefore covers all possibilities, the possibility even of Mr. Whitty’s appeal succeeding.

My own original offer was a rise of Re. 0-3-0 in the rupee. That is equivalent to a reduction of 66 per cent. My present offer represents a reduction of 40 per cent. I have therefore put up 26 per cent. If then pressure is now to be applied, it must be not to me but to the planters.

Mr. Irwin has without the slightest justification taken large sums in tawan and has collected sharahbeshi for the past 6 years. He can have little to grumble about if he accepts my offer. For both Turkaulia and Peeprah, there is evidence before the committee of sufficient pressure exerted upon the raiyats to vitiate sharahbeshi. We have it on record that Mr. Sweeney in coming to his decision on coercion had not read the judgment in Lomraj Singh’s case nor had he the full Bench decision before him on undue influence. It is settled law now that there is no distinction between undue influence and coercion. I just mention these facts to show that we as a committee dare not ignore them. It is not possible to base our decision merely on the theoretical ground of the so-called lowness of rent.

I am sure the committee will think a hundred times before putting on the Government the strain of arbitrating upon a figure dispute between its members. I have gone to the furthest limit in order to avoid any such calamity. If you and the other members cannot find it in your conscience to accept my approach, I shall sorrowfully write my minute of dissent but it will be, as I have said, in support of 55 per cent reduction. 40 per cent reduction is for the consideration of the members (and the planters only, if, in your opinion, they should be consulted again).

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

I have omitted decimals in my figures.

M. K. GANDHI

From the typewritten original signed by Gandhiji in the National Archives of India; also Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 162, pp. 313-5

¹ J. T. Whitty, Manager, Bettiah Raj
The President said that a letter\(^1\) received from Mr. Gandhi stated that a compromise on the basis of a reduction of 25 per cent was outside the possibility of his acceptance. Mr. Gandhi further wrote that provided he obtained the unanimous consent of the Committee, he would agree to a 40 per cent reduction, but if that was not accepted, he would in a note of dissent recommend a reduction of 55 per cent. The President put this proposal to the meeting. Mr. Reid said that he could not recommend the planters to give up more than 25 per cent and it would be useless for him to go to them again. In particular, he referred to the case of Mr. Hill where the reduction of 25 per cent would bring his rents down to little more than he could have got from the ordinary enhancement on the ground of rise in prices. Mr. Gandhi said that he would always be prepared to recognise the principle of a different reduction in different concerns. The President, however, pointed out that it was clear that the proposal for a settlement by compromise had failed. He assumed that Mr. Gandhi would now write a minute of dissent advocating a 55 per cent reduction. He did not wish to press him for further concessions, but asked him to consider one point. Both parties were anxious not to have a special tribunal or to have matters settled by the ordinary courts. If the report went up with the recommendation in its present form, Government would have to arbitrate between a reduction of 25 per cent and one of 55 per cent, and he was very doubtful if Government would consent to arbitrate between such wide limits, though they might possibly be inclined to arbitrate between the narrower limits of 25 per cent and 40 per cent. He, therefore, asked Mr. Gandhi if it would not be possible in his minute of dissent to put his figure at 40 per cent. Mr. Gandhi said he did not see why Government should refuse to arbitrate if the limits were wide. The President then made another suggestion that if he approached Government on the subject of arbitration on the basis that Mr. Gandhi stated in his minute of dissent his willingness to abide by the decision of Government, he asked whether Mr. Gandhi would object to his telling Government that an offer of compromise at 40 per cent had been made from his side. Mr. Gandhi said he was willing to let Government know all the facts including the fact that he had offered to compromise at 40 per cent but was not prepared to agree that the limits for arbitration should be any other than between 25 per cent and 55 per cent. Mr. Reid pointed out that the planters’ offer of 25 per cent was final and it should be put in on the same basis as Mr. Gandhi’s final offer of 40 per cent. Mr. Gandhi said that he was willing for Government to arbitrate between the extreme limits of no reduction at all and a 100 per cent reduction and also that they should know that the planters were prepared to go as far as 25 per cent and that he was prepared to go as far as 40 per cent. He was also prepared to state this in his minute of dissent in order to show how reasonable he had been. The President then said that he had a final proposal to put forward. He knew that Mr. Gandhi was aware of his personal view that the raiyats would be well advised to accept 25 per cent. He had gone through Mr. Gandhi’s views and had done his best to realise the raiyats’ position. He was personally unwilling to put forward any proposal for arbitration by Government, because the Committee would thus have failed in its full task and because the Government could hardly be in a better position to arbitrate than the Committee. As Mr. Gandhi was willing to allow Government to arbitrate, he asked if he would have sufficient trust in him to leave the arbitration in his hands, subject to three conditions:

\(^1\) Vide the preceding item.

1. That in no case would he arbitrate at a figure lower than the mean between 25 per cent and 40 per cent,
2. He would endeavour to secure the consent of the planters to the figure which he fixed, and
3. He would endeavour to secure the unanimous consent of the Committee.

Mr. Gandhi agreed that the Committee should bear the burden itself, if possible. He doubted whether it was possible for the President at this stage to bring a fresh mind to bear on the situation, particularly after the President had advocated enhancement of rent in lieu of abwab which was diametrically opposed to his views. The President said that he could only arbitrate between the limits of 25 per cent and 40 per cent and, as a matter of fact, had already practically fixed a figure. Mr. Gandhi said that in that case, as the President had made up his mind, he could not agree as there was no hope of his being able to convince the President of the justice of the raiyats’ case. The President then said that as the offer had not been accepted, he now wished to put before the Committee another proposal. The utmost limit to which the planters would agree was 25 per cent. The utmost limit to which Mr. Gandhi would agree on behalf of the raiyats was 40 per cent. There was a difference of 15 per cent. In thinking out a possible means of bridging this chasm, a solution had occurred to him while considering Mr. Gandhi’s arguments. Mr. Irwin had, in the course of the discussion on the 12th of August, stated that his mukarrari leases were unprofitable on the old rental and Mr. Gandhi’s reply to this was that the planters should have squeezed the Bettiah Raj and not the raiyats. The lines, therefore, on which he had thought of a solution were that the Committee should recommend a reduction in sharahbeshi approximating to 40 per cent, of which the planters would be responsible for 25 per cent and the Bettiah Raj would bear the balance until the next settlement. He proposed a limitation of period as regards the contribution of the Bettiah Estate by analogy with the case of tawan, in which it had been decided that the Raj should forego enhanced rents for a certain period. Mr. Gandhi said that the proposal was attractive in theory but he would want a strong evidence that the mukarrari leases were not a paying proposition before he could agree. The President pointed out that Mr. Whitty had told him that on the whole the profit on the mukarrari leases was very small. At the time they were given the jama was fixed at the full rental or in excess thereof and the increase of rent since that time had been small. Mr. Gandhi thought that they could state in the report that one planter had given evidence that the mukarrari leases without indigo involved a loss and that if this was proved to the satisfaction of the Court of Wards to be generally the case, the Committee recommended that the Bettiah Estate should bear part of the burden. He did not think that on the evidence before him they could definitely make a proposal of this nature because hitherto all the enquiries had been directed towards the relations between the planters and the raiyats without considering the position of the Bettiah Estate. The President said that his proposition was that whatever balance there was between 25 per cent and the figure agreed upon should be borne by the Raj. This would be done by the Raj reducing their mukarrari rental by this figure for a period of years. He had satisfied himself that the proposal was equitable, as far as the Estate was concerned. The mukarrari jama received by the Bettiah Estate was high owing to the indigo industry; the Estate had, therefore, profited by the industry and, if the obligation of indigo-growing had to be commuted, it was fair that a portion of this should be borne by the Estate. Moreover, if there was no settlement of the present dispute by agreement, the Estate might find it hard to realise their jamas owing to the difficulties of the planters and further from the point of view of a good landlord, the Estate should contribute towards the settlement of the dispute. As the Estate was now getting an enhancement of rents in its kham and thika villages, its finances would be well able to bear this extra payment. The actual amount of sharahbeshi, so far as it could be ascertained, was about Rs. 1_ lakhs, 15 per cent of which was Rs. 22,500, this being the maximum amount which the Estate would have to forego annually if the full reduction of 40 per cent was fixed. He did not think that it was just that the Raj should forego it in perpetuity and for that reason he limited it to a period extending up to the next settlement 15 or 20 years hence. Mr. Gandhi said that before agreeing he would have to satisfy himself that the Estate had not profited by indigo and he would like to know the circumstances under which the leases had originally been given. The President thought that the Estate could equitably bear part of the burden whether the leases had been favourable or not because but for indigo the Estate would not have secured such high jamas. Mr. Reid pointed out that in addition to the high jama, very large nazarana had been paid at the time the leases were given. Mr. Gandhi observed that the taking of the leases was a commercial bargain and, if owing to present circumstances the bargain turned out unprofitable, that was no reason why the Bettiah Raj should suffer now. The President said that it was just because it was a commercial bargain that the Bettiah Estate should now bear a part of the burden of giving up the obligation on which the bargain was based. Mr. Gandhi replied that the Bettiah Raj and the planters were the only parties to the bargain and he asked why the Raj should pay because accidents had happened. The material before the Committee was he thought, too small to come to a conclusion. The President said that the only additional evidence that was required as far as he could see was information as to the rental paid-in each village and a comparison of that with the mukkarrari jama. Mr. Gandhi said that if the planters were going to get the same amount of indigo on the khuski system by paying a fair rate he did not see that any loss would accrue to them from the commutation. Mr. Adami pointed out that if a struggle went on between the planters and the raiyats, the Bettiah Estate would inevitably lose money by it and it was therefore to the interests of the Estate to make some sacrifice in order to bring about a settlement. Mr. Gandhi replied that these were considerations outside the main point of the equity of making the Raj pay but he was willing to embody in the report a statement of the planters case against the Bettiah Raj but he did not think that the Committee were called upon to decide that case. Mr. Adami said he thought they might state the outside limit to which the two parties would go namely, 25 per cent and 40 per cent. After stating the case for the planters against the Estate he suggested that the Estate should pay the difference if Government found the case to be proved. The President asked if the Committee could not go further and find that it was proved. Mr. Gandhi doubted whether they could get sufficient information as to the mukkarrari leases. The President pointed out that the information from the Government records was that the Maharaja himself gave the leases in order to get security for the sterling loan.

Mr. Gandhi said that he looked at the matter purely as a commercial transaction and could not see why the Bettiah Raj should pay anything because the transaction had become unprofitable to the planters. He thought that by friendly relations and good will in the district there was a future for indigo. Mr. Reid observed that after the next settlement, the planters would be bearing the full burden. Mr. Gandhi pointed out that they would get the usual enhancement at that time on the ground of rise in prices but the President observed that the planters would never get back the 25 per cent which they were now giving up. Mr. Rainy said that, under 1 Some indigo planters secured permanent leases from the Bettiah Raj in 1888, taking advantage of the latter’s necessity to obtain a loan of £475,000 which was floated in England on the security of the indigo planters. The loan was negotiated through a Calcutta firm with the help of another in London and was within the knowledge of the Government of India and the Lt.-Governor of Bengal. A condition attached to the loan was that the Maharaja of Bettiah could appoint a successor to T. M. Gibbon, the then Manager of the Raj and an ex-planter, only with the approval of the Lt.-Governor of Bengal. Vide Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, p. 6.

the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, once the landlord had foregone his rent enhancement, he could never recover it. Mr. Gandhi remarked that Indian thikadars were able to drive a coach and four through the Bengal Tenancy Act; although the big estates could not do this, the small estates found it easy to get their tenants to pay enhanced rents. Mr. Reid said that he had no objection to accept the proposal if Mr. Gandhi agreed to it, though he considered it hard on the planters. Mr. Rainy said that he agreed with Mr. Gandhi that it was necessary for the Committee to be sure of its ground. He would not have hesitated to suggest the proposal to the Raj with a view to promoting a settlement of the dispute if there had been a Maharaja but, as Government was trustee for the management of the Estate, it was necessary to consider the proposal carefully before suggesting it. He did not think that the Estate could divest itself of responsibility for the present position. The President asked if it would not be sufficient if the Committee examined the correspondence regarding the mukarrari leases and considered the mukarrari jama and the rentals of the villages both at the time when the leases were granted and at present. Mr. Gandhi thought that this would not be sufficient as the Court of Wards would want to know if there was going to be a loss to the planters in future; that the Committee was now bringing in a third party and was bound to consider that party’s position. Mr. Reid asked why they could not leave it to Government; but the President pointed out that if possible the Committee ought to decide for themselves. He said that if this proposal was not accepted, there was no alternative but to recommend a special tribunal or to leave the decision of cases to the ordinary Court. If there had been only one dissent to the proposal about Government arbitration, it might have been possible to leave it to Government but Raja Kirtyanand Sinha’s dissent made arbitration impossible. He thought the planters stood to lose by this course and that the raiyats stood to lose even more. Mr. Adami said that it was clearly to the interests of the Raj to agree to the proposal which should be recommended to Government who would naturally consult the Board of Revenue before passing orders. He was prepared to accept the proposal. Raja Kirtyanand Sinha also said he was prepared to accept the proposal, though the ultimate orders of Government would depend on the view taken by the Court of Wards. Mr. Rainy agreed but that the Committee should try and convince Government that the proposal was a fair one. Mr. Gandhi said that even if he satisfied himself that the proposal was fair, he would not agree to let the Raj bear the loss for so long a period as 15 years. Mr. Reid pointed out that it was for Government to satisfy itself on the point. Mr. Gandhi said he thought he would be on dangerous ground if he accepted the proposal without knowing the facts, and even so he could not accept it without knowing what was going to happen in future. He thought that the Committee could not bind down the Raj to a prospective loss. He, therefore, put forward an alternative proposal. He said that the dispute was merely as to figures and that if the Committee had accepted his view, there would have been no need to bring the Bettiah Raj into consideration. He proposed that the planters on the one side and he on the other on behalf of raiyats should put their views to arbitration, not by Government, nor by the Committee but by a separate body. He proposed as arbitrators Mr. Apperley\(^1\) and Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya who would select a third arbitrator as an umpire between them, or, if the Committee did not agree to that, he would suggest Mr. Heycock. Both parties would state their case to the arbitrators who would have before them also the views of the Committee. They would then give their decision which would be embodied in the Committee’s report. Mr. Reid said that he could not agree to this proposal. The planters had already gone to the full extent of their concession and he was sure that they would not agree to this suggestion of arbitration. Mr. Rainy also thought that the planters would not consent. With a 25 per cent reduction, the average enhancement in the Turkaulia concern would be 4 annas 10 pies; if the rates of permissible enhancement in the Sardar Sub-division worked out at much the same as they had in the Bettiah Sub-division, the Turkaulia concern could go to the Munsif’s Court and get the enhancement at 4 annas 8 pies in the rupee; it was clear, therefore, that it would be no advantage to them to consent to an arbitration which would almost certainly involve a loss. The President said that in these circumstances the matter would have to be left in the position that his proposal regarding the Bettiah Raj was supported by the majority of the Committee, and Mr. Gandhi would not oppose it if Government satisfied itself that it was fair to the Bettiah Estate. Failing that, the alternative solution of a special tribunal would be recommended.

. . . . The President then said there was one small point which he desired to bring to notice. Mr. Gandhi had all along agreed that raiyats should have their rents enhanced by the amount permissible on account of the rise in prices. There was a possibility of difficulty arising in the Rajghat concern owing to its forbearance. He asked therefore if Mr. Gandhi agreed to a special recommendation that in the Rajghat concern there should be an enhancement of rent on the ground of rise in prices and an increase of rent on the ground of excess area by the application of section 112, Bengal Tenancy Act. Mr. Gandhi agreed.

_Tawan:_ In connection with the question of _tawan_, Mr. Gandhi said that he had been looking up cases of _tawan_ in recently leased villages and had made a list of the cases in which he thought indigo _sattas_ had been taken merely for the purposes of releasing _tawan_ and he suggested that in any case where _tawan_ had been taken in villages where indigo had been grown for less than 10 years, the whole of the _tawan_ should be refunded. The President asked if the Committee could not agree to a general recommendation that, if _tawan_ had been imposed in a village within the last few years which had never grown indigo, the whole should be refunded Mr. Reid suggested that the decision of such cases should be left to the

\(^1\) Perhaps F. W. Apperley, Manager of Rajghat Concern
Mr. Rainy pointed out that the objectionable cases were those in which it was certain that sattas had been executed for the purpose of taking tawan and nothing else. It was unsafe to rely on dates in this matter and he could not agree to a fixed period of 10 years. He thought that it would be easy to find a form of words to which they could all agree and suggested that they should recommend that when it appeared to the Bettiah Estate that indigo sattas were taken with the object of taking tawan and not for growing indigo the Estate should insist on the whole of the tawan being refunded. The President suggested the addition that where the factory after growing indigo for one year proceeded to take tawan it should be presumed that the sattas were taken for the purposes of levying tawan and nothing else. This was agreed too.

Thika Leases: Mr. Gandhi suggested that the Committee should recommend that thika leases should be for short periods only. The President said that in his experience short-term leases were a very great temptation to the thikadars to fleece the raiyats. The policy in the Central Provinces had been to lengthen the leases but to impose strict conditions as to their cancellation and he thought that this policy was much wiser than that of short leases. Mr. Gandhi withdrew his suggestion.

Special Tribunal: As regards the proposals for the special tribunal Mr. Gandhi suggested as an amendment that an appeal should be allowed to the High Court. Mr. Rainy thought that if any amendment was necessary it was in the other direction, his idea being that the tribunal should be composed of a senior Revenue Officer and a senior Judicial Officer and that there should be no appeal from their decision. What was wanted was finality, and several appeals would make matters little better than if they were left to be dealt with by the ordinary courts. Mr. Gandhi said that he would prefer a special court of three members if there was to be no appeal but would like to think the matter over.

The Committee then adjourned.

Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 163, pp. 315-22

407. LETTER TO J. B. NORMAN

MOTHARI,
August 15, 1917

DEAR MR. NORMAN,

Here are some statements from your raiyats. I have been sending some of such statements to the Collector. He however is loath to take executive action. From his standpoint he is right. I want to avoid court cases if I can. I am therefore taking the liberty of sending the enclosure to you for your investigation. If the statement is true, you will admit that your raiyats shall be free from molestation.

Yours truly,
M. K. GANDHI

From the original in Gandhiji’s hand in the National Archives of India; also Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 165, p. 323

408. LETTER TO JAMNALAL BAJAJ

AHMEDABAD,

Bhadrapad Shukla 4 [August 21, 1917]

DEAR SHRI JAMNALAL,

I have your letter. I have come here for a few days. There is no need for you to go to Champaran. The Committee’s work is almost over now.

Yours
MOHANDAS GANDHI

From a photostat of the Hindi original in Gandhiji’s hand: C. N. 2834

409. SPEECH AT MEETING OF BUSINESS MEN, AHMEDABAD

August 24, 1917

It would seem that what we have been fighting for was within our reach. The officials think that the lawyers and doctors in the country, having nothing else to do, go on talking endlessly and discussing political matters but this meeting proves them wrong. The Government has prohibited students [from attending political meetings], but that has not kept away all of them.\(^3\) And now the business community is also realizing the importance of political \(^1\) From the reference to Champaran, the letter appears to have been written in 1917.

\(^2\) The meeting was held under the auspices of the local Home Rule League to demand the release of Mrs. Besant and her co-workers. Gandhiji was in the chair.

\(^3\) In May-June 1917, the Madras, Bombay and Bengal Governments issued orders prohibiting student in schools and colleges from attending or taking part in political meetings.
moves. It is my view that, until the business community takes charge of all public movements in India, no good can be done to the country. British merchants have earned a name by fighting for their freedom. Ahmedabad is the capital of Gujarat and wields much influence. If business men elsewhere start taking livelier interest in political agitations, as you of Ahmedabad are doing, India is sure to achieve her aim.

[From Gujarati]
Prajabandhu, 26-8-1917

410. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM,
SABARMATI,
AHMEDABAD,
Bhadarva Sud 11, August 28, 1917

CHI. RAMDAS,

I still have two of your letters to answer. Do not give up the morning prayer. And I want you to remember Indian dates.

I have to go to Champaran again. Take care of your health. You write nothing about it. You will have received my previous letters.

It does not cause me pain that your thoughts are turning towards marriage. I shall certainly help to the extent I can if you will accept my choice. I am looking around for a girl. No money must be spent on marriage. There will be some little expenditure, but that hardly matters. One thing is certain. You must marry only after you have begun to earn. I do not think it will be difficult for you to find some means of livelihood. My advice is this: for the present you should with a steady mind continue to work for Indian Opinion. Make the position of the paper sound. Only when you find that it can carry on without you should you come away. If you can find independent means of livelihood there and can side by side work for Indian Opinion, there can be no objection to it. Consult Mr. West. See that your name is not disgraced. Whatever work you may choose to do it will not pain me so long as it does not degrade you. My happiness lies in your satisfaction. You may fearlessly pour out your feelings to me.
Your criticism of... appears to be mistaken. If he goes to what are (to him) innocent dances and if no expenditure is involved, there can be no harm. It is true that I do not easily believe bad things said about a person I have come to trust. It is a virtue, not a failing. Still, you must write to me whatever comes to your notice.

Tell Miss Schlesin to write to me. I am awaiting her arrival. Tell her also that there are some ten letters from me she has not answered.

Remember me to all the others. Visit Mr. Phillip and Mr. Doke. Of course if you are already back from Johannesburg that is another thing. In that case write to them. Write to Capetown too. Also, tell Nagarji and Bhaga—or write to them—that these days I have no time at all to spare.

Mr. Polak is leaving for England in a couple of days. I am going to Bombay to see him. Ba and Devdas will not accompany me this time.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Motana Man, pp. 31-4

411. TALK WITH MAHADEV DESAI

August 31, 1917

... On the morning of 31st August, certain words of Bapuji created in me the mixed feelings of love, dismay and joy. I shall now try to pen in this letter my short talk with him on that day, although it cannot be easily put into words. Bapuji said:

It is not without reason that I have asked you to visit my place every day. I want you to come and stay with me. I have seen your capacity during the last three days. I have found in you just the type of young man for whom I have been searching for the last two years. Will you believe me if I tell you that I have got in you the man I wanted—the man to whom I can entrust all my work some day and be at ease, and on whom I can rely with confidence? You have to come to me. Leave the Home Rule League, Shri Jamnadas and everything else. I have spoken like this only to three persons before this, Mr. Polak, Miss Schlesin and Shri Maganlal. Today I am speaking in the same way to you and I am very happy to do so, for I have found three outstanding qualities in you. They are regularity, fidelity and intelligence. When I first picked up Maganlal, to all appearances he had nothing special about him. But today you are surprised by his personality. He was not educated. I trained him first for press work. He learnt composing in Gujarati and then in English, Hindi, Tamil and other languages. I was surprised at the speed at which he mastered the art. Since then he has shown his skill in various kinds of work. Let us, however, leave aside Maganlal. The intelligence I have found in you I did not see in him. I am confident that you will be useful to me in various ways because of your good qualities.

1 Omission as in the source

I listened to all this with surprise and shyness, without speaking a single word. I interrupted by saying, ‘I have never shown you anything I have done’, to which he answered as follows:

How do you know? I can judge people in a very short time. I judged Polak within five hours. He read my letter published in a newspaper and wrote me a letter. He then came to see me and I at once saw what he was, and since then he became my man. He married and started his practice as a pleader only after he joined me. He told me before marriage that he must earn a little for his children. I told him plainly, ‘You are mine and the responsibility to provide for you and your children is mine, not yours. I am getting you married, as I see no objection to your marrying.’ His marriage was celebrated at my residence. But to revert to the point under discussion. I advise you to give up all thought about the Home Rule League or Jamnadas. Go to Hyderabad. Enjoy yourself for a year or so. Enjoy the pleasures of life to your satisfaction. The moment you start feeling that you are losing yourself, resign from there and come and join me.

At this I told him that I was prepared even then to join him. But he replied:

I know that you are prepared but I want you to see a little more of life and enjoy yourself. I would need your knowledge of the Co-operative Movement also. We have to free that department from its defects. Do not be anxious about anything and come back to me after enjoying life for a little longer. I need you for me personally, not for the school, nor for any other work. You may continue where you are for a year or six months. I shall manage without you till then.

Send me back this letter after you have read it, for I have given Bapu’s talk in his own words. They may be forgotten in course of time.

Mahadev Desai’s letter dated 2-9-1917 to Narhari Parikh reproduced in Mahadev Desai’s Early Life, pp. 52-4

512 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
APPENDICES

APPENDIX I

ANNIE BESANT’S EXPLANATION REGARDING BENARES INCIDENT

I

MADRAS,
February 10, 1916

As Mr. Gandhi has made a statement\(^1\) which appears by wire in our columns, I think it well to say that my interruption was due to the fact that the Englishman behind me, who, I concluded, was a C.I.D. officer, made the remark, “Everything he says is being taken down and will be sent to the Commissioner.” As several things said were capable of a construction that I knew Mr. Gandhi could certainly not mean to convey, I thought it better to suggest to the Chairman that politics were out of place in that meeting. I did not suggest to the Princes to leave nor do I know who did. I am well aware Mr. Gandhi would rather be killed than kill. But I do think that his remarks were capable of misconception and I feared for his personal safety under conditions existing in Benares. How far from any wish of his is any disturbance of the public peace was shown by his view that we ought not to embarrass the Government even by holding the Congress.

New India, 10-2-1916; also The Bengalee, 12-2-1916

II

February 17, 1916

The above\(^2\) came to us from the Madras Mail. Mr. Gandhi telephoned to ask if I would put in a statement from him, and I answered yes. I presume that the above from the Madras Mail is the statement.

I regret that I must traverse the first paragraph of the statement. I do not see how, “if Mrs. Besant was almost behind me”, he could have seen me “whispering” to the princes on the far side of the Maharaja of Darbhanga, nor how they could have heard my whispers; there was one prince on my side, who did not move till after all the rest had gone. I did not leave with the princes, but remained with my friends round me, and in fact Mr. Gandhi says, was discussing with them, while he also says that I left along with the princes. I did not leave till some minutes after the meeting was over, and then not even by the way they went, but by a path which led towards my house from the platform.

\(^1\) Vide “Interview to A. P. I. on Benares ‘Incident’ ”, 9-2-1916.

\(^2\) Vide “Reply to Mrs. Besant”, before 17-2-1916., which also appears to have been published by the Madras Mail.
I have no report of Mr. Gandhi’s speech, but he desires me to mention the statements which I thought necessitated the interruption. I answer that I thought that in a non-political meeting, with princes and many others present who would suffer from Government displeasure, he should not have twice spoken of the possibility of the English being driven bag and baggage out of the country and of his being ready, if he thought Indians fit for self-Government which he did not, to march with thousands of his countrymen to the muzzle of English guns and die gloriously; that it was unwise to say bluntly, “I am an anarchist,” without explaining what he meant, and to speak of bombs bringing about the annulment of the partition of Bengal, with praise of the heroism of those who threw them. I know very well how such statements would appear in a C.I.D. report, as I have suffered from such reports, and I appealed to the Chairman. If the meeting had been called by Mr. Gandhi, it would have been no one’s business but his own what he chose to say; as it was, the University Committee, to which I belong, was responsible to those we had invited. It may be that I ought to have left Mr. Gandhi to go his own way, despite the . . . and the complaints all around me. I meant to do him a kindness and prevent the more violent interruption which would have probably taken place, had I remained silent. I am glad that Mr. Gandhi has explained what he meant to say, though I regret his misstatement about myself.

Mr. S. S. Setlur’s letter, which I subjoin from the Hindu, gives accurately what occurred.

New India, 17-2-1916

III

Those who have read Mr. Gandhi’s statement on his speech, and his request to me to state the remarks to which I objected, will at once recognize his perfect innocence of all wrong intention. . . .

. . . But now that Mr. Gandhi himself has forced my hand, asking for what I had refused to others, I am free to speak out, and to say why words which, from another, would have connoted wrong, were, so far as his intent was concerned, innocent of harm. Moreover, he did not know, as I knew, that the students before him were seething with anger in consequence of the way in which they had been treated by the C.I.D. officers, a number of them interned in the College for the day—a gratuitous and provocative insult—and also of the way in which respectable men in the town had been arrested during previous days, and others, men and even old women, very roughly used. It was a rather “gun-powder” audience, and I feared that some of them, not knowing Mr. Gandhi’s principle of non-resistance, might take his remarks on the results of bomb-throwing as a justification for the use of such means, despite his strictures on them.

To consider the remarks themselves, what Mr. Gandhi said as to the English leaving India by compulsion was, I venture to think, unwise, but it did not bear the sense that it would have had in my own mouth, since I am actively working for Home Rule. If I had said it, it would have been a threat, because it would have been naturally connected in the minds of many with my demand that India should be a self-governing nation, and although I work only for the abolition of bureaucratic rule, and hope that many an Englishman will help in the working of the responsible Government of the future, it would naturally have been said: “Why should you suggest such a thing, if you do not want to bring it about?” But no such motive can be imputed to Mr. Gandhi, for he distinctly said: “You are not fit for self-government,” and he told the students not to be led away by himself into the idea that they were. IF HE THOUGHT THEM READY, which he did not, he would be willing to march up to the mouth of the guns and die. But it must be remembered that from Mr. Gandhi’s lips this does not mean fighting, as it would mean from mine. He has already led a crowd against armed men, willing to die but not to slay. His resistance has always been passive, the heroic endurance of suffering, NEVER the infliction of it. And therefore I say that he cannot be judged as an active politician should be. He has risked the lives of himself and his followers, but never those of his opponents.

1 This is from what appeared with the caption “In Defence of M. K. Gandhi” under the signature of Annie Besant in the editorial columns.

It was unwise to say boldly: “I am an anarchist”, in a country where “anarchism” connotes bombs. Now Mr. Gandhi is a “philosophic anarchist”, like Tolstoy, whom he closely resembles. Many of the noblest and purest men and women in Europe are anarchists in the sense in which Mr. Gandhi used the word. Prince Kropotkin, Edward Carpenter, Walt Whitman, are all men of this school; they are true mystics, and the God within guides them; they need no outside law. The Madras Mail was annoyed that Mr. Gandhi was, apparently, compared to Tolstoy, but Mr. Gandhi is the greater of the two—save from the literary standpoint. Tolstoy lived as a peasant and made shoes for his living; Gandhi lives similarly, and helps in the work of his community. Tolstoy was detested by the Russian Government as Gandhi by the South African; but Gandhi has suffered for his people as Tolstoy never did. Tolstoy lived a long way off, so Anglo-Indians can afford to admire him, but Gandhi is close at hand, so must be reviled. Both are men of the prophet type and are admired by most people—at a distance.

I have been turning up my speech of 1894, delivered in the pandal of the Madras Congress of that year, and it is curiously applicable, in its remarks on the Prophet, to the philosophic idea of anarchism, the “without Government” of the far-off Golden Age, when none shall teach his brother but “all shall be taught of God”. The Prophets, like Tolstoy, Gandhi, Carpenter, proclaim that far-off ideal, but the work-a-day world is not ready for it, nor will be for many thousands of years. Only when a man is guided by an interior compulsion, the divine law within, can he afford to dispense with the compulsion of outer law. But what outer law does Gandhi need, who leads a life of utter selflessness, of purity, of simplicity, of daily, hourly, self-abnegation? Such men are priceless assets of the nation which gives them birth, and they inspire to heroism and to nobility of character. Hence, I say, that while we may consider some of Mr. Gandhi’s views as suited better for a far-off posterity than for today, and while we regard his politics—if we so name them—as impracticable, and even as a hindrance in the path of constitutional change, we would, tens of thousands of us, stand round him, in any attack from Anglo-Indians or from the bureaucracy, as one man, and we honour and venerate him for his life and his lofty ideals, even when we think his words unwise in the difficult circumstances of the time.

_New India, 19-2-1916_

APPENDIX II

"AHIMSA PARAMO DHARMAH"—A TRUTH OR A FAD?

By Lala Lajpat Rai

There is no religion higher than truth, nor a course of conduct nobler than _Ahimsa Paramo Dharma_. Rightly understood and rightly applied to life, the latter makes a man a saint and a hero. Misunderstood and misapplied, it makes a man cowardly and craven, base and stupid. There was a time when the Indians understood it rightly and made only the proper use of it and they were a race of truthful, noble and brave people. Then came a time when some good people, thoroughly well-intentioned and otherwise saintly, made a fad of it, placed it not only at the top of all other virtues, but made it the sole test of a good life. They overdid it not only in their own lives but converted it into a supreme national virtue at the cost of everything else. All other virtues which ennoble men and nations were thrown into the background and subordinated to this, according to them, the supreme test of goodness, courage, bravery, heroism, all lapsed. Honour and self-respect were thrown into the shade. Patriotism, love of country, love of family, honour of the race were all extinguished. It was this perverted use or misuse of ahimsa (non-killing), or its exaggerated importance at the cost of everything else, that brought about the social, political and moral downfall of the Hindus. They forgot that manliness was as good a virtue as ahimsa. In fact the former was in no way inconsistent with the latter, if rightly applied. They overlooked the fact that individual as well as national interests made it incumbent that the weak should be protected against the strong, and that the aggressor and the usurper, the thief and the scoundrel, the lustful villain and the infamous violator of women’s chastity, the ruffian and the cheat, should be prevented from inflicting injustice and doing harm. They ignored the fact that humanity required that the fear of righteous indignation and of the consequences that flow therefrom, should deter the soul of the evilly disposed people from harming innocence, violating purity and depriving others of their just rights. They failed to realize the importance and the sublimity of the truth that whosoever allows or tolerates forceful dominance of evil or tyranny and oppression, in a way abets and encourages it and is partly responsible for the prosperity and strength of the evil-doer. Ahimsa overdone and misapplied is a gangrene that poisons the system, enervates the faculties and converts men and women into half-lunatic, hysterical, unnerved creatures, good for nothing that requires the energetic pursuits of noble ends and noble virtues. It converts men into monomaniacs and cowards. The founders of the Jain religion were saintly people, pledged to a life of self-abnegation and self-mortification. Their followers, the Jain sadhus, are amongst the most saintly people who have achieved the greatest possible success in killing passions and subduing desires both of the senses and the mind. The Tolstoyian ahimsa has been known and practised in India for three thousand years. There is no country on the face of the globe which contains so many and such profound ahimsa-ists as India does and which she has been having for centuries. Yet there is no country on the face of the globe which is so downtrodden, so bereft of manly virtues, as India of today is or as India of the last fifteen hundred years has been. Some people may say that it was not the practice of ahimsa that brought about this fall but the desertion of other virtues. I am, however, inclined to insist that the perversion of this truth was at least one of those causes that resulted in India’s forsaking the path of honour, manliness and virtue. The worst is that people who profess an absolute faith in the doctrine, prove by their own practice that a perverted use of such a truth necessarily leads to a life of hypocrisy, unmanliness and cruelty. I was born in a Jain family. My grandfather had an all-covering faith in ahimsa. He would rather be bitten by a snake than kill it. He would not harm even a vermin. He spent hours in religious exercise. To all appearances, he was a very virtuous person, who held a high position in his fraternity and commanded great respect. One of his brothers was a sadhu, a high priest who was an exalted leader of his order. This last-named gentleman was one of the “noblest” types of ascetics I have ever met with in my life. He lived up to his principles and excelled in the mortification of the flesh and in keeping down his passions and desires. Yet according to the best standards of ethics, his life was barren and unnatural. I loved and respected him, but I could not follow his creed, nor did he ever show any anxiety to make me do it. His brother, however, i.e., my own grandfather, was a different sort of person. He believed in ahimsa, that perverted ahimsa which forbids the taking of any life under any circumstances whatsoever, but he considered all kinds of trickeries in his trade and profession as not only valid but good. They were permissible according to the ethics of his business. I have known many persons of that faith who would deprive the minor and the widow of their last morsel of food in dealings with them but who would spend thousands in saving lice or birds or other animals standing in danger of being killed. I do not mean to say that the Jains of India are in any way more immoral than the rest of the Hindus or that ahimsa leads to immorality of that kind. Far be it from me to make such an unfounded insinuation. In their own way the Jains are a great community, charitable, hospitable, and intelligent and shrewd men of business. So are some of the other communities among the Hindus. What I mean is that the practice of ahimsa in its extreme form has in no way made them better than or morally superior to the other communities. In fact, they are the people who pre-eminently suffer from hooliganism and other manifestations of force, because they are more helpless than others, on account of their inherited fear and dislike of force. They cannot defend themselves, nor the honour of those dear and near to them. Europe is the modern incarnation of the divine right of force. It is good for Europe to have given birth to a Tolstoy. But the case of India is different. In India we do not advocate force and violence for purposes of oppression or usurpation or aggression. India, I trust, will never come to that. But we cannot afford to be taught that it is sinful to use legitimate force for purposes of self-defence or for the protection of our honour and the honour of our wives, sisters, daughters and mothers. Such a teaching is unnatural and pernicious. We condemn illegal or unlawful force in the attainment of a lawful object, but we cannot afford to sit silent when a great and a respected man tells our young men that we can only “guard the honour of those who are under our charge by delivering ourselves into the hands of the men who would commit the sacrilege” and that this requires “far great physical and mental courage than delivering blows”. Suppose a ruffian assaults our daughter. Mr. Gandhi says that according to his conception of ahimsa, the only way to protect the honour of our daughter is to stand between her and her assailant. But what becomes of the daughter if her assailant fells us and then completes his diabolical intention? According to Mr. Gandhi, it requires greater mental and physical courage to stand still and let him do his worst than to try to stop him by matching our force against his. With great respect for Mr. Gandhi, this has no meaning. I have the greatest respect for the personality of Mr. Gandhi. He is one of those persons whom I idolize. I do not doubt his sincerity. I do not question his motives. But I consider it my duty to raise an emphatic protest against the pernicious doctrine he is reported to have propounded. Even a Gandhi should not be allowed to poison the minds of Young India on this subject. No one should be at liberty to pollute the fountains of national vitality. Not even Buddha, much less Christ, even preached that. I do not know if even the Jains would go to that length. Why! honourable life would be impossible under such conditions. A man who has such a faith cannot consistently resist anyone acting as he likes. Why did Mr. Gandhi then injure the feelings of the white men of South Africa by raising the standard of revolt against their cherished policy of excluding the Indians from that country? To be logical he should have left the country bag and baggage and advised his countrymen to do the same as soon as the South Africans expressed a wish to exclude them. Why, under such circumstances, any resistance would be himsa. After all physical himsa is only a development of mental himsa. If it is a sin to contemplate the worsting of a thief or a robber or any enemy, of course, it is a greater sin to resist him by force. The thing is so absurd on the face of it, that I feel inclined to doubt the accuracy of the report of Mr Gandhi’s speech. But the Press has been freely commenting on the speech and Mr Gandhi issued no disclaimer. In any case I feel that I cannot sit silent and let this doctrine go as an unquestioned sublime truth to be followed by Young India, so long as the speech remains uncontradicted or unexplained. Mr. Gandhi wants to create a world of imaginary perfection. Of course he is free to do it, as he is free to ask others to do it. But in the same way I consider it my duty to point out his error.

APPENDIX III

ENCLOSURES TO GANDHIJI’S LETTER TO L. F. MORSEHEAD

I

LETTER FROM LOCAL LEADERS TO GANDHI

MUZAFFARPUR, April 13, 1917

DEAR MR. GANDHI,

We entirely corroborate your statement made by you today to the Commissioner (Tirhut Division) that you have come to this division at the request of the public men of the province to investigate the question of the relations between the indigo planters and Indian raiyats and give us the benefit of your expert assistance in any way you can. We were party to the invitation. We further corroborate your statement that you were asked by most of us to move the resolution in the matter before the last Congress but that you declined to do so on the ground that you had not studied the question on the spot. We invited you because we thought that having expert experience you would be the best and most proper person to make a thorough constitutional and impartial inquiry into the matter which would be to the interest of the parties concerned.

Yours sincerely,

BRAJA KISHORE PRASAD
RAMNAVAMI PRASHAD
GAYA PRASHAD SINGH
RAMDAYALU SINHA,

II

NOTE BY BABU ARIKSHAN SINHA

MUZAFFARPUR, April 13, 1917

I had been to the last Lucknow Congress as a delegate. Nearly all the leading men of this province, numbering about 81, attended the Lucknow Sessions of the Congress as delegates. The Bihar delegates to the Congress at Lucknow requested the Hon’ble Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya and Mr. Gandhi to go to Muzaffarpur and Champaran and study the question about the planters and the raiyats. They promised to visit Muzaffarpur as early as possible. Mr. Gandhi was also requested by Bihar delegates to move a resolution on the subject in the Congress but he declined to do so on the ground that he had not studied the question on the spot.

ARIKSHAN SINHA

Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, Nos. 17 & 18, pp. 60-1
APPENDIX IV

ORDER UNDER SECTION 144 Cr.P.C.

April 16, 1917

TO
MR. M. K. GANDHI
AT PRESENT IN MOTIHARI

Whereas it has been made to appear to me from the letter of the Commissioner of the Division, copy of which is attached to this order, that your presence in any part of the District will endanger the public peace and may lead to serious disturbances which may be accompanied by loss of life and whereas urgency is of the utmost importance;

Now therefore I do hereby order you to abstain from remaining in the District which you are required to leave by the next available train.

W. B. HEYCOCK,
DISTRICT MAGISTRATE
CHAMPARAN

To the notice was annexed a copy of a letter from the Commissioner which was as follows:

MUZAFFARPUR,
April 13, 1917

TO
THE DIST. MAGISTRATE OF CHAMPARAN
SIR,

Mr. M. K. Gandhi has come here in response to what he describes as an insistent public demand to inquire into the conditions under which Indians work on indigo plantations and desires the help of the local administration. He came to see me this morning and I explained that the relations between the planters and the ryots had engaged the attention of the administration since the sixties, and that we were particularly concerned with a phase of the problem in Champaran now; but that it was doubtful whether the intervention of a stranger in the middle of the treatment of our case would not prove an embarrassment. I indicated the potentialities of disturbances in Champaran, asked for credentials to show an insistent public demand for his inquiry and said that the matter would probably need reference to Government.

I expected that Mr. Gandhi would communicate with me again before he proceeds to Champaran but I have been informed since our interview that his object is likely to be agitation rather than a genuine search for knowledge and it is possible that he may proceed without further reference. I consider that there is a danger of disturbance to the public tranquillity should he visit your District. I have the honour to request you to direct him by an order under section 144 Cr. P. C. to leave it at once if he should appear.

I have the honour, etc.,

L. F. MORSHEAD,

COMMISSIONER OF THE TRIHUT DIVISION

Satyagraha in Champaran, pp. 107-8.; also Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 19, pp. 61-2

APPENDIX V

NOTE BY HON’BLE W. MAUDE ON INTERVIEW WITH GANDHIJI

May 10, 1917

*  *  *

On the 10th May I had a very long talk with Mr. Gandhi....

Our conversation was extremely frank and discursive and I cannot attempt to reproduce the gist of it all. The upshot of it was that when I suggested that he must have got a very considerable amount of evidence together by now and might be in a position to make his report, he consented at once to send up a preliminary report, and in the meantime to stop the recording of evidence by his assistants and only make enquiries quietly by himself, visiting only fresh dehats where he is especially invited either by the planter or by the raiyats. I suggested that he should dispense with the services of his assistants and he said he could not make any definite promise about that, and that he was really grieved at the want of faith in the motives and intentions of those assistants. He insisted that if anyone believed that they were regarding it or talking about it behind the scenes as an anti-European movement, they would be quite mistaken as there was no suggestion of such a thing. He said he had intended to lay certain definite proposals before the planters which if they accepted he would be able to destroy all his papers and go away; but he admitted that he did not think it would be much use, and that one or two suggestions he had made to planters individually had not met with the response which he had hoped for. I said I did not think it would be the slightest use his approaching the planters, and he could scarcely expect them to regard him as in any way authorised to lay proposals of any kind before them. It would be better if he wrote a report on such materials as he had already collected and sent it to Government or to the Government of India if he preferred that channel. He said he hadn’t the slightest desire to go to the Government of India and his idea had been to approach the planters themselves first, if they failed to go to the local officers, if they didn’t satisfy him to the Local Government, if they did not satisfy him to appeal as a last resort to public opinion in India.
In conclusion, he asked to whom he ought to address his report, to the Collector or Commissioner or Local Government. I said it would perhaps be best if he addressed it to the Government as it would relieve the Collector and Commissioner of the necessity of wondering whether they were called on to discuss it in sending it up.
He would send a copy to the local officers as a matter of courtesy, and Government could call for any remarks or information as might appear advisable. I said it had been rumoured that he intended to subject Muzaffarpur and Darbhanga to the same process as Champaran, and he said he had so far never had any such intention, though he might visit other parts of the province in a general way in order to complete his knowledge of India generally. I specially commended to his notice a visit to the South of Gaya and the adjoining parts of Hazaribagh where he would find a condition of tenantry in comparison with which the Champaran raiyats are independent and courageous. We wound up a two hours’ conversation with a most interesting talk of the Colonial emigration question which, however, does not concern this file.

Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 71, pp. 121-4

APPENDIX VI

STATEMENTS OF PEASANTS TAKEN BY GANDHIJI

(A)

May 19, 1917

Hira Rai of Mauza Chailabhar, Tola Raj Kumar Dhokaraha Kothi, son of Durga Rai.

My age is nearly 50 years, my wife is alive. I have one son and three daughters. I have 5 bighas in Chailabhar and 1_ bighas under Belwa Kothi. I have had nearly 2_ kathas of zirat forced on me. I have offered through Mr. Gandhi to surrender the zirat. Yesterday about 10 a.m. Mr. Holttum came near my house. On seeing him I got to him. He was on horseback. He had the Patwari Ramlagan Lal and Tahsildar Amla Singh and three peons with him. Several people had collected there. Mr.
Holttum addressed us all and said “You have surrendered your zirat. What is there now between you and me? You will have to pay for it. I shall charge you annas 12 per buffalo and annas 8 per ox and annas 4 per cow for grazing in the Parti. If you do not pay, I shall impound your cattle. You will also have to grow indigo.” We have not been obliged to pay anything up to now for grazing cattle. We listened but said nothing. He spoke to his men and went away.

Taken by M. K. GANDHI

Interpreted by B. Rajendra Pd. where necessary (B)

Janai Mahto Moiri Mauza Dhokaraha, Tola Shikarpur Kothi Dhokaraha, son of Thakur Mahton.

I have a wife, I have no children. I am 40 years old. I have 3 bighas land in Shikarpur. I have had 2 kathas of Zirat forced on me. This was about 10 years ago. I have in common with many others offered through Mr. Gandhi to surrender my zirat. I was present on the day Mr. Gandhi came to Saraswa. About 6 o’clock in the evening I was passing by Dhokarah factory on my way to Shikarpur. The Kacheri of the Factory is situated in its compound. A passer-by could get a clear view of the Kacheri as I did. I saw Sukhari Mahton on the verandah. He was standing by a bundle of papers on the floor of the verandah. I know that the Kacheri has been burnt down. I do not believe that it is the work of the raiyats.

Taken by M. K. GANDHI
B. Rajendra Prasad interpreting where necessary

(C)

Devnarain Rai of Chailabhar, Kothi Dhokaraha, son of Thakur Rai.

My age is 40 years. My wife is alive. I have no children. I have 12 Bighas of land in Chailabhar. I have had forced on me 8 kathas of zirat. I have offered to surrender the zirat through Mr. Gandhi. Yesterday I was fetched by Mr. Holttum’s sepoy to go to Raj Kumar’s house and there pay to the Tahsildar Rs. 2/- for thatching straw I had purchased from the Kothi. I paid the money and I was standing there when Mr. Holttum was seen coming on horseback. There were many people present. Mr. Holttum was accompanied by his sepahis who were there, when he came. The Patwari was also there. Addressing the crowd he said “What is there in common between you and me? You have surrendered the zirat. You will have to pay for it. You will have to grow indigo. You will have to pay 12/- for buffaloes, as. 8 for oxen and as. 4 for cows for grazing. If you do not pay, your cattle will be impounded.” Hira Rai was present when the Saheb came. We have not paid anything hitherto for grazing cattle. We listened, we said nothing. He said something to his men and went away.

Taken by M. K. GANDHI
Interpreted by Babu Rajendra Pd. where necessary

(D)

Merkhun Turha of Chailabhar, son of Param Turha, age about 26 years, married, has one son, has 7 bighas zirat, 7 kathas has surrendered. Support above statement.

M. K. GANDHI
Bettiah, 19th May, 1917

Sivprasad Rai of Chailabhar, son of Pratap Rai, has wife and 3 sons, has 1 bighas, has no zirat. Supports above statement.

M. K. GANDHI
Bettiah, 19th May, 1917
Sivanandan of Chailabhar, son of Devnarain Rai, age 30 years, wife, no children, 4_ bighas, zirat 2 kathas has surrendered. Supports above statement.

M. K. GANDHI
Bettiah, 19th May, 1917

Amar Rai, son of Shishupal Rai, age 25 years, wife, no children, 4 bighas, 11_kathas zirat. Supports the above statement.

M. K. GANDHI
Bettiah, 19th May, 1917

Courtesy: Gandhi Smarak Nidhi

APPENDIX VII

GOVERNMENT NOTICE INVITING EVIDENCE
BEFORE CHAMPARAN AGRARIAN ENQUIRY COMMITTEE

July, 1917

The Committee appointed to enquire into the agrarian conditions in Champaran will commence the enquiry about July 15th. The centres at which the Committee will sit are Bettiah and Motihari (and any others which may be hereafter decided upon) but the precise dates for these centres have not yet been fixed.

The Committee accordingly invite all persons, associations and public bodies, who desire to give written evidence to send the same to the address of the Secretary, Champaran Agrarian Enquiry Committee, Secretariat, Ranchi, before July 10th together with a memorandum stating the qualifications of the writer.

Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 143, p. 270
1. INDIAN COLONIAL EMIGRATION

I have carefully read the resolution issued at Simla by the Government of India on the 1st instant, embodying the report of the Inter-Departmental Conference recently held in London. It will be remembered that this was the conference referred to in the Viceregal speech of last year at the opening of the Sessions of the Viceregal Legislative Council. It will be remembered, too, that this was the conference which Sir James Meston and Sir S. P. Sinha were to have attended but were unable to attend owing to their having returned to India before the date of the meeting of the conference. It is stated in the report under discussion that these gentlemen were to discuss the question of emigration to certain English colonies informally with the two Secretaries of State, i.e., the Secretary of State for India and the Secretary of State for the Colonies. Lord Islington, Sir A. Steel Maitland and Messrs Seton, Crindle, Green and Macnaughton constituted the Conference. To take the wording of the Resolution, this Conference sat “to consider the proposals for a new assisted system of emigration to British Guiana, Trinidad, Jamaica and Fiji”. The public should therefore note that this assisted emigration is to be confined only to the four Crown Colonies mentioned and not to the self-governing Colonies of South Africa, Canada or Australia, or the Crown Colony of Mauritius. What follows will show the importance of this distinction. It is something to be thankful for, that “the Government of India have not yet considered the report and reserved judgement on all the points raised in it”. This is as it should be on a matter so serious as this and one which only last year fairly

1 In May 1917 to discuss a new system of emigration
2 Sir James Meston and S. P. Sinha represented India at the Imperial War Conference held in April, 1917. They were also nominated by the Government of India as its representatives to the Inter-Departmental Conference, but both of them had to return to India before the Conference could meet formally.
3 Chairman
4 Members of the respective Secretaries of State’s establishments
5 ibid
6 ibid
7 ibid
8 ibid
9 Vide also “Statement on Abolition of Indentured Labour”, after 7-2-1917.
convulsed the whole of India and which has in one shape or another agitated the country since 1895.

The declaration too that "His Majesty’s Government in agreement with the Government of India have decided that indentured emigration shall not be re-opened" is welcome as is also the one that "no free emigrants' can be introduced into any colony until all Indian emigrants already there have been released from existing indentures".

In spite however of so much in the report that fills one with gladness, the substantive part of it which sets forth the scheme which is to replace indentured emigration is so far as one can judge, to say the least of it, disappointing. Stripped of all the phraseology under which the scheme has been veiled, it is nothing less than a system of indentured emigration no doubt on a more humane basis and safeguarded with some conditions beneficial to the emigrants taking advantage of it.

The main point that should be borne in mind is that the conference sat designedly to consider a scheme of emigration not in the interests of the Indian labourer but in those of the Colonial employer. The new system therefore is devised to help the colonies concerned. India needs no outlet at any rate for the present moment for emigration outside the country. It is debatable whether in any event the four colonies will be the most suitable for Indian colonisation. The best thing therefore that can happen from an Indian stand-point is that there should be no assisted emigration from India of any type whatsoever. In the absence of any such assistance, emigration will have to be entirely free and at the risk and expense of the emigrant himself. Past experience shows that, in that event, there will be very little voluntary emigration to distant colonies. In the report, assisted emigration means, to use a mild expression, stimulated emigration; and surely with the industries of India crying out for labour and with her legitimate resources yet undeveloped, it is madness to think of providing a stimulus for the stay-at-home Indian to go out of India. Neither the Government nor any voluntary agency has been found capable of protecting from ill-usage the Indian who emigrates either to Burma or Ceylon, much less can any such protection avail in far-off Fiji or then three other colonies. I hope that

---

1 “emigration” in the report published in The Indian Review, September 1917 leaders of public opinion in India will therefore take their stand on the one impregnable rock of not wanting any emigration whatsoever to the colonies. It might be argued that we, as a component part of the Empire, are bound to consider the wants of our partners, but this would not be a fair plea to advance so long as India stands in need of all the labour she can produce. If, therefore, India does not assist the colonies, it is not because of want of will, but it is due to want of ability. An additional reason a politician would be justified in using is that, so long as India does not in reality occupy the position of an equal partner with the colonies and so long as her sons continue to be regarded by Englishmen in the colonies and English employers even nearer home to be fit only as hewers of wood and drawers of water, no scheme of emigration to the colonies can be morally advantageous to Indian emigrants. If the badge of inferiority is always to be worn by them, they can never rise to their full status and any material advantage they will gain by emigrating can therefore be of no consideration.

But let us for the moment consider the new system.

The system to be followed in future will be one of aided emigration\(^1\) and its object will be to encourage the settlement of Indians in certain colonies after a probationary period of employment in those colonies to train and fit them for life and work there and at the same time to acquire\(^2\) a supply of the labour essential to the well-being of the colonists' themselves.

So the re-settlement is to be conditional on previous employment under contract and it will be seen in the course of our examination that this contract is to be just as binding as the contracts used to be under indenture. The report has the following humorous passage in it:

He will be in no way restricted to service under any particular employer except that for his own protection a selected employer will be chosen for him for the first six months.

This has a flavour of the old indentured system. One of the evils complained of about that system was that the labourer was assigned to an employer. He was not free to choose one himself. Under the new system, the employer is to be selected for the protection of the

\(^1\) The Indian Review report has “colonization”.

\(^2\) The Indian Review report has “afford”.

\(^3\) Indian Review report has “Colonies”.
labourer. It is hardly necessary for me to point out that the would-be labourer will never be able to feel the protection devised for him.

The labourer is further to be encouraged to work for his first three years in agricultural industries by the offer, should he do so, of numerous and important benefits subsequently as a colonist.

This is another inducement to indenture and I know enough of such schemes to be able to assure both the Government and the public that these so-called inducements in the hands of clever manipulators become nothing short of methods of compulsion in respect of innocent and ignorant Indian labourers. It is due to the framers of the scheme that I should draw attention to the fact that they have avoided all criminal penalties for breach of contract. In India itself if the scheme is adopted, we are promised a revival of the much-dreaded depots and emigration agents, all no doubt on a more respectable basis, but still of the same type and capable of untold mischief.

The rest of the report is not likely to interest the public, but those who wish to study it will, I doubt not, come to the conclusion to which I have been driven, that the framers have done their best to strip the old system of many of the abuses which had crept into it, but they have not succeeded in placing before the Indian public an acceptable scheme. I hold that it was an impossible task. The system of indenture was one of temporary slavery; it was incapable of being amended, it should only be ended and it is to be hoped that India will never consent to its revival in any shape or form.

The Indian Review, September 1917

2. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

BOMBAY,

Bhadarva Sud 15 [September 1, 1917]

CHI. MAGANLAL,

I had made all preparations to leave for that side today, but I am in no position to do so. Mrs. Polak has been running a temperature for the fourth day in succession. I should not leave her in that

---

1 From the reference to the building plan to be prepared by Amritlal Thakkar, the letter appears to have been written in 1917. Again, Gandhiji was in Bombay on this day.
condition. That is her wish and I think so too. Mrs. Petit cares for her wonderfully well but Mrs. Polak thinks that, if she is to be laid up for a long time, it should not be at her place. It will not be surprising, therefore, if I have to stay on for two or three days more, or even longer. I shall send you a wire.

Mr. Polak left yesterday.

Matters are proceeding satisfactorily about satyagraha. There is a meeting today at which I have some hope that an agreed resolution will be passed.¹

Amritalbhai² has fallen ill. That is the reason why he is late. He is somewhat better now and will be ready with the plan for our building in eight or ten days perhaps.

I hope everyone is all right there. Thakorelal is to be paid Rs. 15 every month. I have spoken to Fulchand. Resume forwarding the post [to me here]. You have to send for Mavji’s brother yarn worth Rs. 30 for socks at the place that he will indicate. Inquire of him and make the necessary arrangement.

Mangaldas Sheth has promised to supply all our requirements of yarn at two annas less than the market rate.

Blessings from
BAPU

As you did not inform Imam Saheb he felt a little hurt. I had no idea that the cloth was for him. I was wondering for whom it could be.

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C. W. 5722. Courtesy: Radhabehn Choudhri

3. SPEECH AT BOMBAY PROVINCIAL CONGRESS COMMITTEE MEETING

September 2, 1917

A heated discussion took place. . . . M. K. Gandhi, on being asked, stated that the campaign of passive resistance could not be carried on by an institution like the Congress. Passive resistance could be described merely as a matter of conscience or force of soul, when it was useless to go to lawyers.

¹ The meeting was adjourned due to differences over the resolution and only an agreed amendment passed; Vide the following item.
² Amrital Thakkar
After Gandhi had delivered his opinion, it was suggested that B. G. Tilak should, after consultation with Gandhi, suggest to the meeting some acceptable amendment. On this Gandhi himself suggested an amendment but Tilak insisted on making his own alterations in it before placing it before the meeting. . . . The President, after some discussion with Tilak and his party, declared that a certain amendment had been drawn up in agreement with Tilak and his party. The amendment was as follows:

‘Though the Bombay Provincial Congress Committee is of opinion that there is a strong feeling among the people to support the campaign of passive resistance on account of the coercive measures recently taken by the Government, it advises that, taking into consideration the fact that Mr. Montagu\(^1\) is coming on a visit to this country and that the reasons of his coming are well known, the work of the consideration of and giving opinion on the principles underlying passive resistance and the measures necessary to put them into effect, which has been entrusted to this committee by the All-India Congress Committee and the Council of the All-India Muslim League, be for the present held in abeyance, and the meeting expresses the hope that the Government will take the necessary steps to allay the bitter feeling aroused among the people by action of internments and coercive measures taken by the authorities. This course will enable the Secretary of State to fulfil the work entrusted to him under normal conditions.’

. . . . it was unanimously passed amidst cheers. . . .

Bombay Secret Abstracts, 1917, pp. 620-1

4. LETTER TO SHANKARLAL ON ‘IDEAS ABOUT SATYAGRAHA’

[September 2, 1917]\(^2\)

BHAISHRI SHANKARLAL,

You want to know my ideas about satyagraha. Here they are in brief:

The English phrase “passive resistance” does not suggest the power I wish to write about; “satyagraha” is the right word. Satyagraha is soul-force, as opposed to armed strength. Since it is essentially an ethical weapon, only men inclined to the ethical way of life can use it wisely. Prahlad, Mirabai, and others were satyagrahis. At

---

\(^1\) E. S. Montagu (1879-1924), Secretary of State for India, 1917-22 and cosponsor of the Montagu-Chelmsford Reforms

\(^2\) Published in Gujarati, 2-9-1917
the time of the Morocco fighting, the Arabs were under fire from French guns. The Arabs were fighting, as they believed, solely for their religion. Reckless of their lives, they advanced running towards the French guns with cries of “Ya Allah”. Here, there was no scope at all for fighting back to kill. The French gunners refused to fire on these Arabs and, throwing up their caps, ran to embrace these brave Arabs with shouts of joy. This is an example of satyagraha and the success it can achieve. The Arabs were not satyagrahis by deliberate choice. They got ready to face death under pressure of a strong impulse, and had no love in their hearts. A satyagrahi bears no ill-will, does not lay down his life in anger, but refuses rather to submit to his “enemy” or oppressor because he has the strength himself to suffer. He should, therefore, have a courageous spirit and a forgiving and compassionate nature. Imam Hassan and Hussain were merely two boys. They felt that an injustice had been done to them. When called upon to surrender, they refused. They knew at the time that this would mean death for them. If, however, they were to submit to injustices they would disgrace their manhood and betray their religion. In these circumstances, they yielded to the embrace of death. The heads of these fine young men rolled on the battlefield. In my view, Islam did not attain its greatness by the power of the sword but entirely through the self-immolation of its fakirs. It is soldierlike to allow oneself to be cut down by a sword, not to use the sword on another. When he comes to realize that he is guilty of murder, the killer, if he has been in the wrong, will feel sorry forever afterwards. The victim, however, will have gained nothing but victory even if he had acted wrongly in courting death. Satyagraha is the way of non-violence. It is, therefore, justified, indeed it is the right course, at all times and all places. The power of arms is violence and condemned as such in all religions. Even those who advocate the use of arms put various limits on it. There are no limits on satyagraha, or rather, none except those placed by the satyagrahi’s capacity for tapascharya, for voluntary suffering.

Obviously, it is irrelevant to raise issues about the legality of such satyagraha. It is for the satyagrahi to decide. Observers may

---

1 Glory to God
2 Sons of Ali by his wife Fatima, daughter of the prophet. They refused to acknowledge the authority of Yazid (Caliph, 680-3). Hussain revolted against him, but was defeated and killed at Karbala.
3 ibid
judge satyagraha after the event. The world’s displeasure will not deter a satyagrahi. Whether or not satyagraha should be started is not decided by any mathematical rule. A man who believes that satyagraha may be started only after weighing the chances of defeat and victory and assuring oneself of the certainty of victory, may be a shrewd enough politician or an intelligent man, but he is no satyagrahi. A satyagrahi acts spontaneously.

Satyagraha and arms have both been in use from time immemorial. We find them praised in the extant scriptures. They are the expressions, one of the \textit{daivi sampad}\footnote{God like equipment and demoniac equipment (Vide Bhagavad Gita, XVI. 3, 4)} and the other of the \textit{asuri sampad}. We believe that in former times in India the \textit{daivi sampad} was much the stronger of the two. Even today that is the ideal we cherish. Europe provides the most striking example of the predominance of the \textit{asuri sampad}.

Both these forms of strength are preferable to weakness, to what we know by the rather plain but much apter word ‘cowardice’. Without either, swaraj or genuine popular awakening is impossible.
Swaraj achieved otherwise than through resort to one or the other will not be true swaraj. Such swaraj can have no effect on the people.
Popular awakening cannot be brought about without strength, without manliness. Let the leaders say what they like and the Government strive its utmost, unless they and we, all of us, strengthen the forces of satyagraha, the methods of violence are bound automatically to gain ascendancy. They are like weeds which grow wild in any soil. The crop of satyagraha requires willingness to exert oneself or a venturesome spirit by way of manure. Just as, moreover, the seedlings are likely to be lost among the weeds if the latter are not plucked out, so also will weeds of violence keep growing unless we keep the land free of them by \textit{tapascharya} and, with compassion, pluck out those which have already grown. We can, with the help of satyagraha, win over those young men who have been driven to desperation and anger by what they think to be the tyranny of the Government and utilize their courage and their mettlesome spirit, their capacity for suffering, to strengthen the \textit{daivi sampad} of satyagraha. It is therefore very much to be desired that satyagraha is propagated as quickly as can be.
This is in the interest both of the rulers and the ruled. The satyagrahi desires to harass neither the Government nor anyone else. He takes no step without the fullest deliberation. He is never arrogant.
Consequently, he will keep away from ‘boycott’ but be always firm in the vow of swadeshi as a matter of duty. He fears God alone, so that no other power can intimidate him. He will never, out of fear of punishment, leave a duty undone.

I need hardly say now that it is our duty to resort to satyagraha to secure the release of the learned Annie Bai and her co-workers. Whether we approve of every or any action of hers is another question. I, for one, certainly do not approve of some of them; all the same, her incarceration by the Government is a great mistake and an act of injustice. I know, of course, that the Government does not think it a mistake. Maybe the people are wrong in desiring her release. The Government has acted according to its lights. What can the people do to express their outraged feelings? Petitions, etc., are good enough when one’s suffering is bearable. When it is unbearable, there is no remedy but satyagraha. Only when people find it unbearable will they, and only those who find it unbearable will, devote their all, body, mind and possessions, to securing the release of Annie Bai. This will be a powerful expression of popular feeling. It is my unshakable faith that before so great a self-sacrifice even the power of an emperor will give way. People may certainly restrain their feelings in view of the forthcoming visit of Mr. Montagu. That will be an expression of faith in his sense of justice. If she is not released, however, before his arrival, it will be our duty to resort to satyagraha. We do not want to provoke the Government or put difficulties in its way. By resorting to satyagraha, we reveal the intensity of our injured feelings and thereby serve the Government.

From a photostat of the Gujarati draft in Gandhiji’s hand: S. N. 6373

5. SATYAGRAHA—NOT PASSIVE RESISTANCE

[About September 2, 1917]

The force denoted by the term ‘passive resistance’ and translated into Hindi as nishkriya pratirodha is not very accurately described either by the original English phrase or by its Hindi rendering. Its correct description is ‘satyagraha’. Satyagraha was born in South Africa in 1908. There was no word in any Indian language

---

1 The original Gujarati is not available.
2 This article appears to belong to the same date as the preceding item.
denoting the power which our countrymen in South Africa invoked for the redress of their grievances. There was an English equivalent, namely, ‘passive resistance’, and we carried on with it. However, the need for a word to describe this unique power came to be increasingly felt, and it was decided to award a prize to anyone who could think of an appropriate term. A Gujarati-speaking gentleman submitted the word ‘satyagraha’, and it was adjudged the best.

‘Passive resistance’ conveyed the idea of the Suffragette Movement in England. Burning of houses by these women was called ‘passive resistance’ and so also their fasting in prison. All such acts might very well be ‘passive resistance’ but they were not ‘satyagraha’. It is said of ‘passive resistance’ that it is the weapon of the weak, but the power which is the subject of this article can be used only by the strong. This power is not ‘passive’ resistance; indeed it calls for intense activity. The movement in South Africa was not passive but active. The Indians of South Africa believed that Truth was their object, that Truth ever triumphs, and with this definiteness of purpose they persistently held on to Truth. They put up with all the suffering that this persistence implied. With the conviction that Truth is not to be renounced even unto death, they shed the fear of death. In the cause of Truth, the prison was a palace to them and its doors the gateway to freedom.

WHAT IS SATYAGRAHA?

Satyagraha is not physical force. A satyagrahi does not inflict pain on the adversary; he does not seek his destruction. A satyagrahi never resorts to firearms. In the use of satyagraha, there is no ill-will whatever.

Satyagraha is pure soul-force. Truth is the very substance of the soul. That is why this force is called satyagraha. The soul is informed with knowledge. In it burns the flame of love. If someone gives us pain through ignorance, we shall win him through love. “Nonviolence is the supreme dharma” is the proof of this power of love. Non-violence is a dormant state. In the waking state, it is love. Ruled by love, the world goes on. In English there is a saying, “Might is Right”. Then there is the doctrine of the survival of the fittest. Both these ideas are contradictory to the above principle. Neither is wholly

---

1 The source has ‘Hindi-speaking’.
2 Ahimsa Paramo Dharma true. If ill-will were the chief motive-force, the world would have been destroyed long ago; and neither would I have had the opportunity to write this article nor would the hopes of the readers be fulfilled. We are alive solely because of love. We are all ourselves the proof of this.
Deluded by modern western civilization, we have forgotten our ancient civilization and worship the might of arms.

WORSHIP OF ARMED MIGHT

We forget the principle of non-violence, which is the essence of all religions. The doctrine of arms stands for irreligion. It is due to the sway of that doctrine that a sanguinary war is raging in Europe.

In India also we find worship of arms. We see it even in that great work of Tulsidas. But it is seen in all the books that soul-force is the supreme power.

RAMA AND RAVANA

Rama stands for the soul and Ravana for the non-soul. The immense physical might of Ravana is as nothing compared to the soul-force of Rama. Ravana’s ten heads are as straw to Rama. Rama is a yogi, he has conquered self and pride. He is “placid equally in affluence and adversity”, he has “neither attachment, nor greed nor the intoxication of status”. This represents the ultimate in satyagraha.
The banner of satyagraha can again fly in the Indian sky and it is our duty to raise it. If we take recourse to satyagraha, we can conquer our conquerors the English, make them bow before our tremendous soul-force, and the issue will be of benefit to the whole world.

It is certain that India cannot rival Britain or Europe in force of arms. The British worship the war-god and they can all of them become, as they are becoming, bearers of arms. The hundreds of millions in India can never carry arms. They have made the religion of non-violence their own. It is impossible for the varnashram system to disappear from India.

WAY OF VARNASHRAM

The way of varnashram is a necessary law of nature. India, by making a judicious use of it, derives much benefit. Even the Muslims and the English in India observe this system to some extent. Outside of India, too, people follow it without being aware of it. So long as this institution of varnashram exists in India, everyone cannot bear arms here. The highest place in India is assigned to the brahmana dharma—which is soul-force. Even the armed warrior does obeisance to the brahmin. So long as this custom prevails, it is vain for us to aspire for equality with the West in force of arms.
PANACEA FOR ALL ILLS

It is our *kamadhenu*¹. It brings good both to the satyagrahi and his adversary. It is ever victorious. For instance, Harishchandra was a satyagrahi, Prahlad was a satyagrahi, Mirabai was a satyagrahi. Daniel, Socrates and those Arabs who hurled themselves on the fire of the French artillery were all satyagrahis. We see from these examples that a satyagrahi does not fear for his body, he does not give up what he thinks is Truth; the word ‘defeat’ is not to be found in his dictionary, he does not wish for the destruction of his antagonist, he does not vent anger on him; but has only compassion for him.

A satyagrahi does not wait for others, but throws himself into the fray, relying entirely on his own resources. He trusts that when the time comes, others will do likewise. His practice is his precept. Like air, satyagraha is all-pervading. It is infectious, which means that all people—big and small, men and women—can become satyagrahis. No one is kept out from the army of satyagrahis. A satyagrahi cannot perpetrate tyranny on anyone; he is not subdued through application of physical force; he does not strike at anyone. Just as anyone can resort to satyagraha, it can be resorted to in almost any situation.

HISTORICAL EVIDENCE

People demand historical evidence in support of satyagraha. History is for the most part a record of armed activities. Natural activities find very little mention in it. Only uncommon activities strike us with wonder. Satyagraha has been used always and in all situations. The father and the son, the man and the wife are perpetually resorting to satyagraha, one towards the other. When a father gets angry and punishes the son, the son does not hit back with a weapon, he conquers his father’s anger by submitting to him. The son refuses to be subdued by the unjust rule of his father but he puts up with the punishment that he may incur through disobeying the unjust father. We can similarly free ourselves of the unjust rule of the Government by defying the unjust rule and accepting the punishments that go with it. We do not bear malice towards the Government. When we set its fears at rest, when we do not desire to make armed assaults on the administrators, nor to unseat them from power, but only to get rid of their injustice, they will at once be subdued to our will.

¹ Mythical cow which yielded whatever one wished
The question is asked why we should call any rule unjust. In saying so, we ourselves assume the function of a judge. It is true. But in this world, we always have to act as judges for ourselves. That is why the satyagrahi does not strike his adversary with arms. If he has Truth on his side, he will win, and if his thought is faulty, he will suffer the consequences of his fault.

What is the good, they ask, of only one person opposing injustice; for he will be punished and destroyed, he will languish in prison or meet an untimely end through hanging. The objection is not valid. History shows that all reforms have begun with one person. Fruit is hard to come by without tapasya. The suffering that has to be undergone in satyagraha is tapasya in its purest form. Only when the tapasya is capable of bearing fruit, do we have the fruit. This establishes the fact that when there is insufficient tapasya, the fruit is delayed. The tapasya of Jesus Christ, boundless though it was, was not sufficient for Europe’s need. Europe has disapproved Christ. Through ignorance, it has disregarded Christ’s pure way of life. Many Christs will have to offer themselves as sacrifice at the terrible altar of Europe, and only then will realization dawn on that continent. But Jesus will always be the first among these. He has been the sower of the seed and his will therefore be the credit for raising the harvest.

Educating Ignorant Peasants in Satyagraha

It is said that it is a very difficult, if not an altogether impossible, task to educate ignorant peasants in satyagraha and that it is full of perils, for it is a very arduous business to transform unlettered ignorant people from one condition into another. Both the arguments are just silly. The people of India are perfectly fit to receive the training of satyagraha. India has knowledge of dharma, and where there is knowledge of dharma, satyagraha is a very simple matter. The people of India have drunk of the nectar of devotion. This great people overflows with faith. It is no difficult matter to lead such a people on to the right path of satyagraha. Some have a fear that once people get involved in satyagraha, they may at a later stage take to arms. This fear is illusory. From the path of satyagraha [clinging to Truth], a transition to the path of a-satyagraha [clinging to untruth] is impossible. It is possible of course that some people who believe in armed activity may mislead the satyagrahis by infiltrating into their ranks and later making them take to arms. This is possible in all enterprises. But as compared to other activities, it is less likely to happen in satyagraha, for their motives soon get exposed and when the people are not ready to take up arms, it becomes almost impossible to lead them on to that terrible path. The might of arms is directly opposed to the might of satyagraha. Just as darkness does not abide in light, soulless armed activity cannot enter the sunlike radiance of soul-force. Many Pathans took part in satyagraha in South Africa abiding by all the rules of satyagraha.

Then it is said that much suffering is involved in being a satyagrahi and that the entire people will not be willing to put up with this suffering. The objection is not valid. People in general always follow in the footsteps of the noble. There is no doubt that it is difficult to produce a satyagrahi leader. Our experience is that a satyagrahi needs many more virtues like self-control, fearlessness, etc., than are requisite for one who believes in armed action. The greatness of the man bearing arms does not lie in the superiority of the arms, nor does it lie in his physical prowess. It lies in his determination and fearlessness in face of death. General Gordon was a mighty warrior of the British Empire. In the statue that has been erected in his memory he has only a small baton in his hand. It goes to show that the strength of a warrior is not measured by reference to his weapons but by his firmness of mind. A satyagrahi needs millions of times more of such firmness than does a bearer of arms. The birth of such a man can bring about the salvation of India in no time. Not only India but the whole world awaits the advent of such a man. We may in the meanwhile prepare the ground as much as we can through satyagraha.

USE OF SATYAGRAHA

How can we make use of satyagraha in the present conditions? Why should we take to satyagraha in the fight for freedom? We are all guilty of killing manliness. So long as our learned Annie Besant is in detention, it is an insult to our manhood. How can we secure her release through satyagraha? It may be that the Government has acted in good faith, that it has sufficient grounds for keeping her under detention. But, at any rate, the people are unhappy at her being deprived of her freedom. Annie Besant cannot be freed through armed action. No Indian will approve of such an action. We cannot secure her freedom by submitting petitions and the like. Much time has passed. We can all humbly inform the Government that if Mrs. Annie Besant is not released within the time limit prescribed by us, we will all be compelled to follow her path. It is possible that all of us do not like all her actions; but we find nothing in her actions which threatens the “established Government”\(^1\) or the vested interests. Therefore we too by participating in her activities will ask for her lot, that is, we shall all court imprisonment. The members of our Legislative Assembly also can petition the Government and when the petition is not accepted, they can resign their membership. For swaraj also, sat-yagraha is the unfailing weapon. Satyagraha means that what we want is truth, that we deserve it and that we will work for it even untodeath.

Nothing more need be said. Truth alone triumphs. There is no dharma higher than Truth. Truth always wins. We pray to God that in this sacred land we may bring about the reign of dharma by following satyagraha and that this our country may become an example for all to follow.

[From Hindi]

_Mahatma Gandhi, Ramchandra Varma_

6. LETTER TO ESTHER FAERING

_AHMEDABAD,

September 5, 1917_

MY DEAR ESTHER,

I have your two letters really to answer, the last one is most touching. The cause of the terrible pain I have suffered was within myself. I twice ate when I ought not to have. The result was dysentery in a most acute form. I am now much better and am making daily progress. In four or five days, I shall be out of bed.

_With love,

BAPU_

_My Dear Child, p. 21_

---

\(^1\) The English Phrase is used.
7. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI ANOOPCHAND MEHTA

AHMEDABAD,

Bhadarva Vad 4 [September 5, 1917]

BHAISHRI BHAGWANJI,

I have your letter. Many thanks. The decision about Viramgam has been well taken.¹

The question of small princely states is always present in my mind. For the present it does not seem to advance any further.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

BHAGWANJI ANOOPCHAND VAKIL

RAJKOT

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N 5805. Also C.W. 3028. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

8. LETTER TO ESTHER FAERING

AHMEDABAD,

September 6, 1917

MY DEAR ESTHER,

I was delighted to receive your note. I hope to be in Madras for a day only on the 14th instant. I shall have to leave on the 15th instant in the evening.

Ever since my arrival here, I have been on the move trying to spread the gospel of satyagraha in the place of methods of violence. It is an uphill task. You will see from the enclosed what I mean by satyagraha.

It was not my intention that your remarks upon dress

¹ The year has been inferred from the reference to the decision regarding Viramgam.

² Gandhiji had written to the Government and also discussed the subject of the abolition of the customs levy at Viramgam with the Governor of Bombay and the Viceroy. The levy was abolished on November 7, 1917. Vide also. “Speech at Gujarat Political conference—I”, 3-11-1917 and “Resolutions at Gujarat Political Conference—II”, 5-11-1917.
should be published. I forgot to warn Dr. M. about it. He liked your views so much that he could not restrain himself. I do hope you don’t mind my sending to Dr. M. such of your letters as may appear to be helpful.

‘To be free from desire’ is a technical expression and means desire to be or possess something short of the highest. Thus, love of God is not ‘a desire’. It is the natural longing. But to possess a fortune so that I may do good is a desire and therefore to be curbed. Our good acts must be as natural to us as the twinkling of our eyes. Without our desiring, they act automatically. The doing of good should be just as natural to us.

Yours ever,

BAPU

My Dear Child, pp. 21-2

9. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI VAKIL

AHMEDABAD,
Bhadarva Vad 9 [September 9, 1917]¹

BHAIShRI BHAGWANJI².

Will you do one thing to help me? Will you send a brief note on the evils in every State? I must have the freedom to publish it. Even if you don’t give me such freedom, send the note at any rate. For instance, I have heard that in Jamnagar there is a tax on the Brahmin’s kit and a tax to be paid on the calving of a buffalo. In Wadhwan, hand-spun yarn is taxed in three ways. Mill yarn and mill cloth are exempt. These are the more obvious examples I have mentioned. I want these and the like, even graver ones. Note the hardships resulting from laws and the manner of enforcing them. Send the thing immediately. I shall get it wherever I happen to be.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS GANDHI

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C. W. 3024. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

¹ This appears to have been written before “Letter to Bhagwanji Vakil”, 3-10-1917.

² Bhagwanji Anoopchand of Rajkot
10. LETTER TO KALYANJI MEHTA

AHMEDABAD,
[September 11, 1917]¹

BHAISHRI,

I am leaving for Madras today. I shall be in Poona on the 17th and the 18th. I shall come away from Poona on the 19th morning. You can then see me in Bombay. On the same date I shall leave for Ranchi by Nagpur Mail.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

BHAISHRI KALYANJI MEHTA
Patel Bandhu Office
Surat

From a photostat of the original postcard in Gujarati in Gandhiji’s hand: G. N. 2665

11. PETITION TO E. S. MONTAGU

[Before September 13, 1917]²

THE RIGHT HON’BLE MR. E. S. MONTAGU
SECRETARY OF STATE FOR INDIA

THE PETITION OF THE BRITISH SUBJECTS OF GUJARAT
HUMBLY SHEWETH,

(1) The petitioners have considered and understood the Swaraj Scheme prepared by the Council of the All-India Moslem League and the All-India Congress Committee and unanimously adopted last year by the Indian National Congress and the All-India Moslem League.

(2) The petitioners approve of the Scheme.

(3) In the humble opinion of the petitioners, the reforms

¹ The date is fixed on the basis of Gandhiji’s tour itinerary given in the letter.
² This was drafted by Gandhiji in Gujarati as stated in “Circular Letter by Gujarat Sabha”, 13-9-1917; Vide Appendix “Circular Letter By Gujarat Sabha Office”, 13-9-1917 Identical petitions were presented in other Indian languages; for example, the Hindi petition reproduced at page 521 of Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran.
proposed in the aforementioned Scheme are absolutely necessary in the interests of India and the Empire.

(4) It is further the petitioner’s belief that without such reforms India will not witness the era of true contentment.

For these reasons the petitioners respectfully pray that you will be pleased to give full consideration and accept the reform proposals and thus render successful your visit taken at great inconvenience and fulfil the national hope.

And for this act of kindness the petitioners shall for ever remain grateful.

Date         Petitioner’s signature       Occupation Address

12. INSTRUCTIONS TO VOLUNTEERS

[Before September 13, 1917]

Mr. Gandhi also devised the following rules for the Volunteers to obtain signatures:

1. In taking signatures to the petition, first it must be ascertained whether the person signing correctly understands the scheme described in the petition or not.

2. In order to make people understand the scheme, it should be read out to the inhabitants of the place, called together by a notification prepared by the Sabha. If in such reading the people raise any new question, which cannot be answered out of the Foreword, then the Volunteer should not decide the point himself but should refer it to the Chief of his own Circle; and the questioner should not be allowed to sign so long as he has not been satisfied.

3. It should be clearly kept in mind that no kind of pressure is to be used on any inhabitant of any place.

4. Care should be taken that Government servants, as also people

---

1 These were framed by Gandhiji: vide “Circular Letter by Gujarat Sabha Office”, 13-9-1917.
who are unable to understand, do not sign by oversight.

5. Signatures should not be taken from young people, who appear to be under the age of eighteen.

6. Signatures should not be taken from school-going students, whatever their age may be.

7. There is no objection in taking signatures from any man or woman if the Volunteer is convinced that he or she can understand the matter.

8. A man or woman, who is unable to read or write, should be made to put his or her cross and an authentication of it by a well-known person of the place should be placed opposite the cross.

9. It should be kept in mind that each signature is to be taken on two forms.

10. The papers should be preserved without being soiled or crumpled.

11. The papers which are not signed should at once be sent to the Head Office; and a report should at once be sent to the Head Office from the place where a meeting has been held or some attempt made.

12. The Volunteer has no authority to make any speech on any subject outside the scope of petition or on any subject relating to but not included in the Foreword.

13. First the inhabitants of a place should be called together and the Foreword read out to them and their signatures taken. After that as many houses as can as be practicable should be visited and the signatures of the rest of the men and women taken. But these should be taken only after the Foreword has been explained.

14. If while visiting places or calling together people, the police or any other officials object, the Volunteer should politely reply that so long as the Head Office does not direct the cessation of work, he would have to continue his work. If in doing this, he is arrested by the police, he should allow himself to be arrested, but he should not resist the police. And if such a thing happens, he should at once send a detailed report to the Head Office. If people themselves hesitate to gather together through the fear of the police or for any other cause, the Volunteer should give up that place and should at once give information of such an occurrence to the Head Office.

Speeches and Writings of Mahatma Gandhi, Natesan (3rd Ed.) 13. A SUGGESTION

[Before September 16, 1917]

Gandhiji writes as follows:

On the day the Congress holds its session at Calcutta, meetings should be held in every town and village, the Gujarati translation of the Congress President’s¹ speech should be read out and the Congress-League Scheme of Reforms explained to the people.

[From Gujarati]
Gujarati, 16-9-1917

14. LETTER TO SATYANAND BOSE²

[Before September 16, 1917]

DEAR SATYANAND BABU,

Mr. Polak had sent me your letter of inquiry about Passive Resistance. I have time only to give you the briefest reply to your questions. P. R., as conceived by me, is soul force, and essentially a religious principle. Its scope, therefore, takes in every variety of wrong. It is a force as old as the world itself. Consider the conduct of Prahlad, Daniel, Jesus, Mirabai and others whose guiding principle in life has been religion. Indians in South Africa made use, more or less, of this force, and they were successful only to the extent that they used it to the exclusion of every other force.

From whom did the idea first originate, is your second question. In view of the meaning I have given to the expression, no reply seems to be necessary. But it may be stated that so far as its use on the political platform is concerned, the idea may be said to have originated with me. I knew nothing of it, but Tolstoy drew my attention to it.

At the time of the Controversy on the Education Bill passed by the House of Commons and the so-called Passive Resistance offered by Dr. Clifford³ and others, Mr. Winston

¹ Mrs. Besant
² This was in reply to the addressee’s letter dated August 15, 1917 to Polak.
³ John Clifford (1836-1923), British Non-conformist minister and liberal politician, who led the “Passive Resistance” movement against the Education Bill of 1902 by non-payment of taxes.
Churchill\textsuperscript{1} said that P. R. was perfectly constitutional under the British Constitution. A similar pronouncement was made by Gen. Smuts, with regard to our Passive Resistance when demand was made by Senator Whiteside for my deportation side by side with that of the nine Englishmen who were deported in connection with the European Railway strike that had just then ended.

I am unable, offhand, to give any reference from a constitutional lawyer.\textsuperscript{2}

Your fifth question requires historical precedents. This is answered in para. 2.

Your sixth question, whether it comes within constitutional methods needs no answer. I am sorry for the delay that has taken place in replying. I am in Ahmedabad up to the 16th September, then prepare to leave for Bihar.

From a photostat of the office copy in Mahadev Desai’s hand: S. N. 6385

\textbf{15. THE MORAL BASIS OF CO-OPERATION}\textsuperscript{3}

The only claim I have on your indulgence is that some months ago I attended with Mr. Ewbank a meeting of mill-hands to whom he wanted to explain the principles of co-operation. The \textit{chawl}\textsuperscript{4} in which they were living was as filthy as it well could be. Recent rains had made matters worse. And I must frankly confess that had not it been for Mr. Ewbank’s great zeal for the cause he has made his own, I should have shirked the task. But there we were, seated on a fairly worn out \textit{charpai},\textsuperscript{5} surrounded by men, women and children. Mr. Ewbank opened fire on a man who had put himself forward and who wore not a particularly innocent countenance. After he had engaged him and the other people about him in Gujarati conversation,

\begin{itemize}
\item Sir Winston (Leonard Spencer) Churchill (1874- ), British statesman and writer; Under-Secretary for Colonies, 1905-8 (Gandhiji first met him during his deputation to England in 1906); Minister of Munitions, 1917; Secretary for War, 1918-21; Prime Minister, 1940-5, 1951-5; awarded Nobel Prize for Literature, 1953
\item Questions 4 and 5 were:
  \begin{enumerate}
  \item “4. Did any constitutional lawyer deal with the subject? (Quote references)
  \item “5. Quote instances of passive resistance from history. . .”
  \end{enumerate}
\item Contributed to the Bombay Provincial Co-operative Conference held on September 17, 1917
\item Tenement Building
\item Cot \end{itemize}
he wanted me to speak to the people. Owing to the suspicious looks of the man who was first spoken to, I naturally pressed home the moralities of co-operation. I fancy that Mr. Ewbank rather liked the manner in which I handled the subject. Hence, I believe, his kind invitation to me to tax your patience for a few moments upon a consideration of co-operation from a moral standpoint.

My knowledge of the technicality of co-operation is next to nothing. My brother Devdhar has made the subject his own. Whatever he does naturally attracts me and predisposes me to think that there must be something good in it and the handling of it must be fairly difficult. Mr. Ewbank very kindly placed at my disposal some literature too on the subject. And I have had a unique opportunity of watching the effect of some co-operative effort in Champaran. I have gone through Mr. Ewbank’s ten main points which are like the commandments, and I have gone through the twelve points of Mr. Collins of Behar, which remind me of the law of the twelve tables. There are so-called agricultural banks in Champaran. They were to me disappointing efforts, if they were meant to be demonstrations of the success of co-operation. On the other hand, there is quiet work in the same direction being done by Mr. Hodge, a missionary whose efforts are leaving their impression on those who come in contact with him. Mr. Hodge is a co-operative enthusiast and probably considers that the results which he sees flowing from his efforts are due to the working of co-operation. I who was able to watch the two efforts had no hesitation in inferring that the personal equation counted for success in the one and failure in the other instance.

I am an enthusiast myself, but twenty-five years of experimenting and experience have made me a cautious and discriminating enthusiast. Workers in a cause necessarily, though quite unconsciously, exaggerate its merits and often succeed in turning its very defects into advantages. In spite of my caution I consider the little institution I am conducting in Ahmedabad as the finest thing in the world. It alone gives me sufficient inspiration. Critics tell me that it represents a soulless soul-force and that its severe discipline has made it merely mechanical. I suppose both—the critics and I—are wrong. It is, at best, a humble attempt to place at the disposal of the nation a home where men and women may have scope for free and unfettered development of character, in keeping with the national genius, and if its controllers do not take care, the discipline that is the foundation of character, may frustrate the very end in view. I would venture, therefore, to warn enthusiasts in co-operation against entertaining false hopes.

---

1 Satyagraha Ashram

With Sir Daniel Hamilton, it has become a religion. On the 13th January last, he addressed the students of the Scottish Churches College, and in order to point a moral he instanced Scotland’s poverty of two hundred years ago and showed how that great country was raised from a condition of poverty to plenty. He said:

There were two powers which raised her—the Scottish Church and the Scottish banks. The Church manufactured the men and the banks manufactured the money to give the men a start in life.... The Church disciplined the nation in the fear of God which is the beginning of wisdom and in the parish schools of the Church, the children learned that the chief end of man’s life was to glorify God and to enjoy Him for ever. Men were trained to believe in God and in themselves, and on the trustworthy character so created, the Scottish banking system was built.

Sir Daniel then shows that it was possible to build up the marvellous Scottish banking system only on the character so built. So far there can only be perfect agreement with Sir Daniel, for ‘Without character there is no co-operation’ is a sound maxim. But he would have us go much further. He thus waxes eloquent on co-operation:

Whatever may be your day-dreams of India’s future, never forget this that it is to weld India into one, and so enable her to take her rightful place in the world, that the British Government is here; and the welding hammer in the hand of the Government is the co-operative movement.

In his opinion, it is the panacea of all the evils that afflict India at the present moment. In its extended sense it can justify the claim on one condition which need not be mentioned here; in the limited sense in which Sir Daniel has used it, I venture to think, it is an enthusiast’s exaggeration. Mark his peroration:

Credit which is only Trust and Faith, is becoming more and more the money power of the world, and in the parchment bullet into which is impressed the faith which removes mountains, India will find victory and peace.

Here there is evident confusion of thought. The credit which is becoming the money power of the world has little moral basis and is not a synonym for Trust or Faith, which are purely moral qualities. After twenty years’ experience of hundreds of men, who had dealings with banks in South Africa, the opinion I had so often heard expressed has become firmly rooted in me, that the greater the rascal, the greater the credit he enjoys with his banks. The banks do not pry into his moral character; they are satisfied that he meets his over-drafts and promissory notes punctually. The credit system has encircled this beautiful globe of ours like a serpent’s coil, and if we do not mind, it bids fair to crush us out of breath. I have witnessed the ruin of many a home through the system, and it has made no difference whether the credit was labelled co-operative or otherwise. The deadly coil has made possible the devastating spectacle in Europe, which we are helplessly looking on. It was perhaps never so true as it is to-day that as in law so in war the longest purse finally wins. I have ventured to give prominence to the current belief about credit system in order to emphasise the point that the co-operative movement will be a blessing to India only to the extent that it is a moral movement strictly directed by men fired with religious fervour. It follows, therefore, that co-operation should be confined to men wishing to be morally right, but failing to do so, because of grinding poverty or of the grip of the mahajan¹. Facility for obtaining loans at fair rates will not make immoral or unmoral men moral. But the wisdom of the State or philanthropists demands that they should help, on the onward path, men struggling to be good.

Too often do we believe that material prosperity means moral growth. It is necessary that a movement which is fraught with so much good to India should not degenerate into one for merely advancing cheap loans. I was therefore delighted to read the recommendation in the Report of the Committee on Co-operation in India, that they wish clearly to express their opinion that it is to true co-operation alone, that is, to a co-operation which recognises the moral aspect of the question that Government must look for the amelioration of the masses and not to a pseudo co-operative edifice, however imposing, which is built in ignorance of co-operative, principles.

With this standard before us, we will not measure the success of the movement by the number of co-operative societies formed, but by the moral condition of the co-operators. The Registrars will in that event ensure the moral growth of existing societies before multiplying them. And the Government will make their promotion conditional, not upon the number of societies they have registered, but the moral success of the existing institutions. This will mean tracing the course of every pice lent to the members. Those responsible for the proper conduct of co-operative societies will see to it that the money advanced does not find its way into the toddy-sellers’ till or into the pockets of the keepers of gambling dens. I would excuse the rapacity of the mahajan if it has succeeded in keeping the gambling die or toddy from the ryt’s home.

¹ Moneylender

A word perhaps about the mahajan will not be out of place. Co-operation is not a new device. The ryots co-operate to drum out monkeys or birds that destroy their crops. They co-operate to use a common thrashing floor. I have found them co-operate to protect their cattle to the extent of their devoting their best land for the grazing of their cattle. And they have been found co-operating against a particularly rapacious mahajan. Doubt has been-expressed as to the success of co-operation because of the tightness of the mahajan’s hold on the ryots. I do not share the fears. The mightiest mahajan must, if he represents an evil force, bend before co-operation, conceived as an essentially moral movement. But my limited experience of the mahajan of Champaran has made me revise the accepted opinion about his ‘blighting influence’. I have found him to be not always relentless, not always exacting of the last pie. He sometimes serves his clients in many ways or even comes to their rescue in the hour of their distress. My observation is so limited that I dare not draw any conclusions from it, but I respectfully enquire whether it is not possible to make a serious effort to draw out the good in the mahajan and help him or induce him to throw out the evil in him. May he not be induced to join the army of co-operation, or has experience proved that he is past praying for?

I note that the movement takes note of all indigenous industries. I beg publicly to express my gratitude to Government for helping me in my humble effort to improve the lot of the weaver. The experiment I am conducting shows that there is a vast field for work in this direction. No well-wisher of India, no patriot dare look upon the impending destruction of the handloom weaver with equanimity. As Dr. Mann has stated, this industry used to supply the peasant with an additional source of livelihood and an insurance against famine. Every Registrar who will nurse back to life this important and graceful industry will earn the gratitude of India. My humble effort consists of, firstly, in making researches as to the possibilities of simple reforms in the orthodox handlooms, secondly, in weaning the educated youth from the craving for Government or other service and the feeling that education renders him unfit for independent occupation and inducing him to take to weaving as a calling as honourable as that of a barrister or a doctor, and, thirdly, by helping those who have abandoned their occupation to revert to it. I will not weary the audience with any statement on the first two parts of the experiment. The third may be allowed a few sentences as it has a direct bearing upon the subject before us. I was able to enter upon it only six months ago. Five families that had left off the calling have reverted to it and they are doing a prosperous business. The Ashram supplies them at their door with the yarn they need; it volunteers to take delivery of the cloth woven, paying them cash at the market rate. The Ashram merely loses interest on the loan advanced for the yarn. It has as yet suffered no loss and is able to restrict its loss to a minimum by limiting the loan to a particular figure. All future transactions are strictly cash. We are able to command a ready sale for the cloth received. The loss of interest, therefore, on the transaction is negligible. I would like the audience to note its purely moral character from start to finish. The Ashram depends for its existence on such help as friends render it. We, therefore, can have no warrant for charging interest. The weavers could not be saddled with it. Whole families that were breaking to pieces are put together again. The use of the loan is predetermined. And we the middlemen being volunteers obtain the privilege of entering into the lives of these families I hope for their and our betterment. We cannot lift them without being lifted ourselves. This last relationship has not yet been developed, but we hope at an early date to take in hand the education too of these families and not rest satisfied till we have touched them at every point. This is not too ambitious a dream. God willing, it will be a reality some day. I have ventured to dilate upon the small experiment to illustrate what I mean by co-operation to present it to others for imitation. Let us be sure of our ideal. We shall ever fail to realise it, but we should never cease to strive for it. Then there need be no fear of “co-operation of scoundrels” that Ruskin so rightly dreaded.

From the original in Gandhiji’s hand; S. N. 6412: also The Indian Review, October 1917
16. LETTER TO MAGANLAL GANDHI

RANCHI,

[Adhik Aso Sud 7, September 23, 1917]¹

CHI. MAGANLAL,

It is twelve days since I left you. Out of the eleven days, nine I spent on the train and only two nights at a friend’s. Despite this, my health has not suffered. I had regular food today after eleven days. I had discussions with Amritlalbhai² in Bombay about the Ashram buildings. Chhaganlal must have written to you. He made some very weighty suggestions, the most important being that we cannot escape using wood. There will be some difficulty about the foundation. It just will not hold there, and the only way out is to have wood-work filled in with brick. The library, he said, would have to be lengthened, otherwise there would not be enough light. He will himself write in detail about all this. I hope you remember that you have to carry with you the lamp, with its post, from Jivanlalbhai’s bungalow. We shall need them. Amritlalbhai suggested that the wood should be thickly painted all round with coal tar. Provide for good latrines and urinals from the very start. Money spent on them will be well spent. It will also be necessary to provide for quick draining away of sewage. I think it needful that you collect in the Ashram stone, gravel, etc., wherever and in whatever quantity available. Plan the roads fairly broad and get them ready soon. I see that I shall have to stay longer in Ranchi than I had thought. The sittings start on Monday.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original in Gandhiji’s hand: C. W. 5716. Courtesy: Radhabehn Choudhri

¹ Gandhiji left Ahmedabad on September 11 and arrived at Ranchi, via Bombay, Madras and Poona, on September 22, spending nine days on the train. Again, the first meeting of the second session of the Champaran Enquiry Committee, which is referred to at the end of the letter, was held on Monday, September 24 at Ranchi. The original has Bhadarva Sud 7, which appears to be a slip for Adhik Aso Sud 7.

² Thakkar
17. EXTRACTS FROM MINUTES OF CHAMPARAN COMMITTEE MEETING

RANCHI,

September 24, 1917

The President said that he understood that Mr. Gandhi had some remarks to make about the draft report which had been circulated. Mr. Gandhi said that he had an interview with His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor and understood from him that arbitration on the conflicting claims as to sharahbeshi was possible. The President said that during the time he had been in Ranchi he had discussed this matter with the local Government and had pointed out that there were three possible courses:

1. for the local Government to arbitrate,
2. for the Bettiah estate to meet the difference of 25 per cent, or
3. for the question to be left to a special tribunal.

He understood that the local Government was not prepared to arbitrate but was prepared to consider the second suggestion after consulting the local officers. The latter were, however, opposed to the idea and when he himself had put it to the planters principally concerned, viz., Messrs Norman, Hill and Irwin, he gathered that they also were not in favour of it. He, therefore, understood that the local Government had abandoned all idea of the first and second alternatives and the report was consequently drafted on the assumption that the third alternative would be adopted.

Mr. Gandhi said that he thought that Sir Edward Gait would be prepared to arbitrate and suggested that the matter might be referred to him. Mr. Rainy pointed out that it would be necessary to ascertain first whether the parties were willing. The President said that it was necessary, before the matter was referred to His Honour, to decide one or two points. The first was as to Turkaulia. Mr. Hill had not agreed to a reduction in sharahbeshi larger than 20 per cent and Mr. Gandhi had said that he was prepared to consider special cases. The President asked, therefore, whether he would agree in the case of Turkaulia for the arbitration to be between the limits of 20 per cent and 40 per cent. Mr. Gandhi agreed to this. The President said that the second point was, supposing some of the planters agreed and some did not, was the arbitration to be recommended in the case of those who agreed? Mr. Gandhi agreed to this. The President said that the second point was, supposing some of the planters agreed and some did not, was the arbitration to be recommended in the case of those who agreed? Mr. Gandhi said that he thought if any concerns preferred to fight out their case in the ordinary courts, he would have no objection to their doing so. Mr. Reid agreed to this. The President then asked whether Mr. Gandhi intended the arbitration to be done by His Honour personally or by the local Government. Mr. Gandhi said that he thought it should be done by His Honour personally and the Committee agreed. Mr. Reid enquired whether His Honour would fix a separate figure for each factory. Mr. Gandhi said he thought it was not necessary... to go into details and that this could be left to His Honour. The President then pointed out that, supposing the arbitration was undertaken, it was necessary to give the planters some assurance that the award would be made binding on the raiyats. Mr. Adami said that this would require legislation. Mr. Gandhi, however, thought that it would be simpler and just as binding as legislation, if he got a power of attorney from the raiyats to act on their behalf. This would not cause so much delay and probably be less troublesome on the whole than special legislation. The President asked what was to be done in the case of those raiyats who were not paying sharabheshi and against whom the indigo obligation was recorded. Mr. Gandhi said that they should have the option of commuting the obligation at whatever rate might eventually be awarded. The President pointed out that the Committee had already agreed that the tinkathia system was so bad that it ought to be abolished. Mr. Gandhi said that in spite of that he could not see why raiyats should be compelled to pay enhanced rents if they did not wish to. He was prepared to try and get a power of attorney from such raiyats but the raiyats should not be compelled to agree to the arbitration. Mr. Reid said he thought that there would be great delay in getting the power of attorney and the President asked what would happen if the raiyats repudiated it subsequently. Mr. Gandhi said that in that case the raiyats would have to fight, but that was not likely. He would agree to the following being put in the report, “In order to protect the planters in the matter of acceptance by the raiyats of the Lieutenant-Governor’s award, Mr. Gandhi would undertake to obtain a power of attorney from the raiyats concerned.” He added that it might be simpler if the raiyats simply signed an agreement that they would accept the figure fixed by the Lieutenant-Governor. The President enquired whether if arbitration was to take place before this agreement was obtained, it would be right to go to the raiyats and ask them to sign it subsequent to the arbitration. Mr. Gandhi said that in that case it would not be a power of attorney but would be a legal acceptance. Mr. Rainy said that what was required was something which the raiyat could not question if the planter had to bring a suit for arrears of rent. Mr. Reid pointed out that if the attested rent had to be revised in the record, legislation would be necessary and a separate agreement would be required from each raiyat specifying the terms which had been settled in each particular case. The President said that the difficulty was that while with the planters the Committee were dealing with principals, with raiyats they were dealing with the representatives. The two methods which had been proposed to get over this were

(1) to get a power of attorney from the raiyats before arbitration which would be a lengthy process, and

(2) that Mr. Gandhi should obtain a legal acceptance after arbitration.

Mr. Adami said that if the second suggestion was adopted, an agreement would have to be taken from every raiyat and registered, The President pointed out that in that case the expense would be considerable and it would have to be decided who was to bear it. Mr. Gandhi said that to get the power of attorney, it would take at least a month. Mr. Reid thought that legislation would be preferable. Mr. Rainy pointed out that it would be difficult to have the arbitration before the power of attorney was obtained and asked whether Mr. Gandhi would not agree to recommend that the settlement should be made binding by legislation, if necessary. Mr. Gandhi agreed to that. Mr. Reid said that he understood that in any case legislation was necessary to abolish the tinkathia system and he saw no reason therefore why provisions as to sharahbeshi should not also be included. The President said he thought that the proposal for special legislation was to some extent gambling on the Legislative Council but the members generally thought there would be no difficulty about this. It was finally agreed that the President should go to His Honour with the unanimous request that he should arbitrate on the following basis:

1. In the case of Turkaulia between the limits of 20 per cent and 40 per cent reduction in sharahbeshi.
2. In Pipra, Motihari, Jallaha and Sirni between the limits of 25 per cent and 40 per cent reduction.

The arbitration was only to take place where the concerns agreed. Any concern which did not agree would be left to the agency of the ordinary courts. The award might vary for different concerns and although Mr. Gandhi would prefer to omit this qualification, he would prefer to retain it rather than that the arbitration should fail. Where the indigo obligation was recorded, the raiyat was to have the option of continuing under the obligation or of commuting it at the rates fixed by the arbitration. Effect was to be given to the award by emergency legislation.

The President then said that in case His Honour agreed to arbitrate, the report would presumably simply state this fact. Mr. Gandhi said that he would prefer the arbitration to take place first of all and the figure arrived at to be incorporated in the report as their recommendation with the additional recommendation that legislation should be undertaken to enforce it. The Committee agreed to this.

The President then said that they had now to consider the report and he asked Mr. Gandhi to put his general views before the meeting. Mr. Gandhi said that he thought that for their purpose, the report was too heavy and that the Committee were not warranted in giving such a lengthy history after a summary enquiry. He pointed out that the materials were all in the Government record and on the terms of reference they had merely to report conclusions without giving the reasons. His experience was that arbitrators who did not give reasons always did well. The President agreed, provided that the report was unanimous.

The President said that one point which had not been dealt with in the report was the case of tawan in mukarrari villages. The report dealt with the case of tawan in thika villages only. He referred specially to the case of Rajpur. Mr. Gandhi said he thought that Mr. Hudson ought to repay part of the tawan, as he had lost nothing by replacing tinkathia indigo by khuski indigo. If necessary, the payment could be enforced by special legislation.

The President then brought forward a note of dissent put in by the Hon’ble Raja Kirtyanand Sinha as to the recommendation made in regard to sections 75 and 58 of the Bengal Tenancy Act. As to the amendment in section 75, Mr. Adami pointed out that the principle of having two alternative procedures for dealing with an infringement had already been accepted by the Legislature in section 58, so that the objection on this ground was not valid. Mr. Gandhi said that the objection on the ground that a legal point might arise seemed more valid but this would be provided for because there would be an appeal to the Commissioner. The President pointed out that the recommendation was practically to make the section the same as in the Chhota Nagpur Tenancy Act and asked the Raja if he would not agree to the recommendation if it was restricted to the Champaran district. Raja Kirtyanand Sinha said that on this condition he was willing to agree.

* * *

Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 181, pp. 351-5

18. MINUTES OF CHAMPARAN COMMITTEE MEETING

RANCHI,

September 25, 1917

The President said he had seen the Lieutenant-Governor who had said that he was not prepared to give a definite reply to the proposal that he should arbitrate and pointed out that it would be a somewhat difficult position for him since, as the head of the Government, he would have to deal with the report. The Lieutenant-Governor had, therefore, suggested that it might be preferable if a High Court Judge was appointed to arbitrate. Mr. Gandhi said that he did not contemplate such a stiff and formal arbitration. It was not a legal mind that was required for this arbitration but a business mind. Mr. Reid said that he was doubtful whether Messers Irwin and Hill would agree to arbitration and he was certain that they would not agree to arbitration by a High Court Judge. The President said that in that case it was hardly worthwhile to go on with the proposal to arbitrate. Mr. Gandhi agreed but said he still had hopes of bringing about an arbitration.

Turning to the discussion of the report, the President said that, in considering whether the introductory historical portion should be cut down, it had to be remembered that it was desirable to make the report as a whole intelligent to the public and not to make it appear as if the Committee had shirked their tasks. Mr. Rainy said he had no objection to cutting down Chapter II. Mr. Adami was inclined to keep Chapter II as it was. Raja Kiryanand Sinha suggested that the paragraph about the thikadar system might be shortened. Mr. Reid said that he saw no objection to Chapter II standing. It was necessary to enable anyone to grasp the problem as it stood at present. Mr. Gandhi said that if the report was not to be unanimous, he could understand and would not resist the desire of the majority to state their argument fully.

The President said that Mr. Gandhi should indicate precisely the points to which he objected and the report could then be altered, if possible, to meet the views of everybody. Mr. Rainy pointed out that if there was anything in Chapter II which was contentious, it could be transferred to the contentious part of the report. He added that if the report was to recommend the tribunal, it was unnecessary to discuss the sharahbeshi question at length, because that was the very point which the tribunal would have to decide, but if Government was going to decide the question itself, then it would be necessary to give the arguments at some length. Mr. Gandhi thought that Government would have to decide between the views of the majority and his own views, as what he wanted was for Government to decide on the equities of the case and legislate at once. If Government held sharahbeshi to be illegal and that tinkathia, though legal, was accompanied by so much abuse that it should be abolished, they would legislate against it without the necessity of appointing a tribunal. If he had come on the scene earlier, he would have advised the raiyats against compensation, but as it was, compensation had been paid and he had to recognise that Mr. Reid said that he had only agreed to recommend that tinkathia should be abolished if there was compensation for it. The President said that the Committee could not bind Government, but he could indicate the view that he thought Government took; if there was a decision by arbitration on the consent of both parties, Government could legislate to give effect to that agreement without any difficulty. If there was no agreement, there were two alternatives:

(1) for Government to decide for itself and legislate accordingly or
(2) for the matter to be referred to a special tribunal or left to the ordinary courts.

As to the first alternative, questions affecting important claims to property were involved which it would be rather arbitrary and high-handed for Government to decide executively. The second alternative would, therefore, be the one probably adopted if no agreements were reached. The President added that until the Committee had before them Mr. Gandhi’s specific suggestions as to what he wished to alter in the report, it was impossible to go on. What he wanted was a unanimous report as far as possible, that is to say, that any contentious matter should be confined to the one portion regarding sharahbeshi. Mr. Gandhi said that there was one master idea running through the report recognising the legality in certain cases of the tinkathia obligation and the justification for sharahbeshi. The President said that if Mr. Gandhi would go through the report in detail, each portion of it could be dealt with separately.

Discussing the possibility of arbitration, Mr. Gandhi said that he thought if the planters believed they had a good case, it was unbusinesslike for them to refuse arbitration. The President asked whether if only Mr. Norman agreed to arbitration, it was worthwhile taking up his case alone. Mr. Rainy thought that might make one or other of the parties regard the local Government as being incapacitated from dealing with the other cases impartially. He suggested that if a special tribunal was set up, it might be left open to the planters to agree to arbitration by the tribunal instead of detailed trial in each case. The President said he did not think there would be any advantage in that.

The President then suggested that the constitution and duties of the tribunal should be discussed. Mr. Adami said that it should consist of three members to provide for a difference of opinion and thought that there should be an appeal to the High Court on any legal point but not on the question of what was the fair amount for the commutation of the obligation. The Committee accepted three as the number of members of the tribunal and the personnel was then discussed. The President suggested that the tribunal should consist of:

(1) a Judicial Officer not below the rank of District Judge,
(2) a Revenue Officer not below the rank of Collector, and
(3) another Judge or another Revenue Officer.

As to (1), Mr. Rainy proposed that the Judicial Officer should be a High Court Judge and that there should be no appeal. Mr. Gandhi, however, thought that there should be a right of appeal, as tribunals sometimes went wrong. His view was the same whether the Judicial Officer in the tribunal was a High Court Judge or a District Judge. He agreed that the right of appeal should be confined to legal points. Mr. Adami said that if a High Court Judge was on the tribunal, he would allow no appeal, but there was no technical objection to an appeal being allowed from such a tribunal. Mr. Reid agreed with Mr. Rainy. Raja Kirtyanand Singh said that he would prefer that Mr. Gandhi should agree to a 25 per cent reduction in sharahbeshi, which would obviate the appointment of a tribunal, the working of which would obviously give a good deal of trouble. The Committee agreed that the second member of the tribunal should be a Revenue Officer not below the grade of Collector. As to the third member of the tribunal, Mr. Rainy said he would prefer to leave it to the local Government, who might wish to appoint neither a Judge nor a Revenue Officer. Mr. Adami said that he would prefer the third member to be a Judicial Officer. Mr. Gandhi also preferred a Judicial Officer. He said that the case here was not the same as in arbitration and, for a formal judicial tribunal, he would prefer a majority of Judicial Officers. The President asked if it was possible for a High Court Judge and a District Judge to sit together. Mr. Adami said he thought there was no objection, Mr. Rainy said that Government might wish to put in a barrister or a pleader, and might also desire that one at least of the tribunal should be an Indian. He thought if they made their recommendation as to the personnel in too much detail, it would tie the hands of Government. The President then raised a question of the duties of tribunal. He suggested that the necessary legislation should lay down their duties somewhat as follows:

That on the application of either party within a certain period, the tribunal was to decide

1. If the obligation to grow indigo existed or not.
2. If so, what compensation in the form of enhanced rent, if any, should be allowed.
3. If the tribunal decided that compensation was to be given, it should have regard in fixing that compensation to the following points:
   a. in no case was the rent to be greater than fair and equitable rent;
   b. the existing rent and the period for which it had remained unenhanced; and
   c. the actual rate of sharahbeshi which had been taken in the concern or in neighbouring concerns.

Mr. Adami said that if the tribunal had to fix a commutation rate, this was probably the best way. It had been suggested that a fair and equitable rent should be fixed by the tribunal, irrespective of any conditions. Mr. Rainy said that in his view the tribunal should be left entirely free to decide what points to consider. There were limits to their discretion because they could not fix the rent lower than the original rent nor one higher than the existing rent including sharahbeshi. The President said that as Revenue Officer, he would hesitate to carry out the rent settlement without some such guidance as he had proposed. Mr. Reid pointed out that the survey record was available and would assist the tribunal. The President said that the survey record was not designed for what in northern India was understood by the settlement of rent; and in his view the proposal would lengthen the proceedings considerably. Mr. Rainy did not press his view but he thought that the decision as to what points should be considered should be left to the tribunal. The President said this might be met if it was laid down that, amongst other considerations, the tribunal should take into account the three points mentioned. Mr. Gandhi pointed out that any recommendation restricting the provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act would be fought in the Legislative Council, and that as far as possible the Committee’s suggestion should aim at liberalising the Act and not restricting it. Mr. Reid said he thought it would be simpler if the tribunal was simply given power to consider the rent rendered at the settlement and revise it, if necessary. The President pointed out that the special tribunal would only have to consider cases where the obligation had been recorded or where sharahbeshi had been taken. It was agreed that the period of time within which applications to the tribunal should be made should be fixed at three months from the date of notification, and that if application was not made within that period, the entry in the settlement record should be final. Mr. Adami was asked to draft a paragraph embodying these decisions to go at the end of paragraph 24 of the report.

Mr. Gandhi wanted provisions to be made that the tribunal should consider cases of coercion and undue influence and other illegal practices, that is to say, that it should go into the past history of the working of the tinkathia system. Mr. Adami said that this would take a long time. Mr. Gandhi pointed out that there would be a test case which other cases would follow. The President said he thought that the clause, that the tribunal could decide what compensation, if any, was payable, implied that the raiyat in his plea would be able to plead that no compensation was due, because in the past the planter had already got sufficient compensation. He thought that Mr. Gandhi by this request was going back to his original case that there should be no tribunal. Whether there was to be a tribunal or not, there was a point that Government would have to decide. Mr. Rainy said that if the tribunal was to consider all these matters, it might be simpler to leave the whole thing to the operation of the ordinary law and merely appoint a Special Judge to try the cases. Mr. Gandhi said that even if Government found that the equities were in favour of the case, they would appoint a tribunal because as the President had said before, they could not take on themselves the responsibility of passing an arbitrary executive order. Mr. Adami said that he thought the widest discretion should be given to the tribunal. Mr. Rainy pointed out that the Turkaulia case had been fought largely on the point of coercion and that this might be raised in sharahbeshi cases that came before the tribunal. The tribunal, however, was also to deal with cases where sharahbeshi had not been taken, but where applications had been made for the obligation to be commuted. If the tribunal allowed an enhancement of rent in the latter case, why should they not do so in the former case even when the agreement was void on account of coercion? He did not consider, therefore, that the question of coercion came in to any great extent. It was to provide for cases of this sort that he proposed that the tribunal should consider anything that they thought relevant. Mr. Reid enquired as to who would pay the cost of the tribunal. The President said presumably Government would pay the cost and enquired of Mr. Gandhi if he could say how long the tribunal would take. Mr. Gandhi said he thought it would take at least a month in the most favourable circumstances. Mr. Adami thought it would take much longer.

As regards the printed evidence, Mr. Gandhi said that he wanted the enclosures to the written evidence of the three raiyats who had been examined publicly to be printed. The President said that these could be printed as an appendix. Mr. Gandhi also wanted statements of other raiyats that he had filed to be printed. Mr. Reid objected to this. The President said that it would be sufficient for Mr. Gandhi’s purpose if statements of witnesses who were examined informally were printed. Mr. Gandhi said that he would examine the statements and consider the point. He also wanted copies of judgements that he had filed to be printed. The President said that that would make a very bulky record. The judgements were all public documents and he did not think it more necessary to print them than it was to print Government records that had been placed before them. Mr. Gandhi said he thought that Mr. Gourlay’s report should be printed. The President said that was a matter for the Government to decide. Mr. Gandhi said his idea in wanting these documents printed was that he could refer to them in his report. The President pointed out that Mr. Gandhi could refer to them, although they were not printed.

The meeting then adjourned.

Select Documents on Mahatma Gandhi’s Movement in Champaran, No. 182, pp. 356-61

19. LETTER TO THE PRESS ON THIRD CLASS TRAVELLING ON INDIAN RAILWAYS

RANCHI,

September 25, 1917

TO

THE EDITOR

THE LEADER

SIR,

I have now been in India for over two years and a half after my return from South Africa. Over one quarter of that time I have passed on the Indian trains travelling 3rd class by choice. I have travelled north as far as Lahore, down south up to Tranquebar, and from Karachi to Calcutta. Having resorted to third class travelling among other reasons for the purpose of studying the conditions under which this class of passengers travel, I have naturally made as critical observations as I could. I have fairly covered the majority of railway systems during this period. Now and then I have entered into 1 A copy of this was sent by Gandhiji to the Secretary, Department of Commerce and Industries, Delhi, with a letter making practical suggestions for improvement; vide, “Letter to Commerce and Industries Secretary”, 31-10-1917.

---

correspondence with the management of the different railways about defects that have come under my notice. But I think that the time has come when I should invite the Press and the public to join in a crusade against a grievance which has too long remained unredressed, though much of it is capable of redress without great difficulty.

On the 12th instant I booked at Bombay for Madras by the mail train and paid Rs. 13-9. It was labelled to carry 22 passengers. These could only have seating accommodation. There were no bunks in this carriage whereon passengers could lie with any degree of safety or comfort. There were two nights to be passed in this train before reaching Madras. If not more than 22 passengers found their way into my carriage before we reached Poona, it was because the bolder ones kept the others at bay. With the exception of two or three insistent passengers, all had to find their sleep, being seated all the time. After reaching Raichur the pressure became unbearable. The rush of passengers could not be stayed. The fighters among us found the task almost beyond them. The guards or other railway servants came in only to push in more passengers.

A defiant Memon merchant protested against this packing of passengers like sardines. In vain did he say that this was his fifth night on the train. The guard insulted him and referred him to the management at the terminus. There were during this night as many as 35 passengers in the carriage during the greater part of it. Some lay on the floor in the midst of dirt and some had to keep standing. A free fight was at one time avoided only by the intervention of some of the older passengers who did not want to add to the discomfort by an exhibition of temper.

On the way, passengers got for tea tannin-water with filthy sugar and a whitish-looking liquid miscalled milk which gave this water a muddy appearance. I can vouch for the appearance, but I cite the testimony of the passengers as to the taste.

Not during the whole of the journey was the compartment once swept or cleaned. The result was every time you walked on the floor or rather cut your way through the passengers seated on the floor, you waded through dirt.

The closet was also not cleaned during the journey and there was no water in the water tank.

Refreshments sold to the passengers were dirty-looking, handed by dirtier hands, coming out of filthy receptacles and weighed in equally unattractive scales. These were previously sampled by millions of flies. I asked some of the passengers who went in for these dainties to give their opinion. Many of them used choice expressions as to the quality but were satisfied to state that they were helpless in the matter; they had to take things as they came.

On reaching the station, I found that the ghariwala would not take me unless I paid the fare he wanted. I mildly protested and told him I would pay him the authorized fare. I had to turn passive resister before I could be taken. I simply told him he would have to pull me out of the ghari or call the policeman.

