on special occasions thereafter. Any young man who makes dowry a condition of marriage discredits his education and his country and dishonours womanhood. There are many youth movements in the country. I wish that these movements would deal with questions of this character. Such associations often become self-adulation societies, instead of becoming as they should be, bodies representing solid reform from within. Good as the work of these bodies is at times in helping public movements, it should be remembered that the youth of the country have their reward in the public appreciation they get.
Such work, if it is not backed by internal reform, is likely to demoralize the youth by creating in them a sense of unwarranted self-satisfaction. A strong public opinion should be created in condemnation of the degrading practice of dowry and young men who soil their fingers with such ill-gotten gold should be excommunicated from society. Parents of girls should cease to be dazzled by English degrees and should not hesitate to travel outside their little castes and provinces to secure true, gallant young men for their daughters.

A TRIBUTE

In a letter to Mahadev Desai thus writes Mr. H. S. L. Polak about the death of Maganlal Gandhi:

I can fully enter into your appreciation of the disaster that has befallen the Ashram by Maganlal’s sudden passing. It was as though I had lost an own brother. You, of course, know far better than I how tremendously important he was to the life and purposes of the Ashram, and how much he symbolized its ideal and practical character. It seems incredible that this dear, cheerful, smiling brother, with whom I had exchanged so close and affectionate an embrace on my last day at the Ashram, should have passed in the physical form from among us so suddenly. He has died, as gallantly as any knight of old, on the battlefield.

Maganlal and I, as you know, worked closely and always harmoniously at Phoenix. Indeed, cheerfulness and harmony were the keynotes of his character, and a supple courage that adapted itself to meet the needs of each new trial. Of late years we met only upon my occasional visits to India, and then only for brief periods, but I always felt refreshed and stimulated by this renewal of an old and affectionate comradeship.

He has left a noble and shining example for us all, and I feel very sure that, though he be absent really in the flesh, his spirit will move among you perhaps more really than if he had remained in the form that was so familiar and dear to us.

Many of us in the Ashram are realizing the truth of the last observation.

Young India, 21-6-1928

174. LETTER TO J. M. SEN GUPTA

THE ASHRAM,

SABARMATI,

June 21, 1928

MY DEAR SEN GUPTA,

I have your letter about the President of the forthcoming Congress. I like your suggestion. But before deciding upon the thing finally, I want to know Panditji’s own mind. I have therefore written to him in the matter and, as soon as I hear from him, I hope to write to you further and more definitely.

I had your letter about the Exhibition. It does not satisfy me. But evidently in this matter we shall have to agree to differ. As you know I hold very strong views about swadeshi. But if they do not commend themselves to Bengal, I must wait till Bengal is converted or I collapse. However, I may not argue with you. I shall watch the developments there. I see no difference between what you write to me and the information that was given to me. Let me conclude by saying that I am not against machinery as such, but I am opposed to machinery that may be designed to displace the masses without giving them any adequate and satisfactory substitute.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 13626

---

175. LETTER TO ETHEL ANGUS

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM,
SABARMATI,
June 22, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter for which I thank you. If I succeed in going to Europe next year and if it is at all possible, I should certainly accept your kind hospitality. I have no doubt about it that I have many friends in England as in other parts of Europe.

Mr. Rajagopalachariar is making steady progress with his Ashram in the South. I am taking the liberty of sending your letter to him and I know that he will read it with interest and joy.

I thank you and Rev. John Todd Ferrier for his books. Much as I should like to read the several books that friends send me, it is difficult to find time to read them. But I have glanced through some of the books sent by you. The argument about purity of food naturally makes a forcible appeal to me.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 14334

176. LETTER TO RAMLAL BALARAM BAIPAI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM,
SABARMATI,
June 22, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I have gone through the article of Miss Mayo, which you sent me. I have no desire to reply to the libel. If there are people who believe in this story invented by Miss Mayo, no repudiation on my part can give any satisfaction to such people.
Thank you for your kind enquiries about my health. I am keeping fairly well.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. RAMLAL BALARAM BAIPAI
209 SULLIVAN PLACE
BROOKLYN
NEW YORK
U.S.A.

177. LETTER TO K. SRINIVASAN
SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM,
SABARMATI,
June 22, 1928

MY DEAR SRINIVASAN,

I have your letter and the cheque for Rs. 11. You certainly deserve upbraiding if the money that you got for yourself was not needed by you.

It gives me great joy to find that you are keeping you promise. I wish you will not be ashamed of spinning before your friends. If you believe it to be good, let them see what you are doing.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. K. SRINIVASAN
MARCONI WIRELESS COLLEGE
CHELMSFORD
ESSEX

178. LETTER TO DEVI WEST
SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM,
SABARMATI,
June 22, 1928

I have your letter. I had the charming photograph also. I call it ‘charming’ because it is lifelike.

What you say about Maganlal is too true.

1 Of the addressee
I wish I had the time to describe the many changes we have made in the Ashram. Prabhudas had just now descended from the hills where he was convalescing. Krishnadas is here and so are Chhaganlal and his wife. His parents are also here for the time being. Devdas is in the hills, I am keeping fairly well. It is possible that we may meet next year. If all goes well, I might visit Europe next year.

From a photostat: S.N. 14339

179. LETTER TO HORACE ALEXANDER

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM,
SABARMATI,
June 22, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have long delayed replying to your letter, as I have hoped to send you a fairly lengthy reply. But I see that I am not likely to get sufficient leisure for attempting a very full reply in the near future.

What you say about silent prayer and congregational silence I understand and I appreciate also in theory.¹ When I was in South Africa, I attended several such meetings. But I was not much struck with the performance. In India, it will fall flat. After all, there are many ways of worship and it is not necessary to graft new ways, if old ones will answer. I am myself not satisfied with what we are able to do in the Ashram. I cannot procure a devotional mood all of a sudden or in an artificial manner. If some of us in the Ashram really have that mood whilst at prayer, it is bound to have its effect in due course. It is because of the belief that there are some earnest souls in the Ashram who approach the prayer time in a proper devotional mood, that I have persisted in retaining the congregational prayer meetings in spite of odds and sometimes even severe disappointments. I may be partial, but my own experience is that our prayer meetings are very slowly but surely growing in dignity and strength. But I am painfully aware of the fact that we are far far away from what we want to achieve. Nevertheless, I shall bear your suggestions in mind. I have already discussed them with friends.

You seem to think lightly of my having invited suggestions with reference to sanitary matters. In my own humble opinion we needlessly divide life into water-tight compartments, religious and other. Whereas if a man has true religion in him, it must show itself in the smallest detail of life. To me sanitation in a community such as ours is based upon common spiritual effort. The slightest irregularity in sanitary, social and political life is a sign of spiritual poverty. It is a sign of inattention, neglect of duty. Anyway, the Ashram life is based upon this conception of fundamental unity of life.

¹ The addressee, who had earlier visited the Ashram, had written suggesting observance of united silence on the pattern of Quakers.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

HORACE G. ALEXANDER, ESQ.
WOODBROOK
SELLY OAK BIRMINGHAM

From a photostat: G.N. 1405

180. LETTER TO C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

THE ASHRAM,
SABARMATI,
June 22, 1928

I have decided to help Ganesan to the extent of Rs. 8,500 by way of loan against the security of four publications: 1. Satyagraha in South Africa, 2. Gandhiji in Ceylon, 3. Seven Months with Gandhiji, 4. Economics of Khaddar. But I would like you to help him and guide him. He was inclined to throw up the sponge and retire from the publishing business entirely. I thought that was unmanly and I have advised him to brave all difficulties and survive the storm. I have advised him to secure your guidance. I also suggested to him that he might get Natesan’s help. But I leave all that to you. If you will think that he should do so, you will introduce him to Natesan, whom you know so well.

The books are to be stored with Harihar Sharma. If you have any other advice on the point, you will tell me.

From a microfilm: S.N. 13433

---

1 The title of the volume by Krishnadas is Seven Months with Mahatma Gandhi.

VOL. 42 : 2 MAY, 1928 - 9 SEPTEMBER, 1928   161
181. LETTER TO ESTHER MENON

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM,
SABARMATI,
June 22, 1928

I have your two letters. Maganlal’s death has not only upset all my plans but has prompted me to make what may appear revolutionary changes in the Ashram. I must not therefore give you a long love-letter.

If all goes well and the friends in Europe still want me, I hope to find myself in readiness to go next year.

I can understand your being ill in India, but why should you be ill there. I expect you to return with your original bloom and vigour.

How long do you both expect to be away? Where is Menon studyng?

MRS. ESTHER MENON
HAVE, ASNAES
DENMARK

From a photostat: S.N. 14336

182. LETTER TO BEN M. CHERINGTON

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM,
SABARMATI,
June 22, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. You altogether overrate my ability to help you. I however try to answer your questions to the best of my ability.

Yours sincerely,

BEN M. CHERINGTON, ESQ.
EXECUTIVE SECRETARY
UNIVERSITY OF DENVER
DENVER
COLORADO
U.S.A.

From a photostat: S.N. 14335

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
[ENCLOSURE]

I have never had occasion to study the history of the foundations in the West. My knowledge of them being too cursory to be of any value.

In my judgment, the growing need of the times however is restoring to the things of the heart, that is, moral well-being, its true place in life. Social science, according to my view, should therefore be approached from that moral standpoint. No tinkering will answer the purpose. Your foundation' therefore, if it is to be true to itself, should be utilized for subverting the system under which the extraordinary accumulation of riches has been possible in America. It would seem then that if you adopt my suggestion, it becomes for the most part independent of monetary help.

In view of my answer to the first question, I need hardly answer the second. But I would say independently of the first that the organization of the foundation round industrial, racial and international relationships would be any day preferable to the traditional academic departments. If the view underlying my answer to the first question is accepted, you will have to do original research work.

In view of the foregoing the answer to this is unnecessary. It would certainly be wise to have all nations, races and classes represented. If you can take care of the youth, the citizens will right themselves.

I should lock up in fairly commodious but not too comfortable rooms a few professors and students and insist upon their finding a way out of the present intolerable position, if you hold with me that the present is an intolerable position.

I am unable to answer this.

The idea is good. Perhaps the most effective way of securing the proper type or exchange of visiting members would be to send out a representative to the countries from which you may want such members so that he may come in direct touch with the living institutions of the country or countries in question.

From a photostat: S.N. 14262

---

1 The questions, to which these are Gandhiji’s answers, are not available.

2 The source has “function”.

VOL. 42 : 2 MAY, 1928 - 9 SEPTEMBER, 1928 163
183. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

ASHRAM,
SABARMATI,
June 23, 1928

CHI. VASUMATI,

I have your letter. As I dictate this, the four-o’clock bell is ringing. Jaidevji has been guilty of a moral lapse; therefore I am atoning for it by going on a three days’ fast. Today is the second day. I shall break the fast on Monday morning. Except for a slight weakness I feel nothing. Therefore there is no cause for worry at all. Does the climate there suit you? Correspondence is going on with Gurukul Kangri regarding better organization of Kanya Gurukul.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 479. Courtesy: Vasumati Pandit

184. LETTER TO SHANTIKUMAR MORARJI

ASHRAM,
SABARMATI,
June 23, 1928

CHI. SHANTIKUMAR,

I am dictating this letter to you at four o’clock in the morning. From this you can imagine how rushed I am. Mahadev is still confined to bed with the injuries he had suffered. The papers about Sumant have only been placed on the table but I have not been able to read them. Of course, the one to read them is myself. I have so much trust in you that I believe that whatever satisfies you will satisfy me. Bhai Sumant’s letter has not created a good impression on me because I saw anger in it and rage. But I shall write what I feel after I read it. I believe that in this connection I shall not be able to do anything either through Sumant or in any other way. That is why I have not insisted on disposing of the papers you sent me by putting aside other matters. I do not think I shall be able to go to Poona just now. If I do go, I should wish to stay in your hut. Premlilabehn has long ago taken a promise that I should stay in her hut. I have retained a proviso that I shall go only if I do not have to go elsewhere for work.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 4787. Courtesy: Shantikumar Morarji

185. LETTER TO BECHAR PARMAR

ASHRAM,
SABARMATI,
June 23, 1928

BHAISHRI BECHAR,

If the sons of a carpenter go in for business it would not be considered proper. Only labours are to be included in the caste. I consider carpenters, cobbler, etc., as Vaishyas. It is difficult to reply to the fourth question because there has been an intermingling of castes but we can say in general that everyone should stick to his occupation if it is not against morality and has been carried on from generation to generation. He who is considered worthy of being admitted to the Satyagraha Ashram will board at the Ashram only if he has no other means of subsistence. The Managing Committee has decided not to admit any newcomer for one year except under special circumstances since a lot of changes are made and are still being made at the Ashram. You will see in the Niyamavali that if you approve of the regulations, you will have to stay outside for one year and observe them. If you wish to be admitted at the end of the year you will have to know and live the Ashram life from today. If at all you wish to join the Ashram at any time, first of all you should stay there for two or three days.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS GANDHI

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5571
186. QUESTIONS ON EDUCATION—IV

Q. 11. In the aims of the Vidyapith it has been said that the progress of India depends upon its villages and not its cities. It this is so, why do you wish to convert our city boys? You are free to give village education to village boys, but city boys want to live city life. Why would you not give them the kind of education that suits them? Moreover, the funds for the Vidyapith come from cities. We shall say nothing if you carry the ideals of the Vidyapith to the villages and collect money, foodgrains and cotton.

A. Fortunately, this question is not asked by many city-dwellers or many students living in cities. How can city people, who are beginning to repent, talk in terms of village children getting village education at their own expense? The Vidyapith was born as a result of city people turning their attention to villages. The city-dwellers themselves took over running the Vidyapith after their eyes opened. If it is intended chiefly to serve the villages why should the villagers pay money for running it? Today even the educational machinery of the villages has necessarily to be run by the city-dwellers. the very same allegations that the city-dwellers level against the Government can be levelled against us by villagers: ‘You city-dwellers have robbed us in the past and still continue to do so. We shall be grateful to you if you will stop doing so. We are prepared to let bygones be bygones.’ We woke up when a few among us city-dwellers understood this. We became aware of the grave injustice that we have done to the villages and we decided to make atonement for it. The first part of this consists of non-co-operation with the Government with whose strength and support it was and still is possible to suck the life-blood of the villages. And the second part consists in our learning to save ourselves from the results of co-operation as we gradually understand the essence of non-co-operation. If we offered non co-operation and then sat down with folded hands, it could be said what we had not understood the meaning of non-co-operation. It is not enough not to help one who robs us of our belongings; it is also necessary to stop him from doing so and make him give up the loot. Then alone can we be said to have non-co-operated with the robber. Non-co-operation can be violent or non-violent, warlike or peaceful, one involving brute force or soul-force. We have chosen the latter alternative in each case and hence we have come to the conclusion that some of us city-dwellers who have robbed the wealth of the villages and live comfortably because of it should, by way of atonement, serve the villages in some way and offer them something in return. The Vidyapith was born as a result of this trend of thought and it is because some of us are awake and are votaries of truth that we are day by day realizing the secret of non-co-operation and, to that extent, are making the Vidyapith purer. It will now be understood why the main part of the funds contributed by the city-dweller should be used only for the purpose of educating villagers and that this can be done at present only by the graduates from the cities who have been trained the Vidyapith.

It is my belief that if would be a betrayal of the people’s trust in us if we used the funds received in the name of the Vidyapith for some other purpose. Those who donated money did so under the impression that it would be used to impart a type of education different from that which is currently given and which would be of the type described by me.

Q. 12. Over the past eight years, the stress of the Vidyapith has been on the abolition of untouchability. How many Antyajas have become vinitas or snatakas as a result of this?

A. I find the question strange and ignorant, for abolition of untouchability never meant, and should never mean, that we make graduates of youths regarded as untouchables. It is possible that some of them obtain these degrees in course of time. That is as it should be. It is also in the fitness of things that the Vidyapith should always be ready to help such individuals. But to turn untouchables into graduates does not in any way form part of the programme for the abolition of untouchability. The Vidyapith has proved its partiality for and its adherence to the cause of abolition of untouchability by forgoing thousands, if not lacs, of rupees and risking its very existence and by letting go help in the running of its administration from some individuals who were otherwise quite able to give such help.

Q. 13. We see clearly that the absence of brahmacharya has led to physical and mental enfeeblement of the nation and endeavour and enterprise have slackened. Why then have you not permitted the use of the word brahmacharya in the last clause about the aims of the Vidyapith?

A. The questions is well put. It is not proved that the absence of brahmacharya alone is responsible for the physical and mental weakening of the nation and the slowing of sustained industry and enterprise. Why should we belittle such a divine thing as brahmacharya by linking it with physical exercise, which, however good, is a transitory thing as compared to the former? The Westerners do not practise brahmacharya, yet they are not weak physically or mentally. Their untiring industry and spirit of adventure are worthy of imitation. It can be said of Gurkha, Pathan, Sikh, Dogra and British soldiers—all of whom have fine physique—that none of them are brahmacharis. They will outdo the students of our gymnasias in physical exercise. We can cite many such examples, to prove that physical strength, a certain kind of mental strength, ceaseless diligence and adventure—all the four of these can be attained without practising brahmacharya. The brahmacharya of my conception—one that leads to the attainment of the Brahman—is distinct from the above. It is both the means and the end; hence in order to practise it, I am prepared to sacrifice my body. One who is enamoured of the physical self will hardly be able to practise unbroken brahmacharya. Citing the examples of the brahmacharya of Bhishma and others here would be misleading. If we take too literally the events described in the Mahabharata, the Ramayana, etc., we shall be led along the path of untruth and fall headlong into a chasm. We shall certainly rise if we understand their inner meaning and put it into practice.

The body is not thing to be thrown away. It is a thing to be preserved. If it has become the abode of Ravana, it is also the Ayodhya of Rama; it is also Kurukshetra. We must not, therefore, ignore it. It is necessary to keep it strong and healthy and so it must have exercise. When we say this do we not give exercise its due? We preserve truth, and this amount of inducement is sufficient and has been sufficient to make exercise popular among students. On the other hand, if we try to establish an inevitable connection between exercise and brahmacharya, not only shall we be guilty of exaggeration but there will be real danger that a student who happens to lag behind in his exercises, instead of correcting the error in his reasoning, will blame brahmacharya and give it up.

Brahmacharya does not require the support of the desire for physical strength. Its necessity can be proved in other and much better ways. The West may have physical strength as well as mental strength but where does it have spiritual strength? Why envy that possession of someone by virtue of which we find that they readily succumb to passions, cannot tolerate any opposition at all, and use their willpower, diligence and courage for the purpose of robbing another nation and destroying it? And why imitate them? Since all their strength is related to what is opposite of brahmacharya, it has proved to be fatal to the progress of the world in the right direction. That is why I have called it monstrous. Here I do not wish to run down the West. There are many Westerners who are worshippers of truth and morality. There are a number of brahmacharis there too. They understand the agonizing Western urge that I am describing here. Hence we can understand and describe the outcome of all the Western tendencies while at the same time having a feeling of love and respect for the Westerners. Had the Western civilization been built on the ideal of brahmacharya, the state of the world would have been very different today and instead of being pitiable would have been attractive.

In this way, realizing the frightful results of lack of brahmacharya in the world, it is desirable that we should put the ideal of brahmacharya independently before the people. Full development of the soul is impossible without brahmacharya. Without it, man may act like a well-fed but wild horse without reins, but he cannot become civilized. Without it, wholesome as well as continuous activity and noble courage are impossible. Without it, the mind may well appear to be strong; however, it will be slave to a thousand passions and temptations. And though a body that has been developed without brahmacharya may well become strong, it can never become completely healthy from the medical point of view. It is not necessary to put on flesh and develop the muscles. It has been my experience over a long period that without brahmacharya it is impossible to have body which, even though lean, can withstand the rigours of heat, cold and rain and remain totally free from diseases.

I can cite innumerable instances from my own life as well as that of my colleagues of how every passion destroys the strength and soul of man. Hence I for on would say that although the body may collapse or be wasted anyone who cares for the atman ought to preserve brahmacharya.

The reasons for the physical and mental weakness of our students are quite different. Child-marriages, the fact of ourselves being the fruit of child-marriage, family responsibilities, lack or inadequacy of wholesome diet due to poverty are some of them. Let not the reader commit the error of equating lack of brahmacharya with child-marriage. Very great efforts are required to rid the students of the evil habits that they have formed in their childhood. Evil customs of society must be reformed; the artificial burden imposed by education must be lightened. But since this is an altogether different subject, I shall not discuss it here. I shall say only that our students will not be able to improve their physique by physical exercise alone. We can obtain the desired results only if a simultaneous effort is made on all fronts.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 24-6-1928

187. AT THE HOUR OF DOOM

The policy that the Government has been following in regard to Bardoli would seem to suggest that the hour of its doom is near! H.E. the Governor’s letters to Shri Munshi evoke sorrow, pity and laughter. When anyone holding a high office writes lengthy, discursive letters in his defence, we wonder why such a person should do such a thing; we feel sorry for him and then, since we cannot possibly take pity on him, we feel like laughing at him.

H.E. the Governor has surpassed his predecessors in writing letters and advancing arguments and has got entangled in his own arguments. In other words, we may say that his subordinates who draft his letters have gradually got him into a knot. If instead of defending the increase in land revenue, the Governor appointed the committee demanded by the people, the misconceptions of the people as well as those of their supporters would be cleared. The Governor is like a person who claims to possess something and though in a position to show it refuses to do so, and since he persists in his claim is treated as an impostor and laughed at.

Moreover, the head of the Information Department of the Governor who has come out in support of the latter has gone to the most absurd lengths. He has tried to refute the details cited by Mahadev Desai in his report on the misbehaviour of the Pathans. It has been customary for the people to cry out when they are subjected to atrocities. However, the Government seems to have adopted a novel practice. The ruler, instead of conducting an impartial inquiry into the people’s protests summons the culprit to his presence, listens to his one-sided story and, having dismissed the complainant, thinks he has done his duty. Why should the Government appoint a panch as demanded by the people to determine whether their grievances are real or otherwise? How can the guilty officials permit the appointment of such a panch?

The Government says that no one protests when some Banias of Bardoli engage Pathans as watchmen; then what harm is there in the Government doing likewise? This is much like trying to shield one offence with another. And how does the Government know that the people do not resent Banias and others engaging Pathans? The fact is that the people are harassed by the tendency which is growing in Gujarat of engaging Pathans for duty as watchmen and the like. Those who engage them, as well as others, cannot in the end escape punishment for it. The point that the Government wishes to make, viz., that all Pathans are not outsiders, shows its absolute naivete. The people do not resent the Pathans as such, they can have nothing against this community, they cannot be against outsiders merely because they are outsiders. They will always respect those among the Pathans who are courageous and noble. Here the word Pathan implies disreputable characters, hired murderers. Unfortunately, there are among the Pathans those who perform such evil deeds. They come down from their mountains into India in search of wealth. Indians, especially the unarmed, timid and peace-loving people of Gujarat, are afraid of such Pathans. Good, courageous and noble Pathans would not come to India looking for employment as watchmen or gatekeepers. Banias and others look for Pathan servants, and employ them because of their capacity for harassment. Since Gujaratis can stand up to Gujaratis, timid Banias get on satisfaction by employing them and do not regard themselves well-protected. Because of their short-sightedness they do not see the harm implicit in this. However, what is the meaning of a powerful Government like the British Government imitating timid people and employing Pathans against the people? Could this not be an instance of the mind turning perverse at the hour of doom? I do not recall even this Government having acted thus before.

But what surpasses the Governor’s letter and the notes of the Chief of the Information Department is the Collector’s advice to the farmers. This leaflet of “good advice” asks the farmers to be courageous and not to let themselves be caught in a trap. I find in it nothing but falsehood from beginning to end and I feel pained. The Collector regards saytagraha as duragraha. This officer has thought up a novel way to deal with Vallabhbhai and other leaders. They are described as “persons who have no agricultural land to lose”. The Collector, in the arrogance of his position, fails to see that their honour is a thousand times dearer to them than land that the good of the cultivators is even dearer to them than their own honour. Having tried to discredit the leaders by putting words into their mouths and ignoring them in every way, the Collector has given to the farmers of Bardoli and Valod the sinister advice to pay up their revenue dues without delay and violate the pledge that they themselves have taken and reiterated several times. The least that the farmers of Bardoli and Valod can do by way of answering this immoral and degrading advice is not to pay their dues until their demands are conceded. Land, household goods and livestocks frequently come and go; but a pledge once broken cannot be retrieved just as that which has been spat out cannot be swallowed again.

We have had a true picture of the Government’s unreasonableness in the Governor’s correspondence with Shri Munshi. As a result of this, the latter went to Bardoli, saw the people’s plight at first hand and wrote a strong and cogent letter to the Governor—on all of which he deserves to be congratulated. He has done well to proclaim his intention to form a committee and look into the matter if the Government does not appoint a committee of inquiry. If that committee gets the co-operation of leaders of all the major communities inquires into the matter without delay, the satyagrahis would get a good opportunity to put their case before public. It is desirable that this committee should not be content with only making an inquiry into the policy of repression but should also look into the people’s grievances regarding land revenue. There is absolutely no doubt that an inquiry conducted by such a committee will help greatly in solving this problem.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 24-6-1928
188. CATTLE-BREEDING

The reader is aware that experiments in cattle-breeding are being carried on in the dairy attached to the Ashram. The occasion has not yet come for describing these experiments fully. One of the aims of these experiments, however, is to breed good bulls. Two such bulls are ready in the Ashram now. Those who are keen on service to the cow or improvement of her progeny are advised to come and see these bulls and, if they wish to buy them, to meet the secretary and inquire about their price and so on.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 24-6-1928

189. ‘A DICTIONARY’

An inmate of the Ashram who has read its Book of Rules criticizes the vows in the following manner and then gives his own definitions under the caption “A Dictionary”.

Although the definitions of the Ashram vows are exhaustive they cannot be readily understood. It is not quite clear as to what one is expected to do, hence I have put down the meanings as I have understood them or, one may say, I have prepared a dictionary of vows.

TRUTH : One must renounce artificiality at any cost and discover one’s inmost nature.

NON-VIOLENCE : One must not forsake any creature—man or beast. Whenever there is friction and consequent suffering one should not try to make the other party suffer but take all the suffering on oneself.

BRAHMACHARYA : One should calm down all passions—whether subtle or gross—when they are about to overflow. One should always be cheerful. One should be engrossed all the twenty-four hours in holy matters.

ASVAD : One should sit down to a meal only when one is extremely hungry and get up when one’s stomach is only half-full. One should not touch food which has been prepared by many persons with a great deal of trouble and which is likely to add to one’s temptations.

ASTEY : One should reduce one’s need to the very minimum. Today’s needs ought indeed to be fewer than yesterday’s APARIGRAHA : On every Diwali and Holi day one must get rid of any money in excess of Rs. 25 that one may have in one’s possession. No one should have more money than he would require for a year’s expenses.

Why expenses for a years?

BODILY LABOUR: One should not spare oneself.

SWADESHI: One should not be disloyal to one’s neighbours.

FEARLESSNESS: People are not awed by one who does not awe people.

ABOLITION OF UNTOUCHABILITY: An intense feeling that anyone regarded as wretched and miserable is not more so than oneself.

TOLERANCE: Giving up of the arrogant belief that what one cannot perceive does not exist.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 24-6-1928

190. LETTER TO SADANAND

SABARMATI,
SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM,
June 24, 1928

MY DEAR SADANAND,

I have your letter with the enclosure.

I did have the pleasure of seeing the Assam Planters. But I have no recollection whatsoever of having told them that I was satisfied with the condition of the labour in their plantations. On the contrary, I remember having told them that my hurried visit would not permit of giving a definite opinion about the special condition of labour in the Assam Plantations and having told them what was my test of the proper condition of labourers.

I never agreed nor was there any occasion for agreement that I should abstain from political agitation among the labourers. For, it is my invariable custom not to carry on political agitation among labourers. I confine myself in dealing with labourers to their own special grievances as I did in Champaran and have done since in various parts of India.

You may make what use you like of this letter.

Yours, sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 13430
191. LETTER TO LILY MUTHUKRISHNA

THE ASHRAM,
SABARMATI,
June 24, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

Enclosed are the addresses\(^1\) of Muthukrishna’s wife and children. His brother-in-law Mr. Pillay gave these addresses. He is the Indian Interpreter in the Durban Magistrate’s Courts.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm: S.N. 13435

192. LETTER TO NILKANTH

THE ASHRAM,
SABARMATI,
June 24, 1928

DEAR NILKANTH BABU,

Every arrangement had been made to pack off Chhaganlal on Friday. But that very day an unforeseen circumstance prevented me from sending him to you. I am now detaining him, but I hope not indefinitely.

Sjt. Amritlal Thakkar is expected to be with you just for a short time to console the bewildered workers. But I am trying to lay my hands on someone who can take the place of Chhaganlal, if I cannot send him. But tell me meanwhile whether you would really want someone during the rainy season? Can you do much charkha work during that season? I would appreciate a telegraphic answer whether you want someone immediately and whether you can take a substitute for Chhaganlal Gandhi.

I hope you have all recovered from the shock and are continuing Gopabandhu Babu’s work with added zeal.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm: S.N. 13436

\(^1\) These are not available.
DEAR MR. NATRAJAN,

With reference to your leaderette in the Indian Daily Mail of . . . I would like to say just this: Whatever might have been your impression of the conversation between us when you kindly offered a donation for the Bardoli fund, I never wished to convey to you that I was collecting for Bardoli sufferers only, but I did include Bardoli sufferers in my estimate. But Sjt. Vallabhbhai tells me that there are no Bardoli sufferers as yet worth mentioning. He says that they, the peasants of Bardoli, are too proud to accept help so long as it is possible for them to avoid it. Indeed in the initial stages of the struggle, it was they who supported the numerous workers who in Mr. Smart’s language are no better than a “swarm of agitators living on the poor people of Bardoli”. But when the struggle became intense, forfeitures became the order of the day and when buffaloes, the real wealth of the peasantry and the mainstay of their agriculture, became a fit prey for the japti officers, it was no longer possible for the people of Bardoli and Valod taluks to sustain the ever-growing expenditure. Hence it was that Sjt. Vallabhbhai issued a public appeal for pecuniary help to which our countrymen have made so prompt and so generous a response. But Sjt. Vallabhbhai is anxious that we should accept no contributions from those who do not sympathize with the struggle and want to confine the use of their donations only to the sufferers. For he contends that it is wrong to accept such help when the largest portion of the donations has to be utilized for carrying on the work of the publicity office and for maintaining the many volunteers who receive and ask for no pay but who must be fed. I am therefore reluctantly obliged to inform you that I may not accept your donation unless you could see your way to remove the restriction and support the struggle on merits. I may add that since reading your article I have seen most of the principal donors who had paid me personally and they tell me they were under no impression that their donations were to be restricted as you seem to think they were and they have confirmed my impression that the donations were to be used for the purpose named above and that they have paid because they are in full sympathy with the struggle.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. K. NATARAJAN
EDITOR,
“INDIAN DAILY MAIL”
BOMBAY

From a microfilm: S.N. 14446

194. LETTER TO V. J. PATEL

June 25, 1928

BHAISHRI VITHALBHAI,

I have your letters. You should know that I get your letters one day late. The short one should have reached me on Saturday and the long one yesterday on Sunday but I got them both late. It is not customary for letters to be opened at the post office but it is of course necessary to know if they are, or is it that they were posted late there?

I like everything you say in the long letter. We should certainly maintain the dignity of the Sardar in the proper way but of course not at the cost of the people’s interest. Like you I believe that the Government will have to come to a settlement. Haven’t you seen the Statesman article? It acknowledges the weakness of the Government’s case.

Whatever you are doing, while yet a speaker, is enough for the present. I do not feel it is time yet for you to give up that position.

I have found out the cause for the late arrival of your letters. You address them to Ahmedabad, while it should be Sabarmati.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: S.N. 14447
195. LETTER TO RAMNATH

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM,

SABARMATI,

June 27, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. It is unfortunately true. But we have not yet been able to arrive at a stage when we can manufacture khadi thread. It will take some time.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. RAMNATH
OVERSEER
P.O. SHEIKHAWAHAN
BAHAWALPUR STATE

From a microfilm: S.N. 13432

196. LETTER TO GOVARDHANBHAI I. PATEL

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM,

SABARMATI,

June 27, 1928

MY DEAR GOVARDHANBHAI,

I have your letter. Whilst it sets forth the substance of the conversation between you and me and then between Sheth Mangaldas and me, I would put my own view in this language:

It is open to the donors, and the donors are invited by the Labour Union, to appoint a committee of inspection which will have the powers of scrutinizing and inspecting the working as well as the expenses of the schools conducted by the Union and it will be open to

1 The addressee had, among other things, written: “I and Sheth Mangaldas have understood from personal discussions with you that you entertain certain objections on principle regarding the joint administration. . . . At the same time, I understand that you advise us to appoint our own committee which may be called a Committee of Inspection with powers to scrutinize and inspect the working as well as the expenses of the Labour Schools. The conditions and suggestions made by this Committee, from time to time, will be given effect to by the Labour Union, and in the event of their non-compliance on the part of the Labour Union, the grant to the Labour Schools will cease automatically.”
the donors upon receipt of report from any such committee to prescribe conditions or make suggestions in connection with the schools and in the event of these suggestions and conditions not being carried out by the Labour Union to suspend the grant made to the schools, provided that the donors before suspending any such grant will hear what the Labour Union might have to say by way of explanation regarding conditions and suggestions, that is, if they are unable to carry them out.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. GOVARDHBHAI I. PATEL
MEMBER, AHMEDABAD MILLS
TILAK SWARAJ FUND COMMITTEE
LALAVASA’S STREET
SANKDISHERI
AHMEDABAD

From a microfilm: S.N. 13439

197. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM,
SABARMATI,
June 27, 1928

DEAR SATIS BABU,

I have your letter. I understand your anxiety to check the anti-Gandhian spirit. But you will have to fight it in the Gandhian spirit and that would be to let the anti-force expend itself without resistance. I won’t be able to explain what I mean through correspondence. I am certain that your business is not to expend your energy in resisting but to devote it to consolidating your own constructive work. The question you have raised is not new. It cropped up at Belgaum when I presided and I said to the non-co-operators that they must not resist, in spite of the protest of Shyam Babu and several others. I have seen nothing since to change my view. But we must discuss this personally. When I feel that the time has come, I shall certainly write upon it.
Kshitish Babu’s letter I like very vell. There is not a superfluous word in it. That kind of public instruction is not included in the non-resistance I have suggested.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 8918

198. LETTER TO RICHARD B. GREGG

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM,
SABARMATI,
June 27, 1928

MY DEAR GOVIND,

I have your letter. I am passing on your letter to Narayandas with reference to your suggestion regarding the constitution and sending a copy also to Shankerlal.

Mahadev is still bedridden and will have to be so for some time. He has developed shooting pain in the part affected.

I am not likely to leave the Ashram at least before October, if them.

Yours sincerely,

PS.

I miss an index to your great work. I wonder if you have the time to compile it. I know I must not inflict this work on you. But unless I ask Varadachari or Mahadev, both of whom are just now overworked, I do not know to whom else I should go. Each time I turn to the book, I miss the index.

From a photostat: S.N. 13434

\[1\] Of the Ashram
\[2\] Economics of Khaddar

180 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
199. A CORRECTION

Miss Schlesin of whom mention has been made in the autobiographical chapters\(^1\) tells me that she is not, as I have stated, principal of a girls’ school but that she is a teacher at a High School. The error has given her pain for which I am sorry. I may at once say that she is in no way responsible for the error.

Young India, 28-6-1928

200. THE DOOM OF PURDAH

A reasoned appeal signed by many most influential people of Bihar and almost an equal number of ladies of that province advising the total abolition of the purdah has been just issued in Bihar. The fact that over fifty ladies have signed the appeal shows that if the work is carried on with vigour, the purdah will be a thing of the past in Bihar. It is worthy of note that the ladies who have signed the appeal are not of the Anglicized type but orthodox Hindus. It definitely states:

> We want that the women of our province should be as free to move about and take their legitimate part in the life of the community in all particulars as their sisters in Karnatak, Maharashtra and Madras in an essentially Indian way, avoiding all attempts at Europeanization, for while we hold that a change from enforced seclusion to a complete Anglicization would be like dropping from frying pan into fire, we feel that purdah must go, if we want our women to develop along Indian ideals. If we want them to add grace and beauty to our social life and raise its moral tone, if we want them to be excellent managers at home, helpful companions of their husband and useful members of the community, then the purdah, as it now exists, must go. In fact no serious step for their welfare can be taken unless the veil is torn down and it is our conviction that if once the energy of half of our population, that has been imprisoned artificially, is released, it will create a force which, if properly guided, will be of immeasurable good to our province.

I know the evil effects of the purdah in Bihar. The movement has been started none too soon.

The movement has a curious origin. Babu Ramanandan Mishra, a khadi worker, was desirous of rescuing his wife from the oppression of the purdah. As his people would not let the girl come to the

\(^1\) Pt. IV, Ch. XII
Ashram, he took two girls from the Ashram to be companions to his wife. One of them, Radhabehn, Maganlal Gandhi’s daughter, was to be the tutor. She was accompanied by the late Dalbahadur Giri’s daughter Durgadevi. The parents of the girl wife resented the attempt of the Ashram girls to wean young Mrs. Mishra from the purdah. The girls braved all difficulties. Meanwhile Maganlal Gandhi went to see his daughter and steel her against all odds and persist in her efforts. He took ill in the village where Radhabehn was doing her work and died at Patna. The Bihar friends therefore made it a point of honour to wage war against the purdah. Radhabehn brought her charge to the Ashram. Her coming to the Ashram created additional stir and obliged the husband who was already prepared for it to throw himself in the struggle with greater zeal. Thus the movement having a personal touch promises to be carried on with energy. At its head is that seasoned soldier of Bihar, the hero of many battles, Babu Brijkishore Prasad. I do not remember his having headed a movement that has been allowed to die.

The appeal fixes the 8th of July next as the date on which to inaugurate an intensive campaign against the system which puts a cruel ban on social service by one half of Bihar humanity and which denies it freedom in many cases and even the use of light and fresh air. The sooner it is recognized that many of our social evils impede our march towards swaraj, the greater will be our progress towards our cherished goal. To postpone social reform till after the attainment of swaraj is not to know the meaning of swaraj. Surely we must be incapable of defending ourselves or healthily competing with the other nations, if we allow the better half of ourselves to become paralysed.

I therefore congratulate the Bihar leaders on their having earnestly taken up the struggle against the purdah. The success of such a reform especially, as of all reform generally, depends upon the purity of the workers. A great deal will rest with the ladies who have signed the appeal. If notwithstanding their having given up the purdah, they retain the original modesty of India’s womanhood and show courage and determination in the face of heavy odds, they will find success quickly awaiting their effort. The campaign against the purdah if properly handled means mass education of the right type for both men and women of Bihar.

Young India, 28-6-1928
201. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

SABARMATI,

Thursday [June 28, 1928]

CHI. RAMDAS,

I received your letter. There can be no discourtesy in anything you write. Rather, I welcome such letters from you.

In my view, [Jayadevji’s] misbehaviour was serious enough. But it would not be right to ask him to leave for that reason. So far, we have not sent away anyone. With what face, then, can I send him away? I have not sentenced myself to leave any time when I may have been guilty of some lapse. Nor would I be pleased if a superior or an elder relation sent me away. How, then, can I all at once send away anybody else for his lapse?

It is possible that the work I am doing may continue only so long as I live. Even so, what? I should do what seems clear as daylight to me and not leave the burden of making changes in it on those who come after me. They will do what they are able to do. If they wish to introduce changes, they will do so, or would wind it up altogether if they so wish. The Ashram cannot exist without a common kitchen for all.

[How can I agree to your going for formal education? But then you know you are quite free to do as you please]. I keep you tied to myself with the soft string of love. You have to stretch it just a little to break it. As for me, I do not need to test its strength. All that I am doing is to hold on firmly to one end of it, lest it might break altogether if you stretch it a little too strongly. . . .

Manilal has not enough money to be able to ask you to join him in S. A. It seems rather that he is in debt. I am unhappy that he

---

1 From the postal cancellation mark; also, June 28 in 1928 corresponded to a Thursday.
2 Square brackets as in the source
3 ibid
4 The rest of the paragraph is illegible.
5 South Africa has still not repaid the money he owes to the Ashram. However, I will never stand in the way of any of your good resolves.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru
Memorial Museum and Library

202. LETTER TO PARVATI

ASHRAM,
SABARMATI,
June 30, 1928

CHI. PARVATI,

I have received a cablegram from South Africa to the effect that Pragji has won the case. I hope you are keeping well. Write to me sometimes. Though I may not be able to share your joys and sorrows,
I would like to hear from you.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5032

203. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
June 30, 1928

CHI. MATHURADAS,

I have your letter. I have also received Dr. Muthu’s book. How did you think of sending it at this late stage? Mahadev is slowly improving. He has suffered a lot of pain. It is surprising that in spite of having so much pain he had no fever at all. There is scanty rain where you are but here there is not a drop. Why is Taramati bored at Panchgani? Why should she be bored when you and Dilip are there?
However, even if she wants to go, I wish you would not go to Bombay right now.

It seems to me that now the Government will have to come to a

1 Mahadev Desai had few days earlier slipped at a well while drawing water.
settlement about Bardoli. Sir Purushottamdas and Lalji Sheth came to see me. They promised to do nothing that would weaken our demands. I do not know what is happening now. But the source of Satyagraha is to be found in people’s courage, firmness and calm. Is that not so?

If you can think of any corrections and alterations in the rules, let me know.2

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

204. LETTER TO TARABEHN JASWANI
June 30, 1928

CHI. TARABEHN,

After you reached Rangoon, I have had no letter at all from you. Divali has written that she will send you a box spinning-wheel and I have told them to send it to you. There must be at least one spinning-wheel. Do you keep good health? One must take good care. Recently a lot of changes have taken place here.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8782

---

1 For the settlement reached on the issue on August 6, 1928, vide “All’s Well”, August 9, 1928.

2 For the draft constitution of the Satyagraha Ashram, vide “Satyagraha Ashram”, June 14, 1928.
205. DRAFT INSCRIPTION FOR JALLIANWALA BAGH MEMORIAL

This ground was hallowed by the mingled blood of fifteen hundred innocent Sikhs, Mussalmans and Hindus who were martyred by British bullets on 13th April, 1919. The ground was acquired from the owners by public subscriptions.

From a microfilm: S.N. 15369

206. QUESTIONS ON EDUCATION–V

Q. 14. Ever since you made your entry into the public life of this country, there has been a tendency to approach you and get your views of a problem whenever a person or persons have been in doubt and have failed to reach a clear-cut conclusion. People are eager to know from you whether a certain thing on a certain occasion is right or not. I am only describing the situation as it really is. It shows that all your activity is basically of a religious nature. Would it be right that, when you are no more, these decisions be delivered by a body of persons by a majority vote if necessary? If not, is it not necessary to create what may prove to be a continuous line of knowledgeable men, versed in the precepts of dharma?

A. I do not deem it worthy that people should approach me and ask me to pronounce judgment on disputable points. It is true that all my activities, whatever their outward form, are fundamentally religious. But the fact that I am asked to pronounce judgment on every disputed matter shows that people have either not understood the principles which I follow in shaping my conduct, or they have doubts about them. And because I am known as a Mahatma or respected as a good man, and our people are credulous and not given to thinking for themselves, they continue to put all forms of questions to me. This may gratify my sense of pride or even help me up to a point in doing my work, but it does not appear to me that it helps in any appreciable way either the people or the questioners. Indeed, I have often felt how nice it would be if I stopped making any pronouncements and did whatever suggested itself to me silently. But in that case I must first stop this weekly that I am now conducting, as also severely cut down much of my present correspondence. That, however, would need a courage which I do not feel within myself. But, there is the great friend of man, the Lord of Death, who can extend his invitation to me at any time and put a stop to all this chatter on my part whether I agree or not.

---

1 This was an enclosure to “Letter to Mulkaraj”, 1-7-1928.

I do not see any wrong in bodies or associations of men following my principles and giving their opinions on disputed questions by a majority vote when I am no more, or even now whilst I am alive. But as in the case of individuals so also in that of groups they must be inspired by the ideal of dharma.

Q. 15. The education in the Vidyapith is divided into three distinct stages: the primary, the secondary and the higher. How far would it be right to name these respectively as education for the village, education for the city, and education for those who would take up social service work?

A. I do not like the meanings suggested here by the correspondent to the primary, the secondary and the higher education respectively. Why should we want village people to be satisfied merely with primary education? They too have a right to receive secondary and higher education—those of them at least who want it. And the boys in the cities cannot do without primary education. The object of all the three should be the prosperity of the villages.

Q. 16. Why do you always attach so much importance to music?

A. It is sad that the study of music is generally neglected in our country today. Without it, the entire educational system seems to me to be incomplete. Music brings sweetness to the individual and to the social life of the people. Even as pranayama\(^1\) is necessary for the regulation of breath, so is music for disciplining the voice. Dissemination of the knowledge of music among the people will greatly help in controlling and stopping the noise which is a usual feature of public meetings in this country. Music pacifies anger and its judicious use is highly helpful in leading a man to the vision of God. It does not mean shouting and shrieking a tune anyhow like a rigmarole, nor does it mean the singing of stage songs. I have already referred to its ordinary meaning above, but its deeper meaning is that our whole life should be sweet and musical like a song. It goes without saying that life cannot be made like that without the practice of virtues such as truth, honesty, etc. To make life musical means to make it one with God, to merge it in Him. He who has not rid himself of raga and dwesha, i.e., likes and dislikes, who has not tasted of the joy of service, cannot have any understanding of celestial music. A study of music, which does not take account of this deeper aspect of this divine art, has little or no value for me.

\(^1\) Breath-control

Q. 17. The art of painting means expression of the emotions of the artist through line and colour. If this definition of painting were to be accepted, would you include painting as an essential part of the scheme of national education which should be universally taught to all?

A. I have never disparaged drawing and painting, though I have certainly deprecated the blots of ink and colour passing under its name. I doubt if painting as defined by the artist could be made universal. There is this difference between music and painting: While painting can be learnt only by a few who have a natural aptitude for it, music must be and can be learnt by all. In painting too, drawing of straight lines and the figures of animate and inanimate objects can be taught to all. It is certainly useful and necessary and I want it to be taught to every child before it is taught the alphabet.

Q. 18. Some people are of the view that such subjects as grammar, compound interest, higher geometry, etc., which the learners are apt to forget in after years, should not be included in the courses to be framed for purposes of national education. Do you agree to this? If you do, why should not Urdu also be put in the same category? When Hindus and Muslims feel the urge to come into close contact with each other and to understand each other’s culture, then only will the knowledge of Sanskrit and Urdu prove useful and lasting. Knowledge of Urdu will be put to active use and hence increase only when there is respect for and a desire to learn the culture of which Urdu is the vehicle. Until then it is bound to remain no more than a religious rite like the worship of Ganesh—a formal affair without any practical value.

A. I do not understand why grammar, compound interest and higher geometry have all been classed together. I have always believed that grammar is absolutely necessary for the mastery of a language, and that grammar and higher geometry are highly interesting subjects. Both provide innocent, intellectual entertainment. I will, therefore, accord a place to both these subjects in national education for those who go in for higher education or wish to study the science of language. In the same way, he who wants to be good at accounts cannot do so without learning compound interest. Therefore, all the three things mentioned by the correspondent in the question will have their due place in the syllabus for national education. The point is that there are things which are common to all schemes of education. Today, we have to differentiate between Government education and National education because the former is detrimental to national development. But there are many things in Government schools which will and must also be in our schools. Thus, though there are points of similarity between the two, the atmosphere in Government schools strengthens the bonds of slavery and is used at critical moments to suppress us. Therefore, such schools are to be renounced. Besides, as we have already seen, a portion, at least, of the education imparted there is wholly unnecessary; it is just a burden and nothing more. But I am straying from the subject under discussion. I have thought it fit to offer this clarification under the impression that I might not have grasped the point behind this question.

Urdu stands apart from the above-mentioned subjects; the question of its study must be considered separately. Hindus and Muslims will ultimately unite but in our national schools we must continue to strive unremittingly to bring them closer together. For this, we must acquaint ourselves with each other’s religion. If the students forget whatever little of Urdu they learn, evidently they are not serious about its study and must be learning it only because they must. But this can also be said about Hindi. Only God knows how interest in Hindi or Urdu can be created among the students, but there is no doubt in my mind that its knowledge is necessary for the progress of the nation.

Q. 19. Students should have full freedom; there should be nothing which will obstruct their free growth; to achieve this objective the teachers should have no prejudices for or against anything; while they teach they should so conduct themselves as though they have no partiality for any particular rule or habit or principle. This ideal for a teacher is coming to be accepted in many places. Do you accept it?

A. What has been said above can be supported as weal as opposed. If it does not help in preserving the real essence, it should be opposed, and if it does help, the students may well be allowed full freedom and the teachers remain as detached and neutral as they like. They may do what they wish with a view to securing the independence of the students, the only condition being that they must mix with the students to the extent of being one of them. In the language of Akha¹, I will say to them:

Live in the world as you like,
But keep constantly before your mind
The aim of attaining to God at any cost.

An ideal teacher never had nor should he ever have any other aim before him.

[From Gujarati]
_Navajivan, 1-7-1928_

207. FAIR DEALING

Shri Vithaldas Jerajani writes:²

Many such instances can be given. It can be proved that this kind of dealing ultimately brings profit to the business man. In spite of that, many business men resort to unfair ways, and fall because of an intense desire to make money. But a khadi worker or a khadi seller must have endless patience. Khadi has no other support except truth, patience and faith. Hence khadi stores should take note of the suggestion made by Shri Jerajani.

[From Gujarati]
_Navajivan, 1-7-1928_

¹ Akha Bhagat, a Gujarati poet
² The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had stated that a Maratha labourer had purchased a short-sleeved khadi shirt but had come back with it and was readily given a fresh one in exchange. Thereafter, he purchased a khadi coat as well.
208. MY NOTES

DEFINITION JUSTIFIED

A reader, while sending his criticism of the Satyagraha Ashram regulations¹, suggests the following definition of nonviolence:

Ahimsa means a desire not to hurt anyone, from the tiniest insect to God.

And he suggests the following for self-help:

One should not heedlessly get service from another. One should not needlessly serve another.

The definition that he has given for ahimsa is worth considering. And what he has suggested in respect of self-help, though not pertinent, is proper in these days. Very few have the desire to serve others without any reason and there are not many such occasions too. But the aim here is to put a stop to the giving of alms out of a religious sentiment and to such false service, and that seems but proper.

PROFESSOR’S MARRIAGE TO A YOUNG GIRL

A reader writes:²

The writer has sent me the name and address of this professor. This is not an easy reform to bring about. The reformer has to make a determined attempt to change the environment wherever possible without distinction of educated and uneducated. We should not feel disheartened about the uneducated if the educated class fails to respond. Wherever possible, it is necessary to arouse public opinion against child-marriages. From such examples, we see every day that modern education has very little to do with spiritual progress. And if we go deeper, we even find that on such matters public opinion is indifferent, and to some extent it even approves of such worthless customs. If that were not so, how would any organization tolerate a man who married a girl fit to be his daughter? And that a professor? Why should students study at all under that type of professor? There are instances of a professor having been boycotted because he had insulted just one student. A professor who contracts child-marriage certainly dishonours students and his own society. But the students, society and all tolerate this outrage. It becomes almost impossible to commit a particular sin if society is not prepared to tolerate it. Therefore, public opinion should be patiently educated against such cruel practices as child-marriage, etc., and where peaceful boycott is possible, that weapon should be used in awakening public opinion. And in accomplishing these tasks if the young people are themselves pure and disciplined, they can help a lot.

¹ Vide “Satyagraha Ashram”, June 14, 1928.
² The letter is not translated here. It cited the case of a professor-widower of 45 who had married a girl of 14, despite his having five children including a married daughter.

[From Gujarati]
_Navajivan, 1-7-1928_

209. A VOLUNTEER’S DILEMMA

A gentleman writes from Bardoli Satyagraha camp:¹

The circumstances in which this gentleman is placed confront many in this country. The rule is that one who accepts selfless service as one’s duty would sacrifice one’s family for its sake. But even though we know this fundamental rule, we do not always find a straight principle to guide us in our conduct. Ordinarily the man oscillates between duty to his family and duty to his country. Under ideal conditions these two duties are not incompatible, but in the present situation we often see only conflict between them. That is so because love of family is based on selfishness and the family members are worshippers of selfishness; therefore, as a normal course it may be suggested that one should plunge into the service of the country after providing for the needs of the family in accordance with the poor living conditions in India. No one can serve the nation by leaving the family to fend for itself. But what can be called a family? And even in a family, who is to be maintained? This article is not meant for him who deceives himself by regarding all his fellow-castemen as his family. Nor is it meant for him who wishes to feed the able-bodied members of the family who sit at home. He who wishes to serve the country will continue his work by remaining above reproach in such matters. It is my experience that the families of such people do not have to starve. It is the right of those who are engaged in the service of the nation to earn enough to meet their needs; and by virtue of that right hundreds of selfless workers support themselves and their dependants.

¹ The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had asked what would happen to his dependants, if he took up national work or joined the satyagraha fight without a wage. For a summary of the Bardoli case, _vide_ Appendix “What is the Bardoli Case”, June 14, 1928.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 1-7-1928

210. A TRUE WORKER

In the death of Pandit Gopabandhu Das, India and especially Utkal has lost a true and sincere worker. He was a gem of Orissa. When ten years ago, (Shri Amritlal Thakkar had gone to Utkal to help during the famine, he used to write from time to time about the high-mindedness of Babu Gopabandhu Das and his unceasing labours and love for the people. During the days of Non-co-operation, Gopabandhu Babu was a member of the Legislative Assembly and used to practise law. Instead of accumulating wealth through his profession he founded a school in Sakhigopal which, although popular, had connections with the Government. He fully appreciated the principle of non-co-operation and severed its connections with the Government. He gave up his legal practice and accepted a life of utter poverty; he also resigned from the Legislative Council. It was not difficult for him to give up both these; it was, however, a great sacrifice on his part to sever the connections of his most cherished school (which had truth for its motto) with the Government and jeopardize its very existence, disregarding the warning given by his friends. Yet, never have I known him to have a thought of regret for what he had done. Once when the school was almost without any students, the pressure from his friends almost weakened him. He once again applied to the Government to restore the school’s affiliation, but when the Government laid down compromising conditions, he at once repented his weakness in making the petition. The Government, by offering such terms, proved its own unworthiness and spared Gopabandhu Babu an undesirable relationship, for which he was grateful to God. The weakness of those who have a simple and pure heart sometimes proves to be their strength. And so it was with Gopabandhu Babu’s weakness. When he spoke about this to me, on the one hand I could see in his eyes and in his speech? his love for his beloved school and, on the other, his extremely candid admission of weakness. This combination appeared to lend him splendour. And when last year he took me to Sakhigopal during our tour of Utkal, it pained me to see the large buildings of the school, set in a beautiful grove, now in ruins. But I saw no sign of despondency in him. He had, during the last four years, realized the great value of khadi in eliminating the poverty of Utkal. He was doing khadi work and discussed with me how to give it greater impetus. Gopabandhu Babu had joined Lalaji’s Servants of the People Society and was its Vice-President. Let us hope the social workers in Utkal will take up the work of Gopabandhu Babu. The noble live beyond their death, while others are as good as dead even while living. We do but grieve over the physical disintegration of saintly persons like Gopabandhu Babu because we look at it from a selfish point of view; but such separations should not pain those who can see with a clear vision that God is not without mercy and dispenses justice. We cannot follow their purity during their lifetime. But we ought to obtain such strength by remembering, in the true sense, his virtues. We find this happening in innumerable instances. That is why we shed the fear and sorrow of death when free from delusion and thus prove the immortality of the soul.

1 Vide also “Notes”, June 21, 1928.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 1-7-1928
211. MESSAGE TO BROACH DISTRICT CONFERENCE

[July 1, 1928]

Those who help Bardoli, help themselves.

The Bombay Chronicle, 3-7-1928

---

212. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

July 1, 1928

CHI. MANILAL AND SUSHILA.

I got your letters. Sushila, believes that she is not fit to write to me. Anyone who sincerely admits in this manner his or her unfitness will strive to the utmost to become fit. I wrote to you rebuking you about the money which you owe to this place. That letter of mine you must have got during the same week in which you wrote to me about it. I had already written by then what I wish I did not have to. I should like you to become vigilant.

Even an ordinary person should observe certain proprieties.

Everyone here is all right.

I dictate this letter at four in the morning.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4740

---

1 Held on July 1. K. F. Nariman presided; Vallabhbhai Patel, Jamnalal Bajaj, Abbas Tyabji and H. J. Amin were among those present. The report adds: “The Conference passed several resolutions supporting the cause of the people of Bardoli, congratulating the people of that taluk for putting up a strong fight in what they believed to be a matter of principle, exhorting the people of Broach not to buy any lands confiscated by the Government, congratulating those members of the Bombay Legislative Council who resigned on the Bardoli issue and calling upon the Hon. Dewan Bahadur Harilal Desai, the Hon. Dehlavi, the Hon. Sir Chunilal Mehta and the Thakore Saheb of Kerwada to resign.”

2 On June 19, 1928; vide “Letter to Manilal and Sushila Gandhi”.

---

VOL. 42 : 2 MAY, 1928 - 9 SEPTEMBER, 1928
213. LETTER TO GOVARDHANBHAI I. PATEL

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
July 1, 1928

DEAR GOVARDHANBHAI,

I have your letter¹. I really do not see that I had added any new conditions. I have told you that what you have stated in your letter might be re-put in my language. If the donors wish the Committee of Inspection to have absolute powers,² I do not mind that at all.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. GOVARDHANBHAI I. PATEL
Lalavasa’s Street, Sankadi Sheri, Ahmedabad

From a microfilm: S.N. 13446

214. LETTER TO R. M. DESHMUKH

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
July 1, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter of the 23rd June.

The suggestion¹ you make does not appear to me to be practicable. Experience has taught khadi workers that unless hand-spinning is organized by experts, it will fail. The Association will not be able to take up any yarn that may be offered to it. It can only take hand-spun yarn that is tested, that is fairly even and therefore yarn that is wound according to the instructions. And I do not think that you will be able to offer to the Association hand-spun yarn that would satisfy these conditions. Moreover if you expect to popularize hand-spinning by sporadic effort and propaganda, it will fail. I therefore suggest to you that you examine the conditions under which the thing is being organized in Mysore and take up hand-spinning after the Mysore style. The special feature of that organization is that a certain district has been handed over to the Association for organization. The organization is financed by the Mysore State. Whether, if you make any such offer to the Association, it can take up or not is a question I have not yet examined nor does the occasion for examination arise until you have any concrete proposal.

¹ Dated June 29, this was in reply to Gandhiji’s letter of June 27; vide “Letter to Govardhanbhai I. Patel”, June 27, 1928.
² Govardhanbhai had written: “It would not be obligatory for the Committee [of Inspection of Labour Schools] to refer to the donors their suggestions, etc., before asking the Labour Union to comply with them, . . .” (S.N. 13442).
³ Explaining the difficulties in marketing hand-spun yarn, Deshmukh had suggested in his letter (S.N. 13627) that in order to enable the Co-operative Department to make hand-spinning a subsidiary industry in Central Provinces, the All-India Spinners’ Association, rather than the Central Banks, should undertake to purchase all such yarn as the members of the co-operative societies produced.

Yours sincerely,

HON. R. M. DESHMUKH
MINISTER FOR AGRICULTURE, CENTRAL PROVINCES, NAGPUR

From a microfilm: S.N. 13631-A

215. LETTER TO MULKARAJ
SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 1, 1928

DEAR LALA MULKARAJ,

I have your two letters, one being a copy of your letter to Pandit Malaviyaji regarding the misunderstanding that has arisen between the Sikhs and the Committee. My advice is that you should promptly and finally deal with this matter. And I do not think that merely fencing will set the matter right, though I agree that fencing is a necessity. There must be a proper and satisfactory settlement of this matter between the Sikhs and the Committee.

With reference to the second letter, I enclose herewith my draft of the inscription to be put on the tablet.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. LALA MULKARAJ
SECRETARY, JALLIANWALA BAGH MEMORIAL FUND, AMRITSAR

From a microfilm: S.N. 15369

1 About the boundary line
2 Jallianwala Bagh Memorial Fund Committee
3 An iron fencing of the Jallianwala Bagh memorial ground from where bamboo jafris erected by the Committee had been forcibly removed by some Akalis and others (S.N. 15367)
4 Vide "Draft Inscription for Jallianwala Bagh Memorial", 1-7-1928.
216. LETTER TO SHAH MOHAMMED QASIM

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

July 1, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. It is not possible for me to notice your letter in Young India without verification. I am now making inquiries and if I feel that publication of your letter or dealing with it in any way will serve any useful purpose, I shall certainly write about it.

Yours sincerely,

SHAH MD. QASIM SAHEB
C/O SYED MD. HUSSAIN, P.O. NURHUT (GAYA)

From a microfilm S.N. 12395-A

217. LETTER TO SECRETARY, JODHPUR STATE

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

July 1, 1928

DEAR SIR,

The enclosed letter has been received by me for publication. But before I do so, I should like to have a reply to the letter on behalf of the State. I shall be obliged if you will kindly let me have a brief reply.

1 In reply to his letter dated June 9, 1928, complaining that the Muslims of Jodhpur had not been allowed to sacrifice goats on the Id Day.
2 Vide the following item.
3 Vide “Letter to Shah Mohammed Qasim”, 11-7-1928.
4 Vide footnote 5 on the preceding page.
5 In his letter dated July 5, 1928, the Secretary wrote: “Against the standing orders of the State a sacrificial he-goat was taken by a couple of Mohammedans through an open street populated by orthodox Hindus. It has been an old practice with Hindus in the State to take hold of sacrificial he-goats when they are taken out openly through their headquarters, make them Amar by putting iron rings in their ears and maintain them for their lives. That he-goat was thus taken possession of by the Hindus, made Amar and made over to the Police for protection because Mohammedans got excited over their religious conduct. The Police kept the he-goat in the City Police Station but the Mohammedans numbering about 3,000 besieged that place and demanded the animal back by show of criminal force. The assailants scaled the walls of the Police Station with lathis and swords in their hands and were about to attack the Police when Military was called who dispersed them. No casualty happened” (S.N. 12397-A).
Please return the letter at the time of acknowledgment.

Yours sincerely,

Enclosure: 10 sheets
From a microfilm: S.N. 12396

218. TELEGRAM TO JAMNADAS GANDHI

SABARMATI,
July 2, 1928

JAMNADAS GANDHI
OPPOSITE MIDDLE SCHOOL, RAJKOT
COME IMMEDIATELY FOR TWO DAYS.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 8698. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

219. LETTER TO BECHAR PARMAR

July 2, 1928

BHAISHRI BECHAR PARMAR,

The drawbacks which you think belong to the barber’s profession are probably to be found in all professions. If everyone, however, clings to his own profession for a living, there would be minimum friction.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS GANDHI

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5567

220. LETTER TO RAMNARAYAN PATHAK

July 2, 1928

BHAIRAMNARAYAN,

I have preserved your letter of April 18 till this day with the idea of writing to you when I got a little time. I certainly felt unhappy at your leaving the Vidyapith¹. I do believe, however, that though you have given up direct connection with it, you will always help as much as you can an institution which you have served. I trust you are keeping good health.

¹ Gujarat Vidyapith

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6110

221. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

_July 2, 1928_

BHAI GHANSHYAMDASJI,

Your letter and the _hundi_ for Rs. 2,700 have been received. I am in touch with China no doubt but I am not inclined to send them a wire. It would smack somewhat of arrogance. I intend to visit China if I live long enough. They want to invite me after things have cooled down a bit.

I always shrink from asking for financial assistance from you and your brothers because you give me whatever I ask for. I understand [what you say] about Dakshinamurti. The fact is that there are plenty of worthy causes in the country but not so many donors. A good cause is not held up but enough new donors are not forthcoming. Fresh tasks are always mounting.

You are right in saying that the value of the Ashram rules depends only upon those who follow the rules. The money has been sent to the Austrian friends².

_Yours,_

_MOHANDAS_

From a copy of the Hindi: C.W. 6158. Courtesy: G.D. Birla

---

¹ Bill of exchange
² Frederic and Francisca Standenath; _vide_ footnote 1 to “Letter to G. D. Birla”, June 18, 1928.
222. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

July 3, 1928

MY DEAR JAWAHAR,

I have your letter. Yes, Father wrote to me all about Kamala and Indu.

It is clear that we have not got the atmosphere for a proper settlement. Look at the Kharagpur horror! There will have to be more pitched battles before the parties come to their senses.

I wish you will not feel lonely. Let us recognize that the task before workers is not as easy as we thought at one time it was. I would like you not to lose patience and take up some plodding work with a living faith in it. Let The Song Celestial be your guide-book.

With love,

BAPU

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1928. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

223. LETTER TO BEHRAMJI KHAMBHATTA

ASHRAM, SATARMA, SABARMATI,

July 3, 1928

BHAISHRI BEHRAMJI,

I did get your letter about Maganlal. I have ceased to think about his death. His soul is present and working in the Ashrameven today. Try and improve your health vastly. Remain cheerful both of you.

Blessings from

BAPU

SHRIYUT BEHRAMJI KHAMBHATTA
LIFE'S NATURE CURE HEALTH HOUSE, ENGLAND

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 4370. Courtesy: Tehmina Khambhatta

1 Maganlal Gandhi passed away on April 23, 1928; vide “My Best Comrade Gone”, April 26, 1928.
224. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 3, 1928

CHI. VASUMATI,

I got your letters. You have given a good description of the celebration there, but you could have given a still better one. You did well in narrating the whole story to Devsharmaji. Here, too, the position about rain is the same. There has been only one shower so far—it was yesterday—and even that was not sufficient for farmers to start sowing.

Mahadev seems likely to recover and be on his feet in a day or two now.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 481. Courtesy: Vasumati Pandit

225. LETTER TO N. R. MALKANI

SATHYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 4, 1928

MY DEAR MALKANI,

I have your letter. What are these two parties over the separation of Sind? I mean Jethmal\(^1\) and others on the one hand and Jairamdas\(^2\) and company on the other? Which are the newspapers you refer to?

You think that it is enough, if the dowry is limited instead of being unlimited. And what about the poor parents who can’t pay Rs. 3,000, the lowest figure mentioned by you?

Please congratulate on my behalf the girls who are helping you in khadi-hawking. It certainly requires special bravery on the part of a Sindhi girl to wear khadi in Hyderabad and then to hawk it.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 887

\(^1\) Jethmal Parasram
\(^2\) Jairamdas Daulatram
226. LETTER TO SRI PRAKASA

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
July 4, 1928

Dear Sri Prakasa,

I have your letter. Do please come whenever you can. I am not likely to move out of the Ashram for some months yet.

I am dividing your cheque equally between Maganlal Memorial and Bardoli.

I am delighted that you have at last joined the Association. I shouldn’t be content till you belong to the “A” class. “B” class is certainly not for such as you.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 13450

227. LETTER TO B. W. TUCKER

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
July 4, 1928

Dear Friend,

I have your letter. Surely there was nothing in your previous letters to be ashamed of. Though I could not accept your judgment, I certainly appreciate the affection underlying your criticism. The attitude that you have taken up with the Deputy Commissioner

1 The reference is to the All-India Spinners’ Association. According to its Constitution, “A class shall consist of persons . . . who deposit regularly from month to month . . . 1,000 yards of self-spun yarn”, and the B class of those “who pay an annual subscription of 2,000 yards of self-spun yarn . . .” Vide “The Constitution of the All-India Spinners’ Association”, September 24, 1925.

2 Tucker, an American Missionary of a Calcutta school, had written in his letter (S.N. 13440) dated June 28: “I have been heartily ashamed of the critical attitude. . . those criticisms were most of them the products of the weaker side of my nature and an effort to justify some of my attitudes about which I have much uncertainty in my own mind and heart. . . .”

3 Tucker had written: “I was utterly astonished when I met Mr. Wares [Deputy Commissioner] to have him tell me that the offence which I had committed was that I had attended political meetings. . . that attendance at such meetings was a violation of the undertaking which the Board of Foreign Missions in America had given on behalf of its missionaries. . . if I did not cease attending such meetings . . . our school in Calcutta . . . would lose the Rs. 175 per month of grant from the appears to me to be correct. Indeed the conduct of foreign missions in India does not in any way appeal to me. It is more expedient and mundane than correct and religious. How can a religious body accept the terms that have been imposed upon foreign missions? The English missionary effort is frankly political. It is in alliance with the Government and takes its code of conduct generally from the Government. Such at any rate is my reading. I expect that one of the reasons which determined Andrews' in giving up the Cambridge Mission was its over-secularity. But here too I write under correction. My own judgment is wholly independent of Andrews's attitude. The present crisis that has overtaken you, I, therefore, regard as a blessing in disguise. And if you have the conviction and the strength, you will sever your connection once for all. And, in my opinion, you will be all the fitter for becoming a messenger of Truth.

I understand what you say about my proposed visit to the West.\(^2\) If the external circumstances are favourable and if I keep good health, I hope to go next year.

Yours sincerely,

REVEREND B. W. TUCKER
“THE MANSE”, DARJEELING

From a photostat: S.N. 13451

---

1. C. F. Andrews
2. Tucker had written: “I agree with your plan not to deliver public lectures but only to meet selected individuals and groups. It will not only save you from the severe strain . . . but it will also enable you to make your message and personality felt in larger measure . . .”
MY DEAR PROFULLA BABU,

I have read the resolution you have sent me. It does not betray either humility or the khadi spirit. I do not know what is humiliating in the letter written by Jamnalalji of which you have sent me a copy. Do you notice any humiliation in the language of the letter or do you derive it from the statement made in the letter? I do not nowadays know what is being done at the Council meetings. I therefore know nothing about the sanction of the ten thousand rupees, except that I might have noticed it when the resolutions were sent to me in due course. But I have no recollection now. Jamnalalji is not at the Ashram. But reading the letter as an outsider, I can see nothing wrong either about its manner or its matter. Supposing that nothing had been collected and that—all the ninety thousand rupees had only remained as promises, could Jamnalalji have given you ten thousand rupees? I know this that at the present moment the Association has not any surplus funds. I should expect you to be careful, patient and not distrustful. After all the Council has no easy job before it to manage. Instead of passing resolutions in condemnation of the Council you should have appreciated its difficulty and corrected its error where it might have been found to be in error. If I were you, I should withdraw the resolution without being asked. But, if you feel that you no longer need any assistance and if you feel unconvinced that you have been hasty in your judgment, you will of course stick to your resolution.

Yours sincerely,

DR. P. C. GHOSH
SECRETARY, ABHOY ASHRAM, COMILLA

From a photostat: S.N. 13631-B

1 “Whereas the letter dated Bombay, the 13th June 1928, of Seth Jamnalal Bajaj, the acting President, A.I.S.A., over the loan of Rs. 10,000 sanctioned in its Council meeting at Bashirhat Is in contravention of the spirit with which the resolution was adopted in the aforesaid meeting and whereas the treatment accorded to us is humiliating and whereas injustice has been done to us in the past and is being done even now, this meeting of the members of the Abhoy Ashram resolves that the said loan of Rs. 10,000 be refused with regret and that no further loan be taken from the A.I.S.A. in future” (S.N. 14448).
229. LETTER TO MASOOD JUNG BAHADUR

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 4, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for a copy of your Convocation Address at the Karve University. I had the cutting made for me from the papers which contained extracts from it and you might have noticed in Young India I have already dealt with the subject matter of your address. I shall now give myself the pleasure of reading it through as soon as I find a few spare moments.

Yours sincerely,

NAWAB MASOOD JUNG BAHADUR
DIRECTOR OF PUBLIC INSTRUCTION
H.E.H. NIZAM’S GOVERNMENT, HYDERABAD, DECCAN

From a photostat: S.N. 13449

230. THE CURSE OF FOREIGN MEDIUM

The spirited plea on behalf of the vernaculars as media of instruction of Nawab Masood Jung Bahadur, Director of Public Instruction, Hyderabad State, recently delivered at the Karve University for Women, has evoked a reply in The Times of India from which a friend sends the following extracts for me to answer:

Whatever is valuable and fruitful in their writings is directly or indirectly the result of Western culture . . . Instead of sixty, we can go back a hundred years and yet say that from Raja Ram Mohan Roy down to Mahatma Gandhi, every one of the Indians who have achieved anything worth mentioning in any direction was or is the fruit directly or indirectly, of Western education.

In these extracts what is considered is not the value of English as the medium of higher instruction in India but the importance and influence of Western culture to and on the persons mentioned. Neither the Nawab nor anyone else has disputed the importance or the influence of Western culture. What is resented is the sacrifice of Indian or Eastern culture on the altar of the Western. Even if it could be proved that Western culture was superior to Eastern, it would be injurious to India as a whole for her most promising sons and daughters to be brought up in Western culture and thus become denationalized and torn from the people.

1 Vide the following item.

In my opinion, whatever reaction for the better the persons named in the extracts had upon the people at large was due to the extent they retained their Eastern culture in spite of the adverse influence of the Western. I regard as adverse the influence of Western culture in this connection in the sense in which it interfered with the full effect that the best in Eastern culture might have produced on them. Of myself whilst I have freely acknowledged my debt to Western culture, I can say that whatever service I have been able to render to the nation has been due entirely to the retention by me of Eastern culture to the extent it has been possible. I should have been thoroughly useless to the masses as an Anglicized, denationalized being knowing little of, caring less for and perhaps even despising their ways, habits, thoughts and aspirations. It is difficult to estimate the loss of energy caused to the nation by her children being obliged to resist the encroachments of a culture which, however good in itself, was unsuited for them whilst they had not imbibed and become rooted in their own.

Examine the question synthetically. Would Chaitanya, Nanak, Kabir, Tulsidas and a host of other reformers have done better if they had been attached from their childhood to the most efficiently managed English schools? Have the men named by the writer of the article in question done better than these great reformers? Would Dayanand have done better if he had become an M.A. of an Indian university? Where is among the easy-going, ease-loving, English-speaking rajas and maharajas brought from their infancy under the influence of Western culture one who could be named in the same breath as Shivaji who braved all perils and shared the simple life of his hardy men? Are they better rulers than Pratap the intrepid? Are they good specimens of Western culture, these Neros who are fiddling in London and Paris whilst their Romes are burning? There is nothing to be proud of in their culture which has made them foreigners in their own land and which has taught them to prefer to waste the substance of their ryots and their own souls in Europe to sharing the happiness and miseries of those over whom they are called by a higher Power to rule.

But the point at issue is not Western culture. The point at issue is the medium of instruction. But for the fact that the only higher education, the only! education worth the name, has been received by us through the English medium, there would be no need to prove such a self-evident proposition that the youth of a nation to remain a nation must receive all instruction including the highest in its own vernacular or vernaculars. Surely, it is a self-demonstrated proposition that the youth of a nation cannot keep or establish a living contact with the masses unless their knowledge is received and assimilated through a medium understood by the people. Who can calculate the immeasurable loss sustained by the nation owing to thousands of its young men having been obliged to waste years in mastering a foreign language and its idiom of which in their daily life they have the least use and in learning which they had to neglect their own mother tongue and their own literature? There never was a greater superstition than that a particular language can be incapable of expansion or expressing abstruse or scientific ideas. A language is an exact reflection of the character and growth of its speakers.

Among the many evils of foreign rule this blighting imposition of a foreign medium upon the youth of the country will be counted by history as one of the greatest. It has sapped the energy of the nation, it has shortened the lives of the pupils, it has estranged them from the masses, it has made education unnecessarily expensive. If this process is still persisted in, it bids fair to rob the nation of its soul. The sooner therefore educated India shakes itself free from the hypnotic spell of the foreign medium, the better it would be for them and the people.

Young India, 5-7-1928
231. OUR TOBACCO BILL

A correspondent who is interested in a variety of reforms asks what the nation pays for her tobacco bill. I find that we pay for unmanufactured tobacco and cigarettes 213 lakhs of rupees per year. The cost is increasing every year. The import of unmanufactured tobacco which was 1 million lb. in 1923 rose to 5 million in 1927. There was a corresponding increase in the import of cigarettes. If the references I have consulted are reliable, we do not export any of our own tobacco. Therefore the value of that considerable crop has to be added to the figures quoted above. If every smoker stopped the dirty habit, refused to make of his mouth a chimney, to foul his breath, damage his teeth and dull his sense of delicate discrimination and made a present of his savings to some national cause, he would benefit both himself and the nation.

Young India, 5-7-1928

232. AN AMERICAN TRIBUTE

One of the many American friends who visit and sometimes stay at the Ashram writes thus\(^1\) to Mrs. Maganlal Gandhi:

The memory of the two days I spent in 1925 at the Ashram, and particularly, in your hospitable home, stays with me like a benediction. . . . Mr. Maganlal Gandhi, whom I have always considered one of the rarest and most beautiful souls I ever met. Though so true an Indian, he had a sympathy and understanding broad as life itself. He seemed the very embodiment of that spirit of satyagraha which I had come to know through the writings of Mahatma Gandhi, in Young India. Strength, purity and sweetness radiated from him like perfume from a flower....

One felt in his presence . . . that every gift, every ability, every part of his being had been laid upon the altar, consecrated to God for the highest purpose to which man as a human being can aspire. Not that he talked religion or stressed piety—even the tone of his voice showed the same, practical, efficient man of affairs that he was about the Ashram; but religion was the spring from which the current of his life flowed, and the sanctity which emanated from his presence was the sanctity that comes from surrender of self—the constant habit and purpose of living and doing for others. . . .

\(^1\) Only excerpts are reproduced here.

It was worth going round the world to have met him alone, when one considers all that his life means to India from the support which he gave and still continues to give to the work of the great Mahatmaji.

But I am well aware that words of commendation for the dear departed, whatever their sincerity, or the sympathy they seek to convey, are of little avail in assuaging grief like yours. I must remind you, however, that the potency for good of a soul like that of Mr. Maganlal Gandhi cannot wholly leave the sphere of its usefulness here on earth. It abides in a thousand tangible ways and will be there to comfort you, even though the bodily form be removed by death. But more truly than in any other way he will be with you in your children—your two beautiful daughters and your son, who will take up the work and carry it on—the great work to which the life of your revered husband was so nobly consecrated.

Young India, 5-7-1928

233. LETTER TO BHUPEN

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
July 5, 1928

MY DEAR BHUPEN,

I had your letter enclosing a cheque for Bardoli fight.

You remind me that you have received no acknowledgment of your previous letters. The fact is I am terribly in arrears with reference to my correspondence. And even today I had to make a search in the file and take your letter out of the order in which the letters are lying and in which I am dealing with them in order to be able to reply to you. I hope to write something about the Santhals in Young India. Don’t ask me to do anything beyond that. I must not give you a letter to the Birlas, nor am I able to do anything else whilst I am buried in the Ashram where I must remain buried for the time being.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 13454
234. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

July 5, 1928

CHI. MATHURADAS,

I have received your letter. Why does Dilip have to be seen by a doctor? Have you found any reason for the plague breaking out in Panchgani? At Deolali there is only Pranlal’s bungalow. Is it not possible to have accommodation there? I hope you do not have to climb up and down while you look for a bungalow. Or, can Shankaran not do it? Here the rains have been very well received.

I had dictated this letter at 4 o’clock in the morning. While I sign it, another letter from you has arrived.

Blessings from

BAPU

SIT. MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI
C/O SHETH PRANLAL WEVKARAN
BANGANGA ROAD
BOMBAY

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

235. MESSAGE TO “THE HINDU”

July 6, 1928

I gladly add mine to the many tributes that will be paid to The Hindu on its Golden Jubilee. I consider The Hindu to be one of the best, if not the best, among the Indian owned dailies throughout India.

From a microfilm: S.N. 13456

1 For its Golden Jubilee Commemoration Number, October 4, 1928
236. LETTER TO A. RANGASWAMY IYENGAR

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 6, 1928

MY DEAR RANGASWAMY,

Here is my humble message¹ for the Jubilee Souvenir Number.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. A. RANGASWAMY IYENGAR

“THE HINDU” OFFICE, MOUNT ROAD, MADRAS

From a microfilm: S.N. 13457

237. LETTER TO E. C. DEWICK

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 6, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your cordial letter. As owing to the death of Maganlal Gandhi all my plans have become upset, I am not sure whether I would be able to attend the Federation meeting in Mysore. But I will not finally make up my mind against the idea of going to Mysore.

Yours sincerely,

REV. E. C. DEWICK

2 INFANTRY ROAD, BANGALORE

From a microfilm: S.N. 13455

238. LETTER TO P. RAMACHANDRA RAO

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 6, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. You will see the constitution and rules of the Ashram in Young India of June 14th.² Much as I should like to have your daughter in the Ashram, I very much fear that she won’t be able to stand the comparatively rigorous life that is being led at the

¹ Vide the preceding item.
² Vide “Satyagraha Ashram”, June 14, 1928.
Ashram. Then she would be terribly handicapped for want of knowledge of Hindi. She will have nobody to talk to in English or Kanarese. And then there is not that literary atmosphere about the Ashram which your daughter might crave for. There is a studious attempt to create an atmosphere of labour in the Ashram. Lastly you will notice from the Ashram rules that as we have made great changes, the desire is not to take new admissions for one year. Some time is required for settling down.

Yours sincerely,

S. P. Ramachandra Rao
Cloth Merchant
Tumkur (Mysore State)

From a microfilm: S.N. 13458

239. LETTER TO M. P. SRINIVASAN

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
July 6, 1928

Dear Friend,

I have your letter. In my opinion, you are not bound to marry against your will, even to please your parents. But you are bound to vacate the house if your father is so desirous. Obedience to parents has well-defined limits. Disobedience becomes a virtue when the orders are repugnant to the moral code.

I do not know of any book on fasting that can be of any use to you.

Yours sincerely,

S. M. P. Srinivasan
Sub-Editor, Tamil “Swarajya”
2 Vallabha Agraharam, Tiruvateesvarampet
Triplicane, Madras

From a microfilm: S.N. 13459

240. LETTER TO SAMANDLAL

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
July 6, 1928

Dear Friend,

I have your letter. As the Ashram is just now undergoing many changes, the Committee of Management has thought it desirable to restrict for the time being even temporary admissions as far as possible and since your main object is to learn spinning, I can tell you that you will be able to learn it easily in Madras as you will find many there to help you.

Yours sincerely,

BABU SAMANDLAL
C/O SIT. M. G. KARNIKAR
90 IMALI BAZAAR, INDORE (HOLKAR STATE)

From a microfilm: S.N. 13461

241. LETTER TO M. M. ASLAM KHAN

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 6, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. You will please excuse me for not being able to give you anything. Without knowing a magazine, it is very difficult for me to frame anything be it ever so short.

Yours sincerely,

M. M. ASLAM KHAN
SUFI MANZIL, PINDI BHAUDDIN, PUNJAB

From a microfilm: S.N. 13462

242. LETTER TO ANAND SWARUP

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 6, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. Permission has already been granted for translations of “My Experiments with Truth” in Urdu and Hindi.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. ANAND SWARUP
ADVOCATE, H.C., SAHARANPUR, U.P.

From a microfilm: S.N. 13463
DEAR DR. ANSARI,

I have had a full chat with Dr. Zakir Husain. The position is certainly very precarious. The liabilities are accumulating and the money collected for the Jamia Millia Fund cannot be released till a proper trust-deed is made, which is the condition in the original announcement. The constitution framed is acceptable neither to Jamnalalji nor to me, nor is it in accordance with the terms we discussed when you were here. What is to be done in the circumstances? I feel that the new Committee should surrender all the powers to the professors who have pledged themselves to become life-workers, or the committee should become an active working body and take charge of the institution so far as the financial liabilities are concerned. But from what Dr. Zakir Husain tells me and from what I can see for myself, the Committee will not act swiftly and effectively. And if it neither acts nor surrenders full control to the working professors, I can see nothing but a lingering death for the Jamia and that would be a terrible tragedy. One would not mind it if it was inevitable. What should happen to the Ajmal Jamia Fund collected up to now is difficult to say. If a trust-deed acceptable to us four collectors cannot be made, the only way possible in order to release the fund is to publish the constitution that has been framed and call upon the donors to signify their wish whether they want their donations to be given to the Committee under the constitution. of course, this is a most unsatisfactory thing and hardly a step that can be taken, if we will cherish the memory of Hakim Saheb' and value the good of the Jamia. Is it then not possible to give the full control to the working professors and then they can frame a proper trust-deed and release the fund already collected and make an effort to collect more?

Yours sincerely,

[Signature]

DR. M. A. ANSARI

I DARYAGUNJ, DELHI

PS.

Dr. Zakir reminds me that I have said nothing in this letter about the time-limit. Time in this case is of the essence. I therefore hope that you will come to some definite conclusion long before so that there may be either a decent burial to the Jamia or that the Jamia may resume its work with some degree of safety.

1 Ajmal Khan

From a microfilm: S.N. 14930

244. LETTER TO R. S. KADKIA

July 6, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. It is not possible to give you a detailed reply to all the questions you have put, but it is possible to give you a general reply, namely, that wherever you can curtail your requirements so as to bring yourself to a level with the poor you should do so, and, in considering your requirements, you should as a rule decide against yourself. And if you do so, you are likely to reach the real minimum.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. R. S. KADKIA
CONGRESS OFFICE, HYDERABAD (SIND)

From a photostat: S.N. 13460

245. LETTER TO SHAUKAT ALI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 6, 1928

DEAR BROTHER,

I got your letter after the Governor of Kabul had already seen me. We had a very affectionate and cordial interview. I was however sorry that I did not know of his coming beforehand.

I enclose herewith a copy of my letter1 to Dr. Ansari. It speaks for itself. Dr. Zakir Husain has seen it and he agrees with its terms.

Yours sincerely,

MAULANA SHAUKAT ALI
CENTRAL KHILAFAT COMMITTEE, DONGRI, BOMBAY

From a photostat: S.N. 13465

1 In reply to his letter dated July 3, requesting Gandhiji to meet Ali Ahmed Khan, Governor of Kabul

Vide “Letter to Dr. M. A. Ansari”, 6-7-1928.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
DEAR BHAGWANJI,

I have your letter. Your balance-sheet is all right but you need to try still harder. Remain where you are and try to observe the rules to the best of your ability. Inspire your wife also to try and practise the ideal of self-control. You will not succeed so long as you only try to reason with her. Cravings of the body cannot be quietened by arguments. But when she sees in you firmness combined with love, she cannot but be infected by your aspiration. Do not give up the job hastily. But the moment you find that you may be violating truth for the sake of the job give up the latter as we would let go a serpent we may find on our hands.

Blessings from

BAPU

BHAISHRI BHAGWANJI PURUSHOTTAMDAS
C/O VRAILAL PRADHAN & CO.
PROMA, BURMA

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9792. Courtesy: Bhagwanji P. Pandya

247. LETTER TO BHAGWANJI P. PANDYA¹

[After July 6, 1928]²

DEAR BHAGWANJI,

Come when all your expectations have died out and only a sense of duty is left behind and there is perfect agreement between you two.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9789. Courtesy: Bhagwanji P. Pandya

¹ This was in reply to the addressee’s letter enumerating his difficulties in joining the Ashram and from the contents appears to have been written after the preceding one.

² ibid
248. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 7, 1928

CHI. VASUMATI,

I get your letters regularly. I see that it is a difficult task to persuade the people there to improve the cleanliness. How can anything be done in a matter like this so long as the head of the institution is not keen about it? All the same, you should slowly try to bring about changes in a manner which will cause no friction. You should never get upset, but should show infinite patience.

You must have come to know that Prabhavati fasted for four days to cure her rheumatism. It is impossible to say yet whether the rheumatism has disappeared.

A prolonged discussion is going on regarding the common kitchen.

Blessings from

BAPU

CHI. VASUMATIBEHN
KANYA GURUKULA

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 482. Courtesy: Vasumati Pandit

249. LETTER TO HARIBHAU UPADHYAYA

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 7, 1928

BHAI HARIBHAU,

Read the accompanying letter and let me know what truth it contains. The correspondent has told the story about Bihar, but it concerns Rajputana. Probably, therefore, you will be able to say more about it.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 6060. Courtesy: Haribhau Upadhyaya

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
A reader writes to say:

This problem is worth giving a thought to. It is not only farmers who are harassed by monkeys. In places like Prayag, Vrindavan, etc., monkeys harass even the citizens a great deal. People who are thus troubled would not be displeased if the animals were killed or removed by someone.

Although I thus admit that monkeys are a nuisance, I cannot immediately suggest the remedy of killing them.

There can be no comparison between a rabid dog and monkeys. The former is bound to die from the disease itself. Anyone who kills it saves it from the torture and spares others the danger of contracting the disease while in the case of monkeys, there is no question of doing good to them by killing them. Again, it is not as if the nuisance of monkeys cannot be prevented without killing them.

It is often seen that, wherever there is this monkey nuisance the fault lies with us. Monkeys are petted, they are given food and are treated in many ways which encourage them to take liberties with us. Monkeys are a very intelligent species. They understand us immediately. I had seen in Vrindavan that in all Indian locality they would fearlessly continue to destroy things, while in the area occupied by Europeans there is no trace of monkeys because they are afraid that they would get a beating if they went there. The threat of beating is also a form of violence. There is no need to concern ourselves here in solving that complex problem. The question is only whether or not monkeys can be saved from the final form of violence—that of killing. I feel that so long as the situation is under our control, we may perhaps be able to spare them capital punishment.

Readers must know that nowadays trade in monkeys is being carried on a large scale. Thousands of monkeys are exported to Europe for making various kinds of experiments on them and in fact many cruel experiments are made on them before they are killed. Therefore, it is but proper to adopt whatever measures we can to prevent an increase in their number.

Now remains the question of death penalty. I realize that, if it is our dharma to protect fields and, if there is no other way of protecting

---

1 The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had asked Gandhiji whether monkeys might be killed in the same way as rabid dogs.
these from the nuisance of monkeys, then the necessity to kill them does arise. But that is not non-violence. The slaughter of animals even for the sake of saving fields involves violence. That some such forms of violence are part and parcel of human life and are unavoidable is a fact that we encounter at every step. It is difficult to say when the killing of monkeys becomes actually inescapable, but it is not difficult to find out ways to spare ourselves this slaughter. If in spite of those remedies the nuisance does not diminish, each should work out his own dharma. There can be no uniform general rule for the killing of monkeys. Violence is never an independent dharma. There is only one such dharma and that is non-violence. Violence is a measure of the degradation of man; non-violence is his highest achievement.

[From Gujarati]

_Navajivan_, 8-7-1928

251. MY NOTES

STUDENTS’ SACRIFICE

Students are contributing to the Bardoli Satyagraha Fund by saving money on their food and clothing and by working; that is a good sign. One more example of such sacrifice is that of the students of the Kutchi Visa Oswal Jain Hostel. They have informed me that they had stopped drinking milk for a month and thus saved Rs. 220, which amount their association has donated to the Fund. For this sacrifice the students deserve thanks and the Bardoli satyagrahis should note that, having accepted such sacrificial help, they have a duty to adhere more firmly to their pledge. It is no exaggeration to say that, at present, the honour of India rests in their hands.

WHAT SHOULD STUDENTS DO?

Three students write to say: “We wish to serve the country. Do please let us know through Navajivan how we can do this while continuing our studies and remaining where we are”. These students have sent their names, addresses and age, and add: “Do not publish our names and addresses, etc. Don’t even write to us. We are not even in a position to receive your letters.” It is difficult to give advice to such students. What advice can be given to those who cannot even receive a reply to their own letters? Nevertheless, this much can be said that purity of soul is itself a good service to the country. Have these students acquired purity of soul? Is their heart pure? Have they been able to stay away from the polluted atmosphere prevalent amongst students? Do they practise truth, etc.? The very fact that they are unwilling to receive a reply implies that something is amiss. Students should learn to shed such fears. They should learn to put forward their views before elders with boldness and determination. Do students wear khadi? Do they spin? They are taking part in national service even if they do this. Do they serve a sick neighbour in their free time? Do they spare some time to clean up, by their own efforts, any filth in their neighbourhood? Many such questions can be asked, and if students can answer them satisfactorily, even today they will have a place of honour among public servants.

MARRIAGE OF OLD WITH YOUNG

Last week I had to tell the story of a professor’s marriage with a young girl. This week some Bhatia friends have written to me about the marriage of a wealthy Bhatia. This octogenarian has got married to a young girl by giving Rs. 25,000 or 30,000 to her father. In this marriage, it is difficult to say who is more to blame—the eighty-year-old man who has married for the fifth time a young girl or the father who for greed of money has sold off his daughter like a helpless cow being sent to a slaughter house I have heard that some Bhatia gentlemen made efforts to thwart this greed, but the eighty-year-old bridegroom, proud of his wealth, turned them out.

Only last week, I thought out the remedy to prevent such cruelty. I can think of no other method but creating non-violent public opinion and non-violent boycott. And this would mean not only boycott by the caste, but by the whole society. All relations with such people should be severed, except when helping them when they need food, or during illness or in case of death. Without this, it would be difficult, if not impossible, to awaken such men out of their lust.

CHILD-WIDOW

The reader will recollect that I had written a few weeks ago about the intention of Shri Muljibhai Barot to marry a young girl. Later I had congratulated Shri Muljibhai on having given up the idea of this marriage, because of the article in the Navajivan and the criticism of the Brahmabhett caste. Subsequently I received a letter that the announcement was nothing but a fraud and that Shri Muljibhai had got married secretly without the knowledge of his caste. I had decided to write about this last week, but could not do so for want of time. Now news has come that Muljibhai has passed away leaving the young girl a widow. We would not wish the death of a person whether good or bad. We wish that the bad may develop good sense—on the principle of wishing to others what you wish for yourself. But what about the young widow? It is for society to consider this question. Even if a fourteen-year-old girl declares that she wishes to remain a widow, this has no meaning. Such a girl would certainly wish to remarry if cruel public opinion is not against her doing so. The leaders of the Brahmabhett caste should rush to the rescue of this poor girl. If the leaders have not understood their duty, the young men of the caste should patiently convince them and rescue the young girl. If the leaders are not convinced, but if the relatives are, then too, such problems can be solved. But to solve such problems the well-wisher himself should possess the requisite qualities. He should have purity of mind and heart and also patience. These qualities are required for the achievement of swaraj through peaceful means; these very qualities are needed also for the solution of such problems as the marriage of young widows and so on.

---

1 Vide “My Notes”, 1-7-1928, sub-title, “Professor’s Marriage to a Young Girl”.

HAWKING KHADI

Shri Rishabhdas, of Wardha Khadi Bhandar, writes of his experience while he went round hawking khadi:

All hawkers of khadi must be having such experiences. Shri Malkani has written in one of his letters that selling khadi from door to door is for him a valuable training in politics. For others it is a training for developing patience. For Rishabhdas this training leads to further strengthening of his faith in God. But faith in God is not something so easily attainable. Rishabhdas and his colleagues got success immediately, but God puts many of his devotees to a test even unto death. A true devotee does not link his faith in God with the achievement of success. Success and failure are one and the same to him.

1 आकांमण्डल सर्वप्रभुम

2 The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had stated that, while selling khadi from door to door in Maharashtra, he had received further confirmation of his faith in God.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
METHOD OF SELF-RELIANCE

The contribution of the method of svavalamban¹ towards carrying out propaganda for khadi should not be underestimated. There is no doubt that this is popular and that it is the most straightforward course of action. Shri Jethalal Govindji who is working for khadi in Bijolia and who is a staunch advocate of this system writes to say:²

According to him other methods should also be adopted along with this one. But very few have made a scientific study of the method of self-reliance, and even fewer have had any experience of it. Therefore, wherever this system is practised, it would prove very useful if khadi workers write about their experiences. Everyone can propagate this system at least in his neighbourhood. But as the saying goes, ‘one cannot go to heaven before one’s own death’; similarly anyone who does not produce his own khadi cannot carry on propaganda for others adopting this principle.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 8-7-1928

252. LETTER TO SHIV DAYAL SWHANEY

July 8, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I am sorry that you, a young man of 27, should give way to despondency. You should be brave and surmount all domestic difficulties You may not leave your wife and children as you propose. Suicide is undoubtedly a sin, which you must not commit on any account. It is no use coming to the Ashram in the expectation of peace. Peace we must find wherever we are. But as I have said in my telegram to you, you should consult Lala Lajpat Rai and act I accordance with his advice. It would be difficult from this distance for me to guide you. I shall be glad to hear in reply to this letter that you have regained your elasticity and that you have shed your weakness.

¹ The principle that one should spin enough yarn to meet all one’s needs by way of cloth; literally, ‘self-reliance, self-sufficiency’

² The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had stated that, the requirement of cloth per head being very small, farmers and agricultural labourers, if trained, could produce all that they need.
The balance of the money sent by you has been transferred to the Bardoli Fund.

Yours sincerely,

S. J. T. SHIV DAYAL SAWHNEY
C/O PANDIT MULKRAJ
OVERSEER, CAMP, LELLPUR, PUNJAB

From a microfilm: S.N. 13467

253. LETTER TO AMBALAL SARABHAI

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 8, 1928

DEAR BROTHER,

A district conference is to be held here regarding Bardoli. It has been unanimously decided to invite Shri Kelkar¹ to preside over it. I feel that it would add to the effectiveness of the conference if you could agree to be the chairman of the reception committee. If you have no objection to it in principle, I would urge you to accept the position. I feel there is need at the present juncture for us to express our unanimity of views.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 11121. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

254. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 10, 1928

CHI. VASUMATI,

I have your letter. Your efforts seem to produce good results. The more your words are inspired by love, the more the effect they will have. You should work for the institution² there as if it were your own. After having drawn people’s attention to the drawbacks there, you should adopt a generous attitude so that they may not feel hurt but, on the contrary, may thank you.

¹ N. C. Kelkar
² Kanya Gurukula; vide “Letter to Vasumati Pandit”, 7-7-1928.
I trust you are keeping very good health. Instead of telling you about the things here in just one sentence, I have asked Kusum to write to you. You will, therefore, have the maximum information and, since she will write at the same time that I do, unnecessary postage will also be saved. I am sure you have made it a practice to keep account of every pie that you spend there. If you have not, you should start now.

Ramdevji, too, writes to me.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]
I have not revised this.

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 483. Courtesy: Vasumati Pandit

255. LETTER TO HAFIZ MOHAMMED ABDUL SHAKOOR

July 10, 1928

I am opposed to the purdah system if only because men do not put themselves behind the purdah.

From a microfilm: S.N. 13441

256. LETTER TO SHAH MOHAMMED QASIM

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 11, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

With further reference to your letter of 9th ultimo, I enclose herewith a copy of a letter received from the Jodhpur Darbar in reply to my enquiry.

Yours sincerely,

Enclosure: 2 sheets

SHAH MOHAMMED QASIM
C/O SYED MOHAMMED HUSSAIN
P.O. NURHUT, GAYA

From a microfilm: S.N. 12397

1 According to S.N. Register this was a reply to Hafiz Mohammed Abdul Shakoor’s letter dated June 28, 1928, from Madras asking Gandhiji for his views on purdah among Muslims.

2 Vide footnote 3 to “Letter to Secretary, Jodhpur State”, 1-7-1928.
257. LETTER TO MANAGER, INDIAN PRESS LTD.

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 11, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter and the book called The Coming Renaissance1. I am very sorry to have to tell you that I have not a minute to spare for reading and reviewing the book. Nor is [it] usual for me generally to review books in the pages of Young India. Do you wish me to return the book?

Yours sincerely,

THE MANAGER
THE INDIAN PRESS LTD., ALLAHABAD

From a microfilm: S.N. 13471

258. LETTER TO K. R. BHIDE

July 11, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. Your Father will be welcomed to the Ashram whenever he comes. But either he or you will please inform the Secretary of the Ashram beforehand when he may be expected.

With reference to your questions, you can answer them for yourself if you are a constant reader of Young India or Navajivan. If you are not, I should suggest your searching the files of these papers.

I think it is possible for you to receive training at the Young India office if you can begin work as a common labourer. But this depends more upon the manager than upon me as I do not interfere with the management of the press.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. K. R. BHIDE
LIMAYE BUILDING, CHIKALWADI, BOMBAY-7

From a microfilm: S.N. 13473

1 By P. M. L. Varma
259. LETTER TO B. M. TWEEDLE

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 11, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter and the packet of pencils. You have correctly guessed when you say that I might not approve of your method of raising funds for clearing your debt. It would seem to me to be easier to make a direct appeal for a donation than to sell a particular thing at double or treble its cost price. In either case an appeal to one’s charitable instincts has got to be made. Why then mix it up with the selfish instinct? But I may not argue.

As required by you I am reposting the box.

Yours sincerely,

MISS B. M. TWEEDLE
WESLEYAN MISSION VILLAGE INDUSTRY
TRIVELLORE, ChINGLEPUT DISTRICT, SOUTH INDIA

From a microfilm: S.N. 13472

260. LETTER TO GOVARDHAN BHAI I. PATEL

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 11, 1928

DEAR GOVARDHANBHAI,

I thank you for your letter. I regret the decision of the Committee.³

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm: S.N. 13475

¹ On account of the new school building.
² Dated July 7 in reply to Gandhiji’s letter of July 1. Govardhanbhai had written: “The subject-matter of my recent correspondence with you was placed before the meeting of the contributors to the [Ahmedabad Mills] Tilak Swaraj Fund for their consideration... The meeting rejected the proposal for a Committee of Inspection and reaffirmed their previous resolution for a Committee of Joint Administration quoted in my letter to you of the 26th June 1928. . . .”
³ A copy of this was forwarded to Shankerlal Banker for information.
261. LETTER TO T. PRAKASAM

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
July 11, 1928

DEAR PRAKASAM,

May I not have a reply to my last letter?

Yours sincerely,

S. T. PRAKASAM

“Swarajya”, Madras

From a microfilm: S.N. 13634

262. LETTER TO SHANKARAN

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
July 11, 1928

MY DEAR SHANKARAN,

I have your letter and the cheque sent to Chhaganlal Joshi. The names will appear in due course.

There is no breach of asteya when the donor’s consent is obtained for the use of his donation for a cause other than the one or which it was originally meant.

On the principle that a labourer is worthy of his hire, a worker may be considered to have reduced his wants to nil when he is satisfied with the minimum of food and clothing and accommodation and then too if he makes no condition that he should be fed and clothed against service. The institution that takes work from him will feed him and clothe him for its own sake. One who has surrendered himself completely will cheerfully face starvation, if starvation is to be his lot. After all self-surrender is a mental attitude. The millions who starve helplessly have surrendered nothing because their minds do not co-operate with their enforced starvation.

I am sending you this letter before knowing your new address. I hope you will receive it.

From a photostat: S.N. 13469

1 A copy of this was forwarded to Secretary, A.I.S.A., Ahmedabad, with reference to his letter.
2 Dated May 24, 1928
3 Non-stealing
263. LETTER TO S. A. SAHASRABUDDHE

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 11, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have all your letters. I do not necessarily acknowledge all the correspondence I receive, if only for want of time. I do not notice in Young India all the functions that may take place with reference to men dead or alive whom I may admire.

I have not altered my opinion that I have expressed before about Shivaji and other heroes. But because they are not my gurus nor my models, I am not blind to their heroism nor to the important part they have played in the world drama.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. S. A. SAHASRABUDDHE
ZATBA’S WADI, PAREKH BUILDING
GIRGAON, BOMBAY

From a photostat: S.N. 13470

264. LETTER TO M. B. NIYOGI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 11, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I am glad that Sjt. Awari is keeping well.

I know that he holds very strong views about khadi. My own opinion is that after having explained his position if he is still compelled by the jail authorities to wear the uniform made of non-khadi, he ought not to make it a point of hunger-strike. I see no harm in his agitating for uniform made of khadi and I think that you should help him in this direction. His objection cannot be to the jail

---

1 Dated July 7, which read: “Manchar Shah Awari of Nagpur had led a movement known as Sword Satyagraha and was sentenced to four years’ rigorous imprisonment. . . . Mr. Awari insists that he should be permitted to wear his own khaddar clothing . . . . The jail authorities are prepared to allow him to use his own khaddar next to skin but insist on his wearing the jail uniform over it. Mr. Awari is not agreeable . . . . I request you to give your opinion on the point whether wearing private khaddar clothing next to skin and jail uniform over it, offends against the vow to wear khaddar; and whether death is a better alternative to acceptance of the compromise proposed by jail authorities.” uniform, but his objection is and can be to the kind of cloth of which the jail uniform is made. He can even offer to have khadi uniform made at his expense. Without his prompting, I do not see with you should not see the authorities and have this very simple matter regulated without any fuss.

Yours sincerely,

S. M. B. NIYOGI
ADVOCATE, CRADDOCK TOWN, NAGPUR

From a photostat: S.N. 13474

265. NOTES

EDUCATION FOR SERVICE

A friend sends the following interesting extract from The Service of Motherhood by M.E.D. Smith:

Our educational methods have been far too slipshod. It has, for instance, been too much the practice at our universities to let the young men learn if they choose, but if they find study distasteful, then to allow them to idle their time away almost at their own pleasure. It seems strange that it should have been overlooked what a wrong was thereby being done to the nation, for wrong it assuredly is, since every member of a nation is born into it to serve, not to be a mere passenger. For the slack methods pursued certain of our educational heads are much to blame. Blind to the needs of the hour and dwelling in an atmosphere of aloofness and self-complacency, they have failed to appreciate the real aim and the vital importance of education. Let us hope that in the future it will be accounted as great a disgrace to omit to take advantage of opportunities for learning as it now is for a soldier to desert his post.

Be it remembered that this is said of national education as of national military service. It will be as wrong to serve in an army of hirelings drilled and paid to crush the spirit of their kith and kin as it would be to belong to an educational institution designed to subserve the purpose of a foreign domination.

KASHI VIDYAPITH

Principal Narendra Deva of Kashi Vidyapith, Benares Cantonment, sends the following for publication:

1 The extract which is not reproduced here gave the date of reopening of the Vidyalaya, subjects taught, minimum qualifications for admission, etc.
This is one of the few national institutions that still retains its existence, thanks mainly to Babu Shivaprasad Gupta’s faith and generosity.

ARE WE GETTING POORER?

Professor Sam Higginbottom sent me some time ago for answer a series of questions on India’s poverty. As his inquiry was serious and as I know him to be desirous of helping us to solve this difficult problem, I thought that instead of merely giving my own answers, I would seek the assistance of experts in the matter. Letters were therefore addressed to a few such friends asking if they would make time to give their considered opinion. Professor C. N. Vakil of the University of Bombay has kindly sent me his opinion in a series of articles. The first instalment the reader will find elsewhere in this issue.

ALL-INDIA COW-PROTECTION ASSOCIATION

A general meeting of this Association will be held at the Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati, at 3.30 p.m. on 25th instant to consider the following resolution:

“In as much as the All-India Cow-protection Association has not been able to command public attention and sympathy commensurate with the all-India character it has claimed, and inasmuch as its activities have been confined to the slow spread of the objects of the Association and especially to helping to conduct a dairy and tannery at the Satyagraha Ashram in terms of the objects of the Association, and inasmuch as the subscriptions and donations are mainly confined to those who are interested in the experiment, and inasmuch as the numerous goshalas and pinjrapoles which were expected to respond to and be affiliated to the Association have failed to do so, the existing members of the Association hereby resolve to disband it and to adopt the less pretentious title of Cow-protection and Preservation Society and to entrust the affairs, management and

1 Vide “Our Poverty”, 6-9-1928.
2 Entitled “The Poverty Problem in India”. These were published in Young India on July 12, 19 and 26, August 2 and 9, 1928.
3 Formed by Gandhiji on April 28, 1925
4 For resolution as amended and adopted at the meeting, vide “Service, not Protection”, 2-8-1928.
control of the funds and stock of the Association to the following Committee of Management of the Society with full powers to disburse the funds, conduct the said experiments, to add to their number and otherwise carry out the objects of the Association and to frame a constitution and rules for the management of the Society and to make such amendment thereof as may from time to time be required.”

It is unnecessary for me to write anything more on the reason for bringing forward the resolution. Sjt. Jamnalalji and I have felt for a long time that we were not doing justice to the Association or the public by running it under the ambitious general title without showing work or results in keeping with the high title. The funds too are principally those that he has received from personal friends and some received by me for the experiments, which I believe are most important if the cow is to be saved from destruction. It therefore seems that it would be proper and more honest to make the Association a small society of those who are interested in and approve of the methods advocated in these pages for the preservation of the cow. The funds at the present moment are about Rs. 17,000, the stock consists of a few books mostly gifts received by me. The current monthly expenditure is about Rs. 55. The liability of the Association is to disburse such expenses as may be incurred by the Ashram for the purpose of conducting the experiments entrusted to it.

Young India, 12-7-1928

266. AWAKENING AMONG STUDENTS

The message of Bardoli has not yet been fully delivered. But incomplete as it still is, it has taught us lessons which we shall not easily forget. It has revived our drooping spirits, it has brought us new hope, it has shown the immense possibilities of mass non-violence practised not from conviction, but like most virtues with most of us as a policy. The descriptions I have heard from eye-witnesses of the wonderful demonstration held in Bombay in honour of Sjt. Vallabhbhai Patel, the spontaneous offering of Rs. 25,000, the affectionate besieging of his car, the showering of gold and bank notes on him as he was passing through the huge crowds, the ovation that signalized his entry into the theatre are proof of what Bardoli has wrought in the space of a few months by its courage and sufferings.
Marked as the awakening has been throughout India, it has been more marked amongst the students and the most among the Bombay students. I tender my congratulations to Sjt. Nariman and the brave lads and lasses on whom he has acquired such a wonderful hold. And among the students the eye-witnesses single out the three Parsi girls, Miss Davar and Misses Bhesania, who by their boundless enthusiasm and courage are said to have electrified the student world in Bombay. Mahadev Desai has a letter from a student in a Poona College whose students on the 4th instant spontaneously observed the Students’ Bardoli Day, stopped all work and made collections to which there was a willing response. May this manifestation of courage on the part of the students of Government colleges and schools never die out nor fail at the crucial moment. The letters being received from students of self-denial practised by them for the sake of paying their humble mite to the Bardoli funds are most touching. The students of the Gurukul Kangri, Vaishya Vidyalaya, Sasawane, a hostel in Ghatkopar, Supa Gurukul near Navasari and several other institutions which I cannot recall at the time of writing have been either doing labour to earn a few rupees or denying themselves milk and ghee for a month or less.

It would have been monstrous if the lesson that the rustics of Bardoli, especially the illiterate women whom we have hitherto refused to count amongst the fighters for freedom, have been teaching us by their silent suffering and cool courage, had been wholly lost upon us. It can be said without fear of contradiction that it was the students of China who led the fight for freedom in that great country, it is the students in Egypt who are in the forefront in Egypt’s struggle for real independence. Students of India are expected to do no less. They attend schools and colleges or should attend not for self but for service. They should be the salt of the nation.

The greatest obstacle in the way of students is fear of consequences mostly imaginary. The first lesson therefore that students have to learn is to shed fear. Freedom can never be won by those who are afraid of rustication, poverty and even death. The greatest fear for students of Government institutions in rustication. Let them realize that learning without courage is like a waxen statue beautiful to look at but bound to melt at the least touch of a hot substance.

Young India, 12-7-1928
267. LETTER TO BARBARA BAUER

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

July 13, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I don’t know how the story about miraculous powers possessed by me has got abroad. I can only tell you that I am but an ordinary mortal susceptible to the same weakness, influences and the rest as every other human being and that I possess no extraordinary powers.

Yours sincerely,

MISS BARBARA BAUER
BIG SPRING, TEXAS, U.S.A.

From a microfilm: S.N. 14349

268. LETTER TO DR. JOSIAH OLDFIELD

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

July 13, 1928

MY DEAR FRIEND,

What a joy to receive your letter after so many years.

You must have seen in the Press that I could not make up my mind to go to Europe this year. I have a mind to do so next year. If I do I have no doubt that we shall meet somewhere. But whether I shall be able to come to your Hospital as a friendly visitor or as a patient to receive medical and nursing care I do not know.

Yours sincerely,

DR. JOSIAH OLDFIELD
LADY MARGARET HOSPITAL, DODDINGTON, KENT

From a photostat: S.N. 14352

1 Dated May 24, 1928, which read: “My request of you is this: To resurrect my dear brother who recently passed away.... I know you can accomplish it in a Master's way.... I know you are endowed with these Divine Powers . . .” (S.N. 14314).

2 Lated June 20, 1928, which read: “Pray . . . be sure of a very hearty and warm welcome if you can spend any time under my care here ... If you need any medical or nursing care we will gladly give it to you...” (S.N. 14331).
269. LETTER TO L. CRANNA

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 13, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

With reference to your letter1 of the 18th May last, the letter written to “Sustaining Members” to which I sent you the reply2 was addressed by yourself to me. It bears your signature. I enclose herewith the original.

It is amusing how misrepresentations some of which appear to me to be wilful, are made about me and my belief in so many papers—even those which profess to be conducted on Christian lines.

Yours sincerely,

Enclosure: 1
L. CRANNA, ESQ.
C/o Y.M.C.A., SINGAPORE

From a photostat: S.N. 14345

270. LETTER TO ADA ROSENGREEN

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 13, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter and the German book3. I think I have told you that I do not know German.

Nothing is yet settled about my visit to Europe next year.

I hold strong views about divorce. My own opinion is that if husband and wife do not agree temperamentally and there is always a jar between them, they should live in voluntary separation. But I do not accept the propriety of either party remarrying. Being a believer in the necessity of celibacy, I naturally incline to the view that the

1 Which read: “I am at a loss to know how my letter to Sustaining Members got into your hands, and would be very grateful to you if you would enlighten me” (S.N. 14313).
3 Prepared by the Neutral Committee which had investigated the cause of the World War.
greater [the restraint] the man or woman exercises the better it is for himself or herself.

Yours sincerely,

M. ADA ROSENGREEN
LIDINGO, SWEDEN

From a photostat: S.N. 14346

271. LETTER TO H. N. MORRIS

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 13, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter and a copy of Helen Keller’s book, My Religion.

I am not unfamiliar with Helen Keller’s name and work. But I am sorry to have to inform you that I get not one moment to read much that I should like to read. The book you have sent me therefore still remains unread. But of course it will be read with interest by the inmates of the Ashram.

As you must have seen in the papers, I have to abandon the idea of visiting Europe this year. It is just probable that I may pay that visit next year.

Yours sincerely,

H. N. MORRIS, ESQ.
140 WITHINGTON ROAD, WHALLEY RANGE, MANCHESTER

From a photostat: S.N. 14347
272. LETTER TO SAMUEL M. HASSAN
SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 13, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I consider myself unfit to guide you in choosing your course in medicine.

Your name has been duly sent to the Manager, Young India Office.

With reference to the Hindu-Muslim unity, etc., I agree with you that there should be a perfect union between the different communities and a great effort is being put forth in order to bring about that unity.

Regarding Mother India I refer you to my article¹ in Young India dated 15th September, 1927.

When you return to India you will be welcome to the Ashram.

Yours sincerely,

SAMUEL M. HASSAN, ESQ.
GENERAL CHEMISTRY SYRACUSE UNIVERSITY, SYRACUSE, U.S.A.

From a photostat: S.N. 14348

273. LETTER TO W. COLDSTREAM
SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 13, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your cordial invitation. If I succeed in my desire to visit Europe next year, I have no doubt that we shall meet somewhere and I shall be glad of the meeting. But whether I shall be able to accept your hospitality or not is more than I can say at the present moment. The possibility is that I shall not be master of my engagement.

Yours sincerely,

W. COLDSTREAM, ESQ.
69 WEST CROMWELL ROAD, LONDON, S.W. 5

From a photostat: S.N. 14350

¹ Entitled “Drain Inspector’s Report” dated September 15, 1927.
274. LETTER TO MRS. CAMEBUS

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 13, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. Mrs. Anasuyabai has told me all about you. It is not possible to encourage you to come here. And in any case I would like you not to come except for a trial and unless you have sufficient means to take you back provided the climate does not agree with you. I feel, however, that it is better for you to remain where you are and do such service as may fall to your lot.

Yours sincerely,

MRS. CAMEBUS

34 DE CRESPIGNY PARK, LONDON, S.E. 5

From a photostat: S.N. 14351

275. LETTER TO ABID ALI JAFFERBHAI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 13, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

Here is the message for your Annual:

Those who live in places outside India such as Singapore should bear in mind that they are the trustees for the honour of the nation to which they belong and therefore their conduct should be above board and absolutely honest with strangers in whose midst they are living. They should also retain the bond with the poorest in the motherland by the use of khadi.

Yours sincerely,

ABID ALI JAFFERBHAI

YOSUF BUILDING-C, MOUNT ROAD, MAZGAON, BOMBAY 10

From a photostat: S.N. 14568

1 Teacher and social worker
276. LETTER TO SHANKERLAL BANKER

Unrevised July 13, 1928

CHI. SHANKERLAL,

Enclosed is a letter from Jamnalalji. Come on receipt of it so that we can talk it over.

Subhas Bose has written a letter of complaint from Calcutta. I have not been able to find time so far to reply to it.¹ You should not worry about anything. We must do what we can. I wish you would not burden yourself with too much work. Come to me any time you wish. I can spare a little time for you. How nice it would be if you could come daily and have one meal or both meals here? Even that one meal fills me with peace. For it is not merely a meal but the leavings of a yajna —it is my keen desire and attempt to make it so.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32728

277. LETTER TO U. K. OZA

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

July 14, 1928

MY DEAR OZA².

I have your letter³. You have put upon me a burden which I am ill able to bear. The proposal you make seems to me to be attractive,

³ Dated June 27, 1928, suggesting terms of settlement between Indians and Europeans of East Africa on the question of common electoral roll. Oza had added: “The European community agree to a common electoral roll for both the communities. The voters’ qualification should be based on a residential, age and educational or property qualification. The educational test should be reading and writing of English. The Indian view has been expressed to the effect that the property should be definitely possession of real estate valued at £1,000. I differ and think it should be lower. . . . The above proposals were first to be put before the Congress and if they were approved of, prominent Indians and Europeans were to affix their signatures to them and issue them as a joint manifesto outlining a fair basis of settlement of the Indian question in Kenya” (S.N. 12855).

¹ For Gandhiji’s reply to Subhas Chandra Bose, vide “Letter to Subhas Chandra Bose”, July 18, 1928.
² Editor, Democrat, Nairobi; General Secretary, East African Indian National Congress.
³ Editor, Democrat, Nairobi; General Secretary, East African Indian National Congress.
but I am unable to guide you offhand. I can only say therefore that the local men are the best persons to decide. The caution that I would like to utter is that whilst the local men are the best persons to decide, they are expected in anything they may do, not to compromise the dignity or the honour of the nation as a whole.

With reference to the last paragraph of your letter experience has hardened my faith in ahimsa. From all that is happening around me, I do not learn the lesson of himsa but of himsa. I may be totally wrong, but I have no knowledge or feeling of wrong about me.

I have sent you a cable saying “wait”.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm: S.N. 12855-A

278. LETTER TO S. G. VAZE

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 14, 1928

MY DEAR VAZE,

Here is a copy of a letter from Oza. With my reply. I do not feel safe about guiding and I have told him as much. But you have studied the situation locally. Can you guide him?

I am writing to Benarsidas also. I have cabled Oza asking him to await reply.

I was greatly pleased with your Bardoli report.

Yours sincerely,

SJR. S. G. VAZE

SRENTS OF INDIA SOCIETY, POONA

From a microfilm: S.N. 12861

1 Which read: “I believe you will soon have to lead a strong youth movement and personally I think that you will have to lay aside non-violence also. Do you not see the gathering clouds all around?”

2 Banarsidas Chaturvedi

3 The report was prepared by Hridayanath Kunzru, Vaze, Editor of The Servant of India, and Amritlal Thakkar, all members of the Servants of India Society. For a summary of the report by Mahadev Desai, vide Appendix “Bardoli Report”, before July 14, 1928.
279. LETTER TO BANARSIDAS CHATURVEDI

[July 14, 1928]¹

BHAI BANARSIDAS,

Here is a letter from Oza. I am in no way qualified to advise him. You can write something on this subject to him.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

[From Hindi]
Banarsidas Chaturvedi’s correspondence with A.I.C.C. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum

280. LETTER TO PRABHASHANKER PATTANI

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 14, 1928

SUJNA BHAISHRI,

I got your letter. Were it not that Mahadev is ill and confined to bed, I would probably have sent him to the station for his own satisfaction. But now I am sending none. However, Chi. Kusum has to go to the station to meet her friends and so I take the opportunity to tell you through this note that all of us are looking forward to your arrival.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 3223. Courtesy: Mahesh Pattani

¹ Vide the preceding item.
MY NOTES

THE SCORPION OF PASSION

A student from Calcutta writes to say:

It has been my experience as well as that of my associates that if a husband and wife voluntarily observe brahmacharya, they can experience maximum happiness and see it increase every day. There is no difficulty in demonstrating the glories of brahmacharya to an uneducated wife or, we may say, that brahmacharya knows no distinction between the educated and the uneducated. It is simply a matter of having moral strength. I know some uneducated women who observe brahmacharya although they are married. A husband who observes brahmacharya is better able to protect the virtue of his wife even in a corrupt social environment. Absence of brahmacharya does not prevent a wife from deviating from the path of virtue, but instances can be cited where it has provided a cover to a wife’s depravity.

The power of brahmacharya is immeasurable. It is my experience in many cases that he who observes brahmacharya is himself not free from lust and is hence unable to impress his wife with his endeavours. Lust is a clever fellow; hence he does not take long to discover his friends. A wife who is not free from lust and is not yet ready to shed it, perceives at once the passion hidden in her husband’s heart and secretly laughs at his feeble and fruitless endeavours while she herself remains fearless. None should doubt that the brahmacharya which is constant and full of pure love burns up the lust of the other person and reduces it to ashes. Among the many beautiful images which I saw at Belur, there was one where the craftsman had given passion the form of a scorpion. This latter had stung a woman. Its intensity had made her naked and thereafter lifting its tail and lying at the woman’s feet in the pride of its victory, it smiled at her. There is the pleasant coolness of brahmacharya in the eyes, in the touch, in the speech of a husband who has conquered this scorpion. Within an instant, he cools off and pacifies the lust around him.

---

1 The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had asked Gandhiji how one could observe brahmacharya with regard to one’s wife.
MARIAH OF OLD AND YOUNG OR DEBAUCHERY?

I take the following extract from a sister’s letter¹:

There is justification in this sister’s argument. But the remedy is the same that I have already pointed out.² Society may well boycott the man who practises debauchery. But if we accept the plea that as long as society does not boycott an adulterous man we should not boycott an old man who marries a child-bride, it will take a long time to prevent such ill-matched unions. There is no doubt that debauchery is to be condemned. Both parties are willing partners in debauchery and when one of them wishes to get out of this sin he or she can do so. In the case of a union of an old man and a child-bride, there is room neither for reform nor for atonement because dharma itself comes in the way of stopping that adharma. Dharma proves as a sort of shield to this so-called conjugal relationship. Moreover, when adharma assumes the guise of dharma, it is not less blameworthy but more so because hypocrisy is added to it.

It is a matter of regret that society is as unconcerned about unions of old men and child-brides as it is about adultery. Hence, without confusing the two issues, the said sister, other sisters and young men should take the question of such unions in hand and build up public opinion against them. Those who wish to bring about this necessary reform should of course be pure themselves. It is the verdict of law that “those who wish to seek justice must purify themselves and then enter the temple of justice.” Experience fully supports this rule.

TO HIM WHO IS GOOD, THE WORLD IS GOOD

When I felt sad on hearing people being found fault with, a friend startled me by repeating the following³. As I liked the verses immensely, I share them with the reader in order to make him a partner in my enjoyment:

When we knew not our own state
We kept looking at others’ failings,

¹ Not translated here. The correspondent, referring to Gandhiji’s advice that society should boycott old men who married child-brides, had asked how that could be done when many people considered such unions as permitted and proper. She added that there were men who though married kept mistresses and society did not boycott such men.
² Vide “My Notes”, 8-7-1928, sub-title, “Marriage of Old with Young”.
³ Urdu verses
But when we saw our own defects
There was none bad in our eyes.
Says Zafar that he is no man who
However brilliant and self-controlled
Does not remember God in his hour of happiness
But forgets Him in his anger.
I hope that “poets” will not rain poems on me because I have made bold to quote this verse. I know that we cannot bring about inner purity by means of beautiful poetry; hence poems rarely find a place in Navajivan. But there is a story behind the use of the above poem and hence it has been presented to the reader in the hope that at any rate after having seen their own failings, people will stop finding fault with others.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 15-7-1928

282. QUESTIONS OF A GRADUATE

“SILK AND TIGER-SKIN”

A graduate of the Vidyapith writes to say:¹

I have no doubt that from the point of view of ahimsa silk and tiger-skin should be given up. Similarly, things like pearls too should also be given up. It seems that people in the age in which the custom of wearing silk and tiger-skin was prevalent, did believe in the dharma of ahimsa, but still continued to use these things. This is because at that time they realized the usefulness and necessity of silk and tiger-skin and hence despite their faith in ahimsa, they used both these. Despite their belief in the principle of ahimsa our predecessors made sacrificial offerings of animals, and we find some people doing so even now. Those who sacrifice animals state on the authority of the Shastras that violence done for the sake of yajna cannot be termed violence. Similarly, those of us who eat a strictly vegetarian diet, destroy vegetables which have life in them, and believe that this does not affect our ahimsa.

¹ The letter is not translated here. The correspondent wondered how silk and tiger-skin could be considered sacred by people who professed nonviolence.

The moral we derive from all this is that human beings cannot altogether abstain from himsa. Even those living only on air and water are guilty of himsa to some extent. Therefore, we can make a rule that the use of anything which involves himsa should as far as possible be abandoned. And while practising such renunciation, we should not criticize but extend charity to those who do not do so.

Although, as mentioned above, we needs must be simple in our habits of eating and dressing, and although our dharma is to save the lives of lower beings, yet we should realize that the ahimsa practised in such self-control is not everything but only a small part of dharma. We find every day that a person who meticulously practises this type of ahimsa can also be guilty of great himsa, and may have no sense of ahimsa at all. From the fact that, following inherited traditions, we use certain things for eating and dressing we cannot claim that we practise ahimsa towards these objects. Let the material results be the outcome of ahimsa which is practised through tradition or necessity; in itself, however, ahimsa is a noble sentiment and can only be attributed to the person whose mind is non-violent and is overflowing with compassion and love towards all beings. A person who does not take non-vegetarian food even today because he has never done so, but loses his temper every moment and robs others regardless of morality or immorality? And is unconcerned about the happiness or unhappiness of those whom he robs, such a person can in no case be regarded as non-violent but may be said to be guilty of great himsa. Diametrically opposed to him is the person who eats meat in accordance with inherited traditions, but is overflowing with love, free from anger and hatred and treats everyone as equal; he is truly non-violent and deserves to be revered. While considering ahimsa we always think of it in terms of eating and drinking; that is not ahimsa, that is a state of unconsciousness. That which gives moksha, that which is the supreme dharma, in whose presence ferocious beasts shed their violence, an enemy sheds his hatred, a hard heart is softened, this ahimsa is a supernatural power and it is only attained by a few after great effort and penance.
CAPITAL AND LABOUR

The second question of the graduate is as follows:¹

The distinction between capital and labour is not a recent one. It has been in existence since ancient times. In this age it has reached an acute stage because there is a great awakening in the labour class. Again there has been an increase in the number of capitalists in this age, and capitalism has assumed a fierce form. In olden days the king was the principal capitalist, besides a few who came into contact with him. But in our times there has been a sudden increase in the number of capitalists. How can it be said that the world is progressing in such circumstances? But the way to mend the situation is not through hatred of the capitalists, that is by using force against them. I believe that capital and labour will always remain in greater or smaller proportions. I believe too that we can, by conscious effort, reduce a good deal the differences between the two. The words of a Chinese king quoted by the graduate are as good as gold. In this world, someone has to carry the burden of whoever sits idle. Therefore, it is a sin to sit idle even for a moment; if we understand this, we will be able to resolve many of our problems and, just as it is wrong for anyone to sit idle, so it is for anyone to take or hoard more than one needs. If people starve, this is the reason.

PURPOSE OF KHADI

The third question of the graduate is as follows:²

That is surely one of the purposes of khadi; but there are many others also, i.e., To provide the agricultural class with some occupation which can be widely practised at home during spare time; to boycott foreign cloth; to ensure that there is an increase in the spirit of co-operation amongst the people; to provide thousands of middle-class people with an honest livelihood and, if crores of people understand the message of khadi, they would realize that the strength to achieve independence is readily available in it.

With the success of khadi the supremacy of the mill will surely end.

¹ Whether in view of capitalists continuing to enjoy comforts at the expense of labour, the world can be said to be progressing.
² Whether there is any purpose underlying the khadi movement other than the proper distribution of wealth and whether as a result of this movement the machine age will eventually come to an end.
A FEW WORDS TO THE GRADUATE

The graduate has asked several other questions, but I feel there is no need to answer them. Those questions are regarding past life, rebirth and destiny. These questions have been raised since times immemorial. I would advise the graduate to have patience in order to find solutions to such problems. Whatever answers I give, ten other questions could be asked in reply to them and thus the battle of wits will continue for ever. The royal road is for us to keep ourselves engaged in doing the duty that lies before us, and to be patient and hopeful that God will solve spiritual problems. We have a clear understanding of sin and righteousness; the dharma, that we should do good deeds and avoid sinful ones, has been handed down to us through the ages. We should remain satisfied with this. The battle between fate and strenuous human effort is always on. While doing a good deed we should rely on the latter. The Gita has suggested this easy road. One should do one’s duty without expectation of reward.

Lastly, I would suggest to the graduate to improve his handwriting. Good handwriting is a beautiful art. It is the outward mark of good breeding. I found some difficulty in reading his letter. I could not myself learn to write a neat hand. No one pointed it out to me during my student-days, nor was I taught to do so, and, afterwards I did not find the time to improve it. But, because I give trouble to many who have to read my handwriting, I have, out of self-pity, taken the trouble to read the graduate’s letter. Graduates and all students should take a lesson from my mistake and learn to write a hand as beautiful as pearls, at least for the sake of their friends.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 15-7-1928
283. AN ARMY AGAINST AN ANT

While on the one hand the Bardoli enquiry\(^1\) conducted by Pandit Hridayanath Kunzru, Shri Vaze and Shri Amritlal Thakkar has ended the doubts of the few Indian leaders who still had doubts and has enlisted public opinion without exception in favour of the satyagrahis, there is on the other hand a rumour circulating that the Government is mobilizing a large army to attack the ant. Some persons claim that the Imperial Government, sitting on the Simla heights, is charging the Bombay Government with incompetence for allowing leadership to pass into the hands of Sardar Vallabhbhai, and is now issuing orders from Simla as if the Bombay Government had not itself fully exploited the four weapons of sama, dama, etc. It is also rumoured that the present discontinuance of the work of the police and attachment officers portends the ominous lull before the storm. These are the faint and distant echoes of the Government’s preparations of a new and more aggressive strategy.

But the Bardoli satyagrahis should remain utterly unaffected by such rumours. If they are false, the Government will be less to blame and the satyagrahis be tried less. If they are true, the cup of the Government’s sills will be filled to the brim, and the satyagrahis will get the desired opportunity to prove their worth.

Someone has said, “One who is forewarned is ever at ease.” On the basis of this, satyagrahis should be fully prepared. If the rumour is true and the Government takes an unexpected step by launching a sudden attack and creating confusion amongst the satyagrahis, it could break up their ranks, and whatever has been gained so far would be instantaneously lost.

Where the commander is awake all the twenty-four hours, what need is there to give a warning? What need is there to wake up those who are already awake? Eternal vigilance is one of the inevitable conditions of satyagraha. Moreover, satyagrahis do not have to concern themselves with the problem of different kinds of strategies. The satyagrahi’s strategy remains the same for all ages, all places and all circumstances. After all, can even the rich have more than two eyes however much they want to? A satyagrahi learns his first and last lesson with his oath; therefore, the work of the commander and his army becomes simple, straightforward and easy. Satyagraha is a wonderful remedy needing no modification. One ‘No’ from the satyagrahi is capable of eradicating the thirty-six diseases. Let the Government confiscate our property, attach all our land, imprison us, exile us, put us to the sword or blow us with cannonballs. One who cannot pass any of these tests cannot be considered a true satyagrahi.

\(^1\) Vide Appendix “Bardoli Report”, before July 14, 1928.

A satyagrahi’s vow can never be observed in parts because truth is not composed of parts. Truth is only one, whole and indivisible and stays as such for all time, past, present and future. Truth can be compared to an arch. If even one brick of the arch comes off, the whole arch crumbles. Because a counterfeit coin is accepted at ninety-nine shops, it does not acquire the worth to be accepted in the hundredth shop. It was a false coin from the very moment of its making—only its real test was delayed.

Similarly if a satyagrahi is unable to pass the final test, he was never a satyagrahi. He might be anything else. The nation might have gained by whatever sufferings he has undergone; he too might have gained from the self-denial; however, he cannot be ranked among satyagrahis, he cannot receive the certificate of being a satyagrahi. In words similar to Solon’s, it can be said of a satyagrahi: “Do not regard anyone as a satyagrahi before his death.”

The satyagrahis of Bardoli should remember this statement and carry it into their hearts.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 15-7-1928

284. THE ALPS OR THE HIMALAYAS?

The swadeshi sentiment does not end merely with khadi. One, moved by this, will get one’s wants supplied from near at hand, that is, from one’s own native land. Such a one is content with this and, dissatisfied with his hut will not envy another’s palace, nor strive in vain to acquire one.

This thought struck me when I read a beautiful description1 of a scene near Almora in the Himalayas, which a friend has sent me:

The Alps is a mere kid compared to the Himalayas. The people of Europe have a right to be crazy over the Alps. They derive joy in its valleys and gain health. They do not have to come to the Himalayas and, if they do, they do so only after paying their debt to the Alps. We who are educated, do not know the Himalayas, do not know and do not care to know the miraculous health-giving properties of the plants which grow on them. We take no note of the fact proved by Ayurveda that the very air of the Himalayas is medicinal. We take no pride in the beauty of the Himalayas.

---

1 This is not translated here.

How splendid it would be if young men were made to travel on foot in the Himalayas! How much would that add to their health, their span of life, their knowledge, their national pride and their skills! Even students with average means could undertake such a trek.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 15-7-1928

285. EQUANIMITY IN HONOUR AND DISHONOUR

The Secretary of the Nadiad Taluk Congress Committee has asked me to write a note on the addresses presented to Shri Lakshmidas Purushottam Asar and Imam Saheb Abdul Kadar Bawazeer by the residents of that taluk on June 24. Normally, such events are not mentioned in Navajivan. Workers have to face both honour and dishonour. When no note is taken of dishonour, how can honour be recorded? Moreover, both of them are inmates of the Ashram. How can notice be taken of the addresses presented to them? If they need the encouragement of an address or notice of it, they cannot continue as inmates of the Ashram. But an important point behind this welcome address certainly merits notice. Neither of these workers knows English and neither has learnt Gujarati at school. Both of them have studied in the school of experience and yet Shri Vallabhbhai would never have been able to complete successfully the important relief work without these and many other workers who like them were unlettered in English. Shri Lakshmidas has by his capacity for work charmed Sir Purushottamdas. In every aspect of the relief work the latter could notice Shri Lakshmidas’s “scrupulousness in accounts, his impartiality, his great ability and his administrative capacity”. Our experience of this relief work as well as that which we are gaining in Bardoli shows us clearly that for running the administration under swaraj, we shall not need many learned men with a knowledge of English or capable of delivering speeches but we shall need workers who love the people and know their language, who understand their needs, who are truthful, dutiful, industrious, poor, fearless and indifferent to honours.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 15-7-1928

286. LETTER TO MOTILAL NEHRU

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
July 15, 1928

DEAR MOTILALJI,

I have your letter¹. Fortunately Vallabhbhai came here for the District Conference. I had a full chat with him. He thinks that it is not possible for him to wear the crown at least for this year, as even if the Bardoli struggle is finished there will be an immense amount of consolidation work to be done which will require his undivided attention. I think he is right. He is therefore out of the question. The more I have thought about yourself, I feel the more that you should be reserved for a more propitious occasion and I thoroughly agree that we should give place to younger men. And amongst them, there is no one even to equal Jawahar. I have therefore telegraphed to you saying that I am recommending his name for adoption by provincial committees, unless I receive a wire from you to the contrary in reply to my wire.

I have your circular letter today to the members of the Committee. Indeed I should go further and under the constitution reserve for the future parliament the right to revise on the score of justice and equality the obligations that we might be called upon to shoulder. Whether we have the strength today to carry out even the milder suggestion made by you is another question. But as you say, we must at least speak out our mind.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 13636

¹ Dated July 11, suggesting Vallabhbhai Patel or, alternatively, Jawaharlal Nehru for the Congress Presidentship (S.N. 13633)
287. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 15, 1928

CHI. VASUMATI,

I got your letters. You must bear as inevitable what you cannot remedy there. Think which verses in the Gita teach us to do this, and tell me if you spot them. Whenever you are in difficulty, look into the Gita. If you go on doing this, you will find the work a veritable Kamadhenu. I may die any day. The Gita will be with you till the hour of death, and is your provision even for the journey beyond. Have patience and love for every teacher and pupil who does not behave properly towards you, and you will win them over. Be content with whatever you can teach in the time which Vidyavatiji spares for you. Why cannot you use the takli instead of the spinning-wheel? For persons like us the spinning-wheel is a means not of livelihood but of yajna. Explain this to Vidyavatidevi. As you should not reply back, or even feel angry, when anyone criticizes you, irrespective of whether the criticism is right or wrong, so you should not when you hear any criticism of me.

It is raining much here. One may actually say that the rains obey our wishes. It will take some time before Mahadev is all right and on his feet, but he is improving every day.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 484. Courtesy: Vasumati Pandit

288. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 15, 1928

CHI. MANILAL AND SUSHILA,

I got the letters from both of you. I get no time these days and so dictate most of the letters between three and four in the morning. This I find convenient. I have to give much of my time to the problems of the common kitchen. I do that because the experiment seems to me an extremely important one and it is essential that I pay attention to it. At present about a hundred persons take their meals in it. Despite this large number, there is no noise at meal-time and complete peace is preserved. One cannot be sure, though, how long this will last. We have shifted the kitchen and merged it with the one in the Hostel, and the room formerly used for the purpose is now occupied by women. If you were here at present, you would thus see the Ashram changed in many ways. Chi. Chhaganlal has handed over about Rs. 10,000 which he had accumulated and now observes the vow of non-possession quite strictly. He had the fullest co-operation of Chi. Kashi in this act of self-sacrifice. That family has now joined the common kitchen. Mahadev had Rs. 4,000 with him, and he has handed over that amount. The separate kitchens which still remain will have closed down by the next Kartik Sud 1. There are only a few of them.

Harilal came and stayed here for one day. Ramdas and Rasik are still at Bardoli. The Gita recitation is kept up every day. The eighteen chapters are finished in fourteen days.

I was prompted by love in writing what I did about the Rustomji case in the “Autobiography”. I have omitted other names but given this one; my aim in giving certain names is that they should be remembered as long as the “Autobiography” is recognized as an important work. I follow what you say about Miss Schlesin. But, then, isn’t she half crazy? She has written a sort of wild letter even to me. Ask me again if you do not follow my point.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.] I have not revised this.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4741

---

1 Pt. IV, Ch. XLVII, published in Young India, 12-4-1928
2 Sonja Schlesin; vide An Autobiography, Pt. IV, Ch. XII; also “A Correction”, June 28, 1928.
289. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

July 16, 1928

Bhai Ghanshyamdasji,

I have your loving letter. The fact is that its language will further prevent me from stretching out the begging bowl. But has a beggar prudence? Therefore whenever I am helpless I shall be at your doorstep.

It now appears that some settlement will come about in Bardoli.

Yours,

Mohandas

From Hindi: C.W. 6161. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

290. LETTER TO HEMPRABHA DAS GUPTA

July 17, 1928

Dear Sister,

Your letter to hand. If you are really calm that will give the girl her peace.

Nikhil’s problem is a deep-seated one. If you have given up your attachment for his body, please do not at any cost deceive Nikhil. If he does not wish to take a medicine prepared from meat, he should not be compelled to do so. And he should not be restrained if on doctor’s advice he wants to take it. It should be left entirely to Nikhil. If however you have any doubts on this matter, then it becomes your duty to persuade Nikhil to take the medicine. It is mentioned in the books which are described as Shastras that there is no harm in taking wine or meat in the name of medicine. Among vegetarians too there are many who see nothing wrong in taking meat, etc., in the name of medicine. Do not act impulsively.

Blessings from

Bapu

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1658
291. LETTER TO VIJAYA

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 17 [1928]¹

CHI. VIJAYA,

I was very glad to read your letter. It will be God’s grace if Prabhudas recovers. Do keep writing to me. Because of the plague at Panchgani, Mathuradas is also thinking of coming there.

Blessings from
BAPU

CHI. VIJAYABEHN
LILAVATI SANATORIUM
BLOCK NO. 2
DEVLALI

From a copy of the Gujarati: Chhaganlal Gandhi Papers. Courtesy Sabarmati Sangrahalaya

292. LETTER TO C. S. VISHWANATHA IYER

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 18, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. There was a letter before also. Unfortunately I have not been able yet to go through the manuscript¹ that is always lying in front of me. But I am so overwhelmed with work and new responsibilities that it is not possible to tell you when I shall be able to go through your manuscript. All I can tell you is that I am desirous of going through it.

¹ The year has been inferred from the reference to the outbreak of plague at Panchgani; vide “Letter to Mathuradas Trikumji”, September 2, 1928. The source, however, has “1925”, obviously a slip.

² Of the Gita translations
I am under the impression that you had a copy of the manuscript that you gave me. If you are in a hurry to have your manuscript returned, please do not hesitate to tell me, but if not, I would love to keep it till I have found time to read it.

Yours sincerely,

Sjit. C. S. Vishwanatha Iyer, Vakil
90 Extension, Coimbatore

From a microfilm; S.N. 13478

293. LETTER TO K. VENKATAPPAYYA

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
July 18, 1928

Dear friend,

I had your long letter regarding C. V. Rangam Chetty. Of course I did not want you to give me such an elaborate thing. So far as I am myself concerned, I never doubted the propriety of your action, according to your own best judgement.

Personally I do not think we should insist upon exclusion of khadi manufactured in other provinces. I discussed the thing with Shankerlal today and he promised to write to you more fully.2

Yours sincerely,

Sjit. Konda Venkatappayyagaru
Guntur

From a microfilm: S.N. 13642

294. LETTER TO SUBHAS CHANDRA BOSE

The Ashram, Sabarmati,
July 18, 1928

Dear friend,

I have your letter and I have a letter from Satis Babu too giving me chapter and verse in answer to your letter of which you had very

1 Shankerlal Banker
2 A copy of this with Venkatappayya’s letter was forwarded to Secretary, A.I.S.A., for necessary action.
correctly sent him a copy. Whilst I do not know much about the manner in which Satis Babu is carrying on propaganda to educate public opinion in favour of his view, I must confess as I have said in my letter to Sjt. Sen Gupta that I share the view Satis Babu takes of the Exhibition. In my opinion, we must not take in everything, even in the shape of machinery unless we are absolutely certain that it is beneficial and requires encouragement without which it would not be taken up by the public. I do not believe in distracting public attention by introducing in the Exhibition, even things that may be beneficial but that may not require Congress patronage for use by the public. Thus, for instance, I would not have in the Exhibition watches which we do not manufacture but we do need but which the various manufacturers have ample means of advertising. But in this matter we may differ in our opinion and if such is the case, there is no reason why each opinion should not be put before the public without leading to bitterness or acrimony. If there is anything definite against Satis Babu showing that he has been unscrupulous in his propaganda, I would gladly write to him about it.

I hope that there is no trace whatsoever of the illness you have contracted whilst you were under detention in Burma. I have received your telegram about Pandit Motilalji. Motilalji himself is disinclined to accept the honour. I share his view and subject to Sjt. Sen Gupta’s consent I had prepared an article for publication in the forthcoming issue of Young India. But on hearing from him in answer to my wire I cancelled the article and I shall say nothing about the election in the pages of Young India or elsewhere unless Bengal friends would let me.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. SUBHAS CHANDRA BOSE
CALCUTTA

From a photostat: S.N. 13641

---

¹ Dated July 17, which read: “Bengal unanimous in favour of Motilalji’s Presidentship. Kindly recommend him otherwise pray remain neutral” (S.N. 13640).
MY DEAR BROTHER,

I had just received your letter. Your matter-of-fact description of your sister and her death tells more than an adjectival description could have of the grief you have felt over the loss of one who was not merely a sister to you but a friend in need. But I know I do not need to commend to you God’s care and mercy. You have enough and independent faith in you and therefore do not stand in need of prompting from without. Whilst I share to the full your condemnation of the English officials, I cannot like you exonerate the Nawab for his heartlessness even in the face of death.¹

I hope you will win your High Court case.

I understand and appreciate what you say about the Jamia.² But I fear that unless you give Dr. Zakir Husain a free hand, the Jamia will collapse. There are risks to be run either way. If you keep the unmanageable large committee of control, Dr. Zakir Husain and his associates must starve. If you give the control to a small body who can be easily approached and brought together by Dr. Zakir Husain and have not an equivocal constitution like the present one but an unequivocal emphatically non-co-operation constitution, there is just a chance of tiding over the difficulty. You will now decide between the two courses, or you may think of a third. The Ajmal Fund which after all is small enough cannot be parted with unless the Jamia is put upon a firm and on an acceptable footing. Dr. Ansari was coming here for this purpose and if he could have come, it might have been better for us three to meet. As it is I would not worry you to come to Ahmedabad just to discuss this point without Dr. Ansari. You have

¹ In his letter dated July 16, Shaukat Ali had written that the Nawab of Rampur had sent him a “nasty telegram” in reply to his request for permission to visit his sister’s grave.
² Shaukat Ali had written: “I flank all moneys as are being collected for the ‘Ajmal Memorial’ should be given for the payment of the debts of the Jamia, and keep it going up to the time as we were able to get big sums or endowment. What is the use of sitting over the moneys while the Jamia was getting ruined? I want the Jamia to live, as without it we will have no place to educate our children. . . .”
stated your view with absolute clearness, and I do not expect to be able to influence your decision, and I know that whatever you do in Delhi would be done according to the best of your judgment and belief.

Your remarks about Motilalji make painful reading.¹ I am unable to pass any judgement, but I do feel that he is incapable of wilfully coming to a perverse decision. Do you expect me or want me to do anything in this matter? If you do, do not hesitate to tell me what and if I can see eye to eye with you and have the ability to do it, you may depend upon my doing it.

Yours sincerely,

MAULANA SHAUKAT ALI
SULTAN MANSION, DONGRI, BOMBAY

From a photostat: S.N. 13465

296. LETTER TO V. J. PATEL

July 18, 1928

BHAISHRI VITHALBHAI,

I got your letter. We shall have known the outcome, whatever it is, before you get this letter. I had a full discussion about the matter with Vallabhbhai on Sunday.

Let the outcome be what it is, you should certainly pay a visit to Rangoon. That is the spirit in which we should carry on our work.

That your relation with Motilalji have been kept up is of good augury.

Please write to me from time to time even during the journey. I have written to Maganlal Pranjivandas at Rangoon. I suppose you will be staying with him.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

¹ Shaukat Ali had written: “Apparently there is no change in the attitude of Panditji and he wants the Madras Resolution to go and the Mussalmans to give up the Reservation of Seats and the Separation of Sind also....I am afraid, if Panditji insists on adopting the Mahasabha formulas, then the position of Moslem Congressmen would be most unpleasant....”

² Of Bardoli Satyagraha
[PS.]

Let the monthly contributions you send go on accumulating. When you have any suggestion to make, do so.
I do not wish to spend the sum without your consent. Interest on it is of course being credited regularly.

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 14452

297. LETTER TO HARIBHAU UPADHYAYA

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 18, 1928

Bhai Haribhaud.

Read the accompanying letter. Inquire into the matter, and reply to Kamalakar direct.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 6061. Courtesy: Haribhau Upadhyaya

298. LETTER TO JETHALAL G. SAMPAT

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 18, 1928

Bhaishree Jethalal,

I got your postcard. Largely it is only the English-educated people who are politically conscious. If they believe in khadi, a khadi atmosphere will be created in the country and no one will find any other cloth in India.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 9842. Courtesy: Narayan Jethalal Sampat
299. FOR SOUTH AFRICA INDIANS

A cable from the Secretary, South African Indian Congress, Johannesburg, says:

Condonation scheme accepted. Illegal entrants in the Union now in India must either return before 30th September next or send applications to reach before that date the Commissioner, Asiatic Affairs, Pretoria. After sending applications they must return to the Union before 30th March, 1929.

Give wide newspaper publicity all parts India.

This ends the agitation that was going on in South Africa in respect of the condonation scheme and was making the Rt. Hon. Sastri’s position difficult and causing an anxious time in South Africa as well as here. Let those Indians, who have domiciled rights in South Africa, are holders of certificates and are desirous of availing themselves of the right of return, make haste to send their applications so as to reach the Commissioner of Asiatic Affairs, Pretoria, on or before the 30th September next, unless they propose to proceed to South Africa themselves so as to reach there before that date. Each applicant should give full particulars, giving name, address, occupation, date and number of certificate and disclose all relevant facts. The application should be sent by registered post in good time.

I wish that I could give more definite guidance. Not having got the application form or any text of the scheme before me, I am powerless to do so. And whilst I hope to publish further informationas fast as I get, et no one delay sending his application pending the receipt of further and fuller information.

Young India, 19-7-1928

300. NON-CO-OPERATION OR CIVIL RESISTANCE

Fear has been entertained in Government circles that the movement going on in Bardoli is one of non-co-operation. It is necessary therefore to distinguish between non-co-operation and civil resistance. Both are included in the wider term ‘satyagraha’ which covers any and every effort based on truth and nonviolence. The term ‘non-co-operation’ was designed to include among other things the

---

1 Vide Appendix “South African Condonation”, August 9 and 16, 1928.
2 Ibid
items named in the programme of 1920 at the special session of the Congress at Calcutta\textsuperscript{1} and re-affirmed the same year at Nagpur\textsuperscript{2} with the object of attaining swaraj. Under it no negotiation with or petition to the Government of the day was possible except for the purpose of attaining swaraj. Whatever the Bardoli struggle may be, it clearly is not a struggle for the direct attainment of swaraj. That every such awakening, every such effort as that of Bardoli brings swaraj nearer and may bring it nearer even than any direct effort is undoubtedly true. But the struggle of Bardoli is to seek redress of a specific grievance. It ceases the moment the grievance is redressed. The method adopted in the first instance was through conventional prayer and petition. And when the conventional method failed utterly, the people of Bardoli invited Sjt. Vallabhbhai Patel to lead them in civil resistance. The civil resistance does not mean even civil disobedience of the laws and rules promulgated by constituted authority. It simply means non-payment of a portion of a tax which former the aggrieved ryots contend has been improperly and unjustly imposed on them. This is tantamount to the repudiation by a private debtor of a part of the debt claimed by his creditor as due to him. If it is the right of a private person to refuse payment of a debt he does not admit, it is equally the right of the ryot to refuse to pay an imposition which he believes to be unjust. But it is not the purpose here to prove the correctness of the action of the people of Bardoli. My purpose is to distinguish between non-co-operation with attainment of swaraj as its object and civil resistance as that of Bardoli with the redress of a specific grievance as its object. This I hope is now made clear beyond doubt. That Sjt. Vallabhbhai and the majority of the workers under his command are confirmed non-co-operators is beside the point. The majority of those whom they represent are not. National non-co-operation is suspended. The personal creed of a non-co-operator does not preclude him from representing the cause of those who are helplessly co-operators.

\textit{Young India}, 19-7-1928

\textsuperscript{1} \textit{Vide} “The Non-COoperation Resolution”, September 5, 1920.

\textsuperscript{2} \textit{Vide} Appendix on “Congress Resolution on Non-Cooperation”, December 30, 1920.
301. SPINNING IN SAWANTWADI

The following report prepared by Sjt. S. P. Patwardhan has been lying in my file for some time. It will be read with interest by the general reader and with profit by khadi workers.

Young India, 19-7-1928

302. BY-PRODUCTS OF KHADI

On the 14th instant the Gandhi Ashram conducted by Sjt. C. Rajagopalachari near Tiruchengodu in Tamil Nadu had a free dispensary opened by Dr. Ray. From the report read at the meeting it appears that round khadi as the centre, removal of untouchability and of the drink evil, rural sanitation and medical relief have sprung up. The Ashram serves 175 villages among which annually 45,000 rupees are distributed through khadi. Removal of untouchability is done through the personal service of the ‘untouchables’ exactly on the same terms as the rest. The Ashram now proposes as soon as funds permit to dig five wells and build cottages for them. They need Rs. 10,000, five being for five wells. The wells are a sore need as the ‘untouchables’ “have to go long distances and suffer many humiliations and hardships to get their daily pot of water”. In 15 months the Ashram gave medical relief to 28,095 men and women. The need for expansion became so great that they had to build a proper dispensary at a cost of Rs. 5,000. It was to open this that Dr. Ray travelled all the way to the Ashram. The hospital cost Rs. 200 per month which was supported from khadi work. But now the need for donations is felt. I must give in its own language the report of sanitation work:

The people are very conservative in their habits and are impervious to new ideas. Under these conditions we thought our campaign for sanitation should begin with the children. A children’s bathing scheme was started on February 18, 1928 under which all the children in the neighbourhood below twelve years were offered an oil-and-soapnut bath on Saturdays and a soap-bath on Tuesdays. The doctor and other members of the Ashram attend to this work personally, oiling and removing the vermin from the children’s hair and

1 Not reproduced here
2 A devoted khadi worker who had worked in the National School of the Ashram and later went to work in Konkan

VOL. 42 : 2 MAY, 1928 - 9 SEPTEMBER, 1928 263
rubbing them down clean and tidy. Only the untouchables have taken advantage of the scheme. At first a very large number of these children came and it was a happy sight to see them being bathed and made clean and tidy. But many of them have later stopped away as the novelty wore off. Only about twenty children are regularly attending every week. We hope, however, that if we persist, a large number will take advantage of the scheme.

Such are the few among the many by-products of Khadi. Let scoffers take note. And let friends help the Ashram which is slowly but surely penetrating the masses through their real service by making them self-reliant and self-supporting.

Young India, 19-7-1928

303. LETTER TO T. R. PHOOKAN

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 19, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

Till you not now pay the long-overdue account due by you to the All-India Spinners’ Association? It is Rs. 319-2-3.¹

Yours sincerely,

SIT. T. R. PHOOKAN
GAUHATI (ASSAM)

From a microfilm: S.N. 13644

304. LETTER TO T. PRAKASAM

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 20, 1928

MY DEAR PRAKASAM,

Your letter astounds me. Evidently your code of public business and mine are as poles asunder. I have never known the interpretation you put upon a personal guarantee given by a public man in connection with a public transaction. What I have seen in India and South Africa is quite different from what you enunciate. Public men even when they have given verbal assurances about bona fides of transactions have paid from their own pockets when the transactions have turned out to be not as expected by the assurers, on the strength of whose expectations investments were made by public corporations such as the Spinners’ Association. Only the other day a man paid nearly Rs. 21,000 out of his own pocket and has nearly ruined his own pecuniary prospects, because the moneys were entrusted to his care on the strength not merely of his honesty but a belief in his capacity for judgement. No extensive public business would be possible, in my opinion, upon the terms that you suggest should guide public men and their dealings.

¹ A copy of this was forwarded to Secretary, A.I.S.A., Ahmedabad, with reference to his office letter No. 3783 dated July 18.

In view of this fundamental difference, the questions of fact that you raise need not be discussed. If I could possibly bring you round to my view of public dealings and public honesty, I would gladly go into the facts you suggest, and, if any injustice has been done on that score, ample redress will be given to you. I am sorry for the shape that the correspondence between you and me has taken over the transaction.

I suppose in fairness I must tell you that Sjt. Shankerlal Banker told me only the other day that the guarantee signed by you was . . .

From a microfilm: S.N. 14453

---

1 The source is incomplete. Replying to this in his letter dated July 25, Prakasam wrote: “I quite agree that our experiences and course of public business and public honesty are in this matter ‘as poles as under’. I have known so many cases in which such clauses of personal guarantee have been inserted in the documents to serve merely as penal clauses of threat to keep parties on good behaviour, without any intention of enforcing them: . . . I am talking only as an ordinary mortal and I have no claim to place myself on a higher level with one in your position. You must excuse me for differing from you in my last letter. I said I was agreeable to an arbitration but in your closing sentence you said that you had advised Sjt. Shankerlal Banker to take such action as he might be advised by his lawyer. I know already that the Khadi Board has been preferring latterly law-courts to arbitration. I am sorry that you could not take a more dispassionate view in the matter. With kind regards. . . .”
305. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 20, 1928

BHAI GHANSHYAMDASJI,

Your two letters.

It does not matter if you have sent nothing for Bardoli. Enough contributions are pouring in. If I am hard up I shall certainly bother you. There is now little possibility of an agreement. It is all right if it comes about and none the worse if it does not. The reins of satyagraha rest in the hands of God alone. Vallabhbhai is here today.

I shall write again in Navajivan on the boycott.

Yours,

MOHANDAS

From Hindi: C.W. 6162. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

306. INTERVIEW TO ASSOCIATED PRESS OF INDIA ON BARDOLI

AHMEDABAD,
July 20, 1928

Interviewed by a Press representative on the Bardoli question, Mr. Gandhi said that his views were the same as those of Mr. Vallabhbhai Patel. It was, he added, a matter of deep regret to him that there was a possibility of the negotiations failing but if they did, the fault would be, so far as he could judge, entirely the Government’s.

The communique that was published after the Surat Conference¹ baffled him. He

¹ Held on July 18; as representatives of the agriculturists of Bardoli, Vallabhbhai Patel, Abbas Tyabji, Sharada Mehta, Bhakti lakshmi Desai, Mithubehn Petit and Kalyanji Mehta met the Governor of Bombay, who put the following conditions for a settlement:

“Firstly either the full assessment shall be paid forthwith or the difference between the old and the new assessment be paid into the treasury on behalf of the peasants.

Secondly that the movement to withhold land revenue shall be abandoned.

If these proposals were accepted, Government would be prepared to take steps by the establishment of a special enquiry into the alleged errors of the official calculations of facts, either by a Revenue Officer who had nothing to do with the present case, or by a Revenue Officer with a Judicial Officer associated with him, it being the duty of the latter to decide any disputed questions of facts or figures . . . .”

(The Story of Bardoli, p. 159)
missed there the friendly and trustful spirit that was essential for an honourable compromise. To a lay mind like his, this insistence upon the deposit of the enhanced part of the assessment seemed inconceivable, and if he could so put it, absurd. It passed comprehension how the great Government could possibly demand such a deposit from people who were under their jurisdiction and control. On the other hand, it was not difficult to understand why the people were definitely against making any such deposit. For them, it was a point of honour. In waiving the deposit, the Government stood to lose nothing. There were several points in the communique on which it was easy to enlarge, he should seek another channel for placing his views before the public.

Asked if he realized that the failure of the negotiations might lead to very serious consequences to the peasants of Bardoli, Mr. Gandhi said that nothing more serious could befall the people of Bardoli than that they should break the pledge they had taken deliberately and repeated times without number.

Asked whether he thought that all the suffering and sacrifice involved in this struggle would ultimately result in any good either to the people of Bardoli or to the country at large, he said that he certainly thought so; the greater the sacrifice, the greater the gain to the country and the people of Bardoli.

Asked if he was in entire agreement with all the methods adopted by Mr. Vallabhbhai Patel in his campaign, Mr. Gandhi said that he was in perfect agreement with all the methods pursued by Mr. Patel. He knew absolutely nothing to warrant the charge, which he could only call a libel, that Mr. Vallabhbhai Patel had in any way directly or indirectly countenanced violence.

The Bombay Chronicle, 21-7-1928

307. LETTER TO SHANKARAN

Swaraj Ashram, Bardoli,
July 21, 1928

DEAR SHANKARAN,

I have been waiting to hear from you about . . . 1 The need is rather urgent as we are likely to have our hands over full now that we are promised hot repression as a result of the breakdown of negotiation. We shall know the final upshot in a couple of days.

You will be amused to learn that I made my first acquaintance in 1 Navajivan and Young India; vide “Evil Genius of the Government”, 22-7-1928, and “An Appeal to Government”, 23-7-1928.

2 As in the source life with pick-pockets last night. I had gone with Kalyanji and Mithubehn to Surat with some important despatches that were to be delivered to Vallabhbhai who was going to Bombay by the Kathiawar Mail. As the train was to arrive at past midnight towards the small hours of the morning we all three waited in our car outside the Railway Station and as may naturally be expected, casually dozed off, though mosquitoes and bugs did not permit that blissful experience to last for more than a quarter of an hour or so at the outside. When the train arrived I jumped out of the car but when I plunged my hand into my pocket for my watch I found to my utter surprise that the spectacles case in which I used to keep the watch and the chain was not there. It appears that some consummate member of the light-fingered gentry had practised his art upon me in the brief interval that I had gone to sleep. It was a wrench to part with the memento owing to its association and especially the yeomen service that it had rendered me during the last two years.

How are you faring in your enterprise as a house agent? So far as I am aware Rattan Terrace is the only bungalow besides the Windy Hall that is worth going in for at Devlali. But maybe that some new bungalows have been erected during the last four years. In view of the uncertainty of your movement I am sending it to your Bombay address.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm: S.N. 13260

308. LETTER TO G. V. SUBBA RAO

THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

July 21, 1928

DEAR FRIEND.

I have your letter. I am sorry that I shall not be able to write anything useful about the late Gopalakrishnayya. I could not write

1 To meet his brother, Vithalbhai Patel, who was leaving for Burma

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
anything about him without having to criticize his conduct in several matters. I have therefore considered it wise not to say anything about the deceased.¹

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 3625

309. LETTER TO SUPERINTENDENT, AHMEDABAD CENTRAL PRISON

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 21, 1928

SIR,

The Manager of the Satyagraha Ashram has handed me your letter of the 20th instant containing the information that three strangers with two dogs were crossing the jail fields at 7.30 p.m. On some day not mentioned in your letter under reply. Though the two paragraphs of your letter show no connection with the Ashram, the third paragraph asks the Superintendent of the Ashram to enquire into the matter and instruct the persons whoever they may be not to trespass into Government fields and you end with the threat that “otherwise it might lead to unnecessary troubles”. Will you please tell me how the Ashram is to enquire into a matter with which it has no connection and instruct persons whom it does not know about an occurrence whose date is not given? And may I know the meaning of the threat contained in your letter under reply? But I may point out to you that much to the annoyance of the inmates, some persons from the Jail did trespass into the Ashram grounds during the evening of the 19th instant, and fortunately for the Jail officials, the Ashram has by its constitution rendered itself powerless to punish such trespass. But if you have any desire to keep your own subordinates under discipline and prevent them from molesting inoffensive neighbours, you can have all the evidence you may need in order to establish the charge I am making.

¹ Vide also “Letter to G. V. Subba Rao”, 27-7-1928.
I may mention further for your information that I read out your letter to the inmates of the Ashram at the prayer meeting at 7 o’clock yesterday evening, and I was told that the occurrence you refer to might have happened on the previous evening and that, at the time you mention, those who are in the habit of going out for a stroll in the direction of Sabarmati Station did see some persons with two dogs walking towards Wadaj in haste. These persons have no connection whatsoever with the Ashram.

Whilst I am replying to your letter of the 20th instant, I take the opportunity of adverting to another letter of yours dated the 21st May last. I acknowledge the friendly tone of that letter, but I cannot help saying that your conviction that no violence was used by the Jail Warder in question could only rest on very slender basis. I wonder how you could arrive at a definite conviction without hearing both the parties. I was astounded on reading your letter of the 21st May to find that you seem to rely more upon the word of your warders than on that of men occupying some status in society and having no reason to bring a false charge against anybody.

You should also have known that the parties referred to in the second paragraph of that . . .¹

From a photostat: S.N. 13483

310. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 21, 1928

CHI. MATHURADAS,

I have your letter. Why do you let yourself be so affected by the injustice prevailing in the world? Does not the world itself mean selfishness? How would the world go on without selfishness? That is why the Gita teaches detachment. How would selfishness avail one suffering from tuberculosis or some such disease? But should I talk such wisdom to you? What is surprising is that you were upset by the behaviour of the owner of the bungalow towards you. Write to me when things are settled. I have not detained Shankar. You have done well to resist the temptation of coming here. It will be very good if you come in winter.

¹ The source is incomplete.
² An incomplete version of this letter has appeared under July 5, 1928, which appears to be an incorrect date.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

CHI. MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

18 BANGANGA ROAD

_WALKESHWAR, BOMBAY_

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

---

311. CABLE TO RAJENDRA PRASAD

[On or after July 21, 1928]

RAJENDRA PRASAD

CARE JAYAWATI, LONDON

_APOLOGIZE_ MY _ABSENCE._

_GANDHI_

From a microfilm: S.N. 14753

---

1 At Devlali

2 In reply to his cable dated July 21, which read: “Propose attending Vienna Conference. Cable instructions care Jayawati.”
312. PROHIBITION OF SILK

Apropos what I have written in Navajivan about silk and tiger’s skin, Kakasaheb sends me the following reasons for prohibiting silk, which are worth considering.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 22-7-1928

313. EVIL GENIUS OF GOVERNMENT

When the Governor of Bombay went to Simla, and I saw newspaper reports about this visit, I felt that the change that Shri Vallabhbhai was anxious to bring about in the Government had taken place. But, from the results of the deliberations at Surat, it appears that the Government’s heart has not yet softened; how then can one talk about a change? That heart has become harder than a stone.

I see bad motives in every line of the Government’s circulars which are published in all the newspapers. Even after five hours of deliberations, the problem defied solution. Apart from what we read in the newspapers, there is not a single new point in the Government’s Press Note. Not even an effort has been made to understand what the satyagrahis of Bardoli demand.

Just as a child who, in his innocence, lets go a useful object and

1 Vide “Questions of a Graduate”, 15-7-1928, sub-title, “Silk and Tiger-skin”. Gandhiji had expressed the view that from the point of view of ahimsa, both silk and tiger-skin had to be given up.

2 Not translated here. D. B. Kalelkar had pointed out that all people in the world used skins of animals in olden times, that in the Vedic period sages used to sit upon deer-skins while performing yajnas, that Kshatriyas and dutiful kings went ahunting and killed deer and tigers for protecting crops and cattle. Since skins of dead animals and of animals killed for food could not be thrown away, they were freely used. As animals were currently being killed merely for their skins these latter ought to be discarded from the point of view of ahimsa. Kalelkar had made the further point that our ancestors were not unaware of silk though he held that originally there was no silk in India. As the people did not know that it came from China and was produced from the body of insects, they must have welcomed it. Once the people liked a thing, it was difficult to discard it. However, the moment this fact became known, they gave it up.

3 Vide, footnote 1 to “Interview to Associated Press of India on Bardoli”, 20-7-1928.
asks for a toy, the Government is giving up a useful thing like justice and is clinging to the toy of prestige. And the more the Government tries to cling to this prestige, the further it recedes. At the end of the struggle, the Government will incur disgrace rather than earn a good name.

The enquiry to which the Government has consented is different from what the satyagrahis want. They do not demand an enquiry in order to examine omissions, commissions or any factual errors. Those mistakes are apparent to anyone who sees the pages of the Enquiry Committee’s reports. It is their contention that the Enquiry Committee has not carried out the enquiry according to the provisions of law. Therefore they want that the entire enquiry should be conducted afresh. So long as this is not done, people would not get justice, whatever type of enquiry is undertaken. Hence the terms of reference for the enquiry should be made clear at the very outset. The people of Bardoli or Valod do not say that there has been injustice only in two or three cases, but that the whole enquiry is full of mistakes. The case of the satyagrahis is that the Government does not have adequate basis in their rules and regulations for collecting revenue on a higher assessment. Hence, the burden of proof that there is such justification falls on the Government. This should have been clearly stated in the terms of reference of the Enquiry Committee, but this was not done.

Again another condition is absolutely necessary. The Committee should also enquire whether Government was justified in adopting a policy of oppression in the collection of revenue.

Whatever redress can be given to the people should be with regard to the hardships suffered by them as a result of this policy. They lost health; their cattle became weak, some of them died. Misfortunes such as these are inevitable in a satyagraha struggle. People should not ask for compensation in these matters. But what of those who are in jail, of those whose land has been confiscated and of those whose property has been sold away at ridiculously low prices? Hence, if a settlement is indeed to be arrived at and if the Government wishes to do justice, no sooner is the document for the settlement drawn up than the following should be done:

1. Satyagrahi prisoners should be released.
2. Land attached (whether sold or not) should be returned to

---

1 For the terms of Bardoli Settlement, vide Appendix on “Bardoli Settlement”, before July 22, 1928.

VOL. 42 : 2 MAY, 1928 - 9 SEPTEMBER, 1928 273
the owners.
3. The market price of buffaloes, liquor, etc., Which have been auctioned or sold should be paid back.
4. If talatis or patels have been dismissed from service, they should get back their posts, or permission should be granted to those who had tendered resignations to withdraw them.
5. Other punishments inflicted on account of satyagraha alone should be revoked.

None of these is to be found in the Government’s Press Note. I do not know of any other truce in which there has been such a one-sided decision as the Government has taken in this case. These are the conditions which must be laid down in regard to the enquiry before it actually begins.

However, the Government continues to demand that the excess of revenue be kept in deposit. If it wants to persist in this demand, where was the need to invite Shri Vallabhbhai to Surat? What need was there for H.E. the Governor to take the trouble to visit Surat? The Government holds that the reasons for this demand are clear enough. It appears to me that, except the Government, no one has any clear notion about these reasons. It does not seem that any impartial individual has favourably considered this demand for depositing the amount of the additional assessment. English newspapers like The Pioneer and The Statesman, which are the mouthpieces of the British, also favour the policy adopted by the satyagrahis and congratulate them on not overstepping their limits. I have found it impossible to understand why the Government is clinging to its obstinate demand for the excess revenue being kept in deposit. It should not have the misapprehension that, if the people lose the case, they would not; pay the increased revenue; because the Government always has the means for collecting it. Underlying this obstinacy is an absence of faith in Vallabhbhai and the people. How can he or anyone who loves self-respect tolerate such an insult? This obstinacy of the Government brings to the surface its meanness and wickedness.

The path of the satyagrahi is well-defined. He should always be prepared for a just settlement; if this is not achieved, he should not be disappointed, but should always be ready to fight for it. The satyagrahi is fortunate in that, in his struggle, there is absolutely no need for any ammunition or external weapon. Therefore he is ready whenever it falls to his lot to take part in a struggle.
On seeing the Government Note, Vallabhbhai felt no necessity to continue any longer negotiations for a settlement. However, although prepared for battle, the satyagrahi should, as mentioned above, not give up the hope for a settlement. Hence he would not forgo a single opportunity for it. It is the profession of a satyagrahi to melt even a stone-like heart.

The farmer of Bardoli should not look up to Surat, Bombay or Simla. He has to look up to God, to the All-knowing, and keep his pledge, and for its fulfilment be ready to embrace death or ruin himself. His pledge should be kept even at the cost of life.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 22-7-1928

314. MY NOTES

My Relations with Bardoli

There is no need for me to explain to the readers of Navajivan my connection with the Bardoli struggle. But it has become necessary to state it clearly because a dangerous rumour has been spread lately. Let it be known to the readers that I have associated myself with the Bardoli Satyagraha from its very beginning. Its leader is Shri Vallabhbhai and he can take me to Bardoli whenever he needs me. Not that he needs my advice; but, while taking any important decisions, he consults me. He does all the work whether small or big on his own responsibility. I do not go to attend the meetings, etc., But this is an understanding reached between him and me before the struggle began. My health does not permit me to carry on all kinds of activities. That is why he has taken a vow not to take me anywhere in Ahmedabad or elsewhere in Gujarat without sufficient justification, and he has kept this vow to the letter. I have full sympathy with all the steps undertaken in the struggle. I have full sympathy with the steps that may be taken by Vallabhbhai in the dangerous situation which may possibly arise now. And if he is arrested, I am fully prepared to go to Bardoli. Neither he nor I have seen any need for me to go to Bardoli or take any active part so long as he is there. Where complete mutual trust exists, there is no room for outward show or politeness.

The Influence of the Spinning-Wheel

Bhai Fulchand, the soul of the Wadhwan Rashtriya Educational Society, has been in the Bardoli struggle right from the beginning. He is at present working in Vedchhi. He writes from there:

Those who have no faith in the spinning-wheel may question the claim that Bhai Fulchand has made for the spinning-wheel and say that the same result can be achieved by any other kind of industry. Although it is true that a good deed produces good results, nevertheless, there is always some difference between one type of industry and another. Some occupations build up a man’s physique, others strengthen the mind, yet others bring peace, while some make him restless. I have already quoted the opinion of an experienced teacher of Scotland that working on the spinning wheel is such an occupation that, if a restless and unsteady person takes to it, he becomes peaceful and steady. A fiery-tempered person will be able to give up anger. Moreover, the nature of the sentiments underlying an activity determines the qualities which it generates. If the activity of the spinning-wheel is carried on by a saintly couple and if they make the spinning wheel the means for spreading the spirit of saintliness amongst the people, this quality would then be visible in this activity. The advantages of the spinning-wheel which are seen in Vedchhi may not be seen everywhere. Hence it can be said that the fearlessness and frankness which Bhai Fulchand notices around Vedchhi owe their existence not to the spinning-wheel, but to Bhai Chunilal and his wife. They have spun their good qualities around the spinning-wheel. It can certainly be claimed that they were able to spread these qualities through the spinning-wheel with much greater ease than they could have done through any other means.

The same is true of the Bhajan Mandali. Through a Bhajan Mandali, fraud can be spread, and such a Bhajan Mandali can also be an everlasting medium for the spread of purity. There is no doubt that the Mandali has played an important role in the Bardoli struggle, and the root of these two activities is in religion. If the Bardoli struggle had not been carried on through the medium of religious sentiment, the success that it has achieved today would never have been gained.

1 The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had described the beneficial results following the introduction of the spinning-wheel in Vedchhi and propaganda done by the Bhajan Mandali for khadi, prohibition and other good causes.
Consciously or unconsciously people crave for religion. They saw religion in satyagraha and in the commander of the satyagrahis; hence, they followed him and we can see signs that they will do so to the end.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 22-7-1928

315. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

July 22, 1928

CHI. VASUMATI,

I have got out of bed just now at 1 o’clock, through mistake. You have spotted the verse¹ correctly. What is it which brings on fever? You do not get it merely because you may have gone out in the rain. The body must have been predisposed to it. One may certainly point out someone’s mistake, but that should be done out of love. You must have received the umbrella. The common kitchen is flourishing.

Blessings from

BAPU

CHI. VASUMATIBEHN
KANYA GURUKULA

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 485. Courtesy: Vasumati Pandit

316. A LETTER

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

July 22, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I had full discussion with Sjt. Gulzarilal² who has just returned from Bombay after a preliminary study of the strike situation. He had a conference with the principal leaders of the Strike Committee. Unfortunately you were absent. The head men of the strikers came to Ahmedabad with a note from you addressed to the Labour Union.

¹ Vide “Letter to Vasumati Pandit”, 15-7-1928.
² Gulzarilal Nanda
They saw me and asked me to actively assist them in making collection and even advise the Union to contribute from their Union funds. I told them I could not do so, because I did not believe in strikes being continued through doles of charity or public donations, and told them that my method was to make the strikers self-dependent by inducing them to find some work during the strike. I told them too how the first big Ahmedabad strike after my settling in Ahmedabad was organized and conducted.¹ I told them further that I had not studied the situation in Bombay and that I do not know exactly what the strikers’ case was, nor did I know the leaders in the movement except you. Such being the case, I told them that I could not give active help, but that it was open to them to go amongst the mill-hands and collect what they wish to pay and I assured them that I would not directly or indirectly influence the mill-hands against payment.

But it was thought that the position should not be left at that and that as a direct appeal was made to the Union here, it was necessary to make a study of the question. Hence the visit of Sjt. Gulzarilal to Bombay. My discussion with him has not satisfied me that the Labour Union could go further than it has done. I now want your guidance, knowing my views now as you do, what . . .²

From a microfilm: S.N. 13237

317. AN APPEAL TO GOVERNMENT³

By the time this appears in print probably the Bombay Government would have made its final decision on the Bardoli question. I am framing this appeal on Monday afternoon when probably the Governor is making his statement before the Council. I know too that the appeal will fall on deaf ears. But as a satyagrahi, it is not for me to yield to my fear but to do what is right in disregard of consequence. As one intimately connected with the movement, it is perhaps my duty to appeal to the Government to desist from a course which has been universally condemned and which, so far as I am able to judge impartially, cannot be defended on any ground whatsoever.

¹ The reference is to the Ahmedabad mill-hands’ strike in 1918
² The source is incomplete.
³ Written on “Monday”, July 23, 1928; vide also “Letter to Vallabhbhai Patel”, 24-7-1928.

The offer made at Surat is less than what according to reliable rumour had been offered privately. The conditions named by Sjt. Vallabhbhai Patel have been the conditions always contemplated by him and in various ways conveyed to the Government. He has asked for nothing that has not always been done in honourable settlements. If it is acknowledged, as it has been acknowledged even in unexpected quarters, that the people of Bardoli and Valod have undergone terrible sufferings for the sake of what to them is a matter of principle, they have not done so merely to have an inquiry by a subordinate revenue official into individual cases which the inquiry proposed by the Government amounts to in fact; nor can the people be expected to forgo valuable land which they contend has been wrongly forfeited; nor yet can they as honourable men and women leave in the lurch those who have been wrongly made to suffer. The Government offer means that although the people have done wrong in refusing payment of the enhancement, they would graciously reopen individual cases if the people will cease to do wrong and if they will deposit the very amount which they say is wrongly imposed on them. This is a position which no leader worth the name can possibly subscribe to, when he has no conviction of such wrong on the part of the people and when on the contrary he has the deep conviction that the people are altogether in the right and the Government hopelessly in the wrong.

But Sjt. Vallabhbhai does not make, like the Government, impossible conditions. He does not ask the Government to own themselves to be in the wrong. His letter reduced to one sentence asks the Government to refer the question of right or wrong to a committee of the Government’s choice with the only reasonable proviso that it will adequately represent the people. And in making his counter proposal he asks the Government to recognize the natural and logical consequence of such an impartial committee, viz., to revert to the status quo ante bellum. I venture to suggest that he would be guilty of a gross breach of trust if he asked for or took less. In his proposal there is no humiliation intended or implied of the Government. His reasonableness and anxiety to come to any honourable compromise limits him to the barest minimum. For it is surely open to him to raise the whole question of the revenue policy of the Government and ask for damages for the terrible losses suffered by the people during the past four months without any fault of theirs.
Two courses are open to the Government—either to bow to the public opinion of all India and accept Sjt. Vallabhbhai’s offer or in order to uphold a false prestige to reassert the doctrine of frightfulness. If it is not too late, I appeal to the Bombay Government to take the way of truth.

Young India, 26-7-1928

318. TELEGRAM TO MOTILAL NEHRU

July 23, 1928

FEAR YOU SHOULD SHOULDER BURDEN ESPECIALLY FOR BENGAL’S SAKE. WIRED SEN GUPTA.

GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 13645

319. TELEGRAM TO SUBHAS CHANDRA BOSE

July 23, 1928

HAVE WIRED MOTILALJI HE SHOULD WEAR CROWN SPECIALLY FOR BENGAL’S SAKE.

GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 13645

---

1 In reply to Motilal Nehru’s letter dated July 19 which concluded: “Please wire your decision about the ‘crown’ after considering the enclosed correspondence and the communications you may have received.” Motilal Nehru had forwarded two letters (S.N. 13646) which he had received. One of them was dated July 16 from Subhas Chandra Bose reading: “I cannot tell you how disappointed the whole of Bengal will feel if for any reason you decline Congress President ship. Your close association with the work and policy of Swaraj Party is one of several reasons for which your name is universally acceptable in this province....” And the second one was dated July 17 from J. M. Sen Gupta reading: “Yesterday I received a telegram from Mahatmaji telling me that you were disinclined to accept the President ship of the Congress. The news came to me like a shock.... We are unanimous in sending a reply by wire telling Mahatmaji in strong terms to press you to get over your disinclination... We must have you.... You must come and lead us in this political crisis at home and abroad....” Vide also “Letter to Subhas Chandra Bose”, 18-7-1928.
320. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

SABARMATI ASHRAM,
July 23, 1928

CHI. RAMDAS,

Rasik has written to me that you have been put in charge of the kitchen and that in consequence the work has been proceeding very smoothly. You do have the requisite qualities for that work. In answer to a query from Girirajji one Monday in January I had written that the person in charge of a kitchen which stresses self-control must possess the qualities of a sthitaprajna. I am now more confirmed in that view. Such a person should always be alert. He must not get angry. He must put up with everybody’s anger. He must treat everyone alike. It will not do if he serves nice things to some and worthless things to others. His mistakes can have grave consequences. If he does not have an orderly mind his work will suffer. If he has not conquered the palate he will prevent other people acquiring restraint. And he steals. Therefore, running a kitchen based on the principle of restraint is like demonstrating the meaning of the verses about detachment. One thing which is not required in running a kitchen with restraint is scholarship. But God’s grace is so bountiful that scholarship is required in very few jobs. No freedom is possible without prudence. Millions have achieved salvation without scholarship. And scholarship has often led to downfall in some cases. Go deeper and understand the implication of the management of the kitchen being entrusted to you. Read the enclosed letter and then pass it on to Rasik.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Sansmarano, pp. 142-3
321. LETTER TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 24, 1928

BHAISHRI VALLABHBHAI,

I think we should give the briefest reply to the Governor’s speech in which he has tried hard to mislead the people. A long reply to such a thing would be harmful. Hence, I send a short one. I wrote an article in Young India yesterday. I did not feel like revising it in the light of the speech and stopped writing any further. Whatever you tell us from there will suffice us. We shall see to it next week. But today one thought keeps dwelling in my mind. The 14 days ahead are very critical; therefore not one word should be uttered from our side which may impede the settlement if at all there were to be a settlement. So I suggest that you come here for a few days if you are not needed there or, if you wish, I shall join you there. Now they must arrest you; therefore I must reach there in advance. The decision on these two points should be yours. On them not I but you are responsible because I do not know the state of affairs there.

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—2: Sardar Vallabhbhaine, pp. 13-4

322. CROWN OF THORNS

The Congress crown has ceased to be a crown of roses. The rose petals are year by year falling off and the thorns are becoming more and more prominent. Who should wear such a crown? Father or the son? Pandit Motilalji the weather-beaten warrior or Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru, the disciplined young soldier who by his sterling worth has captured the imagination of the youth of the country? Sjt. Vallabhbhai Patel’s name is naturally on everybody’s lips. Panditji says in a private letter that he as the hero of the hour should be elected and the Government should be made to know that he enjoys the fullest confidence of the nation. Sjt. Vallabhbhai is however out of the question just now. His hands are too full to allow of his attention being diverted from Bardoli. And before December comes upon us he may be a guest in one of His Majesty’s innumerable prisons. My own feeling in the matter is that Pandit Jawaharlal should wear the crown. The future must be for the youth of the country. But Bengal wants Motilalji to guide the Congress barque through the perilous seas that threaten to overwhelm us during the coming year. We are torn within and are encircled by an enemy that is as unscrupulous as he is powerful. Bengal has special need of an older head and one moreover who has proved a tower of strength to her in the hour of her trial. If India as a whole has no easy time before her, Bengal has still less. There are a thousand reasons why Panditji should be chosen to wear the crown of thorns. He is brave, he is generous, he enjoys the confidence of all parties; Mussalmans acknowledge him as their friend, he commands the respect of his opponents and often bends them to his view by his forceful eloquence. He has moreover deep down in him a spirit of conciliation and compromise which makes him an eminently worthy ambassador of a nation that is in need of and is in the mood to take an honourable compromise. It is these considerations which actuate even the dare-all Bengal patriot¹ to want Pandit Motilal Nehru as the helmsman for the coming year. Let the impatient youth of the country wait a while. They will be all the stronger for the waiting.

1 In the Council on July 23
2 Vide “Notes” 26-7-1928, sub-title, “Sjt. Vallabhbhai’s Reply”.

Young India, 26-7-1928

323. NOTES

SJT. VALLABHBHAI’S REPLY

Sjt. Vallabhbhai Patel has issued the following statement² to the Press in reply to His Excellency’s Council speech on the 23rd instant:

I must confess that I was unprepared for the threatening deliverance of His Excellency the Governor. But threats apart, I want to remove the confusion that the speech is consciously or unconsciously intended to create. The Governor says in effect that if civil disobedience is the issue, he is prepared to meet it with all the power which Government possesses, but “if the only question to be dealt with is the justice or injustice of the re-assessment, then Government is prepared to submit the whole case, after the revenue now due to the Government has been paid and the present agitation ceases, to a full open and independent inquiry as outlined in the statement which has been published”. I venture to point out that civil disobedience has never been the issue. I know that there is no unanimity of opinion amongst all parties about the wisdom or legitimacy of civil disobedience. I have my own opinion which I hold strongly about it. But the Bardoli people are not fighting in order to have the right of civil disobedience vindicated. They are fighting by way of civil disobedience or whatever name the method adopted may be given-in order to induce the Government either to waive the enhancement, or if they are not convinced that the enhancement is improperly made to appoint an impartial, independent inquiry to find out the truth. The only question therefore is that justice or injustice of the re-assessment. And if the Government are prepared to have that question examined by a “full, open and independent inquiry”, they must surely accept the logical consequence of the proposition they themselves lay down, namely, not to insist upon the payment of the enhancement which is in dispute and to restore the people to the condition they occupied before the struggle commenced. I warn the public also about the qualifying clause that is attached to “the full, open and independent inquiry”, viz., “as outlined the statement which has been published” is a dangerous clause. For what is promised in the Surat communication is not “a full, open and independent inquiry” but a mockery of it. The Surat statement contemplates a very limited inquiry to be conducted by a revenue officer assisted by a judicial officer to investigate errors of calculation and fact and totally different thing from “a full, open and independent inquiry”. I hope therefore that undeterred by the threats contained in the Governor’s deliverance, public opinion will concentrate only on the one point that I have mentioned.

¹ Subhas Chandra Bose; vide “Telegram to Subhas Chandra Bose”? 23-7- 1928.
² Vide “Letter to Vallabhbhai Patel”, 24-7-1928.
A TRIUMPH OF JUSTICE

There is in Wardha a well-known and very well decorated shrine dedicated to Shri Lakshminarayana. It was built by Seth Jamnalalji grandfather. It is a private temple made accessible to the public. Jamnalalji has been endeavouring to have this temple available to the so-called untouchables also, as he has been trying with great success to have wells in Wardha made accessible to them and generally to procure for them all the facilities available to the other classes. He had difficulty with the trustees in bringing them round to his view that this select temple should be thrown open to those whom blind orthodoxy has suppressed. Success has at last attended his effort. On the 17th instant the trustees unanimously passed the following resolution:

Whereas the question of admitting the so-called untouchables inside the temple of Shri Lakshminarayana has been before the Committee on several occasions and they have been unable to come to a firm decision till now; and whereas the most representative body in India, namely, the Congress has insisted upon the removal of untouchability and whereas the Hindu Mahasabha has considered it necessary and just that all public temples should be made accessible to the so-called untouchables, and whereas the well-known leaders of public opinion in India have expressed the same opinion, the trustees hereby resolve, regard being had to the foregoing facts and after full consideration of the religious and the social condition of the country, that the above-named temple dedicated to Shri Lakshminarayana in Wardha be declared open to the 'untouchables' and that the managing trustee, Sheth Jamnalal Bajaj, be authorized to enforce this resolution in such manner as may appear to him to be best.

Accordingly a printed notice was widely circulated in Wardha that from the 19th instant, that is, two days after the resolution, the temple would be declared open for the 'untouchables'. It is stated that although there was no organized effort made beyond circulating the foregoing notice, nearly 1,200 men and women and children including 'untouchables' visited the temple without the slightest untoward incident having occurred. It is most significant that in an important centre like Wardha a celebrated temple could be flung open for the 'untouchables' without orthodoxy raising its voice of protest or some people in the name of sanatana dharma creating a disturbance at the time of 'untouchables' trying to cross the sacred and hitherto forbidden threshold of a Hindu shrine. It is a striking demonstration of the tremendous headway that the movement against untouchability has made. It shows too what quiet determination and persistence can do to create healthy public opinion in favour of a genuine movement for reform. I congratulate Sheth Jamnalalji and his fellow-trustees on the bold step that they have taken and hope that this example will be followed all over India.

Purda in Bihar

The organized demonstration against the purdah that was held in many important centres in Bihar on the 8th instant was, a Bihari friend’s letter tells me, successful beyond the expectations of the organizers. The Searchlight report of the Patna meeting opens thus:

A unique spectacle was witnessed at the mixed meeting of ladies and gentlemen of the 8th July held at Patna in the Radhika Sinha Institute on Sunday last. In spite of heavy rains that fortunately stopped just at the time of the meeting, the gathering was unexpectedly large. In fact half of the spacious hall of the Radhika Sinha Institute was crowded with ladies, three-fourths of whom were such as had been observing purdah a day before, nay, an hour before.

The following is the translation of the resolution adopted at the meeting: We, the men and women of Patna, assembled hereby declare that we have today abolished the pernicious practice of purdah, which has done and is doing incalculable harm to the country, and particularly to women, and we appeal to the other women of the province, who are still wavering, to banish this system as early as they can and thereby advance their education and health.

A provisional committee was formed at the meeting to carry on an intensive propaganda against purdah and for the spread of women’s education in the province of Bihar. A third resolution advised the formation of Mahila Samitis in every town and every village of the province. And a fourth resolution was passed to the effect that Mahila Ashrams should be started at different places where ladies might stay for certain periods and receive a training so as to come ‘good wives’, ‘worthy mothers’ and ‘useful servants’ of the country. Over 5,000 rupees were promised on the spot for the purpose and I see many ladies among the donors, giving anything between Rs.
250 and 25. The paper publishes reports of similar meetings in several places in Bihar. If the campaign is well organized and continued with zeal, the purdah should become a thing of the past. It should be noted that this is no Anglicizing movement. It is an indigenous conservative effort made by leaders who are conservative by nature and are yet alive to all the evils that have crept into Hindu society. Babu Brijkishore Prasad and Babu Rajendra Prasad who from far-off London is keenly watching and supporting the movement are no westernized specimens of Indian humanity. They are orthodox Hindus, lovers of Indian culture and tradition. They are no blind imitators of the West and yet do not hesitate to assimilate whatever is good in it. There need therefore be no fear entertained by the timid and the halting ones that the movement is likely to be in any shape or form disruptive of all that is most precious in Indian culture and especially in feminine grace and modesty so peculiar to India’s womanhood.

ASHRAM CONSTITUTION AND RULES

Since the publication of the draft constitution and rules of the Satyagraha Ashram, there has been a constant demand for copies. Postage alone amounts to not an insignificant item. Those who would possess a copy of the constitution will kindly send one anna stamp to cover the charge of packing and posting.

A CORRECTION

Sjt. Gokulbhai Patel who was the bearer of cheques for Bardoli from Santa Cruz and Vile Parle draws my attention to a mistake occurring in the acknowledgement made in Young India of these gifts. The names that should have appeared under the heading Vile Parle have appeared under the heading Santa Cruz. I am sorry for the mistake. In spite of all the care taken to ensure accuracy on the part of an overworked staff, mistakes will occur. The generous reader will forgive them when they are not wilful or worse.

Young India, 26-7-1928
324. LETTER TO SUPERINTENDENT, AHMEDABAD CENTRAL PRISON

THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

July 26, 1928

SIR,

I have your letter of the 24th instant. I have no desire to enter into a prolonged correspondence. Your letter does not enable me to alter the view expressed in mine of the 21st instant.1 If you do not think that the persons whom you saw were inmates of the Ashram, I fail to see how the Ashram could be called upon to enquire who the parties were and warn them. And I fail also to understand that a trespasser is not a trespasser if he is treated courteously by those against whom he commits a trespass. You may be interested to know we try to treat courteously even thieves and robbers.

You will pardon me for not referring to Sjt. Kothari or Sjt. Kalelkar to prove the civility of your officials when I have your own correspondence in front of me.

Yours faithfully,

From a photostat: S.N. 13486

325. LETTER TO HEMPRABHA DAS GUPTA

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

[Before July 27, 1928]2

DEAR SISTER,

I have your letter also. We should not at all worry on account of Nikhil. If God does not wish to take any service from Nikhil in this birth. He may well take him away.

Love of children or husband or friend, all mean the same. We should sublimate all loves into the love of God because ultimately we all have to merge in God as rivers merge into the sea. Where then is Ganga or Yamuna? If you can regard all boys as Anil and Nikhil, your grief will be no more. Those who are attached to self have sons to be counted as one, two, three and so on. Those who are not have innumerable sons.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1652

326. LETTER TO C. F. ANDREWS

July 27, 1928

MY DEAR CHARLIE,

The within writing is a copy of the cable sent to you in reply to yours. I have no time to spare just now. Subbiah has gone to Madras to put his pregnant wife with her parents. Mahadeo is still laid up though he is otherwise quite well.

I am sending you five copies of Autobiography.

Love.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 2628

327. LETTER TO G. V. SUBBA RAO

July 27, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I shall most certainly keep an open mind. You shall see me whenever I come. Nothing would please me better than to find myself to have been in error regarding the deceased friend whose many merits I was not unaware of.¹

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

SJT. G. V. SUBBA RAO
INDIAN BANK, BEZWADA, SOUTH INDIA

From a photostat: G.N. 3626

¹ Vide also “Letter to G. V. Subba Rao”, 21-7-1928.
328. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

[July 27, 1928]

CHI. VASUMATI,

I felt worried yesterday and, therefore, sent a wire. Having received the reply today, I am at ease. The fever has lasted very long. Keep up your courage. Do not get frightened. Do not forget our principle of looking upon every place which we visit as our own home and accepting any service that is absolutely necessary. False pride and false shame are our enemies. I must get a letter from you every day and you should write or dictate every detail in it. Today is the last day of the seven-day fast undertaken by Nanibehn for the sake of her health.

Blessings from
BAPU

CHI. VASUMATIBEHN
KANYA GURUKULA

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 486. Courtesy: Vasumati Pandit

329. LETTER TO HEMPRABHA DAS GUPTA

July 27, 1928

DEAR SISTER,

What shall I say to you? We were all prepared for Nikhil’s passing away. He is relieved of his pain. He was such a wise and sober lad that he must have attained divine life. Satis Babu has amazed us all by his absolute calm. I expect the same calm from you all.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1659

1 From the postmark
330. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 28, 1928

CHI. MATHURADAS,

I had expected to hear from you after you reached Deolali. You will all be in good health. How is Dilip? Is not this bungalow the same you had stayed in earlier? How is the weather there?

Blessings from

BAPU

SHRI MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI
WINDY HALL
NASIK ROAD
DEVLALI

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

331. GOVERNOR’S THREAT

It seems that the governing class in India refuses to learn even from experience. They act as if they are not aware that the people have got over the fear of threats. Not only threats make no impact on hundreds of thousands of people, but also a do-or-die class has now come into being on which even the carrying out of threats has no effect whatsoever. What can punishment inflicted by the State do to those who have given up the fear of death and the infatuation for possessions? What effect can a threat have upon those who love their self-respect above everything else? Hence the Governor’s threat and Earl Winterton’s full endorsement of it cannot have any influence on the people of Bardoli. On the contrary, I learn that it has made the latter more resolute.

But it is not our intention to analyse the Government’s threat. We are aware that the Government has the ability to implement it; it will not allow us to forget this even if we wish to. Our prestige lies in assuming that the Government will act in accordance with its threats and in being prepared to welcome its wrath. The people of Bardoli should inscribe on their doors the proverbial saying, “He who is on his guard is always happy”, and they should always be on their guard. Vallabhbhai had warned the people at the very beginning of the struggle, saying:

If you wish to offer resistance, you will have to face perils. The Government will seize your possessions, confiscate your land, sell your possessions at ridiculous prices, evict you from your land; it may even shoot you down. Yet do not turn your backs but receive the showers of bullets on your chests as if they were flowers.

Those who remember these words need no further warning.

But we are not concerned with the wrath of the Government. It is the ruler who has the monopoly of getting angry; we do not want to be angry at the wrath of the Government. A satyagrahi has no right to be angry. We wish to win over anger by an absence of it in ourselves. Even if the Government utters angry words, we do not wish to swerve from the path of truth. Whether the Government gets angry or not, our demand should remain the same. The Governor has made a speech as fiery as the lava of a volcano. Although the unintelligible Government Note issued at Surat is regarded as its final word, we keep hearing a talk of settlement. We need not worry whether the Government has a hand in these or not; but even if there is a single door open to settlement, we should be eager to enter through it. When people who are determined to sacrifice their lives give up discretion, they are no longer fearless men but indiscreet, ignorant persons. He who unnecessarily sacrifices himself is considered either insane or stupid, and his death not being a courageous one is of no advantage either to himself or to anyone else.

Although the people of Bardoli and Valod have the right to make more demands, they have not acted on that right. But now that the Government has crossed all bounds of decency, they cannot make any more demands. The satyagrahis need:

1. An independent and impartial committee to hear their complaints and give justice.

2. Implementation of the conditions which should form the basis of such a committee, i.e., (a) release of those who have been imprisoned in connection with the struggle; (b) release of lands which have been confiscated in connection with the struggle; and (c) restoration of the direct losses suffered by the people and by other individuals for the sake of the people.

The satyagrahis have every right to demand compensation for the indirect loss that people have suffered in respect of their cattle and property, yet they do not do so. If they ask for it, it would not be regarded as a sign of compromise. A satyagrahi always starts satyagraha after preparing himself to sacrifice his life and property. Hence, the satyagrahi will not ask for any compensation for any indirect loss which has resulted from the policy of repression.

Once the Government accepts the above demands of the people, it would become the people’s dharma to pay the revenue arrears at once. I take it that the people have always kept themselves in readiness to pay them. At some time or other, these will have to be paid. A newspaper report has reproduced a telegram sent by a gentleman from Bombay who has offered to pay the additional levy of land revenue against the injustice of which the satyagraha movement was started. If he has decided to present that sum to the Government, no one can stop him. If the Government feels satisfied by such a gift, we have no grudge against it. Whether that gentleman of Bardoli Taluk, settled in Bombay, has done harm to himself or to the people by offering that money cannot be judged today. If the Government is satisfied with the paying up of what should be regarded as an insignificant increase in assessment and, if it is possible to arrive at a settlement, it is the dharma of the satyagrahis to do so.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 29-7-1928
WE OURSELVES SHOULD DO IT

A young gentleman writes from Cambay:

I regard feasts given at marriages and similar occasions as pardonable, but would consider feasts given at the ceremony performed at the time of simant as shameful, and also would consider it sinful to give a feast after anyone’s death, whether it is for the 12th or the 13th day, whether it is for the old or the young. All feasts seem to me meaningless and uncivilized. I cannot understand why we allow the daily needs of the body to become means of enjoyment. My weakness may tolerate such things, but if we do not become slaves to tradition, we would not attend feasts given after death or at the simant ceremony. Our own conduct may be something commendable, but we should not feel hurt if parents, wives or grown-up children do not follow it. We cannot force our views on them. We should have the faith that, if our conduct is pure, others will be affected by it. I do not know what the Jain sadhus do, but if they remain indifferent about the evil customs of society, I have no doubt that it is improper.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 29-7-1928

BOYCOTT OR NON-CO-OPERATION

A friend writes:

Nowadays, when there is restlessness, violence and impatience in the minds of the people, even the best of things are misused. At such a time, if we use the words boycott and non-co-operation and if we use individual or collective adjectives before these words, it is bound to be

1 The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had asked whether Gandhiji could do something in order to influence the wives and elders of those young men who, as a result of reading Navajivan, had given up attending feasts given on occasions such as death, simant, etc. He had also wished to know whether it was proper for Jain sadhus not to condemn such feasts.

2 Religious ceremony held during first pregnancy

3 The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had stated that it was likely that people might boycott the entire family of an old man who married a young girl, whereas the proper thing would be to boycott the individual alone.
misunderstood. Hence, we should merely suggest the limitation of each thing and, while putting it into practice, fully bear in mind those limitations and be satisfied. Even in individual boycott or non-co-operation, there ought not to be the slightest degree of himsa. I do not suggest hatred towards those who in old age marry young girls. These persons are to be pitied. When the passion of enmity possesses a man he loses his senses. The most sacred relationships are obliterated. This intoxication is even worse than that of drink. Therefore, remembering our own weaknesses and faults, we should pity the old men who are full of lust. But to pity them and to co-operate with them are two distinct things. True compassion has no room for blind love or infatuation. Hence, anyone who has erred is guilty of an offence against society and it is extremely important that he should be made to realize it. And that realization can be brought about only through boycott or non-co-operation. It may be imparted either by punishing the offender or by depriving him of rights which society has given him on certain terms. There is a difference between depriving them of the rights and punishing them. It is one thing if I employ a person as a servant, believing that he is honest, and dismiss him upon finding him to be not. But it is another if I give him physical punishment, or deprive him of his house, etc., or register a complaint with the authorities and get him punished. And if I do not punish him or get him punished, would I at all tolerate such treatment to his family or relatives? Actually, when the element of punishment or violence enters into boycott or non-cooperation, it ceases to be a powerful weapon, because the one who inflicts it becomes an offender himself while the latter, believing that he has done prayaschitta for his acts becomes more confirmed in his viciousness and ready to repeat the offence, if occasion arises. It is because of this that till today the infliction of punishment or violence has not prevented sin or crime. I have therefore suggested in all my writings that the reformer should be pure and respectful and that all his acts should be non-violent or full of love. Thus I; have suggested that boycott should mean that we do not accept any service from the one who is boycotted; that we put up with inconvenience and deny him any special rights. However, we should render him service when the need arises. The person who is boycotted thus cannot attend a community feast. If we have made him a professor, that position should be taken away from him. If he is a teacher and we happen to be studying under him, we should discontinue doing so. If he happens to be our tenant, he should cease to be one. But if he is ill, he can avail himself of our services. If he is suffering from hunger for no fault of his, we should give him food.
This is just by way of illustration. In short, we should think consciously and should never wish or do to others what we do not wish done to ourselves.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 29-7-1928

334. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

July 29, 1928

MY DEAR JAWAHARLAL,

I do hope Kamala and Indu are flourishing. I had your wire and letter. The Presidential business is now finished.

I write this to consult you about Bhuvanji. He asks the Ashram to give him Rs. 20 per month and for this he wants Rs. 100 in advance. I would like you to tell me how he is working and whether he is giving you satisfaction. The A.I.S.A. will not and cannot give him anything.
Do you advise the Ashram to supply his needs? What is the nature of work he is doing?

Yours sincerely,
BAPU

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1928. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

335. LETTER TO JETHALAL JOSHI

July 29, 1928

BHAISHRI JETHALAL,

It is certainly not a fast if you eat fruits. The aim behind a fast may be purification of the body or of the mind or of both. A fast contributes very little to purification of the mind. You will find the replies to the other questions in Niyamavali.¹

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 1352

¹ Booklet on rules for the inmates of the Ashram

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
336. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

July 29, 1928

CHI. VASUMATI,

Your illness has lasted too long now. How is your cough? I feel all the time that the courses of treatment employed in the Ashram and its air would help you to recover in the shortest possible time. But you must cling to that place with a firm mind. I hope you are not swallowing too many medicines. Though I write thus, I don’t wish that you should remain there anyhow. If at any time you wish to come over here, please write to me. I must get a report of your health every day.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Please tell Vidyavatiji that I got her letter.

CHI. VASUMATIBEHN
KANYAVIDYALA

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 487. Courtesy: Vasumati Pandit

337. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

July 30, 1928

BHAISHRI CHHAGANLAL JOSHI,

Keep this in the office. If you have anything to say about this matter, please do. It would be worth while to consider the last item in the Managing Committee.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: S.N. 11804

338. LETTER TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

July 30, 1928

BHAISHRI VALLABHBHAI,

I got your letter. Rest assured that I am ready to start on the very day that I get your message that I should do so. I suppose you intend to send your call before the fourteen days’ sand runs out of the glass, that is, before Sunday. If I am right, it is not necessary to send

VOL. 42 : 2 MAY, 1928 - 9 SEPTEMBER, 1928  297
Mahadev today. I cannot say that he is completely all right. Whatever the state of his health, he will of course accompany me. If, however, you require his presence immediately, send a wire and he will start tomorrow. He is not so bad now that he cannot go. He takes care when sitting down or getting up and walking. My only aim is to save him from the jerks in the train for as many days as possible.

I shall think and decide tomorrow what we should do about the workers’ school. Krishnalal has arrived here. The money which is lying with the Provincial Committee may remain where it is. He may do what he likes in the matter. My idea was that the Ashram should take possession of it. I have not given up that idea, but we shall think about the matter when we meet if there is still time for it then. At the moment, you have one foot in the stirrup and who knows when you will be astride the horse?

Improve your health. There was another cable from Andrews as follows:

Times, Guardian both published my communication. Guardian gave friendly editorial. Cable further important developments.¹

I am now thinking what further information we can cable.²

There was a letter from Munshi. Mahadev will enclose with this a copy of my reply to him.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: S.N. 14454

339. LETTER TO AMBALAL SARABHAI

July 30, 1928

RESPECTED BROTHER,

You have there an amount of Rs. 1,21,000 in the name of either Vallabhbhai or Punjabhai. I would like you to transfer the money to Shri Jamnalalji’s account. If it is not inconvenient will you please do this on receipt of this letter? The purpose of writing this letter is to save the interest on the amount. There is no intention of keeping any money in Vallabhbhai’s name at the moment.

¹ The source has this in English.
² Vide the following item.

Vandemataram form

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 11122. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

340. CABLE TO C. F. ANDREWS

[On or after July 30, 1928]

SITUATION WORSE. GOVERNMENT SEEMS DETERMINED TO HUMILIATE SATYAGRAHIS AND THEIR LEADERS AND INSIST ON ABJECT ACCEPTANCE BY COUNCIL MEMBERS REPRESENTING SURAT DISTRICT OF UNINTELLIGIBLE TERMS WELL KNOWING THESE MEMBERS HAVE NO INFLUENCE IN BARDOLI. SITUATION THUS FORCED HOPELESSLY UNREAL. BARDOLI PEOPLE REPORTED ABSOLUTELY FIRM, READY FOR ANY SUFFERING. PAPERS PREDICT ARREST VALLABHBHAI AND CO-WORKERS ON EXPIRY GOVERNOR’S ULTIMATUM. EXPECT REACH BARDOLI ANY DAY UPON VALLABHBHAI’S CALL.

MOHAN

From a microfilm: S.N. 13264

341. LETTER TO VALLABHAI PATEL

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
July 31, 1928

BHAISHRI VALLABHBHAI,

I have your letter. Today I was expecting a wire calling me there. I had held myself in full readiness.

I am not writing much just now as Bhai Nariman and Haribhai are expected here. Our line is clear. We can give up neither the talatis nor the lands. The Enquiry Committee’s enquiry must be comprehensive. We cannot afford to let its scope be restricted in any way. Let Kaye and Davis be appointed if you think fit. Please wire the date on which you expect me there.

1 In reply to his cable dated July 28; vide the preceding item.

VOL. 42 : 2 MAY, 1928 - 9 SEPTEMBER, 1928 299
Manibehn came and saw me. She is much pulled down. It is good that you have sent her. For the present she will live in the city. She says she will come on the fifth. Bhai Nariman and Haribhai have come and met me. I think it desirable that you should go if you receive a call through the members of the Legislature. The conditions [of agreement] are what we have drafted.¹

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

_Bapuna Patro—2: Sardar Vallabhbbaine_, p. 14

342. LETTER TO BEHCHAR BHAWAN PARMAR

BHAI BEHCHAR BHAWAN,

I have your letter. It seems to me that you should be able to earn an honest livelihood from your traditional occupation itself. In my view, there is nothing shameful about following the useful occupation of a barber. There is nothing lowly about it.

Vandemataram from MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati : G. N. 5569

343. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

_August 1, 1928_

CHI. VASUMATI,

I am dictating this before three in the morning. I trust you have not become nervous because of illness. Keep cheerful. If you feel despondent, forget your suffering and recover cheerfulness by reciting:

1. दुःखे वैषम्योत्पत्तिः; मुखेषु विगतस्मृतः
2. वीरराज्यस्यक्रोः: रिस्वत्वाधीपनिष्कर्षयेते

¹ Vide “Evil Genius of Government”, 22-7-1928.
² From the contents; _vide_ “Letter to Bechar Parmar”, July 2, August 6 and August 15, 1928.
³ A Bihar woman who had come to be trained at the Ashram with Rajendra Prasad’s recommendation and meditating on its meaning. What is the name of the doctor who attends on you? What does he permit you to eat just now? I suppose you know that Nanibehn’s fast has ended. I may have to go to Bardoli in a day or two.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

CHI. VASUMATIBEHN,
KANYA GURUKULA

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 488. Courtesy: Vasumati Pandit

344. LETTER TO HARI-ICHCHHA DESAI

August 1, 1928

CHI. HARI-ICHCHHA,

I have had many letters from you but have not been able to reply to them. I do get news about you through Chi. Rasik.

Rasik has lost nothing by leaving school. He will learn more through experience here than he would have by attending school. There is no reason, therefore, to feel sorry at his having given up studies.

I had indeed expected that you would keep up the Ashram atmosphere there. I hear that Prabha has forgotten it as completely as you have kept it up. Take care of your health. Read what you can. Continue reading of the _Ramayana_. And of course there are carding and spinning.

Chi. Santok and Rukhibehn will arrive there towards the end of this week. Meet them occasionally. Write to me from time to time.

To all you sisters,

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 4907. Courtesy: Hari-ichchha Kamdar
345. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

August 1, 1928

CHI. NARANDAS,

Mirabehn has made slivers of the finest quality out of five tolas of cotton and given them to me. You credit them under whichever head you may decide and debit them in today’s account against Behn Rajkishori. I have given them to her.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11806

346. SERVICE, NOT PROTECTION

Although the meeting (for 25th July last) of the All-India Cow-protection Association was advertised in Young India and Hindi and Gujarati Navajivan and although circular letters were sent to the members individually, even defaulters, there was an attendance of not more than perhaps a dozen, the majority being from the Ashram itself. This was an eloquent testimony, if any was needed, in support of the preamble of the draft resolution that was published in these pages and unanimously adopted by the meeting. Here is the full text of the resolution as amended and carried at the meeting:

Inasmuch as the All-India Cow-protection Association has not been able to command public attention and sympathy commensurate with the all-India character it has claimed, and inasmuch as its activities have been confined to the slow spread of the objects of the Association and especially to helping conduct a dairy and tannery at the Satyagraha Ashram in terms of the objects of the Association, and inasmuch as the subscriptions and donations are mainly confined to friends who are interested in the experiment, and inasmuch as the numerous goshalas and pinjrapoles which were expected to respond to and be affiliated to the Association have nearly entirely failed to do so, the existing members of the Association resolve to disband it, and not retaining the existence of the Association in any shape.
or form, to adopt the less pretentious title of Go Seva Sangha (Cow Service Society) and irrevocably to entrust the affairs, management and control of the funds and stock of the Association to the following permanent Standing Committee of management of the Society, viz.,

M. K. Gandhi (Chairman), Revashankar Jagjivan Jhaveri (Treasurer), Jamnalalji Bajaj, Vaijnathji Kedia, Manilal Vallabhji Kothari, Mahavirprasad Poddar, Shivilal Mulchand Shah, Parameshvariprasad Gupta, Dattatreya Balkrishna Kalekhar, Vinoba Bhave, Chhaganlal Khushalchand Gandhi, Chhaganlal Nathubhai Joshi, Narandas Khushalchand Gandhi, Surendranath, Chimanlal Narsinhdas Shah, Pannalal Balabhai Jhaveri, Yashvant Mahadev Parnerkar, Valji Govindji Desai (Secretary), with full powers to disburse the funds, conduct the said experiments, to add to their number, to fill up vacancies caused by the resignation or the death of a member, to expel a member by a majority vote and otherwise carry out the objects of the expiring Association and to frame a constitution and rules for the management of the Society and to make such amendments thereof as may from time to time be required.

The name suggested in the published draft for the much smaller body that was to take the place of the All-India Association was ‘Cow Protection Society’. The eagle eye of Sjt. Jamnalalji detected the incongruity in the name. He rightly argued that the very small body of persons mostly unknown to fame could not arrogate to themselves the function of protecting the cow, they could only and in all humility endeavour to serve the cow to the best of their ability. He therefore suggested the proper title, Go Seva Sangha, literally, Cow Service Society. This was acclaimed by those present as the better title.

The reader may know that the majority of the members of the new Society are inmates of the Ashram and then too only those who are either actually conducting the dairy and the tannery experiment or are specially interested in it. The rest are those who whole-heartedly believe in this class of constructive work as the only real means of saving the cow from inevitable destruction. It will be the duty of these workers to try to interest the shepherds and the govals in the science of cattle preservation. If this numerous body of men and women could be induced to take a more intelligent and humanitarian view of their occupation than which there can be nothing more honourable, half the battle is won. There is at present a close race for life being run between the cow and man in India. And if the cow is not scientifically bred and profitably used, she must eat us or be eaten by us. Whilst therefore the ambitious title and the equally ambitious constitution are withdrawn the work survives only to be done in an intenser form. I hope therefore that those who have hitherto sent donations in cash or kind to the defunct Association will help the successor. The Managing Committee will at no distant date publish the new constitution and rules. But donors need not wait for it for sending their donations.

Lastly, although it was proper for the old Association to be disbanded it may be claimed that its existence was not altogether purposeless. It was instrumental in putting before the public valuable literature on the subject in a popular, cheap and handy form. Above all it succeeded in removing to a large extent the Hindu prejudice against tanneries. Whereas four years ago everyone laughed at the idea of tanneries being any part of a scheme of cow-protection, now everybody recognizes at least in theory their tremendous importance in cow-preservation. Again, four years ago, no one worth mentioning thought of constructive work in connection with cow-protection. The all-pervading idea was that the cow could be saved if the Mussalman could be induced not to slaughter her for Bakr Id. Now almost everyone recognizes that without the constructive work of the kind mapped out by the defunct Association the cow cannot be saved.

But before it is taken up in practice by the public at large, an ocular demonstration of the feasibility of the constructive method has to be given. That is the work inherited by the Go Seva Sangha from the parent body. I know from four years’ experience how difficult it is, what patient study and labour it requires. It asks therefore for the help and prayer of those who will serve the cause of the cow — the chosen representative of the dumb creation, so idolized by Hindu humanity and yet so ill used by reason of its ignorance and superstition.

Young India, 2-8-1928
347. SELF-SUPPORT IS SELF-RESPECT

The suggestion has often been made in these columns that in order to make education compulsory or even available to every boy or girl wishing to receive education, our schools and colleges should become almost, if not wholly, self-supporting, not through donations or State aid or fees exacted from students, but through remunerative work done by the students themselves. This can only be done by making industrial training compulsory. Apart from the necessity which is daily being more and more recognized of students having an industrial training side by side with literary training, there is in this country the additional necessity of pursuing industrial training in order to make education directly self-supporting. This can only be done when our students begin to recognize the dignity of labour and when the convention is established of regarding ignorance of manual occupation a mark of disgrace. In America, which is the richest country in the world and where therefore perhaps there is the least need for making education self-supporting, it is the most usual thing for students to pay their way wholly or partially. Thus says the Hindustanee Student, the official bulletin of the Hindustan Association of America, 500, Riverside Drive, New York City:

Approximately 50% of the American students use their summer vacation and part of their time during the academic year to earn money “Self-supporting students are respected”, writes the bulletin of the California University. With reasonable diligence a student can devote from 12 to 25 hours per week (during the academic year) to outside work without seriously interfering with college work of 12 to 16 units (credits) involving 36 to 48 hours a week . . . A student should have some sort of practical knowledge of the following: carpentry, surveying, drafting, bricklaying, plastering, auto-driving, photography, machine-shop work, dyeing, field work, general farm work, instrumental music and so on. Such common work as waiting on table for two hours, etc., is available during the academic years, which relieves a student from expenses for board. A partially self-supporting student by working during the summer vacation may save up from $150 to 200. Kansas, N.Y. University, Pittsburg, Union University, Antioch College offer ‘co-operative’ courses in Industrial Engineering by which a student can earn one year’s tuition fees working in industrial plants for which he also receives credit for his practical experience.
The University of Michigan has under consideration the opening of similar co-operative courses in Civil and Electrical Engineering. One year more is required to graduate in engineering by pursuing co-operative courses.

If America has to model her schools and colleges so as to enable students to earn their scholastic expenses, how much more necessary it must be for our schools and colleges? Is it not far better that we find work for poor students than that we pauperize them by providing free-studentships? It is impossible to exaggerate the harm we do to India’s youth by filling their minds with the false notion that it is ungentlemanly to labour with one’s hands and feet for one’s livelihood or schooling. The harm done is both moral and material, indeed much more moral than material. A free scholarship lies and should lie like a load upon a conscientious lad’s mind throughout his whole life. No one likes to be reminded in after-life that he had to depend upon charity for his education. Contrarily where is the person who will not recall with pride those days if he had the good fortune to have had them when he worked in a carpentry-shop or the like for the sake of educating himself mind, body and soul?

Young India, 2-8-1928

348. LIMITATIONS OF SATYAGRAHA

Sardar Sardul Singh is an esteemed worker. His open letter advising me to invite sympathetic civil disobedience for Bardoli demands a reply especially because it enables me to clear my own position. If Bardoli Satyagraha were a campaign of lawlessness as the Government paint it, nothing would be more tempting or more natural than sympathetic satyagraha and that too without the limits prescribed in the Sardar’s letter. But the Sardar rightly says:

I find in prominent Gujarat workers a tendency to allow Bardoli peasants to be kept isolated. This impression has been created in my mind by the reports of Sjt. Vallabhbhai’s speeches and your writings. Friends think that any more scruples on this point go beyond the limits of practical politics.

The Sardar’s impression is correct. In order strictly to limit the scope of the struggle to the purely local and economic issue and to keep it non-political Sjt. Vallabhbhai would not let Sjt. Rajagopala-chari and other leaders to go to Bardoli. It was only when the Government gave it a political character and made it an all-India issue by their coercive measures that the reins were loosened and Vallabhbhai could no longer prevent public men from going to Bardoli, though where his advice or permission was sought, he said, “Not yet.”

I do not know what Sjt. Vallabhbhai Patel would say to the Sardar’s suggestion but I can say, “Not yet.” Time has not come even for limited sympathetic satyagraha. Bardoli has still to prove its mettle. If it can stand the last heat and if the Government go to the farthest limit, nothing that I or Sjt. Vallabhbhai can do will stop the spread of satyagraha or limit the issue to a bona-fide re-inquiry and its logical consequences. The limit will then be prescribed by the capacity of India as a whole for self-sacrifice and self-suffering. If that manifestation is to come it will be natural and incapable of being stayed by any agency no matter how powerful. But so far as I understand the spirit of satyagraha and its working, it is the duty of Sjt. Vallabhbhai and myself to keep to the original limits in spite of the Government provocations which are strong enough even as they are to warrant the crossing of the original boundary.

The fact is that satyagraha presupposes the living presence and guidance of God. The leader depends not on his own strength but on that of God. He acts as the Voice within guides him. Very often therefore what are practical politics so-called are unrealities to him, though in the end his prove to be the most practical politics. All this may sound foolish and visionary on the eve of what bids fair to become the toughest battle that India has hitherto had to face. But I would be untrue to the nation and myself if I failed to say what I feel to be the deepest truth. If the people of Bardoli are what Vallabhbhai believes them to be, all will be well, in spite of the use of all the weapons that the Government may have at its command. Let us wait and see. Only let the M.L.C.s and others who are interested in compromises not take a single weak step in the hope of saving the people of Bardoli. They are safe in the hands of God.

Young India, 2-8-1928
I observe that my cablegram\(^1\) to Deenabandhu Andrews has given rise to the opinion that I have changed my views and that I have now begun to pin my faith to foreign propaganda. Let me hasten to clear any such misunderstanding. My views about foreign propaganda remain what they were in 1920 and before. My cablegram to the Deenabandhu was in reply to his. A close friend though he is, I never worried him over the Bardoli affair. But when he sent me a cable asking me to acquaint him from time to time with particulars, I could not resist him. And if this is called foreign propaganda, I should still prosecute it and advise others to do likewise with their friends in England or elsewhere. But when it comes to sending people from here or establishing an agency for such propaganda my soul rebels against it and tells me that we are beating the wind. The foreign public is not eager to listen to our talk or writings however cogent and truthful they may be. They expect and would eagerly learn about our deeds. The field for our propaganda is here and now. And when we have made good our position in our own country, the rest will follow.

Indian Shipping

The tragic history of the ruin of the national village industry of cotton manufacture in India is also the history of the ruin of Indian shipping. The rise of Lancashire on the ruin of the chief industry of India almost required the destruction of Indian shipping.

It will be remembered that in 1923 the Indian Mercantile Marine Committee was appointed in order to explore among other things the means of encouraging indigenous shipping “by a system of bounties, subsidies, etc.” Its timid and overcautious recommendations provide for the reservation of the coastal traffic for Indian shipping. Sit. Sarabhai Haji now seeks through two bills to secure legislative effect for the recommendations of the Committee. One bill aims at the abrogation of unhealthy monopolies and the other aims in five years at the passing of all the tonnage of the coastal traffic into the hands predominantly of Indians. Both the bills are necessary and both should pass without delay or difficulty. I am an out-and-out protectionist. I hold that every country, especially a poor country like India, has every right and is indeed bound to protect its interest, when it is threatened, by all lawful protective measures and to regain by such measures what has been wrongfully taken away from it. I have my doubts about anything substantial being done under the existing system through legislative effort. But I take up the same position that I have always maintained regarding organized industries such as mills. I should welcome and support all action that would protect them against foreign aggression or free them from foreign competition especially when the latter is grossly unfair as it is in the case of foreign shipping and foreign piece-goods. I therefore wish Sjt. Sarabhai Haji every success in his very moderate effort. He might quite justly have gone further than he has.

\(^1\) Vide “Cable to C.F. Andrews”, on or after 30-7-1928.

Young India, 2-8-1928

350. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

[August 2, 1928]

MY DEAR MIRA,

You will keep your health and never deny yourself what may be needed for it; nor need you attend the kitchen if the noise there gets on your nerves. In every case, never go beyond your capacity. That too is a breach of truth. And of course you are not to worry over my being away from you.

No news from this side yet. Vallabhbhai is well. No summons yet for him to go to Poona.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

You will look after Dham Kumar and Satyadevi.

From the original: C.W. 5328. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 8218

---

1 This letter appears to have been written soon after Gandhiji’s arrival at Bardoli on August 2 and before Vallabhbhai Patel reached Poona on August 3 for negotiations regarding Bardoli.
351. LETTER TO VALJI G. DESAI

SWARAJ ASHRAM, BARDOLI,
Thursday [August 2] 1 1928

BHAISHRI VALJI,

I had believed that what Parnerkar² had written regarding the demand of that cow-protection worker, the one with the books of accounts, was among my papers. But I do not find it among the papers here. Please inquire about it. I do not know if it is lying somewhere in my room. Please look for it and let me know.

Have you drafted the constitution of the Cow Service Society? Please keep it ready when I return there.

I trust you take good care of your health.

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 7395. Courtesy: V.G. Desai

352. LETTER TO SANTOK GANDHI

August 2, 1928

CHI. SANTOK,

It is true that I have made you suffer, but you may say that I have done so in the manner of a vaid³. Since I shrank from hurting Manjula, she has again fallen ill. Though I have caused you suffering, I take satisfaction in the thought that I have always wished the good of you all. I would expect hundred per cent satisfaction from you. I should like you both, mother and daughter, to return here with a happy heart. Write to me from time to time. You need not worry about Keshu and Radha.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 8670. Courtesy: Radhabehn Chaudhari

¹ Gandhiji was in Bardoli on this date.
² Y. M. Parnerkar
³ Physician practising Ayurvedic system of medicine
353. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

BARDOLI,
August 2, 1928

CHI. KUSUM,

What shall I write to you? Go on working as devotedly as you have been doing. Take care of your health. I shall require a diary of the whole day’s work from day to day. Shower love on Dahyabhai. I was extremely pained to see a touch of falsehood in him. I shall look forward to getting regular letters from you. Spread your fragrance in the school and the kitchen. See that Dahibehn does not feel hurt. About things here I can write nothing today.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1755

354. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

August 2, 1928

CHI. GANGABEHN,

I had hoped to meet you, but you could not come. You should lighten your work. I hope you have made convenient arrangement for sleeping at night. Find some time every day and give me an account of the state of your mind. Don’t work beyond your capacity and don’t make others work beyond theirs. Consult Chi. Chhaganlal about everything you wish to do.

Preserve the utmost peace in the kitchen. Women should cultivate the ability to work without making noise.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—6: G.S. Gangabehnne, p. 14
355. LETTER TO BANARSIDAS CHATURVEDI

August 2, 1928

Bhai Banarsidas,

I have your letter. The reply\(^1\) sent to Bhai Oza is just the right one. There is no need to send a wire as I had sent one already.

Yours,

Mohandas

Sjt. Banarsidas Chaturvedi
Vishal Bharat Karyalaya
91 Upper Circular Road, Calcutta

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2563

356. DISCUSSION IN BARDOLI

August 2, 1928

On the eve of starting for Bardoli Gandhiji said:

I am going to Bardoli in response to the command of the Sardar. Of Course Vallabhbhai often consults me, but does not a commander consult even a private serving under him? I am going to Bardoli not to take Vallabhbhai’s place but to serve under him.

On coming to Bardoli he maintained the same attitude and has emphasized it at several places so as to burn the lesson of discipline deep into the minds of all engaged in public work.

Peasants from various places came wading through water and mire to pay their respects to Gandhiji. “We have surrendered our head to the Sardar, not our honour (literally, nose),” said a group of them.

Gandhiji said:

Then you may be sure that your honour is safe but a great test is still to come. When you have stood the final heat, victory is yours. But tell me one thing. Supposing Vallabhbhai is taken away and others also with him, won’t you he Cowed down?

“No fear,” said one of them with firmness, “Vallabhbhai has done enough to turn our iron into steel, and we know that the only thing we have to do is to be true to

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to U. K. Oza”, 14-7-1928.
\(^2\) From Mahadev Desai’s “Bardoli Week by Week”
our word, even if the very heavens fall.”

Gandhiji was delighted. Some friend suggested that he should visit some of the villages. “Not unless Vallabhbhai wants me to do so” was the reply. It was only at Vallabhbhai’s desire that Gandhiji visited Sarbhon and Rayam and met there hundreds of peasants from scores of villages in the vicinity.

Young India, 9-8-1928

357. PREFACE TO “SELF-RESTRAINT V. SELF-INDULGENCE”

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati, 1
August 3, 1928

It is gratifying to note that the third edition of this volume is required by the public. I wish that I had time to add one or more chapters to the volume, but I cannot delay publication so that I might add the chapters. I would have done so if I could be sure of finding the time needed for it.

From what, however, I have discovered from the letters that regularly come to me from inquirers, I would like to issue this definite warning: Those who believe in self-restraint must not become hypochondriacs. The letters that come to me show that many correspondents brood over their ill-success in the exercise of self-restraint. Like everything else that is good, self-restraint too requires an inexhaustible store of patience. There is absolutely no reason to despond, and there must be no brooding. There should be no conscious effort to drive away evil thoughts. That process is itself a kind of indulgence.

The best prescription perhaps is non-resistance, i.e., ignoring the existence of evil thoughts and a continuous pre-occupation with duties that lie in front of one. This presupposes the existence of some kind of all-absorbing service requiring the concentration of mind, soul and body upon it. “Idle hands some mischief still will ever find to do”, is never so applicable as in this case. Evil thoughts, much more, evil deeds, are impossible when we are thus pre-occupied. Strenuous labour in accordance with one’s physical capacity is, therefore,

1 A draft (S.N. 14063) of this is available at the Sabarmati Sangrahalya, Ahmedabad.
2 Permanent address
absolutely necessary for those who will obey the law of self-restraint which is indispensable for individual as well as universal progress.

M. K. GANDHI

Self-Restraint v. Self-Indulgence

358. LETTER TO DR. B. C. ROY

August 3, 1928

DEAR DR. BIDHAN,

I see I omitted to reply to your question about the American Consul’s letter. Of course, the whole thing is a fabrication. I do not know who Estelle Cooper is or Nazimova.

Vallabhbhai has called me to Bardoli whence I am writing this.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

DR. BIDHAN ROY
36 WELLINGTON STREET, CALCUTTA

From a photostat: C.W. 2787

359. LETTER TO D. F. MCCLELLAND

SWARAJ ASHRAM, BARDOLI,
August 3, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter and the enclosure. You will excuse me for the delay in replying—I was so busy.

Dr. Gullick’s question is very relevant. My own opinion is that

1 In reply to his letter (S.N. 13651) dated July 26, “enclosing a copy of a communication from the American Consul”. For the American Consul General’s letter to Gandhiji and the latter’s reply, vide “Letter to Robert Frazer”, 10-8-1928.
2 In reply to his letter (S.N. 13485) dated July 23, 1928, requesting Gandhiji to give his opinion on a question received by the addressee from Sydney L. Gullick, Secretary to the Commission on International Justice and Goodwill of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America, “asking for a judgement after careful investigation as to whether the sore point lies in the race discrimination feature or in the fact of exclusion. . . .”
3 A printed appeal to the citizens of United States to amend the immigration laws so as to put an end to the Asiatic exclusion.
it is not the ‘open door’ that is wanted but really courteous treatment, not a mere declaration. And, if it is really courteous treatment that is really to be accorded, it is not difficult to find a legal formula wherewith an “Asiatic Invasion”, as unrestricted immigration of the Asiatics is called, can be effectively checked while no Indian, whose competition need never be feared, would be excluded, or, admitted only after undergoing humiliating and discriminative treatment.

I need not now answer the question as to whether hundred Indians a year or more or less will answer the purpose. The number counts for nothing, the manner means everything.

Yours sincerely,

D. F. McClelland, ESQ.

Young Men’s Christian Association, Esplanade, Madras

---

360. LETTER TO SHAUKAT ALI

Swaraj Ashram, Bardoli,

August 3, 1928

I had your long typed letter1 which you left at your office when you went to Delhi, the other day. I have carefully read your letter and I like it for its frankness. I do not share the view you have about Motilalji. He may be mistaken but he is sincere and frank.

As for me I can only say that I am what I was in 1920 and 1921. I can only hope that when the occasion arises God will give me the strength to prove the claim I have so often made, namely, that I am friend and brother to every Mussalman.

From a photostat: S.N. 13895

---

1 Referring to this in his letter (S.N. 13484) dated July 23, 1928 Shaukat Ali had written: “You will get the typed letter from my office but without my signature. That will give you a reply to your last letter . . . .”
361. LETTER TO JAIRAMDAS DAULATRAM

Swaraj Ashram, Bardoli,
August 4, 1928

MY DEAR JAIRAMDAS,

I have been too busy to attend to your letter of 2nd June. It is only because Vallabhbhai has called me to Bardoli that I have got a little breathing time to overtake arrears.

I do find a flaw in your argument. You will not decrease the consumption of foreign cloth through our mills unless they come under our control, if only for the simple reason that they will, as before, palm off foreign cloth upon you as swadeshi when they find it cheaper than their own cloth or when they run short of their own cloth. There is no shorter way than the straightest way. Has not Euclid taught us that a straight line is the shortest distance between two points? You know that I tried hard to come to terms with the mill-owners but it was of no use.

JairaMdas Daulatram
Hyderabad (Sind)

From a microfilm: S.N. 13910

362. LETTER TO CHIRANJIVALAL MISHRA

Swaraj Ashram, Bardoli,
August 4, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter.

I still write about British rule because it affects us in all departments of life. My condemnation of that rule does not make me blind to the virtues of the British people. If India is ever to gain swaraj,

1 In reply to his letter (S.N. 13850) dated June 26, 1928, criticizing Gandhiji’s denunciation of British rule. Chiranjivalal had also written: “My humble idea is that the more a man is religious, the more he is disqualified as a soldier in the fight for freedom of the country. Religion is an unnecessary evil and a drag on the political side...”
she will do so, not by copying other nations, but by finding out a way specially suited to her needs. India’s progress towards swaraj would be more rapid if she was more religious.

Yours sincerely,

CHIRANJIVALAL MISHRA, vakil
HIGH COURT, JAIPUR CITY

From a microfilm: S.N. 13909

363. LETTER TO VISHVANATH SINGH

SWARAJ ASHRAM, BARDOLI,
August 4, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter.

I have no hesitation in saying that, if you propose to remarry you should marry the girl-widow although she lived with her husband for some time. I agree with you that it is inadvisable for a widow who has children to remarry.

Yours sincerely,

VISHVANATH SINGH, ESQ.
12 HORI SARKAR LANE, BARABAZAR, CALCUTTA

From a microfilm: S.N. 13908

364. LETTER TO ABDUL QUUYUM

SWARAJ ASHRAM, BARDOLI,
August 4, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter.

I do not know any Nature cure specialist in the Punjab. But you do not need any. Sun-bath in the early morning when the rays of the sun are bearable on the naked body and simple unstimulating diet is all you need. And if this treatment does not cure you nothing else is likely to.

1 In reply to his letter (S.N. 13873) dated July 4, 1928, requesting Gandhiji to suggest a Nature-cure specialist to cure him of his tubercular glands.

Yours sincerely,

SHEIKH ABDUL QUYYUM
BATALA

From a microfilm: S.N. 13906

365. LETTER TO BHUPENDRANATH GHOSH

SWARAJ ASHRAM, BARDOLI,
August 4, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter, enclosing suggestions for amending the Ashram Rules published in Young India. They will be carefully considered when revision is taken up.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm: S.N. 13907

366. LETTER TO G. RAMACHANDRAN

SWARAJ ASHRAM, BARDOLI,
August 4, 1928

MY DEAR RAMACHANDRAN,

I had your letter dated 8th ultimo. You must give me a regular fortnightly letter. It is only because Vallabhbhai has called me to Bardoli that I am able to overtake arrears.

Devdas is in Delhi. Surendra is now trying to become an expert tanner. The common kitchen has now 150 diners. Ba, Mahadev and Pyarelal are in Bardoli, apart from others.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm: S.N. 13905

1 In reply to his letter (S.N. 13879) dated July 9, 1928, suggesting that the Satyagraha Ashram should be self-contained and not maintained by contributions from friends
367. LETTER TO CHOWDHARY MUKHTAR SINGH

Swaraj Ashram, Bardoli,
August, 4 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. If a people will not become industrious and self-supporting by following a useful occupation they will never be able to throw off the foreign yoke. Prosperity is totally different from ability to support oneself by dint of labour.

Yours sincerely,

Chowdhary Mukhtar Singh

From a microfilm: S.N. 13904

368. LETTER TO D. C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

Swaraj Ashram, Bardoli,
August 4, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. If you have the strength of mind you will certainly wear khadi even if you incur the displeasure of your employers. Our duty is to so act as not to cause injury to others. Duty is a debt and discharge of a debt does not carry any reward with it unless of satisfaction with oneself.

We pray to feel strong and purified.

Yours sincerely,

D.C. Rajagopalachari

L/78/3 Coral Merchant Street, Madras

From a microfilm: S.N. 13903

1 Dated July 10, 1928, which read: “In a country governed by foreigners whose aim is not only power but economic exploitation also, is it not a waste of time to work for economic regeneration of the country? . . .” (S.N. 13880)

2 Pleader, Meerut; Member, Legislative Assembly

3 An employee of an English firm
369. LETTER TO GIRWARDHAR

Swaraj Ashram, Bardoli,
August 4, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your booklet. I do not know whether I shall ever get the time to read it.

1. There are no courtyards specially reserved for women in these parts as in Bihar.

2. Though there is no special courtyard or room reserved, males do not have free access to the females.

3. Women at public meetings have special enclosures reserved for them, as a rule.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm: S.N. 13902

370. LETTER TO VISH NATH TIKOO

Swaraj Ashram, Bardoli,
August 4, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter.

It is wrong to say that we cannot produce hand-spun cloth for all the people. The moment the people have the will, they can

1 A vakil of Samastipur (Bihar) who in his letter (S.N. 18872) dated June 30, 1928, had asked Gandhiji the following questions: “(1) Has every Hindu house there a courtyard with rooms reserved for females as in our Province? (2) Has any friend and acquaintance of the males free access to the Zanana Compartment there? (3) In public meetings do the females sit together or promiscuously with males? (4) Have the educated females there a dislike for household manual labour like cooking, etc., or they continue to do the work themselves? (5) Do the females jointly sit with males in the outer apartments amongst their friends, acquaintances and clients, etc., or do they come out on rare occasions when necessity requires it?” It appears that Gandhiji did not answer the fifth question

2 In Hindi entitled Gram Sudhar for being reviewed in Young India and Navajivan

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
manufacture all the cloth they need and that far more economically than any that can be bought in the market.

Yours sincerely,

VISH NATH TIKOO
SHALA KADAL, SRINAGAR, KASHMIR

From a microfilm: S.N. 13898

371. LETTER TO PYARELAL CHOPRA

SWARAJ ASHRAM, BARDOLI,
August 4, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter.

You should not give up milk. You can use uncooked green vegetables if you take them in very small quantities, not more than 1 oz. per day to start with. You need not give up wheat. It is possible to take wheat uncooked after soaking it in water overnight in order to soften it.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. PYARELAL CHOPRA
HEAD CLERK, IMPERIAL BANK OF INDIA, DARBHANGA

From a microfilm: S.N. 13901

372. LETTER TO MATHURA PRASAD

SWARAJ ASHRAM, BARDOLI,
August 4, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I am sorry not to have been able to reply to your letter earlier.

I am unable to guide you in the matter mentioned by you. It is likely that, if you try, you may get some help from the Government.

MATHURA PRASAD
Bhabua (Bihar)

From a microfilm: S.N. 13900
373. A LETTER

Swaraj Ashram, Bardoli,
August 4, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

Only great pressure of business has prevented me from acknowledging the correspondence from Orissa. All my plans having been upset, I was obliged at the eleventh hour to put off sending Chhaganlal Gandhi to you. You may have him as my nominee on your board and carry on all correspondence with him. I do not know when I shall be able to send him to you. I having been called to Bardoli, the uncertainty has become still more uncertain. I can only say that I shall not delay sending him a minute more than I can help.

My suggestion to you is not to take any step about khadi without previous consultation with me through Chhaganlal Gandhi and to consult with him directly, if I am put away by the Government.

Yours sincerely,

T. K. MADHAVAN

Organizing Secretary, S.N.D.P. Yogam

From a photostat: S.N. 14054

322 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
375. LETTER TO ABBAS TYABJI

August 4, 1928

MY DEAR BHRRR,¹

It is not for me to like or dislike. When all are locked up, things will take their own course. But more when we meet. Please tell Raihana I began Gopi’s diary and had to leave it to come to Bardoli.

Yours,

BHRRR

From a photostat: S.N. 9564

376. A LETTER

SWARAJ ASHRAM, BARDOLI,

August 4, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I am sorry, I have been unable to reach your letter before now. We have evidence enough of the majority of mankind that their ancestors do not show, to our knowledge, any dissatisfaction because the rites that the Hindus perform are not performed for them. The references in the Ramayana and the Mahabharata do not prove that at one time the rites referred to in them were performed by us. To me, it seems that real reverence to our ancestors and remembrance of them should consist in copying their virtues. Personally I perform no rites in connection with my father, nor do I keep the anniversary, for I endeavour to think of my parents and copy their virtues in my life from day to day.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 13896

¹ This was a form of greeting between Gandhiji and the addressee.
377. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

Swaraj Ashram,
Saturday [August 4, 1928]

Chi Vasumati,

I am alarmed by your letter. It seems you are seriously ill. Please ask the doctor to write to me and tell me what he thinks about the illness and what treatment he is giving. Is it necessary to send anyone from here?

I am at Bardoli just now. Write to me at this address.

Blessings from

Bapu

Chi Vasumatibehn
Kanya Gurukula

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 489. Courtesy: Vasumati Pandit

378. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

Swaraj Ashram, Bardoli,
August 4, 1928

Chi Kusum,

I got your letter. I shall certainly require a well-maintained diary. If you write every day, you will grow used to the practice. You certainly know how to keep a diary. Surely, it does not require any great ability to note down the work done, the thoughts which occurred and the experiences one had!

I have given in the letter to Chhaganlal (Joshi) what news I could about Bardoli. I may say that at present I am practically enjoying rest.

How is Rajkishori?

Blessings from

Bapu

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1756

1 From the postmark

324 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
379. SPEECH AT SARBHON

August 4, 1928

Gandhiji accompanied by some prominent local workers motored to Sarbhon yesterday where, besides the volunteers of Sarbhon and the patels and talatis who had resigned and the representatives from 25 villages comprising Sarbhon division had gathered together in the Swaraj Ashram to meet him. In explaining the object of his visit Gandhiji said that he had come there only to congratulate them and to learn more about their achievements. . . . Addressing the talatis Gandhiji said:

I hold that the talatis have shown greater spirit and valour in this fight than any other section. May I express the hope that you will maintain the same fine spirit when peace comes as you have shown in this fight? For I have noticed that talatis often tyrannize over the poor villagers and harass them. It is up to you to set them at their ease so that they might learn to regard you as friends and helpers, not as objects of terror. For the rest, the people have understood the secret of unity and combination, and once that lesson is learnt victory becomes an easy matter.

He next had a short talk with the representatives of the 25 villages of Sarbhon division numbering about sixty, in the course of which he said:

Although your leaders would be the last persons to stand in the way of an honourable settlement they are bound to reject any settlement that is abject or humiliating. We are all anxious for peace, but we want peace with honour, a peace that would be worthy of the satyagrahis and the cause which they represent. Some representatives of Bajipura the other day told Vallabhbhai that they had pledged their all to him but not their honour.¹ My advice to you is that you should surrender your honour to nobody in the world. As for Vallabhbhai, he would be the last person to wish you to do so. For he holds his own honour dear and the honour of others is as dear to him as his own. No one can deprive another of his honour if he is determined not to surrender it. A time may shortly come when Dr. Sumant², Abbas Tyabji and all the local workers and volunteers may be snatched away from you and clapped into jail. Then will come your real test. Let each one of you when that hour comes defend the citadel of his honour with his last breath, for that is the meaning of swaraj. The substitution of a brown for a white bureaucracy won’t bring us swaraj.

¹ Vide “Discussion in Bardoli”, 2-8-1928.
² Sumant Mehta
Swaraj will come to us only when we have developed the capacity to safeguard our honour. And if you make truth and non-violence your shield then I tell you that whatever be the end of this struggle you will come out of it with your honour unscathed. The Government may riddle you with bullets or turn you out of your homes. You must be prepared for both. Only remember what Vallabhbhai told you, that a soldier receives bullets on his chests not on his back.

As for being deprived of your hearth and home what fear can you have so long as you have sound limbs with which to do labour. It is after all not Government that gives you your daily bread but He who watches over all creation. You have already achieved much and if you can stand the last heat unflinchingly the world will ring with fame of your deeds. But if you fail in the crucial test your fall will be as great as your present success. Even so in 1922 you came within an ace of success but you could not maintain that position and the result was that you sank back into the morass till Vallabhbhai by his penance and sacrifice again raised you to the old heights. He has done his part. It now remains for you to do yours.

The Bombay Chronicle, 7-8-1928

380. LETTER TO MANIBEHN PATEL

Swaraj Ashram, Bardoli,
Saturday, August 4, 1928

CHI. MANI,

Swami\(^1\) is not here, but I read your letter to him. Do not insist on coming here. It is the duty of a soldier to keep fit and obey the commander willingly. We can improve our health soon enough if we apply our mind to it.

Father, Mahadev and Swami have gone to Poona. They must have started from there today. A wire was expected from Poona, but it has not yet arrived. One cannot say yet whether or not there will be a settlement. I feel that the Government is not in a sufficiently strong position now to prolong the fight. Public opinion is against it and

\(^1\) Anandananda
ithas made many mistakes. I visited Sarbhon today. There has been no rain for some days. Most of the people here are leaving for Surat today.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro—4: Manibehn Patelne, pp. 67-8

381. MAGANKAKA

Under this heading, Prabhudas Gandhi has written a good, detailed and yet very brief biographical sketch of the late Maganlal Gandhi. There is truth in it and also a command over the language. Because of the blending of truth and simplicity of expression the account in my opinion can also be said to be outstanding from the point of view of art. All of us have to learn much from the life of the late Maganlal Gandhi because he was a living example of the saying: “Practise as you preach.” This account is given here since it cannot but benefit Gujaratis.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 5-8-1928

382. LACK OF COTTON OR EFFORT?

The Secretary, Children’s Conference of Kasunda, situated in the Manbhoom region of Bihar, writes:

The writer is a Gujarati and takes interest in the life of the children of Bihar and in khadi. I congratulate him on doing so. But I am grieved by what he says in his letter, that due to want of slivers and cotton, the plying of charkhas has had to be stopped. Those who have the means to procure charkhas can obtain cotton from anywhere and there should be no need to get slivers from elsewhere. I have often written in Navajivan that those who do not know how to card and make slivers cannot be said to know spinning. Only those can be said to know how to make the flour rotis who know how to knead, make

1 Not translated here
2 The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had stated that the spinning-wheel had ceased to operate in certain parts of Bihar for want of slivers.
rolls and roast rotis. Similarly, only those who know how to card cotton, make slivers and spin can be called spinners. In fact, all the three processes constitute a single activity. Perhaps it would not be improper to call slivers the thickest of yarn. The process of carding is easy and beautiful. It does not take much time to learn it. Hence, my reply to the writer of the above letter is that slivers should be available in the village of Kasunda itself. It is not due to want of cotton or slivers that plying of charkhas has had to be stopped but rather due to want of effort, and in this fact I also see the absence of a genuine love for the charkha. I hope that wherever charkhas are plied as yajna spinners would immediately learn how to card cotton and make slivers.

[From Gujarati]

Navadivan, 5-8-1928

383. SETTLEMENT OR WAR?

Reports of a settlement are coming in from all quarters, and, behind it, are also heard the echoes of a battle. At one time we hear that the Government is firm and is not prepared to change even one of the points in the talks held at Surat, while at other times we hear that the Government is eager to arrive at a settlement, that it is ready to yield as much as possible and would fight only if it cannot help it.

God alone knows which of these two versions is correct. A satyagrahi remains indifferent towards both, but at the same time should be prepared to face either. He should not let go a single opportunity for a settlement but should always be prepared for a battle. He should never adopt devious ways. He should not have the chakravyuha of Abhimanyu, he should have only one golden, straightforward path, which even a child can see. He has nothing to hide, he can have recourse to no underhand dealings; what then has he to think about? It is immaterial for him whether on Monday he gets the news of a settlement or of Shri Vallabhbhai’s arrest.

If satyagrahis have fully learnt their lesson under the leadership of Shri Vallabhbhai, they would not be scared at all at his arrest or that of other leaders and, while allowing things to take their own course,

---

1 An impregnable phalanx of the Kaurava army which Abhimanyu alone was able to destroy would remain steadfast in their determination.

Those who are trying to bring about a settlement have a right to do so; it is the dharma of every citizen to take a hand in preventing an unnecessary war. But if they get involved in efforts at a settlement out of misplaced pity for satyagrahis, they will harm the nation and prove that they do not understand the satyagrahis. The latter do not need pity, they do not hanker after it; what they crave for is justice. Hence, it is possible that the efforts of those who seek pity for satyagrahis by regarding them as weak, may be in vain. If the demands of the satyagrahis are just, it is the dharma of the mediators to make a determined effort to see that justice is done to them. In order to do so, it is essential for the former to understand the demands and the struggle of the satyagrahis. A satyagrahi enters the struggle by regarding sorrows as joys. Therefore no one has the right to enter into any negotiations on his behalf out of distress for his sufferings. It is my confirmed belief that those who intervene in such a manner prolong the struggle rather than shorten it.

A satyagrahi always desires to educate public opinion. Therefore he wishes to make his facts fully known. In spite of this, those, who in their ignorance, build tabernacles of truce with imagined facts, would find that these will burn down with a single spark of the match-stick of truth, just like tents made of paper. Those who wish to bring about a compromise need to have the faith that persons prepared for suffering will never be guilty of exaggeration; they have taken to the path of satyagraha only as a last resort, after all the other avenues had been closed to them. The satyagrahis of Bardoli and Valod fall into this category. They have resorted to satyagraha after all other methods had failed.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 5-8-1928
384. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

SWARAJ ASHRAM, BARDOLI,
[August 5, 1928] ¹

MY DEAR MIRA,

Your letters. I am using your name freely in order to stop the noise in the kitchen. It does not matter if you incur a little displeasure of some sisters for the time being. You should discuss this question freely with them.

Chhotelalji says you have a violent dislike for the monthly course regulation of which he says you knew nothing. Is this so? I thought we discussed it and you agreed that it was necessary to placate those who had scruples. You may discuss this with Chhotelalji and let me know what you have understood.

It is almost certain that a compromise will be announced tomorrow or on Tuesday. But I shall be detained for some days longer for the new order of things to settle down.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5304. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 8194

385. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

BARDOLI,
Sunday, August 5, 1928

CHI. VASUMATI,

I have no news today. I intend to send a wire tomorrow to inquire. If you need anyone to help you, you should not at all hesitate to write and tell me so. Your health should not get worse. I did not follow your remark about being confined to bed for a month. I personally do not understand the suggestion about gram soup.

Most probably there will be a settlement of the Bardoli problem.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 490. Courtesy: Vasumati Pandit

¹ From the reference to the announcement of the compromise regarding Bardoli
² Vide "Letter to Mirabehn", August 14 and 26, 1927.
386. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

BARDOLI,

Sunday, August 5, 1928

CHI. KUSUM,

I got your letter. It is strange that you should have a headache. Take care.

If you have any explanation why . . . bhai¹ does not admit his error, think over it and let me know. Is it possible that you misunderstood at any time what you were told? Personally, I have again written to say that . . . bhai² should be relieved. Write and let me know what arrangements have been made for the Bal Mandir³.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1757

387. LETTER TO ANASUYABEHN SARABHAI

SWARAJ ASHRAM, BARDOLI,

August 5, 1928

CHI. ANASUYABEHN,

I did not write to you till now as there was no news. Today Mahadev has returned from Poona. Valjibhai got off at Surat. A compromise will most probably be arrived at. All our conditions have been accepted. However, we will know for certain either tomorrow or on Tuesday, so for the time being this is meant only for you find our friends. Mahadev tells me that Vallabhbhai feels that I may have to stay here for about a fortnight should there be a compromise. I have letters from Gulzarilal and Desai. The Provincial Congress Committee is meeting in Surat today. I have written asking Vallabhbhai to finalize things.

I am fine.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original : S. N. 32777

¹ The names are omitted in the source.
² Infant school
³ From Mahadev Desai’s “Bardoli Week by Week”
388. SPEECH ON DISCIPLINE, RAYAM

August 5, 1928

I cannot speak as the order of the Sardar is clear. If he had been here and asked me to speak I should have done so. But today I cannot do anything more than congratulate you on your bravery and on your unity. I was glad to see the spinning demonstration, but I cannot even speak about the charkha. It should be a principle with us implicitly to obey the commands or instructions of one whom we have chosen to be our Sardar. I admit I am Vallabhbhai's elder brother, but in public life no matter whether one is father or elder brother of the man under whom one serves, one must obey his instructions. It is not a new law. It used to be a law even in ancient times. It was that spirit of discipline which made such a mighty personality as Lord Krishna humbly serve as Arjuna's charioteer and serve as the meanest of the menials on the occasion of King Yudhishthira's Rajasuya Sacrifice. I cannot therefore do anything more than congratulate you. It was Vallabhbhai who made you famous throughout India. But it was Government who made you famous throughout the world. May you achieve even greater things in future.

Young India, 9-8-1928

389. TELEGRAM TO JAMNALAL BAJAJ

BARDOLI,
August 6, 1928

JAMNALALJI
CARE “PRATAP”, CAWNPORE
PRACTICALLY FINISHED. SATISFACTORY. AM STAYING HERE.

BAPU

Panchven Putrako Bapuke Ashirvad, p. 69
390. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

SWARAJ ASHRAM, BARDOLI,
August 6, 1928

MY DEAR MIRA,

Your letter. Of course I am not going to force you to do anything. But evidently my memory has gone to the dogs. I seem to have the clearest possible recollection that I talked to you and you to have said that for their sakes one had to do as they desired.\(^1\) But either I simply fancy I spoke to you when I did not or something terribly wrong has happened. Whatever the case, you must set yourself at ease. You shall be suited completely.

The settlement is practically finished but I shall have to be some days here to watch.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

Hope Kusum is all right now.

From the original: C.W. 5305. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 8195

391. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

BARDOLI,
Silence Day, August 6, 1928

SISTERS,

It seems a settlement has been practically reached. So I hope to return early. Vallabhbhai wants to keep me here for a few days. Tomorrow we expect more authentic information about the settlement.

I have been thinking about the kitchen. I have been considering how you can be made to take full interest and work wholeheartedly in it. I feel that for this purpose you must shoulder the entire burden of the kitchen. You should get what help you need. But you can take up the responsibility only when you feel within you enough strength to do so. The noise in the store-room and the kitchen must definitely cease. If Mirabehn were there, she would find it difficult to work with so much noise; even Chhotelalji would be disturbed. Those who sing the Gita verses about being steadfast in wisdom must cultivate the habit of working quietly. While making chapatis or cleaning the rice, why can we not get fully absorbed in our work and do it silently? But when you say that time will not pass unless you are talking, I become helpless. Even then I should say that you need not make quite so much noise. Why can we not, while working, reflect on the significance of some verse we may have learnt that day? Think of all this, and do only what you think best.

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to Mirabehn”, 5-8-1928.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3681

392. LETTER TO PRABHASHANKER PATTANI

Swaraj Ashram, Bardoli,
August 6, 1928

SUNNA BHAISHRI,

I got your letter. Need I thank you?

No one need worry about me at all. God will keep me all right for His own purpose so long as He wants me to work, and when He gets displeased even a thousand physicians will not be able to help me. But now a settlement seems certain.

Nevertheless, Vallabhbhai desires that I should stay here for a few days more.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

[PS.]

Don’t worry about coming to the Ashram. If you can find the time to come, you will undoubtedly be welcome.

From the Gujarati original: G.W. 3224. Courtesy: Mahesh Pattani
393. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

Monday [August 6, 1928]

CHI. VASUMATI,

I got three postcards together today. They report fairly satisfactory progress. I had already sent a wire earlier. I know that there you should follow the doctor’s instructions. May God restore you to health very soon.

A settlement about Bardoli is almost certain. But I shall have to stay on for a few days longer.

Blessings from
BAPU

CHI. VASUMATIBEHN
KANYA GURUKULA

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 491. Courtesy: Vasumati Pandit

394. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

BARDOLI,
August 6, 1928

CHI. KUSUM,

Mirabehn writes and tells me that you have still not recovered. There is no letter today from you and that confirms what she says. I hope you are not brooding over things?

A settlement is almost certain. I shall, therefore, return in a few days. Nevertheless, I shall have to stay here a little longer than I had expected. Vallabhbhai desires that I should.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1758

1 From the postmark
395. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

August 6, 1928

CHI. RAIHANA,

Your first Gujarati letter was very good indeed. If you write thus often and improve your handwriting, your Gujarati will become really very good. Since there is a settlement now, what work can I give you here?

Vandemataram to everyone.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9608

396. LETTER TO BECHAR PARMAR

August 6, 1928

BHAISHRI BECHAR,

I got your transparently sincere letter. Even though you may be a teacher, why should you not draw water for others? Or work as a barber? You should not mind if the Government dismisses you or people criticize you for that. I want you to remain a teacher simply in order that, though working as one, you should do physical work and give up false shame. There is nothing wrong if, remaining detached, you shoulder the burden of family responsibilities. Never think of running away.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 24749
397. LETTER TO MOOLCHAND AGRAWAL

SWARAJ ASHRAM, BARDOLI,
August 6, 1928

Bhai Moolchandji,

Please excuse the delay in replying.

If one working in a subordinate position really possesses higher merit than his senior, the latter will recognize his talent. But then there is one condition; the subordinate must have perfect humility and patience.

Yours,

Mohandas Gandhi

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 762

398. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

SWARAJ ASHRAM, BARDOLI,
Silence Day [August 6, 1928]

Chi. PrabHAVATI,

I get your nice letters regularly. Your handwriting and expression are both good. Do not fall ill by struggling to reach the kitchen at five. It will do if you go at half past five. I shall now return in a few days. How is Vidyavati’s health? How is the Bal Mandir Hindi class getting on? Maintain a regular daily diary.

Blessings from
Bapu

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 3331

1 Addressee’s sister
399. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

SWARAJ ASHRAM, BARDOLI,
August 7, 1928

MY DEAR MIRA,

I did not wire as the papers announce the settlement. I won’t worry about the monthly untouchability till my return. I know the defect to which you have drawn my attention. If the chief men are strong the Ashram will settle down to its peace.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5306. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 8196

400. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

BARDOLI,
Tuesday, August 7, 1928

CHI. KUSUM,

I got your letter. I find it difficult to understand you. I know that you would not use the language of humility when writing to me. I do not believe that you cannot keep a diary.¹ Your saying that your letter became too long and that you do not know how to make a letter brief is also false humility. All your letters are good. I personally would not be able to shorten them, and I know fairly well the difference between a long and a short letter. If, therefore, you really have a high opinion of yourself, get rid of it and stop self-depreciation if you are making a show of it as a mere formality.

The matter about . . . bhai² seems to have been settled now. It seems that he has admitted his error. His admission has not been conveyed personally to me, but it seems he has admitted his error before Surendra and Chhotelal. Your part in the affair was indeed very good.

The programme for the Bal Mandir seems all right. If you can adhere to it, the project is bound to prosper.

¹ Vide “Letter to Kusum Desai”, 4-8-1928.
² The name is omitted in the source.
Take care of your health.

I expect to reach there by the end of this week or in the beginning of the next. When do you get up these days?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1759

401. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

August 7, 1928

CHI. VASUMATI,

I got your letter, as also Vidyavatiji’s wire. Please tell her. If, after you have recovered, Ramdevji takes you to Hardwar, there is no harm in going with him and consulting a vaid. It may perhaps do good.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 492. Courtesy: Vasumati Pandit

402. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

Swaraj Ashram, Bardoli,
August 7, 1928

CHI. GANGABEHN,

I got your letter.

Though a settlement has been reached, I shall remain here a few days longer.

It is good that you attend the prayers regularly. You may work as much as you wish, but you should take rest at intervals and keep yourself calm. Do not work any time in a restless state of mind. Cultivate Mirabehn’s company a great deal and ask her to pull you up. She should do it every time she hears you shouting It will not be many days before you get used to working on silently and with a cheerful mind, and you will also get less tired then.
Make Krishnamaiyyadevi work regularly. You will be able to win her over through love.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

[From Gujarati]

_Bapuna Patro—6: G. S. Gangabehnne, p. 14_

403. A LETTER

[Before August 1, 1928]

I have both your letters. Why do you ask me for anything? When you went to jail I wrote nothing either to you or for the newspapers. Still you do not forget me. Such is your love. My own love stopped me from writing but I have kept myself posted with news of you. Your way and mine appear to differ in many respects, but what does it matter?

Now the message: The best way to keep the memory of Lokmanya alive is to attain swaraj. Why not let us die in the quest for swaraj? In my opinion the Bardoli way is also the way to swaraj.

I hope you are now fully restored.

_Blessings from_

_MOHANDAS_

From a photostat of the Hindi: S.N. 16009

---

1 The year has been inferred from the reference to the Bardoli Satyagraha. The message in the letter seems to have been sent for B. G. Tilak’s death anniversary on August 1.
404. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI, 1
August 8, 1928

CHI. MIRA2.

Subbiah arrived here last night. I am therefore going to dictate instead of writing to you.

If the event occurs before I reach there, you should be served in your room. Will that suit? And, if you do not want it even to be guessed by anybody, you may be served even as from now.

There is no question of segregation at any other time or at the prayer meeting. The question has reference only to the kitchen and the dining-room.

I thoroughly appreciate the spirit with which you are conducting this enquiry. Of course I have much to say upon the matter. But I don’t want to deal with it through correspondence.

I hope to be there on Sunday or some time early next week.

I have not misunderstood the remark you made about the inmates of the Ashram.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5307. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 8197

405. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

SWARAJ ASHRAM, BARDOLI, 2
Wednesday, August 8, 1928

CHI. KUSUM.

Your reply to Sharada was not only well pointed but it also contained a deep meaning.

My reply is that I do not know—the daughters themselves should know—who is nearest to my heart. I write to any one of them to whom I think I have to and also try to write to those who want me

1 Permanent address
2 The superscription in this and other letters to Mirabehn is in Devanagari script.
to write to them. Show this to Sharada and let me know if she wants me to write to her.

If thefts take place in the women’s wing, you should be able to discover the thief. You should have mentioned in your letter the things which had been stolen.

Send me a list of the things stolen and of the owners. Also let me know whom you suspect.

I may arrive there on Sunday. If I do not I shall be there early next week at the latest.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1760

406. ALL’S WELL

It is a matter for sincere joy that the settlement has at last been reached1 over the Bardoli Satyagraha. All’s well that ends well. I tender my congratulations both to the Government of Bombay and the people of Bardoli and Valod and Sjt. Vallabhbhai without whose firmness as well as gentleness the settlement would have been impossible. The reader will note that the satyagrahis have achieved practically all that they had asked for. The terms of reference to the Committee of Enquiry are all that could be desired. True, there is to be no inquiry into the allegations about the coercive measures adopted by the Government to enforce payment. But it, was generous on the part of Sjt. Vallabhbhai to waive the condition, seeing that the lands forfeited including lands sold are to be restored, the talatis are to be reinstated and other minor matters are to be attended to. It is well not to rake up old wrongs for which, beyond the reparation made, there can be no other remedy. The inquiry into the assessment question will be carried in a calmer atmosphere for the waiver of the clause about the coercive processes.

Let not the satyagrahis sleep over their well deserved victory. They have to collect and collate material to prove their allegations about the assessment.

And above all, if they are to consolidate their position, they must

1 On August 6, 1928 at Poona; for the terms of settlement, vide Appendix on “Bardoli Settlement”.

342 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
proceed with constructive work with redoubled vigour. Their strength lies in their ability and willingness to handle this difficult, slow and unpretentious work of construction. They have to rid themselves of many social abuses. They must better their economic condition by attention to the charkha. It was the charkha that led to the awakening among them. They must remove the reproach of drink from their midst. They must attend to village sanitation and have a properly managed school in every village. The so-called higher classes must befriend the depressed and the suppressed classes. The greater the attention given to these matters, the greater will be their ability to face crises like the one they had just gone through.

The noble band of volunteers who had the privilege of serving under Vallabhbhai deserve the highest praise for their devotion and splendid discipline. The task is not yet finished. Those who can spare the time must help the Sardar in his constructive work.

Young India, 9-8-1928

407. NOTES

LATE JUSTICE Ameer Ali

I tender my respectful condolences to the relatives of the late Justice Ameer Ali who was not the least among the friends and helpers of the cause of the Indian settlers in South Africa in the protracted satyagraha struggle of 1906-14.

SOUTH AFRICAN CONDONATION

Just at the time of going to Press I have before me a copy of Indian Opinion containing the supplement giving full particulars regarding the condonation scheme1. I have time just now only to give below the form of application2 to be made so as to reach the Department of Interior (Immigration and Asiatic Affairs) before 1st October next.

Let those who wish to return to South Africa send their applications betimes. I hope to publish other papers and information next week.

1 Vide Appendix on “South African Condonation”, before August 9, 1928.
2 ibid
MAGANLAL MEMORIAL

The reader will be glad to know that Sjt. Mulji Sikka has donated the sum of Rs. 10,000 to the Maganlal Memorial. The love of this family for khadi is well known and has been often enough exhibited in a variety of ways.

A CORRECTION

In Young India of 19th July last appears an acknowledgment of Rs. 2,000, sent through Lala Lajpat Rai to the Bardoli Fund. In this the sum of Rs. 500 has been acknowledged as from “other contributors”. The amount, however, was a personal contribution from Lalaji himself. I am sorry for the blunder, but when numerous entries have to be made daily and when they pass from hand to hand such omissions often become inevitable in spite of all efforts to avoid errors.

Young India, 9-8-1928

408. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

August 9, 1928

CHI. VASUMATI,

I got your long letter today. You don’t seem to have become completely free from your illness. If you want anyone to be sent from here, let me know. It appears that I shall be able to leave Bardoli on Sunday.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

If you find your hair to be a source of trouble to you, have no hesitation in having it cut off.

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 493. Courtesy: Vasumati Pandit
409. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,¹
August 10, 1928

CHI. MIRA,

I hope to move from Bardoli at the end of the week. I have your letter. For the time being, it is best to have your food served in your room and not to have anything to do with the kitchen. I have much to say about the argument you have advanced. But as I hope to reach the Ashram on Monday morning, I do not wish to argue the position through correspondence. I am not perturbed over the position you feel you have to take up.

We had a death of a very brave young girl at the Swaraj Ashram who was quite all right yesterday and came in order to meet her father who is at the Sabarmati Jail and whose discharge was imminent. She developed violent pain in the abdominal region. Doctors could not diagnose. She died peacefully early in the morning.² And so, though I am mechanically doing today’s programme, I am holding silent converse with the God of Death and making the meaning of death more clear for myself.

More when we meet.
Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5308. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 8198

¹ Permanent address
² Narrating the incident, Mahadev Desai wrote: “She had come all the way from Vankaner on foot . . . At three o’clock in the morning she said: ‘Pray call Mahatmaji to my bedside. I want to have his last darshan.’ Gandhiji soon came. She had lost her eyesight, but as soon as Gandhiji accosted her, she said: ‘I cannot see you, but I recognize your voice. Will someone fold up my hands? I want to do my last obeisance to Gandhiji.’ Next she asked for Vallabhbhai, and before daybreak she passed away” (The Story of Bardoli, pp. 140-1).
410. LETTER TO ROBERT FRAZER

BARDOLI,
August 10, 1928

I have your letter. Dr. Bidhan Roy wrote to me about its subject-matter and I trust you have had a reply.

The whole story is a fabrication from start to finish. I know nothing of the parties mentioned therein.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 13487

411. LETTER TO CHARLES FREDERICK WELLER

August 10, 1928

I do like your emphasis upon appreciation rather than toleration. Whether you are now ready to launch out in Chicago, etc., is more than I can tell. It must be a matter of your own feeling and experience. I can only say generally, in all such matters, try after depths rather than extent of service.

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 14333

1 Dated August 2, which read: “I beg to inform you that a telegram was lately addressed to the President of the United States of America by Estelle Cooper Gandhi, reading as follows: ‘Mahatma Gandhi has informed me to inform you Nazimova has left him no alternative but to declare boycott on all American goods and call general strike on all American plantations which employ darker-skinned people. Boycott lifted only when Nazimova deported and Katherine Mayo presented for criminal libel here.’ I would be greatly obliged if you would inform me who Estelle Cooper Gandhi is and whether the above telegram was sent with your knowledge and approval. I would also be pleased to receive any comment that you may care to make in regard to this matter.” Vide also “Letter to Dr. B. C. Roy”, 3-8-1928.

2 Executive President, League of Neighbours; associated with Fellowship of Faiths and Union of East and West. In his letter dated June 21, 1928, Weller wrote: “One of my long-time ambitions is to visit India . . . to organize meetings in which Hindus will pay tributes of appreciation to the Mohammedan faith, Mohammedans to Hinduism and Christians to both, . . . 5”
412. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

Friday [August 10, 1928]

CHI. VASUMATI,

I got your long letter giving all the details. It is very well written. I know now all that I wanted to know. I wish to make no suggestion. The doctor is a good man; why should I interfere with his treatment? Personally, though, I would not approve of gram soup, and that too spiced.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 494. Courtesy: Vasumati Pandit

413. LETTER TO OLIVE DOKE

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

August 11, 1928

MY DEAR OLIVE,

I was thankful to receive your letter giving me detailed news about yourself and your brave and wonderful work. I was thankful too to hear about Clement and Comber.

You want to know something about my boys. Harilal, the eldest, has become a rebel. He even drinks and makes himself merry and is honestly of opinion that I have gone astray in all I am doing. Manilal is in Phoenix keeping up Indian Opinion. He was married two years ago.

1 From the postmark
2 Permanent address
3 Daughter of Rev. J. J. Doke
4 Brothers of the addressee
5 From Mahadev Desai’s “Bardoli Week by Week”
ago and took his wife with him. They are both happy. Ramdas and Devdas are with me helping me in my work. Ramdas was married a year ago. Devdas is still unmarried. I am conducting here a fairly big institution. The enclosed will give you its constitution and its composition.

When you write to the different members of the family please send my love to them all and accept it for yourself.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

MISS O. C. DOKE

KAFULAFUTA, P.O. NAOLA, N. W. RHODESIA (SOUTH AFRICA)

From a photostat: C.W. 9226. Courtesy: C. M. Doke

414. SPEECH AT VALOD

[August 11, 1928]

Even amongst the satyagrahis there were not wanting people who were dissatisfied with the result and addressed notes to Gandhiji and to the Sardar to say that they would have preferred a fight to the finish to a half-hearted compromise.

In reply to these impatient men of Valod Gandhiji said:

You will recognize that I am the acharya of the science of satyagraha, and as such I tell you that no victory could have been cleaner, straighter and more decisive. What if your Sardar was not taken into confidence by Government? Every one of your conditions has been fulfilled and you want nothing more. You need not care as to how and through whose instrumentality the settlement was brought about. A satyagrahi is satisfied with the substance, he does not fight for the shadow. And why do you talk of a fight to the finish? Because you did not get an opportunity of proving your mettle against the worst odds, against power and shot? Well, it does not behave a satyagrahi to wish that his opponent should stoop to brutishness in order that his own bravery may be proclaimed to the world. A satyagrahi always prays that his opponent’s heart may be converted by the grace of God and not that it may be rendered more stony. And

1 From the Bombay Secret Abstracts, p. 552, paragraph 1353(3)
2 ibid
3 Preceptor
why are you impatient? The bigger battle is still before us—the battle for freedom of which the campaign was planned in 1921 and which has yet to be fought.

Young India, 16-8-1928

415. ‘RAMA, THE STRENGTH OF THE WEAK’

It is an exaggeration to say that the satyagrahis have triumphed, for there is nothing like defeat for a satyagrahi. He gives up only when he is dead. Nevertheless, from a practical point of view it could be claimed that the satyagrahis of Bardoli have won. Everyone will praise those who fight unto death; however, no one will claim that they have, therefore, been victorious. The satyagrahis of Bardoli can be said to have been victorious, since their demands have been conceded.

From the practical point of view, the credit for this victory may be due to anyone. From the standpoint of the satyagrahis and from that of Vallabhbhai, it is due to God alone. Vallabhbhai has indeed tendered it. A satyagrahi offers up his all to God when he enters the battle-field. No credit or discredirt, therefore, can be attributed to him. He appears to be weak in the eyes of the world. He has no physical strength inasmuch as he has no weapons. What comparison can there be between the strength of the people of Bardoli and the might of the British Empire? Whereas the people of Bardoli are like ants, the latter is like an elephant; but it is when the satyagrahi becomes like an ant that God saves him, as He saves the ant which is about to be crushed under the elephant’s foot. This is what has happened in Bardoli.

Let us proceed after thus expressing our thankfulness to God.

No settlement could have been brought about had His Excellency the Governor not chosen to do so. Having disregarded his own strongly-worded speech, he adopted a conciliatory policy and conceded the demands of the satyagrahis. He deserves to be complimented for this.

However, the settlement would have been impossible had Vallabhbhai Patel not acted in such a large-hearted manner. The game was in his hands. He waived his right to insist upon an inquiry into the high-handed policy that had been adopted at the time of the collection of land revenue. He could have taken up a legalistic attitude on other minor matters, but he refrained from doing so. However, his greatest sacrifice was the one which involved his ignoring his own position. He completely left himself out of consideration. To this very day, Vallabhbhai has not been officially informed of the settlement that has been arrived at. He has learnt about it only through letters from friends and from the reports in newspapers. However, he is concerned with the essence of the thing and not with how it is done, hence he can be indifferent about prestige. A satyagrahi does not require any personal recognition or, if in certain cases he seems to lay stress on such recognition, it is for the sake of the people’s honour. Hence, just as there could have been no struggle without Shri Vallabhbhai Patel, similarly, no solution would have been possible without his consent.

In the third place, the credit certainly goes to the men and women of Bardoli. Without their courage and their fortitude, the struggle would not have gathered momentum and would not have had a happy end.

It is not the case that others do not deserve to be complimented. It is not the purpose of this article to compliment those who deserve to be complimented. Compliments have been offered to all from various quarters. If the principal actors have been mentioned, that has a bearing on my purpose in this article.

That purpose is to consider the future. Victory would be futile if in order to celebrate it we eat sweets and then rest comfortably, and the people would revert to their previous habits. And while considering the future, we must bear in mind the Governor, Vallabhbhai Patel and the people of Bardoli.

The satyagrahis have always claimed that there was no justification for an increase in land revenue, and that the soil of Bardoli could hardly bear even the burden of the old revenue. We asked for a committee to examine this matter and this demand has been conceded after much suffering on our part. The people have now to collect evidence and prove that they cannot bear the burden of any additional revenue, that, on the contrary, it should be reduced. It is also for the people to prove that the reports on which the Government had relied did not deserve to be relied upon.

However, in addition to this, the constructive work which should follow in the wake of the people’s awakening is of the greatest importance. Taking advantage of the wonderful awakening that has taken place among the women, the superstitious and harmful customs that are prevalent among them could be eradicated. The spirit of unity that has been generated among the men should be utilized for uniting them further and for ridding them of the harmful practices prevailing among them. People’s behaviour towards the Raniparaj, the Dublas and the Antyajas should undergo a change. Attempts should be made to make permanent the boycott of liquor which has come about as part of this struggle. It is necessary to make a determined effort to bring about a total boycott of foreign cloth. In this cotton-growing area, spinning-wheels are not yet being operated in every home; this state of affairs should change. The awakening among the people can be made permanent and the people self-supporting only if these and similar other activities are undertaken.

Boycott has played an important part in this struggle. While peaceful, non-violent boycott has an undoubted place in satyagraha, violent, malicious boycott has no place in it. Hence it will be necessary to withdraw boycott wherever it had been employed. Pure boycott does not spread hatred but, on the contrary, increases love. Those who displayed weakness should not be reproached for their weakness. There should be no anger against those officers who misbehaved, nor should they be flattered. People, while preserving their independence, should behave courteously towards the officials. The talatis have demonstrated their courage. They will now resume their offices but the people will hope that, though carrying out their duties faithfully, they will be respectful and loyal to them too.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 12-8-1928

416. MY NOTES

SACRIFICE BY GIRLS

Smt. Vidyavati Devi of Kanya Gurukula, Dehradun, sends the following letter:

The draft sent is for more than Rs. 300, of which Rs. 200 represent the sacrifice of the girl students. I thank these young girls. May God preserve their spirit of service.

1 Not translated here. The letter stated that the girls of the Gurukula had saved the money by going without sweets and fruits for a month.
LARGE DONATION TO THE VIDYAPITH

Shri Nagindas Amulakhrai has always taken interest in national education. He has even donated money to it frequently. He has now contributed one lakh of rupees. He had gifted this large amount in order that it should be utilized, at my discretion, for increase of knowledge. With his consent I have entrusted it to the Vidyapith and nominated five representatives to look after its administration. I compliment Shri Nagindas for this donation. It is my belief that, having regard to the task we wish to accomplish through the Vidyapith, people cannot contribute enough to its funds. We may not be able to see today tangible results of the existence of the Vidyapith. However, a time will certainly come when everyone will take note of the contribution made by the Vidyapith in the cause of national growth for its aim is worthy and selfless workers are engaged in promoting it.

BIG CONTRIBUTION TO THE MAGANLAL GANDHI MEMORIAL

Shri Mulji Sikka, who has a large business in Nipani and Gondia, has contributed a sum of Rs. 10,000 towards this memorial through Shri Manilal Kothari. I compliment him for doing so. This gentleman has often given proof of his love for khadi. Contributions for this memorial are gradually coming in. Naturally, Bardoli attracted the people’s attention and their contributions. I did not, therefore, write about this memorial. Now that the first half of the Bardoli chapter is over and Shri Mulji Sikka’s generosity has provided me an opportunity, I draw the attention of all who love khadi and appreciate the value of Shri Mulji’s services to this memorial.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 12-8-1928
417. OUR CONSERVATISM

A young man writes to say:

There are about a thousand Jains in our town. Amongst these, there are about 150 widows and 250 bachelors. Forty of the latter are between forty and sixty years of age. They cannot marry unless they can spend thousands of rupees. Something between five and twenty thousand rupees has to be spent in order to get a bride. This leads to an increase in immorality. The Jain sadhus take no steps in this matter. If questioned on this subject, they reply by saying that this is a worldly problem and that, by trying to solve it, they would be violating the orders of Mahavira. Could you not write something on this subject?

Another reader writes to say:

A friend of mine is about forty-two years old. Although he is married he has no children. He, therefore, wishes to remarry and ruin the life of a twelve or thirteen-year-old girl. How can he be made to overcome his infatuation?

I deal with these letters together as our conservatism lies at the root of both problems. Some persons believe that things are all right as they are, that it is not necessary for us to think about their propriety or otherwise and that it is sinful to raise doubts about customs that have come down through generations. When to this line of argument is added lust, evil customs become good ones! Our young men require a great deal of strength and moral purity if we are to free ourselves from such a pitiable condition. They can cultivate public opinion through their tapascharya and satyagraha and put to shame those who are blinded by lust. A small community like that of Jains need not remain small. Jain youths should insist on marrying girls outside their community. The Jains mostly belong to the Vania caste or are Vaishyas. They need not even go outside the Vaishya class. There are crores of Vaishyas in India, and a deserving man should not find it difficult to get a bride from amongst these. Such a person should vow not to give or receive a single pie by way of dowry. Moreover, Jain young men should be ready to marry those among the 150 widows who were widowed in childhood. So long as they can marry such widows, they should not even look for unmarried girls.

I believe that at present it is futile to hope for much from Jain and other sadhus and religious teachers. The question of livelihood is a big problem for them too, or rather they have made it one. Hence they do not go against public opinion and readily advocate reforms. Some who are exceptions to this rule attempt to introduce reforms, but people are not ready to listen to them. These latter sadhus do not possess the necessary strength of character to have an impact on the people. Others will automatically be saved if the sadhus as a class are reformed, but impostors have entered their fold and many sadhus spread irreligion or superstitions under the guise of religion.

It is a difficult task to reason with that other man of forty-two years who, though he has a wife living, wishes to marry again. Who can convince him that begetting children is not a part of dharma, whereas it is man’s dharma to be satisfied with one wife. One should learn to regard as one’s sons all boys who are old enough to be so. In a poverty-stricken country like India, innumerable children are without parents and grow up somehow. Under such circumstances, if every person who has no son, brings up and rears one such child as his own, he would be doing a meritorious deed and reap the benefit of having a son without indulging in the sexual act. Adoption is a common and widely acknowledged practice among Hindus.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 12-8-1928

418. UTILITY OF MACHINES

The late Shri Maganlal wrote to me many letters which were of value for the public, but, in accordance with my habit, I used to tear them up. Moreover, I had never expected that he would die before me. About fifteen days before his death, he wrote to me a letter which I still have with me, and I give below a part of it which is of public interest: ¹

Both these criticisms deserve consideration. People should not rush to any kind of exhibition. They can reap some benefit from exhibitions only if they have some knowledge about the articles exhibited and if they exercise discrimination regarding their value.

¹ The letter is not translated here. Maganlal had doubted the utility of machines and implements exhibited at agricultural criticized and criticized the Government's discriminatory customs policy which encouraged the imports of steam or oil-driven machines at the cost of machines which could be worked by hand or with the help of bullocks.
Who can calculate the loss we have suffered as a result of our giving up some of our age-old household implements without sufficient knowledge about them? Just as it is absurd to say that all that is old is good, similarly, it is equally absurd to conclude that, just because a thing is old, it is useless. No one is opposed to machinery. Our opposition is to its misuse, or its excessive use. I did not know at all that there is a fifteen per cent duty on machines which are operated by living beings and a five per cent duty on those operated by mechanical power; perhaps, many of the readers too may be ignorant of this fact. However, I am not surprised to know about this discrimination for it was only when I saw such discrimination being practised by the Government in every sphere of its activity that the idea of non-co-operation occurred to me.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 12-8-1928

419. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

CHI. MANILAL AND SUSHILA,

I have your letters. I shall write no more about the dryness of your letters.

This is the reply to Sushila’s question about Sudama. We know nothing about whether or not he was a historical character.

I do not remember what the Bhagavata says about Sudama. We have what Narasinh Mehta and Premanand have written about him. The stories told by both of them are imaginary. The pictures drawn by the two poets are their own inventions. We cannot, therefore, take every word in the narrative seriously and pronounce judgement on any aspect of the story. To me both the husband and the wife seem beautifully drawn characters. The poems were composed to illustrate the power of bhakti. In composing them, the poets have shown the wife as a worthy lady who tries to safeguard the interests of her family and worries about it. Sudama, who is under the spell of bhakti, lets his affairs manage themselves. The wife wants to protect her children and so she tries to wake up the detached Sudama. He hesitates, because a devotee of God makes no selfish prayer. But his wish, though seemingly selfish, is in fact unselfish. Prompted by his wife, he went to Krishna without any expectation and came away as he had gone. We should, therefore, read the poem to enjoy the sentiment of bhakti. We cannot draw any conclusions from it about what the relation between a husband and a wife should be. We may use our reason to decide that question, and act in the manner that seems best to us. An attempt to judge old examples in the light of modern reason is not only futile and unnecessary but may be actually harmful sometimes. We should base our conduct in this age on independent moral principles.

1 Devotion to God

I like Manilal’s independence in what he thinks about Sastriji, but I see an error in his view. There should be a different standard for judging every individual. If we judge a horse by the standard applicable to an elephant, we would be doing injustice to both. Both may be good or bad in their respective spheres. An elephant or a horse may be treated to have failed in the test if it fails when judged by the standard applicable to itself. If we judge Sastriji by the standard of satyagraha, we would do him injustice. If we look to the service which he renders to the nation, though in Government service, we shall see that he has no equal. If, then, he were to plunge into the field of satyagraha, he would probably have no equal there too. It is my belief that no one else would give as much satisfaction, through his uprightness, as Sastriji does. In my view, he sincerely follows his conscience in everything he does.

I learn from him that Sushila now speaks fairly good English. I would expect such information about you from yourselves.

Now that a settlement about Bardoli has been reached, I am returning to the Ashram. Ba and Mahadev are with me. Subbiah joined later. Pyarelal, Ramdas and Rasik have been here from the beginning. It is to be decided now what they are to do. Devdas is in Delhi working in Jamia Millia. Prabhudas is at Almora.

Rule has now been made to have one common kitchen only in the Ashram, and, therefore, very few are left now who have their meals by themselves. They, too, will have stopped doing that before the next year. At present, about 140 persons take their meals in the common kitchen.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4742

\footnote{V. S. Srinivasa Sastri}
420. LETTER TO VIDYAGAURI R. NILKANTH

Sunday, August 12, 1928

DEAR SISTER,

What you write about Vallabhbhai is indeed true. He has done credit to the whole country. To make a speech on the occasion of the Brahmasamaj centenary celebrations will be a burden as I am very busy in my own activities, yet I dare not say ‘no’ to you. But if you still insist on a speech from me, I should make it clear that I have no time to write it. And then will there be the time for a speech on the 20th, i.e. Monday? I shall reach Sabarmati only tomorrow morning. You will receive this only on my reaching there. You may send it on if you like it. I shall come over in case you wish me to. I have shown your letter to Vallabhbhai.

Vandemataram from

M. HANANDAS

[From Gujarati]

Vidyabehn Nilkanth Jeevan Jhanki

421. SPEECH TO VOLUNTEERS, BARDOLI

[August 12, 1928]

We have begun today’s proceedings with prayers to God. We have been already warned that one should never feel proud of one’s triumphs. But that is not enough. Even to say that the people of Bardoli won honour by their courage is not sufficient. It is true that we have won the victory because of the indefatigable efforts of Sardar Patel, but to say that is also not enough, because we would have never won if he did not have loyal, hardworking and sincere co-workers.

It is a rule of satyagraha that we should not consider anyone our enemy. But there are people who would treat us as their enemy even though we do not regard them as our enemy. We should not wish to destroy such people but should seek to bring about a change of heart in them.

1 Gandhiji, however, accepted the invitation to speak at the Ahmedabad Prarthana Samaj on the occasion of the Brahma Samaj centenary celebrations; vide “Speech on Brahma Samaj Centenary Celebration, Ahmedabad”, August 20, 1928.
2 This appeared under the title “Immortal Words”.
3 From Young India, 13-9-1928
Many a time the Sardar has told you and the Government that as long as there is no change of heart in the Government officers, a settlement is impossible. Now that a settlement has been arrived at, there must have been a change of heart at some level. A satyagrahi should never pride himself on having achieved anything by his strength. A satyagrahi is a cipher, and his strength is the strength of God. He should have on his lips only the words “Rama, strength of the weak”. God will help him only when he gives up the pride of his strength. If there is any change of heart, we must thank God for that. But even that is not enough.

We must believe that a change of heart took place in the Governor. Had it not occurred, what would have happened? We are not worried about anything that might happen. We had taken a pledge that we would not be intimidated even if guns were brought out against us. If we celebrate our victory and rejoice today, it is pardonable. But, at the same time, I want to tell you that the credit for the happy outcome goes to the Governor. If he had persisted in the same stiff attitude that he had taken up in his speech in the Assembly and had not yielded, if he had desired to shoot down the people of Bardoli, he could have killed us. On the contrary, it was your pledge not to raise a hand against them even if they had tried to kill you. It was your pledge neither to show them your back nor to raise a stick or even a finger against their bullets. So the Governor could have razed Bardoli to the ground if he had so willed. Had he done that, then too Bardoli would have won, but that would have been a different kind of victory. We would not have been alive to celebrate it, but the whole of India and the whole world would have celebrated it. However, we should not wish any of us, even the officers, to have such a stony heart. Let us not forget these things in this mammoth meeting of Bardoli Taluk where the people who took the pledge of 1921 have got together. I have made these introductory remarks in order to drive out any pride that might be hidden in ourselves.

It is from a distance I wished for your success. I was not one of those who came and worked amidst you. Vallabhbhai had me in his pocket and, if he had desired, he could have brought me here at any minute, but I cannot take the credit for the victory. This is your and your Sardar’s victory and the Governor has a share in it; and if that is so, his officers and the members of the Assembly also have a share in it. We must acknowledge the share of all those who sincerely desired a settlement. We must of course thank God for this victory. But God remains aloof and uses us mortal creatures as instruments to get His work done. We should, therefore, give due credit for the victory to all other people who contributed towards it. If we do so, very little credit will remain for us to claim and it is best that that should be so.

1 Vide “Speech at Congress Session, Ahmedabad - I”, December 28, 1921.

This is the fulfilment of only the first half of your pledge. The latter part has still to be made good. We have got what we demanded from the Government. It has given what it could. Now you have immediately to pay off the revenue dues on the old basis. Do that soon. Moreover, befriend those who had opposed us. Befriend also the officers of those days who are still in your taluk. Otherwise, you will be said to have violated your pledge. For the fulfilment of the first half of our pledge we had to approach the Government; but its latter part we have to fulfil ourselves. Not to have a bad word for anyone, and not to harbour anger towards anyone constitute the fulfilment of the remaining part of our pledge.

Let us go still further. This pledge of ours is a new and a small one—it is only a drop in the ocean. The pledge which was taken in this district in 1922 was a formidable one. That still remains unfulfilled. You have gone through this training to fulfil that pledge. I pray to God and ask of you that you fulfil that pledge.

Fulfil your pledge under the banner of none else but the Sardar, under whose leadership you have fulfilled the first part of the pledge so magnificently. You will never find such a self-sacrificing leader as he. He is like a blood-brother to me, but I do not hesitate to give him this testimonial.

I do not consider it difficult to face a bullet in the chest, but to work daily, to fight the self at every moment and to purify one’s soul is a difficult task. Two different sorts of people can face bullets in two different ways. A criminal commits a crime and faces a bullet, but can one achieve swaraj thus? He alone who faces a bullet after self-purification can win swaraj, and this is a difficult thing to do. It is difficult to provide food, drink, clothing and work to those who lack them. Most of you probably do not know how pitiable is the condition of the people of Orissa. I have often talked particularly to the sisters about the skeletons of that Province. If I try to describe their conditions to you, tears will come to your eyes as well as mine. You may think this an exaggeration, but if I take you there you will see the conditions with your own eyes. It is difficult to put flesh on those skeletons, but that is our pledge.

You are in debt as long as your pledge remains unfulfilled. May God give you and all of us the strength and the good sense to fulfil it.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 19-8-1928

422. SPEECH AT BARDOLI

August 12, 1928

I want to remind you that the pledge you took in 1922 after a searching cross-examination still stands unredeemed. That pledge was not taken only once but has been reaffirmed many times since then. The letter to the Viceroy was withdrawn, but the pledge was not revoked. After consultation with the people, an association was also formed in the taluk to work for the fulfilment of that pledge. That was the origin of the constructive work which is being carried on in Bardoli. It is not that all this has been achieved smoothly, without any hindrance. What kind of difficulties the volunteers have had to face and how Bhai Narahari had to undertake a fast are part of history. I do not want to go into it today. No one can be complacent as long as this pledge remains unfulfilled.

Although you have assembled here to celebrate a festival, utilize the occasion for self-examination so that you may not forget your duties. Volunteers should celebrate festivals only in this manner. The victory is only a drop in the ocean. Where there is such leadership and where there are such disciplined volunteers, I do not consider this victory a difficult achievement. We did not wish to seize power from the Government. We only wanted a particular injustice to be redressed. In such circumstances, I believe that in no other way is justice as easily secured as by satyagraha.

The country need not have been amazed at the outcome of the

---

1 This was published in Young India under the title “Work as You Have Fought”. The first five paragraphs and the eighteenth (the second one under the sub-title “Remember Our ‘Skeletons’”) are translated from Navajivan, 19-8-1928, where they appeared under the title “Immortal Words”.

2 Vide “Speech at Bardoli Taluka Conference”, January 29, 1922.

3 Narahari Parikh; he fasted because the people of a village under his charge refused to make amends for their cruel behaviour towards the Dublas.
struggle. If none the less it was, there is an explanation for it. Our faith in satyagraha had been shaken. India did not have before now such an overpowering example of success. It is true that there were the instances of Borsad and Nagpur. I have not stated it anywhere else, but I believe that the victory at Nagpur, too, was complete. Fortunately or unfortunately, we did not then have anyone like the representative of The Times of India to publicize our struggle. His vilification has made Bardoli famous not only in India, but in the whole world. Otherwise we have done nothing great. We would be said to have done something great when we make good the unfulfilled pledge of 1921. It is Bardoli’s responsibility to do so. I was about to say that the blot on Bardoli would be removed only when we fulfil our pledge, but I restrained myself. We cannot call it a blot because what we could not achieve in Bardoli has not been achieved elsewhere either. But whether you describe the work as a responsibility to be undertaken or a blot to be removed, it still remains to be done. This struggle would be helpful in accomplishing that and that is why I have welcomed it.

How fortunate are we that we got an opportunity for such a struggle in Bardoli itself and that we succeeded completely in it! We got all we had asked for. We could have demanded the fulfilment of more conditions than we actually did. As one of the terms we could have demanded an inquiry into allegations about the coercive measures adopted by the Government while collecting the revenues. But We did not make such a demand and that was Vallabhbhai’s generosity. A satyagrahi is satisfied if he gets the essential thing, he is not greedy or obstinate about other things.

What should we do now? We should make this celebration an occasion for self-examination. Those volunteers who had come here only for the struggle and had intended to go back when it was over should do so. But those who are not bound to go and who have impressed Vallabhbhai should stay here and should know that they are fit for doing this work only. This work will test their worth.

Fighting Not the Only Work

You are labouring under a great delusion if you think that fighting by itself will bring swaraj. Let me tell you that even veteran warriors, men of the sword, do not make fighting the sole concern of their lives. Garibaldi was a great Italian General, but he drove the plough and tilled the soil just like an ordinary peasant whenever could get respite from fighting. Again, what was Botha, the South African General? A farmer among farmers, like any in Bardoli. A great keeper of sheep as he was is flock numbered forty thousand. As a judge of sheep he could hold his own against any expert and even won a diploma for sheepkeeping. Although he won laurels as a General, fighting occupied a very small part of his life which was mostly devoted to peaceful constructive pursuit. He thus showed constructive talent of; mean order. And General Smuts? He was not merely a distinguished General, but a lawyer by profession, being at one time farmer Attorney-General of South Africa, and an excellent farmer to boot. He has an extensive farm near Pretoria and his fruit orchard is among the finest in South Africa. All these are instances of men who though they made their mark in the world as Generals were none the less keenly alive to the value and importance of steady constructive work.

South Africa was not from the very first the rich, prosperous country that it is today. When the colonists arrived there, they found before them an undeveloped country. They cleared the waste and established a prosperous colony on it. Do you think they did it by mere dint of fighting? No. The development was the result of patient constructive labour. Will you follow Vallabhbhai’s lead in his constructive campaign just as you did when he led you against the Government; will you take up the burden of constructive work, or will you hang back? Remember, if you fail in this, all the fruits of your victory will be lost and the peasant’s last state will be worse than their first in spite of one lakh of enhanced assessment that they might save as a result of this struggle.

REPAIR AND RECONSTRUCTION

Look at the condition of the roads in your taluk. The local volunteers can clean them up and set them in proper order by a couple of days’ effort if they like. And once they are set in order, it should not need more than half an hour’s instruction daily to teach the villagers how to keep them in a fit condition. You may doubt, but you may take it from me that there is a very close connection between this sort of work and swaraj. Driving out the English will not by itself establish swaraj in India. Of course we must fight when our liberty is interfered with. But what next? Do we want the swaraj of barbarism, freedom to live like pigs in a pigsty without let or hindrance from anybody? Or do we want the swaraj of orderliness in which every man and everything is in his or its proper place? Only yesterday I had to motor from Vankaner to Bardoli, the journey well nigh finished me. The road was so wretched. This reminds me of a similar incident that once happened in Champaran. The road was bad, but the volunteers there put their shoulders to the wheel and forthwith made the necessary repairs without waiting for anybody’s help. Do not think that I am complaining about roads because of yesterday’s experience. We ought to learn to keep our roads in good repair.\textsuperscript{1} It is no use saying that this is the duty of the Government and not yours. The Government has no doubt many a grievous sin to answer for. Let us not impute our sins also to the Government or use the latter’s lapses to justify ours. Enough unto the day is the evil thereof. Surely the Government cannot prevent us from repairing our roads if we want to.

\textbf{Village Sanitation}

Then, may I ask you what you have done to popularize the principles of sanitation and hygiene in the villages? It involves no complications as in untouchability. It only puts to the test our sincerity and depth of feeling towards those amongst whom we live. We shall be unfit for swaraj if we are unconcerned about our neighbour’s insanitation and are content merely to keep our own surroundings clean. With the wonderful awakening and the spirit of co-operation that has come over the men and women of Bardoli, you should be able to convert it into a model taluk. By a general clean-up of the village surroundings, you should be able completely to eliminate the danger of scorpions and poisonous reptiles that infest this taluk. And I want to burn the lesson deep in your mind that all this will constitute a distinct step towards swaraj.

\textbf{Temperance}

Not less important is the work in connection with the liquor habit. It has got to be primarily done by us. The utmost that the Government can do or be made to do in this respect is to cease issuing toddy licences, but it can hardly wean the drunkard from his evil habit. That part of the work will still have to be undertaken by Phulchandbhai and his Bhajan Mandali, even if the Government were to screw up its courage and forgo 25 crores of excise revenue by adopting a policy of total prohibition. Are you prepared to shoulder the burden? Are you prepared smilingly to take lathi blows on your bodies should it be necessary in the course of your work? Can you guarantee that your pickets will not disgrace themselves by rowdyism and worse as some of them did in 1921?

\textsuperscript{1} This and the preceding sentence are from \textit{Navajivan}.

HINDU-MUSLIM UNITY

Again are you prepared to work for and lay down your life to establish Hindu-Muslim unity? Will you be able to keep your heads cool and offer pure satyagraha when communal passions run high and people lose their heads?

KHADI

Then again, have you an abiding faith in the spinning-wheel? Have you recognized that our present struggle would have been impossible unless the spinning-wheel had paved the way? Do you realize that but for khadi work our 3 workers would not have been able to win the confidence of the Raniparaj people and acquire the influence that they have over them? And if you have, are you prepared to train yourselves as spinning experts, to go on turning the spinning-wheel without fuss or bustle with the name of Rama or Allah on your lips? Today there are hardly half a dozen men in the country who know how to correct a spindle. The problem is as old as the khadi movement. The Mysore Government has made several attempts to produce absolutely true spindles, but has met with little success. Lakshmidasbhai is even at present carrying on correspondence in this behalf with Germany. Yet anyone by application can learn to correct a spindle. Just imagine what an increase it would mean in the output of khadi even with the existing wheels if we could solve this and a few other small questions of a like character. Will Vallabhbhai be able to interest you in this work or do you tell me that these are mere fads of a faddist and that Vallabhbhai knows better than to foist them upon you? You may say so if you like, but again I tell you that there is no other way to swaraj than this.

REMOVAL OF UNTouchABILITY

I come next to the problem of untouchability which includes the question of the Dublas. Will you be able to bring together and establish harmonious relations between the Dublas and the Ujali population? Do you realize that unless this is done, you will never be able to found real swaraj? Or dare you hope that you will bring round

---

1 In Bombay on November 17, during the visit of the Prince of Wales the refractory by main force once swaraj is established?

You cannot shirk these and like problems if you want to utilize your victory to win freedom for all India. By all means take up any other constructive work, if you can think of any, if the work that I have suggested does not appeal to you. One cannot go on fighting always. But an outlet must be found for our stored-up energy and that can only be through constructive work. We have a lot of corporate cleaning-up to do yet, a host of social evils to purge out. Miss Mayo’s book has been justly condemned as being written with a malicious motive. It is full of deliberate misstatements and palpable falsehoods. But I am not prepared to say that there is no basis in fact for anything she says. Surely, some of the evils mentioned by her do exist in our midst, though the inferences that she has drawn from them are wholly unjustifiable and unwarranted. Child-marriage, the marriage of young girls with aged men, the inhuman treatment often accorded to our widows are painful and grim realities that stare us in the face. How do we propose to deal with these evils?

NOT ENOUGH

The way in which the Hindus, Mussalmans and Parsis of this taluk stood shoulder to shoulder together in the course of the struggle was splendid. All honour to them. But can we lay our hand on our heart and say that a real and abiding heart-unity between the various communities in this taluk has been established? Would you have been able to keep together without the consummate tact of the Sardar and the presence of an Abbas Tyabji or an Imam Saheb in your midst? Are you sure that you will be able to remain unaffected even if the whole country is plunged into an orgy of communal hatred? Well, I doubt.

ORGANIC SWARAJ

An act of Parliament might give you constitutional swaraj. But it will be a mere chimera that will profit us but little if we are unable to solve these internal problems. In fact, ability to solve these problems is the alpha and omega of real swaraj, the swaraj of the masses that we all want.

---

1 Mother India
Then I should like to know how your volunteers here have handled funds, like a spendthrift or like a miser. Have they been able to remain free from the but too common weakness of being lax with regard to the use of public funds? I take it that there has been no extravagance or reckless expenditure in your case. But what we need is Spartan simplicity. I shall be only too glad to be told that the strictest standard of economy was observed throughout. Nothing will give me greater satisfaction than to find that you have learnt to do better in this respect than is usual with volunteers in general.

Ours is the poorest country in the world. Moreover, our Government is the most extravagant in the world save that of America. If we observe the working of the hospitals here, we shall find that money is spent in them according to standards prevailing in England. Even the hospitals in Scotland would not spend so much money. Col. Maddock told me that in Scotland they could not afford to throw away the used bandages as we do here, that they were put to use again after they had been washed. England can afford to act in that manner. They have left their country for adventure and they have found in ours a field for exploitation. Our true standard can be ascertained by what the majority of people get to wear and to protect themselves with. We must assess our needs on the basis of that standard and spend money accordingly. If we do not do that, we will lose ultimately.

WORK IN FAITH

All this requires faith and patience and hope. It may not be given to an old man like me, who has almost come to the end of his journey, and is therefore anxious to see swaraj established in India, to live to witness the fulfilment of his hope, but surely you, who are in the prime of your life, should work in the hope of seeing swaraj established in your lifetime. You must turn the searchlight inward. Have you a genuine love and sympathy for the dumb masses whose cause you are out to serve? Have you completely identified yourselves with them and their sufferings? Do you feel like taking up the broom and cleaning their latrines if they are dirty?
BE TRUE SOLDIERS

This is a stupendous task and requires all the volunteers that we can have. But they must first learn the lesson of discipline, of rendering implicit obedience to the orders of the chief, of taking up the meanest task that might be entrusted to them with cheerfulness, alacrity and zeal. If we do all that we shall win the battle of swaraj as easily as this fight.

Young India, 13-9-1928

423. SPEECH AT SURAT

[August 12, 1928]

For a satyagrahi nothing can be truer than to say that no one but God is to be thanked and praised for the triumph of the Bardoli Satyagraha. Indeed we need say nothing more. But I know that that is not going to give us satisfaction, for the conviction has not yet gone home to us that we are but instruments in His hand and He uses us as He wills. We have not yet learnt the virtue of surrender to God. Man is yet part man part beast, indeed more beast than man and so his ego is not satisfied with praising God alone. In fact in remembering Him on occasions like this we feel as though we were obliging Him. Following our animal nature therefore we may congratulate our Sardar, his companions and his volunteers and the men and women of Bardoli. Vallabhbhai alone would not have won the battle without the faithful co-operation of his co-workers. But even so should we thank His Excellency the Governor, the officials, and M.L.Cs for their having helped in bringing about a happy settlement. We should be lacking in humility, we should be so much the less satyagrahis if we failed in our duty to render our thanks to those who were opposed to us.

The vast gathering of the citizens of Surat, seated before me on wet earth, with so much inconvenience to themselves, reminds me of 1921. I still remember the words I addressed to you in 1921 on this very spot. Possibly some of you also can recall what I said, and I propose to remind you how we have failed to do the things that we decided to do seven years ago. The lesson of Bardoli will have been lost on us if Bardoli and Surat go to sleep over the Bardoli victory after having had victory celebrations and dinners. Vallabhbhai has been telling the Bardoli people that it is easier to fight Government than to fight our own people, for we naturally make—and should make, if we were men—mountains out of molehills of Government’s injustice. But we fight shy as soon as we are face to face with our own drawbacks and shortcomings. I therefore reminded the Bardoli people,¹ who had fulfilled the first half of their pledge, of the second half, viz., of paying up the old assessment. That I know will be done in the course of a few days. But what next? How will you husband the tremendous stores of energy and enthusiasm that you have brought into being during the satyagraha campaign? How will you utilize the unprecedented awakening that has come amongst the women of Bardoli? How will you serve them, how will you identify yourselves with them and help to remove their misery? Satyagraha includes civil disobedience, civil resistance to the tyranny of blind authority, but the capacity of resistance presupposes self-purification and constructive work. If I were to ask you to render account of what you have done since 1921 in the direction of self-purification and constructive work I know you and I would have to shed bitter tears.

1 This appeared under the title “Remember 1921” with the introductory words: “The following is a condensed summary of Gandhiji’s speech at Surat on the occasion of the Bardoli victory celebrations.”

2 From The Bombay Chronicle, 1-8-1928

3 Vide “Speech on Swadeshi, Surat”, October 12, 1921.

I want to tell you that I continue to be what I was in 1921. I have the same inexorable conditions to place before you, conditions which are a sine qua non for peace, prosperity, swarajya, Ramarajya, or the Kingdom of God that we are hankering after. What right have the Hindus and Mussalmans of ease-loving Surat to talk of swaraj, so long as they run at the another’s throat in the name of God, and then run to the courts to seek Justice? If you are truly brave, you may fight one another on equal terms, but you may not seek the protection of courts of justice. The English and the Germans fought on fields of battle, but did not go to law-courts. There is some bravery in free and fair fighting, but none in running to law-courts. Let the Hindus and Mussalmans fight a pitched battle, if they will, let them fight fair and clean and decide their issues. Their names will then go down in history. But this fighting, followed by protracted wrangles in lawcourts, is not bravery. Our present ways are not ways of bravery but of cowardice. True bravery lies in laying down one’s life for the sake of religion, in voluntary surrender of non-essentials. That is the lesson of Bardoli, and it will have been lost on us if we lose ourselves in the frenzy of victory celebrations. Until we who have sprung from the same soil and are children of the same motherland, though belonging to different faiths, learn to love one another as blood-brothers, victories like that of Bardoli will be of no avail.

¹ Vide “Speech to Volunteers, Bardoli”, 12-8-1928.

Another item is the purification of Hinduism. Have you purged it of its deepest stain? True swaraj I repeat is impossible without self-purification. I do not know any other way. Call it my limitation, but then it is the limitation of satyagraha If there is any other way, I do not know it, and anything won by means other than those of self-purification will not be swaraj but something else.

The third and the last thing in our programme is the duty of men of all religions and all races towards the skeletons of the land. The charkha, I may repeat ad nauseam, is the only remedy. I have come across a strong justification of the charkha from a strange quarter. Sir Lallubhai Samaldas in his review of the ponderous Agricultural Commission’s Report has shown how the Commissioners have shunned like an untouchable even the mention of the word spinning-wheel in the chapter on subsidiary industries. How is it that they have fought shy of a thing which provides the only occupation to the starving millions? I submit that the potency of the spinning-wheel lies in that very fact. They might have at least criticized it and even ridiculed it. But no. They could not contemplate with equanimity its infinite possibilities. (A heavy shower of rain.) Well I have really done, and need say nothing more.

Young India, 16-8-1928

424. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

Swaraj Ashram, Bardoli,
[Before August 13, 1928]

CHI. PRABHAVATI.

Does Vidyavati take a steam [bath]? She should be made to lie wrapped in a sheet soaked in cold water. Soak the sheet in clean, cold water, wring it well and spread it on the bed. Let Vidyavati lie on it,

1 From the reference to reaching Sabarmati Ashram on Monday, August 13, 1928; vide also “Letter to Prabhavati”, 6-8-1928.
then wrap the rest of the sheet around her and cover her with a woollen blanket. The face would be left uncovered. She should lie on the sheet naked to the waist. If the body does not warm up in this position and she feels the cold she must leave the bed. I have an idea that Gangabehn knows about this bath because I had instructed her about it. Leave it if you have not understood it. Bathing in water in which neem leaves have been boiled may do some good. I suspect Vidyavati does not stick to her diet.

I am glad to learn that Ma is better.

Tell Kamlabehn Gandhi that I am not replying to her letter as I shall reach the Ashram on Monday.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 326

425. TELEGRAM TO NANABHAI I. MASHRUWALA

[August 13, 1928]

NANABHAI MASHRUWALA
AKOLA
ASHRAM DEEPLY GRIEVED BALUBHAI’S DEATH.

BAPU

From a microfilm: S.N. 14757

---

1 In reply to a telegram dated August 13, 1928, which read: “Sorry Balubhai died suddenly Bombay morning. Nanabhai, Kishorelal.” Vide also the two following items.

2 Vide also “Passing away of a Silent Worker”? 19-8-1928.
426. LETTER TO KISHORELAL MASHRUWALA

Monday [August 13, 1928]

CHI. KISHORELAL.

What shall I say to comfort Nanabhai or you? Both of you look upon death as a friend. Our grief can only be due to our selfishness. Before his death, Balubhai wrote to me a sweet letter. It was about Bardoli. In fact he wished to go there, but, since the doctor did not permit it, he contented himself with a letter. You will do a wrong if you do not ask for any service which the Ashram can render. We can even look after the children.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 2659. Courtesy: Kanubhai Nanalal Mashruwala

427. LETTER TO NILKANTH MASHRUWALA

Monday [August 13, 1928]

CHI. NILKANTH.

I had no wire from you, but I received one from Akola. Balubhai’s soul rests in peace. We may shed tears through selfishness, but you at any rate have learnt the truth about the highest good of human life. Use your wisdom at this juncture and, displaying patience yourself, comfort others. Ask for any service we can render from here.

Write to me from time to time.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 9172. Courtesy: Nilkanth Mashruwala

---

1 From the postmark
2 Youngest brother of Balubhai Ichchharam Mashruwala
3 From the reference to the death of Balubhai, addressee’s father; vide also the two preceding items.
428. LETTER TO SUBHAS CHANDRA BOSE

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
August 14, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter enclosing the circular about the Exhibition. I see now what you are aiming at and I can appreciate your standpoint. But I am sorry I cannot endorse it. According to the circular you will be free to admit many foreign exhibits and mill-cloth. The only difference between Madras and Calcutta would be that Calcutta will exclude British goods, whereas British machinery was exhibited at the Madras Exhibition. In the circumstances I would personally like to abstain from identifying the All-India Spinners’ Association with the Exhibition.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

SJT. SUBHAS CHANDRA BOSE
BENGAL PROVINCIAL CONGRESS COMMITTEE
1 WOODBURN PARK, CALCUTTA

From a photostat: G.N. 1595

429. LETTER TO DR. S. C. BANERJEE

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
August 14, 1928

DEAR SURESH BABU,

I got your two letters in Bardoli front where I have just returned. I shall certainly deal with your report in the pages of Young India.

With reference to the Exhibition I am in touch with Sjt. Subhas Babu. I enclose herewith a copy of my latest letter to him. I must confess that I do not like the idea surrounding the forthcoming Exhibition. If I had my way I should not exhibit not only British goods but also foreign goods unless they are so valuable and yet so unknown as to require a special advertisement through the Congress Exhibition. And I should certainly not exhibit mill-cloth; for, mills neither need nor deserve any advertisement from us.

2 Vide the preceding item.

Yours sincerely,

DR. SURESH C. BANERJEE

COMILLA

From a microfilm: S.N. 13658

430. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

August 14, 1928

DEAR SATIS BABU,

I have your letter.

Here is a copy of my letter\(^1\) to Sjt. Subhas Bose in reply to his letter.

I have just returned from Bardoli.

SJT. SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA
KHADI PRATISHTHAN,
SODEPUR

From a photostat: S.N. 13655

431. LETTER TO R. B. GREGG

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

August 14, 1928

MY DEAR GOVIND,

I have your letter. As soon as I receive the manuscript of your Science notes\(^2\) I shall certainly go through them and then hand them to Kaka for his opinion too.

With reference to the publication, whilst I appreciate your arguments\(^3\), somehow or other my inner being dislikes the idea. However I shall be able to judge better after I see the notes.

\(^1\) Dated August 14, 1928

\(^2\) A booklet entitled “Science for Kiddies”

\(^3\) In favour of giving the booklet to Macmillan & Co.
I hope you will not make yourself sick with overwork before you leave for America. I would like you to leave in a perfectly healthy condition.

The index and everything else can wait if you cannot easily find time for them.

I never thought that you did not know that Andrews was in England. He had the intention even whilst he was here of going to America. Of course you will meet him there. He is going there in September.

Yes, Bardoli is a great lesson. It has revived faith in nonviolent methods and in power of the masses.

My love to the Stokes.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 13489

432. TELEGRAM TO C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

[Before August 15, 1928]

RAJAGOPALACHARI

YOU MUST GO WITH SHANKERLAL TO BANGALORE AND BOTH BE INTERNED TILL YOU ARE RESTORED.

BAPU

From the original: S.N. 32763

433. LETTER TO GIRDHARILAL

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

August 15, 1928

DEAR LALA GIRDHARILAL,

Yes, all you say about Bardoli is true. The praise is well deserved by the satyagrahis and above all Vallabhbhai.

I like the idea of your saving the few annas by resisting the temptation to send a telegram. But it shows also that you have lost

1 From the addressee’s telegram dated August 15, 1928, which read: “Thanks letter, telegrams. Taking all care fixing up Bangalore. No assistance wanted yet.”
again. I would so like you not to go in for ambitious schemes and be satisfied with what little God may give you.

Yours sincerely,

LALA GIRDHARILAL
‘DIWAN BHAWAN’, DELHI

From a photostat: S.N. 13492

434. LETTER TO JETHALAL JOSHI

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
August 15, 1928

BHAISHRI JETHALAL,

I have your letter. Think more deeply about brahmacharya and strive to observe it. You need not be in a hurry to start eating with others or to take the vow of [non-] possession. Peace is found in ceaseless service. We cannot give the best service without perfect humility. Being without desire is to look forward to nothing and how can one who has renounced expectation be ever disappointed? One should read regularly the Bhagavad Gita and the Ramayana to cultivate such a state of mind.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1345

435. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

Wednesday [August 15, 1928]

CHI. VASUMATI,

I got your letters. You now can say that you have recovered. It would be very good indeed if the hakim’s treatment restores you to health and cures you permanently of your disease. I have not received Ramdevji’s letter.

Blessings from

BAPU

CHI. VASUMATIBEHN

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 496. Courtesy: Vasumati Pandit

1 From the postmark
436. LETTER TO BECHAR PARMAR

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
August 15, 1928

BHAI BECHAR,

I have your letter. I do not know if you have lost your fitness for barber’s work, and, even if you have, I think you ought to learn it again in case you have to turn to it. If you were not a teacher, I would not have asked you to become one; on the contrary, I would have dissuaded you from such an intention. Since, however, you are already a teacher, I have been advising you not to give up that work with this thought in my mind that you would regard its-value as a means of livelihood as secondary and devote yourself entirely to service through it. As a teacher, you have opportunities of service. If you use them properly, you will easily be able to practise self-purification. If while doing service as a teacher you can overcome false shame, learn the value of physical labour yourself and teach it to the children under your charge, you will progress spiritually and also benefit the children.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5575

437. TELEGRAM TO SHANKERLAL BANKER

[August 15, 1928]¹

SHANKARLAL BANKER, MADRAS

DO PLEASE GO WITH RAJAJI TO BANGALORE AND TAKE REST MEDICAL TREATMENT THERE.

BAPU

From the original: S.N. 32725

¹ From the reference to Rajagopalachari’s going to Bangalore; vide the preceding item.
438. LETTER TO TULSI MAHER

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
August 15, 1928

CHI. TULSI MAHER,

I have your letter. The beauty of the Himalayan region needs no description. Many changes are coming about in the Ashram. Kishorelal’s elder brother Balubhai has passed away. The sample of khaddar is good. How much does it cost?

Blessings from

BAPU

From photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 6535

439. SOUTH AFRICAN CONDONATION

In continuation of what I wrote' last week about the condonation scheme I now publish for the information of those who have rights of residence in South Africa the following relevant correspondence² from the supplement to Indian Opinion, 13th July last:

The following is the form of Condonation Permit to be issued to a condonee under the Regulations published in the Union Government Gazette dated 29th June, 1928:

I need not warn the reader that I shall be unable to give individuals any guidance beyond the publication of the relevant papers. I can only refer the parties interested for further information to the Transvaal Indian Congress, Natal Indian Congress, or the Cape Town British Indian Council as the case may be.

Young India, 16-8-1928

¹ Vide “Notes”, 9-8-1928, sub-title, “South African Condonation”.
² Vide Appendix “South African Condonation”, before August 9, 1928, sub-titles, “I. Form of Application”, and “II. Correspondence”.
³ ibid
Bardoli is a sign of the times. It has a lesson both for the Government and the people—for the Government if they will recognize the power of the people when they have truth on their side and when they can form a non-violent combination to vindicate it. By such recognition a wise Government consolidates its power which is then built upon people’s goodwill and co-operation not merely in act enforced by brute power but in speech and thought as well. Non-violent energy properly stored up sets free a force that becomes irresistible. So far as I have been able to see, there is no doubt that the settlement has been wrung from an unwilling Government by the pressure of a public opinion that was ever gathering force in geometrical progression. It is said that His Excellency the Governor was most willing from the commencement to concede the satyagrahis’ demands but that his advisers were equally determined in their opposition. If that is so, whilst it reflects credit upon the Governor, it bodes ill for the Government; for the British Government is not individualistic, it is a powerful organization capable of working irrespective of individuals. It has persisted without Gladstone and Disraeli, without Kitchener and Roberts. The organization behind the Government in India is the Civil Service. What the Sardar of Bardoli wanted was a change of heart in the Civil Service. What one is told and observes is that the Civil Service is not satisfied with the settlement. If it was satisfied the persistent campaign of lies carried on about the Sardar and his doings would have stopped. Whilst I was in Bardoli, I constantly heard the complaint through inspired newspaper paragraphs that Vallabhbhai Patel had not carried out his part of the settlement, and I knew that he was carrying it out as fast as he could and had already carried out that part of it about which the complaint was made and before it was made. I can only say that the Government, if it is true that the Civil Service is resisting the settlement, is doomed, assuming of course that the non-violence of Bardoli is an organization capable of being sustained without particular individuals.

Let us therefore turn to the people of Bardoli. The lesson that they have to learn is that so long as they remain united in non-violence they have nothing to fear, not even unwilling officials. But have they learnt that lesson, have they recognized the unseen power of non-violence, have they realized that if they had committed one single act of violence, they would have lost their cause? If they have, then they will know from day to day that they will not become a non-violent organization unless they undergo a process of what may be called continuous corporate cleansing. This they can only do by engaging in carrying out a well-thoughtout constructive programme requiring combined effort and promoting common good. In other words before they can claim to have become a non-violent organization, they must receive education in non-violence not through speeches or writings, necessary as both may be, but through an unbroken series of corporate acts, each evoking the spirit of non-violence. Sjt. Vallabhbhai Patel knows what he is about. He has set for himself this more difficult task of constructive effort or internal reform. May God grant him therein the same measure of success that has attended the struggle against the Government.

Young India, 16-8-1928

441. THE NEHRU REPORT

Pandit Motilal Nehru and his colleagues\(^1\) deserve the highest congratulations for the very able and practically unanimous report they have been able to bring out on the question that has vexed all parties for the past long months. The report is well got up, accessible in book form and printed in bold type. No public man can afford to be without it. It is signed by Pandit Motilal Nehru, Sir Ali Imam, Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, Sjt. M. S. Aney, Sardar Mangal Singh, M. Shuaib Qureshi, Sjt. Subhas Chandra Bose, and Sjt. G. R. Pradhan. About M. Shuaib Qureshi’s signature however there is the following note at the end of the report:

Mr. Shuaib Qureshi was unfortunately unable to be present at the last meeting of the Committee when the draft report was considered. The draft however was sent to him and he has informed us that in regard to the recommendations contained in Chapter III he is of opinion that one-third seats in the Central Legislature should be reserved for Muslims. Further, he says: “I agree with the resolution adopted at the informal conference of July 7 but do not subscribe to all the figures and arguments produced in its support.”

The report covers 133 pages, appendices 19 pages. The report is

\(^1\) Sub-committee appointed by the All-Parties Conference held in Bombay on May 19, 1928 “to determine the principles of a constitution for India” (India in 1928-29, p. 26) divided into ten chapters, of which four deal with the communal aspect, reservation of seats, re-distribution of provinces and Indian States. The seventh chapter contains the final recommendations of the Committee. I must not attempt to summarize the report, if only because it has come into my hands at the moment of sending the last articles for Young India. I have not even the time to study the report in full beyond having a cursory glance through it. But the great merit of it is that the All-Parties Conference Committee has at last been able to produce a unanimous report bearing weighty representative signatures. In the matter of the constitution the main thing was not to present perfect recommendations but to secure unanimity for the recommendations that might in the circumstances be considered the best possible. And if the practical unanimity arrived at after strenuous labours by the Committee is sealed by the Conference about to meet at Lucknow,¹ a tremendous step will have been taken in the direction of constitutional swaraj as distinguished from what might be termed organic swaraj. For if the country arrives at a workable unanimity about the questions that have been agitating it for years, the next thing would be to work for the acceptance of our demands. And we have arrived at such a step in the country’s history in our evolution that if we can secure real unanimity about any reasonable proposal, there should be no difficulty in securing acceptance. I hope therefore that the Conference will meet at Lucknow with a fixed determination to see the thing through and that the members who will be there will not engage in a critical examination of the report with a view to tearing it to pieces but with the determination of arriving at a proper settlement. And if they will approach the report in that spirit, they will endorse the recommendations, except for valid reasons which would appeal to any sane persons. In thus commending this report to the public, I tender my congratulations to Pandit Motilal Nehru without whose effort there would have been no Committee, there would have been no unanimity and there would have been no report.

Young India, 16-8-1928

¹ On August 28, 1928; vide “After Lucknow”, 6-9-1928.
442. NOTES

FOR BARDOLI FUND DONORS

The generous and spontaneous response that has been made to the appeal for funds for Bardoli Satyagraha is a sure index to the India-wide popularity of Bardoli Satyagraha. The settlement of the Bardoli question and the consequent stoppage of satyagraha render it unnecessary to keep the fund open any longer. The public are requested therefore not to send in fresh contributions to the fund. This however does not mean that no more money will now be required. The work in connection with the inquiry has still to be done and will involve some amount of expense. And if the tremendous energy generated during the satyagraha campaign is not to be frittered away, the constructive work must be done with redoubled vigour. The balance left will therefore be utilized first for the expense that might be incurred in connection with the inquiry and secondly and simultaneously for constructive work in the two taluks. There is no doubt that the organization of the campaign became possible only because constructive work had been going on in Bardoli for the last seven years. I am aware that there are places where Congress Committees and individuals have more funds collected for Bardoli but they have chosen to send these amounts in instalments. I need scarcely inform them that they should forward whatever is now in their hands either to the Ashram at Sabarmati, or Swaraj Ashram at Bardoli, or Navajivan Office or Congress Office in Ahmedabad. I understand that Sjt. Vallabhbhai Patel has already arranged to have the accounts to date properly audited and published.

SOUTH AFRICA’S CONTRIBUTION

A friend writes from South Africa:

Reuter cabled from India that the South African Indians are sending every month five lakhs of rupees for the Bardoli no-tax campaign. A mischievous thing, besides being a gross exaggeration. The prejudice caused by the remittance of moneys to India will now be deepened and given a sharp edge. So far as I have been able to ascertain, about £500 have been sent in all for the Bardoli fund.

It has not been without pain that I have followed the campaign of lies that has gathered round the Bardoli struggle. Nothing was evidently considered too mean or too palpably absurd to damage a cause which had no secrecy about it and which was intended to cause no injury to a single soul and which had no direct political aim. Without verification and probably from malice prepense the falsehood that lakhs of rupees were being received by satyagrahis from South Africa was given currency. Well, the cause of satyagraha was not damaged by the false statement. But the cause of Indians in South Africa can be easily damaged if the white colonists can be persuaded to believe that vast sums of money are being sent from South Africa to Bardoli and that to sustain an agitation which they may dislike. I hope however that not much notice was taken of the statement in South Africa. Anyway I can corroborate what the correspondent says. Anyone can look at the accounts lying at Bardoli of receipts for the Bardoli Fund and he will find that the correspondent’s information is much nearer the truth than the inflammatory statement cabled to South Africa.

Young India, 16-8-1928

443. OUR JAILS

In spite of my two years in Indian jails, I see that others who have been in them for much shorter periods than I have more knowledge of their working than I. The satyagrahi prisoners who were recently discharged tell me of the many hardships which can be avoided if there is some consideration shown to the prisoners as human beings. The experiences of a satyagrahi prisoner in the Surat Jail are that the prisoners are all cooped up in a small ill-ventilated and ill-lighted room, the food served is hardly digestible and not much facility given to the prisoners for keeping themselves clean.

The prisoners at the Sabarmati Central Prison give me more details. The flour issued is gritty, the dal is pebbly and often contains animal dirt The satyagrahis were inclined to excuse the jail authorities for this defect saying it was the fault of the prisoners who had to do the cleaning and the grinding. I am unable to adopt the view. I feel that the authorities are bound to attend to the cleaning of foodstuff either by having it done outside or by effective supervision. It is futile to expect the prisoners especially in the way they are kept to do this or anything well or conscientiously. Instead of taking the most important work of cooking through them, it would be better and more economical to have the cooking and the preparatory work done through reliable agency and take from the prisoners other tasks of a more remunerative nature and involving no danger to health.

Nor was unclean food indifferently cooked the whole of the complaint on this head. A kind of dry fermented stinking cabbage was rationed as green vegetable. From what the friends described I could gather that this cabbage was a kind of human silage copied from cattle silage, cabbage being re-vitalized by subjecting it to high fermentation. If the information given to me is correct, I can only say that the prison authorities are playing with prisoners’ lives entrusted to their care.

Among the prisoners discharged were three in a weak condition; one a student who had completed his full term was discharged in a precarious condition. His condition was so far gone that in spite of all the loving attention being bestowed upon him by the Mahavidyalaya professors and students and skilled medical assistance he is not yet out of danger. I was informed that for several days in spite of his fever he was kept on coarse jowari bread for a time. I should not at all wonder if this indigestible bread caused intestinal inflammation.

I shall be glad to publish any explanation that the authorities may have to give in regard to these allegations.

I know that conditions being as they are prisoners may not expect the comforts of home life. I know too that satyagrahis may not grumble at their lot which in a way is of their own seeking. Nevertheless even a satyagrahi whether he complains or not should receive human treatment and should get food that is suited to his constitution and that is, above all else, clean and cleanly prepared.

dear Motilalji,

Your report is a great document. I am hoping that the Conference that is to meet at Lucknow will give it all the serious consideration it deserves and not light-heartedly begin to tear it to pieces. The intrinsic merit of the report is so great as to ensure full Before I got your warning I began to think out what could be done for the next year. But I must confess that I have not yet been able to hit upon anything to my liking. Lucknow might give me the inspiration.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 13660

445. LETTER TO NANABHAI I. MASHRUWALA

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
August 16, 1928

BHAISHRI NANABHAI

I got your letter, as also Nilkhanth’s. I got Kishorelal’s letter too. The more I reflect, the more I feel that Balubhai has not left us at all. Can the fragrance spread by him vanish? Nevertheless, I understand that one may feel grief at his passing away. Please look upon me as sharing in that grief. Tell Nath that I sent a wire to Kishorelal yesterday asking him to stay on in Akola.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I dictated this letter at three in the morning. Later I got your letter written from Bombay.

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 2660. Courtesy: Kanubhai Nanalal Mashruwala

\(^1\) Vide also “The Nehru Report”, 16-8-1928.
446. SPEECH AT AHMEDABAD

[August 16, 1928]

For me there should be no need to attend this function or to say a word. When Vallabhbhai is presented with an address and I am there, and am asked to say something, that means that we both of us have got together and with your permission and in your presence have formed a mutual admiration society of which we both have become members. The intelligent citizens of Ahmedabad should never tolerate this.

Vallabhbhai is a Patel by name and by fame. By achieving the victory of Bardoli he has made that fame his for ever. Have you ever heard of anyone presenting an address to a business man who upholds his reputation? How many addresses have you presented to Seth Mangaldas for the bills of exchange which he honours? I do not know what you would do if he did not honour them.

If you really want to congratulate the satyagrahis, I wish you understood the implications of the triumph and digested as much as suited your constitution. You may imitate the experiment, if you can, but I may tell you that imitation is not easy. As every individual has his individuality, events have theirs. Rather, therefore, than imitate an experiment, you should appreciate its inherent meaning and try to translate it in life. Non-co-operation, satyagraha, civil disobedience are constantly on our lips, and as many good things have been done in their name, some undesirable things have also been done. Let those who give these names their liployalty realize their true meaning and implications. The fact that satyagraha is on every lip is an indication of the fact that all parties desire swaraj, but mere repetition of the word satyagraha or empty praise of it means nothing. You have to work for it, if you are to achieve anything.

A thirsty man cannot quench his thirst by his merely shouting that he is thirsty. He should work to construct tanks and sink wells, or fetch water from them. In other words, his thirst can be quenched only by his working to that end. Similarly, it will not help if you feel

1 From Mahadev Desai’s “Meaning of Bardoli”; the first two paragraphs and the fourth one are translated here from Navajivan, 19-8-1928, where they appeared under the title “Immortal Words”.

2 From the Bombay Secret Abstracts, p. 539, paragraph 1314
satisfied merely by hearing at this meeting the praises of satyagraha. I, therefore, request you to understand the meaning of satyagraha.

It is not Sjt. Vallabhbhai Patel who has triumphed in Bardoli, it is truth and non-violence that have triumphed. If you think that they have rightly triumphed, you must adopt them as your weapons in every walk of life. I cannot promise that you will have success every time you try them. God has not made us omniscient so that we may be able to see whether we have achieved ultimate success or not. The poet who realized this truth has left us the legacy of his immortal phrase: “Immortal hope lies hidden in a thousand despairs.” All we have to do is to work without hope of fruit or reward. If therefore you follow Sjt. Vallabhbhai’s example and pursue truth and non-violence with his devotion, you may be sure that there will not be friends wanting to congratulate you.

Young India, 23-8-1928

447. CABLE TO RAJENDRA PRASAD

[On or after August 16, 1928]

RAJENDRA PRASAD

JAYAWATI

LONDON

SUCCESS CONFERENCE.

GANDHI

From a microfilm: S.N. 14381

---

1 In reply to his cable from London, received on April 16, 1928, which read: “Youth Conference invite your message. Cable.”

2 The World Youth Congress held at Eerde in Holland
448. LETTER TO C. A. ALEXANDER

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

August 18, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your prompt reply¹. I have now heard from Mr. Saklatwala too.²

Many thanks for your enquiry about my health which I am glad to say is quite good.

I have now returned to Sabarmati.

Yours sincerely,

C. A. ALEXANDER, ESQ.
GENERAL MANAGER, THE TATA IRON AND STEEL CO. LTD.
JAMSHEDPUR (via TATANAGAR)

From a microfilm: S.N. 12778

449. LETTER TO URMIKA DEVI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

August 18, 1928

DEAR SISTER,

You must have seen in the papers that I have returned to the Ashram. You may now come whenever you like with Dhiren. I can understand and even appreciate Dhiren’s disappointment. Everything however comes to those who wait, and if Dhiren has patience and qualifies himself, he may hope to take part in the final struggle which

¹ Dated August 11, which read: “I . . . wish to say that the reference from your speech was put in a leaflet prepared at our head office in Bombay by Mr. [N.B.] Saklatwala, the Chairman, and others whom you know....” (S.N. 13239)

² In his letter (S.N. 14457) dated August 15, Saklatwala had written: “I should regret it very much if we had improperly used your name in connection with this unfortunate [labour] dispute . . . In the hope of showing the men our position and the importance of keeping the Works in operation . . . and we did not think that we were unjustified in these circumstances in using your name in the hope of creating a peaceful atmosphere. . . .”
must come sooner or later if the time of its advent can be accelerated by those who wish to take part in it. I hope that Sudhir is now thoroughly restored.

Yours sincerely,

SHRIMATI URMILA DEVI
4-A NAFAK KUNDU ROAD, KALIGHAT, CALCUTTA

From a photostat: S.N. 13493

450. LETTER TO BENARSIDAS CHATURVEDI

Margasher Sud 6, [August 18, 1928]

BHAII BENARSIDAS,

Your article on Fiji will be published. I would not like to publish an article on the subject of separate managements for the establishments. The publication of such an article would be harmful to our cause.

Kunwar Maharaj Singh is to leave on December 21.

MOHANDAS GANDHI

From a photostat of the Hindi : G. N. 2577

451. ADHARMA IN THE NAME OF DHARMA

A gentleman writes from Mathura:

As the Hindi is easy to understand I have not translated the letter. To show what the Shastra-knowing Brahmins of the North think of the devoted but misguided Vaishnavas of Gujarat, I have reproduced the above letter in the writer’s own words. To spend thousands of rupees in serving sweets and considering it a religious act shows what things have come to at the present

1 From the reference to Kunwar Maharaj Singh’s departure, presumably for South Africa, it is inferred that the letter was written on this date, which corresponds to Margasher Sud 6; vide “Letter to M. R. Jayakar”, September 21, 1928 and “Letter to Benarsidas Chaturvedi”, October 10, 1928, and “Letter to Sir Mahomed Habibullah”, November 9, 1928.

2 The letter is not translated here. The letter dealt in detail with the waste of money and food in the name of religion, the ill-treatment of cows and scarcity of milk products in Mathura.
time. Feeling the pain of others is the central point of Vaishnava dharma. But simple-minded Vaishnavas have turned it into a means of enjoyment. As in the other parts of the country, in Govardhan too the cattle wealth is being destroyed. The shortage of ghee and milk mentioned in the letter has been experienced by all the pilgrims. The rich Vaishnavas of Gujarat should heed this letter, wake up and save themselves from the adharma being perpetrated in the name of dharma.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 19-8-1928

452. IN CONFORMITY WITH SHASTRAS

We get evidence from all parts of India which proves how untouchability is losing its hold. Bharatbhushan Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya is a pillar of sanatana dharma. He has written the following letter to Shri Jamnalalji in connection with the Lakshminarayana temple in Wardha.¹

Jamnalalji has also received similar expressions of opinion from Shri Pramathnath Tarkabhushan Sharma and Shri Anandshankar Dhrupa. Will those who claim to follow the sanatana dharma still cling to the practice of untouchability?

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 19-8-1928

453. PASSING AWAY OF A SILENT WORKER

We all know of leaders who sit or stand on platforms—stand up to speak. Although so many of us would Like to crowd the platform till it breaks, we would even then look and be lie a drop in the ocean. Since, however, those who rise high on platforms have no more value than a drop’s as compared to the ocean’s, soldiers who never wish to rise high on to platforms but are pleased to remain in the ocean, that is, the common people and render service while remaining obscure are the only genuine workers. Balubhai Ichchharam Mashruwala who lived in Bombay was one such worker. He had both wealth and intelligence and used them silently in the service of the people. Balubhai’s entire family is cultured. He did not rest satisfied with spending all his resources of body, mind and wealth in rendering service wherever he could. He passed on this noble training to his youngest brother Kishorelal, made him a lawyer and dedicated him to the service of the nation. This cultured public servant passed away last week.¹ May God grant peace to his soul and give us innumerable such workers who would render silent service. Before dying, he wrote a letter², which I publish here as an expression of his love for the country, for truth, and for non-violence.

¹ A town near Mathura
² The letter is not translated here. Malaviya had congratulated Jamnalal Bajaj on throwing open the temple to all Hindu communities and digging a well from which all were permitted to draw water. Vide also “Notes” 26-7-1928, sub-title, “A Triumph of Justice”.

VOL. 42 : 2 MAY, 1928 - 9 SEPTEMBER, 1928 389

Shri Kishorelal has given a very moving description of him in his letter³ to me, and this too I give here:

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 19-8-1928

454. GOVERNMENT’S POWER v. PEOPLE’S POWER

Bardoli has proved that the power of the people is greater than that of the State as conclusively as that two and two make four. It can further be claimed that such success depends solely upon the people’s capacity to remain peaceful and their capacity to offer peaceful resistance.

The power of the State is derived solely from its capacity to punish. Those persons who rid themselves of the fear of this punishment, despise such punishment and, without opposing the power of the State violently, act as if it did not exist, will always triumph. The people of Bardoli could not secure justice so long as they were afraid of being punished by the Government. As soon as they rid themselves of that fear, they realized that the officers were dependent upon the people and not vice versa.

The people also saw that, if they opposed the Government’s violence by similar violence, the former would always succeed, whereas, if they suffered it, it lost its efficacy. They also found that this punishment was limited to their persons and possessions, and that it left their hearts wholly untouched. They freed themselves from its fear by surrendering their hearts to their Sardar.

¹ Vide “Telegram to Nanabhai I. Mashruwala”, 13-8-1928.
² Not translated here
³ ibid
From this we find that the people require neither physical nor intellectual strength to secure their own freedom; moral courage is all that is needed. This latter is dependent on faith. In this case, they were required to have faith in their Sardar, and such faith cannot be artificially generated. They found in the Sardar a worthy object of such faith and like a magnet he drew the hearts of the people to himself.

We, therefore, find that a satyagraha movement is bound to succeed if it gets a leader who is cultured, self-sacrificing and can feel the pulse of the people, and if the people remain loyal to him.

Truth and non-violence were the principal factors in this struggle. The people’s demand was just and for securing it they did not resort to untruthful means. There were many provocations to the people to become violent and resort to violent measures, but they remained completely peaceful. This is not to say that the people had accepted non-violence as a principle or that they did not harbour anger even in their minds. But they understood the practical advantage of non-violence, understood their own interest, controlled their anger and, instead of retaliating in a violent manner, suffered the hardships inflicted on them.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 19-8-1928

455. LETTER TO PADMAJA NAIDU

SABARMATI,
August 20, 1928

MY DEAR LOTUSBORN1,

You may not fade. You must bloom. Though I never write you are constantly in my mind.

Love.

M. K. GANDHI

SHRIMATI PADMAJA NAIDU
TUBERCULOSIS SANATORIUM
AROGYAVARAM
CHITTOOR DIST.
S. INDIA

From the original: Padmaja Naidu Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

1 Literal meaning of ‘Padmaja’
I do not think I am at all fitted to say anything on this great occasion, but I consented to come because of the great esteem in which I held the late Ramanbhai and because I could not resist Shrimati Vidyagauri. I am unfit to say anything today for many reasons. I have read nothing of or about Raja Ram Mohan Roy. What I know about him is based on what I have heard from his admirers. I do not claim to have studied the history of the Brahmo Samaj either. I made a desperate effort to read something today, something from a brochure on Ram Mohan Roy that we have in our library, but I could not find a moment for it. I therefore contented myself with the prayer that God might give me the right word to acquit myself of the task.

Although, then, I cannot claim to have studied the history of the Brahmo Samaj, I do claim to have a close connection with the members of the Brahmo Samaj extending over several years. It dates as far back as 1896 when I first visited Calcutta. In 1901 I came in contact with several eminent members of the Brahmo Samaj through Gokhale and Dr. P. C. Ray. I used to visit occasionally the Samaj Mandir, and listen to the sermons of the late Pratap Chandra Mozumdar. I also came in touch with the late Pandit Shivnath Shastri.

These experiences were enough to convince me that the Brahmo Samaj has rendered a great service to Hinduism, and that it has rescued the educated classes of India, especially Bengal, from unbelief. I have always regarded it as a movement essentially designed for the educated classes. Though religion in India sometimes takes the form of superstition, wooden formalism and hysterics, I cannot escape the conviction that a man cannot long remain an unbeliever in India. But the faith of the educated class in the early part of the nineteenth century was in danger and it was Ram Mohan Roy who came to their rescue. I have heard that he had come under the influence of Christian missionaries and Kakasaheb told me that he had made a deep study of Persian and Arabic. There can be no question about his scholarship or

---

1 This was published under the title “Brahmo Samaj’s Contribution to Hinduism” with the following introductory note by Mahadev Desai: “Speaking on the 20th August at the Ahmedabad Prarthana Samaj on the occasion of the celebration of the centenary of the foundation of the Brahmo Samaj, Gandhiji delivered an address of which the following is a condensed translation.”
about his catholicity. He made a deep study of Hinduism, especially the religion of the Vedas, and then allowed himself to be influenced by the essential principles of Christianity and Islam. As a result he saw that there was for him no escape from inaugurating a new movement to liberalize the existing Hinduism which had been overgrown with superstitious weeds. Sacrifice of animals and social evils were flourishing in the name of Hinduism. How could the educated class tolerate it? It was open to Ram Mohan Roy to rest content with individual dissociation from the evils. But he was a reformer. He could not afford to hide his light under a bushel, he gave public expression to his views, secured a following and founded the Brahmo Samaj in 1828.

But it would have languished, had not a man of great spiritual gifts like Maharshi Devendranath Tagore joined it. It is for the future historian to estimate the ‘Tagores’ contribution to the intellectual and spiritual life of Bengal, India, and even the world. Rabindranath Tagore’s contribution in the direction has been stupendous. We cannot adequately estimate it, even as men living in the valleys of the Himalayas cannot adequately visualize their sublimity. And the Tagores received their inspiration from the Brahmo Samaj. The Brahmo Samaj liberated Reason, and left room enough for Faith.
There was once a danger of the Brahmo Samaj severing its tie with Hinduism or the religion of the Vedas but the Maharshi’s *tapasya*¹ and knowledge rescued the Brahmo Samaj from that catastrophe. It is due to him that the Samaj remained part of Hinduism.

One may not measure the contribution of the Brahmo Samaj from the number of its adherents. The Brahmos are indeed very few but their influence has been great and good. The service of the Brahmo Samaj lies in its liberalizing and rationalizing Hinduism. It has always cultivated a toleration for other faiths and other movements, it has tried to keep the fountain source of religion pure and to hold up the ideal of pure worship of the Supreme Being.

Not that there is nothing for me to criticize in the Samaj, but this is not the occasion for it. My desire is to place before you whatever is best in the Brahmo Samaj. Let this celebration awaken the religious instinct in you. True religion is not narrow dogma. It is not external observance. It is faith in God, and living in the presence of God; it means faith in a future life, in truth and ahimsa. There prevails today a sort of apathy towards these things of the spirit. Our temples appear today to be meant only for the simple and the ignorant. Few visit real temples of God. Let the educated class take up the work of reform in this direction.

¹ Spiritual discipline

We have rightly honoured Vallabhbhai over the Bardoli victory. But you may not know his greater victory. Vallabhbhai realized his ‘Vallabha’ (God) in Bardoli. He saw that nothing but faith in God could keep together the thousands of men and women bound to their pledge. It is through religion that he found his approach to the hearts of those simple illiterate men and women.

I am inundated with letters from young men who write frankly about their evil habits and about the void that their unbelief has made in their lives. No mere medical advice can bring them relief. I can only tell them that there is no way but that of surrender to and trust in God and His grace. Let us all utilize this occasion by giving the living religion in our lives the place it deserves. Has not Akho Bhagat said:

Live as you will, but so
As to realize God.

Young India, 30-8-1928

457. LETTER TO MOTILAL NEHRU

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
August 21, 1928

DEAR MOTILALJI,

I have your letter. I have written for this week’s Young India too on the forthcoming Conference¹. But I thought it was better for me not to deal with the body of the report but rather emphasize the importance of avoiding theoretical criticism and appealing to the Mussalmans and Hindus not to insist upon the pound of flesh. What is the use of my dealing with the recommendations? My mind just now refuses to think of the form except when it is driven to it. For, I feel that we shall make nothing of a constitution be it ever so good, if the men to work it are not good enough. Anything reasonable therefore appears to me to be acceptable if only we have unanimity, because in the matter of the constitution, unanimity seems to be the most important thing. But I can say in general terms that you have succeeded wonderfully with Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru and Sir Ali Imam. I was not prepared for the endorsement of the franchise for instance, or of your solution of the Native States. But I see that the Hindu-Muslim question is still to be a thorny question.

¹ Vide “All Eyes on Lucknow”, 23-8-1928. For the earlier article, vide “The Nehru Report”, 16-8-1928.

With reference to myself I do not at all feel like moving out of Sabarmati just now. Indeed I should like to bury myself in Sabarmati and do whatever I can through writing in Young India and Navajivan and through correspondence. I have more than enough work for me in the Ashram, I do not know whether you are aware that Bardoli was possible because the Ashram was in existence. The majority of the workers in Bardoli owe their preparation to the Ashram directly or to its indirect influence. If I could but make of the Ashram what I want, I should be ready to give battle on an extensive scale.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 13667

458. LETTER TO BEHRAMJI KHAMBHATTA

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
August 21, 1928

BHAISHRI KHAMBHATTA,

I have your letter, as also the sum of Rs. 100. There was no particular intention in publishing your name in the list of acknowledgments. It is enough for you to know that you do not crave publicity. If the name is published, that will certainly do you no harm. This time we have taken greater care. We should thank God if your ailment is cured. Write to me about it from time to time.

Blessings to you both from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 5017. Courtesy: Tehmina Khambhatta
459. LETTER TO AMBALAL SARABHAI

August 21, 1928

DEAR BROTHER,

I have a calf here that is suffering terrible pain. It has broken a leg. Now it has developed sores all over the body. The veterinary surgeon has given up all hope. I have therefore decided to have it shot. Please send one of your guards with a gun if possible. We have people in the Ashram who can use a gun but we have not kept a gun here.

Vandemataram form

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 11123. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

460. LETTER TO AMBALAL SARABHAI

August 21, 1928

DEAR BROTHER,

Your letter is beautiful. Your sentiments are even more beautiful. I had been waiting for the doctor and the injections having abandoned the idea of using a gun. Your letter has made me check myself. I will not now make use of your gun. I do not share your fear. The question is deeper than the one you have raised I shall not discuss it here beyond saying that it is not merely one of relieving pain.¹ What is our duty towards animals and other living creatures that are disabled and suffering pain? Where does compassion which underlies Hinduism take us? But to me that is not a matter for discussion. It concerns my deepest feelings. I shall take no step without proper thought. The act of killing has to be postponed at least for today.

Vandemataram form

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 11124. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

461. ‘THE TRUE CAPITAL AND THE FALSE’

Sir Daniel Hamilton is a big proprietor, owns large estates in the Sundarbans, and is a careful student of banking and the cooperative movement. He has written many papers during the past twelve months on Indian banking and has been kind enough to send them to me from time to time. I invited him to write in a popular style on banking for the readers of Young India. He readily consented and followed up his tentative promise with speedy performance. The result is a paper entitled “Man or Mammon? Or The True Capital and the False”. I have divided the paper in five parts, the first of which appears elsewhere¹ in this issue of Young India. I do not pretend to know anything of banking. I am sorry to have to confess that I was never able to make time for studying Indian finance, important though I hold the subject to be. I am therefore unable to pronounce any opinion upon Sir Daniel Hamilton’s argument. It is however sufficient for my purpose that Sir Daniel has written apparently without bias and with great sincerity. I commend Sir Daniel Hamilton’s articles to the readers of Young India for careful study and shall be pleased to publish any criticism that Indian financiers may care to offer.

Young India, 23-8-1928

462. ALL EYES ON LUCKNOW

The Nehru Committee report has rightly attracted universal attention. All the leading Indians who have spoken upon it have blessed it. The critics have been obliged to write about it with marked restraint and often involuntary admiration. It has set everyone thinking.

All eyes are naturally therefore centred on Lucknow where Dr. Ansari has invited the All-Parties Conference to meet. A report that has compelled such attention is bound to draw a large and representative gathering.

What will the Conference do? It will be easy enough to render the proceedings of the conference nugatory and reduce to nothingness the labours of the Nehru committee. Mussalmans may destroy the great edifice built by patient effort on the ground that they have not got all they wanted. Hindus may vow never to yield an inch and thus make an advance impossible. Political theorists may pick big holes in the report. But they will all be wrong if they approach the report from their individual standpoints. We shall not easily get again anything so good as the report bearing the representative signatures it does.

¹ Not reproduced here. The other four parts appeared weekly in successive issues.

Let all therefore approach the report from only one standpoint, i.e., the national. There is room enough under the constitution devised by the Committee for all to rise to their full height. Every legitimate interest has its protection guaranteed if it has enough vitality in itself for expansion. The franchise is the broadest possible.

Of course the impatient extremist will be dissatisfied. Let him know that the report represents the largest common measure possible for parties often representing opposite views. It will be anti-national to resist to the breaking point what is offered by this representative report.

Apart however from the standpoint of expediency, I venture to suggest that the report satisfies all reasonable aspirations and is quite capable of standing on its own intrinsic merits. All therefore that is needed to put the finishing touch to the work of the Nehru Committee is a little forbearance, a little mutual respect, a little mutual trust, a little give and take and much confidence not in our little selves but in the great nation of which each one of us is but a humble member.

Young India, 23-8-1928

463. NOTES

HINDI-HINDUSTANI

That Sir T. Vijayaraghavachari should deliver a public lecture at the Hindu High School in Triplicane, Madras, on the “Place of Hindi in Indian Education” is a sign of the times and proof of the efficacy of the work done by the Hindi Prachar Office in Madras which has carried on Hindi propaganda for the last seven years. The lecturer had no difficulty in showing that the fact that of the 300 million people of India, 120 million spoke Hindi and 80 million more understood it and that Hindi was the third most widely spoken language in the world “was by itself a strong reason for everyone learning Hindi”. The learned speaker rightly thought that “six months would be a sufficient period for learning the language well.” He contended that “the place of Hindi in Indian education must be compulsory. It ought to be a compulsory language in school, college and university.” He concluded:

We are all eagerly looking forward to the day when we shall all be Indians first and Madrasis or Bangalis next. The day will be hastened if Madrasis, who are the worst offenders in this respect, begin to learn Hindi in larger number.

The people of the South have every facility afforded to them through the Hindi Prachar Office of learning Hindi. Surely if we have real love of India as we have of our respective provinces, we would all learn Hindi without delay and avoid the humiliating spectacle of carrying on our proceedings in the popular assembly, i.e., the All-India Congress Committee, predominantly, if not often wholly, in English. Let me repeat once more what I have often said that I do not contemplate the suppression of provincial languages by Hindi but addition of Hindi to the former so as to enable provinces to establish a living contact with one another. This must result also in enriching both the provincial languages and Hindi.

BARDOLI—A VICTORY OF PEACE

The following poetic bit from a love-letter of Shrimati Sarojini Devi’s bears reproduction:

A pastoral vision of quiet beauty is spread all around me; the sunset has dyed the clouds in the west in the glowing colours of flame, and in the east in the tender colours of flowers; the low hills have taken on every dreamlike shadow steeped in blue and purple, and the undulating valley just below is settling down to rest, gathering the wandering sheep, hushing the wild doves and wild hawks to slumber, collecting the little groups of peasants and labourers to their thatched huts under the boughs of sheltering trees.... Soon all the denizens of the secluded colony set in the heart of such sylvan beauty will be at rest, each in his or her own bed, and soon the nightfall will wrap the hills and valley and woods in a velvet darkness.... But the darkness, alas, does not always bring comfort to the suffering. No sleep . . . What poignant vigils does the night witness, that the world never knows? . . . How many such poignant vigils have the people of Bardoli kept night after night? . . . But I rejoice that tonight the darkness will bring dreams of sweetness to those whose spirit was so unwearied in battle through long and terrible weeks.... The sleep of the satyagrahi when his work is over is indeed a gift of the gods. Do you remember the words of the German philosopher: “Let your work be a battle, let your peace be a victory.” So it has been at Bardoli. The peace has indeed been a victory of peace and peaceful ways.
I have just finished the last page of the English version of your moving and vivid history of the South African Satyagraha when the post brought the papers with the longed for and joyful news of the Bardoli settlement . . . honourable to both sides. As I wrote to ‘Sardar’ Vallabhbhai a month ago, I have always felt and known that satyagraha in its deep authentic sense is literally “the treasure of the lowly”—Maeterlinck’s beautiful phrase, of those who are content with realities and not seekers after false values and false standards.... Your dream was to make Bardoli the perfect example of satyagraha. Bardoli has fulfilled itself in its own fashion interpreting and perfecting your dream.

Young India, 23-8-1928

464. LETTER TO DR. JOSIAH OLDFIELD

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
August 24, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I was delighted to have your letter. Though I could not visit Europe this year, if all goes well, I expect to do so next year, when I have no doubt we shall meet somewhere. Of course if you anticipate your proposed visit’ to India, we shall meet here no doubt.

Yours sincerely

DR. JOSIAH OLDFIELD

LADY MARGARET HOSPITAL, DODDINGTON, KENT

From a photostat: S.N. 14366

465. LETTER TO B. DE LIGT

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
August 24, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter enclosing an English translation which you have very kindly made for me of your open letter. I am so busy that I have not had the time to go through the open letter, but I hope to go

1 The addressee in his letter (S.N. 14365) dated July 30, 1928, had written that he might visit India again on a lecture tour upon the “Relation of Men to Animals”.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
through the whole of it and let you have my reply as early as I can. I may find it necessary to give you the reply through the pages of Young India.¹ If I do, I take it you will not mind it.

Yours sincerely,

B. DE LIGT,² ESQ.
ONEX (GENEVA), SWITZERLAND

From a microfilm: S.N. 14386

466. LETTER TO C. F. ANDREWS

THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
August 24, 1928

MY DEAR CHARLIE,

I have your letter. I expect a longer one later.

Bardoli victory was indeed a victory for Truth and Non-violence. It has almost restored the shattered faith in non-violence on the political field. Vallabhbhai has never shone so brilliantly as in this campaign.

You say you are enclosing an article on Gopabandhu Das, but I have received nothing on him from you. His death is a terrible loss. There is no one in Orissa to equal him in self-sacrifice and self-effacement.

Gregg did not know that you had left for England and that you were about to leave for America. Gregg himself is leaving for America in November.

We are all keeping well at the Ashram. Devdas is in Jamia Millia. Rasik and Navin are going there to help Devdas. I hope you are giving yourself rest and that you will return as fully restored as is possible for one of your temperament.

I note that you do not want me to collect more for your expense

¹ Vide “My Attitude towards War”, 13-9-1928.
² Author of The Conquest of Violence in America. Sarojini Naidu expects to leave for America in September.

With love,

Yours,

Mohan

C. F. Andrews, Esq.
C/O American Express Co., 6 Haymarket
London

From a photostat: G.N. 2629

467. LETTER TO SIR DANIEL HAMILTON

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
August 24, 1928

Dear Friend,

I was unprepared to receive your paper so promptly. I have divided it into five chapters, first of which has already appeared. I send you a copy of it herewith.

I lent Sir Purushottamdas Thakurdas your papers and asked him to let me have his criticism on them. He sent me a frank letter. With his permission I am sending you a copy of it. For a layman it is difficult to understand these different viewpoints. It has always appeared to me an enigma, why financiers differ as much as lawyers and doctors even as to fundamentals.

You will be glad to learn that the Bardoli struggle has ended satisfactorily.

Yours sincerely,

Enclosure: 1
Sir Daniel Hamilton

From a photostat: S.N. 13238

1 Vide “The True Capital and the False”, 23-8-1928.
468. LETTER TO WILLIAM H. DANFORTH

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
August 24, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter as also for the parcel of your food products sent through Mr. B. N. Birla. He sent me also a copy of the book you have written on your Indian experience.

As my menu is limited and as I do not eat things of whose composition I have no knowledge, I have not been able to try any of the delicacies you have kindly sent me. But I have distributed your biscuits amongst the Ashram inmates. If it is not a secret, I would like to know how the corn flakes are prepared and whether anything beyond wheat is used in preparing the flakes. Is it not the same thing as the wheat flakes prepared at Dr. Kellogg’s Battle Creek Sanatorium?

Yours sincerely,

W. H. DANFORTH, ESQ.

From a photostat: S.N. 14384

469. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
August 25, 1928

CHI. VASUMATI,

I have your letters. You should now recover complete health. If that is at all possible, you ought to make it so. You write kef, but the real word is kaph. It is an English word and means what we call galafo. The word kaph, however, has become part of our language and we can freely use it. Kef means intoxication, and the word is not taken from English.

Blessings from

BAPU

CHI. VASUMATIBEHN

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 497. Courtesy: Vasumati Pandit

1 Of the Ralston Purina Company, Missouri, which manufactured food products
2 Phlegm; the Gujarati word kaph is from Sanskrit.
470. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI
August 25, 1928

BHAISHRI CHHAGANLAL,

Chi. Navin is to be sent to Jamia Millia to help Devdas. Therefore, release him for that institution. If more time is required for the purpose, we shall think about it when I return there. Chi. Rasik is already free. He, too, has to go to Delhi. It is necessary for both to get trained in carding, etc., so that they may be proficient in these processes.

BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: S.N. 14762

471. LIMITS OF SATYAGRAHA

A correspondent impatient to stop the marriages of aged men with young girls writes:

This evil requires drastic remedies. Twenty-five young men of character should form themselves into a band of satyagrahis, proceed to the place of the marriage eight or ten days before the event and plead with both the parties, with the heads of the caste organization, and with all concerned. They should parade the streets with suitable placards condemning such marriages and produce an atmosphere of opposition to the proposed marriage. They should persuade the people of the town or village to declare a peaceful boycott against the parties to the marriage, and court arrest or whatever other punishment that comes to them.

Thus the satyagrahi band would soon become a power in the locality, and these marriages would be a thing of the past.

The suggestion looks attractive, but I am afraid it cannot be of use on more than one occasion. Where lust and cupidity join hands the slaughter of the innocents becomes almost impossible to avoid. As soon as lustful old candidates for brides and the greedy parents get scent of the invasion of the satyagrahi band, they will evade the band by performing the wedding secretly, and they will find enough priests and wedding guests to help them in the ceremony. The readers of Navajivan may be aware of an incident that happened some time ago. The old man in that case feigned contrition, and successfully threw dust into the eyes of all by a hollow public apology. The reformers were delighted, but before they had finished congratulating themselves the old man managed to get secretly married. What happened in one case may happen in many cases. We should therefore devise other means to grapple with the evil. I have an idea that it may be easier to reach the greedy father of the bride than the slave of his lust. There is a great necessity for cultivating public opinion in the matter. The parents who readily sell away their girls, out of cupidity, should be sought out and pleaded with, and caste organizations should be persuaded to pass resolutions condemning such marriages. Evidently such reforms cannot be carried out all at once by the same band in large areas. Their field must needs be circumscribed. A satyagrahi band in Cape Comorin will, not be able to prevent a monstrous marriage in Kashmir. The reformers will havetherefore to recognize their limitations. We may not attempt the impossible.

1 The Gujarati original of this appeared in Navajivan, 26-8-1928. This is a translation by Mahadev Desai.

Love and ahimsa are matchless in their effect. But in their play there is no fuss, show, noise or placards. They presuppose self confidence which in its turn presupposes self-purification. Men of stainless character and self-purification will easily inspire confidence and automatically purify the atmosphere around them. I have long believed that social reform is a tougher business than political reform. The atmosphere is ready for the latter, people are interested in it, and there is an impression abroad that it is possible without self-purification. On the other hand people have little interest in social reform, the result of agitation does not appear to be striking, and there is little room for congratulations and addresses. The social reformers will have therefore to plod on for some time, hold themselves in peace, and be satisfied with apparently small results.

I may here throw out a practical suggestion. The most effective means of creating an atmosphere against the marriages of aged persons with young girls is to create public opinion against the actual marriage and to set in motion a peaceful social boycott against the aged bridegroom and the greedy father of the bride.

If a successful boycott can be carried out even in one single instance, parents will hesitate to sell their daughters and old men will hesitate to run after young brides.

It will not be easy to wean lustful old men from their lust. They may be therefore induced to marry old widows, if they must marry. In Europe old men easily seek out old widows.

In conclusion, we must be clear about our objectives in opposing these marriages. It cannot be our object to wean old men from their lust; if it is we will have first to deal with lustful young men. But that is a tall order. Our objective can be only to save young girls from the clutches of lustful old men and the cupidity of their parents. The reformer must therefore address himself to carrying on a crusade against the sale of brides. It is the bride’s parents who have to be reached. Let the satyagrahi therefore chalk out the field of his activities, have a census of all girls of a marriageable age living in that area, let him get into touch with their parents, and awaken them to a sense of their duty towards their daughters.

Let not the reformer go outside these limits if he wants to achieve success. The scheme proposed in the correspondent’s letter easily transgresses these limits.

Young India, 6-9-1928

472. MY NOTES

EXPLOSION OF MATRICULATES

A correspondent writes to say:¹

This question is well worth asking. It has often been answered in this paper. The lure of a Government stamp makes slaves of us. Hence I have suggested that it is our duty to leave Government schools. But who will free the students from this infatuation? How can one secure, without a Government stamp, a job where there are chances of getting a bribe? The student will be unable to free himself from this infatuation so long as he does not willingly accept work involving physical labour and value it more than literary education. This is one of the reasons why the spinning wheel has been given such importance. It is a widely accepted symbol of manual labour. In the first issue of Navajivan a picture was given which contained figures of the spinning-wheel and the plough. As the status of the spinning-wheel improves, physical labour and honourable poverty will automatically find the place that they deserve. This does not imply that everyone should earn a living by means of the spinning-wheel, but it does imply that everyone should do so by means of productive labour. It is the atmosphere of the schools which is responsible for an increase in the students’ love of British ways of life and their love of British goods. Only a handful of students remain unaffected by the atmosphere.

¹ The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had drawn attention to the increasing number of matriculates in the country and the problem of their employment.

FIRES CAUSED BY THE PRIMUS STOVE

The same correspondent writes as follows about the Primus stove:

It is true that the Primus stove has enslaved the minds of Gujarati women. I also believe that this stove is not as necessary as it is generally believed to be. It is undoubtedly true that a Gujarati woman’s sari lends grace to her, but it does cause great inconvenience to the working women. It seems to be a fact that the sari is responsible for the accidents through the Primus stove in which Gujarati women have been involved. If I could persuade these women, I would rid them of their fascination for this stove and have them imitate the tucked-up sari worn by the brave women of Bardoli. In my opinion, the sari draped in that manner is no less graceful. It also gives full freedom of movement while working and, looking at the matter more deeply, we see that it affords better protection to women inasmuch as they are more fully clad in this dress. Those who have seen the women of Bardoli at work would testify that they could do no work in the field if they wore the sari with one end of it hanging in front of them.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 26-8-1928

---

1 The letter is not translated here.
473. LETTER TO T. PRAKASAM

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
August 26, 1928

My dear Prakasam,

I have your letter¹. If you can get Justice Venkatasubba Rao to be the sole arbitrator in the matter between you and the All India Spinners’ Association, it will be quite good. You may therefore please try to get his consent and let me know the result.

Yours sincerely,

S.J.T. Prakasam
“Swarajya”, Madras

From a microfilm: S.N. 13672

474. LETTER TO C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
August 26, 1928

Keshu is anxious to make up his English as early as possible. He knows a fair amount. My idea is that if he can be kept with the Bjerrums, he should do well. Will you please advise? If you think that my suggestion is good, you may see the Bjerrums yourself. Or, if anything or something else or some other place than Bangalore is better, please let me know.

Do tell me how you and Shankerlal are getting on. You must both get well.

S.J.T. C. Rajagopalachariar
C/o Khadi Vastralaya, Fort, Bangalore City

From a photostat: S.N. 13496

¹ Dated August 14, 1928, which read: “I suggest the name of Mr. Justice Venkatasubba Rao of the Madras High Court to arbitrate in the matter in his personal capacity . . .” (S.N. 13657). Vide also “Letter to T. Prakasam”, 20-7-1928.
475. LETTER TO JETHALAL JOSHI

Second Shravan Sud 11 [August 26, 1928]¹

BHAIISHRI JETHALAL,

I got your letter.

What you say about children is true.

Your suggestion regarding malaria is worth considering.

Concerning the calf, the issue was not only about non-violence. According to my definition of non-violence, there was certainly no violence in killing it. The question was whether or not it was a duty to kill it. I felt that it was.

You can get slivers for a few days, but you should learn quickly [to make them yourselves].

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1346

476 LETTER TO PANNALAL JAIN

SABARMATI,

Bhadrapad Shukla 11 [August 26, 1928]²

BHAIPANNALALJI,

I have your letter. Your complaint is just. But there are difficulties in increasing the size of Hindi Navajivan. With great difficulty it has only just started paying its way. It attempts to give a summary of all useful articles. This attempt will be redoubled hereafter.

Yours,

MOHANDAS GANDHI

SHRI PANNALAL JAIN

KALYANMAL MILLS, INDORE

[From Hindi]

Madhyapradesh aur Gandhiji, p. 150

¹ The year is determined from the reference to the mercy-killing of a calf at the Ashram.
² From the postmark
477. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

August 27, 1928

CHI. MANILAL AND SUSHILA,

I have your letters. You would naturally get all the news about Balubhai, and so I write nothing. If we remember and cultivate in ourselves the virtues of our good relations, they though dead live on and society progresses continuously. Ordinarily we see the opposite of this happening. That is so because of our lethargy. We believe that by selfishly mourning over a death we have done our duty and thus deceive ourselves. If we look upon death in the manner I have indicated, we would never mourn it but turn it into a means of self-purification.

Ramdas returned to Bardoli yesterday. He now wants to settle down there and join in constructive work. After he has settled down he will ask Nimu to join him. Navin and Rasik will go to Delhi in a few days to help Devdas there.

We are all right, all of us.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4743

478. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

Silence Day [August 27, 1928]

CHI. VASUMATI,

I have your letter. Pay up the bills of the doctor and the hakim. You should know from time to time the amounts as they become due. If your health does not improve there at all, it would be better for you to come away here. Tell Vidyavatiji that, rather than stay there and be a burden on her, you had better return to the Ashram. After your health has completely recovered, you may return there if necessary. Or, they may send a student from there who will learn the work in the Ashram.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9251

1 Wife of Ramdas Gandhi
2 A pupil in the Ashram school
3 From the postmark
479. LETTER TO PERIN CAPTAIN

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
August 28, 1928

DEAR SISTER,¹

I have your letter. I propose to write about your letters in the next issue of Young India.²

Narandas must already have sent you the list of the stuff at the Ashram.

Mahadev has been reminded about Rs. 45-13-6. Subbiah will write to you about it. I have not written to Mithuben yet, but I will soon, as also to Fulchand about Rs. 37-4-0. I shall speak to Kakasaheb about the embroidery thread.

If there is any khadi exhibition at Calcutta, you will certainly know in due time.

This exhausts your list. Don’t you come again only for two days.

SHRIMATI PERIN CAPTAIN

BOMBAY

From a microfilm: S.N. 13501

480. LETTER TO EMMA HARKER

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
August 28, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I had your letter. You can come and see the Ashram for yourself. But I know that the Ashram life will not suit you in any shape or form. It is really too simple and too hard for one brought up like you. It is hard even for those who have been for a long time here. And it is a life of continuous body labour.

Yours sincerely,

EMMA HARKER

2 BELGRADE TERRACE, KARACHI

From a microfilm: S.N. 13502

¹ The source has this in Gujarati, Vahalan Behn

VOL. 42 : 2 MAY, 1928 - 9 SEPTEMBER, 1928 411
481. LETTER TO N. C. BARDALOI

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
August 28, 1928

Dear Friend,

I referred your letter¹ to the A.I.S.A. Office and here is the statement² prepared by the Office. I do not wish to judge. But I want you to see the correct position for yourself. There should be no laxity in the handling of public funds. And resentment of discipline, I hold to be a grave fault with us. Without discipline, Bardoli would have been a perfect fiasco. There were over 100 workers under Vallabhbhai and they all acted as one man. I am not aware of a misunderstanding having ever arisen. There were over 1,000 workers at the time of flood relief last year. It was the same thing then as in Bardoli.

Yours sincerely,

S. N. C. Bardaloi
Santi Bhavan, Gauhati

From a microfilm: S.N. 13673

482. LETTER TO VARADACHARI

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
August 28, 1928

My dear Varadachari,

The enclosed letter and my reply will speak for themselves. Subbiah fortifies the complaint made by the correspondent and says that the Tamil Nadu Khadi Depot gives no encouragement whatsoever to voluntary spinners. This should not be.

Yours sincerely,

Enclosure: 1

From a microfilm: S.N. 13674

¹ Dated June 23, 1928 (S.N. 13628)
² Giving, year-wise the quantity of khadi produced in India from 1925 to 1928
DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I must draw your attention to the fact that my definition of a “spinner” applies to voluntary spinners, not to paid spinners. I know from experience that not much time has to be given to doing one’s own carding and that those who do spinning for the love of it should generally be able to find time for doing their own carding a small quantity. I have done it myself, though in order to save every minute of my time I have given it up, because there are so many to supply me with slivers. But for the sake of accuracy, I propose to do my own carding, even though I am now supposed to be in a very weak state of health, and publish the result in Young India. You should certainly be supplied with spindles from the Tamil Nad Branch as also from the Satyagraha Ashram or Bardoli. There is however a great difficulty in having an unlimited supply of true spindles, because straightening taxes the eyes of workers, so much so that one man who used to straighten up 60 spindles per day very nearly lost his eyes. At the Ashram and at Bardoli, therefore, not much encouragement is given to those who want true spindles. Straightening can be learnt by application. Once a person learns it, he can straighten his own spindle in a very short time and straightening once in a way does not tax the eye at all. Attempts were being made by the Association to get a piece of machinery whereby true spindles can be turned out. But in spite of all effort, up to now such a machine has not been found. I am however forwarding your letter to the Tamil Nad Branch in order that whatever is possible might be done in order to help voluntary spinners.

R. DORAI SWAMY

KHADI AGENT, KUMBAKONAM

From a microfilm: S.N. 13675
484. LETTER TO B. G. HORNIMAN

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
August 28, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

To get an article from me is like drawing a live tooth. I can only therefore send you a message, and here it is!

The way to constitutional swaraj may lie through Lucknow, the way to organic swaraj, which is synonymous with Ramrajya lies through Bardoli.

Yours sincerely,

B. G. HORNIMAN, ESQ.
"THE INDIAN NATIONAL HERALD"
POST BOX No. 800, BOMBAY

From a photostat: S.N. 13497

485. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
August 28, 1928

DEAR SATIS BABU,

I have your letter. I don’t need to say anything about the Puja Exhibition. You will manage things there as may seem best to you.

I hope the change you have made at Sodepur about food is not too drastic for the men. Let there be no unnecessary haste. What is possible with difficulty in Gujarat may be almost impossible in Bengal.

The little water-works you installed here is working fairly satisfactorily. But the water is soon exhausted. I wonder if the tanks are to be kept open. And should they not be cleaned from time to time? And if they should, is it not a somewhat laborious process? Have you any instructions?

It gives me joy to find that you are getting on so well with Mr. Birla. It must mean a great load off your brain so far as the finances are concerned.
Yes, if you can devise a charkha that will give a greater yield, it would certainly be a gain.

How is Hemprabha Devi keeping?

From a photostat: S.N. 13498

486. LETTER TO K. S. KARANTH

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
August 28, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. The question seems to me to be easy of solution. It is the Brahminical life that is referred to. Brahman there does not refer to a division, but it refers to a state in the same person. Brahman is one who knows God, and it is possible for a Shudra to develop self-realization. He has then reached the Brahminical stage, and the man born in a Brahmin family may be able to do nothing if he has no knowledge of God.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. K. S. KARANTH
VASANTA, P.O. KODAIBAIL, MANGALORE

From a photostat: S.N. 13499

487. LETTER TO ROHINI POOVIAH

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
August 28, 1928

MY DEAR ROHINI,

I was delighted to receive your note. I am glad you are now fixed up. I hope that you won’t have to leave that place.

The common kitchen is going on merrily though we have still tough problems to solve from day to day. We have nearly 160 diners together. It is something to conduct such a big kitchen without paid labour.

VOL. 42 : 2 MAY, 1928 - 9 SEPTEMBER, 1928 415
As you must have seen I have not gone to Lucknow, nor am I likely to pass through Allahabad in the near future. Do write to me from time to time.

Yours sincerely,

SHRIMATI ROHINI POOVIAH
LADY PRINCIPAL, CROSTHWAITE GIRLS’ COLLEGE, ALLAHABAD

From a photostat: S.N. 13500

488. EUROPE-GOERS BEWARE

Now that so many people have begun to go to Europe and the interest in India and Indians has since the days of Non-co-operation grown, there is a growing demand on their time on the part of European public bodies and political parties. Not one of us was however prepared for what befell Babu Rajendra Prasad. Rajendra Babu went to London some months ago to fulfil an important legal engagement. Having finished his case he did a bit of travelling on the Continent and among other things attended the War Resisters’ Conference in Vienna. Prompted by a stranger, he accepted another engagement in the neighbourhood. There was some days ago in The Bombay Chronicle a cable to the effect that a meeting at which Babu Rajendra Prasad was speaking on peace was broken up by Fascists and that he was seriously assaulted. In the absence of any cable from Rajendra Babu, I refused to believe in the assault. The same day that I saw the Press cable, I had a cable from Rajendra Babu asking for a message¹ for the Youth Conference in Holland. This removed all suspicion about the assault; but by the last mail I received a letter from Austrian friends, a professor and his wife, containing a graphic description and confirmation of the assault reported in the Press. I reproduce below the relevant portion of the letter which moreover contains a warning important for all who visit the Continent:

Though very rejoiced at your letter of introduction of Mr. Rajendra Prasad I was terrified by a postscript of one—whose name we had never heard before at the backside of your letter. In your kind letter there was no word about any meeting, but at the back, this Mr. . . .² wrote: “Comrade Raj. Pr. will speak at the Steinfeldler Sale, and requests you to meet him there.” I was very much astonished and terrified. For, in the “Steinfeldler Sale”, which is a beerhouse, there was on the same day a meeting of ‘International Women’s League for Peace and Freedom’. I did not know this League. This letter came into our hands at 9 in the morning of the 1st August, and we tried the whole forenoon to find out whether this meeting guaranteed security, but we could not find in any directory or telephone-book any address or name of the members of this League. So we went to the station to fetch brother Prasad, to take him with us to our home.

¹ Vide “Cable to Rajendra Prasad”, On or after 16-8-1928.
² Omissions as in the source

Mr. Prasad did not know the circumstances of this meeting and did not know enough of this Mr.... He agreed with this Mr.... to speak at the meeting in which were concentrated from the surroundings and the town the followers of war and violence in order to disturb this women’s meeting. Not knowing anything, . . . and myself went there with Mr. Prasad to satisfy his obligation. Mr.... was not at the meeting, no one was there of the Women’s Committee, the hall was full of smoke, the tables full of beerglasses, men were yelling—there was no one of that Committee though it was already quarter of an hour later. Going to the Women’s Committee table, we were suddenly attacked even before the beginning of the meeting, and though guarding him with our own bodies, we could not prevent brother Prasad from being injured. After our injuries we came to know: (1) that he was taken to be one . . ., the name of whom we had never heard, who had to speak at this meeting; (2) that Mr.... was an anarchist and editor of an anarchistical newspaper! We are very sorry at all this. Not only because of our wounds—fortunately my double-quilted khaddarhat and my hair-knot caught up many of the blows with wooden lathis and chairs and glasses, nevertheless, brother Prasad was slightly hurt on the head, on the forehead and upon one hand, and . . . was injured with a chair-leg on the cheek under one eye. This small wound of . . . and a small wound on the forehead of Mr. Prasad could be dangerous for the eyes, perhaps also a stab with a knife which I caught up with my hand and which was soon healed. I do not know whence I had the strength to hold up so many blows in order to make a way out through perhaps a thousand men beating us three, and insulting me because I was protecting the men, I had only one hand to hold up the blows, with the other hand I held Mr. Prasad whom . . . and myself had between us, . . . trying to save his Gandhi cap which was finally lost. Our hands and feet were covered with blue spots, and for two days I had a slight commotion in the brain. All were crying: “Slay him down,” . . . it was dreadful .... We have kept the good brother in our home and dressed his wounds. On the next day he felt well, and we travelled with him by railway one hour before leaving him. The next day we received a letter from him reporting that he was feeling well, and that the doctor had examined his small wounds and fortunately found these all right. Today he is staying at Monsieur Romain Rolland’s in Villeneuve, to whom I have written an explaining letter. Now I beg you to say to all Indian brothers, who are starting for Europe or staying there, not to be implicated in any strange movement. Your principles of non-violence, etc., are torn from their setting and misused by political parties. The Indian brothers are too good and too credulous; for instance we have heard: when one European says to an Indian brother, that he (the European) is a vegetarian, the Indian brother in his goodness believes that this European is a follower of your principles in the whole, but such a European can be also an anarchist, etc. I entreat you to warn the Indian brothers against having intercourse with strange people.

These friends deserve the warmest thanks of the relatives and the numerous friends of Rajendra Babu for their bravely defending his person at peril to their own lives. The incident shows the essential identity of human nature and it shows that gentleness, self-sacrifice and generosity are the exclusive possession of no one race or religion. But it is the warning contained in the letter which is much the most important part of it. There is no doubt that there is a desire on the part of all sorts of Continental parties to exploit for their own purposes Indian visitors, especially if they happen to hold a position in the public life of India. It is therefore a good thing to bear in mind the Shakespearian warning: “Give thine ear to everyone, thy voice to none.” There must be on the part of Indian visitors an estimable desire to advertise the Indian cause by speaking to European audiences. It is as well however to know that exemplary self-restraint in everything will advertise the Indian cause much better than any amount of public speaking. Character is any day more eloquent than speech.

Young India, 30-8-1928
WANTED A PUBLICITY DEPARTMENT FOR KHADI

A correspondent writes to Sjt. Vithaldas Jerajani of the All India Spinners’ Association, Khadi Bhandar, Bombay:

I am thankful for the parcel along with your Bill No. 307 dated 27-7-1928. It has given me full satisfaction and the clothes are admired by friends. I feel that the message? of khadi has reached only a small fraction of the people, and that in the matter of publicity, the movement lags behind even ordinary firms. Those who would like to purchase khadi have got nothing for guidance as there is a very small number of shops in a province and that too does very little work in the way of publicity. I am sure money will not be wasted if you were to enlarge and illustrate your price list. The creation of a publicity department for khadi will not be a superfluous thing. If and when you approve of this idea and action is taken thereon, I shall be glad to remit an amount of Rs. 100 as a contribution towards the fund required for the purpose.

There is much truth in the correspondent’s charge. The All-India Spinner’s Association has concerned itself more with perfecting the internal organization than with external effort such as advertisement, feeling that perfection of the internal organization will be its own advertisement. The Association has therefore been chary of spending money on publicity work. But, if sufficient response is made by khadi lovers towards the expense of publicity work, I have no doubt that the Council will gladly take it up. Let it however be known that publicity work to be thorough is a costly affair. Generally, the cost of publicity is included in the price of the material advertised. The All-India Spinners’ Association has been averse thus to increasing the price of khadi. It is therefore necessary that if the publicity work is to be organized, the cost should come from those who appreciate the virtue of khadi and have the means of defraying it. If therefore there are others like the correspondent who will shoulder the burden of the publicity department, let them send me their contributions earmarked for the purpose. If sufficient response is not made and if the donors so desire, the donations will be refunded.

THE SPINNING-WHEEL IN MYSORE STATE

Sjt. Pujari of the All-India Spinners’ Association who is assisting the Mysore State authorities in organizing hand-spinning in that State sends me a letter from which I extract the following information:

The work was started on the 1st of November 1927. The movement has gained stability. At the end of July last, 1,000 wheels were at work in 60 villages, supplying 52 looms; and the production of July amounted to Rs. 2,000.

Sjt. Pujari says:
I can assert from my experience of nine months
1. that a subsidiary cottage industry in these parts is a felt want;
2. that the tiny wheels supply that want as nothing else can;
3. that it has been possible to do this thing because of State encouragement and because the spinners and weavers are assured of a steady demand for their yarn and khadder;
4. that given similar conditions in other parts of India, the same results should be obtained;
5. that hand-spinning keeps the village revenue in constant circulation flowing from the raiyats’ cottages to the State and from the State to the raiyats;
6. that it is the best method of utilizing the free energy of the vast agricultural population which is now running to waste in the 6,85,000 villages of India;
7. and lastly, that hand-spinning adds to the daily earnings of the villager three pies per hour that he spends at the wheel, a by no means negligible addition to the earnings of a population whose income per head is estimated at not more than 0-1-7 per day.

Sjt. Pujari adds:

What a blessing it would be if other States of India were to copy the noble example of the Mysore State.
I echo the wish.

TORTURE OF BULLOCKS

An English lady writes:

I am much distressed and perplexed by the habitual torture of bullocks by the inhabitants of this country, chiefly Hindus, who call themselves protectors of the cow! The sight of the dislocated, mutilated tail joints of the overburdened creatures toiling along roads is one never to be forgotten by a visitor to this country. The way the hands of the drivers, made filthy by cruelty, grasp and twitch the very backbone of the shrinking creatures at the tail socket, when the tail itself is a broken twisted abomination, is a sight which brings shame on the Hindu religion. Can you do nothing through your paper Young India on behalf of these creatures, as also on behalf of the tormented fowls carried by the legs head down for miles to their destruction? I enclose a picture of English oxen at work. The Indian has adopted the motor-car for himself, why not the harness for his bullocks?

Whilst it is true that this fair visitor to India has indulged in a hasty generalization by accusing the inhabitants of India of habitual torture of bullocks—for it is not very inhabitant, not even every tenth man who ill uses bullocks—there is no doubt that some drivers in the cities are guilty of the practice referred to in the letter, and there is no doubt also that the passer-by goes his way totally oblivious of the torture and there is truth too in the statement about the inhuman carrying of fowls. It is possible to say of us who talk about ahimsa that we strain at a gnat and easily swallow a camel. We would be agitated if a rabid dog was shot, but we are indifferent, if not willing witnesses to the cruelties such as are mentioned in the letter I have reproduced. We seem to think that we have fully carried out the doctrine of ahimsa so long as we do not actually kill. In my opinion, this is a travesty of ahimsa; every act of injury to a living creature and every endorsement of such act by refraining from non-violent effort wherever possible to prevent it is a breach of ahimsa. Here, there is work for religious organizations that would be faithful to their convictions to conduct a crusade against cruelties to lower animals practised in the cities. The change from the yoke to the harness is undoubtedly desirable.

A KHADDAR-CLAD HIGH SCHOOL

Dr. P. B. Datta of Chittagong sends the following interesting report1 of a High School in which all boys and teachers have been using khaddar for the last four years.

BERAR IN 1897

Major R. V. Garrett writing in 1897 in his monograph on cotton fabrics in the Hyderabad Assigned Districts says:

> Berar is famous for its cotton, but certainly not for its cotton fabrics, which are limited for the most part to common cloths of rough and inferior quality, and used by the poorer classes only. (p. 1)

1 Not reproduced here; it gave an account of the complete adoption of khaddar by Durgapur High School, Chittagong, and its wholesome influence on surrounding villages. The report also narrated the agricultural activities of the school and its plans to have a goshala and a workshop.
Spinning is carried on all over the provinces and is not confined to any particular castes or localities. (p. 1)

One woman cannot spin more than 1 lb. of country yarn a week, the value of which is eight annas; about half this sum represents the intrinsic value of a week’s spinning. The work is, however, undertaken as affording domestic employment for the women during their leisure hours at home. (p. 2)

What was true of Berar in 1897 is still more true now. For the infatuation for the sale of raw cotton grown in Berar is so great that the women have left the spinning-wheel and there is not much hand-spun yarn woven in Berar. Indeed if Berar could be made truly industrial, not a pound of cotton need leave Berar except in the finished state of khadi manufactured in the cottages of the villagers without in any way interfering with their other occupations.

CO-OPTATIVE KHADI-PURCHASE

G. V. R. writes from Nagpur:

AN ACKNOWLEDGMENT

Mr. Diwan A. Mehta brought a collection (Rs. 270) made from among the Indian passengers on board s.s. Pilsna to be handed to me on the condition that if the Bardoli struggle was over the money should be utilized for some social work of my choice. I have earmarked the donation for untouchability work, and I thankfully make this acknowledgment here as it could not very well appear in the Bardoli fund collection list that is printed from week to week as supplement to Young India.

Young India, 30-8-1928

490. LETTER TO KISHORELAL MASHRUWALA

ASHRAM,
August 30, 1928

CHI. KISHORELAL,

I have read both your letters to Ramniklal. He will send you a copy of the revisions. Your letter has had no effect on me, since you

1 The letter is not reproduced here; the correspondent had written about the formation of co-operative khadi-purchase clubs by the railwaymen, and their advantages.

2 Ramniklal Modi
have assumed that only the name is being changed, whereas I have in mind a change in character along with the change in name. I could clearly see that even a regular inmate of the Satyagraha Ashram could not fully observe its vows. To us the name was not merely a word which sounded pleasing to our ears and the world’s, it connoted certain qualities. If we cannot show the qualities implied in the name, we must give it up.

What is the use of an institution in which persons like Mahadev, Chhaganlal or Ramniklal cannot stay or can stay only in fear? And how can it be claimed that such an institution is worthy of carrying on activities dedicated to great ideals? If you suggest that the name with its moral significance may be retained but the moral discipline may be tightened in order to accommodate persons like Mahadev and the others, I would ask why we should be so attached to the name. Is it not a violation of truth for somebody practising vanaprastha dharma to claim that he is a sannyasi? It would be worthier for a vanaprastha to show in addition to the virtues proper to his stage the qualities of a sannyasi. The fact, however, is that all of us, men and women, are barely able to exhibit in ourselves the virtues of the vanaprastha dharma.

. . . Kaka has gone on a three-day fast of expiation. The expiation is for a lapse by a worker whom Kaka had trained and believed to be a good man. The fast will end on Tuesday.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/10

---

1 The reference is to the proposed change of name from Satyagraha Ashram to Udyog Mandir. Vide also “Satyagraha Ashram”, November 4, 1928 and “handicap of Mahatmaship”, November 8, 1928.
491. TELEGRAM TO MOTILAL NEHRU

[August 31, 1928]

WIRE RECEIVED. GOD BE THANKED. MAY YOU BE BLESSED TO CARRY THIS BRILLIANT SUCCESS TO FINAL STAGE OF ACHIEVING OUR GOAL.

GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 13678

492. LETTER TO HARDAYAL NAG

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

August 31, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letters. It is pressure of work that has prevented me from writing to you earlier.

I realize the importance of your suggestion. But I am quite certain that Vallabhbhai would have been a square man in a round box, if he had been elected President of the Congress. And events are proving that Pandit Motilalji is the wisest choice.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. HARDAYAL NAG
CHANDPUR

From a photostat: S.N. 13503

---

493. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
August 31, 1928

CHI. VASUMATI,

I have your letter. I have already written to you concerning the fees of the doctor and the Hakim. I have also told you to come over here if you do not feel comfortable there. If, however, you can conveniently go to Mussoorie and if you feel very much better there, why should you not go and get fine health? After that, if you find it difficult to stay on in Dehradun, you may come away here. This is only a suggestion I am making. If, however, you are no more interested in staying on there and are not in a condition to work, you should return here immediately. You should not think it necessary to ask me again for my permission about this. I suppose it is not necessary for me to write anything to Vidyavati. Whatever happens, you should never get nervous, nor should you, out of false shame, agree to do anything beyond your capacity. If we act with humility and undertake only what is within our capacity, then only will our work shine and bring fruit. This is the meaning of shreyan swadharma vigunah.

I got your letter after I had finished dictating so far. Now that you have decided to leave that place, there is no need to change your plan. But there is no harm, either, in going to Mussoorie, if you can and if you wish to. Since you wish to stay for a day in Delhi, you may go and see Devdas if you feel inclined. He is in Jamia Millia, which is in Karol Bagh. Jamia Millia is a Vidyapith of our Muslim friends. Navin and Rasik will leave [for Delhi] on Sunday to help Devdas there. They will reach there on Monday.

I have not revised this letter.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 499. Courtesy: Vasumati Pandit

2 Bhagavad Gita, XVIII. 47
494. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

[After August 31, 1928]\(^1\)

CHI. MANILAL AND SUSHILA,

I get your letters regularly. I try to write every fortnight, but maybe occasionally I miss a week.

You will remember Sastriji more after he has left. You will not get any other person as straightforward as he to serve as Agent there. I go over possible names again and again but none appeals to me. If we start looking for weaknesses, shall we find anyone free from them? Hinduism has ascribed shortcomings even to Siva. Tulsidas says however:

> Everything in the world, animate and inanimate, has its virtues and defects;
> The saints who are like the swan, accept the good that is milk and ignore the evil that is water.

Devdas is in Delhi, and now Navin and Rasik have gone to help him. Both are doing well.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4730

495. LETTER TO JUGALKISHORE

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
September 1, 1928

MY DEAR JUGALKISHORE\(^2\).

I have your letter. It is a most difficult thing to suit you. We have not yet been able to produce the type of teacher you want. Those who have received education are not eager to learn spinning and weaving. The few who have given themselves that training are so engaged that it is difficult to remove them. If you have any person in mind, please tell me. All the same, I shall bear what you have said in mind and if I can come upon the teacher you want, I shall let you

---

\(^1\) From the reference in the last paragraph to Navin and Rasik going to Delhi; \textit{vide} the preceding item.

\(^2\) Principal of Prem Mahavidyalaya, Vrindavan know.

I take it that you are flourishing there. When you next come to the Ashram, you will find it somewhat transformed. We have now practically only one huge kitchen, where over 150 men, women, children take their meals.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

[PS.]

Upon inquiry I find that one name has been already sent to you through Jannalalji.

From a microfilm: S.N. 13679

496. LETTER TO B. W. TUCKER

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
September 1, 1928

MY DEAR BOYD,

Your letter has been on my file for some days.

I think you have stated my position fairly correctly except that the way in which you have put it may cause a misunderstanding. I did not say that I would not desire that others should accept my viewpoint. But I did say that I would not desire that others should accept my religion. Evidently you have used the word viewpoint as synonymous with religion. I do not. Whilst I would not press my religion upon others, I would press my viewpoint upon others, as every one of us must. Religion is a matter of feeling or the heart and, therefore, not a matter for argument, and I would hold everybody’s feeling as dear as my own, because I expect him to do so with reference to my feeling. Viewpoint is a matter of reasoning, the mind, the intellect. It may shift from time to time without touching the heart. Change of religion is a change of status. Change of viewpoint is an accident often due to external causes. My feeling about the existence of God cannot be easily altered. My viewpoint regarding the connotation of the term may vary from time to time and expand with the expansion of my

1 In reply 10 his letter (S.N. 13491) of August 15, 1928, which read: “There is one question that was raised at the Council of the International Fellowship held at Sabarmati last January, about which I would appreciate some further explanation

VOL. 42 : 2 MAY, 1928 - 9 SEPTEMBER, 1928 427
reason. Religion is beyond explanation and it seems to me to be impertinent for anyone to touch another’s religion. A viewpoint must always be capable of explanation. I have entered upon this distinction because it enables me to explain my position about religion more clearly than by any other means. I do not want you to become a Hindu. But I do want you to become a better Christian by assimilating all that may be good in Hinduism and that you may not find in same measure or at all in the Christian teaching. I can’t explain why I delight in calling myself and remaining a Hindu, but my remaining does not prevent me from assimilating all that is good and noble in Christianity, Islam and other faiths of the world.

I wonder if I have explained my position to your satisfaction. If not please ask.

All you say about Bardoli is quite true.

Yours sincerely,

REV. B. W. TUCKER
PRINCIPAL, COLLINS HIGH SCHOOL
140 DHRMTALA, STREET, CALCUTTA

From a photostat: S.N. 13505

497. AHIMSA IN EDUCATION

For some time past Gandhiji has been following the practice of giving weekly talks to the students of the Gujarat Vidyapith. He used on these occasions to invite questions from students and teachers which he would answer. Before their interrogatories could be exhausted, however, he had to take up the reading of Hind Swaraj with them at their request. But as some of the questions received by him are of general interest he proposes to deal with them in the pages of Navajivan. The substance of one is given below.

—MAHADEV DESAI

One of the questions put to me was as follows:

The moment one begins to talk of ahimsa, a series of trifling questions are mooted, e.g., whether it is permissible to kill dogs, tigers and wolves, snakes, lice, etc., and whether one may eat brinjals or potatoes or else the questioner engages in a disputation over the question of maintaining an army or of offering armed resistance. Nobody seems to trouble to inquire how the principle of ahimsa should be worked out as part of education. Will you kindly

1 The Gujarati original of this appeared in Navajivan, 2-9-1928.
This is not a new problem. It has been discussed threadbare in these columns off and on in one shape or another. But I know that I have not succeeded in making it absolutely clear to my readers. The task, I am afraid, is beyond my capacity. But I should be thankful if I could succeed in contributing somewhat to its solution.

The introductory part of the question shows that questions be betraying a narrow outlook are often put. By unnecessarily exercising ourselves over conundrums about the justifiability of man’s killing creatures and animals of a lower order, we often seem to forget our primary duties. Every one of us is not faced every day with the question of killing obnoxious animals. Most of us have not developed courage and love enough to practise ahimsa with regard to dangerous reptiles. We do not destroy the vipers of ill-will and anger in our own bosom, but we dare to raise futile discussions about the propriety of killing obnoxious creatures and we thus move in a vicious circle. We fail in the primary duty and lay the unction to our souls that we are refraining from killing obnoxious life. One who desires to practise ahimsa must for the time being forget all about snakes, etc. Let him not worry if he cannot avoid killing them, but try for all he is worth to overcome the anger and ill-will of men by his patient endeavour as a first step toward cultivating universal love.

Abjure brinjals or potatoes by all means, if you will, but do not for heaven’s sake begin to feel yourself self-righteous or flatter yourself that you are practising ahimsa on that account. The very idea is enough to make one blush. Ahimsa is not a mere matter of dietetics, it transcends it. What a man eats or drinks matters little; it is the self-denial, the self-restraint behind it that matters. By all means practise as much restraint in the choice of the articles of your diet as you like. The restraint is commendable, even necessary, but it touches only the fringe of ahimsa. A man may allow himself a wide latitude in the matter of diet and yet may be a personification of ahimsa and compel our homage, if his heart overflows with love and melts at another’s woe, and has been purged of all passions. On the other hand a man always overscrupulous in diet is an utter stranger to ahimsa and a pitiful wretch, if he is a slave to selfishness and passions and is hard of heart.

Whether India should have an army or not, whether or not one may offer armed resistance to Government, these are momentous questions that we shall have to solve one day. The Congress has in its creed already furnished an answer to them in part. But important as these questions are, they do not much concern the man in the street, they do not touch the aspect of ahimsa with which an educationist or a student is concerned. Ahimsa in relation to the life of a student stands quite apart from these questions of high politics. Ahimsa in education must have an obvious bearing of the mutual relations of the students.
Where the whole atmosphere is redolent with the pure fragrance of ahimsa, boys and girls studying together will live like brothers and sisters, in freedom and yet in self-imposed restraints; the students will be bound to the teachers in ties of filial love, mutual respect and mutual trust. This pure atmosphere will of itself be a continual object lesson in ahimsa. The students brought up in such an atmosphere will always distinguish themselves by their charity and breadth of view, and a special talent for service. Social evils will cease to present any difficulty to them, the very intensity of their love being enough to burn out those evils. For instance, the very idea of child-marriage will appear repugnant to them. They will not even think of penalizing the parents of brides by demanding dowries from them. And how dare they after marriages regard their wives as chattel or simply a means of gratifying their lust? How will a young man brought up in such an environment of ahimsa ever think of fighting a brother of his own or a different faith? At any rate no one will think of calling himself a votary of ahimsa and do all or any of these things.

To sum up: Ahimsa is a weapon of matchless potency. It is the summum bonum of life. It is an attribute of the brave, in fact it is their all. It does not come within reach of the coward. It is no wooden or lifeless dogma, but a living and a life-giving force. It is the special attribute of the soul. That is why it has been described as the highest dharma (law). In the hands of the educationist therefore it ought to take the form of the purest love ever fresh, an ever gushing spring of life expressing itself in every act. Ill-will cannot stand in its presence.
The sun of ahimsa carries all the hosts of darkness such as hatred, anger and malice before himself. Ahimsa in education shines clear and far and can no more be hidden, even as the sun cannot be hidden by any means. One may be sure that when the Vidyapith is filled with the atmosphere of this ahimsa, its students will no more be troubled by puzzling conundrums.

Young India, 6-9-1928
498. MY NOTES

PRICE OF A BRIDEGROOM

A correspondent writes as follows about the cruel hardship of finding a husband:¹

It is indeed an evil custom for the father to sell his daughter, but the very limit of depravity is reached when the bridegroom accepts money from the bride’s father as a price for the favour of marrying her. The father of a daughter should vow not to pay this penalty, the daughter should be permitted to grow up and a grown-up girl should not even look at a mercenary young man. Marriage is not one’s supreme duty in life. Marriages which have been contracted with a mercenary motive are not marriages but base deals. Young men in this age should shun such deals. They should realize that enjoying the good things of life or receiving education by fleecing the father-in-law is a sin.

TYRANNY OF SADHUS

One of the questions asked by the correspondent is as follows:²

Those who tyrannize people in this way do not deserve to be called sadhus. In this country where people are deceived by garments, those who wear the saffron robe or wear only a langoti are worshipped as sadhus. No one can become a sadhu by virtue of his dress alone. Thousands of persons who are the very opposite of sadhus dress themselves like sadhus and roam around this country. Villagers need not be afraid of persons who pose as sadhus or have been proved to be the very opposite. They should know how to recognize genuine sadhus and rid themselves of the fear of the wicked. They should cultivate the strength to oppose them. It is necessary for educated persons to go into the villages in order to rid them of the two enemies of fear and superstition. Sardar Vallabhbhai has pointed out to the whole of India the royal road for entering the villages. A good many such activities will now be carried on as in Bardoli as part of the constructive programme and the people will be taught new object lessons.

¹ The letter is not translated here.
² ibid
IN WHAT DOES DHARMA CONSIST?

The following is the last question asked by this correspondent:

I have known from childhood the aversion of the Jains to eating tubers and bulbs. However, I have been unable to understand why they are forbidden by religion. One can understand the idea that there is a larger number of living creatures clinging to such roots, but I do not see non-violence in making such subtle distinctions. The Jain who, although he has never eaten potatoes, etc., deceives people every day, is far more guilty of violence than the honest business man who eats potatoes regularly. The violence committed by the latter proceeds from his intellectual attitude and does not touch his heart whereas he who deceives others kills his own soul. Self-control as such is good. It is commendable for mankind, steeped in violence though it is, to practise some non-violence in its eating habits. It is proper that we should deliberately cultivate compassion even for plant-life. It is necessary to give up pampering the palate in order to acquire control over one’s senses. Though admitting all this, though I am accustomed to a life of self-denial and though I have happy and close associations with jains, my heart positively refuses to see any great religious merit in avoiding the use of potatoes, etc. Not eating them seems to have no connection at all with one’s character. I feel that our ancestors must have started making subtle distinctions between what should be eaten and what should not be eaten at a time when the religious spirit was at a low ebb. Those who wish to give up potatoes, etc., in deference to common practice may do so. But such practice cannot be made the basis of one’s religion and the matter should not become a subject of dispute between a husband and wife.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 2-9-1928

499. RURAL EDUCATION SCHEME

Following the announcement of Shri Nagindas’s gift of rupees one lakh, he has been receiving letters concerning the gift and making suggestions. He has passed these on to me, and I, in turn, have handed them over to Kakasaheb Kalelkar. The reader will find published in 1 Not translated here. The correspondent had asked Gandhiji to comment on the belief prevalent among Jains that it was sinful to eat potatoes, onions, etc.

this issue that part of Kakasaheb’s letter to Shri Nagindas which deals with the scheme itself and explains it, so that Gujaratis may not remain in the dark about how and in what manner that gift is going to be utilized. From this the reader will see that the scheme is divided into three parts.

1. In the first place, it consists in training some students to become teachers or workers who will be able to serve the people, or rather, educate them. It is obvious that such service, if it is to benefit the people, should necessarily be rural service.

2. Secondly, establishment through these teachers of rural schools, which would be mobile in the first instance and become permanent later on.

3. Thirdly, preparing suitable literature and getting it prepared by others.

Readers will see that the scope of this scheme is both ambitious and large. Shri Nagindas’s philanthropy will have borne fruit if it is implemented.

This task cannot be accomplished in a hurry. The scheme seeks to break new ground. Till now education has served the needs of city-life, if it has served any purpose at all. I deliberately say “if it has served any purpose at all”. I fear, or rather I hold, that since education so far has not been of a national character, it is found not to have served even the needs of city life. It was planned to support foreign rule, and that is what we find it has done. This character of our education has resulted in preparing a bureaucratic class of servants and copy-writing clerks. The scheme described above has to make its way through this atmosphere. Hence its implementation will necessarily take some time.

Kakasaheb has estimated that its implementation will take ten years and that is not too long a time. It may conceivably happen that during this period, the public comes to be fired with widespread enthusiasm similar to that of 1921 which would also be of a permanent nature, and the required number of students and persons fit to impart education are immediately available. If that happens, we may safely hope that the task will be completed within a shorter period. The programme should be framed in conformity with present circumstances. Kakasaheb is determined not to take up anything in haste without due deliberation. He wishes to proceed gradually but on a sure foundation, as an educationist should do.
Not only is Shri Nagindas’s gift large in itself, but I also find from his letter that he has handed over all his savings to be used for educational purposes. This increases further the value of his contribution and adds to my responsibility as well as Kakasaheb’s. Both of us were already conscious of it. We indeed expect to get a great deal for the nation from the Vidyapith. However, after having learnt of the history of Shri Nagindas’s gift, we are all the more anxious to put it to the best possible use. We certainly pray for God’s help in doing so. We expect help from the people of Gujarat as well. If this Vidyapith succeeds as expected, that would naturally have an effect on other Vidyapiths and on the whole country. I do not imply by this that other national Vidyapiths aim at anything less, but it does certainly imply that they have not had the same resources which the Gujarat Vidyapith has enjoyed, and hence the public has a right to expect greater results from the latter.

Those who are interested in national education and approve of the aims of the scheme described above may rest assured that due attention will be given to any suggestions which they address to the head of the Gujarat Vidyapith at Ahmedabad. I would request everyone to refrain from troubling Shri Nagindas. The reader will see that he has retained no control over the manner in which his gift may be spent.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 2-9-1928

500. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
September 2, 1928

CHI. MATHURADAS.

I have your letter. The plague in Panchgani is a matter of shame for us as human beings. By our way of living we have turned a beautiful health resort into a dirty place and we have neither strength nor courage left to make it plague-free. You have plenty of time. You can find out its cause. I like your idea of living in places such as Matheran. Shankar will have completely recovered. He seems to have gone into silence.

Blessings from

BAPU

434 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
501. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

September 2, 1928

CHI. BRAJKISAN,

I did get your letters but there is hardly any time for letter writing although I get up at three o’clock these days. We may eat anywhere but we must not break our rules; we may eat what is permissible for us when we go to a friend’s place, so as not to put him to trouble. At least rice or chapati is always there. We can eat it with salt and be thankful to the friend.

I shall write to Lala Shankerlal regarding the Bardoli Fund. How are you?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2358

502. LETTER TO VIJAYA

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
September 5, [1928]¹

CHI. VIJAYA,

I have your letter after a very long time. How nice it would be if Dr. Prabhudas fully recovered. What a coincidence that you all went there and also Mathuradas and Shankar. Ramdas is staying in Bardoli, Devdas is in Delhi. Navin ² and Rasik ³ have also gone to Delhi.

Blessings from
BAPU

MRS. VIJAYABEHN
LILAVATI SANATORIUM
BLOCK NO. 2
DEVLALI

From a copy of the Gujarati: Chhaganlal Gandhi Papers. Courtesy: Sabarmati Sangrahalaya

¹ The source has “1925”. However, from the contents the letter appears to belong to “1928”.
² Navin Gandhi
³ Son of Harilal Gandhi

VOL. 42 : 2 MAY, 1928 - 9 SEPTEMBER, 1928 435
503. HELP UTKAL

Sjt. Niranjan Patnaik who represents the All-India Spinners’ Association in Utkal writes a letter from which I take the following:

For some months past the selling work of the Utkal Branch of the All-India Spinners’ Association has not been quite satisfactory. Production work is going on quite well, the present rate of production being about Rs. 1,000 a month. At your suggestion we have started two new centres in the more distressed areas,—at Aul in Cuttack District and Tihidi in the Balasore District—these two centres have now on their rolls nearly 300 spinners and their yarn production up to date has come to nearly nine maunds (I maund = 80 lb.) most of which is 12s to 15s and some even 20s. The sales, however, are low. Last year we sold on an average Rs. 2,741 per month; during the current year, though we sold nearly Rs. 20,000 worth a few weeks before and during your visit to the province, there was a fall subsequent to that. That is, though the current year’s average monthly sale would be nearly Rs. 3,500, the sale during the last few months went down even below Rs. 2,000 per month. The result is that our khadi stock is now nearly Rs. 40,000. Last year our gross profit was 10.3 per cent, and our prices this year also are fixed on that basis. I take a typical variety of production and show below what relation the cost of production bears to sale price:

Shirting piece 10 yds. x 45 inches: This weighs 4 lb. 28 tolas and contains about 26 threads per inch of 8s and 9s.

1. Cost of cotton 5 lb. Rs. 2-8-0
2. Spinning wages (allowing reduction of 2 _ tolas per lb.) " 1-4-0
3. Weaving wages @ 3 as. per yd. " 2-0-6
4. Washing " 0-3-0
5. Freights, from spinning centre up to sale depot
   (last year’s basis) " 0-4-8
   Primary cost of production " 6-4-2
   Sale price @ Re. 0-10-9 per yd. " 6-11-6

Difference Re. 0-7-4

This hardly allows an anna in the rupee for establishment charges of production centre, sale or for supervision. During your last visit to Utkal you asked us not to worry over the question of sales but to put our energies solely in production work. I have requested the Secretary of the All-India Spinners’ Association to help us to sell our stock. If you consider that the matter might usefully be mentioned in the columns of Young India, kindly help us.

Having faith in khadi and faith in the people I did tell Niranja
Babu during my Utkal tour last year that he should concentrate on production. It was not possible to see those blank eyes of skeletons and stand still when one had work for them. The reader will be surprised to learn that Utkal khadi is not cheaper than khadi from the other provinces except perhaps Gujarat. The reason is that the people being more helpless than elsewhere, every new introduction carries more cost than it would in ordinary circumstances. The tendency however is to bring down the prices as efficiency and production grow. Meanwhile, appeal must be made to the philanthropy and patriotism of the people to take up this khadi and thus help the paupers of Orissa. The analysis of cost given in the letter shows that the bulk of the money goes directly into the pockets of the poor people. Only Rs. 0-7-4 out of Rs. 6-11-6 go towards part payment of overhead charges which too after all, pay the middle-class workers who man the khadi service. Thus in khadi production there is no overlapping. It means pure addition, be it ever so slight, to the wealth of the country, and a fresh avenue of honourable employment for honest middle-class young men without the necessity of their having to pass through English schools and produce at least matriculation certificates if not higher. There are two ways of helping to clear the surplus stock, either by buying the khadi for personal use or by paying a bounty towards reduction of the price of the khadi so that it could be sold at cheaper rates to poor local people. I hope those who understand the condition of Orissa and appreciate the value of khadi in national economics will adopt one of the two courses suggested by me. The address of the head office of the Utkal Branch of the All-India Spinners’ Association is Swaraj Ashram, Berhampur, B. N. Rly.

Young India, 6-9-1928

504. AFTER LUCKNOW

The most brilliant victory achieved at Lucknow following as it does closely on the heels of Bardoli makes a happy conjunction of events. Pandit Motilalji is today the proudest man in India and has every reason to be so. But even he could have done nothing if

---

1 Where the All-Parties Conference met from August 28 to 30 and unanimously endorsed the Nehru Committee Report in favour of Dominion self-government for India everyone had not conspired to make the proceedings a success. It would have been easy for the Hindus or the Mussalmans to block the way. The Sikhs could have done likewise. But no one had the heart to destroy the patient labours of the Nehru Committee. Little wonder that Pandit Malaviyaji the irrepressible optimist said that swaraj would be attained in 1930.

The honours for the happy result must however be shared with Pandit Nehru by Dr. Ansari. His invisible help was much greater than his visible and tactful guidance of the proceedings at Lucknow. He was ever at the beck should call of the Nehru Committee. He used all his unrivalled influence with the Mussalmans in disarming their opposition. Hindus could not resist his transparent honesty and equally transparent nationalism. The Liberals led by Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru lent a weight to the Conference which it would otherwise have lacked. I join Dr. Besant in her wish that they would re-enter the national organization. They need not lose their identity even as the Hindu and Mussalman organizations do not lose theirs.

The mention of the Liberals brings us to the future work. There is still much diplomatic work to be done. But more than the diplomatic work is that of forging the sanction. Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru truly observed that whether it was Dominion Status or Independence, a proper sanction would be necessary if the national demand was to be enforced. Bardoli has shown the way, if the sanction has to be non-violent. The Congress creed has non-violence as its integral part. There is no denying the fact that non-violence had receded in the background before Bardoli. But even as the Nehru report has made unanimous demand possible, Bardoli has brought back the vanishing faith in non-violence.

If then we are sure of the sanction, we need not worry whether swaraj is otherwise spelt Dominion Status or Independence. Dominion Status can easily become more than Independence, if we have sanction to back it. Independence can easily become at farce, if it lacks sanction. What is in a name if we have the reality? A rose smells just as sweet whether you know it by that name or any other. Let us therefore make up our minds as to whether it is to be non-violence or violence and let the rank and file work for the sanction in real earnest even as the diplomats must work at constitution-making.

Young India, 6-9-1928
505. OUR POVERTY

It is to be hoped that the reader has followed the carefully and ably written articles of Prof. C. N. Vakil which he recently contributed to this journal on the problem of India’s poverty. Prof. Sam Higginbottom sent me a circular letter propounding the following four questions:

1. What are the tests of poverty?
2. Whether India is richer or poorer today than 25 years ago or a longer period.
3. Is poverty in India general or confined to particular groups?

As a layman I could but give my evidence on the questions without carrying conviction to a critic. I therefore had the important and pertinent questions circulated among economist friends with a request to answer them in some detail if they could make time for the purpose. Prof. Vakil promptly responded with the articles to which I have drawn attention. The series is really not concluded. When I came upon the last chapter dealing with the remedies, I observed that it admitted of re-writing with a view to fuller and more accurate treatment. I am now trying to induce Prof. Vakil to re-write the chapter if he can possibly find the time and has the inclination. If he does send me anything the reader may expect a further instalment'. Meanwhile, he may regard the series as concluded.

The articles show clearly and I venture to think conclusively that India is poorer today than 25 years or a longer period ago and that the poverty is general and not confined to groups. Prof. Vakil has applied two tests for approving his proposition. He has shown that though during the past 40 years our average income has increased in the ratio of 1 to 2.74 (and he has accepted top figures in every case) the cost of living has increased in the ratio of 1 to 3.78; in other words we are poorer today to the extent of 2/7 than we were 40 years ago. He then examines the population figures and arrives at the same conclusion by showing that, whilst the population has increased, the capacity for coping with the increase has not only not kept pace with the increase but has probably deteriorated.

1 C. N. Vakil’s new series of articles under the title “Remedies of Poverty” appeared in Young India dated September 27, October 4, 11 and 18, 1928.
Prof. Vakil has enumerated the following six causes for this growing poverty:

1. Not enough work for the vast mass of the agricultural population during the off season.
2. The social system which imposes the burden upon one person of supporting a large family.
3. The presence of a large number of able-bodied beggars miscalled sadhus.
4. Enervating climate.
5. Resignation to fate and consequent want of determination to fight against poverty.
6. Faulty educational system.

Whilst these are contributory causes or more or less value, with the exception of the first none seems to me to go to the root of the matter. There is no doubt enough in the chapters to show that foreign exploitation of India is a cause of poverty. But in collecting the causes the Professor has evidently felt some delicacy about mentioning what is obviously a primary cause. This exploitation is a hydra-headed monster taking a variety of shapes to suit given occasions. The marine, the military, the currency, the railway and the revenue policy of the foreign Government is directed deliberately to promote an exploitation such as the world has never before witnessed. Poverty of India will never be removed so long as the exploitation continues unabated. Even the spinning wheel or any other subsidiary occupation that may be provided for the millions of peasantry will bring only partial relief, if the terrible drain, as Dadabhai Naoroji called it, is not stopped. He, therefore, who would explore the remedies for removing poverty has to tackle first the question of stopping the continuous drain.

Young India, 6-9-1928

506. LETTER TO JOHN HAYNES HOLMES

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
September 7, 1928

Dear Friend,

Mr. Andrews is abridging “My Experiments with Truth” for an English firm. I have not interfered with his work thinking that it does not in any way affect the Macmillan Company. But on rereading the agreement between the Macmillan Company and me, I find there is just a possibility that the Company may think that any publication of an abridgement will interfere with the contract. If so, please let me know. Personally I feel that the contract is of no value to the Macmillan Company seeing that the chapters are still running on and are likely so to do for many more months. If the Company desires it, I am quite willing to cancel the agreement. I am not at all anxious to make money from the publication of the chapters in book form. But I would like not to interfere with interim abridgements, etc., being published. If the Macmillan Company will at once publish the chapters in several volumes, they may then control abridgements or selections; but if they will not publish them in volumes, nor cancel the agreement, they should not mind abridgements being published in England or elsewhere outside India till the whole thing is ready for delivery into their hands.

Yours sincerely,

REV. JOHN HAYNES HOLMES
12 PARK AVENUE, NEW YORK CITY (U.S.A.)

From a photostat: S.N. 14769

507. LETTER TO C.F. ANDREWS

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
September 7, 1928

Subbiah just reminds me that the abridgement that you are preparing of the autobiographical chapters might possibly be an infringement of the contract with the Macmillan Company of New York. I do not think it is any infringement until I have reached the end of the chapters and delivered a copy of the Macmillan Company. However, I enclose for the sake of precaution a copy of my letter to Rev. Holmes for your guidance.¹

I agree with you that nothing is to be expected from the Simon Commission.

Sarojini is soon to leave for America. She is coming here tonight. Gregg is most anxious that when you go to America, you should see his people. If I can trace their address, it will go with this letter.

¹ Vide the preceding item.
I am trying to send you copies of Young India from the time the autobiography volume\(^1\) ceased.

You will insist on overworking yourself and then keeping unwell. I told you in Cape Town in 1914 that you needed a curator; I still maintain that opinion.

Mahadev is gone to Simla with Vallabhbhai who needed a change and whom Vithalbhai wanted to be with him for a few days.

C.F. ANDREWS, ESQ.
112 GOWER STREET, LONDON, W. 1.

From a photostat: S.N. 12780

---

508. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
September 7, 1928

DEAR SATIS BABU,

Having read in the papers that beriberi has again broken out in Calcutta, I got nervous and telegraphed to you this morning suggesting a change for yourself and Hemprabha Devi. Of course you could always come here, and your time will not be wasted. As a matter of fact a spinner’s time is nowhere wasted. I want you therefore to consider my suggestion seriously.

About the Exhibition, I am advising all khadi organizations that so far the decision is that khadi is not to be represented at the Congress Exhibition.

The hand-pump you installed is causing trouble. It seems to me that without a proper mechanic at your disposal, it is not safe to have these mechanical contrivances. The hand-pump suddenly refused to work the other day and we were without water and unprepared for the emergency. Today the lift bucket broke down and there was again water famine, and men having once wound themselves up that there is to be no water-drawing, there is always a disinclination to revert to it. I know that these difficulties will not occur where there is a mechanical atmosphere. I give you this information so that you may give me what

---

\(^1\) The reference is to Parts I, II & III of An Autobiography comprising Vol. I which was published in August 1927. The last instalment of this had appeared in Young India, 12-5-1927. Chapter I of Part IV appeared in the subsequent issue. guidance you like in the matter. Having got the pump I won’t easily give in.

For the more ambitious scheme\(^1\) you have mapped out, I shall wait till I feel safe over the hand-pump.

\[\text{SIT. SATIS CHANDRA Das GUPTA} \]
\[\text{KHADI PRATISHTHAN, SODEPUR} \]

\[\text{From a photostat: S.N. 13510} \]

509. LETTER TO K. SADASHIVA RAO

\[\text{SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,} \]
\[\text{September 7, 1928} \]

MY DEAR SADASHIVA RAO,

I have your letter. If we will serve the country and not think of ourselves, we will rejoice even when the world pelts us or ill-treats us. And I am sure that you will feel all the better and stronger if you will take the shock in good grace and really feel that a load is off your back.

\[\text{Yours sincerely,} \]

\[\text{SIT. SADASHIVA RAO KARNAD} \]
\[\text{KODAIBAIL, MANGALORE} \]

\[\text{From a microfilm: S.N. 13511} \]

510. LETTER TO DHAN GOPAL MUKERJEE

\[\text{SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,} \]
\[\text{September 7, 1928} \]

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter.\(^2\) I have never quoted Tolstoy or any other author without acknowledgment in any of my writings. And I do not remember having often quoted authors in my writings; not because I would not, but because my reading is so poor and capacity for \[\text{\(^1\) For tube-well water-supply for Sabarmati Ashram} \]

\[\text{\(^2\) The correspondent, in his letter of August 14, had \textit{inter alia} requested Gandhiji to write in \textit{Young India} giving an account of the latter’s relationship with Tolstoy. For Gandhiji’s speech touching on this point, \textit{vide} “Speech on Birth Centenary of Tolstoy”, 10-9-1928.} \]

VOL. 42 : 2 MAY, 1928 - 9 SEPTEMBER, 1928 443
reproducing what I have read is still less.

The vow of celibacy was undoubtedly taken after I had acquired considerable acquaintance with Tolstoy’s teachings. And, whilst it is as a general statement quite true that my life is based upon the teachings of the Gita, I would not be able to swear that Tolstoy’s writings and teachings did not influence my decision about celibacy.

So much for your satisfaction. I hope at some date to deal with your vital question in the pages of Young India.

Yours sincerely,

DHAN GOPAL Mukerjee

From a photostat: S.N. 14378

511. LETTER TO H. S. L. POLAK

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

September 7, 1928

I have your letter as also Millie’s¹. I was glad to hear from her directly after a long long time, and I was so glad that you were able to meet Kallenbach. I must not even try to write to her a separate love-letter. Life with me is becoming more and more strenuous and exacting. But I seem to be flourishing in spite of it all.

Devdas is in Delhi teaching carding, spinning and Hindi to the boys of the National Muslim University. Ramdas is in Bardoli and was [there] when satyagraha was going on. He is now taking part in the constructive work such as temperance, spinning, social reform, etc.

The Welsh model spinning-wheel² did not come last week. It may come tomorrow.

I wonder if Leon remembers me at all.

Yours sincerely,

H. S. L. POLAK

265 STRAND, LONDON, W.C.2

From a photostat: S.N. 14380

¹ Mrs. Polak
² For spinning wool
512. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

September 7, 1928

CHI. RAMDAS,
I have your letter. Please do not be tardy in writing to me. We have left behind us expressions like Devdas’s sister-in-law. There is nothing improper in referring to Nimu by her name. Here, I have no time even to write letters.

Vasumati has arrived.

Blessings from

BAPU

RAMDAS GANDHI
SWARAJ ASHRAM
BARDOLI

From Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

513. SPEECH AT DEAF AND DUMB SCHOOL, AHMEDABAD

September 7, 1928

My association with this school dates back to the year 1915. Despite numerous engagements, I have come here at the request of Seth Mangaldas and Pranshankar. This is a small school for the deaf and dumb, but I have undertaken the task of running a school for thousands of the deaf and dumb and of removing the privation caused by ignorance. A person like Seth Mangaldas cannot get away with it by merely donating a small sum. One business man of Ahmedabad alone can run such a school. Ahmedabad has the capacity to run many such schools. We can show our gratitude to God for gifts of speech and sight by rendering some service to such deaf and dumb persons. Shri Pranshankar gave you a report of the school but did not tell you how it came into existence. One of his own sons was deaf and dumb and because he was convinced that he should receive an education, he began teaching him; later on because he combined the welfare of others with self-interest, this school came into existence. It should be a common thing to combine social service with self-interest. But it is difficult to persuade people in Ahmedabad where everyone has started accumulating wealth, to do welfare work while pursuing their own interest. Shri Pranshankar has given figures to show there are only three schools for the 70,000 deaf and dumb in the province and out of two lakhs of deaf mutes in India only 500 are looked after. From this we see that their education has been neglected. We enable them to fill their stomachs by giving them alms but neglect the important task of educating them. There is a saying that an idle man rides on the shoulders of two. We should not make these deaf mutes mere idlers but should train them to make a living. Ahmedabad should not look elsewhere for help for such schools but on the contrary it should give generous donations to deserving outsiders. Talking of Ahmedabad, I will draw your attention to one more matter. I have just come across a book written by Dr. Hariprasad1 for the Gujarat Vernacular Society. He says in it that of all Indian cities Ahmedabad has the highest death rate. Since among countries India has the highest death rate, it follows that death rate in Ahmedabad is the highest in the world. I receive visitors from America, England and different parts of the world and I have to bow down in shame when they talk of the dirty lanes and streets of Ahmedabad. We should improve this state of affairs. We can make Ahmedabad a beautiful city if we use our intelligence and physical strength. Finally, I thank you for giving me the opportunity to lay the foundation-stone of this school and hope that the school would prosper from day to day. Let the educated class make money, but instead of amassing wealth for themselves they should give its benefit generously to others—this is my humble prayer.

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 9-9-1928

514. LETTER TO M. ZAFARULMULK

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
September 8, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I hope that your propaganda will succeed in making your scheme popular. When you do come, you shall certainly discuss it with me to your heart’s content.

With reference to the constitution I agree that it is entirely

1 President of the Youth Association, Ahmedabad
Western. But I have not bothered about its being Western or Eastern. If we have a true awakening in us, we shall be able to turn it as we will and make it serve our purpose instead of becoming slaves to it. The constitution is the logical outcome of the institutions we have at present. An Assembly man could not give any other constitution than what has been produced, and, if we succeed in getting the logical result of the present mode of Government of India and if it does not suit the genius of the people, you may depend upon it that they will destroy it and raise another into being. What is necessary is to remove the force that is weighing us down. And seeing that we have a tolerable agreement upon a passable constitution, it would be folly in my opinion to reject that constitution. Such is my justification for whole-heartedly recommending it to the country.

Yours sincerely,

M. ZAFARULMULK
LUCKNOW

From a photostat: S.N. 13512

515. LETTER TO S. C. BRAHMACHARI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
September 8, 1928

DEAR FRIENDS,

I am sorry that it is not possible for me to send you Young India or Young India literature free. The management does not encourage such applications if only because of the number received daily. Of course you know that Young India is not a business concern. It is a Concern just as philanthropic as the Ramakrishna Mission. Young India therefore carries a very limited Complimentary list.

Yours sincerely,

SRI SHRADDHA CHAITANYA BRAHMACHARI
SRI RAMAKRISHNA MATH, GARRISON ROAD, DELHI

From a microfilm: S.N. 13513
516. LETTER TO R. D. PRABHU

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

September 8, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. If both Conciliates the Inamdar, you will take it, not because you believe in the necessity of it but for the sake of the Inamdar, and therefore for the sake of the untouchable brethren whom you want to serve.

If the Maharatta boys leave the school because the Manar boys are also learning there, you will not mind the former leaving the school, but you will persist in teaching the Mahar boys at any cost.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. R. D. PRABHU

VINZANE, P.O. HALKARNI, MAHAL CHANDGAD, DT. BELGAUM

From a microfilm: S.N. 13514

517. LETTER TO P. A. WADIA

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

September 8, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have seen your letter to Mahadev who has gone to Simla with Vallabhbhai Patel. I should love to join the Retreat\(^1\) if it is at all possible. But so far as I can see at present, there is no chance of my being able to do so. However you do not need a positive reply so far in advance. I would like you not to build anything on the hope of my coming. Take me as a chance visitor if I can at all come, and therefore I would like you to remind me when the time draws near.

I have read with interest your remarks about the proposal to divide India into provinces on a linguistic basis. My feeling is that we will not be able to foster the national instinct by any superimposition from without. I therefore feel that we shall lose nothing by

\(^1\) Proposed to be organized by International Fellowship at Bombay recognizing the natural linguistic divisions unless the desire is to replace the different languages by one language, both for the classes and the masses.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 13515

518. MESSAGE TO “KHADI VIJAY”

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

September 8, 1928

“Khadi Vijay” means victory of khadi. It is good that there should be a monthly devoted to khadi, but it will be better if people especially the mercantile class will devote themselves to khadi. Then victory for khadi is assured.

From a microfilm: S.N. 13516

519. LETTER TO GANGADHAR RAO

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

September 8, 1928

MY DEAR GANGADHAR RAO,

Here is the message for Sjt. Nanjappa which Kaka tells me you want for him.

I hope you have got over your dejection as also your illness and that you are now looking twenty years younger for your victories in Poona. I hope that this new khadi spirit will last.

Your sincerely,

From a microfilm: S.N. 13517

---

1 This was an enclosure to the following item.

2 Vide the preceding item.
520. LETTER TO CHINTAMANI B. KHADILKAR

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
September 8, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. Yours is essentially a case for satyagraha. You are a member of a club whose other members have committed a breach of their own pledge. If, therefore, you have the courage, you will offer satyagraha without being in any way irritated against them. But before you do so, you should reason with them and use every effort to persuade them to redeem their promise. If they do not respond, you will then carefully consider what form your satyagraha can possibly take.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. CHINTAMANI BALWANT KHADILKAR
FERGUSSON COLLEGE, HOSTEL ROOM NO. 332
DECCAN GYMKHANA, POONA CITY

From a photostat: S.N. 13518

521. ‘WHAT DO CHILDREN UNDERSTAND?’

A student of the Gujarat Vidyapith writes to say:¹

I have been unable to go through the articles from which extracts have been given in this letter. It is not always possible to interpret rightly a passage taken from an article without reference to the context. Nevertheless, it is not difficult for me to reply to the question without reading the original article, as the idea in the passages quoted above is based on my own experience. In this context, the reader should understand a child to mean not a child of two but a child of the age at which he or she is normally admitted to school.

From the fact that children fall asleep when I read the Gita, it cannot be concluded that their understanding is deficient. It may be said that I am unable to create interest in my reading the Gita, it may even be the case that the child is tired at that time. I have often seen children asleep while they are being taught arithmetic, told amusing stories or when taken to see a play. I have also seen adults dozing while the Gita or other scriptures are being read. Hence, when considering the question posed above, we should leave out of account the fact of children falling asleep or displaying lack of interest.

¹ Renunciation

These doubts should not arise in the mind of anyone to whom it is as clear as daylight that the child’s soul existed before he or she was born, that the soul has no beginning and knows no such states as childhood, youth and old age. It is because of our connection with the physical form, because of the current trends of thought and because of our disinclination to go deep into the matter that we conclude that the child knows only how to play or, at the most can write the alphabet and, going further, can memorize the tongue-twisting names of the rivers, etc., of Europe and America and understand the history and learn the names, although difficult to pronounce, of the kings, plunderers and killers of various countries.

My own experience is the very opposite of this. The ideal of soul, truth and love can easily be put before children in language which they can understand. I have heard not one but many children, who have no knowledge of the world, ask about a dead person:

“This letter is not translated here. The correspondent had stated that Gandhiji’s writings showed that he expected too much from children.

“Where has this man’s soul gone?” A child who asks this question can easily be taught about the soul. Crores of illiterate Indian children realize the distinction between truth and falsehood, between love and hate, from the very age that they begin to understand things. Is there a child who would not recognize the nectar-like stream of love or, the embers of wrath glowing or blazing from his parents’ eyes? The student who has put the question seems to have forgotten his own childhood. I therefore wish to remind him of the fact that he had experience of parental love before he acquired a knowledge of the alphabet. Love, truth and the soul would have been forgotten long ago had these required language in order to reveal themselves.

The passages quoted by the correspondent do not advise putting abstract truth before children, but explain that we should exhibit before them immortal virtues like truth and prove to them that they, too, have them. In brief, formation of character should have priority over knowledge of the alphabet. If this order is reversed, the attempt would be like putting the cart before the horse and making it push the cart with its nose, and would meet with the same success as the latter course. It is because he realized the truth of this that Darwin’s contemporary, the scientist Wallace, said at the age of ninety that in basic moral standards he saw in the so-called educated and reformed nations no progress over the Negroes who are regarded as uncivilized. If we were not under the spell of the various external temptations that exist today, we would realize the truth of Wallace’s statement and plan and frame our educational curriculum in a different manner.

I will ask a counter-question in reply to the question regarding the ten-headed Ravana. Which of the two ideas can be more readily explained to a child? Is it easier to convince him that a ten-headed creature which could never have been created existed in the form of Ravana, or is it easier to make him aware of the ten-headed Ravana who lives secretly like a thief in the heart of each one of us? In believing that the child is devoid of imagination and intellectual powers, we do him grave injustice and belittle ourselves. To say that a child does understand does not imply that he understands things without our explaining them to him. Despite every effort to convince a child to that effect, he will not accept the idea that a human being with ten heads can actually exist, whereas he will understand the idea of the ten headed Ravana who has entered our hearts as soon as it is explained to him.

I hope now that the student will not ask me why I do not feel ashamed to read Tulsidas’s Ramayana and Vyasa’s Gita before children. I do not wish to teach the children the philosophical implications of the idea of karma, tyaga or sthitaprajna. I do not believe that I myself have acquired such knowledge or rather I know I have not. Perhaps I would not understand books which are full of philosophical discussions about karma, etc., and, even if I do understand them with difficulty, I would certainly be bored. And when one is bored one may even fall asleep. However, when I think of spinning or doing work as sacrifice for the benefit of the millions and giving up self-indulgence so that I might do that, sweet slumber would seem like poison to me and I would wake up. It is my unshakable faith, based on experience, that if the Gita and such other works are explained in a simple manner to children, the effort will certainly benefit them in later years.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 9-9-1928

1 Of steadfast intellect
If the Bardoli victory is part of history, so will be the victory at Lucknow. Bardoli has shown the way to organic swaraj—Ramarajya, while Lucknow has opened the gates of constitutional swaraj. Both things were essential. Whereas learned and politically astute leaders were required for the Lucknow swaraj, the ordinary, illiterate masses served the purpose for the Bardoli swaraj. While the intellect played the chief role in the one case, faith did that in the other. The fact that the meeting at Lucknow was held immediately after the victory at Bardoli was not deliberately contrived. Hence those who have faith in God would look upon it as an indication of His will. Pandit Motilal deserves to be complimented for the people’s victory in Lucknow. Were it not for his single-minded devotion to the cause, his ability, his hard work and his faith, the task would not have been accomplished. The success consists not in the leaders having devised the best constitution, but in their achieving unity over a constitution which preserves everyone’s self-respect and safeguards the rights of all. Meetings of various parties were being held for many months. But it was only in Lucknow that they bore visible fruit. This success must be attributed to Pandit Motilalji.

Dr. Ansari’s name must be added to his. Everyone could see that by means of his tact and patience he kept the followers of various parties together. However, it is only a few who know of the work that he had been doing behind the scenes for the past few months. Success would not have been possible if Dr. Ansari had not stood by the Nehru Committee whenever that was necessary. He took full advantage of his love for the Muslims. It was impossible for any Hindu to question his ardent patriotism. He could thus win the confidence of all.

The presence of the members of the Liberal Party and that of Sir Ali Imam and Dr. Besant added to the distinction and importance of the gathering.

However, just as the Sardar cannot go to sleep after the victory at Bardoli, similarly Panditji and the other members cannot rest after the Lucknow triumph. Bharatbhusan Madan Mohan Malaviya’s happy prophecy about swaraj being established in 1930 will not come true if the remaining tasks are not completed without delay. God helps only those who are awake, not those who slumber. There is of course the task of mobilizing public opinion behind the Nehru constitution. But the more important task is that of developing the strength to get that constitution accepted. Pandit Jawaharlal had reminded the meeting of this fact even at Lucknow. Whether you are in favour of Dominion Status or of Independence, it will be necessary to cultivate the strength to secure either. Without this strength neither can be won. Swaraj is not going to descend on us from the heavens. It will not be received as a gift from the British Empire either. It can only be the reward of our own efforts. The very word swaraj means effort by the nation. What does a goat know of swaraj? Can she taste its sweetness merely because lions and other beasts of prey let it alone? If not the lion, his cousins will be there to eat her up. We are in the same position. No one will be able to stand in our way when we have developed the strength to win swaraj. Everyone’s freedom is within his own grasp.

There are two alternatives before us. The one is that of violence, the other of non-violence; the one of physical strength, the other of soul-force; the one of hatred, the other of love; the one of disorder, the other of peace; one that is demoniac, the other that is godly. Bardoli has taught us an object-lesson in peace. The path of peace is the one mentioned in the Congress pledge. But, before the victory of Bardoli, the nation seemed to have lost faith in peaceful methods. After that victory, it seems to have recovered it. If we want swaraj, we shall have to strive hard and follow one of these two courses. As they are incompatible with each other, the fruit, the swaraj that would be secured by following the one would necessarily be different from that which would be secured by following the other. In either case the result will be known as swaraj, but its contents would be different in the two cases. We shall reap as we sow.

[From Gujarati]

_Navajivan_, 9-9-1928
523. TEMPERANCE WORK IN SURAT DISTRICT

Shrimati Mithubehn Petit, by whose initiative a temperance league has been set up for the Surat district, has sent the following note:

Sardar Vallabhbhai has very often said that he had received strong support from Mithubehn. This Parsi lady, who had never before suffered any hardships, lived in peasant homes as one of them. She was content with their simple food and, despite her frail constitution and despite the absence of the comforts she was accustomed to, she managed to keep physically fit and work ceaselessly day and night. Through her own bravery she has taught the lesson of courage to the men and women of Bardoli; her untiring efforts have put young men to shame. Being in love with khadi she went from door to door hawking khadi and created interest in the people for it. As she cannot remain idle for a single moment, Vallabhbhai has given her the name ‘Chanchalbehn’. This lady discovered that liquor was consumed in large quantities in the Surat District. She also saw that most of the owners of liquor booths were Parsis. She, therefore, decided to take up temperance work in the entire Surat District, and now, through her initiative, the league referred to above has been established. From the names of the members of the executive committee I could see that Mithubehn intends to exact hard work from them. I hope that they will not spare themselves. Mithubehn will not let them easily. If this league succeeds in its aim, its success will be a very valuable contribution to the constructive work undertaken in Bardoli, and it will not only save lakhs of rupees in the Surat District, but will also have an effect throughout the country. Not only are twenty crores of rupees thrown away every year through the consumption of liquor, but it also destroys the moral character of millions of people and ruins innumerable families. Anyone who has really developed interest in khadi immediately sees this. Mithubehn has seen it and her heroic spirit has now inspired her to take up this gigantic task. May God grant her good health and strength.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 9-9-1928

1 Not translated here. It gave the names of the members of the league.
2 Literally, ‘the restless one’
524. CASTE-DISTINCTIONS AT MEALS
IN NATIONAL HOSTELS

One of the letters in Kakasaheb’s increasingly large mail dealt with the subject of caste-distinct or at meals. He has sent me a copy of his reply to it. I give below his ideas in his own words, as they will be of value in guiding the hostels:¹

Kakasaheb wishes to tread the ground carefully. As far as possible, he does not wish to hurt the feelings of either the students or their parents; hence he says: “Only Brahmin cooks prepare meals in the hostel. As our rules of purity demand that meals should be prepared in a particular manner, these are observed by the employment of Brahmin cooks.” In my opinion, it will not be possible to insist upon having Brahmin cooks for long. It is not true that only Brahmins—in the sense in which the word is used here—are capable of observing the rules of purity. Moreover, it is also not a fact that Brahmins will necessarily abide by these rules. I have seen many Brahmin cooks who are dirty and who violate the laws of hygiene. Everyone who keeps his eyes open will see them. I have also come across many Non-Brahmin cooks who know and observe the rules of cleanliness and hygiene. Hence if we bear in mind the original meaning of the word Brahmin and regard anyone who abides by the laws of purity as a Brahmin, all national hostels will readily be able to follow the rule laid down by Kakasaheb. If, only those who are Brahmins by birth are regarded as such, we shall not get many Brahmin cooks who will abide by the rules of purity and those who are available will demand such high salaries and act in such a headstrong manner that it will become impossible to keep them in employment. As the Vidyapith worships truth and non-violence, it should declare the position as it really is in our hostels. It cannot close its eyes to facts either within itself or in the outside world. Hence Kakasaheb has stated that caste-distinctions at meals have no place in the hostels of the Vidyapith. Such distinctions imply distinctions of high and low. The varna system, on the other hand, has nothing to do with distinctions of high and low. The Brahmin who claims to be high falls and becomes low. The world raises high those who regard themselves as low and lead a common man’s life. Where is the room for high and low when moksha is the ideal, when non-violence is the supreme dharma and we believe in the oneness of the atman in all? Hence, I think all that we can say in regard to national hostels is that every effort will be made to observe in them all the rules of cleanliness, which means that the true Brahmana dharma will remain their ideal. We cannot have as our ideal the practice of Brahmana dharma which concerns itself with outward forms and lacks the true essence, for it is an evil and, therefore, to be shunned.

¹ Kalelkar’s reply is not translated here. He had stated that the hostels of the Vidyapith did not approve of or encourage such distinctions.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 9-9-1928

525. MY NOTES

DISREGARD FOR THE LIVING QUERN

A volunteer who works in Bardoli writes to say:

The complaint which this volunteer makes can be made about many other classes of people. The teeth are an important gift of nature. They are a living quern. Anyone who ignores it, shortens his life. Grain that has been once ripened by the rays of the sun needs no other form of cooking. However, ever since man learnt to enjoy tasty food with his palate, he started cooking again what had already been cooked once, with the result that his life-span was shortened. It may well be that we cannot all at once give up a bad practice which has come down to us from ancient times and cannot altogether dispense with the oven, however, we could save a great deal of time and money if we make minimum use of it. We can never eat sun-ripened grain in the same quantities as we eat it in cooked form. We cannot eat as much of dry food as we can eat food which is soaked and crushed. Nature has provided us with nectar in our palate in order to moisten dry food, and with teeth for the purpose of grinding it to paste. We ignore both these gifts by becoming slaves of our palate, and thereby we not only commit a crime but also needlessly burden our intestines and shorten our lives, and even during this short life-span we fall a prey to many diseases. Hence, although we may not be ready to eat uncooked, sun-ripened grain and be satisfied with it, we should form the practice of carefully chewing cooked food when eating it. Even 1 The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had drawn attention to the common practice of villagers eating wheat or bajri cakes soaked in milk, without chewing them properly.

---

rice can be chewed, and green vegetables can certainly be eaten uncooked. Doctors recommend the latter. We get from uncooked vegetables the nutrients that we require. They are known as ‘vitamins’ in English, and doctors claim that these vitamins are destroyed as a result of cooking, and that their destruction leads to ill-health.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 9-9-1928

526. RELIGIOUS EDUCATION

A student of the Gujarat Vidyapith writes:

What concrete form ought religious instruction to take in the Vidyapith?

To me religion means truth and ahimsa or rather truth alone, because truth includes ahimsa, ahimsa being the necessary and indispensable means for its discovery. Therefore anything that promotes the practice of these virtues is a means for imparting religious education and the best way to do this, in my opinion, is for the teachers rigorously to practise these virtues in their own person. Their very association with the boys, whether on the playground or in the class-room, will then give the pupils a fine training in these fundamental virtues.

So much for instruction in the universal essentials of religion. A curriculum of religious instruction should include a study of the tenets of faiths other than one’s own. For this purpose the students should be trained to cultivate the habit of understanding and appreciating the doctrines of various great religions of the world in a spirit of reverence and broad-minded tolerance. This, if properly done, would help to give them a spiritual assurance and a better appreciation of their own religion. There is one rule, however, which should always be kept in mind while studying all great religions and that is that one should study them only through the writings of known votaries of the respective religions. For instance, if one wants to study the Bhagavata one should do so not through a translation of it made by a hostile critic but through one prepared by a lover of the Bhagavata. Similarly to study the Bible one should study it through the commentaries of devoted Christians. This study of other religions besides one’s own will give one a grasp of the rock-bottom unity of all religions and afford a glimpse also of that universal and absolute truth which lies beyond the “dust of creeds and faiths”.

1 The Gujarati original of this appeared in Navajivan, 9-9-1928. This is a translation by Pyarelals.

Let no one even for a moment entertain the fear that a reverent study of other religions is likely to weaken or shake one’s faith in one’s own. The Hindu system of philosophy regards all religions as containing the elements of truth in them and enjoins an attitude of respect and reverence towards them all. This of course presupposes regard for one’s own religion. Study and appreciation of other religions need not cause a weakening of that regard; it should mean extension of that regard to other religions.

In this respect religion stands on the same footing as culture. Just as preservation of one’s own culture does not mean contempt for that of others, but requires assimilation of the best that there may be in all the other cultures, even so should be the case with religion. Our present fears and apprehensions are a result of the poisonous atmosphere that has been generated in the country, the atmosphere of mutual hatred, ill-will and distrust. We are constantly labouring under a nightmare of fear lest someone should stealthily undermine our faith or the faith of those who are dear and near to us. But this unnatural state will cease when we have learnt to cultivate respect and tolerance towards other religions and their votaries.

_Young India, 6-12-1928_

527. LETTER TO JAIRAMDAS DAULATRAM

_SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,_
_Saturday 9, 1928_

MY DEAR JAIRAMDAS,

I have your letter. I have glanced at the speech of which you have sent me a copy. Personally, I do not mind Devanagari and Urdu being optionally used. For, ultimately that script will survive whose users have greater vitality. The fact however is that I do not trouble myself about these things. I believe in subscribing to any solution that the leaders may evolve, so long as it does not commit me to a breach of any fundamental conviction.
Of course I admired your yielding on the Sind question. But I was curious to know what made you yield, because I knew that you had very strong conviction about it.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 13519

528. LETTER TO G. RAMACHANDRAN

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
September 9, 1928

MY DEAR RAMACHANDRAN,

I. have your letter. My decision is this. Do not accept your own certificate about your completion of apprenticeship. Let Rajaji judge. If he says you can start in Kerala, do so by all means; but if he does not, wait till he is convinced. I am sure that it is the best thing for your work. If your own conclusion is sound, you should have confidence in your ability to carry conviction to Rajaji. Personally, I have no misgivings about success of khadi in Kerala, if the right stamp of men concentrate their energy upon khadi. Of course I like the idea of your becoming a member of the Gandhi Seva Sangh.

Mahadev is in Simla, Vallabhbhai having taken him there to write the history of Bardoli Satyagraha. Rasik and Navin Gandhi have gone to Delhi to help Devdas in his work in the Jamia.

From a microfilm: S.N. 13520
529. LETTER TO HUGO BUCHSER

September 9, 1928

I have no ability to write articles to order, nor have I any ambition in that direction.

M. K. G.

From a microfilm: S.N. 14382

530. A LETTER

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

September 9, 1928

CHI. BHAI,

What you write about the children is perfectly correct. They may forget what we tell them or what they read, but they will consciously or unconsciously remember what we do and act accordingly. That is especially true for the Ashram since we always stress that only what we practise counts.

To a woman her home and kitchen are all-important. She rules through her kitchen. She therefore behaves like a millionaire who works all through the day to preserve and increase his millions. When she loses the subtle power she enjoys through the kitchen, she will be reconciled to the common kitchen and be satisfied with whatever is cooked in it. But now I have given up pressing any of my views on others.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/1

1 In reply to his letter from Geneva, as “representative of most important European daily papers”, requesting Gandhiji to send him from time to time articles for publication abroad, and guaranteeing a very high recompense
APPENDIX I

WHAT IS THE BARDOLI CASE?

BY MAHADEV DESAI

In the matter of revision settlements there has been calculated flouting of public opinion and of resolutions of the Legislative Council during recent years. In pursuance of the advice of the Joint Parliamentary Committee, “that the process of revising the land revenue assessments ought to be brought under closed regulation by a Statute”, the Bombay Legislative Council passed by a large majority in March 1924 a resolution to the effect that a committee be appointed to consider the question of regulating revision of assessment by legislation, and that “no revision be proceeded with and no new rates under any revised settlement be introduced till the said legislation is brought into effect”. The first part of the resolution was carried out by Government appointing the Land Revenue Assesment Committee, but the second part was ignored, and revision settlement of one taluk after another was proceeded with in the teeth of the resolution. In the mean time the Land Revenue Committee had set and published its report, and the Bombay Legislative Council in March 1927 passed by a very large majority another resolution recommending to the Governor in Council to give immediate effect to the resolution of March 1924 by effecting necessary legislation after taking into consideration the Report of the Land Revenue Assessment Committee, and “pending such legislation to issue orders to the revenue authorities concerned not to collect the assessment enhanced in revision after the 15th March 1924”. The legislation suggested by the Land Revenue Assessment Committee is at present before the Legislative Council, but revision settlements have gone on, almost with the deliberate intention of frustrating the very object of the legislation when it should ultimately come to pass. Bardoli is only one of several taluks where there should have been no revision and no levying of new rates in the terms of these resolutions. This is a fundamental preliminary objection to the revision settlement in Bardoli, apart from the merits of the case.

I shall briefly discuss the merits. The new Bardoli revision settlement was prepared by Mr. Jayakar who submitted his recommendations in November 1925. He recommended 30 per cent enhancement. The Settlement Commissioner Mr. Anderson disagreed with the basis on which Mr. Jayakar had made his recommendation, adopted a new basis, and recommended 29 per cent. Government disagreed with the recommendations of both and fixed 22 per cent. The original assessment of the taluk which was Rs. 5,14,762 is under the new revision something over Rs. 6,20,000.
As against this the agriculturists of Bardoli contend that the taluk is assessed right up to the full limit and that there is absolutely no case for enhancement. The occupants in the taluk are divided as under according to the size of their holdings:

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>Size of Holdings</th>
<th>Number</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>1 to 5 acres</td>
<td>10,379</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>6 to 25 acres</td>
<td>5,936</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>26 to 100 acres</td>
<td>829</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>101 to 500 acres</td>
<td>40</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

It may be safely assumed that all the occupants having not more than 25 acres cultivate their own land and that those with larger holdings lease their land to the agriculturists. This means that 16,315 occupants actually cultivate 1,27,045 acres which is the total occupied area, i.e., each occupant cultivate on an average something like 8 acres of land. It is inequitable to go on the strength of rents—economic or uneconomic—enjoyed by a very small fraction, i.e., 869 large landholders. The land revenue assessment ought to be fixed having regard to the value of the land held by the 16,315 agriculturists and to the profits of agriculture enjoyed by them under Sec. 107 of the Land Revenue Code. The agriculturists of Bardoli contend that assuming the average yield per acre and assuming the very high standard of prices adopted by the Settlement Officer as accurate (though the prices have considerably gone down since the report), an agriculturist cultivating 8 acres of land (the average) does not earn profits entitling the Government to make any increase in the existing rate of assessment. They are prepared to prove this statement and they maintain that even if the basis of 50 per cent of the profits be accepted, no increase is warranted, and if the basis of 25 per cent of the profits be accepted, a considerable reduction in the existing rates would be necessary.

They thus rely for their contention on the actual conditions obtaining in the taluk, but they also rely on attacking the value and accuracy of the Government reports. They contend, inter alia, that Mr. Jayakar, the Settlement Officer, made no enquiry worth the name, visited few villages, afforded no opportunities to villagers of making representations pertaining to the question of increasing the assessment, and prepared a perfunctory survey. He prepared the most essential statistics in his office, without exercising the slightest scrutiny and relied for his recommendations of 30 per cent on the sole basis of rise in the value of gross produce. The perfunctory nature of Mr. Jayakar’s inquiry, if inquiry it could be called, is enough to render it valueless. But Mr. Anderson seriously questioned the value of Mr. Jayakar’s report on another and very substantial ground which was pointed out by the people’s representatives also. He rejected the most vital part of Mr. Jayakar’s report—viz., where he bases his recommendations on the value of gross produce—as “irrelevant” and “positively dangerous as affording no justification for his proposals and suggesting arguments against them”. In the circumstances Mr. Anderson’s obvious duty was to suggest to Government a fresh inquiry. But he overshot the mark and proceeded to make his own recommendations on the basis of rental statistics—a basis of which the equity has been seriously challenged by several high-placed Government officials, and the statistics themselves have in the present case been seriously challenged as lacking scrutiny. If Mr. Jayakar drove a coach and four through the Setlement Manual, in making no real inquiry, Mr. Anderson went one better in contravening the Settlement Manual which lays down that rents should be only one of the factors to be considered and that even when they are taken into account, “they cannot be used as the basis for definite conclusions . . . unless they exist in considerable volume and unless their reliability has been carefully tested”. Mr. Anderson grossly erred (1) in exclusively relying on the rental statistics and (2) in assuming that the two essential conditions for their being of any value and been satisfied. In one place, Mr. Anderson charges Mr. Jayakar with having made “no attempt to compile statistics showing the area rented and the area cultivated by its owners,” and yet proceeds on Appendix H and wrongly arrives at the conclusion that “at least half the total area is held by landlords who do not cultivate it”. The error is based on his hastily assuming seven years’ statistics—42,923 acres—as one years’s statistics and on his utter disregard of Mr. Jayakar’s own estimate of land held by non-agriculturists, which is 23,995 acres, i.e., about 18 per cent of the total area—a more plausible, though not a strictly accurate estimate, because not based on inquiries on the spot.

For these reason both Mr. Jayakar’s and Mr. Anderson’s reports are worthless and the rate of 22 per cent fixed by Government is absolutely arbitrary as it is based on no fresh or accurate data.

The satyagrahis of Bardoli have therefore pledged themselves to pay no assessment until either

1. the enhancement is cancelled; or
2. an independent impartial tribunal is appointed to examine the whole case.

Young India, 14-6-1928
APPENDIX II

BARDOLI REPORT

In their report, absolutely pruned of epithets and adjectives, and as closely reasoned and concise as it could be, they addressed themselves to the consideration of four questions: "As the enhancement is based on rents which land-owners demand from their tenants it is of utmost importance to determine whether the table relating to the rents paid by the tenants has been prepared with due care so as to exhibit economic rents only. If it is found to be seriously defective, all conclusions drawn from it must be regarded as valueless. Again, it seems reasonable that before competitive rents are accepted as the foundation of the settlement policy, it should be determined what proportion of the cultivated area is in the hands of tenants paying cash rents. The third question which demands consideration is whether abnormal periods have been excluded in inquiring into the course followed by rents during the currency of the old settlement. Lastly, we have to consider to what extent the Land Revenue Code and the Settlement Manual justify almost exclusive reliance on rental value for the purpose of determining new assessment rates." And after a study of the Code and the Settlement Manual and after personal investigation and inquiries made in several villages from the people concerned, they found

1. That the table was seriously defective inasmuch as mortgage transactions, or rents not realized in full, or conditional sales had not been excluded, and no allowance was made for rents, charged in consequence of improvements made at the cost of the occupant according to Section 107 of the Land Revenue Code.

2. That the cash-rented area may be taken to be in the neighbourhood of 20 per cent and that looking to the fact that "94 per cent of the occupants and owners cultivate themselves" in 1895, even a proportion of 30 per cent as the land cultivated by tenants appears surprisingly large today.

3. That the boom period covering the years from 1918-19 to 1924-25 should have been excluded according to the statement made by the Revenue Member himself.

4. That the Settlement Commissioner relied on insufficient and unscrutinized rental statistics as his "one true guide", not to check the results of the indirect inquiry, but to avoid having to consider and allow for an increase in the cost of cultivation, and that he used them not "to prevent the enhancement-from going too high" (in the words of Settlement Manual) but to enhance the assessment rates.
In view of the foregoing findings Sjt. Kunzru, Vaze and Thakkar came to the conclusion that “the demand for a fresh inquiry is fully justified” and that “recent announcement that revision settlement of the Viramgam taluk will be reconsidered makes the case for the reconsideration of the settlement of the Bardoli taluk unanswerable.”

Sjt. Vaze issued an additional statement in which he laid special emphasis on the fact that “the present struggle in Bardoli is a purely economic one; it is no part of a general scheme of mass civil disobedience.... My observation satisfies me that the leaders of the movement are actuated by no other motive in carrying on the campaign than to undo, by using their best endeavours, what they genuinely believe to be a cruel wrong to the peasantry of Bardoli. It would be both inexpedient and unjust for Government to invest the movement with a wider political significance which it does not bear.”

The report appealed to leaders of all schools of political thinking, ranged the sympathy of the few remaining waverers among Indian newspapers definitely on the side of the satyagrahis, and was instrumental more than anything else in bringing about a consensus of opinion among all circles including the Liberals about the justice of the people’s demands and the minimum that was due to them.

The Story of Bardoli, pp. 148-9
APPENDIX III

BARDOLI SETTLEMENT

THE SETTLEMENT DOCUMENTS

The Letters Exchanged between the Surat M.L.C.s and the Government Regarding the Terms of Settlement

1

The following letter was addressed by the members of the Legislative Council representing Bardoli taluk and Surat district to the Hon’ble the Revenue Member:

POONA

August 6, 1928

TO

THE HONOURABLE THE REVENUE MEMBER

SIR,

With reference to your letter dated August 3, 1928, we are glad to be able to say that we are in a position to inform Government that the conditions laid down by His Excellency the Governor in his opening speech to the Council dated 23rd of July will be fulfilled.

Yours sincerely,

A. M. K. DEHLAVI
BHASAHEB (Thakore of Kerwada)
DAUDKHAN SALEBHAI TYEBJEE
J. B. DESAI
B. R. NAIK
H. B. SHIVDASANI
M. K. DIXIT

2

Announcement of the Enquiry

Government thereafter announced the following enquiry:

The enquiry will be entrusted to a Revenue Officer and a Judicial Officer, the decision of the Judicial Officer to prevail in all matters of difference between the two, with the following terms of reference:
To enquire into and report upon the complaint of the people of Bardoli and Valod

(a) that the enhancement of revenue recently made is not warranted in terms of the Land Revenue Code;

(b) that the reports accessible to the public do not contain sufficient data warranting the enhancement and that some of the data given are wrong; and to find that, if the people's complaint is held to be justified what enhancement or reduction, if any, there should be upon the old assessment.

As the enquiry is to be full, open and independent, the people will be free to lead as well as test evidence before it with the help of their representatives including legal advisers.

3

The following further letters were exchanged between the members of the Legislative Council representing the Bardoli taluk and the Surat district and the Hon'ble the Revenue Member:

POONA,
August 7, 1928

TO

THE HONOURABLE THE REVENUE MEMBER

SIR,

Now that the principal point about the Bardoli question is settled satisfactorily we hope and trust that Government will

(a) release all satyagrahi prisoners,
(b) restore all lands forfeited,
(c) Reinstatate all talatis and patels who resigned their offices.

Yours sincerely,

A. M. K. DEHLAVI
DAUDKHAN SALEBHAI TYEBJEE
BHASAHEB (THAKORE OF KERWADA)
BHMIBHAI R. NAIK
H. B. SHIVDASANI
J. B. DESAI
M. K. DIXIT
The following letter dated 7th August 1928 was addressed by the Hon’ble the Revenue Member to the above members of the Legislative Council:

GENTLEMEN,

With reference to your letter dated the 7th instant, Government, in exercise of their prerogative, will release all satyagrahi prisoners and will be pleased to issue orders granting your second request.

The talatis and patels will be pardoned if they apply in the proper form.

Yours sincerely,

J. L. RIEU

N.B.—The price paid for the lands which were sold by Government and were transferred to R. B. Naik as stated in para 86 of the Report was about Rs. 11,000 or double the assessment in respect thereof. The excess of assessment thus received was also remitted by Government to the individual cultivators with the result that the land was restored to them without their being out of pocket to any extent.

The story of Bardoli, pp. 230-2

APPENDIX IV

SOUTH AFRICAN CONDONATION

[I. FORM OF APPLICATION]

(Name)..............................................known in India as
......................................................of(address in Union) ...................................................

(Occupation) ....................................

1. Registration Certificate, Domicile Certificate, or other certificate No. of applicant..........................................................

2. Village and country of birth of applicant..........................................................

3. Name of father of applicant .................................................................

4. Date and place of first entry of applicant into the Union..........................

5. Name of wife (if any) and present whereabouts...........................................

6. Children (if any) .................................................................

Mother Name of child Sex Where born Age Present whereabouts

I, having been duly cautioned, hereby solemnly and sincerely declare that the above questions have been interpreted to me in which questions I hereby declare to understand and that I have answered them truthfully.

Signature (in Roman characters or thumb print) of applicant.................................
Address in full.............................

Interpreted by me............................................................
Signature................................................

Declared before me at.............................this day of.................................
Thumb impression of applicant.............................

MAGISTRATE, OR IMMIGRATION OFFICER WHO IS COMMISSIONER OF OATHS

[ II. CORRESPONDENCE ]

LETTER FROM C. S. SCHMIDT TO P. K. DESAI

UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA,
DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
CAPE TOWN,
February 24, 1928

SIR,

I have the honour to acknowledge receipt of your letter dated 6th January, 1928, in which you convey to the Honourable the Minister of the Interior the following resolution passed at the eighth session of the South African Indian Congress, held at Kimberley in January, 1928:

That this eighth session of the South African Indian Congress in conference assembled, as representing the Indian community of South Africa, hereby assures the Union Government, on its own behalf and also on behalf of its constituent bodies, viz., the Transvaal Indian Congress as representing the Indian community of the Transvaal, the Cape British Indian Council as representing the Indian community of the Cape Province, and the Natal Indian Congress as representing the Indian community of Natal, that it will stand by

What follows is from Young India, 16-8-1928.
and will generally honour the Agreement arrived at between the Indian and Union Governments at Cape Town, and in the spirit in which it has been conceived, and declares as it has always done that it will not tolerate any illicit entry of Indians into the Union.

In view of this assurance, and as an act of grace to mark the appointment of the Right Honourable V. S. S. Sastri, P.C., as the first Agent of the Government of India in the Union, the Union Government has been pleased to refrain from the full enforcement of Section 10 of Act 22 of 1913 as amended by Section 5 of Act 37 of 1927, in the case of an Indian who proves to the satisfaction of the Minister of the Interior that he entered a Province of the Union other than the Orange Free State prior to the 5th July, 1924, subject to the following provisions:

(a) Every Indian who has illicitly entered the Union must apply, on his own behalf or through the South African Indian Congress or a body affiliated thereto, in the Transvaal to the Commission for Immigration and Asiatic Affairs, Pretoria, and in the Cape and Natal Provinces to the Principal Immigration Officers at Cape Town and Durban respectively and shall furnish such particulars as may be required by these officers. Such application must reach the officers mentioned on or before the 1st of October, 1928. Indians who are in possession of registration certificates or certificates of domicile or other documents authorizing them to enter, reside or remain in the Union or any Province thereof, obtained by fraudulent representations made by them or on their behalf, must apply for the Protection Certificate or authorization to retain the documents in their possession referred to in paragraph (b) hereof.

(b) If the Minister is satisfied that an applicant comes within the terms of this concession he will direct that a Protection Certificate be issued to the applicant in the prescribed form or authorize him to retain the documents illegally obtained. No application will be entertained from any individual whose case does not fall within the terms of this concession.

(c) The Protection Certificate or the documents he has been authorized to retain under paragraph (b) above will preserve to the holder all the rights enjoyed by him at the date of the commencement of Act 37 of 1927, viz., 5th July, 1927, and the holder will be regarded as having entered the Province concerned in terms of Section 25 of Act No. 22 of 1913, but if he has not already brought his wife and/or children to the Union, such wife and/or children will not be admitted.

(d) An Indian whose entry into the Union or any Province thereof was illegally made, and who, after the 1st November, 1928, is not in possession of a Protection Certificate or who has not been authorized to retain his documents in terms of paragraph (b) above will be dealt with in accordance with the law irrespective of the date of his entry.

(e) The Minister reserves the right to apply the provisions of the Immigration Law in the case of an Indian who illicitly entered the Union prior to the 5th July, 1924, and who has after that date been convicted of a deport. able offence.

You are authorized to publish this letter if you so desire.

I have the honour to be
Sir,
Your obedient servant,
C. S. Schmidt
Secretary for the Interior

P. K. Desai Esq.
Honorary General Secretary, South African Indian Congress
P.O. Box 5339, Johannesburg

Letter from V. S. Srinivasa Sastri to D. F. Malan

Mount Nelson Hotel,
Cape Town,
May 14, 1928

Dear Dr. Malan,

At my interview with you the day before yesterday I brought to your notice the strong desire on the part of the Transvaal Indian community that the 1914 Line should be drawn in the operation of the Condonation Scheme. I ask leave again to commend the idea to you and to remind you that it has the support besides of two such persons as Mr. Gandhi and Mr. Patrick Duncan.

In addition, my countrymen would like to be assured on three subsidiary points. I trust if it be not inconvenient to you, you will enable me in your reply to say that I have your authority in giving them the assurances:

1. No Indian who has once been condoned in the past for fraudulent or illegal entry will be required to apply on this occasion for condonation. His right to introduce his family will not be in jeopardy.

2. The minor sons of the men now to be condoned will be allowed to obtain registration certificates in the ordinary way.

3. In case the Protection Certificate is found in future defective in law or inadequate to preserve the rights of the holder you or your Successor will take such steps as may be necessary, legislative or other, to make it fully efficacious.
In your reply I beg you will not be guided in the least by the loose language which I have used, but will pay attention to the substance of my request.

Yours sincerely,
V. S. Srinivasa Sastri

The Honourable Dr. D. F. Malan, M.L.A.
Minister of the Interior, Cape Town

LETTER FROM D. F. MALAN TO V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI

Union of South Africa, Department of the Interior,
Cape Town,
May 16, 1928

Dear Mr. Sastri,

With reference to your letter of the 14th instant on the subject of the Condonation Scheme, I have given careful consideration to the points you have raised and have to advise you as follows:

1. 1914 Line— I regret that I am unable to accede to the wish of the Indian community. There is nothing in the Smuts-Gandhi Agreement to suggest that all illegal and fraudulent entries to the date of that Agreement were condoned, and there is no justification for the proposed “1914 Line.”

2. Previous Condonations— I agree that an Indian whose illegal or fraudulent entry has been condoned under any earlier condonation scheme need not apply for condonation under the new scheme provided he is the rightful holder of a document attesting to such condonation.

3. Registration of Minor Sons of Condonees.— Such minor sons who have been permitted to enter the Transvaal will be allowed to obtain registration certificates in the ordinary way.

4. Amending Legislation—My advice is to the effect that the proposed form of Condonation Permit will protect the rights of the holders in terms of the Condonation Scheme but should it be found that the permit does not safeguard the rights of the holder, I am quite prepared to introduce amending legislation to make the permit efficacious.

Yours sincerely,

D. F. Malan

The Right Honourable V. S. Srinivasa Sastri
Agent to the Government of India, Pretoria
[III. FORM OF CONDONATION PERMIT]

UNION OF SOUTH AFRICA, IMMIGRATION AND ASIATIC AFFAIRS DEPARTMENT

Immigrants Regulation Act No. 22 of 1913 as amended by Act No. 37 of 1927

Subject to the conditions and requirements stated hereunder, the illegal entry of .............................................................. into the Province of ............... ................................. is condoned and he is permitted to remain in the said Province.

CONDITIONS AND REQUIREMENTS

This permit is issued subject to the following conditions and requirements and to the provisions of the Immigrants Regulation Act No. 22 of 1913, as amended by Act No. 37 of 1927, and the Regulations thereunder.

(a) This permit is valid until it is cancelled by the Minister.

(b) This permit preserves to the holder all the rights and privileges enjoyed at the date of commencement of Act 37 of 1927, viz., 5th July, 1927, and the holder is regarded as having entered the Province of ............................................ in terms of Section 25 of Act 22 of 1913 except that he will not be permitted to claim the rights and privileges conferred by Section 5(f) and (g) of the said Act, that is to say that if his wife and/or children have not been admitted at date hereof he will not be permitted subsequently to introduce any of such persons.

(c) This permit entitles the holder to retain any registration certificate, certificate of domicile or other document authorizing him to enter, reside or remain in the Union or any Province thereof; provided that if this permit is cancelled by the Minister such document or documents shall be dealt with under the provisions of Section 10 of Act 22 of 1913 as amended by Section 5 of Act 37 of 1927. The documents referred to in this paragraph are as described below, viz.¹

(d) The Minister undertakes not to cancel this document unless the holder is subsequent to the 5th July, 1924, convicted of an offence as specified in Section 22 of Act 22 of 1913 as amended by Act 37 of 1927 and the holder shall forthwith be dealt with in terms of Section 10 of Act 22 of 1913, as amended by Section 5 of Act 37 of 1927.

¹ Not given in the source

Commissioner for Immigration and Asiatic Affairs

(Date Stamp)

I........................................................................................................... agree to the above conditions.

Holder’s signature.............................................................................

Witness............................................................................................

Place..................................................................................................Date

The conditions of this permit have been interpreted/read over by me to the holder in........................................................................................................

........................................................Signature of interpreter...........

Left thumb impression.........................................................Right thumb impression..........................

Young India, 9-8-1928 and 16-8-1928
1. LETTER TO KRISHNADAS

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
September 10, 1928

MY DEAR KRISHNADAS,

Your letter about Ram Binod gives me much relief. I am sending copies to Jamnalalji and others. You do not say anything about reported purchases by Ram Binod. Is there any truth in those allegations?

I received the Bengali edition of Seven Months.

Is it selling well? The English edition badly lacks an index. There are misprints too.

How are you keeping in health and how is Guruji?

The Ashram is undergoing many drastic changes of which perhaps Giriraj writes to you.

With love,

BAPU

From a microfilm: S.N. 13654

2. LETTER TO BALKRISHNA BHAVE

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
September 10, 1928

CHI. BALKRISHNA,

I have your letter. But I have never held that one who is actually a soldier—and not one in outward appearance should also be a jnani. But I would certainly say that anyone who was not a soldier, or could not become one, could never be a jnani. The same is true about being a brahmachari. We do not see in life that anyone who has mastered one of his senses is necessarily a man of knowledge, but all of us hold that immorality is impossible in a jnani. I do not

---

1 In reply to his letter dated August 30, 1928, wherein he had absolved Ram Binod of the charges of having misused funds placed at his disposal for khaddar work in Berar.

2 Seven Months with Mahatma Gandhi, by the addressee.

3 Man of knowledge think I need to be a jnani to be able to put my hands on the shoulders of girls when walking without being disturbed by the touch. A father with many daughters who has pure feelings towards them may still be sunk in ignorance in other respects. He may even have impure feelings towards other women. It is but natural that I should have fatherly feelings for the girls in the Ashram. I have cultivated this state of heart over the years. Though I have, thus, pure feelings towards them as towards most women, I am not in a position to claim further that I have always experienced such pure feelings towards every woman. My present condition is cer-tainly pure, but, so long as I have not become completely free from every kind of impure feeling, I cannot say that I feel no fear about the future too. I have never believed or felt myself to be a jnani. On the contrary, I realize my state of ignorance every day. I have never felt that I am committing the slightest wrong in putting my hands on the shoulders of girls, for I know that they are but daughters to me. That being so, it is also not true that I have done them harm by my conduct. I have felt that through such intimacy I have entered their heart and that in consequence they have become purer in their feelings towards men. I have also considered the matter from the point of view of the effect of my conduct on society. There is certainly a belief among Hindus that even a father should shrink from touching his daughter. This seems to me a wrong notion, an enemy of brahmacharya. That brahmacharya which enter-tains such fear is no brahmacharya. Rishyashringa’s brahmacharya is not our ideal. Nevertheless, for the past three weeks I have practically given up putting my hands on the shoulders of girls regarded as grown-up, for the doubt which occurred to you occurred also to other inmates of the Ashram. In such a matter I need not insist on my own point of view. Putting one’s hands on the shoulders of girls cannot be a matter of principle, and therefore as soon as the issue was raised I discussed the matter with everyone and gave up the practice. ‘The girls have felt a little hurt by this, but on the whole they are reconciled to it and in time will get completely reconciled. No one, of course, should imitate my practice. Anyone who has fatherly feelings towards girls will not shrink, when necessary, from touching them in a manner befitting a father and the world also will not censure him.

---

1 A character in the Ramayana. He had no acquaintance with women and was lured away by the first woman he met.
I do not understand what you write about . . . and why you are pained by the matter. You admit that you made a mistake in writing to him and advising him to follow my advice and in asking me to guide him. After that, where was the need for me to discuss the matter with you? Moreover, how could I believe that you could tell me anything more than what . . . would about his relation to his wife? Despite what you write and tell me, I believe that my advice to . . . was the right one. I have sent him there with the advice, and in the hope that, if he was sincere in the vow of brahmacharya which he had taken in regard to his wife, he would even now observe it. He has gone there to demonstrate that he is a brother and a friend of his wife. This is my view of the matter, which he has completely understood. If, instead of behaving as a brother, he acts like a husband, you may assume that his vow of brahmacharya in regard to his wife was insincere. It was only waiting for an opportunity to be broken. I suppose you have not overlooked the fact that he was never free from impure feelings towards other women. If . . . still writes to you about himself, I suggest that you should come and see me in the matter. I had suggested this course to you even earlier. I think it best that you should give up the attempt to guide . . . independently. If you do not understand what I have said in this letter, ask me again. You should have no doubt at all, I have none, about the rightness of my advice to . . . If you have any, however, or feel any doubt later, ask me again and again.

I very much liked your caution regarding the common kitchen. Our ideal of the Ashram is that even visitors should observe brahmacharya while they stay in it. This rule is made categorical in the new set of rules. That has naturally added to the number of those taking their meals in the common kitchen. How can we say that even those who take the vow of brahmacharya are not brahmacharis of their own will? I, however, believe your statement that many have joined the common kitchen out of their respect for me. The kitchen has led to a new idea during the past few days. There is no suggestion that it should be abandoned, but a proposal is being discussed whether those who cannot sincerely be its members and cannot whole-heartedly adopt its other implications should not leave the Ashram.

I shall await your letter regarding the effect of the use of linseed oil. How do you obtain fresh linseed oil? Do you obtain a day’s or a month’s requirement, at a time? Do you get oil pressed by an indigenous or an English mill? If it is oil pressed in an indigenous mill and if you know the process through which the seed is passed before it is pressed, please let me know. If you do not know this, get the information and let me have it.

1 Name omitted

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 801. Courtesy: Balkrishna Bhave

3. SPEECH ON BIRTH CENTENARY OF TOLSTOY

September 10, 1928

My present state of mind does not at all permit me to join in celebrating any day or festival. Some time ago a reader of Navajivan or Young India asked me a question: “You have stated, writing about shraddha, that the right way of performing the shraddha of our elders, on their death-anniversary day, is to recall their virtues and make them our own. May I ask you, therefore, how you observe the shraddha days of your elders?” I used to observe these days when I was young, but I don’t mind telling you that now I do not even remember the dates on which they fall. I do not recall to have observed any such day during the past many years. Such is my unhappy state of mind, or rather, you may say, my charming or, as some friends believe, profound, ignorance. I believe it is enough if we fix our attention every minute of the day on the task in hand, think about it and do it as methodically as we can. We thereby celebrate the death anniversary of our elders as also the memory of men like Tolstoy. If Dr. Hariprasad had not drawn me into the net, it is quite likely that I would have arranged no celebration in the Ashram on this day, the 10th; it is even likely that I would have forgotten the day altogether. I had letters three months ago from Aylmer Maude and others engaged in collecting Tolstoy’s writings, requesting me to send an article on the occasion of this centenary celebration and to draw the country’s attention to this date. You must have seen an abstract of Aylmer Maude’s letter, or perhaps the whole of it, published in Young

1 The speech was delivered at a meeting held in the Ashram under the auspices of the Ahmedabad Youth Association. An English version of the speech appeared in Young India, 20-9-1928.

India.1 Afterwards I forgot all about this matter. This is an auspicious occasion for me, but I would not have felt sorry if I had discovered that I had forgotten it. All the same, I welcome the opportunity which members of the Youth Association have offered of celebrating this day in the Ashram.

I wish I could say that, like Dattatreya, I had accepted many persons in this world as my gurus, but I am not in that position. I have said, on the contrary, that I am still in search of a guru in religious matters. It is my belief, which grows stronger day by day, that one must have especial fitness to find a guru. A guru comes unsought to him who has it. I lack such fitness. I have described Gokhale as my political guru. He had satisfied all my expectations of a guru in that field. I never doubted or questioned the propriety of his views or instructions. I cannot say that of anyone as a guru in religious matters.

And yet, I would say that three men have had a very great influence on my life. Among them I give the first place to the poet Rajchandra, the second to Tolstoy and the third to Ruskin. If I had to choose between Tolstoy and Ruskin and if I knew more about the lives of both, I would not know to whom to give preference. At present, however, I give the place to Tolstoy. I have not read as much of Tolstoy’s life as many others may have, and in fact I have not read very much of his writings either. Among his works the one which has had the greatest effect on me is The Kingdom of God Is within You. The title means that God’s Kingdom is in our heart, that if we search for it out-side we shall find it nowhere. I read the book forty years ago. At that time, I was sceptical about many things and sometimes entertained atheistic ideas. When I went to England, I was a votary of violence, I had faith in it and none in non-violence. After I read this book, that lack of faith in non-violence vanished. Later I read some of his other books, but I cannot describe what effect they had on me. I can only say what effect his life as a whole had on me.

I attach importance to two things in his life. He did what he preached. His simplicity was extraordinary; it was not merely outward; outward simplicity of course he had. Though he was born in an aristocratic family and had all the good things of life to enjoy, had at his disposal all that wealth and possessions could give a man, he changed the direction of his life’s voyage in the prime of youth. Though he had enjoyed all the pleasures and tasted all the sweetness which life can offer, the moment he realized the futility of that way of life he turned his back on it, and he remained firm in his new convictions till the end of his life. I have, therefore, stated in some message I have sent that Tolstoy was the very embodiment of truth in this age. He strove uncompromisingly to follow truth as he saw it, making no attempt to conceal or dilute what he believed to be the truth. He stated what he felt to be the truth without caring whether it would hurt or please the people or whether it would be welcome to the mighty emperor. Tolstoy was a great advocate of non-violence in his age. I know of no author in the West who has written as much and as effectively for the cause of non-violence as Tolstoy has done. I may go even further and say that I know no one in India or elsewhere who has had as profound an understanding of the nature of non-violence as Tolstoy had and who has tried to follow it as sincerely as he did.

---

1 Vide “Tolstoy Centenary”, 1-3-1928

I feel unhappy about this state of affairs, I do not like it. India is karmabhumi\(^1\). The sages and seers of this country have made the biggest discoveries in the sphere of non-violence. But we cannot live on inherited wealth. If we do not continue to add to it, we would be eating it away. The late Justice Ranade has cautioned us against this. We may complacently quote the Vedas and Jain literature and talk profound things, or propound great principles and strike the world dumb, but people will not believe in our sincerity. Hence Ranade pointed it out as our duty that we should add to our inheritance. We should compare it with the writings of other religious thinkers and if, as a result of such comparison, we discover anything new or find new light shed on a subject, we should not reject it. We have, however, failed to do this. Our religious heads are always one-sided in their thinking. There is no harmony between their words and deeds. We do not have among us men who, like Tolstoy, would speak out the plain truth irrespective of whether or not that would please the people or the society in which they work. Such is the pitiable condition of this our land of non-violence. Our non-violence is an unworthy thing. We see its utmost limit in refraining somehow from destroying bugs, mosquitoes and fleas, or from killing birds and animals. We do not care if these creatures suffer, nor even if we partly contribute to their suffering. On the contrary, we think it a heinous sin if anyone releases or helps in releasing a creature that suffers. I have already written and explained that this is not non-violence, and I take this occasion, when I am speaking about Tolstoy, to repeat that that is not the meaning of non-violence. Non-violence means an ocean of compassion, it means shedding from us every trace of ill-will for others. It does not mean abjectness or timidity, or fleeing in fear. It means, on the contrary, firmness of mind and courage, a resolute spirit.

\(^1\) Land of duty, contrasted with bhogabhumi, land of enjoyment

We do not see this non-violence in the educated classes in India. For them Tolstoy’s life should be a source of inspiration. He strove hard to put into practice what he believed in, and never turned back from his chosen path. I do not believe that he did not find that stick'. He himself said, of course, that he had failed to discover it, but that was his humility. I do not agree with his critics that he did not find that stick. I might perhaps agree if anyone asserted that he did not fully act upon the principle of non-violence of which he had had a glimpse. But, then, has there been anyone in this world who could act upon the principle of non-violence fully while he lived? I believe it impossible for one living in this body to observe non-violence to perfection. While the body endures, some degree of egotism is inescapable. We retain the body only so long as egotism persists. Bodily life, therefore, necessarily involves violence. Tolstoy himself said that anyone who believed that he had realized his ideal would be lost. From the moment he believed that, his fall would begin. The further we travel towards an ideal the further it recedes. As we advance in its search, we realize that we have one step after another to climb. No one can climb all the steps in one leap. This view does not imply cravenness of spirit or pessimism but certainly there is humility in it. Hence our sages and seers said that the state of moksha meant utter emptiness. He who aspires after moksha must develop a state of such emptiness. One cannot attain this without God’s grace. That state of emptiness can only remain an ideal as long as one lives in this body. The moment Tolstoy saw this truth clearly, grasped it with his intellect and started on his journey towards the ideal, he had found the green stick. He could not describe it, but could have only said that he had found it. If, however, he had in fact said that he had found it, progress in life would have been over for him.

The seeming contradictions in Tolstoy’s life are no blot on him or sign of his failure. They signify the failure of the observer. Emerson has said that a foolish consistency is the hobgoblin of little minds.

---

1 In his introductory remarks, Dr. Hariprasad had said that Tolstoy had failed to find the green stick with many virtues which his brother had advised him to discover.
We would be utterly lost if we tried to live and show that there was no contradiction in our lives. In trying to live in that manner, we would have to remember what we did yesterday and then harmonize our actions today with that; in trying to preserve such forced harmony, we would have to resort to untruth. The best way is to follow the truth as one sees it at the moment. If we are progressing from day to day, why should we worry if others see contradictions in us? In truth, what looks like contradiction is not contradiction, but progress. And so, what seems to be contradiction in Tolstoy’s life is really not contradiction, but only an illusion in our minds. Only the man himself knows how much he struggles in the depth of his heart or what victories he wins in the war between Rama and Ravana. The spectator certainly cannot know that. If the person slips ever so little, the world will think that there was nothing in him; this, of course, is for the best. One should not condemn the world on that account and so the saints have said that we should rejoice when the world speaks ill of us, but tremble with fear when it praises us. The world cannot act otherwise than it does; it must censure where it sees evil. But, whenever we examine the life of a great man, we should bear in mind what I have explained. God is witness to the battles he may have fought in his heart and the victories he may have won. These are the only evidence of his failures and successes.

By saying this, I do not wish to suggest that you should cover up your weaknesses, or, when they are as big as hills, think that they are as small as grains of sand. What I have said is in regard to other people. We should look upon others’ weaknesses, huge as the Himalayas, to be as small as mustard seeds and ours, as small as mustard seeds, to be as big as the Himalayas. When we become aware of the slightest lapse on our part or seem to have become guilty of untruth, intentionally or otherwise, we should feel as if we were burning, as if we were caught in flames. A snake bite or a scorpion sting is of little consequence; you will find many who can cure them. Is there anyone, however, who can cure us of the sting of untruth or violence? God alone can do that, and He will do it only if we strive in earnest. Hence, we should be vigilant against our weaknesses and magnify them to the utmost, so that, when the world censures us, we should not think that people were mean-minded and exaggerated our faults. If anyone pointed out a weakness in Tolstoy, though there could hardly be an occasion for anyone to do so for he was pitiless in his self-examination, he would magnify that weakness to fearful proportions. He would have seen his lapse and atoned for it in the manner he thought most appropriate before anyone had pointed it out to him. This is a sign of goodness, and I think, therefore, that he had found that stick.

Tolstoy drew people’s attention to another thing through his writings and his life, and that is the idea of “bread labour”. It was not his own discovery. Another author had mentioned it in a Russian Miscellany; Tolstoy made his name known to the world and also put before his idea. The cause of the inequalities we see in the world, of the contrasts of wealth and poverty, lies in the fact that we have forgotten the law of life. That law is the law of “bread labour”. On the authority of Chapter III of the Gita, I call it yajna. The Gita says that he who eats without performing yajna is a thief and sinner. Tolstoy has said the same thing. We should not distort the meaning of “bread labour” and forget the real idea. Its simple meaning is that he has no right to eat who does not bend his body and work. If every one of us did bodily labour to earn his food, we would not see the poverty which we find in the world. One idler is the cause of two persons starving, for his work has to be done by someone else. Tolstoy said that people came forward for philanthropic service, spent money for the purpose and earned titles as reward for their service, but he said it would be enough if, instead of all this, they did a little physical work and got off the backs of others. That is true indeed. In that lies humility. To do philanthropic service but refuse to give up one’s luxuries is to act in the way described by Akha Bhagat, “Stealing an anvil and gifting a needle”. Can we hope thereby to go up in a viman to heaven?

It is not that others have not said what Tolstoy said, but there was magic in Tolstoy’s language, for he acted upon what he preached. He who was accustomed to the comforts of wealth started doing physical labour. He used to work on the farm or do other labour for eight hours a day. That does not mean that he gave up literary work. In fact, after he started doing physical labour his literary work came to have greater life in it. It was during spare time in this period of yajna that he wrote what he described as his most important work, What Is Art? Physical labour did not tell upon his health, and he believed that it sharpened his intellect. Students of his works will bear testimony that he was right.

If we wish to benefit from Tolstoy’s life, we should learn these

---

Footnote: 1 Flying machine
three things from it. I am addressing members of a youth association, and I wish to remind them that they have to choose between two paths in life: one of self-indulgence and the other of self-restraint. If you think that Tolstoy lived and died well, you will see that there is only one right path in life for all, especially for the young—and that is the path of self-control. That is particularly true in India. Swaraj is not something to be won from the Government. If you examine the causes of our degradation, you will see that we are more responsible for it than the Government. You will then see that the key to swaraj is in our hands, and not in England nor in Simla nor in Delhi. It is in your pocket and mine. Our lethargy is responsible for the delay in remedying the degradation and listlessness of our society. If we overcome that, there is no power on earth which can prevent us from raising ourselves and securing swaraj. We ourselves choose to lie helpless on the path and refuse to lift ourselves out of that condition. I should like to tell the members of the Youth Association that this is a golden time for them, or from another point of view, a hard time, a time of trial, if I put it in a third way. It is not enough that they pass university examinations and secure degrees. They will have secured real degrees only when they pass the examination of life and stand the test of hardships and difficulties. This is a period of transition, a golden time for you. You have two paths before you: one leading to the north and another to the south, one to the east and another to the west. You have to choose between the two. You must consider which path you will choose. All kinds of winds—poisonous winds, in my view—are blowing into the country from the West. There are, of course, some beautiful currents too, like Tolstoy’s life. But these do not blow with every ship that arrives! You may say ‘with every ship’ or ‘every day’, for every day a ship arrives in the Bombay or Calcutta port. Along with other foreign goods, foreign literature too arrives. Its ideas intoxicate people and draw them to the path of self-indulgence. I have no doubt about that. Do not be vain and believe that your thoughts, or what in your immaturity you have read in books and understood from them, are the only truth, that what is old is barbarous and uncivilized and that truth lies only in things newly discovered. If you suffer from such vanity, I don’t think you will bring credit to your Association. If you have still not fulfilled my hope that you have learnt humility, culture, a sense of propriety and purity from Sarala Devi, do so in future. Do not be puffed up because you have been praised for some good things you have done. Run away from praise, and don’t think that you have done much. If you collected money for Bardoli, worked hard and sweated for the cause, if a few of you went to jail for it, I ask you, as a man of experience, ‘Is it much that you have done?’ Others may say that you have, but you should not rest satisfied with what you have done. You have to purify your inner life, and it is from your conscience that you have to obtain a real certificate. Truly speaking our atman too is generally asleep. It was said by Tilak Maharaj that in our languages we have no word corresponding to ‘conscience’. We do not believe that everyone has a conscience; in the West they do. What conscience can an adulterous or dissolute man have? Tilak Maharaj, therefore, rejected the idea of conscience. Our seers and sages of old said that one must have an inner ear to hear the inner voice, that one must have the inner eye, and must cultivate self-control to acquire these. Hence, in Patanjali’s treatise on yoga the first step prescribed for the student of yoga, for one aspiring after self-realization, is the observance of the disciplines of yama-niyama. There is no path but that of self-control for you or me or others. Tolstoy showed this by leading a long life of self-control. I wish and pray to God that we should be able to see this as clearly as daylight, and should leave this meeting with a resolution that we shall learn the lesson of self-control from Tolstoy’s life.

Let us resolve that we will never give up the pursuit of truth. To follow truth, the only right path in this world is that of non-violence. Non-violence means an ocean of love, whose vastness no one has ever been able to measure. If it fills us we would be so large-hearted that we would have room in it for the whole world. I know this is difficult to achieve, but not impossible. Thus we heard the poet say, in the prayer with which we commenced, that he would bow his head only to him who was free from attachment and aversion, who had overcome all desires and who was the perfect embodiment of non-violence, that is, love, whether he was named Shanker or Vishnu or Brahma or Indra or whether he was Buddha or Siddha? Such non-violence is not limited to refraining from killing disabled creatures. It may be dharma not to kill them, but love goes infinitely further than that. What does it profit a person that he saves the lives of disabled creatures, if he has had no vision of such love? In God’s court, his work will have little value.

---

1 Rules of moral and ethical discipline
2 One who has attained spiritual realization
The third thing is bread labour—yajna. We earn the right to eat only by putting the body to hard work, by doing physical labour. Yajna means any work done for the service of others. It is not enough that we do physical labour; we should live only in order that we may serve others, and not that we may run after immoral and worldly pleasures. If a young man who has trained his body with rigorous exercise spends eight hours every day in such exercise, he is not doing ‘bread labour’. I do not belittle your doing exercise and training your body; but such exercise does not constitute the yajna which Tolstoy has advised and which is described in Chapter III of the Gita. He who believes that this life is for yajna, for service, will day by day give up running after pleasures. True human effort consists in striving to realize this ideal. It does not matter if no human being has succeeded in doing that to perfection; let the ideal ever remain distant from us. We should walk and break stones, as Farhad did for Shirin, our Shirin being the ideal of non-violence. This certainly holds our little Swaraj, but it holds everything else too.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 16-9-1928

4. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

[After September 10, 1928]

It will do if you send the Shraddhanand money to the Secretary, Clo The Hindustan Times, Delhi.

I have not got any letter from Bhai Purushottam.

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshide

1 In reply to his letter dated September 10
5. LETTER TO PADMAJA NAIDU

SABARMATI,
September 11, 1928

MY DEAR PADMAJA,

I was so happy to have Mother with me for a few hours before [her] sailing for her great mission. Naturally we talked a lot about you. I see you are now allowed to move about. If doctors permit you it would be a good thing for you to accept Mrs. Ambalal’s invitation to pass some time with her. Ahmedabad has a dry climate. And if you came and were strong enough to do some work there is enough here to occupy you. I did not at all like the idea of your working on the permanent staff of The Hindu. You will not do the work. It was good and brave of you to have let Mother go to America. And having let her go, you must make up your mind not to be unwell at all.

With love,

M.K.G.

SHRIMATI PADMAJA NAIDU
TUBERCULAR SANATORIUM
AROGYAVARAM
CHITTOOR DIST.

From the original: Padmaja Naidu Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

6. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHANA CHANDIWALA

September 12, 1928

CHI. BRIKISHORE
d.

I have your letter. If your nephew has grown so overbearing it will do him good if one just has nothing to do with him. If you think it necessary, let him be paid a monthly allowance.

1 Sarojini Naidu left for the United States of America on September 12, 1928, on a propaganda mission. For details vide “Notes” sub-title “Foreign Propaganda And Sarojini Devi”, 13-9-1928 and “My Notes” sub-title Sarojini Devi”, 16-9-1928

2 A slip for “Brajkisan” as this letter is included among Brijkrishna Chandiwalas’s original letters Build up your body. For this, the mind too has to be healthy!

*Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2359

7. MY ATTITUDE TOWARDS WAR

Rev. B. de Ligt has written in a French journal called Evolution a long open letter to me. He has favoured me with a translation of it. The open letter strongly criticizes my participation in the Boer War¹ and then the Great War² of 1914 and invites me to explain my conduct in the light of ahimsa. Other friends too have put the same question. I have attempted to give the explanation more than once in these columns.

There is no defence for my conduct weighed only in the scales of ahimsa. I draw no distinction between those who wield the weapons of destruction and those who do red-cross work. Both participate in war and advance its cause. Both are guilty of the crime of war. But even after introspection during all these years, I feel that in the circumstances in which I found myself I was bound to adopt the course I did both during the Boer War and the Great European War and for that matter the so-called Zulu “Rebellion”³ of Natal in 1906.

Life is governed by a multitude of forces. It would be smooth sailing, if one could determine the course of one’s actions only by one general principle whose application at a given moment was too obvious to need even a moment’s reflection. But I cannot recall a single act which could be so easily determined.

Being a confirmed war resister I have never given myself training in the use of destructive weapons in spite of opportunities to take such training. It was perhaps thus that I escaped direct destruction of human life. But so long as I lived under a system of Government...
based on force and voluntarily partook of the many facilities and privileges it created for me, I was bound to help that Government to the extent of my ability when it was engaged in a war unless I non-co-operated with that Government and renounced to the utmost of my capacity the privileges it offered me.

Let me take an illustration. I am a member of an institution which holds a few acres of land whose crops are in imminent peril from monkeys. I believe in the sacredness of all life and hence I regard it as a breach of ahimsa to inflict any injury on the monkeys. But I do not hesitate to instigate and direct an attack on the monkeys in order to save the crops. I would like to avoid this evil. I can avoid it by leaving or breaking up the institution. I do not do so because I do not expect to be able to find a society where there will be no agriculture and therefore no destruction of some life. In fear and trembling, in humility and penance, I therefore participate in the injury inflicted on the monkeys, hoping some day to find a way out. Even so did I participate in the three acts of war. I could not, it would be madness for me to, sever my connection with the society to which I belong. And on those three occasions I had no thought of non-co-operating with the British Government. My position regarding that Government is totally different today and hence I should not voluntarily participate in its wars and I should risk imprisonment and even the gallows if I was forced to take up arms or otherwise take part in its military operations.

But that still does not solve the riddle. If there was a national Government, whilst I should not take any direct part in any war, I can conceive occasions when it would be my duty to vote for the military training of those who wish to take it. For I know that all its members do not believe in non-violence to the extent I do. It is not possible to make a person or a society non-violent by compulsion.

Non-violence works in a most mysterious manner. Often a man’s actions defy analysis in terms of non-violence; equally often his actions may wear the appearance of violence when he is absolutely non-violent in the highest sense of the term and is subsequently found so to be. All I can then claim for my conduct is that it was, in the instances cited, actuated in the interests of non-violence. There was no thought of national or other interest. I do not believe in the promotion of national or any other interest at the sacrifice of some other interest.

I may not carry my argument any further. Language at best is but a poor vehicle for expressing one’s thoughts in full. For me, non-violence is not a mere philosophical principle. It is the rule and the breath of my life. I know I fail often, sometimes consciously, more often unconsciously. It is a matter not of the intellect but of the heart. True guidance comes by constant waiting upon God, by utmost humility, self-abnegation, by being ever ready to sacrifice one’s self. Its practice requires fearlessness and courage of the highest order. I am painfully aware of my failings.

But the Light within me is steady and clear. There is no escape for any of us save through truth and non-violence. I know that war is wrong, is an unmitigated evil. I know too that it has got to go. I firmly believe that freedom won through bloodshed or fraud is no freedom. Would that all the acts alleged against me were found to be wholly indefensible rather than that by any act of mine non-violence was held to be compromised or that I was ever thought to be in favour of violence or untruth in any shape or form. Not violence, not untruth, but non-violence, Truth, is the law of our being.

Young India, 13-9-1928

8. CONDONATION IN SOUTH AFRICA

South Africa Indian Congress sends me the following cable:

Would-be condonees who were unable to leave India by the last boat may cable Comasia (telegraphic address of Commissioner of Asiatics), Pretoria, intention of applying for condonation giving registration domicile or identity certificate number before thirtieth September. Please give wide newspaper publicity throughout India.

This cable was sent to the Press as soon as it was received. Only those who are covered by the scheme published in these columns¹ may cable the particulars asked. I would strongly dissuade others’ from spending good money uselessly.

Young India, 13-9-1928

¹ Vide “Bardoli Settlement”, 6-8-1928
9. NOTES

FOREIGN PROPAGANDA AND SAROJINI DEVI

I am no believer in foreign propaganda as it is commonly understood, i.e., in the sense of establishing an agency or even sending peripatetic deputations. But the foreign propaganda that Sarojini Devi would carry on during her tour in the West would be the propaganda that would tell more than anything that could be done by an established agency whose very existence would be unknown to the indifferent and would be ignored by those whose opinion would matter to us. Not so India’s Nightingale. She is known to the West. She would compel a hearing wherever she goes. She adds to her great eloquence and greater poetry a delicate sense of the true diplomacy that knows what to say and when to say it and that knows how to say the truth without hurting. We have every reason to expect much from her mission to the West. With the instinct of a gentlewoman she has gone with the resolution not to enter upon a direct refutation of Miss Mayo’s insolent libel. Her presence and her exposition of what India is and means to her would be a complete answer to all the untruth that has been dinned into the ready ears of the American public by agencies whose one aim is to belittle India and all that is Indian.

RASHTRIYA STRI SABHA AND KHADI

For years past this Sabha has been doing valuable propaganda for khadi among the fashionable citizens of Bombay and elsewhere through introducing artistic designs in khadi. Through this work the Sabha is supporting in the city of Bombay over 250 needy girls of all classes. It has five centres through which the work is distributed. Naturally these girls have to be paid regularly from month to month. Under the cash system insisted upon by the All-India Spinners’ Association the Sabha is obliged to pay cash for all the khadi it buys. Experience has shown the Sabha that it must insist upon cash payment if it has to pay cash for work done and khadi bought. Moreover, all the sisters who are engaged in organizing this work are volunteers. It is therefore but right that they should expect khadi lovers who

1 The reference is to Mother India.
2 This was followed by a note entitled “First Offshoot of Bardoli”, not reproduced here, as it had already appeared in Navajivan, 9-9-1928; vide “Letter to C. F. Andrews”, 22-4-1928
3 A Gujarati article on the same subject appeared in Navajivan, 16-9-1928.
patronize their labours to pay cash for the orders they send. Shrimati Perinbai Captain has addressed on behalf of the Sabha a circular letter in which she commends to the buyers of the articles prepared by the Sabha the necessity for cash payment. There is no doubt that the Sabha deserves encouragement for the philanthropic and useful service it is rendering. Cash payment is the least encouragement that the Sabha has the right to expect. Those who buy these articles help not only the poorest among the villagers but also the needy girls of our cities.

Young India, 13-9-1928

10. LETTER TO C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
September 14, 1928

MY DEAR C. R.,

I have your letter. I may not pay Rs. 60 for Keshu’s board and tuition. At the same time I admit that Mr. Cox’s terms are quite reasonable. Do please thank both Mr. Bjerrum and Mr. Cox. I am now making some other arrangements. I have not made up my mind what to do and Keshu is not here at present. When he returns from Rajkot, I shall know what to do.

What is this that is going on in the Mysore State about the Hindu-Muslim trouble? The Times\(^1\) has almost always sensational headlines and equally sensational reports utterly discrediting the State. Is it all truthful, or is it a plot against the State? Do you know anything about what is appearing in the Times?

Mahadev returns about the 20th. I hope you are both making steady progress.

From a photostat: S.N. 13522

---

\(^1\) The Times of India
11. LETTER TO N. PATNAIK

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
September 14, 1928

DEAR NIRANJAN BABU,

Here is my message:

“I hope that the tour of Orissa by Sir P. C. Ray and Satis Babu will bear, as it ought to bear, ample fruit. You should be able to sell out the bulk of the accumulated stock. Poor as the villagers of Orissa are, those who live in the cities are not so poor as not to be able to buy the khadi you have, if only they have the will and love for the poverty-stricken in the land.”

Yours sincerely,

SJT. NIRANJAN PATNAIK
SWARAJ ASHRAM, BERHAMPUR

From a microfilm: S.N. 13683

12. LETTER TO DR. S. C. BANERJEE

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
September 14, 1928

DEAR SURESH BABU,

I have your letter. This is what you said in the letter dated 7th August in answer to which I sent the telegram:

Herewith I am sending a copy of our Ashram report for 1927. We shall be much obliged if you can kindly give publicity to it in some issue of Young India with suitable comments.

It is this report that I sent for so as to enable me to deal with it in the pages of Young India as you desired. I am still without that report.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm: S.N. 13684

13. LETTER TO K. S. SUBRAMANIAM

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
September 14, 1928

MY DEAR SUBRAMANIAM,

I have gone through the circular letter\(^1\). You will find in the enclosed the additions I have made.

With reference to the figures as to spinners, I think that it is necessary to have the census taken from year to year and as accurately as possible.

Yours sincerely,

Enclosure: 1

Sjt. K. S. Subramiam
A.I.S.A., Ahmedabad

[ENCLOSURE]

ADDITIONS TO THE CIRCULAR LETTER DATED JUNE 22, 1928

No. 28. Add after “Progress made”: also information as to whether spinning is done on wheels or taklis, and what is done with the yarn spun.

To have the following as Item No. 32:
The average condition of spinners, weavers, carders, giving how many days in the year they work at the rate of how many hours, their other occupation if any, and what is the average earning from their other occupation, when they are not spinning, or weaving or carding.

From a microfilm: S.N. 13686

14. LETTER TO KIRBY PAGE

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
September 14, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter with a translation copy of Rev. B. de Ligt’s open letter. The writer sent it himself two weeks before your letter was received. He also wanted me to send my reply for his journal. But I thought that I would reach a wider circle of readers, that is, those who are in the habit of reading my writings, if I attempted a brief reply in the pages of Young India. This, therefore, I have done. It was the best I could do in the time at my disposal. You may of course copy it for your paper. I send you a marked copy of Young India containing my reply.

\(^1\) Of the All-India Spinners’ Association

Yours sincerely,

KIRBY PAGE, ESQ.

“The World Tomorrow”

52 Vanderbilt Avenue, New York City

From a photostat: S.N. 14368

15. LETTER TO B. DE LIGT

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

September 14, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have now attempted a reply in the pages of Young India of which I send you a marked copy. You may of course translate it in Evolution. If the reply does not deal with any point you have raised, you will please not hesitate to tell me so.

Yours sincerely,

REV. B. DE LIGT

ONEX, GENEVA

From a photostat: S.N. 14395

16. LETTER TO DR. M. A. ANSARI

September 15, 1928

DEAR DR. ANSARI,

This will be presented to you by Mr. Mahomed Khan who was with me in South Africa. He is at present on the Railways. He has been ailing for some years. He once wanted a note to Hakim Saheb which I gave him. He tells me that Hakim Saheb’s treatment gave him relief for the time being. He has again a relapse. He now wants a note to 1 Vide “My Attitude towards War”, 13-9-1928.

---

you, which I gladly give. I know you will give him what advice is possible.

Yours sincerely,

DR. M. A. ANSARI
1 DARYAGUNJ, DELHI

From a photostat: S.N. 13524

17. AHMEDABAD AND ITS DEAF AND DUMB

If, although I live near Ahmedabad, I hardly write anything about it, it is not because of my unwillingness but because of my inability to do so. I have often felt the urge to participate in the life of this city, but it has subsided every time. Friends suggested that I should enter the municipality and work in it. I should certainly like to, but I never had the courage to try. Let no resident of Ahmedabad believe that now, on the brink of death, I have acquired that courage. I have mentioned this only in order to admit that I have still to repay the debt that I owe to Ahmedabad.

Shri Pranshankar Desai is running a school for the deaf and dumb in Ahmedabad. I have been acquainted with it since 1915, i.e., ever since I came to live here. From that very time I have believed that such institutions should be located outside the city. This school will now move outside the city. In accordance with the wishes of Sheth Mangaldas, its foundation-stone was laid by me last week. In my opinion, we are late by twenty years. The school was started twenty years ago. However, the choice of its site did not lie with Shri Pranshankar. It rested with the ruling deity of Ahmedabad. Speaking in today's terminology, it depended on the temper of the city. Just as those with a religious sentiment believe that the body has a soul, similarly they may also attribute a soul to the physical form of the city too, and regard it as its ruling deity. As the ruling deity of Ahmedabad is miserly, he has huddled its residents together within a small area, has kept them in insanitary surroundings and thereby polluted its air. That deity alone knows how suffocated he must feel by keeping these human beings in misery! In his essay on hygiene, Dr. Hariprasad has stated that amongst the cities of India, Ahmedabad occupies the first place so far as the death rate or, in other words, so far as insanitation is concerned.

1 Vide “Speech at Deaf and Dumb School, Ahmedabad”, 7-9-1928.

If the wealthy and the educated wish, they can change the face of Ahmedabad. The biggest Jain firm is in Ahmedabad. It is said that the firm of Anandji Kalyanji is wealthier than any other firm in the world which can be described as a religious body. Ahmedabad is the capital of Gujarat and it is also the headquarters of the Jains. It claims a monopoly of compassion for all living beings. However, it has still to learn real compassion. Looking after cattle in some manner in crowded localities is a narrow form of such compassion and its least expression. The latter should be as wide as the ocean and, as the life-sustaining oxygen spreads its fragrance from the ocean all the hours of the day, so should the oxygen of compassion do and give happiness, peace and good health to human beings and all other living creatures. However, it is not Jainism alone which enjoins the gift of health. The Vaishnavas claim no less that they, too, regard it as their duty, and Islam accords no less honour to it. There are followers of these faiths too in Ahmedabad. All of them share equally in Ahmedabad’s shame.

There is so much wealth in Ahmedabad that it could turn this capital of Gujarat of Gujarat which is famed for its beauty into physically and spiritually the healthiest place in India.

Nature has gifted Ahmedabad with such air and water that it could become a health resort. Its residents, however, pollute both these. The hospitals, temples, schools and orphanages of Ahmedabad should be removed to places outside the city. Its narrow lanes should be relieved of the congestion in them. There should be small open spaces in the city. We ought to have fragrance spreading all around in stead of the stink that now pervades the city.

This task is not beyond the capacity of Ahmedabad’s citizens. It does not require crores of rupees to be spent. Moreover, it has been the experience of all cities in the world which have become prosperous that the amount spent is recovered twice over. It is true, of course, that the expenditure must be incurred wisely, in a spirit of charity and with pure motives. What is true of human beings is also true of cities. Their freedom lies in their own hands. The people’s attitude and public opinion must change. In order to change them, leaders must make sacrifices. One person, Chamberlain, changed the face of Birmingham. Ahmedabad, too, needs a Chamberlain of its own. Or, as in France where the soldiers of the revolution fought without a leader, here too, if a Chamberlain does not come forward, cannot an organization like the Youth Association make sacrifices to purify the atmosphere in Ahmedabad and make its foul air fragrant?

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 16-9-1928

18. KHADI PROPAGANDA FUND

Shri Gopaldas Mathurawala has contributed Rs. 100 to this fund and while sending the amount he writes to say:

You may use this amount for the propagation of khadi or for any other purpose. In no circumstances need it be returned.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 16-9-1928

19. MY NOTES

SAROJINI DEVI

Sarojini Devi left the shores of India last Wednesday to proceed to the United States of America. Many hope that, by establishing agencies in Europe, America and other continents or by sending our representatives there from time to time, we can present a true picture of India, to the people of the West and thereby remove the false image of our country that is being projected there, but such hopes have always been disappointed. By adopting such a course, we would be misusing public funds and the time of persons whose services could be much better utilized at home. However, if anyone’s visit to the West can be worth while it would certainly be that of Sarojini Devi or the great poet Rabindranath Tagore. Sarojini Devi is well known in the West through her poems. She is gifted both as a poet and as an orator. She is also eminently tactful. She knows how to say the right thing at the right place and time. She has mastered the art of speaking the truth without hurting others. Wherever she goes, people are compelled to listen to her. She won the hearts of the Englishmen in South Africa by making full use of her powers there and, through her great success, smoothed the way for the delegation led by Sir Mohammed Habibullah. The task there was a difficult one. But, recognizing her own limitations and accepting them, she avoided going into legal intricacies and adhered to the main facts; she thereby accomplished her task with fine success and raised the prestige of India. She will accomplish something of a similar nature in the U.S.A. and other countries.
Her very presence there will act as a reply to the falsehoods spread by Miss Mayo. Her courage is as great as her other qualities. While going abroad she requires neither a co-worker to assist her nor a secretary.
She is fearless and goes wherever she wishes to. This fearlessness of hers is not only worth emulation by other women but it even puts men to shame. We can certainly hope that her Western tour will be fruitful.

Kaka’s Impatience

While sending me the prose-poem entitled “Yamunarani”, which appears in this issue over Kakasaheb’s signature, he writes to say:

Kakasaheb has become impatient to impart true education to Gujarat. If this was not the case, after having written in praise of Gangamaiya two years ago, and having postponed the praise of “Yamunarani” so far, why should he suddenly insist that it should be published in this very issue? Moreover, he has left me with no freedom to refuse his request, since he has declared his intention of sending Gujarati rendering of the Sanskrit verses directly to the Dress and so bound my hands. In acting in this way, Kakasaheb has presumed that I am as impatient as he for the education of Gujarat. He was entitled to do so. Shri Nagindas and Shri Punjabhai’s sacrifices have made us both impatient. To me, the Vidyapith does not mean only the structure of bricks on the west hanks of the Sabarmati, or the handful of men and women students who receive a literary education and training in crafts in it. It is the task of the Vidyapith to spread true education among the old men and women and the boys and girls in villages. True education means a knowledge of one’s true essence and conduct which befits such knowledge. It is Kakasaheb’s aim to make such education available even to those who are illiterate. Hence this article, which was written some time ago, finds a place in Nav-ajivan now. It is intended that lovers of the language and patriotic men and women would read it, understand it and persuade others to read it or explain it to them. The article is difficult for all readers to understand. The title itself is frightening. How many of us know the

1 The letter is not translated here.
Kalindi to be the river Jamuna? Only a few persons in the villages would know the Jamuna as the Yamuna. However, as with the passing of time the patriotic sentiment grows the people will be more eager to have darshan of the Ganga and the Jamuna. All cannot go there, but they will get pleasure in reading such articles which will bring the Ganga and the Jamuna to their doorsteps and give them the feeling of having actually seen the rivers. The reader would earn the same merit as by bathing in the Ganga, if he purifies himself by entering into the spirit of these articles, whereas those who live on the banks of the Ganga and pollute its waters every day may be evil-doers and be piling up sins on their heads instead of accumulating merit.

To anyone who reads these articles in the spirit suggested above my advice is that he should keep a map beside him while reading them. The Vidyapith is preparing a dictionary such as has never been attempted in the Gujarati language, so that such articles are easily understood. Till it is in the reader’s hands, he should somehow find the meanings of words and make up his own dictionary.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 16-9-1928

20. BLIND FAITH

It is the khadi cause that Shri Harjivan Kotak is serving on behalf of the Charkha Sangh in Srinagar, the capital of Kashmir. But the heart of a khadi worker certainly melts at the sight of misery wherever he sees it. Hence, when the pilgrims to Amarnath suffered hardships due to excessive rain, he sent me a telegram. when I asked for details, I received the following reply:¹

What a contrast between Amarnath and lorries! There was a time when pilgrims travelled on foot from Kanyakumari to Kashmir and then, after suffering many hardships, ascended Amarnath. Even in those days, there was danger to life. We have no figures about the number of people who in those days lost their dear lives while in quest of religious merit, as there were no figures about other things. That was a true pilgrimage.

¹ Sarth Jodanikosh

² This is not translated here. About 5,000 men, women and children, going on a pilgrimage to Amarnath, were caught in torrential rains which lasted a week and disrupted all communications.
Today, motor-lorries unload pilgrims at the foothills of Amarnath, just as they would unload goods and the pilgrims on their part regard it as a meritorious deed to travel in such comfort. The remaining distance has to be covered by foot or on horseback and this the pilgrims somehow manage to do. They would readily accept if anyone was prepared to carry them right up to their destination or go in an aeroplane if it would take them straight to the top of Amarnath.

Thus, human beings, while hankering after comforts, undergo hardships and even court death yielding to religious sentiments. This involves blind faith. Such faith craves for happiness but is prepared to undergo hardships, whereas pure, genuine faith finds happiness in undergoing physical suffering and hence it realizes that, while reaching Amarnath by aeroplane satisfies one’s curiosity, it cannot be called a pilgrimage. Those having genuine faith would go walking barefoot and would disregard thorns, heat or cold, the danger from tigers or wolves and even though they might not reach Amarnath, they would acquire the same merit. Although the four ways of travelling by plane, by car, by train or on foot are open to them, they would feel happy in choosing the fourth alternative. When people acquire such determination, their dharma would acquire an altogether new form. Then it would make no distinction between the pilgrimage to Amarnath and that to swaraj. They would regard it as a religious merit to suffer hardships while going to Amarnath and also regard it as such to be sent to the gallows for the sake of swaraj. Those who retreat do not know their dharma.

A servant of the people has before him the unlimited field of the people’s faith through which he can serve them. Vallabhbhai has discovered this. He taught the people that it was their dharma to offer non-violent resistance to the Government. The people were attracted by the word dharma; they truly found their dharma in satyagraha and they understood the true meaning of pilgrimage. True pilgrimage is within the heart, it consists in cheerfully accepting and enduring hardships.

The reader will see that I have not asked for help for relieving the suffering of the pilgrims to Amarnath and I have not even expressed sympathy for them. There is no possibility of any assistance reaching them; whatever little could be given would have been locally available. Those who have lost their lives are gone and those who have survived will be safe when they reach the foothills. The incident that took place at Amarnath is a common occurrence to those people who climb great mountain-peaks.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 16-9-1928

21. HOW TO CELEBRATE FESTIVALS

On the occasion of the festival of Paryushan two gentlemen from Bombay have sent me a bill of exchange worth Rs. 75, for being utilized in any good cause. This sum will be used for the benefit of our Antyaja brothers and sisters. While celebrating festivals, we generally waste money on ourselves, on indulging in pleasures, on good food and drink for ourselves and our friends. Instead of that, it is better to follow the practice adopted by these gentlemen and others mentioned in Navajivan. Our dharma as well as our wealth, our self-interest as well as the public good would be better served if the whole or part of the amount spent on pomp and feasts during deaths, marriages, births, etc., is saved and a half of this is given away for the service of the community. Many people are prevented from doing so only by fear of public opinion. It is to be hoped that those who are not afraid of the bogy of public opinion and have understood what I have said will follow the example mentioned above.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 16-9-1928

22. NOTE TO CHAND TYAGI

September 16 [1928]

It is better to die rather than ever to forsake truth.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 3271

---

1 As in the G.N. register.
23. TELEGRAM TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

ASHRAM, SABARMATI

September 17, 1928

VALLABHBHAI PATEL

HOTEL CECIL, SIMLA

LYALLPUR people say you have agreed preside if I consent. Have no irrevocable objection if you thank you can spare time and have inclination.

BAPU

Frog a photostat: S.N. 14863

24. TELEGRAM TO SECRETARY, PUNJAB POLITICAL CONFERENCE

ASHRAM, SABARMATI

September 18, 1928

SECRETARY

PUNJAB POLITICAL CONFERENCE

LYALLPUR

Your wire. Wired VALLABHBHAI who says he has neither inclination nor time preside. Am powerless under these circumstances.

GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 14864

25. LETTER TO SATIS DAS GUPTA

September 18, 1928

DEAR SATIS BABU,

I have your letters. I say nothing more, as I expect we shall meet on 25th.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1596

1 Over the Punjab Political Conference
2 Vide the preceding item.
When I address someone with ‘thou’ in speaking, it is even more appropriate and expressive of love to do so in letters also. That is why sometimes you cease to be ‘you’ and become ‘thou’. True love does not speak and often does not even act, and yet it cannot but be felt. Though I thus know that ‘you’ and ‘thou’ are mere external forms, I have adopted a certain style of addressing persons in letters which I have now started following in writing to you children, too.

It is quite true that these days my letters have ceased to be letters. Both physically and mentally I am so much tied up that I am unable to see even the people in the Ashram whom I want to see. And writing letters gets indefinitely postponed. Today I have put off writing several important letters and am devoting the little time left before the prayers to writing this.

In my quest for truth I have realized that as for me I can find it only through experience, that is, not by giving up action in the world but by remaining non-violent while continually engaged in action. I have been utterly drained in getting the recent changes in the Ashram adopted. You know very well how much I am interested in women’s progress. But except for two or three there were no women staying in the Ashram of their own choice. Even those who do cannot be said to understand even cursorily the rules of the Ashram. Do all the men do so?

Then what can we expect about the deeper meaning of the rules? Even I who was the author of the rules do not know their full meaning, though I am realizing it more and more clearly every day. Thinking over the problem and discussing it, I saw that in following and enforcing the rules and building up the Ashram we have, unknowingly and unintentionally but most certainly, oppressed the women. They could neither leave their husbands nor the Ashram. Though perfectly willing to stay, they are equally unable to observe the rules.

It seemed to be a sin to show the slightest leniency in the observance of the rules if the Ashram continued in its original form. I regard the rules that have been framed as essential elements of Satyagraha. In fact they have been kept a little mild so that they are within the capacity of all. Hence, as we progress towards truth, these rules should be made more stringent. I therefore felt that if we wished to keep the women with us, the Satyagraha Ashram must take a different form. Hence the Ashram will now remain only as a symbol and an ideal in our minds without any external activities. The Ashram has been therefore handed over to the new agency that has been created. The Ashram land also will be transferred to it at a nominal rent. The Ashram will thus exist at present in an almost invisible form. But as the burden on the others will in this way be lightened, that on those who have taken the vows will increase, for even in the new Udyog Mandir it is the same persons who will be working. They will have to be guardians of the vows and make their contribution to the Udyog Mandir in that spirit. The underlying hope is that if the Ashram inmates have the true spirit of the Ashram in them, the Udyog Mandir itself will be reborn as a more perfect institution. This is enough for the present, as I must now leave for the prayer.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/4

27. LETTER TO SARALADEVI SARABHAI

September 19, 1928

DEAR SISTER,

I have read the Khan Bahadur’s letter. You should send him the following reply:

‘Gandhi says that although he takes the deepest interest in the subject, he does not think that any useful purpose can be served by his expressing an opinion on the questions asked.’

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 11131. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

28. PRISON TREATMENT

The Director of Information in his communique dated 12th September, 1928, has attempted a reply to the article1 in Young India

1 This is in English.

2 Vide “Our Jails”, 16-8-1928.
of 16th August regarding the food served out to prisoners at the Sabarmati Central Jail. He boldly says that these statements are incorrect. It is perfectly clear from the communique that he has not made the inquiry himself but his opinion is based upon the statements supplied to him by the very parties who are accused of neglect. It is unnecessary for me to refute the statement that the health statistics in the prisons of India compare favourably with the statistics of the population living outside. This is an admitted fact, for the simple reason that the laws of sanitation are undoubtedly better enforced in the prisons than outside. But better sanitation does not prove more humaneness or more consideration for the prisoners. My point is that there is absence of the human touch about the whole of the prison system. And it seems to me to be wholly beside the point to mention that the general health of the inmates of prisons is better than outside, and I claim that even this statement becomes untenable when applied to the class of prisoners from whom satyagrahis are drawn. It was open to the Director to say, if he had so chosen, that the satyagrahis knew that there would be no humanity to be found inside the prison walls. Statements such as I made in the article in question had point. Because the claim is often made that the prisoners in Indian prisons are treated humanely and that as much consideration as is possible to give to prisoners is given in these jails.

With regard to the specific statements made in the Director’s communique I can only give extracts from the statements made by the released prisoners, every one of whom I hold to be far more reliable than all the jail authorities put together. The statements were made by the satyagrahis on their discharge from the jail in reply to my request about the treatment, and when I saw with my own eyes the shattered constitution of Sjt. Chinai whom I knew to be in possession of excellent health and when I saw a Vidyapith lad Dinkar suffering from an obstinate fever which, but for the extraordinarily good nursing and able medical aid he had the good fortune to receive after being discharged from the prison, might have proved fatal.

I shall take the first extract from the statement made by Sjt. Sanmukhlal, a well-known man of Valod who got dysentery twice as a result of bad food:

The greens served out were wretched beyond description.... Luni simply stank in one’s nostrils so much so that I had to discontinue taking it. When it was exhausted, radishes and a hotchpotch of dry leaves like those of cabbage, etc., were substituted in its place with the result that soon after many prisoners began to suffer from bowel complaints in large numbers. But nobody could muster sufficient courage to lodge a complaint about it to the Superintendent. I even heard from some prisoners that one of the prisoners was given bar-fetters for several months for making such a complaint....

Things improved a little after some time.... Pumpkin and onions and later turiya and gowar were introduced in the vegetable fare; the gowar and turiya were hard and stringy being over-ripe, but even so were picked out and regarded by the prisoners as a delicacy.

The junvar bread was only half-baked and so full of grit that it could hardly be chewed and had to be swallowed. This was especially the case when the grinding stones of the flour mills were freshly dented. As a result of this food I got dysentery, almost half of our number sharing the same fate with me. Sjt. C. L. Chinai in his statement repeats the same story:
The food did not agree with me and I began to get stomach-ache and finally had diarrhoea, sometimes getting as many as 30 or 35 motions in a day. Whenever I took the greens they invariably gave me diarrhoea. Thus I began fast to lose my weight. When I complained about it to the doctor he said that I should give up taking the greens if I wanted to keep fit, which I did and from that time till the end remained on bread and water only. I did not complain about it to the Superintendent because he never paid any heed to the complaints of the prisoners regarding food. I even heard that there had been cases of prisoners being punished for making such complaints. Therefore nobody dared to take the matters before the authorities.

Even Sjt. Ravishankar Vyas with his iron constitution was driven to say in his statement:

The greens consisted of dry, tough, leathery leaves with an admixture of pumpkin. To eat it was to court certain stomach-ache.

Sjt. Chinai was given hard labour beyond his capacity and consequently he had attacks of giddiness, but for twenty days he could not get the medicine that he needed. He lost over 20 lb in weight during his incarceration. Similarly, Govind Gosain who was already in a poor state of health when he was sentenced came out of jail in such a weak condition that he could scarcely keep steady on his legs.

I have given only the briefest extracts from the statements in my possession. If the authorities are serious, I shall have much pleasure to send them all the statements and any further proof that they may need. Refutations such as the Director of Information has made, I feel sure, carry no weight with the public, certainly do not improve the condition of the prisoners, nor make for humaneness in the prisons. The first condition of humaneness is a little humility and a little diffidence about the correctness of one’s conduct and a little receptiveness. One misses all the three in the Director’s refutation.

Young India, 20-9-1928

29. HOW I DISCOVERED THE SPINNING-WHEEL

A friend who has been studying the All-India Spinners’ Association organization after having studied a centre in Karaikudi (Tamilnad) writes:

This (Uttukuli) is a heavy production centre for hand-spinning and weaving. I have half picked up this work here. There are about a thousand spinners. I have gone about the villages and met many of them in their own little cottages. Every day that passes makes me marvel the more as to how you discovered the spinning-wheel. I am very much tempted to ask if you could not kindly tell in the pages of Young India when and how exactly you re-discovered the wheel. It is so little and so big at the same time. It reminds me of the rain drops—each so tiny by itself but together “the mighty ocean”. Nothing is more wrong than to think that you have asked India to spin and that India has begun to spin driven to do so by you. The truth is rather that the millions in the villages have driven you to it—to be their agent for disposing of all their yarn. I am daily watching crowds of old women and girls coming with their yarn. They come with smiling faces, their precious yarn clutched to their hearts. And khadi is retouching slowly into life just those vital parts of our national being that have been touched almost into death by this most soulless of exploitations. I realize now as never before the truth of your words when you said that the world would some day accept khadi as the noblest of your works.

He is right when he says that the toiling, starving millions drove me to it. It was in London in 1909\(^1\) that I discovered the wheel. I had gone there leading a deputation from South Africa. It was then that I came in close touch with many earnest Indians—students and others. We had many long conversations about the condition of India and I saw as in a flash that without the spinningwheel there was no swaraj. I knew at once that everyone had to spin. But I did not then know the distinction between the loom and the wheel and in Hind Swaraj\(^2\) used

---

\(^1\) The source has “1908”.

\(^2\) Vide “Hind Swaraj”, 22-11-1909.
the word loom to mean the wheel. This is what I have said in the concluding chapter of the I booklet:

We will get nothing by asking; we shall have to take what we want, and we need the requisite strength for the effort and that strength will be available to him only who:

2. if a lawyer, will give up his profession, and take up a handloom (spinning-wheel);
8. although a doctor, will take up a handloom (spinning-wheel);
10 if a wealthy man will devote his money to establishing hand looms (spinning-wheels), and encourage others to use hand-made goods by wearing them himself.

The words are as true today as they were in 1909 when the booklet was written. Today not only are lawyers, doctors and others spinning by way of sacrifice but they are also organizing the movement. But alas, they are yet far too few for the purpose of waking the millions from their helpless lethargy. The vast majority are still standing aside. They seem to be waiting for a catastrophe greater than the one that is happening in front of them. They seem to await the simultaneous destruction of millions to produce in them a shock that would move them to action. Be that as it may, there is no organic swaraj until the starving millions feel its glow. They will not feel it until the living contact is established between them and us the vocal class who literally bleed them in order that we may live.

But to return to the wheel. Though the wheel was discovered to the mental vision in 1909, it saw work only in 1918, after three years’ patient and strenuous effort. The first khadi vow (very much adult-rated to suit the fashionable sisters of Bombay) was taken in 1919¹. The wheel found a place in the Congress programme in 1921². The history of the movement since then is an open book still being written in the lives of the two thousand odd organizers and nearly seventy thousand spinners in whose lives the wheel has brought a ray of hope. Were we not under the hypnotic and desolating spell of the city civilization, we would realize through our hearts that only a little combined, conscious and honest effort in the shape of work is required to take the wheel to every cottage in India. Multiply the return of one wheel by say one hundred million and the result will

¹ Vide “The Swadeshi Vow”, 13-5-1919
² Vide “Working Committee’s Resolutions at Bardoli”, 12-2-1922 convince the most confirmed un-believer of its potency. But probably he will refuse to be willing and say: “What you say is true as an arithmetical problem, it is wholly untrue as a practical proposition”
You can only take a willing horse to the trough. But a true spinner must have unlimited patience. He does not give in. The answer to the question propounded by the friend therefore perhaps should be: “The wheel is still being discovered.” I know that it shall be one day, for there are some in this country who are prepared to pay for the discovery with their lives.

Young India, 20-9-1928

30. COW-PROTECTION TRUE AND FALSE

I commend this powerfully written article¹ to the attention of everyone who would know the inwardness of cow-worship in India.

Young India, 20-9-1928

31. MY NOTES

Thursday [September 20, 1928]

HINDU-MUSLIM FIGHT IN GODHRA

On Wednesday, I received a postcard from Godhra informing me that, in the fighting that took place there between Hindus and Muslims on the occasion of the Paryushan festival, Shri Wamanrao Mukadam, Shri Purushottamdas Shah and some other Hindus have been seriously injured. Today, that is, on Thursday, at the time of writing this, I received a telegram informing me of Shri Purushottamdas’s death. I am aware of my inability to do anything besides expressing my sympathy to the bereaved family and I am sorry on this account. Hence I write nothing these days on this subject near my heart. I do not believe I have the right to say anything on it. I have come to the conclusion that the medicine I have is wanted by neither side. I have no other medicine with me except non-violence and love. At present it is not possible for me to explain the efficacy of this medicine to anyone. Hence I believe and am aware that silence is proper for me. My silence is my sole contribution to the efforts for

¹ By Pyarelal. For extracts, vide “Cow-Protection True and False”, 20-9-1928

36 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
unity. But this silence does not mean indifference. As I believe in prayer, I ceaselessly pray to God to give wisdom to both the communities and ordain that unity of hearts be established among them. If this prayer is sincere, I am bound sooner or later to find some means of ending this enmity.

DISCOUNT IN KHADI PRICES FOR A LIMITED PERIOD

The organizer of the Shuddha Khadi Bhandar on Ritchie Road in Ahmedabad writes to say that khadi will be sold at a reduced rate as follows\(^1\) from the 10th to the 20th of October:

Besides these, some other varieties such as shawls, saris, prints, towels, handkerchiefs, dhotis, caps, fine as well as coarse khadi of small and large widths and woollen material of various types will be sold at a discount ranging from 6\(\%\) to 12\(\%\).

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 23-9-1928

32. TELEGRAM TO AMRITLAL THAKKAR

[September 20, 1928]\(^2\)

AMRITLAL THAKKAR

GODHRA

DEEPLY DISTRESSED SHAH’S DEATH PRAY CONVEY CONDOLENCE FAMILY.

GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 14776

33. CABLE TO V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI

[September 20, 1928]\(^3\)

RIGHT HONOURABLE SASTRI

PRETORIA

PRAY INTEREST YOURSELF ABOOBAKER’S PRETORIA

---

1. The table of rates is not reproduced here.
2. Vide the preceding item.
3. From a typewritten copy (S.N. 11987)
34. CABLE TO OMER JHAVERI

[September 20, 1928]

OMER JHAVERI
DURBAN
Cabled SASTRIJI. SEE HIM.

GANDHI

35. LETTER TO C. F. ANDREWS

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

September 21, 1928

MY DEAR CHARLIE,

I have your letters. I am not taking any interest in the Statutory Commission. I see no truthfulness about anything emanating from the Commission. Sir John Simon’s letters have a false ring about them and if he is not wilfully untruthful, he is certainly kept absolutely in the dark about the true nature of things.

Mahadev is returning today from Simla. I am glad he had a little bit of rest and detachment from the routine work. In Simla, of course, he wrote the chapters for his forthcoming book on Bardoli.

Vallabhbhai too is returning today from Simla, as also Swami. They were all however fed up with the Simla atmosphere.

Devdas is in Delhi. Krishnadas is with Ram Binod in Bihar. Pyarelal and Subbiah are here. Mirabehn goes next week on a brief tour. She wants to see the khadi depots. I do hope you will not overwork... yourself there;
   Here are some letters received from Italy.
   Love.

MOHAN

C. F. ANDREWS, ESQ.
112 GOWER STREET, LONDON, W.C. 1

From a photostat: G.N. 2630

36. LETTER TO M. R. JAYAKAR

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

September 21, 1928

MY DEAR JAYAKAR,

I have your letter. Mahadev has talked to me about the offer made to you. He sent me a brief letter also but asked me to wait till his arrival before I replied. I am able therefore to sleep over the thing and after the fullest consideration have come to the conclusion that you should not accept the offer. I am of opinion that the Viceroy should consult Sastri\(^1\) himself as to his successor; but if he does not do so, Maharaja Kunwar Singh should go. It is a most difficult job and can only be filled by one who has the conviction that connection with the British Empire is good and should last. It is difficult to explain the reasons behind this proposition, but I am sure you will have no difficulty in understanding my viewpoint.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 1995

37. LETTER TO E. C. DEWICK

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

September 21, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter and copies of the July and the April numbers of the Student World.

I note what you say about the Conference\(^2\) at Mysore in Decem-

\(^1\) V. S. Srinivasa Sastri, Agent-General of Government of India in South Africa
\(^2\) Of the World’s Student Christian Federation
ber. I am yet unable to give you any definite reply. And, of course, I have warned you against building anything on the hope of my being able to attend the Conference.

Yours sincerely,

REV. E. C. DEWICK
5 RUSSELL ROAD, CALCUTTA

From a photostat: S.N. 13529

38. LETTER TO CHOITHRAM P. GIDWANI

September 21, 1928

DEAR DR. CHOITHRAM,

It is impossible for me to move out of the Ashram at the present moment and Vallabhbhai’s hands are really full. In my opinion, it is better to spare Vallabhbhai just now. Let him work up the constructive programme in Bardoli. It is really more difficult than the struggle with the Government. All the same I shall put your letter before Vallabhbhai and ask him to write to you.

Yours sincerely,

DR. CHOITHRAM P. GIDWANI
HYDERABAD (SIND)

From a photostat: S.N. 13530

39. LETTER TO DHANWANTRI

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
September 21, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letters. The message that I can send to the Students’ Union is:

“Do not fear the Government or any other power that may come in your way. Go forward and build a strong link between yourself and the toiling millions who do not even know the meaning of the word education.”

Yours sincerely,

SJT. DHANWANTRI
SECRETARY, LAHORE STUDENTS UNION, LAHORE

From a photostat: S.N. 13531
40. LETTER TO KRISHNADAS

September 21, 1928

MY DEAR KRISHNADAS,

I have your postcard. is a scamp. He is not truthful when he says that he has walked all the way from here to Calcutta to meet you. He has been going to several places; among them was Brindaban from where he wrote saying that he was practically fixed up. He is good-hearted but he is thoroughly untrustworthy.

I showed your letter about Ram Binod to Rajendra Babu who was here on his return from Europe. He is of opinion that some step will be necessary.

SIT. KRISHNADAS

From a microfilm: S.N. 13689

41. LETTER TO AMY TURTORE

September 21, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter as also the beautiful piece of linen. Here is a sample of what is being done here.

I thank you also for your prayers. I am forwarding our correspondence to Mr. Andrews.

Yours sincerely,

M. AMY TURTORE
CAMLIA, 47 SIENA, ITALY

From a microfilm: S.N. 14398

42. LETTER TO JETHALAL JOSHI

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
September 21, 1928

BHAJ JETHALAL,

The means of overcoming desire explained in the Gita is God's grace, and that is obtained through worship of Him.

1 Name omitted
2 Dated August 30; vide “Letter to Krishnadas”, 10-9-1928.
About your intention to join the Vidyapith, you should meet Kakasaheb. The highest salary it pays is Rs. 75. If you can live within that figure, perhaps Kakasaheb can accommodate you. According to me, you cannot live in the Ashram unless you agree to observe brahmacharya.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1344

43. LETTER TO J. S. AKARTE

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
September 22, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. There is no doubt about it that the more young men stand up against child-marriage and enforce their opposition whenever they get an opportunity, the sooner the evil will be removed. I have so often noticed this matter in the pages of Young India that I do not think it necessary to deal with the special case of your caste.

Yours sincerely,

S. J. S. AKARTE
SENIOR B.A. CLASS, HISLOP COLLEGE, NAGPUR

From a microfilm: S.N. 13532

44. LETTER TO N. LAKSHMI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
September 22, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. For the present I can only suggest to you that you should continue your reading of the Gitanjali, and add to it a brief reading of the Gita.

Your questions do not need any answer if you are a regular reader of Young India.

Yours sincerely,

SRIMATI N. LAKSHMI
MEDICAL SCHOOL, VELLORE

From a microfilm: S.N. 13533

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
45. LETTER TO RAMANAND CHATTERJEE

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
September 22, 1928

DEAR RAMANAND BABU,

I thank you for your letter. I am ashamed to have to confess that I have not yet been able to approach Dr. Sunderland’s manuscript. I have kept it on my desk and it always stares me in the face. But I do not know when I shall be able to go through it.

I will keep the corrections you have sent me with manuscript.

Yours sincerely,

S. RAMANAND CHATTERJEE
EDITOR, “MODERN REVIEW”
91 UPPER CIRCULAR ROAD, CALCUTTA

From a photostat: S.N. 13534

46. LETTER TO BHOGILAL

September 22, 1928

BHAISHRI BHOGILAL,

This is my argument, in the fewest possible words, about my deliberately killing the calf.¹

1. The calf was in great pain. It had been under doctors’ treatment and they had given up all hopes. We could give it no help. Four or five men were required to turn it on its side, and even then this caused it pain. In this condition, I thought that dharma lay in killing it.

2. I see dharma in applying to human beings, in similar circumstances, the rule which I apply to other creatures. There are fewer occasions of acting in that way towards human beings, because we have more means of helping them and more knowledge for doing so. But history tells of occasions, and we can imagine others, in which there might be non-violence in killing a person, in the same way that there is non-violence in an operation performed by a surgeon.

3. The argument that he who cannot create life has no right to destroy it and that no one can violate another’s dharma does not apply in a case like this. That argument can be advanced only for the purpose of preventing violence, that is, cruelty. It may be itself an act of violence to advance such an argument to a person about whose non-violent motives we have no doubt at all, for it is likely to confuse the reason of such a person if he is not vigilant enough and may dissuade him from performing an act of non-violence.

4. It is necessary to bear three points in mind in order to understand the non-violence of the act in question: (1) It is ignorance to believe that every act of killing is violence. (2) As there is violence in killing, so also there is violence in inflicting what we regard as lesser suffering. (3) Violence and non-violence are mental attitudes, they concern the feelings in our heart. A slap given through anger is pure violence, whereas a slap given to a person bitten by a snake to keep him awake is pure non-violence.

Many other arguments can be deduced from this. If you wish to ask me any question exclusively concerning dharma, please do. You can use this letter in any place and in any manner you wish to. My only aim in life is to discover dharma, know it and follow it. I do not wish to breathe a single moment if I cannot do that.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS GANDHI

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: S.N. 11811

47. ATROCITIES BY OFFICIALS

A correspondent from Dholka writes:¹

Such atrocities should be a matter of surprise, if not in India, at any rate in Gujarat. It is in the fitness of things that the Dholka Taluk Committee has undertaken the task of putting an end to the atrocities of the police. The Congress Committees are committed to such work. However, it is the least part of the work of these committees to register a complaint before the collector or to go to the law-courts and demand justice. However, where this becomes inevitable, such work may certainly be done. The real task to be done is to follow the example of Bardoli. That is to say, to live among the people and give them training in fearlessness. Such training cannot be imparted by ¹The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had stated that an orphan lad suspected of theft was severely beaten by the police. Farmers were harassed in order to extort tax. When the incidents were reported to the authorities the people did not come forward to tell the truth.

means of speeches alone, but by being fearless oneself and infecting the others with such fearlessness. In order that this feeling may spread, some kind of useful constructive activity must be carried on amidst the people, without which one cannot come into contact with them, enter into their lives and win their confidence. The fact that khadi activity is the most effective one for coming into contact with every family living within one’s area is becoming increasingly clear every day. While carrying on such activity, one must come into contact with the talati and the police as well. Since they too wear clothes, the message of khadi should reach them also. The atrocities of the police and the talatis can be ended by an appeal to their hearts. Such atrocities will not be averted if one policeman or talati is punished.
However, a change may be brought about in their conduct if they are made aware of the fact that although they hold the posts of policeman or talati, they are nevertheless the friends or rather the servants of the people. The local police and the talati of Bardoli became friendly with the people as soon as the latter became fearless. Boycott is a much better weapon of non-co-operation than either punishment or complaint; however, this weapon should be used only by those who know no fear. Hence I would request the Dholka Taluk Committee to continue their task of seeking justice from the law-courts or the collector if they regard this as inevitable but, at the same time, vigorously and patiently to take up the task of making the people fearless. It will find from experience while doing so that office work and constructive work cannot be combined. In trying to do the one, the other will have to be given up. It is perhaps necessary to introduce well-known leaders to the people in cases where the latter feel suppressed and timid.

[from Gujarati]

Navajivan, 23-9-1928

48. POLICY OF MAKING KHADI SELF-SUPPORTING

I would like to draw the attention of readers to the article entitled “Khadi Work in Bijolia” appearing in this issue. It has been published as it was sent by Shri Jethalal with no changes—except for a few minor verbal changes. I hope no one will be scared by the length of the article. Shri Jethalal is one of the very few persons among us who are crazy about khadi. By this word, the Gita implies one who loses one’s heart and soul in one’s work. The country is in dire need of persons who are wholly dedicated to the work which they have taken up as a form of public service. Moreover, in this field we have achieved success sooner in Bijolia than elsewhere. It is the duty of every worker in the cause of khadi to know how and to what extent this success has been achieved. I have published the entire article for this reason. The reader will see clearly that at the root of the success of this work lie unflinching devotion to khadi and the resultant patience and determination. The following portion of the article deserves to be noted by everybody.

It must be stated here that we had decided to practise such discipline as if we had gone crazy about khadi, or that we did not know or understand anything except khadi. The people did not welcome the preaching of khadi; they would hesitate to commit themselves as it was something which involved action. We saw with our own eyes conditions which deprived one of one’s humanity—disease, immorality and social and political unrest. As soon as we stopped talking about our subject and the conversation turned to other subjects, we ceased to take any interest in it. We used to think that the strength of our argument regarding khadi would be lost if we took interest in other matters.

It is only such devoted persons who joyfully put up with “the cold of a winter morning, the fierce heat of a summer afternoon, and the continuous downpour during the monsoon as well as knee-deep mud” that can take the message of khadi to the people. In the words of Shri Jethalal, the leisure hours of the farmer are the “active season” for khadi workers and the success of the task depends upon doing what has to be done just in that particular season.

[From Gujarati]

Navajavan, 23-9-1928

49. NATIONAL SCHOOL AT BOMBAY

The handful of national schools which have survived in the country are comely to the eyes of a spectator even as a little lake would look beautiful in a dry arid desert. The national school at Bombay is one of these. That school has had to function in the face of many difficulties, which persist even today. The chief among them is lack of funds. There are difficulties in the way of the Vidyapith subsidizing these schools wholly under strict rules. It has been a policy of the Vidyapith not to provide any aid to schools where the teachers are unable to collect funds. If the Vidyapith itself is to become self-supporting at any time, it will have to be increasingly strict in its adherence to this rule. It is necessary to understand the meaning of the word “self-supporting” in this context. It implies a school which can meet its own expenses with ease on the strength of the reputation enjoyed by its Principal and the other teachers. The best form of self-support is for the students of such national schools to earn through their own efforts enough to meet the expenses of their schools. Such self-support is not beyond my visualization. In the United States of America, innumerable students earn enough to pay their fees and their schools subsist upon them. In India, many schools running under Government patronage bear their own expenses and those who run them earn fairly good money. The reason for this is obvious. Government-sponsored education has a set market value and the demand for this education exceeds the Government’s capacity or intention to provide it. National education has yet to have its market-value determined. If this had been done, we would have been enjoying swaraj today. However, the “self support” that I visualize is higher than that of the schools which are run under Government patronage, as it is also distinct from that which is to be found in the U.S.A.

This country needs an industrial climate. In the education of this country, the vocational aspect should constitute its dominant part.
When this takes place, the students who will go on learning a craft will support their schools through it. Shri Madhusudan Das had conceived such a plan with regard to his tannery in Cuttack. The plan was a fine one. But it did not materialize as the prevailing atmosphere in the country provided no encouragement to vocational training or a tannery. Why should not carpentry be an indispensable part of our higher education? Education without a knowledge of weaving would be comparable to the solar system without the sun. Where such trades are being properly learnt, the students should be able to meet the expenses of their own schools. For this scheme to succeed, the students should have physical strength, will-power and a favourable atmosphere created by the teachers. If a weaver could become a Kabir, why cannot other weavers become, if not Kabirs, at any rate, Gidwanis, Kripalanis or Kalelkars? If a cobbler could become a Shakespeare, why cannot other cobblers become, if not great poets, at any rate, experts in the fields of chemistry, economics and such other subjects?
It is very necessary to understand that, by regarding vocational training as something that is opposed to intellectual education, we are labouring under a great misapprehension and that thereby we are retarding the progress of the people. The Vidyapith has taken in hand the task of explaining this fact. In the mean time, those who have faith in national education should help institutions like the national school in Bombay to the best of their ability. And if the citizens of Bombay will not provide this help, who else will? I hope that no one will excuse himself on the ground that business in Bombay is slack. The citizens of Bombay may be suffering from many shortcomings, but I have not yet discerned in them that of miserliness. Hence I hope that the patriotic citizens of Bombay will fill Acharya Gokulbhai’s purse and free him from worries.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 23-9-1928

50. COMMUNITY FEASTS

Shri Manilal Chhatrapati writes from Jambusar to say that on the occasion of a simant in his family, he finally gathered the courage not to hold a feast for his own caste-members. I congratulate him on it. Such courage in Congress workers should not be regarded as a matter of surprise. There is only one thing that is required for developing such courage: Disregard of or unconcern at being declared outcaste. To be excommunicated implies that one cannot attend caste-feasts, etc., and one cannot marry one’s sons or daughters within that caste. When we wish to boycott all feasts, we should consider ourselves fortunate if we receive no invitations at all. Moreover, if one’s sons and daughters cannot be betrothed within one caste, cast barriers can readily be broken down. If the country is to rise, those barriers have necessarily to be done away with. Hence reformers like Shri Manilal Chhatrapati need fear nothing. These feasts reduce civilized persons to the level of aborigines, they are a crushing burden for the poor and are a blot on our country. The fact that even those who are well off long for these feasts is something certainly unbecoming. Hence, with more reformers like Manilal Chhatrapati, these customs will gradually decline. A portion of the money that is saved on such feasts should be used by reformers for public service and in the wholesome service of those who wish to remain within the bounds of the caste. Wherever the mahajan acts out of ignorance, it forfeits its high status and no longer deserves respect. Hence those who give donations must be careful to see that the amount given for reforms within the caste is properly utilized.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 23-9-1928

51. LETTER TO NANABHAI I. MASHRUWALA

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
September 23, 1928

BHAISHRI NANABHAI,

I have your letter. I cannot decide which day is my birthday. Formerly there was only one day, now there are many days. According to the Tilak calendar, the birthday falls on a particular date. I did not know about this at all. According to the Christian calendar, it falls on another date. According to the Sanatana, the Saur and the Sayan calendars, it falls on still other dates. And yet more methods of reckoning may be discovered in future. If everyone would celebrate the day by spinning, as you do, I would not grumble even if every day was my birthday. Bombay does not seem to agree with Kishorelal. Manilal and Sushila seem to be completely absorbed in each other in Phoenix.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6676

52. LETTER TO SHAUKAT ALI

SABARMATI,
September 24, 1928

MY DEAR BROTHER,

Mahadev has just returned from Simla. He tells me you have written in the papers that I sought by every means at my disposal to keep Shuaib out from the Nehru Committee. I have not been following the disputes between you and Dr. Ansari. I have read and that cursorily only one of your letters to the Press. Hence my missing the above titbit. Well, it is news to me that I tried to keep Shuaib out. I do not even remember what I said about him and others. All I know is that I never dreamt of keeping Shuaib out of anything. I have too much regard for his honesty and independence to wish to keep him out. And you ought to know my nature. I never even keep out opponents and if I want to, I say so. What led you to think that I wanted to keep Shuaib out with a purpose?

If it is merely a matter of feeling, time alone coupled with my own future conduct can cure you of the feeling.

Having heard the story from Mahadev, I thought I owed it to you to set you right, if my word could do so.

I must confess that the only letter of yours to Dr. Ansari that I read, I did not like at all. I thought it was so unnecessary. But I did not feel it right to say anything to you about it. I know you to be too good not to make amends if and when you see your error. Even your errors make you lovable so long as I retain the opinion which I do, that you are truthful and fear God. Why should I worry over what I may hold to be your error, seeing that I err often enough and need the indulgence of friends and foes alike?

With love,

Yours,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 13692

53. TELEGRAM TO SHYAMNARAIN

[September 25, 1928]

SHYAMNARAIN
PROSECUTING INSPECTOR, MEERUT CITY
ARRIVED SAFE. DETAINING PENDING YOUR ARRIVAL.

GANDHI

From a microfilm: S.N. 14780

---

1 In reply to his telegram dated September 25, which read: “My son Sarupnarain aged eighteen thin sallow left college. Please detain. Coming.”
54. TELEGRAM TO CHOITHRAM P. GIDWANI

[September 25, 1928]

DR. CHOITHRAM
HYDERABAD (SIND)
VALLABHBHAI GONE BARDOLI. DIFFICULT LEAVE POST.

GANDHI

From a microfilm: S.N. 14781

55. LETTER TO KANTI PAREKH

Wednesday [On or before September 26, 1928]¹

CHI. KANTI,

Newspapers declared you dead and Kishorelalbhai also believed you to be dead. Ramdas will read out to you his letter accompanying this, or, if you are able to read, you may do so yourself. It will make you laugh, but at the same time prove Kishorelalbhai’s prediction about you true. Chhaganbhai also has believed you to be an ideal student of the Ashram. You know that I have hesitated to believe so. But my hesitation can make no difference to my love for you. We all very much wish that you may live long and be an ideal man and ideal servant. You certainly have the strength to become one.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6268

56. ‘STARTLING CONCLUSIONS’

William R. Thurston, according to the publisher’s preface, was a Major in the United States army, which he served for nearly ten years. And, during these years, he had varied experiences in several parts of the world, including China. During his travels he studied the effects of marriage laws and customs, as a result of which he felt the call to write a book on marriage. This book which is called Thurston’s Philosophy of Marriage and was published last year by the Tiffany Press, New York, contains only 32 pages of bold type, and can be read inside of an hour. The author has not entered into an elaborate argument but has simply set forth his conclusion with just a dash of argument to support his conclusions which the publisher truly describes as “startling”. In his foreword, the author claims to have based his conclusions on “personal observation, data obtained from physicians, statistics of social hygiene and medical statistics,” compiled during the War. His conclusions are:

¹ In reply to his telegram dated September 25, which read: “Letter received. Request spare Vallabhbhaiji for a day only.”

² From the contents, this and the following letter appear to have been written before the one to the addressee and to Kalyanji Mehta dated October 2, 1928; vide “Letter to Kalyanji Mehta and Kanti”, 2-10-1928 and “Extracts from Letter to Kalyanji Mehta”, 3-10-1928 The Wednesday preceding was September 26.

1. That Nature never intended a woman to be bound to a man for life, and to be compelled to occupy the same bed or habitation with him, night after night, in pregnancy and out, in order to earn her board and lodging, and to exercise her natural right to bear children.

2. That the daily and nightly juxtaposition of the male and female, which is a result of present marriage laws and customs, leads to unrestrained sexual intercourse, which perverts the natural instincts of both male and female, and makes partial prostitutes of 90% of all married women. This condition arises from the fact that married women have been led to believe that such prostitution of themselves is right and natural because it is legal, and that it is necessary in order to retain the affections of their husbands.

The author then goes on to describe the effects of continual “unrestrained sexual intercourse” which I epitomize as follows:

(a) It causes the woman to become highly nervous, prematurely aged, diseased, irritable, restless, discontented, and incapable of properly caring for her children.

(b) Among the poorer classes it leads to the propagation of many children who are not wanted.

(c) Among the higher classes, unrestrained sexual intercourse leads to the practice of contraception and abortion. If contraceptive methods under the name of ‘birth-control’ or any other name are taught to the majority of the women of the masses, the race will become generally diseased, demoralized, depraved and will eventually perish. (The italics are the author’s.)

(d) Excessive sexual intercourse drains the male of the vitality necessary for earning a good living. At present there are approximately 2,000,000 more widows in the United States than there are widowers. Comparatively few of these are war widows. (Italics are the author’s.)

(e) The excessive sexual intercourse incident to the present married state develops in the minds of both male and female a sense of futility. The poverty of the world today, and the slums of the larger cities are not due to lack of profitable labour to be performed, but to excessive, unrestrained sexual intercourse, resulting from present marriage laws. (Italics are the author’s.)

(g) Most serious of all from the standpoint of the future of the human race is sexual intercourse during pregnancy.

Then follows an indictment of China and India into which I need not go. This brings us to half of this booklet. The next half is devoted to the remedy.

The central fact of the remedy is that husband and wife must always live in separate rooms, therefore, necessarily sleep in separate beds, and meet only when both desire progeny, but especially the wife. I do not intend to give the changes suggested in the marriage laws. The one thing common to all marriages throughout the world is a common room and a common bed, and this the author condemns in unmeasured terms, I venture to think, rightly. There is no doubt that much of the sensuality of our nature, whether male or female, is due to the superstition bearing a religious sanction that married people are bound to share the same bed and the same room. It has produced a mentality, the disastrous effect of which it is difficult for us, living in the atmosphere generated by that superstition, properly to estimate.

The author is equally opposed, as we have already seen, to contraceptive methods.

S. Ganesan, the enterprising publisher of Madras, has obtained the permission of the author to reprint the booklet for circulation in India. If he does so, the reader can possess a copy at a trifling price. He has secured also the rights of translation.

Many of the other remedies suggested by the author are, in my opinion, not of practical use to us, and in any case require legislative sanction. But every husband and wife can make a fixed resolution from today never to share the same room or the same bed at night and to avoid sexual contact, except for the one supreme purpose for which it is intended for both man and beast. The beast observes the law invariably. Man having got the choice has grievously erred in making the wrong choice. Every woman can decline to have anything to do with contra-ception. Both man and woman should know that abstention from satisfaction of the sexual appetite results not in disease but in health and vigour, provided that mind co-operates with the body. The author believes that the present condition of marriage laws “is responsible for the greater part of all the ills of the world today”. One need not share this sweeping belief with the author to come to the two final decisions I have suggested. But there can be no doubt that a large part of the miseries of today can be avoided, if we look at the relations between the sexes in a healthy and pure light and regard ourselves as trustees for the moral welfare of the future generations.

Young India, 27-9-1928

57. KHADI WORK IN BIJOLIA

The following is a summary of an elaborate report prepared for the khadi workers by Sjt. Jethalal Govindji, the indefatigable worker who has specialized in the self-help method of khadi production. Sjt. Jethalal Govindji swears by his method. Whether one agrees with him or not, one cannot help admiring the single minded zeal with which he has worked out his method. His exclusive absorption in his self-imposed labours is worthy of emulation. It is the spirit that defies defeat. The experiences of such a worker cannot but be of value to every national servant.

Young India, 27-9-1928

58. ABHOY ASHRAM

This is one of the efficient institutions of Bengal to which many young men have dedicated themselves for national service. The readers of Young India cannot be unfamiliar with the Abhoy Ashram as it has been noticed in these columns more than once. The report for the year 1927, now before me, is published in pamphlet form, is well illustrated, covers 35 pages, and furnishes a record of continuous progress. Dr. Suresh Chandra Banerji is the President of the governing body, and Dr. Prafulla Chandra Ghosh is its Secretary. It has 13 members who are under the vows of fearlessness, truth, love,

---

1 Not reproduced here; vide also “Policy of Making Khadi Self-supporting”, 23-9-1928.
non-appropriation, labour, purity and patriotism. The creed of the Ashram is self-realization through the service of the motherland. Its headquarters are at Comilla, and its activities are spinning, medical relief, removal of untouchability, national education, dairying and agriculture. Khadi is the largest among these activities. Through it, the Ashram distributed last year over Rs. 66,000 among artisans, of which Rs. 28,000 went to the weavers, Rs. 27,000 to the spinners, over Rs. 1,200 to women who did embroidery work upon khadi, over Rs. 3,000 to washermen and over Rs. 6,000 to tailors. Its sales amounted to over Rs. 1,42,000 during the year under notice. The khadi department was worked at a profit. The cost of production and sale was 13% of the total sales. The profit earned was over Rs. 1,200. The khadi department absorbs 63 whole-time workers, who work in 20 centres scattered throughout the province. And “as khaddar organization naturally becomes the pivot for nation building institutions to grow round it”, reading rooms, libraries, elementary schools, gymnasiums and other social service organizations are being reared up in the khadi organization established by the Ashram. I must omit the very interesting details about the medical department, untouchability work, national education, etc., and commend to the reader the report itself. The report goes on to state that if the Ashram is to continue to grow, it requires pecuniary assistance for the various departments. The total amount is estimated at Rs. 61,000 of which Rs. 10,000 are required for the dyeing department, Rs. 40,000 for the expansion of khadi work, Rs. 3,500 for agriculture, Rs. 2,500 for dairy and Rs. 5,000 for additional buildings which a growing institution like the Abhoy Ashram must always need. It need hardly be mentioned that the majority of the workers are all living on bare maintenance. The Ashram in fact represents the spirit of sacrifice, of which Bengal is probably among all the provinces the finest repository. I would invite the reader to procure the report, read it and give this great institution all the help he can.

Young India, 27-9-1928

59. LETTER TO MIRABEHN
[September 28, 1928]

CHI. MIRA,

Just to tell you I have your letter. Do you know that Jamnalalji has lost his father? No decision has yet been arrived at. It will be to-

1 From the postmark
morrow I hope. The oven is finished. Chhotelal is better.
Love.

BAPU

SHRIMATI MIRABAI

ASHRAM, HATUNDI, AJMER (RAJPUTANA)

From the original: C.W. 5309. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 8199

60. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

ASHRAM SABARMATI,
September 28, 1928

CHI. RAMDAS¹,

I have received your letter. I will not reply fully to it just now. The bell for prayer has been struck.

If you are content to acquit yourself well in doing the duty which may have come to you unsought, a good many of the knotty problems will get solved. Solving such problems one by one will result in all of them being solved.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

61. LETTER TO KANTI PAREKH

Sunday [On or before September 30, 1928]

CHI. KANTI,

I did not worry at all on receiving the wire about your having been wounded. But I prayed to God that you should have been wounded an innocent man. Many of us will have to be wounded in that manner. It is better that we should be wounded rather than other innocent people. Wish well even of the assailant. You have learnt that lesson here. I have received today Bhai Kalyanji’s letter giving all the details. Your wound is serious but not dangerous. I have forbidden Jayanti² and Indu³ to be upset. We are learning in the Ashram not to grieve when our dear ones are wounded or die. Many lovers of God

¹ The letter is in a different hand but the subscription is by Gandhiji.
² Addressee’s brothers
³ As placed in the Diary have strengthened their love during such periods of compulsory rest. You should do the same.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11828

62. ‘THE FIERY ORDEAL’

The killing of an ailing calf in the Ashram under circumstances described below having caused a great commotion in certain circles in Ahmedabad and some angry letters having been addressed to Gandhiji on the subject, Gandhiji has critically examined the question in the light of the principle of non-violence in an article in Navajivan, the substance of which is given below.

I

WHEN KILLING MAY BE AHIMSA

An attempt is being made at the Ashram to run a small model dairy and tannery on behalf of the Goseva Sangha. Its work in this connection brings it up, at every step, against intricate moral dilemmas that would not arise but for the keenness to realize the Ashram ideal of seeking Truth through the exclusive means of Ahimsa.

For instance some days back a calf having been maimed lay in agony in the Ashram. Whatever treatment and nursing was possible was given to it. The surgeon whose advice was sought in the matter declared the case to be past help and past hope. The suffering of the animal was so great that it could not even turn its side without excruciating pain.

In these circumstances I felt that humanity demanded that the agony should be ended by ending life itself. I held a preliminary discussion with the Managing Committee most of whom agreed with my view. The matter was then placed before the whole Ashram. At the discussion a worthy neighbour vehemently opposed the idea of killing even to end pain and offered to nurse the dying animal. The nursing consisted in co-operation with some of the Ashram sisters in warding off the flies and trying to feed it. The ground of the friend’s opposition was that one has no right to take away life which one cannot create. His argument seemed to me to be pointless here. It

1 The Gujarati original of this appeared in Navajivan, 30-9-1928.
2 The Gujarati original has “ahimsa”.

1
2
would have point if the taking of life was actuated by self-interest. Finally in all humility but with the clearest of convictions I got in my presence a doctor kindly to administer the calf a quietus by means of a poison injection. The whole thing was over in less than two minutes.

I knew that public opinion especially in Ahmedabad1 would not approve of my action and that it would read nothing but himsa in it.

But I know too that performance of one’s duty should be independent of public opinion. I have all along held that one is bound to act according to what to one appears to be right even though it may appear wrong to others. And experience has shown that that is the only correct course. I admit that there is always a possibility of one’s mistaking right for wrong and vice versa but often one learns to recognize wrong only through unconscious error. On the other hand if a man fails to follow the light within for fear of public opinion or any other similar reason he would never be able to know right from wrong and in the end lose all sense of distinction between the two. That is why the poet has sung:

The pathway of love is the ordeal of fire,
The shrinkers turn away from it.
The pathway of ahimsa, that is, of love, one has often to tread all alone.

But the question may very legitimately be put to me: Would I apply to human beings the principle I have enunciated in connection with the calf? Would I like it to be applied in my own case? My reply is yes; the same law holds good in both the cases. The law of तथा फिरे तथा बाहोड़े (as with one so with all) admits of no exceptions, or the killing of the calf was wrong and violent. In practice however we do not cut short the sufferings of our ailing dear ones by death because as a rule we have always means at our disposal to help them and because they have the capacity to think and decide for themselves. But supposing that in the case of an ailing friend I am unable to render any aid whatever and recovery is out of the question and the patient is lying in an unconscious state in the throes of fearful agony, then I would not see any himsa in putting an end to his suffering by death.

Just as a surgeon does not commit himsa but practises the purest ahimsa when he wields his knife on his patient’s body for the latter’s benefit, similarly one may find it necessary under certain imperative circumstances to go a step further and sever life from the body in the interest of the sufferer. It may be objected that whereas the surgeon

---

1 Words “especially in Ahmedabad” are not in the Gujarati original.
performs his operation to save the life of the patient, in the other case we do just the reverse. But on a deeper analysis it will be found that the ultimate object sought to be served in both the cases is the same, viz., to relieve the suffering soul within from pain. In the one case you do it by severing the diseased portion from the body, in the other you do it by severing from the soul the body that has become an instrument of torture to it. In either case it is the relief of the soul within from pain that is aimed at, the body without the life within being incapable of feeling either pleasure or pain. Other circumtances can be imagined in which not to kill would spell himsa, while killing would be ahimsa. Suppose for instance, that I find my daughter—whose wish at the moment I have no means of ascertaining—is threatened with violation and there is no way by which I can save her, then it would be the purest form of ahimsa on my part to put an end to her life and surrender myself to the fury of the incensed ruffian.

But the trouble with our votaries of ahimsa is that they have made of ahimsa a blind fetish and put the greatest obstacle in the way of the spread of true ahimsa in our midst. The current (and in my opinion, mistaken) view of ahimsa has drugged our conscience and rendered us insensible to a host of other and more insidious forms of himsa like harsh words, harsh judgments, ill-will, anger and spite and lust of cruelty; it has made us forget that there may be far more himsa in the slow torture of men and animals, the starvation and exploitation to which they are subjected out of selfish greed, the wanton humiliation and oppression of the weak and the killing of their self-respect that we witness all around us today than in mere benevolent taking of life. Does anyone doubt for a moment that it would have been far more humane to have summarily put to death those who in the infamous lane of Amritsar were made by their torturers to crawl on their bellies like worms? If anyone desires to retort by saying that these people themselves today feel otherwise, that they are none the worse for their crawling, I shall have no hesitation in telling him that he does not know even the elements of ahimsa. There arise occasions in a man’s life when it becomes his imperative duty to meet them by laying down his life; not to appreciate this fundamental fact of man’s estate is to betray an ignorance of the foundation of ahimsa. For instance, a votary of truth would pray to God to give him death to save him from a life of falsehood. Similarly a votary of ahimsa would on bent knees implore his enemy to put him to death rather than humiliate him or make him do things unbecoming the dignity of a

1 ‘Non-killing’ would be nearer to the Gujarati original.
human being. As the poet has sung:

The way of the Lord is meant for heroes,
Not for cowards.

It is this fundamental misconception about the nature and scope of ahimsa, this confusion about the relative values, that is responsible for our mistaking mere non-killing for ahimsa and for the fearful amount of himsa that goes on in the name of ahimsa in our country. Let a man contrast the sanctimonious horror that is affected by the so-called votaries of ahimsa, at the very idea of killing an ailing animal to cut short its agony with their utter apathy and indifference to countless cruelties that are practised on our dumb cattle world. And he will begin to wonder whether he is living in the land of ahimsa or in that of conscious or unconscious hypocrisy.

It is our spiritual inertia, lack of moral courage—the courage to think boldly and look facts squarely in the face that is responsible for this deplorable state of affairs. Look at our pinjrapoles and goshalas, many of them represent today so many dens of torture to which as a sop to conscience we consign the hapless and helpless cattle. If they could only speak they would cry out against us and say, “Rather than subject us to this slow torture give us death.” I have often read this mute appeal in their eyes.

To conclude then, to cause pain or wish ill to or to take the life of any living being out of anger or a selfish intent is himsa. On the other hand after a calm and clear judgment to kill or cause pain to a living being with a view to its spiritual or physical benefit from a pure, selfless intent may be the purest form of ahimsa. Each such case must be judged individually and on its own merits. The final test as to its violence or non-violence is after all the intent underlying the act.

II

WHEN KILLING IS HIMSA

I now come to the other crying problem that is confronting the Ashram today. The monkey nuisance has become very acute and an immediate solution has become absolutely necessary. The growing vegetables and fruit trees have become a special mark of attention of this privileged fraternity and are now threatened with utter destruction. In spite of all our efforts we have not yet been able to find an efficacious and at the same time non-violent remedy for the evil.

The matter has provoked a hot controversy in certain circles and I have received some angry letters on the subject. One of the corre-

1 The original has “blameless”.
pondents has protested against the “killing of monkeys and wounding them by means of arrows in the Ashram”. Let me hasten to assure the reader that no monkey has so far been killed in the Ashram, nor has any monkey been wounded by means of “arrows” or otherwise as imagined by the correspondent. Attempts are undoubtedly being made to drive them away and harmless arrows have been used for the purpose.

The idea of wounding monkeys to frighten them away seems to me unbearable though I am seriously considering the question of killing them in case it should become unavoidable. But this question is not so simple or easy as the previous one.

I see a clear breach of ahimsa even in driving away monkeys, the breach would be proportionately greater if they have to be killed. For any act of injury done from self-interest whether amounting to killing or not is doubtless himsa.

All life in the flesh exists by some himsa. Hence the highest religion has been defined by a negative word ahimsa. The world is bound in a chain of destruction. In other words himsa is an inherent necessity for life in the body. That is why a votary of ahimsa always prays for ultimate deliverance from the bondage of flesh.

None, while in the flesh, can thus be entirely free from himsa because one never completely renounces the will to live. Of what use is it to force the flesh merely if the spirit refuses to cooperate? You may starve even unto death but if at the same time the mind continues to hanker after objects of the sense, your fast is a sham and a delusion. What then is the poor helpless slave to the will to live to do? How is he to determine the exact nature and the extent of himsa he must commit? Society has no doubt set down a standard and absolved the individual from troubling himself about it to that extent. But every seeker after truth has to adjust and vary the standard according to his individual need and to make a ceaseless endeavour to reduce the circle of himsa. But the peasant is too much occupied with the burden of his hard and precarious existence to have time or energy to think out these problems for himself and the cultured class instead of helping him chooses to give him the cold shoulder. Having become a peasant myself, I have no clear-cut road to go by and must therefore chalk out a path for myself and possibly for fellow peasants. And the monkey nuisance being one of the multitude of ticklish problems that stare the farmer in the face, I must find out some means by which the peasant’s crops can be safeguarded against it with the minimum amount of himsa.

I am told that the farmers of Gujarat employ special watchmen whose very presence scares away the monkeys and saves the peasant from the necessity of killing them. That may be but it should not be forgotten that whatever efficacy this method might have, it is clearly dependent upon some measure of destruction at some time or other. For these cousins of ours are wily and intelligent beings. The moment they discover that there is no real danger for them, they refuse to be frightened even by gun shots and only gibber and howl the more when shots are fired. Let nobody therefore imagine that the Ashram has not considered or left any method of dealing with the nuisance untried. But none of the methods that I have known up to now is free from himsa. Whilst therefore I would welcome any practical suggestions from the readers of Navajivan for coping with this problem, let the intending advisers bear in mind what I have said above and send only such solutions as they have themselves successfully tried and cause the minimum amount of injury.

Young India, 4-10-1928

63. CURING SEX OBSESSION

It is desirable that every man and woman should carefully study the translation published in this issue of the substance of the new book 1 on marriage written by an author named Thurston. Among us, starting from boys of the age of fifteen right up to men of fifty or, in the case of girls, starting from an even younger age up to women of fifty, the belief is current that it is not possible to live without the gratification of our sexual desires. Hence both the sexes are in a continuous state of excitement. They do not trust each other and a man changes colour when he sees a woman and vice versa. Because of this, certain customs have become prevalent, as a result of which both men and women have lost their vitality and have become sickly and listless and our lives have been reduced to a state which is unworthy of human beings.

Even in the Shastras which came into being in such an atmosphere, such commands and beliefs are found which result in a man and a woman having to act as if they were enemies of each other. This is so because sexual desires are aroused or there is a fear of their being aroused when a member of either sex catches a glimpse of a member of the other sex.

Because of this belief and because of the customs that have been

1 Thurston’s Philosophy of Marriage; vide “Startling Conclusions”, 27-9-1928.
forged on the basis of this belief, one’s life is spent in the gratification of sexual desire or in thinking about it, with the result that life becomes as bitter as poison.

As a matter of fact, because, of his powers of discretion, man should have greater strength for renunciation and should be able to exercise more self-control than animals. Despite this, it is our everyday experience that man fails to observe the limits observed by animals in their relationship with members of the opposite sex. Ordinarily, the relationship between a man and a woman should be similar to that between a mother and a son, a sister and a brother or a father and a daughter. It is obvious that the relationship between husband and wife can be something in the nature only of an exception, and a man would be afraid of being with a woman and vice versa only if a brother and a sister need be thus afraid. On the contrary, in actual practice even the relationship between a brother and a sister is not free from inhibitions. And they are taught to cultivate such inhibitions.

It is absolutely necessary to save ourselves from this pitiable condition, that is, from this atmosphere polluted by sexual desire. The ignorant fear that we cannot free ourselves from this has taken deep root in us. True manliness lies in destroying it, and we should acquire the confidence that it is possible to so.

Thurston’s little book helps greatly in such an effort. I for one feel that this writer’s theory—that, at the root of this desire are the current beliefs regarding marriage and the customs, both in the East and in the West, based on them—is correct. For a man and a woman to sleep alone at night in one room and share a bed between them is fatal to both and is a potent means of universalizing the reign of sexual desire and making it permanent. For religious preachers and reformers to preach self-control when all married couples behave like this, is like trying to patch up the sky. It is not surprising that the measures adopted for practising self-control are futile in an atmosphere where sex is so predominant. The Shastras proclaim that the sexual desire should be indulged in only for the purpose of procreation. This commandment is being violated every moment and yet people look for other causes for the resulting diseases. This is an action similar to that of a person who, while carrying his child on his hips, searches for it in the whole town. If this fact which is clear as daylight is understood, we would do the following:

1. Men and women would take a pledge today that they would not sleep in privacy and would not engage in procreation without mutual consent. Whenever possible, they should sleep in separate rooms. Where this is not possible due to poverty, they should sleep on separate beds, set far apart, and have some friend or relation to sleep between them.

2. Understanding parents should not give their daughter in marriage unless she is going to be provided with a separate room and a separate bed. Marriage is a kind of friendship. A man and a woman become partners in joys and sorrows, so that as soon as they are married, on the very first night they should not give in to the gratification of their sexual desire and lay the foundation of the ruin of their lives. Children should be given such training.

The new, wonderful beneficent and peaceful conception that is implied in the acceptance of Thurston’s theory deserves to be pondered over and it is necessary to understand the changes that ought to be made in the prevalent ideas on marriage. We can profit from this discovery only if this can take place. If those who have been able to understand this discovery have children of their own, they should accordingly alter their children’s education and the atmosphere in their own homes.

We should not require Thurston’s testimony or his support in order to realize the harmful nature of the tremendous propaganda that is being carried on at present for the use of artificial methods of birth-control side by side with the gratification of sexual desire. It is surprising how this method can be adopted in India at all. It passes my understanding how educated persons suggest this method in the prevalent enervating atmosphere in this country.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 30-9-1928

64. MUSIC IN GUJARAT

The reader is aware of the fact that the National Music Association has been functioning in Ahmedabad for the last few years. Dr. Hariprasad Desai is the President of the Association and the well-known musician Shri Narayan Moreshwar Khare, is its Secretary. This Association has been steadily carrying out its work in Gujarat. All Gujaratis are or should be aware of the fact that as compared with Bengal, Maharashtra and the Southern provinces, Gujarat lags far behind in respect of music. Not only are Gujarati men and women less musical but ordinarily even boys and girls cannot sing in tune even a simple song. It follows then that there can be no difference of opinion on the need for propagation of music. Moreover, the music that is being taught by the musician Shri Khare is fully conducive to improvement in moral standards and is steeped in the spirit of prayer.
Although this Association gets some assistance from Ahmedabad, it is not enough or adequate, either because the people have not fully realized its need or, maybe, the propaganda carried on by it has not been sufficiently popular. As both Dr. Hariprasad and the musician Shri Khare wish to see a simultaneous increase in financial assistance and in popularity and as the support from the wealthy class is meagre, they have formulated a new scheme from which I quote the following paragraph:

I hope that the citizens of Ahmedabad will welcome this scheme and that a hundred members will be enrolled immediately. Those who wish to have any further information should write to Shri Khare at the Ashram address.¹

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 30-9-1928

65. LETTER TO MOTILAL NEHRU

September 30, 1928

DEAR MOTILALJI,

Mahadev gave me your message. But as there was nothing definite to say and as I have been overwhelmed with work in connection with the Ashram, I did not write to you before now.

Mahadev tells me that you want me to attend the All-India Congress Committee’s meeting. What shall I do there? What can I do? I know that that part of the national work is also useful, but my heart has gone out of it and I become more and more inclined to give my time to what is concisely understood as constructive work. I do not mention khadi alone, because I am giving such attention as I can to other items of constructive work not even mentioned in the Congress programme. And I see that everywhere strength of mind has got to be evoked and to the extent that it is, the power of resistance is developed. Lucknow seems evidently to have left the masses untouched. Today riots are going on in Gujarat which never before knew Hindu-Muslim rioting. News has just arrived that a brave Ashram lad was nearly done to death yesterday. Whilst he was in a press building, the goondas broke into that building, indiscriminately assaulted everyone who was in it and then set fire to it. A noted Vakil of Godhra was fatally wounded and Waman Rao who is a member of the Bombay Council and whom you know was seriously assaulted. Every day some fresh rioting news comes from some place or other.

¹ Not translated here. The scheme was to popularize Indian music, both vocal and instrumental, by arranging a weekly concert covering various ragas, and holding it at various times in the morning, in the evening or in the night, according as a raga demanded it. It was to start functioning after a hundred members had been enrolled at an annual fee of Rs. 12.

I know that in spite of all this, the constitution-building work must be done. I only want to tell you that these riots largely unfit me for such work. Indeed, I am contemplating absence even from the Congress if you could permit me to remain away. There is a double reason: the prevailing atmosphere and the decision of the Calcutta Committee to copy the Madras type of Exhibition. The Council of the All-India Spinners’ Association has decided to abstain from being represented at that Exhibition. Much though I feel the error in using Madras Exhibition as a type, I do not want to criticize it in the public.
If I go to Calcutta, my presence will either embarrass the Committee or my silence will embarrass me.

I have now given you what is today oppressing my mind. You will now decide firstly, whether you want me for the All-India Congress Committee in Calcutta and secondly, whether you want me to attend the Congress in December.

You and Vithalbhai worked wonders in Simla.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 13695

66. A LETTER

[September, 1928]¹

DEAR SISTER.

He who wishes to follow truth will endure everything in patience. When we are firm and remain unbending in our firmness, opposition by others cannot last long. It subsides after some time. That is what is meant when we say that untruth is non-existent. Un-truth is not constant. It changes its form from moment to moment, while truth is constant, and abides in its essence for ever. Knowing this, you should keep patience even if confined to the home. One’s test lies in so remaining patient. Mother-in-law’s and father-in-law’s anger and opposition have to be overcome by courtesy and gentleness and by service.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 325/72

¹ Vide “The National Congress”
67. INTERVIEW TO W. K. HALL

[Before October, 1928]

Mr. Hall... tells how he presented a series of questions to Mr. Gandhi, the first of which referred to “the choice of a life career” which would “make the greatest contribution to society”. On this point, Mr. Gandhi said:

The vital consideration is not so much the choice of one or another profession as the achieving of self-realization. In facing the problem of a career, a man should emphasize, above all else, the spiritual aspects of life. With this uppermost in his thoughts, he should test his own potentialities, discover how he can best meet the peculiar needs of the local community in which he finds himself, and apply himself to meeting those needs to the utmost of his ability.

Q. What relation should religion and character bear to education in our present-day programme?

A. Education, character and religion should be regarded as convertible terms. There is no true education which does not tend to produce-character, and there is no true religion which does not determine character. Education should contemplate the whole life. Mere memorizing and book-learning is not education. I have no faith in the so-called systems of education which produce men of learning without the backbone one of character.

What fitting substitute can the Western nations find for militarism?

Militarism is essentially self-assertion. I should therefore substitute for self-assertion self-abnegation.

But what is meant by the term “self-abnegation”?

The sense in which Christ understood it: “He who loseth his life shall find it.”

What is the way out of the present seemingly hopeless antagonism between religious factions in all parts of the world?

Charity. We must learn toleration and respect for others. Every religion in some measure satisfies the spiritual needs of men. If a religious act, such as to tomtoming, annoys me, I should not try to have it prohibited, but should realize that it ministers to other people’s needs, and remove myself from the scene of disturbance.

I have ceased to declare myself publicly on this issue. My views are well known. As the French proverb has it, “He who excuses himself accuses himself”. I believe that by maintaining silence, my message is more forcibly conveyed than by constant admonition.

1 Of the North American Review. The interview took place in the Ashram at Ahmedabad.
There is, however, no need of despairing of this or any other issue where the right is involved. The world is moving on the right course. When you consider that our mortal lives are mere specks in relation to the whole of time, you may appreciate that the world may be progressing, even when progress is not apparent. I am supremely hopeful.

_The Indian Review_, October, 1928

68. _SPEECH ON ANNIE BESANT’S BIRTHDAY, AHMEDABAD_

_6 October, 1928_

Speaker after speaker paid glowing tributes to Dr. Besant, whose 82nd birthday was celebrated here this evening; Mahatma Gandhi presided.

Gandhiji observed that they could celebrate Dr. Besant’s birthday properly only if they followed in her footsteps. She had always put her precepts into practice and had the courage of her convictions. There was indomitable will and unflinching determination in her utterances.

Gandhiji asked the gathering to follow Dr. Besant’s simplicity of life and her power of introspection. He declared:

If you keep that same will-power and determination even in small things, you will achieve great things. India wants swaraj, but where is her fitness? She is in chains and only when you break those chains and become fit for it will you get swaraj, and then no power on earth can resist her.

It was Dr. Besant, declared Mahatmaji, who bridged the gulf between religion and politics. Bereft of religion politics would be like a body without soul. Without religion swaraj would be of no avail. It was Dr. Besant, concluded Gandhiji, who had awakened India from her deep slumber. To Dr. Besant there was nothing impossible in this world. Determination, simplicity, sacrifice and penance—these were the chief characteristics in her life; and Gandhiji fervently appealed to young men of India to take a vow to put these into practice in their lives.

_The Hindu_, 2-10-1928

69. _LETTER TO SRI PRAKASA_

_SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,_

_October 2, 1928_

MY DEAR SRI PRAKASA,

Your yarn is better than before, but it is not yet up to the mark. You must get someone from Kripalani’s Ashram1 to show you the proper way or come here to learn.

1 Gandhi Ashram, Banaras

With reference to the Benares incident, I have purposely omitted it as many other interesting chapters of my life. Indeed as I proceed with the chapters, my embarrassment increases, because the chief actors are still alive and they are much before the public. I sometimes almost feel that I should now cease writing the further chapters and yet dare not do it till I have reached the special session of 1920. Of course I myself regard that event in Benares as one of the proud events of my life. I was really unprepared for it, and I do not yet know where I got the strength to stand the trial. I can say about so many incidents in my life “Thy faith has made thee whole.”

I duly received the cheque sent by you.

Yours sincerely,

SITI SRI PRAKASA
SEVASHRAMA, BENA RES CANTONMENT

From a microfilm: S.N. 13538

70. LETTER TO DR. P. C. RAY

October 2, 1928

DEAR DR. RAY,

Here is the series of articles contributed to Young India by Prof. C. N. Vakil on India’s poverty. Prof. Vakil wrote to me saying that you wanted the series. It took some time in collecting the articles as some of the issues containing the articles were not easily available.

I hope you are keeping well.

Yours sincerely,

DR. P. C. RAY
CALCUTTA

From a photostat: S.N. 13539

1 Vide “Speech at Benares Hindu University”. In his letter dated September 20, Sri Prakasa had said: “I was eagerly expecting a chapter in your autobiography on the laying of the foundation-stone of the Benares Hindu University and your putting all the princes to flight as you declared, ‘Princes, go and sell your jewels’, in your speech. I ‘complained’ of the omission to Seth Jamnalal. He said I should write to you. I do so in the hope that that beautiful chapter may still come and the great incident recorded for ever.”

2 Of the Indian National Congress held at Calcutta

3 Vide “Notes”, 12-7-1928, sub-title, “Are We Getting Poorer?”.

VOL. 43 : 10 SEPTEMBER, 1928 - 14 JANUARY, 1929
71. LETTER TO NANAKCHAND

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
October 2, 1928

MY DEAR NANAKCHAND,

I was delighted to receive your letter. I am glad that you are doing well. You must now become strong, healthy and hardy. Though you have got there access to all the luxuries of life, you must rigorously deny them to yourself and evolve a strong will and a strong constitution before you think of coming here again. You have seen something of the Ashram life. You can practise there whatever has commended itself to you.

Yours sincerely,

S. N. NANAKCHAND, B.A.,
C/o Shamlal, Advocate, Rohtak

From a microfilm: S.N. 13540

72. LETTER TO ANNIE BESANT

October 2, 1928

DEAR DR. BESANT,

I have the note signed by you as Secretary of the Madras Committee formed to support the report of the All-parties Conference at Lucknow. My sympathies are all with you in your endeavour, which I know will cost you much time and trouble; but I am sure that the time and trouble given to popularizing the report will not be lost. For, having at last got a document with the imprimatur of all parties, it will be a great national tragedy if the report is not acclaimed by the public.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

DR. BESANT
ADYAR, MADRAS

[PS.]

Wish you many returns of the day.¹

M.K.G.

From a photostat: S.N. 13699

¹ Dr. Annie Besant’s 82nd birthday fell on October 1.
73. LETTER TO KALYANJI MEHTA AND KANTI

[October 2, 1928]

BHAISHRI KALYANJI,

I have your letter and Kanti’s. I was very happy. You did very well in supplying milk. We wish to overcome hatred through love. Give me detailed news about Kanti from time to time.

CHI. KANTI,

You acted in a wonderful manner. Let your heart be always as tender as you showed it this time.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2681

74. EXTRACTS FROM LETTER TO KALYANJI MEHTA

[On or before October 3, 1928]

Mahatma Gandhi has written a letter to Mr. Kalyanji, Congress worker of Surat, about the Surat riots. Gandhiji says that he does not feel aggrieved that Kaviti¹ (a Congress volunteer) was wounded in the not, but that he feels that he has no strength at all to render any help in such riots. Gandhiji observes:

But I have been sustaining my life in the hope that from such weakness new strength will arise.

Gandhiji requests Mr. Kalyanji to send him daily reports and asks him not to be angry with Mahomedans even mentally. Gandhiji concludes:

Whenever humanity is mad, it acts in the same way. If we but keep cool, we will achieve something some day.

The Hindu, 5-10-1928

75. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

SABARMATI,

October 3, 1928

CHI. MIRA,

I have your wire. I had your postcard too. Did you get mine? I was glad you were able to wire “very well”. I was a bit anxious. You will know all about Kanti Parekh from Prabhudas. Please tell him I

¹ From the postmark
² The report appeared under the date-line “Ahmedabad, October 3”.
³ Perhaps, ‘Kanti’; vide the preceding item.
have his letter. I must not reply today. The Udyog Mandir resolution was accepted by the meeting but much yet remains to be done.

Love.

BAPU

SHRIMATI MIRABAI
C/O PRABHUDAS GANDHI, SHAILA KHADI SHALA, ALMORA, U.P.

From the original: C.W. 5310. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 8200

76. LETTER TO BABAN GOKHALE
Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
October 3, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

You know that the Depressed Class friends have been intending to build a hall and a hostel as also a school for Depressed Class children. They came to me when I was convalescing at Juhu. I told them that I would gladly interest myself in the matter if they raised some money themselves and I told them too that I would endeavour to beg some money myself. They made many attempts more or less successful and they showed me many draft copies of the trust-deed necessary for the purpose. The latest I enclose herewith. They leave me to suggest the names of other trustees beyond two from among themselves. The names of the two are Sjt. Ramachandra Satvaji Nikaljey and Sjt. Jayaram Tabaji Gaikwad. I would like you to interest yourself in this matter. Go through the whole thing yourself, see the site, meet all the principal members and then advise me. I would like you also to become the Secretary of the trust and one of the trustees. You may suggest to me the other names. I would like you to see Sir Purushottamdas and ask him whether he has promised to give Rs. 5,000 and whether he will give that money and become one of the trustees. Suggest some other names also to me. I would myself suggest Sjt. Gokulbhai Bhatt of the Rashtriya School and Kishorelal Mashruwala, Shrimati Avantikabai Gokhale, Seth Jamnalal Bajaj; Sjts. Jerajani and Yeshwant Prasad Desai. That would become a business-like trust. Sir Purushottamdas can become the Chairman. If Mr. Jayakar joins, he will be a good addition. But you may omit these names altogether and make your own original suggestions. I have in mind Rameshwar Birla. He may not consent to be one of the trustees though he has given me ample funds for this class of work, and for this very work too I expect from him a fairly good sum if I can convince him that this would be a living trust and that you or some person like you would act as the Secretary. More you will ascertain from Sjt. Bhonsle who carries this letter.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. BABAN GOKHALE
GIRGAUM, BOMBAY

From a microfilm: S.N. 14736

77. LETTER TO FULSINH

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 3, 1928

BHAI FULSINHJI,

I have your letter. I thank you for writing to me immediately what you know about the monkeys. Have you made sure that in both cases the nuisance can be stopped? Kindly make still more detailed inquiry and let me know.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 227

78. MISTAKEN HUMANITY?

Sjt. Jamshed Mehta is rightly accepted as the truest man of Karachi. Almost every good public movement there claims him as its own. He devotes practically the whole of his time to public movements. He is one of the best representatives of theosophy. His honesty and independence are as unquestioned as his patriotism. When therefore such a man commits an error of judgement or runs counter to public opinion, his friends feel sore at heart. Sjt. Jamshed Mehta, who is the President of the Karachi Municipality, seems to me to have committed an error of judgement. Though a lover of khadi he recently felt called upon to move on behalf of an absentee member a resolution about khadi which drew forth very strong opposition from the members. Another matter was his attitude about a product that has been introduced from Europe into India as vegetable ghee.

Many common friends have drawn my attention to the controversy that has been going on in Karachi on these topics and invited me to express my own views on them, I suppose, in the hope that they may either influence the President who knows my regard for him, or if they do not influence him, may at least prevent some of the Karachi public from being misled into wrong action owing to what the correspondents consider to be the erroneous views of the popular President. Whether my views produce any such influence or not, opinions on these questions of Sjt. Jamshed Mehta deserve a patient and respectful examination.

I

He tells me that he moved the khadi resolution in order to test the feeling of the Municipality and withdrew it when he saw that the members were opposed to it. I copy the resolution and the argument from the local Press:

This Corporation resolves to cancel its resolution No. 304 dated 2nd July, 1924 because compulsory purchase and use of hand-spun and handwoven khaddar in all cases has frequently resulted in pure waste of Municipal money in different departments of the Municipality.

In moving the above resolution, the President at the outset assured the house that he himself was actually in favour of popularizing the use of khadi but during the last three years the Corporation had spent no less than one lakh of rupees for encouraging this cottage industry but his honest opinion was that the poor menials wearing khadi supplied by the Corporation were undergoing great hardships. The Councillors were doing great injustice to themselves and to the ratepayers by spending such an enormous amount on khadi which did the wearers little good. It was really a cruelty to ask the sweepers to wear this heavy cloth and go in the streets. Moreover white khadi became dirty soon and the poor peons had to spend lot of money for washing. The colour was tried but found useless. The Corporation could give only two suits and they had to suffer much for keeping them clean. The President emphatically observed: “I tell you it is really a cruelty. We have spent nearly a lakh of rupees but Rs. 85,000 is really wasted. Our purpose has not been served. Unless and until we give them a better and lighter khadi of a superior quality at double the present cost, we should not think of giving khadi suits. The stuff we are now giving our peons is enough to bring tears in one’s eyes.”

Let us examine this argument. In judging the Municipal employees as he did by his own standard, I feel that the President has done the employees and the cause of khadi a serious injustice. His judgement is very like that of a delicate lady judging the appetite of her weather-beaten guests by her own or like that of an ant measuring out a few particles of flour to the elephant and feeling that she had meted out to her guest an exact measure—we know that the measure in each case would be false. The delicate lady and the ant would be right in their measure if they had guests of the same species finding themselves in the same circumstances.

In the Karachi case, the measure adopted by the President is wrong because the Municipal employees have not been delicately brought up like the mover of the resolution. The President’s measure is doubly false, first because the sweepers do not need the same fineness in their dress material as the President and secondly because they do not want the same style of dress which educated Indians have from fear, ignorance or ambition imitated from the rulers. I venture to suggest that the Councillors should revise their notions of decency and equip their employees with garments of a style in keeping with the climate and the manners of the country. They need not then fear to use the coarsest khadi. And they will save Municipal money, promote the comfort of the employees, revive true art and will at the same time serve the poorest of their countrymen whom they cannot reach save through khadi. If the President would do unto the employees as he would that they should do unto him, let him for a moment step into their shoes and see how he would feel and his measure would be right.

But assuming that the employees must have an unnatural uniform in order to suit Municipal vanity, it is not difficult to pick up fine khadi nowadays if the Municipality will pay the price, nor is it impossible to have khaki-coloured khadi for the purpose.

The cheapest and the most patriotic method will be to train the girls and the boys of the Municipal schools and for the Councillors to train themselves to spin fine yarn and have it woven locally. The other citizens will then copy the patriotic and industrious example of the Councillors and if say one-third Karachi devotes only half an hour to philanthropic spinning, there would be many times more than enough khadi to clothe the employees.

One valid objection may be taken to this course being adopted, namely that khadi thus produced will not support the paupers in whose interest it has been recommended to public corporations. Whilst the objection is sound so far as it goes, it must not be forgotten that if any city takes up spinning in the manner suggested by me, it will be very substantial though indirect service of pauper India in that the moral effect of such sacrificial spinning will be so pervading that there will be pro-dced a spinning atmosphere that would make the irresponsible masses take to it for supplementing their present income which is admitted to be altogether inadequate for human sustenance. Where the average daily income is less than seven pice, the addition of even one pice per day will be a princely addition.

But this may be treated as a counsel of perfection not worthy of consideration by practical business men. Anyway I know that the idealist President will not dismiss my suggestion quite so summarily. But for those who will not seriously and scientifically organize home-spinning in the manner suggested, I submit that no expense incurred for khadi need be considered as waste, no discomfort suffered on its account too much, when it is borne in mind that every pice spent upon khadi goes directly into the pockets of the needy and that even of this at least 85 per cent goes into the pockets of the poorest artisans including the semistarved spinners.

But says the President:

Why not supply the employees with uniform made of swadeshi mill cloth and save over sixty per cent of the price paid for khadi?

This is an argument I had least expected from Sjt. Jamshed Mehta the friend of the poor. Surely, if every Municipality gave a bounty of 60 per cent to khadi, it would not be wrong to do so assuming that it had the power so to do.

And I have repeatedly shown in these pages that there can be no comparison between khadi and mill-cloth even as there can be none between the home-made chapati, however costly it may be and troublesome to make, and cheap, easily prepared machine made biscuit. Mill-cloth needs no protection or patronage from the public in the sense that khadi does. Indian mill-cloth gets preference as it ought to when khadi is unavailable at any cost, when machine-made cloth becomes a necessity and when the choice lies only between foreign cloth and swadeshi mill-cloth. Khadi it is clear must displace both. Khadi has no established market like mill-cloth. It has not even become as yet a bazaar article. Every yard of khadi bought means at least eighty-five per cent in the mouths of the starving and the poor ones of India. Every yard of mill-cloth bought means more than 75 per cent in the pockets of the capitalists and less than 25 per cent in the pockets of the labourers who are never helpless, who are well able to take care of themselves, and who never starve or need starve in the sense that the helpless millions starve for whose sake khadi has been conceived. Indeed I should be surprised if the Municipal employees, whose supposed discomfort owing to wearing coarse khadi has moved the humanitarian Sjt. Jamshed Mehta to action, would not, if they were informed of the great national importance of khadi, themselves prefer it to swadeshi mill-cloth however comfortable the latter may be to wear. Khadi in my opinion is cheap at any cost so long as it functions to find work for and through work feed the millions.

II

Sjt. Jamshed Mehta is not only a humanitarian, he is an ardent vegetarian and dares to incur the wrath of friends for the sake of his principles. He has somehow come to the conclusion that the product known as vegetable ghee which enterprising foreign manufacturers have introduced into the Indian market is preferable to what passes as genuine ghee but what is according to him almost always adulterated with animal fats. Though I yield to none in my enthusiasm for vegetarianism and personally always avoid the bazaar ghee and would, if I could get some medical encouragement or could summon sufficient strength of mind, avoid even goat’s milk ghee, I could never bring myself to use the chemically doctored vegetable product which is generally palmed off on the gullible public as ghee.

So far as I have been able to examine medical authorities, they show that there is no effective vegetable substitute for ghee or animal fats, these being rich in vitamin A which they say is absolutely necessary for a person to keep in good health. We therefore arrive at this (for vegetarians) painful conclusion that whilst Sat adulterated ghee is bad from the vegetarian standpoint, from the medical it is harmless. The only proper course for jealous food reformers like Sjt. Jamshed Mehta is to move heaven and earth to ensure a never failing supply of pure ghee and to that end I invite him to join the Goseva Sangha if he has no other and more expeditious method of reaching the common goal. Let him municipalize the milk and ghee supply of Karachi and run an efficient Municipal dairy. Vegetable ghee deserves only to be boycotted at all cost. For it is itself often adulterated and unlike adulterated ghee equally often injurious to health being chemically treated and in almost every case it is worthless as a food. In this country which abounds in oil seeds, the fresh seed oils are infinitely superior to the prepared vegetable fats whose basis is mostly coconut. Everyone in India can prepare for himself good vegetable ghee from an undried cocoanut which can be procured cheap in any bazaar.

Young India, 4-10-1928

79. SPINNING IN ANCIENT INDIA

Sjt. C. Balaji Rao of Coimbatore, the indefatigable khadi lover, sends me the following interesting extracts which he has copied from Dr. Shamashastri’s learned translation of Kautilya’s Arthashastra (period 321-296 B.C.). These extracts, besides giving much valuable information on the manners of our countrymen during that period, show that spinning was a State concern as it should be today. The inexhaustible man-power that is running to waste in the country merely awaits utilization for want of organization.

Young India, 4-10-1928

1 Not reproduced here
MY DEAR MALKANI,

I cannot trace your previous letter. With reference to yours of the 27th ultimo I see that you will be free from the relief work at the latest at the end of this month I know that you have work for you in Sind, and I know too that you will make your presence felt, no matter where you are working. The only question is what should be your final choice. Of course I had set my mind upon you as the Secretary for the All-India Suppressed Class Association to be formed. But I cannot guide you in this matter. Your own instinct must be the best guide. After all you must make the choice, and therefore you must choose that work which is most to your liking and for which you may consider yourself to be the most fitted. If Sind needs you and you feel that you should bury yourself in Sind, I do not mind it; only you must make your final choice in so far as it is humanly possible.

I note what you say about your daughter. I do not like the thing overmuch. But I am sure that you have done the best that was possible in the circumstances. If it was not tragic, I should have a hearty laugh over your considering the expense of Rs. 2,000 a little thing. We poor people of the new age consider Rs. 10 a trifle too much. Ramdas’s marriage cost me probably one rupee, that is, one or two cocoanuts and two taklis for the bride and the bridegroom, two copies of the Gita and two copies of the Bhajanavali. Rs. 2,000 in Gujarat will be considered a fairly large sum even outside the Ashram limits. I do not think that even Jamnalalji spent Rs. 2,000 over Kamala’s wedding two years ago. But I know that if I measured Sind by the Gujarati footrule or the footrule of the new age, it would be a hopelessly false measurement. I suppose, for you, it is progress from perhaps Rs. 20,000 to Rs. 2,000, and if you were to go from Rs. 2,000 to Rs. 20, you would perhaps have to renounce your mother-in-law and to have a divorce from your wife. Considered from that point of view, Rs. 2,000 is perhaps not a bad bargain.

I hope you all keep good health.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

SIT. NARAINDAS MALKANI
HYDERABAD (SIND)

From a photostat: G.N. 888
81. LETTER TO D. B. KRISHNAMMA

THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 4, 1928

MY DEAR KRISHNAMMA,

I was delighted to receive the album and the frame. Some of the reproductions are very striking. You will show me the originals when, if ever, I come to Rajahmundry.

I hope you are keeping quite well.

Yours sincerely

M. K. GANDHI

SHRIMATI D. B. KRISHNAMMA
RAJAHMUNDY

From a microfilm: S.N. 14787

82. MESSAGE TO LAHORE STUDENTS’ CONFERENCE

[Before October 5, 1928]

Do not fear Government or any other power that may come in your way. GO forward and build a strong link between yourselves and the toiling millions who do not know even the meaning of the word ‘education’.

The Hindustan Times. 7-10-1928

83. TELEGRAM TO ANNIE BESANT

[October 5, 1928]

DR. BESANT

YOUR WIRE. AM CONVINCED IT WILL BE DISASTROUS IF NEHRU CONSTITUTION BREAKS DOWN FOR WANT COUNTRY’S SUPPORT WHICH CAN BE GIVEN WITHOUT PREJUDICE TO ATTEMPTS MADE REALIZE INDEPENDENCE GOAL. WHILST I AGREE THAT MAXIMUM AGREEMENT AMONG PARTIES NOT ALWAYS ESSENTIAL WE SHOULD STRIVE FOR

1 The message appeared under the date-line “Lahore, October 5”. The conference was to meet at Lahore on October 6.

2 In reply to her telegram received at Sabarmati on October 5, which read: “Srinivasa Iyengar interview Free Press calls on Congressmen keep aloof from All-Parties Conference ground independence not accepted goal in draft resolution. Expresses disbelief in working for maximum agreement among political parties. Feel that clear lead by you for immediate publication essential for success. Tomorrow’s conference started solely strengthen hands executive Lucknow Conference.”
IT IN MATTERS LIKE THIS WHERE NO NATIONAL INTEREST IS COMPROMISED.

GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 13700

84. LETTER TO SHANKARBHAI MANEKLAL DESAI

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 5, 1928

BHAI SHANKARBHAI.

I have your letter. Give this message from me to all who may come on the Rentia Baras day\(^2\) that if they want to perpetuate Haribhai’s memory in Kapadwanj they should perpetuate the work that he did. Whatever the difficulties none of the activities started by him should be abandoned or neglected.

Blessings from

Mohanadas

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—3: Kusumbehn Desaine, p. 82

85. TELEGRAM TO MOTILAL NEHRU

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
[October 6, 1928]

MOTILAL NEHRU

ANAND BHAVAN, ALLAHABAD

YOUR WIRE. DOCTOR BESANT ALSO WIRED. SENT FULL REPLY\(^4\) YESTERDAY. HOPE ALL WILL GO WELL.

GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 13702

\(^1\) Brother of Harilal M. Desai. He established the Sevasangh at Kapadwanj in memory of Harilal Desai who had passed away in July, 1927. For details vide also “Death of a Satyagrahi”, 7-8-1927

\(^2\) Literally, ‘Spinning-wheel 12th,’ Gandhiji’s birthday according to the Vikram era; the day was celebrated by non-stop spinning.

\(^3\) In reply to his telegram (S.N. 13799) dated October 5, which read: “Srinivasa Iyengar improperly interfering with Madras Provincial All-Parties Conference Mrs. Besant holding tomorrow by calling upon Congressmen keep aloof as independence resolution not accepted. Conference called simply to adopt Lucknow decisions as maximum agreement reached cannot possibly compromise Congress. Srinivasa declared disbelief in working for maximum agreement. Kindly wire to him to desist. Have wired Ansari and am issuing Press Statement.”

\(^4\) Vide the preceding item.
86. TELEGRAM TO T. R. PHOOKAN

ASHRAM SABARMATI,
October 6, 1928

T. R. PHOOKAN
GAUHATI

BEING TOO OVERWORKED REPLY. SUGGEST YOUR APPROACHING MONEYED CONGRESSMEN.

GANDHI

From a microfilm: S.N. 13549

87. ‘WHAT ARE WE TO DO?’

Two weeks ago I wrote in Navajivan a note on the tragedy in Godhra, where Sjt. Purushottam Shah bravely met his death at the hands of his assailants, and gave the note the heading “HinduMuslim Fight in Godhra”. Several Hindus did not like the heading and addressed angry letters asking me to correct it. I found it impossible to accede to their demand. Whether there is one victim or more, whether there is a free fight between the two communities, or whether one assumes the offensive and the other simply suffers, I should describe the event as a fight if the whole series of happenings were the result of a state of war between the two communities. Whether in Godhra or in other places, there is today a state of war between the two communities. Fortunately the countryside is still free from the war fever which is mainly confined to towns and cities, where, in some form or other, fighting is continually going on. Even the correspondents who have written to me about Godhra do not seem to deny the fact that the happenings arose out of the communal antagonisms that existed there.

If the correspondents had simply addressed themselves to the heading, I should have satisfied myself with writing to them privately and written nothing in Navajivan about it. But there are other letters in which the correspondents have vented their ire on different counts. A volunteer from Ahmedabad who had been to Godhra writes:

You say that you must be silent over these quarrels. Why were you not

1 In reply to addressee’s telegram (S.N. 13543) which read: “My letter from Simla regarding decree for Rs. 13,500 against us for Congress dues. Please devise means to save.”

2 The Gujarati original of this appeared in Navajivan 7-10-1928. This is a translation by Mahadev Desai.

silent over the Khilafat, and why did you exhort us to join the Muslims? Why are you not silent about your principles of ahimsa? How can you justify your silence when the two communities are running at each other’s throats and the Hindus are being crushed to atoms? How does ahimsa come there? I invite your attention to two cases:

A Hindu shopkeeper thus complained to me: “Mussalmans purchase bags of rice from my shop, often never paying for them. I cannot insist on payment, for fear of their looting my godowns. I have therefore to make an involuntary gift of about 50 to 75 maunds of rice every month.”

Others complained: “Mussalmans invade our quarters and insult our women in our presence, and we have to sit still. If we dare to raise a protest, we are done for. We dare not even lodge a complaint against them.”

What would you advise in such cases? How would you bring your ahimsa into play? Or even here would you prefer to remain silent?

These and similar questions have been answered in these pages over and over again, but as they are still being raised, I had better explain my views once more at the risk of repetition.

Ahimsa is not the way of the timid or the cowardly. It is the way of the brave, ready to face death. He who perishes sword in hand is no doubt brave, but he who faces death without raising his little finger and without flinching is braver. But he who surrenders his rice bags for fear of being beaten is a coward and no votary of ahimsa. He is innocent of ahimsa. He, who for fear of being beaten, suffers the women of his household to be insulted, is not manly but just the reverse. He is fit neither to be a husband nor a father, nor a brother. Such people have no right to complain.

These cases have nothing to do with the inveterate enmity between Hindus and Mussalmans. Where there are fools there are bound to be knaves, where there are cowards there are bound to be bullies, whether they are Hindus or Mussalmans. Such cases used to happen even before the outbreak of these communal hostilities. The question here therefore is not how to teach one of the two communities a lesson or how to humanize it, but how to teach a coward to be brave.

If the thinking sections of both the communities realize the cowardice and folly at the back of the hostilities, we can easily end them. Both have to be brave, both have to be wise. If both or either deliberately get wise, theirs will be the way of non-violence. If both fight and learn wisdom only by bitter experience, the way will be one of violence. Either way, there is no room for cowards in a society of men, i.e., in a society which loves freedom. Swaraj is not for cowards.

It is idle therefore to denounce ahimsa or to be angry with me on the strength of the cases cited. Ever since my experience of the distortion of ahimsa in Bettiah in 1921,\(^1\) I have been repeating over and over again that he who cannot protect himself or his nearest and Dearest or their honour by non-violently facing death, may and ought to do so by violently dealing with the oppressor. He who can do neither of the two is a burden. He has no business to be the head of a family. He must either hide himself, or must rest content to live for ever in helplessness and be prepared to crawl like a worm at the bidding of a bully.

I know only one way—the way of ahimsa. The way of \textit{himsa} goes against my grain. I do not want to cultivate the power to inculcate \textit{himsa}. As ahimsa has no place in the atmosphere of cowardice prevailing today, I must needs be reticent over the riots we hear of from day to day. This exhibition of my helplessness cannot be to my liking. But God never ordains that only things that we like should happen and things that we do not like should not happen. In spite of the helplessness, the faith sustains me that He is the Help of the helpless, that He comes to one’s succour only when one throws himself on His mercy. It is because of this faith that I cherish the hope that God will one day show me a path which I may confidently commend to the people. With me the conviction is as strong as ever that willy-nilly Hindus and Mussalmans must be friends one day. No one can say how and when that will happen. The future is entirely in the hands of God. But He has vouchsafed to us the ship of Faith which alone can enable us to cross the ocean of Doubt.

\textit{Young India}, 11-10-1928

88. \textit{THE TANGLE OF AHIMSA}^2

My article “The Fiery Ordeal”^3 has brought down upon me the ire of many an incensed critic. Some of them seem to have made the violence of their invective against me a measure of their solicitude for ahimsa. Others, as if to test my capacity for ahimsa, have cast all decorum and propriety to the winds and have poured upon me the lava of their unmeasured and acrimonious criticism, while still some others have felt genuinely grieved at what seems to them a sad aberration on my part and have written to me letters to unburden their grief to me. I have not the time to reply to all the letters that have been sent to me, nor, do I feel it to be necessary. As for the acrimonious

\(^{1}\text{Vide “Dyerism in Champaran”, 15-12-1920}\)
\(^{2}\text{The Gujarati original of this appeared in }\text{Navajivan, 7-10-1928. This is a translation by Pyarelal.}\)
\(^{3}\text{Vide “The Fiery Ordeal”}\)
letters, the only possible purpose that they can serve is to provide me with some exercise in forbearance and non-violence. Leaving aside such letters, therefore, I shall here try to examine some arguments that I have been able to glean from other and soberly written communications.

I am always prepared to give my best consideration to letters that are brief and to the point and are neatly written out in ink in a clear legible hand. For I claim to be a humble seeker after truth and am conducting Navajivan not merely to teach but also to learn.

To come now to the objections and the counsels addressed to me by my correspondents they may be summed up as follows:

1. You should now retire from the field of ahimsa.
2. You should confess that your views about ahimsa are imported from the West.
3. You must not express views even when they are correct if there is a possibility of their being misused.
4. If you believe in the law of karma then your killing of the calf was a vain attempt to interfere with the operation of that law.
5. What warrant had you for believing that the calf was bound not to recover? Have you not heard of cases of recovery after the doctors have pronounced them to be hopeless?

Whether I should retire or not from the field of ahimsa, or for the matter of that from any other field, is essentially and solely for me to judge. A man can give up a right, but he may not give up a duty without being guilty of a grave dereliction. Unpopularity and censure are often the lot of a man who wants to speak and practise the truth. I hold it to be the bounded duty of a satyagrahi openly and freely to express his opinions which he holds to be correct and of benefit to the public even at the risk of incurring popular displeasure and worse. So long as I believe my views on ahimsa to be correct, it would be a sin of omission on my part not to give expression to them.

I have nothing to be ashamed of if my views on ahimsa are the result of my Western education. I have never tabooed all Western ideas, nor am I prepared to anathematize everything that comes from the West as inherently evil. I have learnt much from the West and I should not be surprised to find that I had learnt something about ahimsa too from the West. I am not concerned what ideas of mine are the result of my foreign contacts. It is enough for me to know that my views on ahimsa have now become a part and parcel of my being.

I have publicly discussed my views in the matter of the calf, not necessarily because I believe them to be correct, but because they are to the best of my knowledge based on pure ahimsa and as such likely to throw light on the tangled problem of ahimsa.

As for the problem of the monkeys, I have discussed it publicly, because I do not know my duty in the matter, and I am anxious to be enlightened. Let me assure the readers that my effort has not been in vain and I have already received several helpful suggestions from my correspondents. Let me further assure them that I would not proceed to the extreme length of killing unless I am absolutely driven to it. It is because I am anxious to be spared this painful necessity that I have invited suggestions for dealing with these persistent and unwelcome guests.

I firmly believe in the law of karma, but I believe too in human endeavour. I regard as the summa bonum of life the attainment of salvation through karma by annihilating its effects by detachment. If it is a violation of the law of karma to cut short the agony of an ailing animal by putting an end to its life, it is no less so to minister to the sick or try to nurse them back to life. And yet if a man were to refuse to give medicine to a patient or to nurse him on the ground of karma, we would hold him to be guilty of inhumanity and himsa. Without therefore entering into a discussion about the eternal controversy regarding predestination and free will I will simply say here that I deem it to be the highest duty of man to render what little service he can.

I admit that there was no guarantee that the calf would not recover. I have certainly known cases that were pronounced by doctors to be hopeless and were cured afterwards. But even so I hold that a man is bound to make the utmost use of his reason, circumscribed and poor as undoubtedly it is, and to try to penetrate the mists of ignorance by its light and try to act accordingly. And that is precisely what we do in countless cases in our everyday life. But strangely paradoxical as it may seem, it is nevertheless a fact that the moment we come to think of death the very idea frightens us out of our wits and entirely paralyses our reasoning faculty, although as Hindus we ought to be the least affected by the thought of death, since from the very cradle we are brought up on the doctrines of the immortality of the spirit and the transitoriness of the body. Even if it were found that my decision to poison the calf was wrong, it could have done no harm to the soul of the animal. If I have erred I am prepared to take the consequences of my error, but I refuse to go into hysteries because by my action I possibly cut short the painful existence of a dying calf say by a couple of hours. And the rule that I have applied to the calf I am prepared to apply in the case of my own dear ones as well. Who knows how often we bring those we love to a premature end by our coddling, infatuation, wrong diagnosis or wrong treatment? The letters that I have received from my correspondents more than ever confirm me in my conviction that in our effusiveness over matters like this we forget the elementary duty of kindness, are led away from the path of true love, and discredit our ahimsa. The fear of death is thus the greatest obstacle in the way of our realizing the true nature of ahimsa.

Young India, 11-10-1928

89. LETTER TO G. K. DEVDHAR

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati, October 7, 1928

MY DEAR DEVDHAR,

This letter will serve to introduce to you Shrimati Urmila Devi who is the only surviving widowed sister of the late Deshbandhu Chittaranjan Das. Her only son is studying at the Agricultural College in Poona. In order to supervise his education and be near him, she has broken up her home in Calcutta and intends to settle down in Poona. I told her that it would be better for her and would fit in with her spirit of service if she stayed at the Seva Sadan and did some work there or stayed at Professor Karve’s University, whichever she preferred or whichever was possible. I would therefore like you to discuss with Shrimati Urmila Devi the possibilities of her being able to render service and otherwise advise her. Of course she has no desire to ask you to go out of your way to accommodate her in the Seva Sadan. She would like to feel that she would really be of service to the institution if she decided to stay there at all.

At first I thought I would give a separate letter to Prof. Karve. But whilst dictating this, I thought that I would confine myself only to this letter and leave you to introduce Shrimati Urmila Devi to Prof. Karve and let her see both the institutions and make her choice, if a choice is at all open to her. And naturally what I have said regarding the Seva Sadan applies equally to Prof. Karve’s Home.

I have known Shrimati Urmila Devi intimately for several years and I know how eager she is for doing some service.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 13544

1 Of the Servants of India Society
90. LETTER TO ROLAND J. WILD

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 7, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I was delighted to receive your letter. I am sorry Mr. Wilson has not been able to visit Sabarmati. I am sending you a telegram tomorrow, today being Sunday, as follows:

“Your letter. You will be welcome any time. Advisable your coming Ahmedabad before going Bardoli. Letter follows.”

I expect to be in the Ashram during the whole of the month. You will be therefore welcome whenever you arrive. On Mondays I take my silence as you may be aware.

I wonder if you will stay with us at the Ashram. Ours is, as you may know, a meagre board and extremely simple life as it may appear to you. But if you can accommodate yourself to the life of the Ashram, of course we should all be delighted to have you in our midst.

I quite agree with you that it will be better for you to visit the Ashram before going to Bardoli.

Yours sincerely,

ROLAND J. WILD, ESQ.
ASSISTANT EDITOR, “THE PIONEER”, ALLAHABAD

From a microfilm: S.N. 14463

91. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

SABARMATI,
[October 7, 1928]

CHI. RAMDAS.

Your letters serve just the purpose of giving information about the services you have rendered. I have learnt more about the causes of fever from Vallabhbhai. If the fever is not related to the wound, there is nothing to fear. You did well in saving an anna. But due to an oversight on my part, I spent one anna in posting the same letter to Manilal. That means a day’s wage of a spinner is lost. But hardly anyone atones for that. One cannot go to heaven without dying oneself. I cannot atone for my sins through representatives. I have to do it myself. The true atonement for one’s sin is not to commit that sin again. I have to find the remedy to make up for my negligence. In fact, I have found it out. Let us see when it bears fruit.

1 From the postmark

Blessings from

BAPU

SHRI RAMDAS GANDHI
PATIDAR ASHRAM
NANPURA, SURAT

From the Gujarati original: Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

92. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

Monday, October 8, 1928

CHI. MIRA,

I receive your letters regularly. Pray do not be afraid of length. I want to know everything about you and your doings. It pleases me immensely to find you happy and well and gaining all the experience. I am glad you spoke firmly to Jethalal. It would be a good thing if he sticks to his promise.

The Ashram is settling down to the new change. It is yet too early to prophesy. Two varieties of cooking, spiced and unspiced, commenced today. I do not know the members in each division.

The clouds having dispersed, the days are very hot nowadays.

The Austrian friends\(^1\) have now learnt carding and they insist on bringing all their slivers to me. So I am again overloaded. Chhotelal had an attack of malaria. He is better and permitted to do some work. Vimla has again got the fever.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5312. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 8202

\(^1\) Frederic and Francisca Standenath
93. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

October 8, 1928

CHI. MIRA,

After I wrote to you at Almora,\footnote{Vide the preceding item.} I got your wire. I am however letting that letter go to its destination. It is fairly long but there is nothing much in it.

Malarial fever is still with us. Chhotelal’s bakery is ready. He has been making experiments.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5311. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 8201

94. LETTER TO V. A. SUNDARAM

October 8, 1928

MY DEAR SUNDARAM,

Though no one likes to lose his mother, I do not propose to send you my condolences. Your mother died happy in the thought of having brought up good and dutiful children and having lived a godly life. A death such as hers is to be envied. I hope both of you are keeping well.

With love,

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 3208

95. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

Unrevised October 8, 1928

MY DEAR SATIS BABU,

I am fatigued and overworked. Arrears are increasing and they worry me. Hence the delay in replying.

I was working out a solution for Hemprabha Devi and Tarini. Meanwhile came your letter about their disposal. I was unwilling to have them in the Ashram. For I knew that it did not suit her last time. And I could not hit upon another place. Tarini was none too happy in Wardha. Some place must be thought out in or near Bengal. I am no further forward even now.

VOL. 43 : 10 SEPTEMBER, 1928 - 14 JANUARY, 1929  89
How happy I should feel if they could go to Comilla. I expect you to conquer Abhoy Ashram even though the Pratishthan has to suffer or to die. Only, the death or the suffering must be conscious and voluntary, not mechanical and forced. This reflection arises out of your remarks about Utkal. So far as I can see, various organizations will come into being as khadi progresses. It is a condition of its growth. But the central or chief provincial organization has so to shape its course that by force of character and ability, it commands attention and respect. One difficulty with the Pratishthan is that it has not many self-sacrificing volunteers. This is due to your own upbringing. Your own personal sacrifice was phenomenal and so you carried few with you from the environment that you had created in the chemical works. Your sudden change of life had to take root and grow into a big tree before it could cover saplings. That you have only now begun to do. I remember the conversation we had in Atrai, how you dispensed with volunteers and got paid men and made of the famine work a success. If your upbringing had been otherwise, you would have made of the work a success with the volunteers. Success of ahimsa depends upon the successful organization of voluntary workers. And khadi is an attempt at working out ahimsa on a fairly large scale. We will succeed if we have patience and tapasya enough.

I hope my meaning is clear. This letter must not put you out or dishearten you. I want it to Trace you for the future difficulties. My letter is intended to be a stimulant. When I began it, I had no notion of the length it would run to or what it was to contain.

Let Utkal be a lesson that Dr. Ray should not be taken for any fixed programme. It is really too much to expect him to go through a sustained effort in khadi. He has too many irons in the fire, too many calls upon his time and he is now not a youth. The marvel is that he is still available for tours, etc.

Why not Giridih again for Hemprabha Devi and Tarini? You must send them to a salubrious climate.

With love,

From a microfilm: S.N. 13701

---

1 The source has “but”.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
96. LETTER TO CHHOTALAL TEJPAL

October 9, 1928

BHAISHRI CHHOTALAL,

I have your letter. I have not received your book. I will go through it when I get it. Please send to Mr. Clayton Pragji Desai’s address (Box No. 5390, Johannesburg), so that I need not write.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

SHRI C. TEJPAL
ARTIST, RAJKOT

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2587

97. LETTER TO MOTIBHAI

Ashram,

October 9, 1928

BHAI MOTIBHAI,

You have raised a relevant question. The feeling of high and low has become deeply ingrained in us. The use of the singular in speaking to persons is its least expression. The feeling is the least in the Ashram, but I see that it is there. Continue, both of you, to exercise self-restraint to the best of your ability.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/12

98. LETTER TO HASAN ALI

Ashram,

October 9, 1928

DEAR HASAN ALI,

I do not at all believe in the Shuddhi and Tabligh movements as they are being carried on today. But I have repeatedly said that if the Arya Samjists do wish to carry on Shuddhi nobody can stop them. Nobody can forcibly prevent anyone from doing a thing so long as that thing is not against morality.

The moment I cease to be an optimist I shall no longer be able to live. Some day the Muslims are sure to co-operate. Even today many of them are doing so.

Since you are determined, God will certainly help you to observez observe the vow of brahmacharya. Frugality in eating and non-stimulating food is a good external aid. The real means is heart-felt prayer.

I have read some literature of theosophy, I like its general principles, but not its occult experiments. I am unable to believe in the Jagadguru and in Krishnamurti. I am not interested in the subject.

I do not believe in the traditional practice of shraddha. But I do consider it right and necessary to pray for the dead as for the living. I see great confusion about the meaning of the law of karma. It only means that no action is without its effect. But new actions mix with the old and continually produce new and mixed results. And since the individual souls are intimately related to one another, their actions also are so related. Prayer is a new action producing good result.

Fasting without water certainly involves greater self-control. But from the point of view of health water is necessary. One cannot fast without water for many days. I have observed in many Muslim friends during the roza that they almost wipe out the merit of fasting for sixteen hours without water by eating at night anything and everything in any quantity they like. Praying for God’s forgiveness does not wipe out a sin, but it purifies the soul, and if one feels genuine repentance one desists from sin in future.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/14

99. LETTER TO RAIHANA TYABJI

THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 10, 1928

MY DEAR RAIHANA,

I have your letter¹. Pashabhai also wrote about the same thing. I think that the matter is too trivial for you to worry over. You must dismiss it entirely from your mind.

With love,

BAPU

From a photostat: S.N. 9610

¹ Dated October 5. Raihana, daughter of Abbas Tyabji, had formed a Youth League in Baroda. Another woman was chosen President. Later the members disapproved of a certain action of the President and courteously asked her to explain it, whereupon the latter turned abusive. Some members wanted to expose her behaviour in the papers. Raihana was hesitant about taking such an action and wrote to Gandhiji for advice (S.N. 13542).
100. LETTER TO GIRDHARILAL
SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 10, 1928

DEAR LALA GIRDHARILAL,

Do you know anything about this lady?

Yours sincerely,

LALA GIRDHARILAL
LAHORE

From a microfilm: S.N. 13280

101. LETTER TO VINAYAK
ASHRAM,
October 10, 1928

BHAISHRI VINAYAK,

We cannot forcibly stop anyone from committing sin. So long as men and women feel immoral craving of the flesh such incidents will continue to take place in spite of all efforts to prevent them. The duty of you all is to live a life of self-control and continually increase the purity of the surrounding atmosphere and your own ability for service.

From a copy of the Gujarati: KusumbehN Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/15

102. LETTER TO BANARSIDAS CHATURVEDI
October 10, 1928

BHAIR BANARSIDAS,

I have two letters from you to be answered.

I sent over for Young India the one about ‘Chocolate’

1 The enclosure to this letter is “The Widow”, a story by Katherine published in a magazine. In 1921 during the foreign cloth boycott movement a poor widow, Sita, possessing a single sari—of foreign make—was threatened with leprosy if she kept it. Later demented by fear of leprosy and enforced nakedness she hanged herself.

2 A collection of Hindi short stories by ‘Ugra’ (Pandeya Bechan Sharma) which gave rise to a controversy in Hindi circles when the addressee condemned it for obscenity. Later he retracted his condemnation and quoted from Gandhiji’s letter in the second edition of that book.
solely upon your letter. I thought it was not right to make comments in this way; a book ought to be read. I finished it today. The impression I formed is not the same as yours. The purpose of the book, I think, is pure. I do not know if its impact is good or bad. The author has aroused disgust at inhuman conduct. I shall now have your letter taken off the chase.

What shall I write about Maharaj Kunvar Singhji? I have been thinking a lot. Writing alone will serve no purpose. Sastriji is making efforts. I am vigilant.

Only the Bihar Government can, if it chooses, do something in the case of Parbhu Singh; otherwise what can be done? I do not wish to take part in this affair.

Yours,

MOHANDAS

SIT. BANARSIDAS CHATURVEDI
91 UPPER CIRCULAR ROAD, CALCUTTA

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2521

103. GOD IS

Correspondents often invite me to answer in these pages questions about God. That is the penalty I have to pay for what an English friend calls the God stunt in Young India. Whilst I am unable to notice all such questions in these columns, the following compels an answer:

I read your Young India of May 12, 1927, p. 149, where you write, “I think it is wrong to expect certainties in this world, where all else but God that is Truth is an uncertainty.”

Young India, p. 152: “God is long-suffering and patient. He lets the tyrant dig his own grave, only issuing grave warnings at stated intervals.”

I humbly beg to say that God is not a certainty. His goal ought to be to spread truth all round. Why does He allow the world to be populated by bad people of various shades? Bad people with their unscrupulousness flourish all round and they spread contagion and thus transmit immorality and dishonesty to posterity.

1 Gandhiji obviously means Kunvar Maharaj Singh whose name along with Kurma V. Reddi’s was being considered to succeed V. S. Srinivasa Sastri as Agent-General in South Africa
2 Vide An Autobiography, Pt. III, Ch. XXIII.
3 Vide “Notes", sub-title Evils of Machine-Milling. 12-5-1927
Should not God, omniscient and omnipotent as He is, know where wickedness is by His omniscience and kill wickedness by His omnipotence there and then and nip all rascality in the bud and not allow wicked people to flourish?

Why should God be long-suffering and be patient? What influence can He wield if He be so? The world goes on with all its rascality and dishonesty and tyranny.

If God allows a tyrant to dig his own grave, why should He not weed out a tyrant before his tyranny oppresses the poor? Why allow full play to tyranny and then allow a tyrant, after his tyranny has ruined and demoralized thousands of people, to go to his grave?

The world continues to be as bad as it ever was. Why have faith in that God who does not use His powers to change the world and make it a world of good and righteous men?

I know vicious men with their vices living long and healthy lives. Why should not vicious men die early as a result of their vices?

I wish to believe in God but there is no foundation for my faith. Kindly enlighten me through Young India and change my disbelief into belief.

The argument is as old as Adam. I have no original answer for it. But I permit myself to state why I believe. I am prompted to do so because of the knowledge that there are young men who are interested in my views and doings.¹

There is an indefinable mysterious Power that pervades everything. I feel it, though I do not see it. It is this unseen Power which makes Itself felt and yet defies all proof, because it is so unlike all that I perceive through my senses. It transcends the senses.

But it is possible to reason out the existence of God to a limited extent. Even in ordinary affairs we know that people do not know, who rules or why and how he rules. And yet they know that there is a power that certainly rules. In my tour last year in Mysore I met many poor villagers and I found upon inquiry that they did not know who ruled Mysore. They simply said some god ruled it. If the knowledge of these poor people was so limited about their ruler, I, who am infinitely lesser than God than they than their ruler, need not be surprised if I do not realize the presence of God, the King of kings. Nevertheless I do feel as the poor villagers felt about Mysore that there is orderliness in the Universe, there is an unalterable Law governing everything and every being that exists or lives. It is not a blind law; for no blind law can govern the conduct of living beings and, thanks to the marvellous researches of Sir J. C. Bose, it can now be proved that even matter is life. That Law then which governs all life is God. Law and the Law-giver are one. I may not deny the Law or the Law-giver, because I know so little about It or Him. Even as my denial or ignorance of the existence of an earthly power will avail me nothing, so will not my denial of God and His Law liberate me from its operation; whereas humble and mute acceptance of divine authority makes life’s journey easier even as the acceptance of earthly rule makes life under it easier.

¹ What follows, excluding the last sentence and the stanza from Newman, was recorded on October 20, 1931, by the Columbia Broadcasting Company, London, during Gandhi’s stay in Kingsley Hall.

I do dimly perceive that whilst everything around me is ever changing, ever dying, there is underlying all that change a living Power that is changeless, that holds all together, that creates, dissolves and recreates. That informing Power or Spirit is God. And since nothing else I see merely through the senses can or will persist, He alone is.

And is this Power benevolent or malevolent? I see It as purely benevolent. For I can see that in the midst of death life persists, in the midst of untruth, truth persists, in the midst of darkness light persists. Hence I gather that God is Life, Truth, Light. He is Love. He is the supreme Good.

But he is no God who merely satisfies the intellect if He ever does. God to be God must rule the heart and transform it. He must express Himself in every the smallest act of His votary. This can only be done through a definite realization more real than the five senses can ever produce. Sense perceptions can be, often are, false and deceptive, however real they may appear to us. Where there is realization outside the senses it is infallible. It is proved not by extraneous evidence but in the transformed conduct and character of those who have felt the real presence of God within.

Such testimony is to be found in the experiences of an unbroken line of prophets and sages in all countries and climes. To reject this evidence is to deny oneself.

This realization is preceded by an immovable faith. He who would in his own person test the fact of God’s presence can do so by a living faith. And since faith itself cannot be proved by extraneous evidence, the safest course is to believe in the moral government of the world and therefore in the supremacy of the moral law, the law of truth and love. Exercise of faith will be the safest where there is a clear determination summarily to reject all that is contrary to Truth and Love.

But the foregoing does not answer the correspondent’s argument. I confess to him that I have no argument to convince him through reason. Faith transcends reason. All I can advise him to do is not to attempt the impossible. I cannot account for the existence of evil by any rational method. To want to do so is to be coequal with God. I am therefore humble enough to recognize evil as such. And I call God long-suffering and patient precisely because He permits evil in the world. I know that He has no evil in Him, and yet if there is evil, He is the author of it and yet untouched by it.

I know too that I shall never know God if I do not wrestle with and against evil even at the cost of life itself. I am fortified in the belief by my own humble and limited experience. The purer I try to become, the nearer I feel to He to God. How much more should I be, when my faith is not a mere apology as it is today but has become as immovable as the Himalayas and as white and bright as the snows on their peaks? Meanwhile I invite the correspondent to pray with Newman who sang from experience:

Lead, kindly Light, amid the encircling gloom,
Lead Thou me on;
The night is dark and I am far from home,
Lead Thou me on;
Keep Thou my feet, I do not ask to see
The distant scene; one step enough for me.

Young India, 11-10-1928

104. LETTER TO KHURSHED NAOROJI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 11, 1928

I have your long letter, and I am glad you have written to me so fully. There is no cause whatsoever for losing hope. Yours is a new venture. It may therefore take time. But I do want you to add Indian music to your accomplishments, if it is at all possible to do so.

Do come again and pass a few days at the Ashram with me. Nothing can be finer than that you should be able to take to the Ashram life, but I know that it is a very difficult thing for you to do.

At present we have an Austrian couple. Wife knows both vocal and instrumental music. She seems to be very accomplished. She speaks English only indifferently. She is very fond of sacred music. How I wish you could meet her and hear her.

MISS KHURSHED NAOROJI
NAPEAN SEA ROAD, MALABAR HILLS, BOMBAY

From a photostat: S.N. 13546
105. LETTER TO JUGALKISHORE

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
October 11, 1928

My dear Jugalkishore,

Your letter has been in my file for a long time, but I have been helpless. It is only today whilst everybody is spinning and I have also to spin much longer than on ordinary days that I have been able to find time for overtaking the arrears of correspondence.

Your scheme is good, but reads very ambitious. Two things occur to me. You offer Rs. 75 to those who are married and Rs. 30 to those who are unmarried. I think that you should abolish the distinction, and offer the same thing to either. You may say that you will consider the cases of married people on merits. And if the wives of such people are also prepared to do the village work, stipend may be increased. You should also have a pledge from all about khadi, untouchability, temperance, etc. And instead of saying Hindi preferably, you should make Hindi compulsory. I think you should firmly refuse to take those who do not know Hindi well. You are quite right in saying that your sphere of work will be in the U.P. Why therefore burden yourself with any student who does not know Hindi well?

I am not publishing the scheme just now. In any event, you do not expect me to publish it in full. Let me know if it has already been sanctioned and in working order and if it is, I will gladly notice it in the pages of Young India.

I hope both of you are keeping well and doing well.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm: S.N. 13703

106. TELEGRAM TO MOTILAL NEHRU

October 12, 1928

Motilal Nehru
Allahabad

Sorry hear your fever. Wire condition also Kamala’s.

Gandhi

From handwritten draft: S.N. 2456
107. TELEGRAM TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

October 12, 1928

VALLABHBHAI PATEL
SWARAJ ASHRAM, BARDOLI

EXPECTED LETTER RECEIVED REPUDIATING CATEGORICALLY ANY UNDERSTANDING. BETTER COME HERE CONSIDER FURTHER STEPS.

BAPU

From handwritten draft: S.N. 2456

108. TELEGRAM TO MEERUT POLITICAL CONFERENCE

October 12, 1928

SECRETARY, POLITICAL CONFERENCE
MEERUT

SORRY UNABLE ATTEND. WISH CONFERENCE EVERY SUCCESS.

GANDHI

From handwritten draft: S.N. 2456

109. LETTER TO ELIZABETH KNUDSEN

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 12, 1928.

DEAR MISS KNUDSEN,

I was delighted to receive your letter after such a long time.
I endorse your rebuke about roses. You are not aware evidently of the tremendous movement that is going on in India at the present moment for the uplift of women.
I hope you are doing and keeping well.

Yours sincerely,

MISS E. KNUDSEN
Y.W.C.A. BUILDING, KARACHI

From a microfilm: S.N. 13548
110. LETTER TO SIR M. V. JOSHI

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter which was received only yesterday. As I have already intimated in reply to a previous enquiry through Shrimati Saraladevi Ambalal Sarabhai, I very much regret that I shall be unable to give evidence before your Committee. I hope you will therefore please excuse me.

Yours sincerely,

SIR M. V. JOSHI
AGE OF CONSENT COMMITTEE, CAMP AHMEDABAD

From a photostat: S.N. 13550

111. LETTER TO R. N. SHRIVASTAVA

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 12, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter for which I thank you. Evidently we look at the same thing from opposite points of view. You think that killing in self-defence is not himsa, whereas the killing of the calf for its own good, no matter how mistaken it might afterwards be discovered to be, is himsa. Here I see no meeting ground. I regard even the killing of a snake to be himsa. That I may not be able to avoid it, being afraid of the snake, does not make the act of destruction any the less himsa.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. RUPNARAYAN SHRIVASTAVA
C/O SHETH JAMNADAS, M.L.A., JUBBALPUR, C.P.

From a photostat: S.N. 13551

1 In reply to his letter (S.N. 13545) dated October 9, requesting Gandhiji to give evidence before the Age of Consent Committee at his convenience during their stay at Ahmedabad from October 15 to 19. The Committee was appointed by the Government, following discussions on the Child-marriage Bill introduced in the Central Legislative Assembly, to examine and report on the question.
112. LETTER TO S. SUBRAMANIAM

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 12, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I am sending you the sandals and the veshti you are so insistent on, deducting the postage from your donation.

With regard to the good saris and good veshtis, they can be had from the Khadi Bhandar, Princess Street, Bombay. I do not think is any V.P. system with Malaya. You will therefore have to send them cash before they can execute the order.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. S. SUBRAMANIAM
GOVERNMENT ENGLISH SCHOOL, SEGAMAT, JOHORE, MALAYA

From a microfilm: S.N. 13552

113. LETTER TO ISAAC SANTRA

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 12, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter for which I thank you. I shall certainly go through the pamphlet when it comes to me. But I prefer doing this kind of work in my own way. At the present moment I am averse to mixing up with any Empire thing because I distrust the Empire.

Yours sincerely,

ISAAC SANTRA, ESQ.
OFFICER-IN-CHARGE LEPROSY SURVEY
C/o POST MASTER, JAMNER, EAST KHANDESH

From a microfilm: S.N. 13553

114. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 12, 1928

I have your letter before reaching Prabhudas’s place. It delights me to find you enjoying your travel and writing so cheerfully about it. I want you to return in full vigour and complete cheerfulness.

There are signs at the Ashram of winter approaching. The nights are now very cool and we require a fair amount of covering. Malaria is on the increase at the Ashram. Rajkishori is down with Sever and so is Sarada. Chimanlal and little Sarada had been down for the last three days.

1 Dhoti

As usual yesterday all the Ashram people, labourers included, had the fruit repast together. We numbered over 300. The repast consisted of dates, groundnuts, bananas and kismis.1

From the original: C.W. 5313. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 8203

115. LETTER TO H. S. L. POLAK

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI

October 12, 1928

MY DEAR Bhai,

I have your letter of well-deserved rebuke. But it was Ganesan’s oversight pure and simple. The sending was not done through the Ashram. Ganesan is the publisher and he is a very careful man. But somehow or the other he forgot to send a copy2 to you. Andrews got a copy or copies because he cabled.

And for your rebuke about the omission of Gabriel Isaac, I don’t know that the name was omitted. I have just looked up the index to the English translation. I missed his name in the index. But of course that is no proof of the fact that the name is not to be found in the History’. But even if it is omitted, of course it is an unintentional omission. I have often talked about him and his sacrifice to the Ashram people. I often think of him and his goodness and simplicity. But I can’t account for the omission, if there is an omission. I dare say that some other dear names also have been omitted quite unintentionally.

The confusion about the jails does not much worry me. These inaccuracies are bound to be found when a man with a crowded past beyond, recalls events that happened ten years before the time when he begins to recall them. Is it not enough that the substance of the History is absolutely true and that it is free from any bias? Such is the testimony given by those who have read the book. And I dare say you too will give me the same testimony.

Probably by this time you know the nature of the Memorial to be erected to the memory of Maganlal. But if you have missed that

---

1 Raisins
2 Of Satyagraha in South Africa; vide
3 Dated May 17, 1928; vide “Notes” sub-title Mill ‘Khaddar’.
number of Young India I may tell you that it is to be a khadi museum in a specially erected building worthy of Maganlal’s love for khadi and his technical knowledge. Subscriptions are coming in very slowly because of the interruption of Bardoli, which naturally absorb-bed the attention of those who would otherwise have paid far more liberally to the Maganlal Memorial and that was as it should have been.

I have the beautiful Dutch postcard. All goes well at the Ashram which is undergoing several changes at the present moment. When they are fully developed you will know all about them through Young India. Mira has gone out touring in the spinning area. It is wonderful how she makes herself feel at home in the villages she visits. The Hindi that she has picked up is proving of good value.

At present an Austrian couple are staying here. They are extremely good people. The husband is a professor in a Medical College in Graz and the wife is a fine singer and a finer philosopher. From the commencement of their marriage they have led the life of brahma-charya. The merit is all the wife’s. She says she never had any sexual desire. They are a wonderful couple in more ways than one.

Ramdas is in Bardoli, Devdas in Delhi. Chhaganlal is here, Mahadev, Pyarelal, Subbiah and the rest of course.

With love from us all,

Yours sincerely,

H. S. L. POLAK, EST.
42, 47 & 48 DANES INN HOUSE
265 STRAND, LONDON W.C. 2

From a photostat: S.N. 14394

116. LETTER TO C. F. ANDREWS
SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 12, 1928

MY DEAR CHARLIE,

I have your letters. You will see in your copy of Young India your article, “The Land of Rishis”.

The question of Sastri’s successor is proving very troublesome. I do not know what the Government of India is doing. But I am getting a little nervous. It is difficult to replace Sastri and, if they use the post for favourites, all the great work that Sastri has done can be easily undone.

At the Ashram all is well except that we have the malaria of the season rather trying while it lasts.

Mohan

From a photostat: S.N. 14409

117. LETTER TO SAROJINI NAIDU

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 12, 1928

MY DEAR MIRA,

I have your letter. Here is Padmaja’s¹ reply to my letter. What can I do now when doctors themselves advise her not to leave the sanatorium? I shall write to her again and write to her from time to time and keep myself in touch with her. You must fulfil your engagements without any anxiety. God will take care of her, better than you and I, and use us as His instruments whenever He wills.

I hope you will keep good health during your tour. I expect to hear from you from time to time.

The political atmosphere is none too calm, none too clear. Poor
Motilalji has his work cut out for him.

SHRIMATI SAROJINI NAIDU

C/O THOMAS COOK & SONS, NEW YORK, U.S.A.

From a photostat: S.N.14410

118. LETTER TO ESTHER MENON

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 12, 1928

MY DEAR CHILD,

I had your letter after a long lapse of time. It was therefore doubly welcome. I hope that this finds you in better health and that if there was an operation that it was quite successful and has left no ill effects.

The Ashram is undergoing many changes at the present moment. You will see them all described in the pages of Young India when the time comes. Except for malaria which is seasonal for this time of the year, everything goes well here.

¹ Addressee’s daughter

Remember me to Menon when you write to him.

MRS. ESTHER MENON

From a photostat: S.N. 14411

119. LETTER TO PARAMANAND K. KAPADIA

ASHRAM,

October 13, 1928

BHAISHRI PARAMANAND,

I got your letter only yesterday. All your letters are good. They are well reasoned and are never discourteous. There can, therefore, be no question of impropriety in them. However, your letters do have one defect. They are too long for me. I have thought about most of what you say, and I would therefore grasp your point even if you put it concisely, and if I did not understand I would ask. This preface was prompted by your letter, as long as a pamphlet, placed before me by Kakasaheb nearly fifteen days ago. I have kept it in my file, so I see it every day, but being much too long it remains unanswered for want of time. Even this I do not say as criticism of you but only as an explanation of my having missed reading your previous letter. Now the reply to your letter.¹

You must have observed that I give new meaning to old words or enlarge their old meanings. I do not do that arbitrarily or to suit my purpose, but because I think it right to do so. The words of poets are inexhaustible in their meaning. The word kavi originally meant an enlightened person. The perfectly enlightened person is the perfect poet. If, therefore, I do not draw the right meaning of old words or sayings, I would have to waste my energy in, starting a new religion and would also be guilty of killing the souls of those words. I have realized that even words have souls. If, therefore, you wish, you can compel me to admit that I may be giving a new meaning to the word ‘ahimsa’. It seems to me an exaggeration to describe ‘ahimsa’ as the supreme dharma in the sense you give to the word. But I have never quarrelled over the meaning of words. Hence if my purpose can be served without the word ‘ahimsa’, I will certainly give up its use.

Even at the time of the killing [of the calf] the risk was indeed

¹ For extracts from the addressee’s letter and Gandhiji’s more detailed reply, vide “Jain Ahimsa”, 25-10-1928
there that people would draw wrong conclusions from my action. But I felt that the discernment of the true meaning of ahimsa had become so weak that I must do what I did even at the risk. And how could I hide having done something when the occasion required otherwise?

As for the question about the daughter I would only say I would not kill her thinking that I would otherwise commit a sin, but I would kill her if I thought that she would ask for the gift of death if she could speak. I do not at all subscribe to the belief that under no circumstance is a person willing to give up his or her life. I smell cowardice in it and it is against the experience of many people. If man is indeed so much attached to life, he can make no progress. How then can he ever attain moksha? I have seen in innumerable cases that such attachment is very much less in other countries.

As for the nuisance of the monkeys I see that I would again have to quarrel about the meaning of ‘ahimsa’. May I leave that discussion? How about keeping the question for a full discussion some time in future when we meet? I have much to say about the three principles you have put forward. If I get the time I will discuss the contents of your letter in Navajivan.

From a photostat of the Gujarati G.N. 11595

120. A CRUEL CUSTOM

A Kathiawari gentleman writes to say:

This difficulty is a genuine one in all Hindu households and not only in Kathiawar. If a young husband who has become conscious of his dharma wishes to save himself, he should find a way to do so. He should politely reason with his parents and bring home to them the true nature of marriage. If he has any difficulty in convincing them, he should insist upon living apart from his wife so long as he cannot live independently. Where there is a will, there is a way. Man can add to his stature by finding out ways to solve difficulties and can also develop his human estate.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 14-10-1928

1 For Gandhiji’s views on the issue, vide also “Monkey Nuisance”, 8-7-1928
2 The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had complained that in Kathiawar married couples living with parents did not see much of each other during daytime and asked how husband and wife could exchange ideas and how the husband could obtain the wife’s consent to continence.
121. COWS IN BARDOLI

A Bania gentleman from the Bardoli taluk writes to say:

If the above facts are true, this also should be taken up as an essential activity in the constructive work that is being done at present in Bardoli. It has been repeatedly pointed out in Navajivan how great harm is done to an ox if it is not castrated. There is no doubt that almost an equal quantity of milk can be got from the cow as from the buffalo, but this result can be achieved only if the cow is reared in a scientific manner. On the whole, if we wish to spare ourselves the slaughter of the male buffalo, we should turn our full attention to an improvement in the breeding of cows. It can easily be proved that the cow and her progeny are far more useful than the buffalo and her progeny. We have paid no attention to the fact that successive generations of cows will become enfeebled if a cow is served by any and every ox. If the problem of the cow could be solved as a result of the great awakening in Bardoli, the people there would have significantly added to the services they have rendered through their satyagraha.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 14-10-1928

122. SAD PLIGHT

A young man writes:

Though this young man has furnished his name, he wishes for a remedy through the columns of Navajivan, since there are many others like him. I have no panacea to offer. I regard this as a kind of disease. I know that many people suffer from it. I shall indicate what has benefited some persons.

Faith in God is the most essential thing in this. And those who have this faith ask for God’s help in their helplessness and receive it. Rather than get involved in such arguments as whom should one pray

---

1. The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had stated that in Bardoli and other taluks it was mostly the Raniparaj community that maintained cows. The higher castes preferred buffaloes. They also refused, on sentimental grounds, to get calves castrated and let even very young or weak oxen go free in the village to meet cows through a misplaced sense of piety, which resulted in the progressive degeneration of the cow’s offspring.

2. The letter is not translated here. The correspondent, a young man of nineteen and married, was unable to shake off the habit of self-abuse which rendered him weaker day by day.
to, is God free thus to help, and if He is, why does He not avert the disease before He is prayed to, since He dwells in everyone’s heart and should become aware of the disease, etc., etc., we should regard His ways as inscrutable and, following the example of others who have saved themselves by taking refuge in Him, we should have faith and offer heartfelt prayers to Him.

Effort on our part is as essential as prayer. A prayer without effort becomes a mere show. It is empty. Mere mechanical repetition of words which do not proceed from the heart is futile. Moreover, anyone who makes an effort immediately gains self-confidence.
Constant physical work is essential to such effort, no matter how light that work may be. Reading material should be such as to nurture pure thoughts. Privacy should be altogether shunned. It is imperative to give up co-habitation with one’s wife. Having taken all these measures, one should totally forget about one’s disease and, if one is constantly occupied in physical activity, one will not even be reminded of it.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 14-10-1928

123. A CONUNDRUM

Some fiery champions of ahimsa, who seem bent upon improving the finances of the Postal Department, inundate me with letters full of abuse, and are practising himsa in the name of ahimsa.
They would if they could prolong the calf controversy indefinitely.
Some of them kindly suggest that my intellect has suffered decay with the attainment of sixtieth year. Some others have expressed the regret that the doctors did not diagnose my case as hopeless when I was sent to the Sassoon Hospital and cut short my sinful career by giving me a poison injection in which case the poor calf in the Ashram might have been spared the poison injection and the race of monkeys saved from the menace of destruction. These are only a few characteristic samples from the sheaf-fuls of ‘love-letters’ that I am receiving daily. The more I receive these letters the more confirmed I feel in the correctness of my decision to ventilate this thorny question in the columns of Navajivan. It never seems to have struck these good people that by

1 The Gujarati original of this appeared in Navajivan, 14-10-1928. This is a translation by Pyarelal.
3 Where he was operated upon for appendicitis in January 1924; vide “Interview to V. S. Srinivasa Sastri”, 12-1-1924
this unseemly exhibition of spleen they merely prove their unfitness to be votaries or exponents of ahimsa and strike it at the very root. I turn however from these fulminations to one from among a batch of letters of a different order that I have received and I take the’ following from it:

Your exposition of the ethics of the “calf-incident” has cleared up a lot of my doubts and shed valuable light on the implications of ahimsa. But unfortunately it raises a fresh difficulty. Suppose, for instance, that a man begins to oppress a whole people and there is no other way of putting a stop to his oppression; then proceeding on the analogy of the calf, would it not be an act of ahimsa to rid society of his presence by putting him to death? Would you not regard such an act as an unavoidable necessity and therefore as one of ahimsa? In your discussion about the killing of the calf you have made the mental attitude the principal criterion of ahimsa. Would not according to this principle the destruction of proved tyrants be counted as ahimsa, since the motive inspiring the act is of the highest? You say that there is no himsa in killing off animal pests that destroy a farmer’s crops; then why should it not be ahimsa to kill human pests that threaten society with destruction and worse?

The discerning reader will have already perceived that this correspondent has altogether missed the point of my argument. The definition of ahimsa that I have given cannot by any stretch of meaning be made to cover a case of manslaughter such as the correspondent in question postulates. I have nowhere described the unavoidable destruction of life that a farmer has to commit in pursuit of his calling as ahimsa. One may regard such destruction of life as unavoidable and condone it as such, but it cannot be spelt otherwise than as himsa. The underlying motive with the farmer is to subserve his own interest or, say, that of society. Ahimsa on the other hand rules out such interested destruction. But the killing of the calf was undertaken for the sake of the dumb animal itself. Anyway its good was the only motive.

The problem mentioned by the correspondent in question may certainly be compared to that of the monkey nuisance. But then there is a fundamental difference between the monkey nuisance and the human nuisance. Society as yet knows of no means by which to effect a change of heart in the monkeys and their killing may therefore be held as pardonable, but there is no evil-doer or tyrant who need be considered beyond reform. That is why the killing of a human being out of self-interest can never find a place in the scheme of ahimsa.

To come now to the question of motive, whilst it is true that mental attitude is the crucial test of ahimsa, it is not the sole test. To kill any living being or thing save for his or its own interest is himsa however noble the motive may otherwise be. And a man who harbours ill-will towards another is no less guilty of himsa because for fear of society or want of opportunity, he is unable to translate his ill-will into action. A reference to both intent and deed is thus necessary in order finally to decide whether a particular act of abstention can be classed as ahimsa. After all, intent has to be inferred from a bunch of correlated acts.

Young India, 18-10-1928

124. LETTER TO PRABHASHANKER PATTANI

Aso Sud 1 [October 14, 1928]

SUJNA BHAISHRI,

I have your letter.

There is no question of one confined to bed spinning. Even your pledge exempts you from that obligation during illness. If you give up spinning through lethargy or on the pretext of being too busy, I would certainly have some harsh words to say, would even consider employing satyagraha against you provided I loved you enough for the purpose. I would not make any such unreasonable demand on you that even during illness you should continue spinning. If, moreover, Lady Pattani is now spinning, as you say, with sincere faith, to me it is as good as your spinning. But I have doubt about her spinning with such faith. I regard your certificate as partial, so that I myself should test her sincerity. You also tell me that she does not always wear pankoru. If one has sincere faith, would one omit to wear it any time? Pankoru is a household word among us. She may wear pankoru of any thinness she likes; I don’t take this word to mean necessarily coarse cloth. It means cloth made from yarn of whatever quality spun by our sisters and daughters. It is in your hand to spin yarn that is fine. Well, I have addressed this letter to Ramabehn, it seems.

Here are a few of the things I expect from you. You should provide in your budget for expenditure on things manufactured in your State, as you provide for expenditure for collecting revenue. At present, that expenditure is borne by me. But how much longer can I afford it?

Please prepare and send me a report, for public or for my

---

1 The year is inferred from the reference to articles on running a dairy which appeared in Young India, 27-9-1928 and 11-10-1928.
information, of the results of the law enforcing prohibition in your State.

The State should run a model dairy in accordance with the principles explained by the Government Dairy expert in his articles in Young India. I am sure you will incur no loss through it in the end.

You can take up these things even while you are bed-ridden.

After you have been able to attend to them, you may ask me for more suggestions.

But one thing I should say above all else. Leave the bed. You will think this a difficult task and so do I. But to succeed in that, along with doctors, you should consult a few quacks too. One of them is Kuvalayananda. It seems you know him. I have not been able to assess the value of his work. There is one other quack like him. He does not know anything about yoga and employs water-treatment. If you wish to collect persons of that kind round you, all I can do to help you is to inquire about them. After you have heard them, follow any of their treatments which appeals to you and seems harmless. There is no reason why you should remain bed-ridden. Am I also not one of these quacks?

But at present I am useless. In any case, Rama is there, the greatest Vaid. If my efforts to know Him had succeeded, I would have certainly sent Him to you. But, alas, will I ever see such a lucky day?

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 3217. Courtesy: Mahesh Pattani

125. LETTER TO HARIBHAU UPADHYAYA

Silence Day, October 15, 1928

Bhai Haribhaun,

I got your letter. Mirabehn has written to me in detail about the shortcomings in Jethalal’s work. She says that Jethalal has agreed to rectify the mistakes. You should go on goading him.

I have understood the balance-sheet drawn up by you. I would advise you not to make sub-divisions of untruth. Exaggeration, half-truth, conniving at untruth—all this is untruth. We generally treat ourselves generously, whereas we ought to be parsimonious. We should magnify our own faults, small as mustard grains, into big mountains.

I have also observed something like this in regard to brahmacharya. What we often condone as violation of mental brahmacharya is in fact violation of physical brahmacharya. For instance, unclean touch is always a violation of physical brahmacharya, and so is unclean joking. Unclean means prompted by impure thoughts.

I need not say this to you. But it has become necessary now to explain it to all inmates of the Ashram. When I examine my own life, I see this laxity in myself too, and that is why I caution you. The truth is that a pure life is a new birth, and one does not get it without God’s grace.

“As long as the elephant relied on his own strength so long he failed.”

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 6062. Courtesy: Haribhau Upadhyaya

126. LETTER TO V. L. PHADKE

Monday [October 15, 1928]

BHAISHREE MAMA,

I was distressed to hear the news about Dalsukhbhai. Please console his relatives on my behalf. I very well remember Dalsukhbhai’s affectionate face. The void left by his passing can never be filled. But we must all shoulder the responsibility. Tell his relatives that those who knew Dalsukhbhai share their grief. You have not given any address, so I send this letter through you.

Blessings from
BAPU

MAMA SAHEB
ANTYAJ ASHRAM
GODHARA
B.B. & C.I. RY.

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32842

1 The allusion is to the legendary Gajendra, king of elephants, who was rescued by Krishna from the clutches of a crocodile.
2 From the postmark, October 15 was a Monday.
127. LETTER TO VIPIN BIHARI

October 15, 1928

Bhai Vipin,

I have your letter. It is almost impossible for me to go or send someone. I congratulate you all on being able to persuade Sadhu Vaswani" to come over to Motihari. It is needless to tell the students of Bihar that true learning means increasing purity of life, i.e., being simple and straightforward.

Yours,

Mohandas Gandhi

Shri Vipin Bihari
Reception Committee, Students’ Conference
Motihari, Bihar
From a photostat of the Hindi: C.W. 9128.

128. LETTER TO RAMESHWARDAS PODDAR

October 15, 1928

Bhai Rameshwardas,

Your letters come in regularly. By now your wife must have fully recovered. There is only one way of attaining peace of mind—to impress Ramanama upon the heart.

Blessings from

Bapu

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 196

129. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

October 15, 1928

Chh. Brajisan,

Your letter. Similar doubts have been expressed in many other letters. I have answered them in Navajivan; so I write nothing here. I hope you are well.

Blessings from

Bapu

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2360

1 T. L. Vaswani
130. LETTER TO KARIM GOOLAMALI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 16, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. You are in the same boat as the Vaishnavites, a sect to which I belong by birth. And these sectarian abuses can only be dealt with by the members of the respective sects. There seems to me to be no royal road to reform except through constant striving and levelling up of public opinion.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

KARIM GOOLAMALI, ESQ.
KHARADHAR, KARACHI

From a photostat: G.N. 233

131. LETTER TO DR. C. MUTHU

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 16, 1928

DEAR DR. MUTHU,

I have your letter. You won’t ask me to sign any appeal please. You won’t find my name in any appeal save those which I have myself inaugurated, for the simple reason that if I sign one I should have to sign many, and I do not like the idea of having to do so. I hope however that you will be able soon to finish the sanatorium and realize your ambition.

Yours sincerely,

DR. C. MUTHU
9 MONTEITH ROAD, EGMORE, MADRAS

From a microfilm: S.N. 13555

132. LETTER TO ROY HOPKINS

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 16, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter enclosing a cheque for £5 for a short article that you want me to give you on ‘peace’. I have not a moment to spare just now to write anything beyond my own appointments, and I hope I am humble enough to realize that the world is not waiting to know from me anything about the ways of securing peace for which it is thirsting.

1 The typewritten office copy (S.N. 13556) of this letter bears the note:

I return the cheque you have kindly sent me. Even if I write anything I should not do it for remuneration, having never done it. Having written for some papers, I have received moneys on several occasions which have gone as contributions to the upkeep of public activities I am engaged in. Nobody is likely easily to get from me any writing because I am so chary of writing for anybody or any paper. You will therefore please forgive me for returning your cheque and also for my inability to write for you.

Yours sincerely,

ROY HOPKINS, ESQ.
MANAGING DIRECTOR, LONDON GENERAL PRESS
8 BOUVERIES STREET, LONDON E.C. 4
From photostat: S.N. 14388

133. LETTER TO RUKHI GANDHI

October 16, 1928

CHI. RUKHI,

You would like, wouldn’t you, that I should reply immediately? You were wise in keeping silent about the bullock. As you are keeping well and doing good work there, I do not feel eager to ask you to come over here.

Live as you will, but so
As to realize God.

Keshu seems to have settled down well. About Radha, I cannot say anything yet. We are having a good malaria exhibition these days.

Blessings from

BAPU

CHI. RUHSHAMANI
C/O KHUSHALBHAI GANDHI
OPPOSITE MIDDLE SCHOOL.
NAVA PURA, RAJKOT

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 8761: Courtesy: Radhabehn Chaudhari
A graphic letter received this week from an eye-witness describes the now famous Klerksdorp incident of which the South African Press is full. Though nothing remains or needs to be said from the political standpoint after the full, free and frank apology from the Union Government, too much cannot be said of Sjt. Sastri’s generous and courageous behaviour in the face of a plot which might have proved fatal in its result. The letter before me shows that this true son and representative of India stood his ground without the least nervousness even when the lights were put out by the party that had come led by the Deputy Mayor to break up the meeting he was addressing. And when the firing of an explosive had made the meeting hall too suffocating for the audience, Sjt. Sastri went outside and, as if nothing untoward or serious had happened, finished his speech without even referring to the incident. Popular as he had already become among the Europeans of South Africa before this incident, his cool courage and generous behaviour raised him still further in their estimation.

And as he wanted no fame for himself (few men would be found shier than Sjt. Sastri of fame), he turned his popularity to the advancement of the cause he has represented with such singular ability and success. During his all too brief stay in South Africa he has immensely raised the status of our countrymen in that part of the world. Let us hope that they will by their exemplary conduct show themselves worthy of him.

But Sastri’s contribution to the solution of the difficult and delicate problem of South Africa does not rest merely upon what was after all an accident. We know nothing except through the results of the inner working of the ambassador’s office in which he had to exhaust all his art of a diplomacy that comes from a conviction of the correctness of one’s cause and that spurns to do or countenance anything wrong, mean or crooked. But we do know how unsparing he has been in the use on behalf of his cause of the gifts of eloquence, scholarship, both English and Sanskrit and great and varied learning with which nature has lavishly endowed him. He has been delivering to large and select audiences of Europeans lectures on Indian philosophy and culture which have stirred European imagination and softened the hard crust of prejudice which has hitherto prevented the general body of Europeans from seeing anything good in the Indian. These lectures are perhaps his greatest and the most permanent contribution to the Indian cause in South Africa.

It must be a serious problem for the Government of India to choose Sjt. Sastri’s successor. He has persistently withstood all pressure to prolong his stay in South Africa. Letters from South Africa show me how our people dread Sjt. Sastri’s impending departure. It will be a calamity if a worthy successor is not found to continue the mission so successfully inaugurated and represented by Sjt. Sastri. Tradition has, I hope, been set up at the Viceregal Lodge of treating the office of India’s Agent in South Africa as neutral ground which the Government and popular parties may jointly tread. It is to be hoped that the successor to be chosen will be one who will commend himself equally to the Government and the people, and who will truly represent not merely the Government of India but the people as well.

Young India, 18-10-1928

135. TELEGRAM TO N. C. KELKAR

October 18, 1928

APART OTHER REASONS I WOULD BE EXCUSED EVEN FOR SAKE OF SUCCESS SUCH CONFERENCE.

GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 13705

136. LETTER TO PERIN CAPTAIN

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

October 18, 1928

I have your two letters. You will certainly come with me to Calcutta and sell whatever stuff you like, but not at the Exhibition.

Mrs. P. Byramji did meet me when I was in Nagpur and buy a lot of khadi. But beyond this I cannot say. That is all. Where is the question of trusting when our rule is to sell only for cash?

I have had a chat with Kakasaheb. He tells me he has no recollection of having made you any promise or told you anything about his ability to sell khadi for you at the Vidyapith. And he can have no customers for embroidered khadi. Did he tell you he had any

---

1 In reply to his telegram of October 17 from Poona which read: “Supposing we decide to hold Bombay Presidency All-Parties Conference at Poona on Saturday 27th for one day before Simon Commission’s departure to uphold and popularize Nehru Report and Lucknow resolutions could you consent presiding? Informing final decision after your wire.”
bhandar?
   I am keeping quite well.

MRS. PERIN CAPTAIN

From a microfilm: S.N. 13559

137. LETTER TO L. V. PATTANAYAKA

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI

October 18, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. Karmabhumi means to me a land not of enjoyment of pleasure but enjoyment of work by way of sacrifice.

My authority for saying that Sita was spinning is based upon a fact that, in her times, as history tells us every household had a spinning-wheel. There is no reason to believe that Sita’s household was an exception.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. L. V. PATTANAYAKA
P.O. DIGAPAHANDI (GANJAM)

From a microfilm: S.N. 13560

138. LETTER TO YAJNESHWAR PRASAD

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

October 18, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter for which I thank you.

With reference to the boy who is suffering from tuberculosis, if he is old enough to judge for himself, I think he should use his own discretion and take whatever he considers is not objectionable from the religious standpoint. If, however, he is too young to decide for himself, it is proper for him to submit to his father’s wishes.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. YAJNESHWAR PRASAD
790 NAI BASTI, QUEEN’S ROAD, DELHI

From a photostat: S.N. 13561

118 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
139. LETTER TO BINA DAS

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

October 18, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter which has been with me for some time now. I have nowhere advocated the use of physical force even for self-defence. What I have said is that the use of physical force is preferable to cowardice, that is to say, it is wrong not to use force when we have a mind to do so but which we do not use because we fear to die. What I do advocate is the courage to die whether for self-defence or whether for the cause of one’s country.

Yours sincerely,

SHRIMATI BINA DAS

7 RAM MOHAN ROY ROAD, CALCUTTA

From a photostat: S.N. 13562

140. LETTER TO URMILA DEVI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

October 18, 1928

I have your letter. You are never without your full share of worries. I hope however that Dhiren is now fairly restored to health.
Devdhar can be found at his house or at the Seva Sadan. When he is in Poona, I think he always goes to the Seva Sadan.

We have many patients suffering from malaria at the Ashram just now. It is nothing surprising because it is the season. It never worries us because the treatment is only one: fast while the fever lasts and quinine preceded by some opening medicine.

SHRIMATI URMILA DEVI

JANHAVI VILLA, P.O. DECCAN GYMKHANA, POONA

From a photostat: S.N. 13563

141. LETTER TO T. R. PHOOKAN

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

October 18, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. What appeal can I issue for you to take? What I have suggested is that you should personally go to moneyed Congressmen and ask them to help you out of the difficulty.¹ I feel that that is the only proper course for you to adopt, and I feel also that those Congressmen who have money should bear the burden. I suggest your taking an audited account to them.

You are at liberty to make whatever use you like of this letter for approaching Congressmen.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. T. R. PHOOKAN
GAUHATI (ASSAM)

From a microfilm: S.N. 13564

142. LETTER TO MAHARAJA OF NABHA

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 18, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter.² I had a visit too from Sjt. Ganesan. I regret I am unable to help you. I have given you my reasons and I gave them to those friends who came to see me on your behalf.

Yours sincerely,

H. H. THE MAHARAJAH OF NABHA
THE OBSERVATORY, KODAIKANAL, SOUTH INDIA

From a microfilm: S.N. 13565

143. LETTER TO MOTILAL NEHRU

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 18, 1928

DEAR MOTILALJI,

I have your two letters.
Of course I shall obey your wishes about attending the Congress at Calcutta.
I did not refer to the Exhibition incident with a view to securing ² In his letter of September 19, Gurucharan Singh, deposed Maharaja of Nabha, had requested Gandhiji to help him get justice and separation from Government.

I would not in any way whatsoever like to be interfering with the local discretion. I simply told you of my own difficulty. I have certainly not objected to machines as such at all. My objection was and is to the exhibition of Indian mill-cloth. Regarding machinery my argument is that we may not exhibit any and every machinery but that we may certainly exhibit such machinery which we ourselves know to be desirable for the cultivators and which has not yet obtained vogue in the country.

I quite agree with you that we have to go on with the political work in spite of the riots.

I had your reassuring telegram about your own health and Kamala’s. You will have to be in an absolutely good form in Calcutta because you will have more than enough to do there.

Yours sincerely,

PANDIT MOTILAL NEHRU
ANAND BHAVAN, ALLAHABAD

From a photostat: S.N. 13707

144. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

October 19, 1928

CHI. MIRA,

I have been having your perfect letters. They please me and relieve me of all anxiety. You will not mind my not sending you anything long or regular just now. About Prabhudas, Chhaganlal will be wiring you.

Love.

BAPU

SHRIMATI MIRABAI
JAMIA MILLIA, KAROL BAGH, DELHI

From the original: C.W. 5314. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 8204

145. TELEGRAM TO MIRABEHN

October 19, 1928

MIRABEHN
CARE DEVDAS
KAROL BAGH, DELHI

REGARDING PRABHUDAS USE YOUR OWN JUDGEMENT AND DO WHAT YOU THINK BEST.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5315. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G. N. 8205

146. LETTER TO B. G. HORNIMAN

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 20, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I had your first letter which I reached after the allotted time was passed and so remained silent about it. I received your second letter yesterday and there was no time to acknowledge it there and then. If you pass 24 hours with me in the Ashram you will never ask me for an article even of five words, let alone 100 words. It have neither time nor energy for anything more than what just now engages my attention. You will therefore please excuse me for disappointing.

Yours sincerely,

B. G. HORNIMAN, ESQ.
BOMBAY

From a photostat: S.N. 13566

147. ‘AN ASHRAM OF RISHIS’

An article under this heading which has been sent by Deenabandhu Andrews has been published in Young India¹.

In a city called Marburg in Germany, there is a university which has been called an ashram of rishis by Deenabandhu in this article. It contains a readable description of an elderly professor who leads the life of a rishi there. The Vedas are studied on an extensive scale in the Marburg University. And the Vedas seem to have made such a deep impression on the lives of the professors who study them that they themselves lead the life of rishis. Professor Otto seems to be pre-eminent amongst these professors. Here is a description of him:

¹ Dated 11-10-1928

At the house of Professor Otto, where I was staying, it was indeed a happiness to be his guest, even for a short time. He has never married. He has spent his whole life in Vedic scholarship. His hair is white, and his sister, who is nearly the same age as himself, now keeps house for him. She treated me as a mother while I was there, looking after all my wants, in a very touching manner. Almost from the very first, the glowing, ardent love for India in Professor Otto’s heart became visible to me through the animation, which lit up his face, while he related to me his experiences on his different visits. Yet his own health had suffered terribly in India. The malaria, which had infected him as early as 1912, never wholly left his system; and after his visit to India last year, he became a complete invalid for many months, lying on his back with heart weakness. He has not even yet recovered. Yet still India remains the land of his early dreams, and he has studied every feature of India’s civilization with minutest care. Above all, he has studied deeply the Hindu religion, not only in the Vedas, Upanishads and Gita, but also both in its Puranas and in its modern forms of worship. His knowledge of Indian detail was to me amazing. This has been due to the fact, that in one way or other his whole life has been spent in research. Sanskrit is almost like his own mother tongue to him; and he can use it when necessary as a second language.

I have here translated the description of only one of the rishis. We should admit with shame that the zeal, the earnestness and the perseverance with which some scholars in Europe and, especially in Germany, pursue the study of such treatises as the Vedas are something almost totally absent in this country today. It is very seldom that we come across anyone emulating the life of a rishi. And where do we see now brahmacharya being readily practised solely for scholastic reasons, without any accompanying ostentation? And when a sister remains a spinster in order to be a companion to her brother and to run his home, is this not something that delights one and creates a sacred atmosphere? The other day an American professor had narrated his experiences in The Times of Bombay. He too is a student of Sanskrit. He writes that he had come to India full of hopes; however, he had been disappointed after coming to India, seeing things for himself and meeting Sanskrit pundits. His article contains exaggerations, is full of hastily-formed judgements and is coloured by the atmosphere created by Europeans living in India. But allowing for all this, I see a grain of truth in what remains, and I feel ashamed. If

---

1 The following description has been taken from Andrews’s article in Young India.

2 The source has “about”.

VOL. 43 : 10 SEPTEMBER, 1928 - 14 JANUARY, 1929  123
there had been a true religious awakening in us, if we had the fervour to preserve whatever was true, good and beautiful in our ancient civilization, our condition would have been very different today. Rishis could live fearlessly in forests. Brahmacharya was something that they could readily practise. Today we cannot live safely even in cities. Brahmacharya appears to be something strange and wonderful to us and we shall with difficulty come across a true brahmachari if we search for one. How then can we find any women who have taken the vow of celibacy? Hence for a moment one feels that the rishis have started living in scattered corners of Europe and no longer live in this country which once was their abode.

This is not to suggest that anyone who reads this article should go over to Germany or some other place and try to become a rishi. That too will be futile. I cannot visualize an Indian going to Germany and becoming a rishi. It is right for Indians to imitate the good qualities of a person like Professor Otto and, while remaining in India, to revitalize the institution of rishis here. It can be claimed that the Arya Samaj has made superhuman efforts in this direcuoi But those attempts are like a drop in the ocean so far as India is concerned. It is only when even mightier efforts are made that we shall be able to find the lost key to our ancient civilization.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 21-10-1928

148. SIMPLE-MINDED LABOURERS

From a letter which I have received from Panchmahals, it appears that immoral and greedy agents lure simple-minded Rajputs and others and recruit them for serving in the tea-gardens of Assam. Thus I have received affidavits concerning twelve labourers. It is obvious from this that under the pretext of giving them work in the neighbourhood of Baroda, young men and women were taken as far away as Assam.

The question is not whether they are happy or otherwise in Assam, but how anyone can be deceived and taken so far away. The persons who signed the affidavits inform me that they had to go leaving behind their fields. These poor persons had gone in the hope of being employed as labourers in nearby places and now they have been ensnared, and have had to leave behind their worried relations.

There is only one way of preventing this situation. The agents deceive the labouring classes and lure them with false temptations for the sake of their commission. If this commission business is entirely stopped, no one will be deceived any longer. The owners of tea-gardens in Assam have the right to recruit labourers in a proper way by laying down proper conditions. Let them advertise in an honest manner. But the practice of recruiting labourers through agents should be terminated. Agents receive commission in respect of every labourer they recruit. It is rumoured that the amount is Rs. 10 per head. Hence the agent who can deceive thirty labourers every month earns Rs. 300 a month. This is no small temptation. Hence, no matter what warning the owners give to the agents, the latter are hardly going to be deterred from practising such devious means.

As a matter of fact, if a job is worth while and sufficiently tempting, intermediaries should not become necessary. Experience indicates that they become necessary only when a job involves hard labour, the wage is meagre, and it involves going far away from one’s home for the job. That the job may be at a distance from home is inevitable. There is no doubt, however, that labourers will go on their own if the conditions relating to wages, etc., are tempting. If the sums paid as agents’ commission, etc., are spent on providing better facilities to the labourers, the incidents of hardships to which these affidavits bear witness will be done away with.

However, whether the owners withdraw their agents or not, public servants who come to know of these hardships should spread knowledge of the true facts among the people and warn them against being caught in the grip of the agents.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 21-10-1 928

149. MY NOTES

WHEN SHOULD PUNISHMENT BE AWARDED?

A teacher of the Vinaymandir has put the following questions¹:

In my opinion, it is simply improper to subject students to any form of punishment. By doing so, the feelings of respect and pure love that teachers should have for students disappear. The method of teaching students by punishing them is being progressively abandoned. I know that occasions do arise when even the best of teachers cannot but inflict punishment. However, this should be an exception and should not in any way be commended. If the best of teachers has

¹ Not translated here. He had asked whether pupils should be given corporal punishment for not studying or for moral lapses, especially in national schools.
to resort to beating, this should in fact be regarded as a drawback in his art. Although an individual like Spencer has looked upon every punishment as improper, he has not always been able to put his theory into practice. After replying to this question, I need not answer in detail the other questions.

Ordinarily, punishment is not compatible with non-violence. Of course, I can conceive of instances in which punishment cannot be regarded as such. These, however, should be regarded as irrelevant so far as teachers are concerned. For instance, if a father who is extremely unhappy punishes his son, it is a case of punishment given out of love. The son, too, would not regard it as an act of violence. Or, when in some cases a delirious patient has to be smacked by the person nursing him, it is not a violent act but a non-violent one. But these instances do not help teachers at all. A teacher has to develop the technique of teaching students and maintaining discipline amongst them without resorting to beating. We have before us instances of such teachers who have never beaten their students. Punishments other than corporal would be to make the student ashamed of himself, make him alternately sit down and stand up, make him hold his toes, abuse him, etc. I feel that teachers should discard all these methods.

To repent after punishing a student in order to improve him is no repentance at all. Moreover, teachers who believe and make their students believe that punishment leads to the latter’s improvement, end up by making such a belief take root in society. And this belief creates the illusion that reforms can be brought about through violence. In my opinion, teachers of national schools who deliberately punish their students are indeed guilty of violating their pledge.

BOLSHEVISM

Q. What is your opinion about the social economics of Bolshevism and how far do you think they are fit to be copied by our country?

A. I must confess that I have not yet been able fully to understand the meaning of Bolshevism. All that I know is that it aims at the abolition of the institution of private property. This is only an application of the ethical ideal of non-possession in the realm of economics and if the people adopted this ideal of their own accord or could be made to accept it by means of peaceful persuasion there would be nothing like it. But from what I know of Bolshevism it not only does not preclude the use of force but freely sanctions it for the expropriation of private property and maintaining the collective State.

---

1 The translation of this question and answer is reproduced from Young India, 15-11-1928.
ownership of the same. And if that is so I have no hesitation in saying that the Bolshevist regime in its present form cannot last for long. For it is my firm conviction that nothing enduring can be built on violence. But be that as it may there is no questioning the fact that the Bolshevist ideal has behind it the purest sacrifice of countless men and women who have given up their all for its sake, and an ideal that is sanctified by the sacrifices of such master spirits as Lenin cannot go in vain: the noble example of their renunciation will be emblazoned for ever and quicken and purify the ideal as time passes.

THE LATE SHRI DALSUKHBHAI SHAH

Reporting the death of the Godhra lawyer, Shri Dalsukhbhai Shah, last week, Mamasahib writes as follows:¹

I had personally known the late Dalsukhbhai. I was fully aware of his gentlemanly qualities. Following close upon the heels of Shri Purushottamdas Shah’s death, this second loss that Panchmahals has suffered is really to be regarded as too much. Both these men lent glory to the public life of Panchmahals and were true servants of the people. However, whether at the right time or untimely, all of us have to meet our death. As Mamasahib writes, it is the task of the youth to make this loss bearable. Moreover, as Chi. Nagindas, the eldest son of the deceased, is a graduate of the Vidyapith, his responsibility has doubled. As a son he must glorify his father’s name and add to the legacy of nobility of character that the latter has left. It now becomes his special duty to add to the prestige of the Vidyapith by filling up the void among the public servants of Panchmahals. May God give him strength to fulfill this task, give courage to the family of the deceased and grant peace to the soul of the departed.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 21-10-1928

150. JAIN AHIMSA.²

A Jain friend who is reputed to have made a fair study of the Jain philosophy as also of the other systems has addressed me a long letter on ahimsa. It deserves a considered reply. He says in effect:

Your interpretation of ahimsa has caused confusion. In the ordinary sense of the term himsa means to sever life from body and not to do so is ahimsa. Refraining from causing pain to any living creature is only an extension of the original meaning which cannot by any stretch of language be made to cover the taking of life. You would not understand me to mean from this that I regard all taking of life as wrong in every possible circumstance; for I do not think that there is any ethical principle in this world that can be regarded as absolute and admitting of no exception whatever. The maxim “Ahimsa is the highest or the supreme duty” embodies a great and cardinal truth but it does not cover the entire sum of human duties. Whilst therefore what you have termed “non-violent killing” may be a right thing it cannot be described as ahimsa.

¹ The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had said that the deceased was an ideal lawyer who earned his livelihood in an honest way, span for his own requirements of khadi and gave up practice during the noncooperation days.

² The Gujarati original of this appeared in Navajivan, 21-10-1928. This is a translation by Pyarelal.

I am of opinion that just as life is subject to constant change and development, the meanings of terms too are constantly undergoing a process of evolution and this can be amply proved by illustrations from the history of any religion. The word yajna or sacrifice in the Hindu religion for instance is an illustration in point. Sir J. C. Bose’s discoveries are today revolutionizing the accepted connotations of biological terms. Similarly if we will fully realize ahimsa we may not fight shy of discovering fresh implications of the doctrine of ahimsa. We cannot improve upon the celebrated maxim, “Ahimsa is the highest or the supreme duty” but we are bound, if we would retain our spiritual inheritance, to explore the implications of this great and universal doctrine. But I am not particular about names. I do not mind whether the taking of life in the circumstances I have mentioned is called ahimsa or not, so long as its correctness is conceded.

Another poser mentioned by this friend is as follows:

I have been unable to follow you in your description of the imaginary killing of your daughter in the hypothetical circumstances described by you.\(^1\) It may be right to kill the ruffian in such a case, but what fault has the poor daughter committed? Would you regard the pollution of the poor victim as a disgrace to be avoided by death? Don’t you think that in such circumstances even if the poor girl for fear of public ignominy and shame begs to be put out of life, it would be your duty to dissuade her from her wish? As for me, I do not see the slightest difference between a case of dishonour, rape, and a case in which one has had one’s limbs cut off by force.

My reason for putting my daughter to death in circumstances mentioned by me would not be that I feared her being polluted but that she herself would have wished death if she could express her desire. If my daughter wanted to be put out of life because she was afraid of public scandal and criticism I would certainly try to dissuade her from her wish. I would take her life only if I was absolutely certain that she would wish it. I know that Sita would have preferred death to dishonour by Ravana. And that is also what, I believe, our Shastras have enjoined. I know that it is the daily prayer of thousands of men and women that they might have death rather than dishonour. I deem it to be highly necessary that this feeling should be encouraged. I am not prepared to admit that the loss of chastity stands on the same footing as the loss of a limb. But I can imagine circumstances in which one would infinitely prefer death even to being maimed.

---

\(^1\) Vide “The Fiery Ordeal”, 30-9-1928.

The third poser runs:

I cannot understand why the idea of wounding a few monkeys in order to frighten away the rest instead of straightway proceeding to kill them off should be regarded as intolerable by you. Don’t you feel that the longing for life is strong even among the blind and the maimed animals? Don’t you think that the impulse to kill a living creature because one cannot bear to see its suffering is a kind of selfishness?

The idea of wounding monkeys is unbearable to me because I know that a wounded monkey has to die a lingering death if left to itself. And if monkeys have to die at all by any act of mine, I would far rather that they were killed summarily than that they were left to die by inches. Again it beats my comprehension how I am practising ahimsa by thus wounding the monkeys instead of killing them outright. It might be a different thing if I was prepared to erect a hospital for wounded monkeys. I concede that the maimed and the blind would evince a longing for life if they have some hope of getting succour or relief. But imagine a blind, ignorant creature, with no faith in God, marooned in a desert place beyond the reach of any help and with a clear knowledge of his plight, and I cannot believe that such a creature would want to continue its existence. Nor am I prepared to admit that it is one’s duty to nurse the longing for life in all circumstances.

The fourth poser is as follows:

The Jain view of ahimsa rests on the following three principles:

“No matter what the circumstances are or how great the suffering, it is impossible for anyone deliberately to renounce the will to live or to wish another to put him out of pain. Therefore the taking of life cannot in any circumstances be morally justified.

“In a world full of activities which necessitate himsa, an aspirant for salvation should try to follow ahimsa engaging in the fewest possible activities.

“There are two kinds of himsa—direct such as that involved in agriculture, and indirect as that involved in the eating of agricultural produce. Where one cannot altogether escape from either, a votary of ahimsa should try to avoid direct himsa.”

I would earnestly request you critically to examine and discuss these three Jain principles of ahimsa in Navajivan. I notice that there is a vital difference between your view of ahimsa and that of the Jains. Whereas your view of ahimsa is based on the philosophy of action, that of the Jains is based on that of renunciation of action. The present is an era of action. If the principle of ahimsa be an eternal and universal principle untrammelled by time and place, it seems to me that there is a great need to stimulate the people's mind to think out for themselves as to how the principle of ahimsa that has so far been confined to the field of renunciation only can be worked in present-day life of action and what form it will take when applied to this new environment.

It is with the utmost reluctance that I have to enter into a discussion of these principles. I know the risks of such discussion. But I see no escape from it. As for the first principle I have already expressed my opinion on it in a previous portion of this article. It is my firm conviction that the principle of clinging to life in all circumstances betrays cowardice and is the cause of much of the himsa that goes on around us and blind adherence to this principle is bound to increase instead of reducing himsa. It seems to me that if this Jain principle is really as it is here enunciated, it is a hindrance to the attainment of salvation. For instance a person who is constantly praying for salvation will never wish to continue his life at the expense of another's. Only a person steeped in ignorance who cannot even remotely understand what salvation means would wish to continue life on any terms. The sine qua non of salvation is a total annihilation of all desire. How dare, then, an aspirant for salvation be sordidly selfish or wish to preserve his perishable body at all cost? Descending from the field of salvation to that of the family, one's country, or the world of humanity, we again find innumerable instances of men and women who have dedicated themselves to the service of their family, their country or the world at large in entire disregard of their own life and this ideal of utter self-sacrifice and self-abnegation at present is being inculcated throughout the world. To hang on to life at all cost seems to me the very height of selfishness. Let however nobody understand me to mean that one may try to wean another even from such sordid egoism by force. I am adducing the argument merely to show the fallacy of the doctrine of will to live at all cost.

As for the second, I do not know whether it can at all be described as a principle. But be that as it may, to me it represents a truism and I heartily endorse it.
Coming to the third principle in the form in which it is enunciated by the friend, it suffers from a grave defect. The most terrible consequence of this principle to me seems to be this that if we accept it then a votary of ahimsa must renounce agriculture although he knows that he cannot renounce the fruits of agriculture and that agriculture is an indispensable condition for the existence of mankind. The very idea that millions of the sons of the soil should remain steeped in himsa in order that a handful of men who live on the toil of these people might be able to practise ahimsa seems to me to be unworthy of and inconsistent with the supreme duty of ahimsa. I feel that this betrays a lack of perception of the inwardness of ahimsa. Let us see, for instance, to what it leads to if pushed to its logical conclusion. You may not kill a snake but if necessary, according to this principle, you may get it killed by somebody else. You may not yourself forcibly drive away a thief but you may employ another person to do it for you. If you want to protect the life of a child entrusted to your care from the fury of a tyrant, somebody else must bear the brunt of the tyrant’s fury for you. And you thus refrain from direct action in the sacred name of ahimsa! This in my opinion is neither religion nor ahimsa. So long as one is not prepared to take the risks mentioned and to face the consequences, one cannot be free from fear and so long as a man has not shed all fear he is ipso facto incapable of practising ahimsa. Our scriptures tell us that ahimsa is all conquering. That before it, even the wild beasts shed their ferocity and the most hard-hearted of tyrants forget their anger. Utterly inadequate and imperfect as my own practice of ahimsa has been, it has enabled me to realize the truth of this principle. I cannot once more help expressing my doubt that Jainism subscribes to the third principle of ahimsa as enunciated by this friend. But even if Jain doctrine is just as it is stated by the friend, I must say, I for one cannot reconcile myself to it.

Now to come to the question of renunciation versus action: I believe in the doctrine of renunciation but I hold that renunciation should be sought for in and through action. That action is the sine qua non of life in the body, that the Wheel of Life cannot go on even for a second without involving some sort of action goes without saying. Renunciation can therefore in these circumstances only mean detachment or freedom of the spirit from action, even while the body is engaged in action. A follower of the path of renunciation seeks to attain it not by refraining from all activity but by carrying it on in a perfect spirit of detachment and altruism as a pure trust. Thus a man may engage in farming, spinning, or any other activity without departing from the path of renunciation provided one does so merely for selfless service and remains free from the taint of egoism or attachment. It remains for those therefore who like myself hold this view of renunciation to discover for themselves how far the principle of ahimsa is compatible with life in the body and how it can be applied to acts of everyday life. The very virtue of a dharma is that it is universal, that its practice is not the monopoly of the few, but must be the privilege of all. And it is my firm belief that the scope of Truth and ahimsa is world-wide. That is why I find an ineffable joy in dedicating my life to researches in truth and ahimsa and I invite others to share it with me by doing likewise.

Young India, 25-10-1928

151. LETTER TO C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati, October 21, 1928

I am publishing your appeal\(^1\). But I am not satisfied with it. It is too scrappy and without anybody to it. You ought to have given the population in the area affected, the nature of distress and the amount required. How are the people to respond to a general appeal of the type you have framed? It evidently betrays fatigue, haste, worry and overwork. If you want a good response you must send me an appeal worthy of yourself.

How are you doing now?

I hope the calf controversy\(^2\) provides some amusement for you, if it provides no instruction. If I took seriously all the correspondence that comes to me I should have to drown my self in the Sabarmati. As it is, the correspondence affords both entertainment and instruction.

Your sincerely,

C. RAJAGOPALACHARIAR
From a photostat: S.N. 13567

152. LETTER TO C. L. CHINAI

Ashram, October 21, 1928

BHAISHRI CHINAI,

I have your letter. If I know the way even dimly or if others show it to me, I am ready to take the risk and try to bring about an understanding between the two. But I am afraid that today except for a handful of non-co-operators, I have lost the confidence of the Hindus and the Muslims. Both trust in physical strength. The Muslims believe that they have it. The Hindus have been trying to acquire it. Till they have had enough of this mutual fighting, neither side will sincerely wish for peace. They will not even tolerate interference by a person like me, and I can understand their not tolerating it. In such a situation, silence seems to be the best course for me. Peace will not be brought about by persons like you, who take no part in the riots or in inciting them, merely wishing for it. It is also, therefore, useless for me to think of intervening out of respect for their wish. The only way for the Hindus to overcome whatever cowardice they have in them is for such of them as are aware of the weakness to shed it and try to help others also to do so. This can be done in two ways: by striving for either physical strength or spiritual strength. There is, of course, cowardice even in physical strength. This they will hardly admit today, and it is not surprising that they will not. And if a person who has no understanding of spiritual strength also lacks physical strength, he is bound to be an impotent coward. So long as one has the strength to die and is ready to do so, one need not worry in the least. One may try to stop the fighting wherever one can. But one must know one’s limitations. We are not the judges of the world. Nor is it for us to shoulder its burden. There is an invisible power which does both. If we but surrender ourselves to it, we would know our duty from moment to moment.

---

\(^1\) Vide “Famine in the South”, 25-10-1928.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/19

153. LETTER TO GIRDHARILAL

October 21, 1928

BHAISHRI GIRDHARILAL,

I have your letter. Regarding Ashat Ikrani I can only say that it was wrong to have got him married at all. The mistake can still be rectified if the false fear of public opinion is given up. In other words that woman should be freed completely. If after that she lives with either of the two men to satisfy her passion, I would still in common usage call it adultery. In saying this I have not considered the questions of caste or community or custom. I am indifferent to both.

The problem about Makranis\(^1\) is easy to understand.

I am not aware of anyone having so far tried to reform the Makranis. In Kathiawar, moreover, state affairs are carried on wholly

\(^1\) Belonging to the Makrana community in Saurashtra on the basis of untruth. There is no rational policy in them. Both the rulers and the people seem to me like the Makranis. The people called Makrani about whom you write are but the external forms of the inner Makranis I am writing about. So long as that remain reality has not changed, the conditions are bound to remain as you describe them.
They may change outwardly somewhat, but will not completely disappear. For that to happen both the rulers and the people must give up the Makrani spirit. I hope you will not ask me what one should do in the meantime. There is no room for such a question.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/20

154. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

Silence Day, October 22’, 1928

CHI. RAMDAS,

I have your letter. Ba is better. There is no cause for worry.
Nimu arrived yesterday. She is all right. The moment she arrived, she joined in nursing Ba. Others who were ill have almost recovered. You must have got the news about a daughter having been born to Sushila.
Nanabhai has sent a cable that she should be named “Dhairyabala”.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6854

155. LETTER TO NANABHAI I. MASHRUWALA

Silence Day [October 22, 1928]1

BHAI NANABHAI,

I got your letter. There was a cable here too. I asked them to send it to you by post. I felt happy to read your remarks on non-violence in your letter.

I do wish to reply to you, but shall do so when I get some time.
Kishorelal is leaving for that side on Friday.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6677

1 The source has 21, vide also the following two items.
2 The cable mentioned in the letter was presumably from Manilal Gandhi, giving news about Sushila Gandhi having given birth to a daughter; vide the following item.
156. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

October 23, 1928

CHI. MANILAL AND SUSHILA,

I have your letter, as also the cable. By the time you get this, Sushila will have left her bed and Dhairyabala will have learnt to smile. I had a letter from Nanabhai only yesterday, in which he said that he had sent a cable about the name of the baby. This time too if I had not thought of your letter just now, that is, at 3.30 a.m., I would not have written this. It was thus that I missed the last mail. I get very little time these days to write letters and therefore get up at 3 in the morning, sometimes even at 2, and dictate letters.

I wrote1 you about Rasik and Navin having gone to Delhi. Ramdas is still in Bardoli. Nimu is here. Ba is ill. There is no cause for worry.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4744

157. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

October 23, 1928

CHI. MIRA,

I have your wire. Nowadays for me to secure Mondays for love-letters is an impossibility. You must therefore manage without my regular letters. But I must hear regularly from you.

Things are going on fairly well here though I cannot say they are quite settled.

Mahadev has to leave for Bardoli today in connection with the inquiry. He will be away for perhaps a week or longer.

The bakery is making steady progress. Pyarelal has discovered a way of puffing wheat. As soon as it is fully puffed I propose to send you a packet.

Associated Press had a short message about you in the Press. It is perhaps a report of the meeting referred to by you.

Love.

BAPU

1 Vide “Letter to Manilal and Sushila Gandhi”, After 31-8-1928.
PS. Did I tell you Gregg is here?

MIRABEHN
From the original: C.W. 5316. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 8206

158. LETTER TO V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
October 23, 1928

My dear brother,

You have been very good and very kind. Your regular letters have put me at ease and have enabled me to deal with complainants.

You have worked wonders. You have asked me not to press you to prolong your stay and I have religiously refrained and advised our people there to do likewise. But I am trembling to contemplate the future. I hear all kinds of ugly rumours. It will be a tragedy if the post is given not to the best man but to a favourite. I have no name round which to build public opinion. May God keep you for many a year to come.

Yours,

M. K. Gandhi

From a photostat: S.N. 11994

159. LETTER TO RAJPAL

Ashram,
October 23, 1928

Bhaishri Rajpal

I have your sorrowful letter. The day I summon up courage to kill the monkeys I will certainly be committing violence. But how can I hide my weakness? I cannot follow the path of non-violence by doing so. Rather than that out of a desire to be counted a great man I should be guilty of untruth, it is better that people should know me as I am. Do I not commit violence even today through weakness or ignorance? When I fumigate mosquitoes buzzing over puddles of water, they die; when I use a disinfectant to make water drinkable, the germs are killed. If a snake is discovered in a place where it cannot be caught I allow it to be killed. There is no limit to the violence I thus commit. But I take comfort in the thought that my aspiration for perfect non-violence is sincere. Do ask me again if you still have any doubt.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/21

160. LETTER TO PERIN CAPTAIN

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

October 24, 1928

I now understand what you mean. Mridula has not yet opened her bhandar. If she does and if she will stock your khaddar, there is nothing to prevent her from doing so. In what way can Kakasaheb help you?

The difficulty about Andhra is that so many manufacturers have proved false. Hence the necessity of exercising the greatest vigilance.

MRS. PERIN CAPTAIN

ISLAM CLUB BUILDINGS, CHOWPATTY, BOMBAY

From a microfilm: S.N. 13569

161. LETTER TO PRATAP DIALDAS

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

October 24, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. What you want and your wife want, to do is not birth-control but abortion. Abortion is a crime in law and in fact, it is likely also permanently to injure your wife’s health. I would therefore strongly dissuade you both from the step. Birth-control is prevention by artificial methods of conception, a totally different thing from abortion, which means destruction of the conceived embryo. The only way therefore I can suggest to you is to allow the pregnancy to take its own course and when the child is born to nurse it tenderly. For future protection you should resolutely decline to share the same bed or the same room with your wife and you should avoid all privacy.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. PRATAP DIALDAS

C/O DIALDAS MULCHAND

MAIN BAZAAR, HYDERABAD

From a microfilm: S.N. 13571
DEAR SATIS BABU,

I owe a reply to your two letters. Of course if there were only corn fields, monkeys will not give so much worry as they are giving now. What I have to do is to solve the question in such a manner as to be of use to others. It would be no solution to ask people to have only corn fields. The logical consequence of notree campaign means no rain and no fruit. The greatest need of India so far as agriculture is concerned is more trees and more fruit trees.

So far as cattle are concerned, I quite agree with you that the ideal is to do without them. That again means doing without agriculture. And in so far as agriculture is concerned, it is not merely the cattle that are concerned, but there is so much inevitable destruction of life in the pursuit of agriculture. All that one can aim at is minimum of destruction and kindly treatment of cattle. I would like you not to worry about this question. And that brings me to your previous letter.

It is in the field of khadi that your ahimsa would be displayed in its fullness, and it is there that you have to solve the question. I know that you will do nothing mechanically, nothing in haste, and things will take their own course and come rightly.

If Hemprabhadevi can come to the Ashram and take her share in the common kitchen and the other activities to the extent that her body allows, I should feel delighted. She can come when she chooses.

Our circular about the Exhibition has gone to all the affiliated and aided organizations.

You will let me know the result of your having sent samples of your khadi to the Karachi Municipality.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

SIT. SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA
KHAND PRATISHTHAN, SODEPUR

From a photostat: G.N. 1597
163. LETTER TO PURUSHOTTAM MAVJI

[Before October 25, 1928]¹

BHAISHRI PURUSHOTTAM MAVJI,

It is three o’clock in the morning. I have read your letter carefully from beginning to end. I think the articles² I have been writing these days answer your questions. I therefore advise you to get those articles if you do not have them and read them and ponder over them. Nevertheless, I briefly answer your questions here.

It is not true without exception that no living creature likes to die in any circumstances. I have seen with my own eyes persons laid on the floor as dead rising up alive. I have also heard of instances of persons sitting up on the pyre. But we can act only on the basis of what we assume to be true to the best of our knowledge. The reason for killing the calf was not that I could not bear to see its pain, but that, seeing the pain, I could not help it in any other way. I assumed that it would wish to be delivered from that pain, for I have known many men who so wished to be freed in similar circumstances. One may err in assuming such a wish in a particular case, but in countless situations, Nature has provided man with no other means but to make certain assumptions. I am dictating this letter on the assumption that I shall be alive till the letter is finished and that it will give you some comfort. But it is quite conceivable that I might die before the letter was finished or, possibly, instead of giving you comfort and peace, it might pain, displease and trouble you still more. But even if that was its effect, God would forgive me, because I started writing the letter with the purest of motives.

My answer to your question whether the calf was in unbearable pain is implied in what I have said above. But one more point is that in such matters self-deception is quite possible.

I can also reply that in a way I knew it for certain that the calf was going to die. But I know that you mean otherwise in your letter. You have not said that I could not know for certain from its pain that it would die. But that is what you think. However, I knew that its life was definitely going to end, if not because of the pain then through some other cause. If therefore I committed any error in acting on my assumption its only effect has been to alter the hour of death a little. It need not be necessary for me to try to become omniscient in order to save myself from the sin of altering the hour of death. Where the intention is not to give pain but to relieve pain by ending life, an ignorant man not only has the right to try but it is also incumbent on him to do so.

¹ In the Diary this letter is placed before the item that follows.
² Vide

Please do not have the slightest fear that I would hastily decide to kill the monkeys. But I see that I have gained much by starting the discussion, and so have other people through it. Obeying our desire to live, we knowingly destroy many living things. We know that it is wrong to destroy life in that way. I for one knew it and yet I am unable to overcome the desire to live though I know well enough that the desire is not good. I am therefore trying gradually to wean myself from it. I believe that all of us should do the same. That is our dharma too. It is quite impossible to keep the monkeys away from the fields without harassing them in some way. Even brandishing a stick at them is inflicting pain on them. Every day I drive away the mosquitoes to protect myself from their nuisance. That too is inflicting pain on them. Though knowing this, out of my desire to live, I give pain to countless creatures. I therefore daily pray to God to deliver me this very day from this body and from the necessity of having to be in a similar body which cannot be kept alive even for a moment without giving pain to some living creature, and till I am so delivered, to take from this body such service as He may wish for the good of others, at least as penance by me for the sin of living. But God’s ways are inscrutable. Even at this moment when I am praying thus, I am giving pain in some way or other to countless creatures. Innumerable creatures are eagerly waiting to settle in the space I now occupy. But what can I do? One cannot free oneself from the body merely by wishing it. To bring it about one must strive hard to live in a spirit of penance. While engaged in such an endeavour I have to accept innumerable troubles like that of the monkeys and I solve the problems according to my lights and to the best of my ability. I do not wish to deceive the world or myself in any way.

You did well of course to write the letter.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/22

164. ‘DEATH IS REST’

When I am overwhelmed with correspondence betraying in every line fear of death and consequent travesty of ahimsa, it refreshes me to come across the following beautiful dialogue a friend sent me on Maganlal Gandhi’s death:

1 An article by Gandhiji on the same subject with an additional concluding paragraph appeared in Navajivan, 4-11-1928.
Tzu Kung said to Confucius,— “Master, I am aweary, and would fain have rest.”

“In life,” replied the sage, “there is no rest.”

“Shall I then never have rest?” asked the disciple.

“You will,” said Confucius. “Behold the tombs which lie around; some magnificent, some mean. In one of these you will find rest!”

“How wonderful is Death!” rejoined Tzu Kung. “The wise man rests, the worldly man is engulfed therein.”

“My son,” said Confucius, “I see what you understand. Other men know life only as a boon; they do not perceive that it is a bane. They know old age as a state of weakness, they do not perceive that it is a state of ease. They know Death only as an abomination; they do not perceive that it is a state of rest.”

“How grand,” cried Yen Tzu, “is the old conception of Death! The virtuous find rest; the wicked are engulfed therein. In death, each reverts to that from which he came. The ancients regarded death as a return to, and life as an absence from, home. And he, who forgets his home, becomes an outcaste and a byword in his generation.”

It is not reproduced to defend the infliction of death penalty on any living being or thing. But it is given here to show that death is not a terror in all circumstances as many correspondents contend and that it may be a deliverance in certain cases, especially when it is not inflicted as a penalty but administered as a healing balm. “Death is but a sleep and a forgetting,” says the English poet. Let us not seek to prop virtue by imagining hellish torture after death for vice and houris hereafter as a reward for virtue in this life. If virtue has no attraction in itself, it must be a poor thing to be thrown away on the dung heap. Nature, I am convinced, is not so cruel as she seems to us, who are so often filled with cruelty ourselves. Both heaven and hell are within us. Life after Death there is, but it is not so unlike our present experiences as either to terrify us or make us delirious with joy. “He is steadfast who rises above joy and sorrow,” says the Gita. “The wise are unaffected either by death or life.” These are but faces of the same coin.1

The concept of non-violence in our religion is framed from the standpoint of the pain that we may cause another individual. Why should there be any outcry where death is caused either accidentally or deliberately but without any thought of causing pain? If there is not the fear of death behind that outcry, what else is it? And fear of death does not become man. Where there is this fear, supreme human

1 What follows is translated from Navajivan, 4-11-1928 endeavour in the form of non-violence is impossible.

Young India, 25-10-1928

165. FAMINE IN THE SOUTH

Salem, Coimbatore and other areas in the Tamil country whose peasant population depend on the unsteady rainfall of the central districts are having one of their very worst years. Reports from khadi centres show a terrible increase in rural unemployment. With October, the season for agricultural work generally begins and the peasant women in the khadi areas usually close down their spinning for the next four months. A certain number spin all the year round, but the majority who can work in the fields generally leave the charkhas during this time. But this year instead of a fall in the number of spinners there is an increase and a great rush for cotton at our depots.

The reader must remember that this rush is for a wage of one anna a day.

When will the intelligentsia of India and the well-to-do realize that the cloth that we wear is not mere covering or adornment, but a vital part of the national economy, a channel for distribution of national resources; and that clogging this is death? We can give substantial relief to the people at Pudupalayam and other famine-stricken areas where we have been enabled to set up khadi centres if only people will help us by a quick and generous consumption of the khadi that we produce. Ready consumption means room for more spinning and distribution of much needed relief among the Starving people. Sjt. Santanam desires to organize the maximum spinning in the Pudupalayam area in this period of distress there, and if we get public sympathy and support, he hopes to organize sale of food grains and seed at cheap fixed prices, the deficit being met from famine relief fund to be raised.

The way the public can help is

(a) by sending liberal orders for khadi;

(b) by sending donations either for distributing grams free or at rates within the means of the famishing people, or for supporting spinning centres where initial outlay will be a necessity.

C. Rajagopalachari

I hope that this appeal will receive a generous response. The appeal is evidently written in a hurry and without possession of full facts. But past experience shows that in such cases a general description draws a picture less terrible than a mere narrative of facts reveals. The reader will therefore not wait for a detailed report before he opens his purse-strings. I hope too to be able shortly to give a rough forecast of the requirements. Let the reader remember also that the best help that can be rendered” is to help to clear the stock of khadi that is being and will be manufactured. When khadi becomes current coin, though scarcity of rainfall will be always with us, there need be no distress such as would compel people to live on charity. While hand-spinning is being organized on a national scale, some charitable relief will be found necessary to meet emergencies. For all the famine-stricken people are not ready or able to spin, nor has the nation provided facilities in every village for willing spinners.

---

1 From the appeal by C. Rajagopalachari, only excerpts are reproduced here.

Young India, 25-10-1928

166. TRUE HOLIDAY-MAKING

A correspondent invites me to warn those who care against turning during the forthcoming Divali holidays good money into fireworks, bad sweets and unhygienic illuminations. I heartily respond. If I had my way I should have people to do housecleaning and heart cleaning and provide innocent and instructive amusements for children during these days. Fireworks I know are the delight of children, but they are so because we the elders have habituated them to fireworks. I have not known the untutored African children wanting or appreciating fireworks. They have dances instead. What can be better or healthier for children than sports and picnics to which they will take not bazaar-made sweets of doubtful value but fresh and dried fruit? Children both rich and poor may also be trained to do house-cleaning and whitewashing themselves. It will be something if they are coaxed to recognize the dignity of labour if only during holidays to begin with. But the point I wish to emphasize is that at least a part, if not the whole, of the money saved by doing away with fireworks, etc., should be given to the cause of khadi, or if that is anathema, then to any other cause in which the poorest are served. There cannot be greater joy to men and women young and old than that they think of and associate the poorest of the land with them in their holidays.

Young India, 25-10-1928

167. HOW WE LOST INDIA

It was at Jalpaiguri just before Deshbandhu’s death that I said to a mercantile audience in reply to an address from the merchants that we had lost India through merchants and that we should regain it also

1 An article by Gandhiji on the same subject appeared in Navajivan, 4-11-1928
through them.\textsuperscript{1} If illustrations of the truth of this statement were wanted, a striking one is furnished by the following circular letter from a mercantile association to other similar bodies:

As you are aware, trade in Manchester piece-goods and yarn has much gone down in recent times and is still showing a marked tendency to decrease. It has been noticed that business men are not taking as keen an interest in this trade as they used to do formerly. As a result of this indifference, our countrymen are steadily losing what was as it still may be a source of great profit and income to them. The Marwari community, along with other commercial communities, being very greatly interested in the piece-goods and yarn trade, my Committee adopted a resolution in their meeting of the 7th instant, to fully investigate into the causes of its depression with a view to taking definite steps for the rehabilitation of this important branch of trade.

As the matter is one of general interest, my Committee consider it advisable to meet the representatives of different public bodies interested in the trade in a conference in order to take concerted action if possible.

The circular is dated 19th July\textsuperscript{2}, 1928. I do not know the outcome of the effort. We are however just now not concerned with its result. The fact that there should be in our midst respectable bodies of merchants engaged in devising means for sustaining the trade in Manchester yarn and piece-goods, at a time when the whole country is trying to boycott all foreign cloth, is a portent which should be taken notice of by every national worker.

Enough evidence has been adduced from time to time in these pages that India is held by the English for their commerce and that by far the largest imports consist of piece-goods. Surely no committee or commission is required to prove that so long as this exploitation of our country is permitted by us, India will be held by the British by every means at their disposal. What we need therefore above all is not so much conversion or expulsion of the British residents or rulers as the conversion of our own merchant princes and their dependents who are selling their country for their own interest.

Nor need our merchant princes ruin themselves for the sake of the country. India will want all the quantity of the cloth and yarn that they are now importing. They have but to apply their undoubted ability to the manufacture of this quantity in our seven hundred thousand villages. In doing so they will naturally benefit themselves. I admit that they will have to give up commercial gambling, speculation and palaces out of all proportion to their surroundings, and be satisfied with an income bearing some relation to the condition of those for whom and with whom they would trade. In other words, instead of taking part as they are now doing in bleeding the villages, they would be making some tardy return to those on whom their prosperity has depended. The story of the belly and the members has an eternal application. The toiling millions are the belly. The merchants and others are the members. They must wither if the belly is starved. Those who have eyes can see that the belly has been shamefully starved for a long enough period. The withering of the members must follow soon as night follows day. Let us then repent before it is too late.

\textsuperscript{1} Vide “Speech at Public Meeting, Jalpaiguri”, 10-6-1925
\textsuperscript{2} Navajivan article has July 7.

Young India, 25-10-1928

168. “ECONOMICS OF KHADDAR”

Mr. Richard B. Gregg, the author of Economics of Khaddar, is a painstaking student. He has found additional material to support his thesis and discovered some printer’s errors in his volume. He has sent me these additions and corrections¹. The reader will not mind my sharing these additions and corrections with the students of Mr. Gregg’s volume. They will also be glad to know that he is now compiling a detailed index for it so as to facilitate the study and research of khadi lovers.

Young India, 25-10-1928

169. LETTER TO ALAVI

ASHRAM,

October 25, 1928

BHAISHRI ALAVI,

I have your letter.

It was not my duty to know more about Khilafat than I did. Khilafat was not merely Turkey. To me Khilafat had a much deeper meaning and the fight for my conception of Khilafat is still going on. The only difference now is that we no longer have to fight over the issue with the British. Ask me more about this when we meet some day. I would not be able to explain the matter more clearly. Where there is trust it is not proper to ask too many questions. The important thing is that even the British Prime Minister had recognized the claim of the Muslims to be just. The other Governments wanted to annex Turkey.

¹ Not reproduced here

I will certainly now read the book on the Muslim Saint.

As for the calf I will only say that the argument that we have no right to kill a creature the sight of which gives us pain if our personal interest is not involved does not apply here. The question here was about one’s duty to kill. Think over this difference. At the back of the American’s action was his distrust of the people. He believed that people would not look after his daughter. And the girl was not unconscious. I think there is a lot of difference between her case and that of the calf. I have not been able to read that article in Navajivan again. Do write to me if you have still not been able to see the difference. I will then try to read that article and find time to write to you a more detailed reply.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/23

170. MESSAGE TO LITERARY CONFERENCE

October 26, 1928

Where Anandshankerbhai is the President, success is assured. I hope that lovers of literature will not forget the poor of Gujarat and that Anandshankerbhai will not let them do so.

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 28-10-1928

171. LETTER TO SVENSKA KYRKANS

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,

October 26, 1928

MESSRS SVENSKA KYRKANS
DIAKONISTYRELSES, HOKFORLAG, STOCKHOLM 7 (SWEDEN)
DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I am surprised that you have not yet received my letter¹. The purport of my letter was that you were at liberty to translate the Autobiography in the Swedish language and that whatever you sent me would be utilized for some public purpose.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 12783

¹ Dated June 8, 1928; vide
172. LETTER TO F. B. FISHER

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 26, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I had your letter from Hingham. I have got the book also, called Understanding India. I do not know when I shall get the time but as soon as I do, I shall read Mrs. William’s book.

I reciprocate the hope that we shall meet one another some time next year.

Yours sincerely,

REV. F. B. FISHER
METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, 3 MIDDLETON STREET, CALCUTTA
From a photostat: S.N. 13509

173. LETTER TO HARRIETTE ASHBROOK

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 26, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter for which I thank you. I have also the book by Mrs. Williams. As soon as I can get the time, I shall read the book and let you have my opinion. But I am so overwhelmed with work that I do not know when I shall get the time to read the book.

Yours sincerely,

HARRIETTE ASHBROOK
COWARD MCCANN, 425 FOURTH AVENUE, NEW YORK
From a photostat: S.N. 14390

1 In reply to his letter dated September 7, which read: “Mother India has created a terrible sensation in America. It has been difficult to know just how to meet the situation.... There is now coming off from the press a book by Gertrude Marvin Williams called Understanding India, which I believe will help in many ways to correct the wrong impressions which Miss Mayo has given. . .”
174. LETTER TO HORACE HOLBY

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 26, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter sending me the magazine World Unity.

I have instructed the Manager to put you on the exchange list. You are certainly at liberty to copy whatever you like from Young India, and if I find something in your magazine I might consider to be of value for the readers of Young India, I shall take the copy with due acknowledgment.

Yours sincerely,

HORACE HOLBY, ESQ.
EDITO, “WORLD UNITY”
4 EAST 12TH STREET, NEW YORK
Copy to the Manager, Young India, for necessary action.

From a microfilm: S.N. 14397

175. LETTER TO J. B. PENNINGTON

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 26, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I was delighted to receive your letter. I wish I could find the time to read the book you refer to.

With reference to the problem of poverty I wish you were able to see the India that I know. I am sure you will soon change your view about India’s poverty apart from the reasons for it. I have forwarded your criticism to Mr. Vakil.¹

I do hope that you have still many years in front of you.

Yours sincerely,

J. B. PENNINGTON, ESQ.
3 VICTORIA STREET, 3 WESTMINSTER, S.W.

From a photostat: S.N. 14404

¹ Pennigton had mentioned that C. N. Vakil had overlooked the fragmentation of land, a result of the Hindu Inheritance Law, as a major cause of poverty in India.
176. LETTER TO SIR DANIEL M. HAMILTON

October 26, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter. I am sending a copy of it to Sir Purushottam Das.

You will have noticed that I published your paper in the pages of Young India. Several economist friends have interested themselves in it. I am expecting at least one criticism.

I hope you received the issues of Young India containing your article.

Yours sincerely,

SIR DANIEL HAMILTON

BALMAOARA, BY KYLE, ROSS SHIRE, ENGLAND

From a microfilm: S.N. 14418

177. LETTER TO W. H. PITT

October 26, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I was delighted to hear from you after such a long time and under other circumstances.¹

I quite agree with you that the death of Mr. Krishna Pillay² was a great loss.

The untouchability question in Travancore is still hanging fire. But untouchability, it is undoubtedly going steadily though ever so slow.

I hope both you and Mrs. Pitt are enjoying yourselves there.

Yours sincerely,

W.H. PITT, ESQ.

LIDDINGTON, SWINDON, WILTS

From a photostat: S.N. 14423

¹ Pitt, who was Police Commissioner of Travancore till April 1928, began his letter (S.N. 14422) dated June 15 thus: “My dear Mahatmaji, I am all but a private citizen, and no longer bound by official conventions, so I am using your spiritual title to address you, instead of just Mr. Gandhi!”

² Commissioner, Travancore Devaswom
178. LETTER TO S. GANESAN

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

October 26, 1928

MY DEAR GANESAN,

Here is a letter from Spain. Please send him the information he wants, and the books you should send only when he sends the money for them.

Mr. Gregg is here and he complains of absence of any letter from you, even regarding business enquiries. He tells me that you have not even sent a book to Mr. Roy in Shantiniketan. I have now sent a copy to Mr. Roy from here. Why all this negligence?

With reference to your letter about Bharati’s songs, I have sent you a wire1 today.

I wrote also to the Maharajah of Nabha some time ago.2

Yours sincerely,

SIT. S. GANESAN

18 PYCROFTS ROAD, TRIPLICANE, MADRAS

From a microfilm: S.N. 13573

179. LETTER TO MITHUBEHN PETIT

October 26, 1928

DEAR SISTER,

Your letter came into my hands only today. I believe Ramdas hasz has been carrying out your orders. All the same, I am sending your letter to him.

You have undertaken a big task. But you always succeed in your ventures, and so everything will be all right. I am sure you take care of your health.

Blessings from

BAPU

MITHUBEHN

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2707

---

1 Not available
180. LETTER TO BHULABHAI DESAI

October 26, 1928

BHAISHRI BHULABHAI

The Bardoli Inquiry Committee will meet in the beginning of November. I think it is desirable that the case should be represented by an eminent and experienced advocate like you, so that the Committee may think twice before doing flagrant injustice. Can you spare the time? I do not insist that you should be present at every hearing. It will be enough if you remain present at the first two or three meetings to represent the ryots’ case and thereafter attend the meetings only when you consider it necessary. This letter will be delivered to you by Mahadev who will tell you more. I have written along similar lines to Bahadurji also but Mahadev will use that letter, if necessary, only after meeting you.

Vandemataram form

MOHANDAS GANDHI

From the Gujarati original: Bhulabhai Desai Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

181. TELEGRAM TO MRS. S. R. DAS

[On or after October 26, 1928]

MRS. S. R. DAS
CALCUTTA

MY DEEPEST SYMPATHY IN YOUR LOW WHICH IS SHARED BY YOUR NUMEROUS FRIENDS AMONG WHOM I COUNT MYSELF AS ONE.

GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 13585

1 Eminent advocate of Bombay
2 Appointed by Government to investigate and report on the people’s complaint that the enhancement of assessment in Bardoli Taluka was unwarranted.
3 The addressee consented to be the ryots’ advocate and made the preliminary argument on behalf of the ryots when the Committee began its inquiry in November.
4 D. N. Bahadurji; vide “Letter to D. N. Bahadur”, 27-10-1928
5 S. R. Das, Law Member of the Viceroy’s Executive Council, died on October 26.
182. LETTER TO MIRABEHN
Unrevised October 27, 1928

CHI. MIRA,

I have been writing since 2.30 a.m., Kusum having got malaria. There are so many now ailing. Chhaganlal Joshi’s whole family is ailing; Narandas has a relapse, Ba had a severe time; Pyarelal is prostrate; Chhotelal is threatening again; even the strong Surendra has not escaped. There are others who need not be mentioned. Standenath I must not forget. He had a bad attack. So you may imagine the time I am having. Mahadev is in Bardoli.

Well, in spite of the catalogue, God seems to want work from me and keeps me fairly fit. But who knows—?

Things are moving steadily. The calf incident has occupied my attention a great deal. It has done much good in that it has set people thinking.

(Here I had to stop for the prayer).

4.15 p.m.

Harjivan Kotak sends the enclosed telegram1 from Srinagar. If you do not go to Nepal I would like you to retrace your steps and visit Kashmir. You should see it for its mountains as well as its khadi work.

Pandit Motilalji is here today.

I expect to go to Wardha during the last week of November.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5317. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 8207

183. LETTER TO K. S. SUBRAMANIAM
SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 27, 1928

MY DEAR SUBRAMANIAM,

I have your letter. I am wholly unable to advise without having a chat with the members of the Council2. I do however feel that Pandit

1 Dated October 27, which read: “Wish Mirabehn includes Srinagar in her tour if possible and you permit.” It contained the following remarks in Gandhiji’s ‘land: “Write to him directly, Harjivan Kotak, A.I.S.A. Depot, Srinagar” (C.W. 5318).

2 Of the All-India Spinners’ Association. Subramaniam had enclosed a draft circular on behalf of the Association purporting to inform all khadi organizations not to participate in the Exhibition to be organized at the Calcutta Congress on account of differences between the Association and Reception Committee of the Congress as to the inclusion of mill-cloth in the Exhibition.
Jawaharlal Nehru is right when he says that he cannot do justice to the Agency as he has so many other calls on his time.

I return herewith Pandit Jawaharlal’s letter sent by you.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. K. S. SUBRAMANIAM
ALL-INDIA SPINNERS’ ASSOCIATION, AHMEDABAD
395 KALBADEVI ROAD, BOMBAY

From a microfilm: S.N. 12784

184. LETTER TO D. N. BAHADUR

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 27, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

You know that the Bardoli Inquiry commences next month. I am most anxious that the ryot’s case should be represented before the Committee by some eminent Counsel. Could you find the time to study the case and represent the cause at the opening of the Inquiry? I do not expect you to be present at all its sittings. But I would like you, if you have the time and the inclination, to guide the advisers generally and appear before the Committee whenever occasion requires your presence.

Mahadev will personally hand this note to you. I am sending a similar note to Bhulabhai.

Yours sincerely,

D. N. BAHADURJI, ESQ.
RIDGE ROAD, MALABAR HILL, BOMBAY

From a photostat: S.N. 13575

185. LETTER TO KALYANJI MEHTA

Saturday [October 27, 1928]

BHAISHRI KALYANJI,

It is said that the Secretary of Hindu is hand-cuffed and ill-treated in other ways. Write to me to tell me what you know about this.

Blessings from

BAPU

1 Bhulabhai Desai
2 From the postmark
Kanti must have left the bed now.

BHAISHRI KALYANJI
PATIDAR ASHRAM, SURAT

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2680

186. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI
Saturday [October 27, 1928]¹

CHI. RAMDAS.

I have your letter.

Let me know what work you are now busy on. It is good that you joined the Mandal of Mithubehn.

Ba is getting impatient to send Nimu there. Nimu has not asked for anything. But today Ba was insistent and hence I write this much to you.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

I read the accompanying letter after writing this one. But now I do not have to give you any guidance. Under the tender care of Mithubehn you will have no discomfort.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6858

187. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI
Saturday [October 27, 1928]²

CHI. MATHURADAS.

I receive your letters after long intervals. I would be happy if without straining yourself you could come here for a day, but only if it does not cause you any physical strain at all. There is an epidemic of fever around here these days. It seems in this season the peasant families do become afflicted with fever. You must follow Dr. Jivraj’s advice and spend one more year in the peaceful atmosphere of a hill

¹ From the postmark
² ibid

154 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
resort.

Mahadev is at Bardoli this year. He will be in Bombay on Sunday. I should be very happy if your programme of going to Almora materializes. Prabhudas was immensely benefited.

Blessings from

BAPU

SIT. MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI
VICTORIA LODGE
MATHERAN (G.I.P. RLY.)

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

188. FAMINE IN THE SOUTH

There is no end to the misery in the South. On the one hand, there is a severe draught around Salem, while on the other, we hear of floods around Kakinada. We have still to learn of the extent of damage caused by the floods. Meanwhile the appeal that Shri Rajagopalachari has issued with regard to the drought has been published in Young India.¹ From this it is seen that the crops have been damaged owing to water scarcity and that the farmers are worried. There is a sudden rise in the number of women who wish to spin. Whereas last September, 2,473 women came to the Gandhi Ashram in order to take cotton, this September the number went up to 6,423. The amount of yarn received during the month last year was 4,785 pounds, while the amount received this year was 12,802 pounds.

This activity is the purest means of helping the famine-stricken population and, if it is firmly established, the people would not suffer despite the famine. At present famine causes hardship because the farmers are rendered unemployed and are without an income. They would be free from anxiety if they could be assured of the security provided by a subsidiary occupation. At this time, there are two ways of helping the people, first by buying the khadi that is produced in this famine-stricken area and second by offering them unconditional financial assistance. I hope to publish hereafter the figures relating to the famine. Those who wish to share in this privation now may contribute as much as they can or purchase khadi.

[From Gujarati]

Navajiv an, 28-10-1928

¹ Vide “Famine in the South”, 25-10-1928.
189. THE GUJARAT VIDYAPITH

It was a very important speech that the principal had prepared on the day the Diwali vacation started in the University and the Vinay-mandir and read out at the farewell gathering. Although it was a long speech, its effect was that of a brief one because it contained no figurative language or repetition. Its speciality lay in its crystal-clear truth. No attempt was made to hide any drawbacks or to dismiss them as unimportant. Despite this the report of this term of 112 days may be considered as very hopeful. The speech indeed contains a brief outline of many activities. It is obvious from this that even the minutest detail has not been overlooked. Amongst these, the sections dealing with agriculture and practical training in crafts cannot but attract our attention. In the field of agriculture, growing fruit trees and cotton is an altogether new experiment. The activities of ginning, carding, spinning, weaving and carpentry are the ones that are most striking amongst the crafts. At least two hours a day are devoted to the crafts. In order to do proper justice to the crafts, it will be necessary to devote more time to them as no craft can be mastered without a great deal of practice and a craftsman’s hands cannot become experienced without a full amount of work. Proficiency in a craft cannot be developed in the same manner as a mental activity. After reading a little, the mind can develop without further reading as it can continue to think while being engaged in any other activity. Being a purely physical activity, a craft can be developed only while it is being practised; hence it requires complete familiarization with it. Moreover, the middle classes are not in the habit of practising any craft; hence, in order to form that habit, they require specially to cultivate familiarity with it.

Another point in the speech which attracts our attention is the reference to the dictionary which is getting ready. The present chaotic state of spellings acts as a hindrance to the development of the language. Kakasaheb hopes that this dictionary will be ready by March. If this task is accomplished, an important piece of work as yet unaccomplished will have been completed. Amongst all the languages of India, Gujarati is found to be the only one in which laxity in regard to spellings is possible.

A new experiment which has been referred to in the speech is that of developing fellow-feeling towards one’s servants. If we cannot do without servants, the alternative is to establish cordial relations with them by putting them on the same footing with ourselves. Kakasaheb hopes to establish such relations by running a class for servants. His good intentions will be fulfilled if the students carry out this task in an honest manner.

Despite these new activities, knowledge of the alphabet has not been neglected. Anyone who goes through the speech will clearly see that sufficient attention is also being paid to this aspect. In other words, a careful attempt is being made to put before the students who are being trained by the Vidyapith all that is required to turn them into village workers. Whether they will be receptive to this or not will depend on their enthusiasm. This latter factor in its turn is dependent upon the art of the teacher.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 28-10-1928

190. THE FAIR AT WAUTHA

This fair is held every year in Wautha on the full-moon day in the month of Kartik. Following is the notice which has been issued with regard to it by Shri Dahyabhai Patel on behalf of the taluk committee:

This appeal involves a request for two things: one is for volunteers and the other for funds. I am confident that assistance of both sorts will be forthcoming. While sending in this appeal, Shri Dahyabhai writes that he has received a sum of Rs. 300 from the provincial committee. The other contribution that has so far been received amounts to only Rs. 31. The minimum expense amounts to Rs. 500. Hence I hope that the balance will be readily forthcoming. I consider it remarkable that the public can be served through the expenditure of such a small sum. I have found that volunteer bodies incur large expenses on such occasions.

It is not always the case that people enjoy only innocent pleasures at such fairs. Dahyabhai has described the ideal. It is the task of the volunteers in such fairs to see that purity is maintained. It is often found that at fairs

1. limits of decency are transgressed,
2. gambling is practised,
3. there is fighting,
4. wicked persons resort to ill-practices, and
5. many inedible things are eaten and things which should not be sold are sold.

1The appeal is not translated here. It asked people to serve as volunteers to look after the huge crowd of pilgrims and to send contributions towards expenses.
It is impossible to stop these practices at once in a crowd of thousands. However, reforms can be brought about by making an attempt on every occasion. On such occasions, dealers of foreign cloth sell large stocks of foreign cloth too. Propaganda for khadi can well be carried on instead. If all this is to be achieved, preparations should be made in advance, and there should be a large number of good, intelligent and self sacrificing volunteers. If these steps are taken, such fairs can be well utilized for educating the public.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 28-10-1928

191. MORE ABOUT AHIMSA

A correspondent writes:

I have read your article “The Fiery Ordeal” over and over again but it has failed to satisfy me. Your proposal about the killing of monkeys has taken me aback. I believed that a person like you with his being steeped in ahimsa would never swerve from the right path even though the heavens fell. And now you say that you might kill off the monkeys to protect your Ashram against their inroads. Maybe that my first impression about you was wrong. But I cannot describe what a shock your proposal about the killing of the monkeys has given me, and may I also confess, how angry it has made me feel against you? Would you kindly help me out of my perplexity?

I have received several other letters too in the same strain. I am afraid people have formed an altogether exaggerated estimate of me. These good people seem to think that because I am trying to analyse and define the ideal of ahimsa I must have fully attained that ideal. My views regarding the calf and the monkeys seem happily to have shattered this illusion of theirs. Truth to me is infinitely dearer than the ‘mahatmaship’ which is purely a burden. It is my knowledge of my limitations and my nothingness which has so far saved me from the oppressiveness of the ‘mahatmaship’. I am painfully aware of the fact that my desire to continue life in the body involves me in constant himsa, that is why I am becoming growingly indifferent to this physical body of mine. For instance I know that in the act of respiration I destroy innumerable invisible germs floating in the air. But I do not stop breathing. The consumption of vegetables involves himsa

1 The Gujarati original of this appeared in Navajivan, 28-10-1928. This is a translation by Pyarelal.
2 Dated 30-9-1928
but I find that I cannot give them up. Again, there is himsa in the use of antiseptics, yet I cannot bring myself to discard the use of disinfectants like kerosene, etc., to rid myself of the mosquito pest and the like. I suffer snakes to be killed in the Ashram when it is impossible to catch and put them out of harm’s way. I even tolerate the use of the stick to drive the bullocks in the Ashram. Thus there is no end of himsa which I directly and indirectly commit. And now I find myself confronted with this monkey problem. Let me assure the reader that I am in no hurry to take the extreme step of killing them. In fact I am not sure that I would at all be able finally to make up my mind to kill them. As it is, friends are helping me with useful suggestions and the adoption of some of them may solve the difficulty at least temporarily without our having to kill them. But I cannot today promise that I shall never kill the monkeys even though they may destroy all the crop in the Ashram. If as a result of this humble confession of mine, friends choose to give me up as lost, I would be sorry but nothing will induce me to try to conceal my imperfections in the practice of ahimsa. All claim for myself is that I am ceaselessly trying to understand the implications of great ideals like ahimsa and to practise them in thought, word and deed and that not without a certain measure of success as I think. But I know that I have a long distance yet to cover in this direction. Unless therefore the correspondent in question can bring himself to bear with my imperfections I am sorry I can offer him but little consolation.

II

Another correspondent writes:

Supposing my elder brother is suffering from a terrible and painful, malady and doctors have despaired of his life and I too feel likewise, should I in the circumstances put him out of life?

My reply is in the negative. I am afraid some of my correspondents have not even taken the trouble to understand my article. In propounding their conundrums they forget that whilst I have certainly compared the case of an ailing human being with that of an ailing calf and recommended the killing of the former in exactly similar circumstances, in actual practice such a complete analogy is hardly ever to be found. In the first place the human body being much more manageable in bulk is always easier to manipulate and nurse; secondly man being gifted with the power of speech more often than not is in a position to express his wishes and so the question of taking his life without his consent cannot come within the rule. For I have never suggested that the life of another person can be taken against his will without violating the principle of ahimsa. Again, we do not always despair of the life of a person when he is reduced to a comatose state and even when he is past all hope he is not necessarily past all help. More often than not it is both possible and practicable to render service to a human patient till the very end. Whilst, therefore, I would still maintain that the principle enunciated regarding the calf applies equally to man and bird and beast I should expect an intelligent person to know the obvious natural difference between a man and an animal. To recapitulate the conditions the fulfilment of all of which alone can warrant the taking of life from the point of view of ahimsa:

1. The disease from which the patient is suffering should be incurable.
2. All concerned have despaired of the life of the patient.
3. The case should be beyond all help or service.
4. It should be impossible for the patient in question to express his or its wish.

So long as even one of these conditions remains unfulfilled the taking of life from the point of view of ahimsa cannot be justified.

III

A third correspondent writes:

"Well, the killing of the calf is all right so far as it goes. But have you considered that your example is likely to afford a handle to those who indulge in animal sacrifices and thus accentuate the practice; do you not know that even those who commit these deeds argue that the animals sacrificed gain merit in the life to follow?"

Such abuse of my action is quite possible, and inevitable so long as there are hypocrisy and ignorance in this world. What crimes have not been committed in the world in the sacred name of religion? One therefore need not be deterred from doing what one considers to be right merely because one’s conduct may be misunderstood or misinterpreted by others. And as for those who practise animal sacrifice, surely they do not need the authority of my example to defend their conduct since they profess to take their stand on the authority of the Shastras. My fear however is that proceeding on my analogy some people might actually take into their head summarily to put to death those whom they might imagine to be their enemies on the plea that it would serve both the interests of society and the ‘enemies’ concerned, if the latter were killed. In fact I have often heard people advance this argument. But it is enough for my purpose to know that my interpretation of ahimsa affords no basis whatever for such an argument, for in the latter case there is no question of serving or anticipating the wishes of the victims concerned. Finally, even if it were admitted that it was in the interest of the animal or the enemy in question to be summarily dispatched the act would still be spelt as himsa because it would not be altogether disinterested. The fallacy is so obvious. But who can help people who seeing see not, or are bent upon deceiving themselves?

Young India, 1-11-1928

192. THE STUDENTS’ INTERROGATORIES

(Before Gandhiji commenced reading Hind Swaraj with the students of the Gujarat Vidyaipith they had addressed him a string of questions for answer. As some of these questions are of general interest Gandhiji had dealt with them in the columns of Navajivan. The following assortment out of them will be found useful by the readers of Young India. P.)

UNDER SWARAJ

Q. What in your opinion ought to be the basis of India’s future economic constitution? What place will such institutions as savings banks, insurance companies, etc., have in it?

A. According to me the economic constitution of India and for the matter of that the world should be such that no one under it should suffer from want of food and clothing. In other words, everybody should be able to get sufficient work to enable him to make the two ends meet. And this ideal can be universally realized only if the means of production of elementary necessaries of life remain in the control of the masses. These should be freely available to all as God's air and water are or ought to be; they should not be made a vehicle of traffic for the exploitation of others. Their monopolization by any country, nation or groups of persons would be unjust. The neglect of this simple principle is the cause of the destitution that we witness today not only in this unhappy land but other parts of the world too. It is this evil that the khadi movement is calculated to remedy. Savings banks and insurance companies will be there even when the economic reforms suggested by me. have been effected but their nature will have undergone a complete transformation. Savings banks today in India though a useful institution do not serve the very poorest. As for our insurance companies they are of no use whatever to the poor. What part they can play in an ideal scheme of reconstruction such as I have postulated is more than I can say. The function of savings banks

---

1 The Gujarati original of this appeared in Navajivan, 28-10-1928.

2 Vide “My Notes”, 21-10-1928. ought to be to enable the poorest to husband their hard-earned savings and to subserve the interests of the country generally. Though I have lost faith in most Government institutions, as I have said before, savings banks are good so far as they go but unfortunately today their services are available only to the urban section of the community and so long as our gold reserves are located outside India they can hardly be regarded as trustworthy institutions. In the event of a war all these banks may become not only utterly useless but even a curse to the people inasmuch as the Government will not scruple to employ the funds held by these banks against the depositors themselves. No Government institution can be depended upon to remain loyal to the interests of the people in emergency, if they are not controlled by and not run in the interests of the people. So long therefore as this primary condition is absent banks are in the last resort additional links to keep the people in chains. They may be regarded as an unavoidable evil and therefore to be suffered to exist but it is well to understand where we are in respect even of such harm less looking institutions.

FOREIGN v. SWADESHI

Q. What is your opinion about the importation of foreign goods other than cloth into India? Are there any foreign commodities which you would like to see immediately laid under prohibition? What do you think should be the nature of India’s foreign trade in the future?

A. I am more or less indifferent with regard to trade in foreign goods other than cloth. I have never been an advocate of prohibition of all things foreign because they are foreign. My economic creed is a complete taboo in respect of all foreign commodities, whose importation is likely to prove harmful to our indigenous interests. This means that we may not in any circumstance import a commodity that can be adequately supplied from our own country. For instance I would regard it a sin to import Australian wheat on the score of its better quality but I would not have the slightest hesitation in importing oatmeal from Scotland, if an absolute necessity for it is made out, because we do not grow oats in India. In other words I would not countenance the boycott of a single foreign article out of ill-will or a feeling of hatred. Or to take up a reverse case, India produces a sufficient quantity of leather; it is my duty therefore to wear shoes made out of Indian leather only, even if it is comparatively dearer and of an inferior quality, in preference to cheaper and superior quality foreign leather shoes. Similarly I would condemn the introduction of foreign molasses or sugar if enough of it is produced in India for our needs. It will be thus clear from the above that it is hardly possible for me to give an exhaustive catalogue of foreign articles whose importation in India ought to be prohibited. I have simply inculcated the general principle by which we can be guided in all such cases. And this principle will hold good in future too so long as the conditions of production in our country remain as they are today.

Young India, 15-11-1928

193. SPEECH AT THE NEW GUJARATI SCHOOL, AHMEDABAD

October 28, 1928

This school owes its existence to Shri Indulal Yajnik, and we would be failing in our duty and be deemed ungrateful if we did not remember him while mentioning it. We cannot forget his major contribution towards creating an interest in Gujarat and its (the school’s) activities. This school is the result of his endeavours. The teachers have carried on its work; they need to be congratulated on this. The principal of the school has made a reference to its connection with the Vidyapith. The school has nothing to do with the organizing committee of the Vidyapith. It is my sad experience, however, that Vidyapith and such other institutions do not function well if we do not narrow down the field of their activities, and the present limited scope of the Vidyapith is to ensure its progress and not retard it. I assure you that not the slightest injury will be done to those schools which render service to the nation. The Vidyapith exists in order to foster the educational activities which are being carried on in Gujarat. Its present endeavours are to make all schools self-reliant and to rid them of sluggishness and inertia. So far as this school is concerned, there is no such apprehension; otherwise, I would not have come at all today. I expect much from the students and teachers of this school.

You have enacted a very good play dealing with sacrifice. Luther sacrificed himself for freedom’s sake. Similarly, there is a need to risk death for the sake of the national schools, regardless of whether one meets with death or not. We are brave at the outset, but are always ready to abandon our pledge because we lack faith in our work. So long as we lack such faith, we shall be unable to make India’s prestige enduring as we want to do.

The Goddess of Independence is like an angel of death. She sits with her mouth open, inviting everyone to enter it. If we are not prepared for this, we shall be unable to fulfil our cherished desires. It is good for you to play, jump and make your bodies and minds healthy, but do not forget the basic difference between national and governmental schools. The education given at the latter may be good, but one thing these will not give you. Even today I proclaim loudly that those schools are fit to be abandoned by us. You should be determined to offer at the feet of Mother [India] whatever art and physical prowess you acquire in this school. Patriotism should be so taught here that every student should decide that, when he grows up, he will serve the country. If you do so while adhering to truth and ahimsa, it will include service to the family as well. I bless the children and request the teachers to put fully into practice the ideals they have accepted. So long as they do not do this, the children will be unable to respond to them.

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 4-11-1928

194. LETTER TO SHANTI KUMAR MORARJI

Silence Day [On or before October 29, 1928]

CHI. SHANTI KUMAR.

I have your letter. I was disappointed with the draft for an organization to promote swadeshi. I smelt in it merely a commercial spirit. From one point of view, however, what is happening is good. The draft shows the mill-owners as they are, and what can be better than that we should seem what we are?

I should certainly like you to keep yourselves away from this move, if you can. I am surprised to know that Shri Jaisukhlal is associating himself with it. You may, if you wish, show this letter to him and to anyone else who is likely to appreciate my views.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 4706. Courtesy: Shantikumar Morarji

---

1 From the postmark
195. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

[October 29, 1928]

CHI. MIRA,

I have a moment to spare while the vegetables are being made ready for shredding. Now that you are in Bihar I wonder what you will do about Malkhachak khadi work. Krishnadas is living at that place. You will do as the spirit moves you. I am simply telling you what is which. Rajendra Babu may not want you to see the place as it has no connection with the A.I.S.A.

Chhotelalji’s bread is making much headway and cookery is greatly simplified. But this you will see for yourself when you return. You will keep yourself in touch with Devdas and the Jamia.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

I must not forget to tell you that I have commenced my own carding. I have begun with the medium bow.

BAPU

SHRIMATI MIRABAI

KHADI DEPOT, MUZAFFARPUR, BIHAR

From the original: C.W. 5319. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 8209

196. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

Silence Day, October 29, 1928

CHI. MAHADEV,

I got your letter, but not the [instalment of] Autobiography. I am sure I shall get it tomorrow, but all the same Pyarelal has undertaken to keep a translation ready. He is all right now. Kusum, too, is all right, but she is still confined to bed. As for me, God keeps my cart going; does not He? Has He stopped anyone’s till this day? There is no special merit, therefore, in the fact that mine jogs along.

It was good that Bhulabhai immediately agreed. If the reports of Anderson and others stand superseded, the burden does not lie on

---

1 In Bapu’s Letters to Mira, Mirabehn explains: “Bapu used to take part in the cutting and shredding of the vegetables for the common kitchen.”

2 “Chhotelalji had successfully built a brickoven and learnt the art of preparing baker’s bread without using yeast” (Mirabehn).

us. It is for the Government to justify the increase.

There was a letter for you, which I am sending with this. I could not read the signature. I hope you have not forgotten about bread and bread-making.

Parikshitlal wants to know whether you gave him a copy of Antyaja Sarvasangraha. Did you?

Ba has left her sick-bed. She is still weak of course. She is very much reduced. Radha and Santok have gone to Rajkot. They will return after Diwali. Mirabai has reached Muzaffarpur.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
Motilalji came yesterday and left today. All the time we talked about the Congress. I am sending the preface separately to Jugatram.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11446

197. TELEGRAM TO G. D. BIRLA³

AHMEDABAD,
October 30, 1928

GHANSHYAMDAS BIRLA
BIRLA PARK, CALCUTTA

MAHDEV BARDOLI. ON GENERAL GROUNDS INVITATION SOUTH AFRICAN JOURNALISTS ADVISABLE.

GANDHI

From the original: C.W. 7878. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

198. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 31, 1928

CHI. MIRA,

I have your two letters at the same time, one about the Ashram and one describing your Meerut visit I sent you two letters to the ¹ The source has the last four words of this sentence in English.

² Government of India had asked for G. D. Birla’s views on a suggestion made by V. S. Srinivasa Sastri, to invite to India a group of journalists from South Africa to give them an idea of Indian culture. Birla, in his letter dated October 27 addressed to Mahadev Desai, had requested him to ascertain Gandhi’s opinion.
Muzaffarpur address, one on Sunday and the other on Monday.

I don’t know how the news about the Ashram appears in the papers. Anyway most of it is all false. If there was any violent change I would have surely written to you. I have not dealt with even the change of name in the paper because Mahadev and others were anxious that I should not even announce change of name in the Press. Now, of course, I shall be obliged to do so. But the committee of the Udyoga Mandir would not relax the rule about brahmacharya, so that the fundamental rule about brahmacharya and all fundamental rules remain as they were. So does the common kitchen remain a fixture irrevocably for at least one year. At the end of the year only, it is now possible to reconsider the question of the common kitchen in the light of the experience that will be gained. The kitchen is going on merrily.

The Gandhi Ashram people in Meerut want carding demonstration and demonstration of other processes at the time of a fair that is to be held on 21st November. If you are not going to Nepal, it might be well to retrace your steps and go to this fair and give them what help you can and then proceed to Kashmir. Apart from everything else, I would like you to visit Kashmir and that you will do only while there is some khadi work going on. And you can take the help of Devdas, Rasik and Navin for arranging the demonstration, in which case it won’t be necessary to send anybody from here, and as we are terribly short-handed at the present moment, it will be very inconvenient to send any from the Ashram. Yet I am anxious to help the Meerut people. Having known my views, you will do what suits you best. I have not held out any hope to Muzmudar who is the one to write the letter.

With love,

BAPU

SHRIMATI MIRABEHN
C/O KHADI DEPOT, MUZAFFARPUR (BIHAR)

From the original: C.W. 5320. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 8210

199. LETTER TO R. KRISHNIER

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
October 31, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have seen your letter to Subbiah. I do not think I can go through Bombay to Wardha. Bardoli is the most direct and less expensive route. You may therefore send your collection to me at the
200. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

October 31, 1928

DEAR SATIS BABU,

I have your letter. I can understand Bipin Babu’s attitude. But I stand unmoved. The position is becoming clearer to me day by day, and we must learn to forget that life is everything and that death is nothing. Indeed, we must learn to regard death as a thing of joy.

If the Exhibition is going to be what you suggest, we are well out of it.

You say nothing about Tarini’s health in this letter of yours.

Yours sincerely

SAT. SATIS CHANDRA DAS
KHADI PRATISHTHAN, SODEPUR

201. LETTER TO J. YESUTHASEN

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 31, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. Not all feel the existence of a prevailing spirit or the power of endurance when they are in intense pain; but some undoubtedly do. It is quite true to say that the Creator puts an end to suffering by death when suffering is beyond endurance. The state of 1 Enclosing a cutting of Bipin Chandra Pal’s article in Englishman criticizing Gandhiji’s views in the calf controversy, Das Gupta had in his letter remarked that there was an attempt in the article to shape out a philosophy of “the joy of the mere fact of living”, a favourite theme with the author.

2 The Calcutta Congress Reception Committee had adopted a resolution to the effect that Indian mill textiles and needlework on foreign fabrics could be displayed in the Exhibition to be conducted during the forthcoming Congress session at Calcutta.
endurance is a question of degree. And if we do not consider death under every circumstance imaginable a terror, we may under well-defined conditions anticipate it without infringing upon the rule of ahimsa.

Yours sincerely,

J. YESUTHASEN, ESQ.
BELMONT, COONOOR, NILGIRIS
From a photostat: S.N. 13579

202. LETTER TO E. C. DEWICK

October 31, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I had fully intended to be with you all at the time of the Federation in December.¹ But I see that it is not to be. I am thoroughly washed out and I have accepted the invitation of Jannalalji to be in Wardha for a month just for rest before proceeding to Calcutta during the Congress week. Will you please forgive me?

Yours sincerely,

REV. E. C. DEWICK
5 RUSSELL STREET, CALCUTTA
From a photostat: S.N. 13580

203. LETTER TO N. K. S. NOWLAKHA

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 31, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

Shankerlalji has sent your letter to me. I distinctly remember having replied to your letter now over three months ago and therein I stated that the best thing would be to see Satis Babu about your scheme, because I do not know how I shall be able to guide you from here. If that is not the letter but some other letter you are referring to, please let me know and I shall attend to it at once.

I hope you are doing well.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. N. K. S. NOWLAKHA
NOWLAKHA BHAWAN, AZIMGANI (BENGAL)
From a microfilm: S.N. 13581

204. LETTER TO JACOB SORIS

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
October 31, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I understand that you collected some fund during my visit to Ceylon. These funds went to Allahabad instead of Ahmedabad and the Allahabad office returned them to you and since then the funds are held up there. As your subscriptions were earmarked for khadi, I hope that you will not divert the funds but send them to me for khadi.

Yours sincerely,

JACOB SORIS, ESQ.
MESSRS PAUL SORIS & CO., BADULLA (CEYLON)

From a microfilm: S.N. 13582

205. LETTER TO KARSANDAS CHITALIA

[October, 1928]¹

BHAISHRI KARSANDAS,

Just as a person suffering from jaundice sees the same disease in other people, I may be unjustifiably suspecting in you weaknesses and limitations which others saw in me long ago and which I myself have now slowly begun to see. You and I have to ask ourselves one question: will our respective institutions continue to run in the same or almost the same way after our death? If we feel the slightest doubt about this, we should wake up. If you feel that in your absence Surajbehn or Lakshmibehn or the two together will be able to carry on the work of the Bhagini Samaj, all will be well.

Vandemataram form

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/12

206. CONDOLENCES

I tender my respectful condolences to Mrs. S. R. Das and her family on Sjt. S. R. Das’s² death. Though I had little in common with the deceased in politics, I could not but recognize his phenomenal

¹ As placed in the Diary, between letters of October 10 and 21, 1928
² Law Member, Viceroy’s Executive Council generosity and his open-heartedness. Many do not know how this great man beggared himself so that no worthy cause might knock in vain at his door.

Young India, 1-11-1928

207. NOTES

‘FREEDOM TO THE FREE’

Whilst we are cutting one another’s throats in the name of religion and some of us running to the Statutory Commission in the vain hope of getting freedom, a friend sends me the following from James Allen to remind us that even in the land of so-called freedom, the real freedom has still to come. Here is the passage:

All outward oppression is but the shadow and effect of the real oppression within. For ages the oppressed have cried for liberty, and a thousand man-made statutes have failed to give it to them. They can give it only to themselves; they shall find it only in obedience to the Divine Statutes which are inscribed upon their hearts. Let them resort to the inward freedom, and the shadow of oppression shall no more darken the earth. Let men cease to oppress themselves, and no man shall oppress his brother. Men legislate for an outward freedom, yet continue to render such freedom impossible of achievement by fostering an inward condition of enslavement. They thus pursue a shadow without, and ignore the substance within. All outward forms of bondage and oppression will cease to be when man ceases to be the willing bond-slave of passion, error, and ignorance.

The outward freedom therefore that we shall attain will only be in exact proportion to the inward freedom to which we may have grown at a given moment. And if this is the correct view of freedom, our chief energy must be concentrated upon achieving reform from within. In this much-needed work all who will can take an equal share. We need neither to be lawyers, nor legislators to be able to take part in the great effort. When this reform takes place on a national scale no outside power can stop our onward march.

Young India, 1-11-1928

1 Simon Commission
208. IN TEN YEARS?

Professor C. N. Vakil’s instructive articles published in these pages are supplementary to the series he recently wrote on poverty and should be read together. I coaxed him to give the reader something more definite on remedies of poverty than what he had done in the article which I ventured to withhold and which he expanded into the four articles above referred to. I do not think that the programme sketched by the learned Professor can be finished in ten years. Perhaps it is impossible to devise a ten years’ programme of improvement to cover a vast and impoverished country like ours.

Let us however glance at Professor Vakil’s remedies for India’s central disease. He rightly says that the problem is how to increase production of wealth and how to distribute it equitably among the people, principally therefore, I presume, among the starving millions. To this end the learned writer

1. would recast small uneconomic holdings,
2. would pay off the debts of the ryot through mortgage and co-operative banks,
3. would revise the revenue law and graduate the land tax so as to bring it in a line with the income tax leaving a minimum of income from land free of tax,
4. would re-employ the population displaced through the recasting of uneconomic holdings by bringing under the plough cultivable waste, i.e., 23 per cent of the total area available and by nationalizing and thus developing large industries,
5. would draw small and large capital by putting the banking system on a basis more in keeping with the requirements of the country than it is now,
6. would improve labour conditions so as to avoid war between capital and labour,
7. would deal with such social abuses as child-marriages, etc., which give rise to over-population and unfit progeny,
8. would radically reform the educational system so as to spread education among the masses and have it answer the needs of

1 On September 27, October 4, 11 and 18
2 In Young India, July 12, 19, 26, August 2 and 9; vide also “Notes” sub-title “Are We Getting Poorer”, 12-7-1928 and “Our Poverty”, 6-9-1928
the people,

9. and would cut down the military expenditure and stop the drain from the country by manning the services with indigenous talent.

This is not an unattractive programme. But as I was re-reading the articles, the question continued to force itself upon me, “Who will bell the cat?” There is hardly an item here which can be tackled without government aid. And a government that is admittedly based on exploitation of the governed will not and cannot, even if it will, undertake the proposed changes with the despatch necessary to create an immediate impression. It can undertake irrigation schemes costing crores, it will not undertake sinking wells costing lakhs. What therefore Professor Vakil wants first is a summary programme of swaraj and having been chiefly instrumental in getting it, he can command the appointment of commissioner of banishment of poverty department.

This however is a heroic remedy and Pandit Motilal Nehru and the co-signatories to his report are the men to tackle it. Our author’s [task] was but to place a scheme before any government that would deal with the most pressing problem before the country.

But I had hoped that the learned Professor, especially when he wrote for Young India, would have examined the one sovereign remedy that has in season and out of season been advocated through these pages and has, so far as it has gone, been tried with no inconsiderable success. True, the Professor has hidden the tiny wheel in a little unseen arc of his circle of suggestions. I claim for it not a point in a circumference but the centre from which can radiate innumerable other things including many the learned writer has in view. But the fact is, whereas it was possible for him with patient research carried on in a well-stocked library to write convincing essays to prove India’s deep and deepening poverty, it was impossible without a close study of a group of villages with an open and receptive mind to spot the seat of the disease and to know the capacity of the patient to bear the remedy. A Gregg took a year of reading and living among the villagers to know the remedy and prove its worth with a freshness of outlook all his own. The cardinal facts to realize are that there is already terrible, forced unemployment among the toiling millions in that they have no work for at least four months in the year. Once that is realized, surely it follows that not a moment should be lost in bringing work to these millions so as to utilize their idle hours. The other fact to realize is that if the average income of the inhabitant of this land is seven pice per day, i.e., less than two English pennies per day, at the present rate of exchange, the average income of the toiling millions must ipso facto be much less. He who adds two pice per day to their income and that without any great capital outlay makes a princely addition to their income and in addition revives the dying hope within the breasts of these millions. The further merit of this programme is that it is now in operation without government aid. But it needs much greater encouragement and admits of infinite expansion. Pyarelal has shown elsewhere in this issue of Young India what America wrought through the wheel during those times of her Revolution. I invite the economists of India to study the movement on the spot. They have nearly two thousand villages to select from for their study and let them then condemn the movement if they can, or give it not a niggardly place that prudence or patronage can grudgingly afford but the central place it deserves.

1 Richard B. Gregg

Young India, 1-11-1928

209. TELEGRAM TO LAJPAT RAI

November 1, 1928

HEARTY CONGRATULATIONS. WIRE DETAILS ASSAULT AND CONDITION OF HEALTH. ¹

The Tribune, 3-11-1928

210. INTERVIEW TO “THE CIVIL AND MILITARY GAZETTE” ²

November 1, 1928

I could still lead India. I shall only lead India when the nation comes to me to be led, when there is a national call.

I shall not go before then. I shall not go unless I am certain of my power over the masses. I could [not] lead India again [until I]

¹ In “A Leaf from American History”.
² For the addressee’s reply, vide “The Inevitable”, 8-11-1928.
³ Released by the Free Press of India from Lahore. In a message from Ahmedabad dated November 6, 1928, Associated Press of India said: “Mahatma Gandhi states that the interviews with him which recently appeared in the Pioneer and The Civil and Military Gazette are inaccurate in many respects. He says that he proposes to deal with the matter in Young India.” Vide “Fact and Fiction”, 8-11-1928.
realized that they are numerous enough to pursue a policy of non-violence, nor until I could control them. But I see nothing on the horizon at the moment. That would not make me at all anxious to take that position. Perhaps it will not be in my lifetime. It may be in the time of my successor.

I cannot name one at this moment. There must be one who could lead India today but I cannot name him. Truly I should be ashamed to remain inactive but it may be necessary in my lifetime. It may be there will come a man, but not now.

The Hindustan Times, 3-11-1928

211. TELEGRAM TO MIRABEHN

Sabarmati,
November 3, 1928

Mirabehn
Care Khadi Bhandar, Muzaffarpur

You may pass remaining time Bihar Bengal.
Must keep perfect health. No need rushing.

Bapu

From the original: G.N. 8211; also C.W. 5321. Courtesy: Mirabehn

212. LETTER TO N. R. MALKANI

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
November 3, 1928

My dear Malkani,

I have your letter. I shall read the report as soon as I get a moment.

If you are yourself an expert typist, you may certainly bring the typewriter with you. You will give me the exact date when I may expect you and give me also the terms you want. I have forgotten all about them.

Mahadev is not here but in Bombay in connection with the Bardoli Inquiry¹.

Yours sincerely,

Sjt. N. R. Malkani
Hyderabad (Sind)

From a photostat: G.N. 889

¹ Vide “Evil Genius of Government”, 22-7-1928
213. LETTER TO G. S. SHARMA

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 3, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. You must not ride the karma theory to death. Every creature is not only weaving his own new karma, but is acted upon by millions of karmas of others.

I regard the destruction of the body of the calf \(^1\) as unselfish, because I was not afraid of rendering service. Only, I saw that I could render no service.

About the mosquitoes. There is no harm in using a mosquito-net of foreign make. Mosquito-net is not a piece of clothing. I treat it in the same way I treat an umbrella. Of course it is possible to get khadi mosquito-nets, but they are dear.

Yours sincerely,

S.J. G. S. SHARMA
LECTURER IN ACCOUNTING, SANATAN DHARMA COLLEGE
NAWABGANJ, CAWNPORE

From a microfilm: S.N. 14547

214. LETTER TO DR. B. C. ROY

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 3, 1928

DEAR DR. BIDHAN,

I have your letter. I had a chat about the Exhibition with Pandit Motilalji when he was here last Sunday. He showed me too your telegram. I shall repeat what I told him in the course of my conversation. I am sorry that you find my letter to be “vague and guarded”. I tried to be as clear as I could with the facts before me. Guarded I should never have to be in writing to friends like you. But my letter was certainly concise and necessarily so.

Now for the purport of the conversation. Whilst your offer to Panditji and repeated in your letter flatters my pride, I would not like you, an esteemed co-worker, to give up your views or principles in order to please me. Such things can only be done once in a lifetime, and even when such personal concessions are accepted, they harm the

\(^1\) Vide “the Fiery Ordeal”
\(^2\) For addressee’s letter, vide “Letter from Dr. B. C. Roy”, 28-10-1928 acceptor, harm the giver and damage the national cause in question. And let me put you absolutely at ease by telling you that I have before Panditji undertaken, all being well, to attend the Congress unconditionally.

I am sorry I cannot say so with reference to the representation of the All-India Spinners’ Association at the Exhibition. My argument is this: whilst it is wrong to think that I dislike all machinery as such, I do feel that we are not competent judges of the usefulness or otherwise of machinery however small it may be for the toiling millions. We shall acquire that faculty for judgment when we draw to the Congress stout-hearted and knowing farmers and other business men. Let me tell you that in the Ashram we have a variety of simple machinery in the way of ploughs, grass-cutting machines, grinding-mills, etc. But I am sorry to have to inform you that not much of our investment in this line has proved profitable or promising. This has happened because we are all amateur farmers. And this is a judgment which I give you after an experience extending over a period of 13 years. Therefore I would say, if you have got the courage, you will scrap every bit of machinery for the time being, especially foreign, and you will concentrate your energy upon having your Exhibition with khaddar as the centre-piece and a small but a sufficient number of genuine swadeshi articles of a useful nature.

I have an irreconcilable opposition to the Indian textiles being exhibited in any shape or form. My reason is absolutely simple. The textile manufacturers refuse to come to terms with us. I do not blame them because if they come to terms with us, they have to sacrifice all prospects of Government assistance save what is forced from it by an active public opinion. Moreover these textiles need no advertisement from us. They have got an army of advertisers, inspectors, selling agents and what not. And, lastly, to put mill textiles side by side with khadi is deliberately to put khadi in the shade by inviting undesirable comparisons.

I remind you that the very first exhibition of this type was undertaken at the Ahmedabad Congress in 1921.1 It drew huge audiences. The entrance fee, a paltry sum, left a good surplus. Wherever there is good and efficient management of exhibitions of an educative character, they are not only useful and instructive but they are remunerative. Such was the case in Bihar. One indispensable condition of Congress Exhibitions should be that we should never undertake them for finding our expenses and leaving besides a handsome sum for conducting the business of the year to come. Unfortunately this very undesirable thing was done in Madras exposing us to an evil temptation. I wish that Bengal which has abundant patriotism, self-sacrifice and fine sentiment will rise superior to such temptations.

1 Vide “The Congress and After” sub-title The Substance

If this letter seems to you to be lacking in detail, do write to me again. Let there be no mistake about it. I want to take part in the Exhibition. But I can only take part in it consistently with the national interest as I understand it. But I have said to myself that if I cannot take part in the Exhibition, I am not going to say one word of criticism either during the Exhibition or after. I did not feel called upon to impose any such silence on myself in Madras, because the circumstances were different and so I expressed my views freely at the time of opening the Exhibition and still more freely in a leading article in Young India after opening it.

I have a string of letters asking me to give my views freely and now about the forthcoming Exhibition. I have hitherto resisted all these correspondents as I hope to, to the end. I therefore plead with you not to be deterred from your purpose which you may hold to be based on an inviolable principle in the interest of the nation. I assure you that I shall tender the same respect for your principles as I would crave from you and all for mine, however erring they may appear to others.

With reference to the Hospital, I am glad it is flourishing. I shall certainly perform the opening ceremony of the new ward, and so far as possible make time for it.

Yours sincerely,

DR. BIDHAN CHANDRA ROY

32 WELLINGTON STREET, CALCUTTA

From a microfilm: S.N. 14853

---

215. LETTER TO MOTILAL NEHRU

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

November 3, 1928

DEAR MOTILALJI,

You are now in the thick of the fight, but at the time you receive this letter, the fight will have been over. I am hoping and praying that

---

1 Vide “Speech at Khadi and Hindi Exhibitions, Madras”, 23-12-1927

2 Vide “The National Congress”

3 Deshbandhu Chittaranjan Das Memorial Hospital
you will come out just as successful in Delhi as you did in Lucknow.

I enclose herewith a copy of my letter\(^2\) to Dr. Bidhan Roy about the Exhibition difficulty. I do not need to send you a copy of his letter, because what he writes was contained in the telegram that you read to me. My reply needs no explanation.

How is Kamala faring now? You will keep yourself fit for the culmination in December.

Yours sincerely,

Encl. 1
PANDIT MOTILALJI
CARE DR. ANSARI, DELHI

From a photostat: S.N. 13716

216. LETTER TO SIR MAHOMED HABIBULLAH

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 3, 1928

DEAR FRIEND.

I have your letter. I knew Sjt. Sastri’s suggestion.\(^3\) I do think that the South African journalists’ coming to India is likely to result in a better understanding.

Yours sincerely,

SIR MAHOMED HABIBULLAH SAHEB BAHADUR, K.C.I.E.
MEMBER, VICEROY’S COUNCIL, NEW DELHI

From a photostat: S.N. 11997

217. LETTER TO URMILA DEVI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 3, 1928

I have your letter. I sent Dhiren, before I received your letter, my message to him through you.

Here is a letter received by me from Devdhar. I hope you have already met him.

Mahadev is still in Bardoli looking after Bardoli Inquiry

---

\(^1\) At the All-Parties Conference held on August 28, 1928
\(^2\) Vide the preceding item.
\(^3\) Of inviting a group of journalists from South Africa affairs.

I hope the climate of Poona is agreeable to you.

Yours sincerely,

Srimati Urmila Devi
Janhavi Villa, Deccan Gymkhana, Poona

From a photostat: S.N. 12978

218. LETTER TO V. K. U. MENON

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
November 3, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I am glad you are helping Krishnaswami. I know Kurur Nilakantan Nambudripad. He is a good man. But I have no knowledge of his business ability, nor am I able to judge the selection of a place. Generally speaking, work like that done in Bardoli can be best done in British India proper. But I would ask you to correspond with Sjt. Rajagopalachariar, Tiruchengodu, South India, and be guided by him.

Yours sincerely,

Sjit. V. K. U. Menon
10 Sattar Buildings, Mahim, Bombay

From a photostat: S.N. 12979

219. LETTER TO POST MASTER, SABARMATI

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
November 3, 1928

The Post Master
Sabarmati

DEAR SIR,

With reference to your inquiry I may state that the letter referred to in your enquiry was duly delivered at the Ashram and was received by Sjt. C. N. Joshi who is authorized to receive all documents registered or otherwise on my behalf. You may inform the writer of the letter that it does not follow that because letters addressed to me are received at the Ashram they are necessarily all read by me.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 12980
220. LETTER TO BALAJI RAO

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 3, 1928

MY DEAR BALAJEE RAO,

I have your letter enclosing extracts from the Indian Textile Journal. I have read Sjt. Talcharkar’s work very carefully. Not being convinced of his argument, I entered into correspondence with him. He is still unable to convince me that charkha yarn is on the whole stronger than mill yarn. In the Ashram we made series of experiments and they went to show that in order to produce hand-spun yarn superior to the mill-spun, we have to take extraordinary precaution which an ordinary spinner has no facility of taking. Sjt. Talcharkar’s is a theoretical proposition, appearing sound to read but failing in practice. You can well understand how anxious I should be to know and prove that the average charkha yarn is stronger than the average mill-spun yarn.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 13715

221. LETTER TO SHAUKAT ALI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 3, 1928

DEAR FRIEND AND BROTHER,

I have your letter. I have read it carefully. I shall want much stronger proof than you give me to sustain your indictment of Dr. Ansari and Motilalji. You may not see eye to eye with them, but we may not impute motives to those who differ from us. But I shan’t argue with you. I know some day you will see the light or if I am under a delusion I shall have my ignorance dispelled, because I have no other end to serve but that of truth, nor, if I know you well, have you any other end.

Yours sincerely,

MAULANA SHAUKAT ALI
CENTRAL KHILAFAT COMMITTEE
SULTAN MANSION, DONGRI, BOMBAY

From a photostat: S.N. 13711

1 Dated October 23, 1928; for excerpts, vide “Extracts from Shaukat Ali’s Letter”, 23-10-1928
222. LETTER TO VALJI G. DESAI

BHAJ VALJI,

I can trust you always to find some cow-protection work to keep you busy. Get all the information from Bhai Nagindas. I am sure that the accounts will have to be kept by you. For the present, you will have to do all the work, the sweeper’s as well as secretary’s. If the work increases, we shall incur further expenditure. Enrol more members, if you can. I take it that you will hunt up literature on the origin of the cow-protection movement and try to write on the subject. Correspond with shasris and with Anandshankerbhai in regard to this. I think there are some books on the subject in the Ashram; go through them.

Collect literature on the trade in hides and skins. I should like you to become a dairy expert1 (give me the Gujarati equivalent of this—dudh shastri2?) and an expert on hides. Acquaint yourself with what is being done in the Ashram in these fields. Study the goshala here.

What more can I say? Do everything as if the entire responsibility is yours. I said at the very beginning that my taking up cow-protection work meant that I would find out a good secretary, explain my principles to him, make him work in accordance with them and let him use my name. May I expect you to be such a secretary?

Are you living in peace now? Take care of your health.

Vandemataram from
MOHANDAS

PS.

I send with this Gregg’s letter and the list of books accompanying it. Read whichever of them you can get. If we have to secure any of them from outside, we shall try and get them from some source. In any case, file both the letter and the list.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 7397. Courtesy: Valji G. Desai

223. HOW WE LOST INDIA

Just a few days before Deshbandhu’s death, while replying to an address of welcome given by the business community of Jalpaiguri, I

1 The year is inferred from the reference to cow-protection movement.
2 Gandhiji uses the English expression.
3 Dudh: milk, shastri: expert had said that we had lost India through our merchants and we should regain it also through them. This is not the task of a lawyer, a doctor or a soldier. Many Englishmen proudly say that they took India with the help of the sword and are holding it with the strength of the sword, but there is less than fifty per cent of truth in this statement. If the merchants so desire, they can blunt the edge of that sword. If illustrations of the truth of this statement were wanted, a striking one is furnished by the following circular letter from one mercantile association to another:

It is characteristic of the British people that they give up their hold on the country from which they can obtain no wealth. They did so in the case of the Transvaal in the year 1884, and when they saw wealth there they launched a war in 1900 in order to gain possession of it. They gave up Somaliland when they could not make money there. They do not want a country for the sake of possessing it but for the sake of carrying on trade with it. That is why Napoleon criticized them and called them “a nation of shopkeepers”.

British rule, therefore, does not subsist on might, but it would be more correct to say that it functions with the help of our merchants. If our merchants give up the temptation to trade with Britain in cloth, or if the people give up wearing foreign cloth, the British would have no reason to hold on to India.

But is the spirit of sacrifice present in the merchant community? It is found that a man makes many sacrifices, but is seldom prepared to sacrifice that from which he earns money. Merchants are well known for their generosity. But when they are asked to give up their business, they feel aggrieved. Lawyers will be ready to donate thousands of rupees, but there would be few men like Das, who would be ready to give up their legal practice. Doctors will donate large sums but only a few would be prepared to give up their profession.

Despite this, if we want real independence, merchants would have to give up their business and be prepared to serve the country. Such sacrifice will be regarded as their prayaschitta. If it is true, and indeed it is, that we lost India because of their greed, then we will get back India only through their sacrifice.

But the sacrifice that I expect from merchants is in fact very small. All I ask for is a change in their business, and not its ruin. I ask for their trade to be carried on within limits. In spite of the boycott of foreign cloth, the business in khadi amounting to crores of rupees

---

1 For the circular letter and the two paragraphs succeeding it, vide “How We Lost India”, 25-10-1928
2 Atonement
would be carried on by business men alone. Without these latter, people would be unable to carry on transactions. The term business implies transactions. Anyone who is good at social intercourse, is a good business man. A merchant is one who enables people to establish contacts with one another.

Today, the ability of the business man is being misused. He earns five per cent while giving away ninety-five to the foreigners. I ask him to put his abilities to good use. He should give ninety-five to the people and keep five for himself. By doing so, he will get his share of five per cent and his earnings will be regarded as pure. The crores that he makes today is tainted money. It is possible that under the new order the crores that fall to the share of a few today may be distributed amongst hundreds of business men. However this should not be regarded as a matter of regret. Everyone will agree that it would be a better scheme if many have a lakh or a thousand instead of a few having crores. And it is my firm opinion that if business men do not understand these simple and commonplace calculations it would be almost impossible to prevent anarchy, plunder and revolution in India. The poisonous wind of anarchy blowing from the West cannot be kept out by any other means.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 4-11-1928

224. THE ASSAULT ON LALAJI

This country is poor, there is trouble within it and repression from without, there seems to be deep darkness all round and yet it appears to be fortunate. The symbol of this good fortune is the assault on Lalaji by the police in Lahore. Lalaji was not at fault. The procession which he was leading also was not at fault. Lalaji had full control over the procession, hence the fault or whatever it was of the procession or of Lalaji consisted in the decision they had made. That decision was to offer peaceful opposition to the Simon Commission when it arrived. In order to demonstrate this opposition, the procession was going up to the barrier set up by the police. It had reached the barrier and was uttering deafening cries of “Simon, go back”. Besides Lalaji, this procession included other leaders such as Lala Hansraj, Dr. Alam and others.

As this demonstration and the people’s determination irritated the police, they decided to teach Lalaji a lesson and assaulted him. The police deserved no credit that the assault did not assume grave proportions. How easy was it for the injury to be inflicted on the eye instead of near it? To fate alone, and not the police, can be given the credit for the injury to the chest being of a relatively light nature instead of a serious one! According to newspaper reports, the police spared no pains to demonstrate their skill in wielding the lathi.

Lalaji has emphatically stated that the statement made by the police in their own defence is absolutely untrue. The police claim that the procession rushed into the small space that had been left vacant for a passage and that it resorted to stone-throwing. Lalaji denies both these charges and affirms that the police may file a libel suit against him if they wish to do so. He is prepared to prove his own case.

Let us now see if the police are prepared to take up this challenge.

The attention of the public and that of the world is attracted only when warrior leaders such as Lalaji are injured; the assault on Lalaji has drawn and will yet draw a great deal more attention than would have been drawn by the death of an unimportant individual.

We shall have to be careful and see to it that the people by resorting to violence do not lose the game in which victory is within their grasp. If the atrocities of the Government continue despite the innocence of the people, the ship of the Government will sink of its own accord. Hence I hope that the people will not transgress the limits at any place and fully respect all the appeals for maintaining peace that are made by the leaders.

I congratulate Lalaji. He has been well known for many years as the “Lion of the Punjab”. The Government’s police have themselves helped on this occasion to add to his prestige and the above assault is an addition to the many services he has rendered to the country.

The following telegram has been received from Lalaji after the above article was written:

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 4-11-1928

225. MY NOTES

TRUE INDEPENDENCE

At a time when we are cutting one another’s throats in the name of religion and are competing with one another in running to the Simon Commission, and so on, in the hope of securing independence, it is worth noting what the British writer James Allen says about independence in England. A friend has sent an extract from his article the sum and substance of which is as follows:

As a matter of fact, all acts of repression from without are nothing but a reflection of the atrocities that are perpetrated within. Although for thousands of years men have been craving for freedom, the thousands of laws made by him have been unable to win it for him. The truth of the matter is that freedom alone can bestow freedom. That freedom consists in following the immutable laws framed by God which have been inscribed on our hearts. No one can harm him who has attained the freedom of his soul. If people cease to be cruel to themselves, they will be unable to be cruel towards others. People frame laws for their external freedom, whereas they worship slavery in their hearts. Thus, they run after an external shadow and ignore the real thing within their souls. Man’s bondage in all forms and all his atrocities will be automatically eradicated when he frees himself from slavery to his passions, his ignorance and his shortcomings.

This implies that external freedom will always be the means of measuring the freedom of the self within. Hence we often find that laws made to grant us freedom often turn out to be shackles binding us. Hence the dharma of those workers who wish to attain true freedom is to try and attempt an improvement in the self. If we understand this simple and straightforward fact, we shall not even utter the word ‘legislature’ but engage ourselves in constructive activity day and night. All can take part in such activity. It is not necessary to become either a lawyer or a legislator in order to do so. What strange blindness it is that those who are elected as legislators to represent the people should seem, and in fact are, their rulers! If we are not under an illusion, we would have no fear of the Government or the legislatures, lawcourts or the armies which subsist on it. And no power can come in the way of our upliftment and our independence when we have reformed ourselves in the above manner.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 4-11-1928
226. BUFFALOES FOR SLAUGHTER

Shri Nagindas Amulakhrai, Vice-president of the Sarvajanik Jivadaya Khatun, Ghatkopar, writes as follows:

I have gone through the letters which have been mentioned in the above letter. The reader will feel, as I do, that the municipality is slaughtering buffaloes for the sake of slaughter. The killing of buffaloes whose meat is not eaten by anyone is merely a chaotic state of affairs and it is a matter for surprise that citizens of Bombay tolerate it. This is not a problem which concerns the Hindus alone, but one which concerns all citizens—Muslims, Parsis, Christians and Jews alike. Moreover, it is not one which involves the Department of Animal Welfare alone, but one which involves public welfare and the health of children. On the one hand, the country is becoming increasingly poorer; on the other hand it is being robbed of its cattle-wealth because of the indifference of citizens as for example in Bombay. To slaughter milk yielding cows and buffaloes or to allow their calves to die of hunger and thirst is nothing but robbery and the cause of this robbery is the insignificant income that the municipality derives from it! According to the calculation made by Shri Nagindas, a minimum loss of rupees two crores and twenty lakhs is suffered because of this thoughtless slaughter. And finally, in a country which would have the facility to provide milk in the same way as it provides water, we have to drink imported milk which contains no food value. It is a matter of no small shame for us to have to consume imported milk and to have vegetable oil sold as ghee, because of shortage of fresh milk. In Bombay and other cities, there is a lot of useless clamour, but apart from societies for animal welfare, no one else thinks of raising a protest and launching an effective movement in such an extremely important matter.

As has been suggested in the above letter, the cure for this malady is simple and straightforward. Not a single cow or buffalo will be taken to the slaughter-house if the pens are removed from the city and if the municipality undertakes to supply milk specially to Bombay, whatever the expense it might have to incur in doing so. Is it not a matter for surprise that the farmers of Bardoli welcome the buffaloes which are regarded as useless in Bombay and hope to make

---

1 The letter is not translated here. The gist of the correspondent who enclosed other letters was that about 20,000 buffaloes were slaughtered annually in Bombay and Kurla, though this quantity of meat was not required. The Bombay Municipality issued licences to slaughter animals every day and made a yearly profit of Rs. 3 lakhs. The supply of condensed milk from Holland aggravated this problem.
227. THE ALCHEMY OF THOUGHT

The well-known writer, Professor Jacks, has written a book whose title may be interpreted as Alchemy of Thought. Pyarelal has written an article based on this book in the current issue of Young India which deserves to be pondered over. Hence this article, which itself is based on the one just mentioned, has been published for the convenience of Gujarati readers.

The alchemy of thought implies that the latter acts as an alchemist. No one can tell whether any alchemist has been able to transmute iron into gold, but thought continuously performs this function. By entertaining a particular thought, man becomes the victim of fear and turns pale; by entertaining its opposite thought, his countenance becomes flushed with pleasure. I shall feel sad if I think, ‘I am having a spasm of pain, all will be over with me now.’ However, if I ignore the spasm and say to myself, ‘What is there in a spasm after all, it will pass away presently’ I shall continue to be cheerful. Perhaps a stranger from abroad comes to my house and I suspect him. I assume that he is a murderer and am terribly scared. My son comes and tells me: ‘This gentleman is an old family friend, we do not know him as he has been living abroad since his childhood. He is a guest in our house today and has come here to convey some good news.’ On hearing this, I regain my composure. Now I embrace with respect one whom I had feared before. All this is the alchemy of thought. Within a fraction of a second, thought can make a king or pauper of us. Such is the empire of thought. Thought is infinitely more powerful than either speech or the bodily processes. Physical activity is the coarsest form that thought assumes, while speech is one of its coarser forms. Both these activities limit thought. It is indeed proper that it should be so. If this were not the case, the world would surely be destroyed. However, this is to prove the power of thought. Hence it may be said that, when devoid of thought, speech or action is something mechanical and it has no value.

Following this line of argument, Professor Jacks goes on to say that a great and all-pervading element like religion is not a game whose rules are laid down in books, it is not a treasure chest which contains affirmations and negations, it is not a collection of prohibitions. Anyone who wishes to do his dharma, to practise non-violence and to follow the dictates of morality has to walk on the razor’s edge. For him there are no lectures on non-violence nor any dictionary of spellings which would enable him to obtain a hundred per cent marks in the test on non-violence. Observing one’s dharma is not such a safe thing. It is a gem that lies buried in the mine of experience. Only a few among millions of seekers succeed in digging it out. Mr. Jacks says that dharma is not for those who ask for a guarantee of safety. The field of religion lies between doubt and certainty. One who believes or asserts that this indeed is religion or that this alone is religion does not know what religion is. One who wants to know the meaning of dharma, while admitting that a particular action may or may not be according to dharma surrenders to his inner voice and continues to conduct himself with determination and calmness. Not being omniscient himself, on the one hand he is determined and, on the other hand, he humbly allows for the possibility that he may be making a mistake.

This learned gentleman goes on to say:

Just as we can repeatedly affirm in arithmetic that two and two make four, similarly, in the science of morality, we cannot affirm with conviction that this alone is our duty. The deeper meaning behind dharma or non-violence does not lie in results which can be proved; their mystery is revealed in going beyond such proofs and by taking certain risks where such proofs are impossible.

In our language this is known as faith. Dharma is something that is based on faith. Faith constitutes proof for that which cannot be proved by the five senses. Hence it is only by respectfully honouring the dictates of our inner voice that we may hope to have direct perception of dharma at some time in the future. Hence Mr. Jacks says:

A man who becomes ready to listen to his own inner voice only after subjecting it to a test may be said to have abandoned it and he has failed to recognize the spiritual powers that are within him. Finally, he reaches a state which is so devoid of morality that it may be said of him that he has no such thing as an inner voice.

Therefore, what should man do when he comes across misery or oppression? The author says:

For me there are only two alternatives, either to experiment or to do nothing. Hence it becomes my dharma to carry out experiments after studying the situation as much as possible. However, there is the danger that I may have made an error in my calculations. Even if on the day of judgment, I am told that my experiments are wrong, I shall lay down my life in order to complete them. I shall face the risk of there being a possibility of error in certain experiments in order to prove the truth of that which appears to be true to me.

This writer is of the opinion—and we too find—that many truths have been discovered through experiments in which such risks of mistakes were incurred, for such errors arise from pure motives and devotion to truth and mistakes that have been unintentionally made are forgotten in course of time.

Man has been called a creature full of errors. One of the definitions of swaraj is that it is the right to make mistakes and it is true. So long as I do not see my mistakes I must practise the dharma which I consider to be true; if giving in to external pressure I fail to do so, my cowardice and the false image I create will destroy me.

Further, Mr. Jacks suggests that a society in which external rules of morality are alone regarded as binding may well appear to be well-organized in a certain way, the people may be outwardly happy and peaceful, but that society is devoid of courage, of the boldness to make experiments, and of the spirit of research and hence the path of its progress is blocked. The importance of great principles lies in the fact that their meaning is unlimited. Only if we keep digging in that boundless mine can the world be lit up by those principles and also make progress. However, our society at present appears to be bound in shackles. It seems that our dharma is limited to singing praises of our forefathers and observing some outworn, external rituals.

But dharma is not such a lifeless thing. Non-violence is a living force or power. No one has been or will ever be able to measure its limits or its extent. Non-violence means universal love, it implies compassion for all living beings and the resultant strength to sacrifice oneself. Since many mistakes may be made while this love expresses itself we cannot give up the quest for the whole of this dharma. Even the mistakes committed while seeking the pure path take us a step forward in the quest.

[From Gujarati]

.Navajivan, 4-11-1928

190  THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
228. SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM

The draft rules\(^1\) of the Ashram were published some time back in Navajivan. I had invited outside opinion on these; a big controversy had also begun in the Ashram itself. Suggestions were made to introduce vital changes in it. Some of these were even implemented. Despite this a shocking, fictitious report appeared in the newspaper before the time came for publishing these rules. So I must put before the readers the changes\(^2\) which are being tried at present.

As the name of the Satyagraha Ashram is suggestive of its qualities, it has always been our endeavour to stick to truth and to rely on its support alone. It cannot be said that we have always succeeded in our efforts. It cannot be claimed that all the inmates of the Ashram have worshipped truth. It can definitely be said that on the whole truth has been adhered to. Even in difficult situations, many in the Ashram, the young as well as the old, have adhered to it.

Ashramites have found one handicap in insisting upon truth. Many difficulties were experienced in minutely observing the rules with a strictness that would do credit to the Satyagraha Ashram. We did not find ourselves capable of coping with the subtler meanings of the rules, a fact which we gradually realize. Hence we arrived at the decision to keep those very rules intact but to change the name. We could hardly find anyone with the mental attitude in which one does not even feel the desire for possessions, in order to do credit to the Satyagraha Ashram. In observing truth in a manner that would do credit to the Ashram, one should never exaggerate even in a state of swoon. In spite of holding this belief we found it difficult to be always free from this fault. Though we realized that for the observance of brahmacharya, one should be free even from the thought of lust, we found that our control over our minds was very ineffective. In order to practise ahimsa which would do credit to the Ashram, we should have no anger in us, we should harbour no jealousy of one another. We should have the strength to affectionately embrace a thief if he happens to come along. Let snakes, etc., kill us, but we must have the strength to refrain from killing them. We found ourselves far removed from such ahimsa. Thinking on such lines we decided to maintain the Ashram as an ideal and run all its external activities under another name. Industry and physical work have always been the outward manifestations of the Satyagraha Ashram and we can claim that they have brought considerable credit to it. We therefore, assumed the name of Udyoga Mandir. Satyagraha Ashram would entrust its work to this Mandir and keep for itself a small ground for prayers which are necessary for its existence.

\(^1\) Vide "Satyagraha Ashram"

\(^2\) Vide also "Handicap of Mahatmaship", 8-11-1928.

These changes are being implemented since a month or so ago. The managing committee of the Mandir has the right to make whatever changes it wants. Nevertheless, after much thought, it has decided to stick to the rules of the Ashram. The only difference is that these rules will remain as ideals and every member will constantly strive towards their fulfilment. The report that those who are not prepared to observe brahmacharya will now be able to join the Ashram is baseless. The managing committee has especially deliberated over this question and decided that without brahmacharya the Udyoga Mandir cannot be maintained in the spirit of yajna. Industry of any kind whatsoever does not find a place in the Ashram but only such industries are taken in hand which can sustain the poorer classes among the people, raise them economically and enable them to make progress. The managing committee has unanimously arrived at a firm decision that these activities could be carried on only if the men and women who take part in it observe brahmacharya. And this is indeed so. Not a single activity in the Ashram can be pursued for economic gain. These activities are developed solely from the standpoint of how best they could be pursued by the people. Those men and women who are engaged in enlarging their families or satisfying their lust can neither obtain nor impart this training.

The outcome of all this is that those who are working at present in the Satyagraha Ashram in accordance with its rules will carry on the very same activities in the name of Udyoga Mandir. This change of name was necessary for the sake of humility and truth. The organizers will again accept the name Satyagraha Ashram when they gain self-confidence.

Of course one vital change has been introduced which seemed to be impossible for the Satyagraha Ashram. During the last three months an experiment is being made of running a single kitchen for the entire Ashram. Control of the palate is one of the rules of the Ashram. Accordingly spices, etc., were not used. Some found this very difficult. It was felt that it would be undesirable to do away with a common kitchen. Hence while retaining it, two varieties of food, one spiced and the other unspiced, were introduced. When families cooked separately they used spices in the Ashram. According to the new rules spices had no place, but now they have been included.

[From Gujarati]

Najavivan, 4-11-1928
229. LETTER TO JEHANGIR B. PETIT

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI, November 4, 1928

You were good enough 13 years ago to take me to the institution for the support and instruction of the blind and to the J. J. Parsi Hospital. I have a half orphan coming from Junagadh. His father is dead, mother is alive. They have no means. Someone directed them to me saying that I might find for them an institution which might accommodate this young man and give him instruction and shelter. He knows no other language but Gujarati. Will you please let me know as early as you can whether your institution can conveniently shelter this blind youth? He had a virulent attack of small pox seven years ago and he lost his eyesight.

The widowed mother and the blind son are hung up here in Ahmedabad. I hope that this young man will realize his life’s ambition through some such philanthropic institution like yours.

Yours sincerely,

JEHANGIR B. PETIT, ESQ.
ORGANIZER OF THE INSTITUTION FOR THE SUPPORT AND INSTRUCTION OF BLIND
PETIT BUILDING, 359 HORNBY ROAD
FORT, BOMBAY

From a photostat: S.N. 12984

---

1 In his letter dated November 7, 1928, the addressee replied that they were prepared to admit the boy into the Victoria Memorial School for the Blind, Tardeo, provided that he did not belong to the untouchable class according to the rules of the school.
230. LETTER TO PADMAJA NAIDU

THE ASHRAM,
SABARMATI,
November 4, 1928

MY DEAR LOTUS-BORN,

This is merely to acknowledge your letter and tell you that you are ever present in my mind. Does the medical prohibition still continue?

With love,

M.K.G.

Srimati Padma Naidu
Tuberculosis Sanatorium
Arogyavaram
S. India

From the original: Padmaja Naidu Papers. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

231. LETTER TO MRIDULA SARABHAI

Sunday [November 4, 1928]

CHI. MRIDULA,

Mahadev is presently in Bombay in connection with the Bardoli Committee. I am well. I have no fever so far. Even if I get it, I would still be better than I was yesterday. I have received the fruit.

Blessings from

Mohandas

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 11264. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

---

1 Evidently, the letter was written in November, 1928, when Mahadev Desai had to look after the Bardoli Inquiry affairs and had been in Bombay and Bardoli in the first week of November. The Sunday during this period fell on November 4; vide also “Letter to N. R. Malkani”, 3-11-1928 and “Letter to Mahadev Desai”, 5-11-1928
232. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

Monday [After November 4, 1928]¹

CHI. PRABHUDAS,

I got your letter. Chhaganlal has replied in detail. I fully appreciate your and Devdas’s being upset. However, the step that has been taken is worthy of our vow of truth. We have no right to retain the name which we cannot live up to. We need not blame anyone for not being worthy of the name, or rather, I should be blamed first and then the others. Everybody tried to give his or her best, but even then they could not live up to the name. Who, then, could be blamed? We will be able to justify the name ‘Udyog Mandir’.

My unsteadiness is the cause of my growth. According to me, it is not unsteadiness but rather different responses of my inner voice to changing circumstances. If that is how I view myself, I must view in the same manner the institution of which I am the moving spirit. Necessary changes in the imperfect creations of imperfect men are both a cause and a sign of their growth.

You should do your work there unhurriedly. Do not mind it if you are unable to carry through the plan you had in mind. And never enter into deep waters. Show everything to Mirabehn. Santok has unexpectedly arrived here today. Jamnalal has been here of course.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original : S. N. 33008

233. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

[November 5, 1928]²

CHI. MIRA,

I hope you got my wire. You must [not]³ wear yourself out. There is no occasion for rushing. And do not deny yourself what you

¹ From the reference in the letter lo ‘Udyog Mandir’; Gandhiji announced the change of name of the Ashram from ‘Satyagraha Ashram’ to ‘Udyog Mandir’ in Navajivan in its issue dated November 4, 1928. Vide “Letter to Amarnath”, 14-12-1928

² From the postmark

³ Vide “Telegram to Mirabehn”, 3-11-1928.

⁴ An inadvertent slip may definitely need for your health. If you see any report about my ill-health do not be alarmed. I had a slight attack of malaria. There is nothing today.

Love.

BAPU

SHRIMATI MIRABAI
KHADI DEPOT, MUZAFFARPUR, BIHAR

From the original: G.N. 8212; also C.W. 5222. Courtesy: Mirabehn

234. LETTER TO PRATAP S. PANDIT

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 5, 1928

MY DEAR PRATAP,

I thank you for your prompt response to my request. Yes, Surendraji is one of the oldest inmates of the Ashram and among the most trusted. He tells me in his letter that you were all kindness; but he adds that he will not be bound to keep the secret he had evidently in mind. The fact is that the Ashram must not possess any secret of any trade. But the Ashram will naturally respect all the confidence that might be given to it. Anyway, perhaps there are so many other things that you will teach Surendraji before he is ready to receive your secret. Meanwhile, I shall correspond with him and provide you with his own undertaking. And when he gives it to you, you may depend upon the undertaking being scrupulously observed. It would be such a joy to me when you are able to certify that Surendraji can handle the tannery of the kind, you know, I want.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. PRATAP S. PANDIT
WESTERN INDIA TANNERIES LTD., POST BOX NO. 403, BOMBAY

From a photostat: S.N. 11400

1 In his letter dated November 1, 1928, the addressee had said: “Sjt. Surendra brought your letter of introduction. . . . I understand he has been in your Ashram for a long time and as such we can trust him not to disclose our secrets to our competitors” (S.N. 11399).
235. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

[November 5, 1928]

CHI. MAHADEV,

I have not been careful about writing this letter when it was due. Do not feel nervous if you hear news of my illness. I took some quinine yesterday. There is no fever today. I don’t think I shall get any now.

Last week I did not, after all, get [a chapter of] the Autobiography. It does not matter though, since Pyarelal is pouring out translations. Both he and Subbiah, however, are practically ill. Subbiah is running temperature today. There was a letter calling away Nirmala, so that she could help in the illness. Durga has written back to know [whether it is absolutely necessary that Nirmala should go]. If it is indeed necessary, I will send her.

Blessings from

BAPU

SHRI MAHADEV DESAI
SWARAJ ASHRAM, BARDOLI

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 1143

236. LETTER TO SHANTIKUMAR MORARJI

Silence Day, November 5, 1928

CHI. SHANTIKUMAR,

I got your letter. I have not been able to go through all the appendices.

Mahadev does not seem to have conveyed the message. We are experimenting here with bread-making. We also wish to start bee-keeping. Please find some useful books on ‘bread-making’, and ‘bee-keeping’. I wrote to Mahadev about a book on bread-making.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 4707. Courtesy: Shantikumar Morarji

---

1 From the postmark
2 Gandhiji uses the English expressions.
3 ibid
237. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 6, 1928

CHI. MATHURADAS,

I have your letter. You must have already received my letter and my blessings. If the climate of Matheran suits you better than that of Deolali, nothing like it. Then I would not be keen about Almora. I shall leave here on the 23rd and proceed to Wardha via Bardoli. Hence I shall not be passing through Bombay. Mahadev is still at Bardoli. He will reach here tomorrow.

Blessings from
BAPU

SJT. MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI
VICTORIA LODGE
MATHERAN

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

238. LETTER TO WILLIAM SMITH

SATHYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 7, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I was pleased to receive your letter. I have glanced through the report of the Council of Justice to Animals. I do not think that the kind of work done by the Council will be much appreciated in India. But I can see no harm in an agent of the Council coming to India and asking those who are engaged in slaughter of animals to do so with human[e] methods of killing.

I have never forgotten the promise I made to you that I would give you an article about our dairy. I hope to redeem it some day. I have been too busy with the inner organization of the Ashram and other preoccupations to spare a few hours for the report I promised to prepare for you.

Yours sincerely,

WILLIAM SMITH, ESQ.
IMPERIAL DAIRY EXPERT, BANGALORE

From a microfilm: S.N. 12925

1 The addressee had asked whether “a society of this kind should be recommended to operate in the country”.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
239. CABLE TO ARYA SAMAJ, SUVA

[On or after November 7, 1928]

ARYA SAMAJ
SUVA
CALF DYING GREAT AGONY. PAINLESSLY KILLED BY MEDICAL ADVICE ASSISTANCE.

GANDHI

From a microfilm: S.N. 14723

240. THE INEVITABLE

Thanks. Assault unprovoked and deliberate. Received two severe injuries but not serious, one on left chest, other on shoulder, other blows warded by friends. Satyapal, Gopichand Hansraj, Mohammad Alam, others received blows and injuries. No cause for anxiety. — Lajpatrai.

This was the prompt reply Lalaji sent me upon my wire to him of congratulations and enquiry. Lalaji earned the title of Punjab Kesari, i.e., the Lion of the Punjab, when most of the present generation were in their teens. All these years he has survived the title. For whatever may be said of him or against him, he still remains the unchallengeable leader of the Punjab and one of the most beloved and esteemed leaders in all India. He has been President of the National Congress, enjoys a European reputation and is one of the few public men who think aloud at the risk of being often misunderstood and more often being considered indiscreet. He remains incorrigible; for he cannot harbour anything in his breast. He must speak out just as he thinks. When, therefore, I read the headline “Lalaji assaulted” and discovered how and why, I could not help saying: “Well done! Now we shall not be long getting swaraj.” For whether the revolution is non-violent or violent, there is no doubt about it that before we come to our own, we shall have to learn the art of dying in the country’s cause. Authority will not yield without a tremendous effort even to non-violent pressure. Under an ideal and complete non-violence, I can imagine full transformation of authority to be possible. But whilst an ideally perfect programme is possible its full execution is never possible. It is therefore the most economical thing that leaders get assaulted or shot. Hitherto obscure people have been

---

1 This was in reply to a telegram received on November 7, 1928 which read: “Fiji Times reports you ordered killing calf. Hindus perturbed. Wire truth.”

2 Vide “Telegram to Lajpat Rai”, 1-11-1928.
assaulted or done to death. The assault on Lala Lajpat Rai has attracted far greater attention than even the shooting of a few men could have. The assault on Lalaji and other leaders has set the politically-minded India athinking and it must have perturbed the Government. I am loath to think that the local Government as a body knew anything of the contemplated assault. If they did and the assault was part of a deliberate plan as in the days of yore, it is so much the worse for the Government. Then of course the Government can only pretend perturbation. I would not mention such a possibility in ordinary circumstances, but holding the view that I do about the Government—the view being based on experience—whilst I should be sorry, it would not surprise me if a discovery was made that the assault was part of a deliberate plan. I admit, that the provocation, viz., the very fact of the boycott, no matter how peaceful, was quite enough without the fraudulent story concocted by the police. I call the police version fraudulent because I would any day trust Lalaji’s word against a host of interested witnesses that the police can bring to its assistance. If I was not convinced that this system of Government is based on force and fraud, I should not have become the confirmed non-co-operator that I am. Indeed Lowes Dickinson in his essay “War, Its Causes and Cure” has shown from sufficient evidence that a war cannot be conducted without fraud. Pari passu this Government of ours which professes to hold India by the sword and whose foundations were laid in fraud cannot be sustained without either, except when it undergoes transformation and is based upon popular will and confidence.

Nor are we to think that the Punjab incident is to be the last of the barbarities committed during the pendency of the Statutory Commission. The boycott of the Simon Commission is a continuing sore for the Commission and the Government. Sir John Simon and his colleagues cannot be contemplating this boycott with equanimity. They have not the courage to acknowledge defeat. The boycott itself has been given additional momentum by the unprovoked assault on the Punjab leaders. The Government will therefore feel itself bound to suppress the boycott by any means that it can command. The Punjab incident therefore I regard as the first trial of strength, the strength of non-violence against violence. Lalaji had no difficulty in restraining the vast crowd behind him in spite of the police provocation. And if throughout the stay of the unwelcome Commission in India, this non-violent policy can be successfully and efficiently carried out, the Government will find much of its occupation gone and the people would have had a striking demonstration of the effectiveness of mass non-violence. The moral therefore I would have national workers to draw from this incident is not to be depressed or taken aback by the assault, but to treat it as part of the game we have to play, to turn the irritation caused by the wanton assault into dynamic energy and husband it and utilize it for future purposes.

Young India, 8-11-1928

241. FACT AND FICTION

A friend has sent me a cutting from the Pioneer purporting to be a report of an interview with me and I have seen a Press message in the Bombay papers giving a summary of a further report. Both have grieved me. It would have been nice if Mr. Wild¹, who is the author of these reports, had submitted proofs to me before publishing his reports. The late Mr. Saunders of the Englishman used to send to interviewed persons proofs for correction or confirmation of the interviews taken by his reporters. I wish that his very laudable and desirable practice was universally followed. It was all the more necessary for Mr. Wild to follow the practice as he had come to the Ashram as an honoured guest sent by his chief and as he had taken no notes while he was interviewing me. Whilst clever reporters have been known to recall from memory an accurate substance of what they had heard without taking notes, even the cleverest will fail to reproduce in full the very words of his victim if he will take no notes. Mr. Wild has been guilty of sins both of omission and commission. He omitted to send me proofs and although he took no notes, he has professed to reproduce my own words. The result is a series of unfortunate misrepresentations. In many respects the reports are a travesty.

I do not however propose to examine the reports in detail. I would content myself with correcting one mischievous representation. Mr. Wild makes me say that “there is not a man in India today whom he (I) can name as a national leader”. I could never be guilty of making such a false, arrogant and impertinent statement. Fortunately for India, she has not one but scores of national leaders who are able to give a good account of themselves and who need no certificate from me or anyone else. Probably Mr. Wild has confused the question of successor[s] with leaders. I was taken aback when he put me the question about [a] successor. For I have never thought of successors. I believe that a successor will come without effort when one is needed. But a successor even a poor scavenger or spinner may have. He need not be a leader. Once when I was called upon to name a successor I named Gulnar, the daughter of Maulana Mahomed Ali. But she is no longer now fit to occupy the coveted place. She is no more a baby. My notions of [a] successor remain as primitive now as they were seven years ago when the question was first put to me.

Young India, 8-11-1928

242. HANDICAP OF MAHATMASHIP

The difficulties and afflictions of a “mahatma” are no less serious and very often much more serious than those of misters and shriyuts, not excluding knights and baronets. More than once in my life have I had to battle against these difficulties and afflictions created by unfriendly critics and not unoften through misunderstanding on the part of friends who will not take the trouble of ascertaining the true situation after personal inspection but will unhesitatingly accept as gospel truth any rumour that may appear in print.

Now what has appeared in the Press about the Satyagraha Ashram was wholly unauthorized.¹ When one important change in the Ashram was adopted, opinion was divided as to whether without giving a trial to the great change, we were called upon to take the public into confidence. I yielded to the express wish of some of my trusted co-workers not to announce the change. When I accepted their advice, I knew the consequence. I knew that nothing happening about anything connected with me could escape the attention of newspaper reporters. The published report is altogether misleading.

Here are the plain facts:

The constitution of the Ashram has not suffered any vital change except in its name. The reported change about brahmacharya for which I have received from some quarters undeserved congratulations and for which anxious friends have shown nervous concern was never made. I did leave it absolutely free to my co-workers to make whatever change they wished. After full deliberations among themselves over the proposal to relax the brahm-acharya vow and at the discretion of the Managing Committee to admit married people unprepared for the observance, they came to the unanimous conclusion that the change could not be made. I must deal at a future date with the reasoning behind this very important decision.

The other reported change relates to the introduction of spices in the Ashram. In the beginning, the Ashram had only one joint board when the food was prepared without spices. Later when many families joined the Ashram separate kitchens were set up for them and they were free to use spices. But it was decided some months ago to revert to the joint kitchen. We tried for some time to do without spices but as I held the joint kitchen to be an important thing for corporate life and as many, if they had separate kitchens, would revert to spices, it was decided to have two varieties of food in the joint kitchen, spiced and unspiced. We want to give all the assistance and freedom the women folk need. Many of them have come to the Ashram because they are the wives of their husbands. They have not yet been able to argue out all the pros and cons of everything they do.

¹ Vide also “Satyagraha Ashram”, 4-11-1928.

The real change in my opinion is the change in the name. It has caused the original founders of the Ashram many an anxious night. We claim to be votaries of unadulterated truth and so new possibilities of the definitions of fundamental truths have dawned upon us. The name Satyagraha Ashram was adopted deliberately and with the intention of giving the fullest effect to its meaning. But the progressive realization of the meaning of the name made us conscious of our unworthiness to bear it. And so we resolved upon voluntary self-suppression and we chose a name in keeping with the evolution of the corporate life at the Ashram. If the Ashram has done nothing else, it has at least demonstrated the necessity and usefulness of labour undertaken not for self only but for the whole nation. Therefore the name Udyoga Mandir, I felt, more answered our present evolution than Satyagraha Ashram. The co-workers accepted the suggestion though not without considerable hesitation. ‘Industrial Home’ is a poor rendering of the original as ‘Dominion Status’ or even ‘independence’, is a poor substitute for ‘swaraj’ which alone can signify the great mass longing of India as an individual nation. We do not take up any industry that comes our way. We select only such as we must carry on as a consecration, a yajna (sacrifice) or a kurbani. An industrial home connotes a conglomeration of industries which may appeal to some but which have no universal application. The word ‘Mandir’ has sacred associations and so has ‘Udyoga’ read in the light of the Bhagavad Gita. I must therefore invite friendly critics with the poetic instinct to present me with an English expression that will exactly fit in with the expression Udyoga Mandir. Till I get some good equivalent it must remain untranslatable.

But the Satyagraha Ashram does not entirely disappear. Whilst it divests itself of its external activities and allows the use of the ground on which the Ashram stands to the Udyoga Mandir—the possession to be resumed at will—the Ashram retains the open prayer ground and therefore its most life-giving activity hoping some day to be able to reabsorb the activities now surrendered. The name Satyagraha Ashram has so many sacred associations, that only the hope of reverting to it intact has reconciled us to the change of name to the extent indicated.

There is one thing more which I may not omit. It has been openly stated, more secretly whispered, that Mahadev Desai has been appointed Chairman of the Managing Committee owing to the inmates having lost confidence in me and as a concession to weakness. This is altogether untrue. The Managing Committee, if the reader will recall the previous description of the Ashram in these pages, was appointed long ago. I ceased for a long interval officially to guide its deliberations. Then at the invitation of the Committee, I took up the active guidance. But when the change in name came, the responsibility of the Chairman seemed to be eased a bit. Hence I withdrew and Mahadev Desai became Chairman once more. The virtual control of the Ashram however still remains with me and will continue to do so, so long as I continue to deserve the affection of my comrades.

Young India, 8-11-1928

243. VILLAGE ENGINEERS

Mr. Richard B. Gregg, the author of the treatise on Economics of Khaddar, who was at the Ashram for a few days before sailing for America, gave a couple of discourses to the students of the Technical School of the All-India Spinners’ Association at Sabarmati. The first dealt with solar power and was a resume of his chapter in the treatise to which I must refer the reader. Below is given a summary\(^1\) of the second prepared by one of the audience:

Young India, 8-11-1928

244. LETTER TO JEHANGIR B. PETIT

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
November 8, 1928

DEAR MR. PETIT,

I thank you for your very prompt reply. I am sending you now the blind boy.\(^2\) His name is Daya Arjun. He belongs to Junagarh. He is a blacksmith, not an untouchable.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

Jehangir B. Petit, Esq.
Petit Building, 359 Hornby Road, Fort, Bombay

From a photostat: S.N. 12984

---

\(^1\) Not reproduced here

\(^2\) Vide “Letter to Jehangir B. Petit”, 4-11-1928.
245. LETTER TO JEHANGIR B. PETIT

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

November 8, 1928

DEAR MR. PETIT,

Here is a Copy of the letter1 I have given to the blind boy. I am posting it to your Fort address as I have asked the boy to take the original to the School. But as you might not have gone there and might not have yet given instructions at the School, I am writing this to you so as to enable you to do the needful.

Yours sincerely,

JEHANGIR B. PETIT, ESQ.
PETIT BUILDING, 359 HORNBY ROAD, FORT, BOMBAY

From a photostat: S.N. 12990

246. LETTER TO SATYANANDA BOSE

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

November 9, 1928

DEAR SATYANANDA BABU,

I have your letter. When I am in Calcutta,2 I shall be besieged as I always am by interviewers and friends seeking advice. I am dreading even now the visit to Calcutta in the present physical state.3 I would therefore like to be excused from having to preside at the Social Conference. I am coming to Calcutta simply for the sake of Pandit Motilalji.

Yours sincerely,

SITT. SATYANANDA BOSE

4 NUNDY STREET, BALLYGUNGE, CALCUTTA

From a photostat: S.N. 12985

1 Vide the preceding item.
2 In reply to the addressee’s letter dated November 4, 1928, wherein he had requested Gandhiji to preside over the Indian Social Conference to be held in Calcutta during the Congress Week.
3 To attend the A.I.C.C. meeting on December 26, 1928
247. LETTER TO SHANKARAN

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 9, 1928

MY DEAR SHANKARAN,

I have your letters. But I have been too busy to be able to reply. I don’t need now to tell you everything about the Ashram. You will see everything in the pages of Young India and Navajivan.

I had a touch of fever, but I am all right now.¹

Yours sincerely,

SJT. SHANKARAN

VICTORIA LODGE, MATHERAN, DISTRICT COLABA

From a photostat: S.N. 12991

248. LETTER TO KARIM GOOLAM ALI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 9, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. Any interference by an outsider of the kind you suggest is bound to be misunderstood and valueless. Of what value for instance can be to Hindus a balanced opinion from an eminent Christian divine about the misdeeds of Vaishnavite Maharajahs ?

Yours sincerely,

KARIM GOOLAM ALI, ESQ.
KHARADHAR, KARACHI

From a photostat: S.N. 12992

249. LETTER TO A. SAMBUNATHAN

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 9, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. You will have read all about the Ashram constitution in the pages of Young India.

I certainly think that you should not have resorted to abuses in respect of the women. You should have observed perfect silence.

About the Gita, you should procure a Tamil translation which can be easily read.

I am too busy just now to write out my own correspondence.

Yours sincerely,

A. SAMBUNATHAN, ESQ.
C/O T. RATNASABHAPATHY MUDALIAR, ESQ.
32 Office Venkatachala Mudali Street
Triplicane, Madras

From a photostat: S.N. 12993

250. LETTER TO SIR MAHOMED HABIBULLAH

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 9, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter and for taking me in your confidence regarding the appointment of a successor to Sastriji.

The proposal to appoint Sir K. V. Reddi does not appeal to me at all. I have not the honour to know the gentleman. As you tell me he is a party man, it would be fatal to appoint a party man. The Agent has to enjoy the confidence of all the Indians there and of all the parties here. I hardly think that Sir K. V. Reddi will be able to possess that confidence.

The appointment is a most difficult task and it is not an easy thing to replace Sastriji. My own suggestion to you is that you should appoint yourself.\(^1\) You know all that Sastriji has done. Therefore there will be perfect continuity. You proved your mettle in South Africa when you led the Deputation.\(^2\) So far as I am aware you are not a suspect as a party man. The next few years are most important in the life of the little Indian community in South Africa and any mistake in the appointment will prove disastrous. If, therefore, you have sufficient courage and humility to appoint yourself, the whole diffi-

\(^1\) In reply to his letter dated November 5, 1928, which read: “Sir K. V. Reddy who was a member of the first Ministry in Madras . . . is not perhaps as well known throughout India as Sastri or Jayakar. I happen, however, to have known him intimately now for many years. His lack of renown is really due to the fact that he is comparatively young and that his work has been confined to his own presidency. But both in the sphere of Local Self-Government and his larger field of administration as Minister, he distinguished himself by his earnestness, honesty and patriotism” (S.N. 11998).

\(^3\) Vide “Honourable Compromise”, 24-2-1927
ulty is solved. But if you will shirk the duty or your going is utterly impossible, I suggest your making a desperate effort to secure Prof. Paranjpye. If that fails, in spite of Sastriji’s advice that no officials should be appointed you should have Kunwar Maharaj Singh. I mention his name not because I know him or have ever met him but because Charlie Andrews swore by him as the man next to Sastriji if Sastriji could not be secured as the first Agent.

If all the three proposals fail, then I would say you should ask Sastriji to appoint his own successor. I can’t go any further. May God help you to a right decision. You must not throw away my first suggestion.

Yours sincerely,

SIR MAHOMED HABIBULLAH SAHEB BAHADUR, K.C.I.E.
MEMBER OF VICEROY’S COUNCIL, NEW DELHI

From a photostat: S.N. 13282

251. LETTER TO NIRANJAN PATNAIK

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 9, 1928

DEAR NIRANJAN BABU,

The people of Sambalpur are pressing me to take Sambalpur even if for a day on my way to Calcutta. What do you say to this?

Have I not sent you a copy of a letter from Bijolia about the Utkal khadi work? Thinking that I have sent the letter, I have been waiting for your reply.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. NIRANJAN PATNAIK
SWARAJ ASHRAM, BERHAMPUR

From a microfilm: S.N. 13719

1 The second page of the letter ends here but the source has page three of some other letter interpolated.

252. LETTER TO C. V. RENGAM CHETTI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 9, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I wish you could soften down a bit. In any event at the present moment I am not in active charge of the affairs of the Association and I am too much preoccupied in the commitments I have undertaken to attend to anything else. But another non-Brahmin, that is, Seth Jamnalalji is in charge, and I assure you that he is a shrewd and capable business man. If you convince him of your case, he will not hesitate to intervene.

Yours sincerely

SJT. C. V. RENGAM CHETTI
NARAYANAVARAM

From a microfilm: S.N. 13720

253. LETTER TO V. L. PHADKE

Friday, November 9, 1928

BHAISHRI MAMA,

I got your letter. I was a little ill and that has delayed this reply. I think this is not a case of Ghanchis against Hindus, but one involving four well-to-do business men. I see no need for us to do anything more about it. It is plain that the Bhangi student was not a votary of non-violence. He adopted a course which he thought best, and I do not think we need do anything more about it. Even if you think it is a case between Ghanchis and Hindus, your ultimate aim is to win over the former by and by. I would not mind even if a few inmates of the Ashram laid down their lives. Anyone who professes non-violence will not deserve a certificate until he passes the supreme test.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3821

1 A community in Gujarat traditionally engaged in oil pressing
254. LETTER TO F. W. WILSON

November 10, 1928

I have your letter for which I thank you. Perhaps you have seen what I wrote in Young India about Mr. Wild’s articles which make painful reading.

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 12987

255. LETTER TO VIOLET

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 10, 1928

MY DEAR VIOLET,

I have your letter. Hinduism should certainly be purged of all the evil and superstition that have crept into it. Nothing then need be a substitute for it. It is, in my opinion, an all-embracing and all-sufficing religion.

I hope your aunt is quite well now.

Yours sincerely,

[MRS. VIOLET
C/o] MISS BABA GUNASEKERA
55 HAMPDEN LANE, WELLAWATTE, COLOMBO

From a photostat: S.N. 12994

256. CRUELTY IN GUISE OF JUSTICE

Offshoots of the riots between Hindus and Muslims in Surat still continue. Although the fighting with sticks and daggers has ceased, the battle now goes on in the law-courts. I am still receiving letters on this subject. However, I am in no position nor have I the ability to become a party to this dispute. Nevertheless, when I received two or three letters about a certain matter, I considered it my dharma to investigate it. This related to a complaint that the editor of

---

1 In reply to addressee’s letter dated November 7, 1928, which read: “I am most sincerely sorry if I have published anything which is either inaccurate or which conveys a wrong impression. I published (in The Pioneer) what Mr. Wild wrote in all good faith, supposing that he had arranged with you as to what he was going to say.”

2 Vide “Fact and Fiction”, 8-11-1928.
the local daily Hindu, Shri Chimanlal Joshi, was taken to the court in handcuffs. As I could not believe this report, I inquired of a trustworthy friend about it. The latter writes:

> Even a person accused of murder should not be treated in this manner; how then can a gentleman be subjected to such treatment? No Hindu-Muslim problem is involved in this case. No Muslim who has a soul would tolerate such treatment of a Hindu. Similarly, no Hindu who has a soul would tolerate such cruelty towards a Muslim. If cruelty is inflicted and tolerated in this manner, law-courts should be sealed as justice would be defamed. Hence this case deserves to be considered dispassionately.

> Can an accused who has not yet been convicted be led in this way like an animal? One fails to understand the reason for such conduct. If it is said that this procedure was followed because the allegations against him were of a serious nature, it will amount to sentencing the accused before he is tried. Moreover, one has not heard of any punishment in the Penal Code which involves the putting on of manacles. To do so is not in itself a form of punishment. However, if the prisoner is unruly or if he tries to use his hands threateningly or attempts to escape, he is handcuffed so as to prevent him from resorting to either course. In the present case, there was no danger of the accused, Shri Chimanlal Joshi, raising his hands threateningly or running away. Hence we cannot but conclude that he was handcuffed merely by way of cruelty and for insulting him. It is necessary for both Hindus and Muslims to protest against such callousness.

> It is clear that the prison too is in a primitive condition. Previously, too, I had received a protest in this matter and I had commented on it.

> Let Hindus and Muslims of Surat fight one another to their hearts’ content in the name of Ishwar or Allah; but how can they conclude that neither of these gods exists and tolerate such cruelty and barbaric conduct?

> [From Gujarati]

> Navajivan, 11-11-1928

---

1 The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had confirmed that Chimanlal Joshi had been handcuffed and made to walk five miles to the court, because the police superintendent had forgotten to order removal of the fetters. The condition of bathrooms and lavatories in the prison was awful.
257. LETTER TO ABHAY SHARMA

November 11, 1928

BHAISHRI ABHAY SHARMA,

Your letter. It was not our intention to send away Balbir without a cause. Even though he sleeps near me, I keep him under others’ supervision as well. I entrusted him to Somabhai, then to Narandas. At present he is with Krishna Nayar and Gangabehn. Now he tells me that he is being overworked. I see . . .^1 used to devote quite some time to the charkha work but used little brains. He did work on the farm but could impress none with his diligence. He could not satisfy Gangabehn, moreover she suspected him of being a flatterer. His habit of faultfinding has no limit. For this reason he was always too eager to hear all casual talk. Mirabehn . . . .

I had referred to the Arya Samaj at the Brahmo Samaj function. I mentioned the good as well as bad points because it was pertinent. I do not know what was reported in the newspapers. I made no reference in Navajivan because I had no wish to be unnecessarily involved in a controversy. My views are the same as before. The Arya Samaj has done great service but has all the same shown a lack of liberalism.

Yours,

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 6757

258. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

November 12, 1928

CHI. MIRA,

I have your indictment of the Ashram people. You will have read my account in Young India of the changes.^4 If you still retain the horror of return to the Ashram, you shall certainly remain outside and meet me whenever I go out of the Ashram. Wherever you are, I know you will be doing my work. And you will be doing it all the more where you are happy and well. There are so many centres of khadi. You may choose whichever you like.

The Austrian friends will be soon going. They have to sail on 21st. They leave here on 18th or 17th.

^1 A student of Charkha Sangh who had come to learn khadi work
^2 Vide “Handicap of Mahatmaship”, 8-11-1928.
^3 Some words here are not legible in the source.
I had a touch of malaria. I am free now, have been for the last six days. I am just now living on fruit alone. Mahadev has come for two days. He goes back to B[ardoli] tomorrow.¹

Purbai has gone to Orissa. Chhaganlal and his wife will also be going there presently. Krishnadas is now in Sodepur. Rajendra Babu is here and undergoing fasting cure for asthma. Gregg has sailed for America.

Pyarelal and Subbiah have had their innings of malaria. They seem now to be free though weak.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: G.N. 8214; also C.W. 5324. Courtesy: Mirabehn

259. LETTER TO RAMI GANDHI

November 12, 1928

CHI. RAMI,

I read your letter to Ba. I hope your fever has gone now. Here too everyone has had it. I was also caught. Ba and Nimu too had it. Rasik is in Delhi at present and Ramdas is in Bardoli. As you know, Devdas has been in Delhi for a long time now. Navin too has gone there. I trust the children are happy. Chi. Sushila has given birth to a daughter. I shall be leaving for Wardha on the 22nd or the 23rd accompanied by Ba. To both of you a good New Year.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Greetings from Ba.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9712

260. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

Amas, November 12, 1928

BHAI GHANSHYAMDASJI,

Having been unable to write to you for so long, I feel ashamed while penning this. Your letters did come.

I do not want to write more as we shall now meet at Wardha. I had sent a cable in connection with the present hardships in South Africa.

The incident of the calf and the monkeys did annoy me but it was a good opportunity of understanding human nature and of controlling my temper.

Mahadev told me many things about you and it gladdened my heart, although I am already acquainted with much of it.

I propose to reach Wardha on the 24th instant.

The rest when we meet.

Yours,

MOHANDAS

[PS.]

Jamnalalji is going to Bombay today. Mahadev is at Bardoli these days. He has come here for three days.

From Hindi: C.W. 6165. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

261. LETTER TO LAKSHMINARAYAN M. PANDYA

November 12, 1928

BHAII LAKSHMINARAYAN.

I have your letter. When we find two leaders divided in their views, and hold both in equal respect, we should accept the view which appeals to our conscience.

During student-life, one should not take active part in politics.

We should feel respect for our teachers and emulate only their good qualities.

I do not respect the traditional practices observed during an eclipse.

Please take this as my message.

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

BHAISHRI LAKSHMINARAYAN MOJILAL PANDYA
NAGARWADO, LUNAWADA

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 2658. Courtesy: Lakshminarayan M. Pandya
262. LETTER TO DEVDAS GANDHI

Amas, Silence Day [November 12, 1928]

CHI. DEVDAS,

Today is the new moon day, and also my silence day. I am therefore writing this letter for the pleasure of doing so. I had preserved the statement of account sent by you. I examined it today in the smallest detail. I do find a few things about which I would like to have further explanation, but on the whole there is nothing to object to. My New Year blessings to you that you may follow the path of goodness and keep good health. The same to Navin and Rasik. My health is all right.

Blessings from

BAPU

SHRI DEVDAS GANDHI

JAMIA MILLIA, KAROL BAGH, DELHI

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2126

263. LETTER TO NANABHAI R. MASHRUWALA

Amas [November 12, 1928]

BHAI NANABHAI,

I have preserved till this day your sincere letter on the subject of non-violence. When I took it up today, which is both the new moon day and my silence day, in order to reply to it, I asked myself whether it was really necessary that I should engage you in a discussion on this subject. When we are bound to each other through a tie of the heart, we shall in time understand what both of us mean. If either of us is in error, the error will be plain to all and we shall honestly admit it. Since I feel thus, I will not engage you in a futile discussion. If you can leave Akola and come to Wardha, please do so. If you wish we shall have a little talk over the matter.

My blessings to all of you.

BAPU

SHRI NANABHAI MASHRUWALA

AKOLA, C.P.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6678

1 From the postmark
2 ibid
264. LETTER TO PRABHUDAS GANDHI

Amas, Silence Day [November 12, 1928]

CHI. PRABHUDAS,

I have been writing since three and a half in the morning. Having finished the paper, I have resumed the writing. Today is amas.

One’s body endures only as long as the sense of ‘I’ lasts. That sense of ‘I’ is bound to remain so long as the body lives. We have to get out of this state and learn to rid ourselves of the sense of ‘I’. Whatever we have done so far with the sense of ‘I’ is done. But no more of it now. Live in Tadikhet reducing yourself to zero and go on doing daily whatever work comes to hand or you can think of. Do not build castles in the air. Ponder over ‘One step enough for me’. Go on praying, ‘The night is dark and I cannot see my way. Guard your child.’ Instead of being angry or unhappy when somebody insults you, you should rather be pleased. Your duty to Shantilal is simple. If you have not bound yourself to keep him for one year, you should not let him remain for a year. It is obvious that in Tadikhet, you cannot afford to keep him that long. The lesson to be drawn from this is that an agreement even with a friend should be reduced to writing, not because we do not trust him but because memory is a tricky affair.

You should under no circumstances let your health deteriorate. If your work with Mirabehn is over, run to Almora. Chhaganlal and Kashi are at Rajkot. Ramdas has settled down in Bardoli.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S. N. 32981

265. TELEGRAM TO MIRABEHN

SABARMATI,

November 13, 1928

MIRABEHN

KHADI BHANDAR, MUZAFFARPUR

YOU MAY ATTEND. SENDING COTTON. LOVE.

BAPU

From the original: G. N. 8215; also C.W. 5325. Courtesy: Mirabehn

1 From the combination of amas and Silence Day in the dateline; vide “Letter to Devdas Gandhi”, 12-11-1928
DEAR FRIEND,

You will forgive me for delaying to reply to your letter of 21st September for such a long time. The fact is that every admission to the Ashram is regulated by a Committee of Management to which I have referred your letter, and I have just learnt the decision of the Committee that in the present state of the Ashram, it is not possible to keep disabled men, the scope of the Ashram being entirely different. I am sorry indeed that the Ashram is not able to provide shelter for the young man, but I am sure you will appreciate the difficulty of the Committee of Management.

But will you be prepared to send him to some other institution if I can find one that will take charge of him? Of course I should not recommend a single institution about whose ability to take proper care of such cases I was not myself sure.

Yours sincerely,

REV. A. GORDON

CANADIAN BAPTIST MISSION, VUYYURU, KISTNA DISTRICT

From a photostat: S.N. 12974

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter enclosing the cuttings. You perhaps have seen my comment upon them. And many things you have put into my mouth and views you have ascribed to me I fail to recognize myself, and some of them are so palpably absurd that I cannot imagine how

1. In his letter dated September 21, 1928, the addressee had said that M. Moses, aged 20, an outcaste and an orphan, had a paralysed leg, which was removed after an operation, had studied up to 8th standard in Vuyyuru Boarding School and could do tailoring, weaving or mat-making.

3. Dated November 7, 1928
you came to attribute them to me. Do you not think you owed it to me to show me the proof?

Yours sincerely,

ROLAND J. WILD, ESQ.
“THE CIVIL AND MILITARY GAZETTE”
P.O. BOX NO. 36, LAHORE

From a photostat: S.N. 12988

268. LETTER TO URMILA DEVI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 14, 1928

Mr. Devdhar sends me copy of letters written to you and reports to me that you have been laid up in bed at Dr. Sen’s house. What could the matter be with you? And how are you now? Who is Dr. Sen Mahadev was here for three days. He went last night to Bardoli and expects to return on Friday or Saturday.

Yours sincerely,

SHRIMATI URMILA DEVI
C/o Dr. Sen
C/o METEOROLOGICAL OFFICE, POONA

From a photostat: S.N. 12997
269. LETTER TO C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

November 14, 1928

Here is a letter and copy of my reply.¹ You will either write to the complainant yourself or enable me to send him a further reply.

I have your telegram which surprises me. I could not possibly go to the length you suggest. Enclosed is a copy of the letter² I sent to Sir Mahomed Habibullah. Please discuss the subject no more with anybody and destroy the enclosed.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

KHADI VASTRALAYA, ESPLANADE, MADRAS

From a photostat: S.N. 12788

270. LETTER TO K. SANTANAM

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

November 14, 1928

MY DEAR SANTANAM,

I have your letter. The best thing I could do was to forward your letter to Sjt. Ambalal Sarabhai.³ Beyond that you won’t expect me to go.

I am sorry about Krishna.⁴ I hope she will soon be well. Is her illness the reason for her long silence?

I note what you say about Punjab politics.⁵

Yours sincerely,

PANDIT K. SANTANAM

THE LAKSHMI INSURANCE CO. LTD.
P. O. BOX. NO. 30, LAHORE

From a photostat: S.N. 12996

³ In his letter dated November 10, 1928, the addressee had requested Gandhiji to put in a word regarding his Lakshmi Insurance Co., Ltd., to Ambalal Sarabhai who was thinking of insuring his employees in his various concerns.
⁴ She had been unwell for two months.
⁵ The addressee said that he was not taking very active part in politics at that time chiefly due to the fact that there were local factions in the Congress.
The Association has now been at work for over two years. It has made steady progress on the business side. Its organization is being gradually perfected. Its finances are on a sound footing. It takes or makes no commitments beyond its ability. But on the score of membership, it has not proved attractive. I confess that not much effort has been made to attract members. The Council has thought it unwise to spend public money in carrying on propaganda in that direction, feeling that those who realize the national importance of hand-spinning and the dignity of labour would of their own accord join the Association. Such however has not been the case. People have not been attracted to the constructive side of national work nor have they developed the capacity for unassuming steady work. Many even of those who joined in the beginning have fallen off.

Nevertheless the Council does not feel disposed to alter the terms of membership but is of opinion that some day or other public workers are bound to realize the importance of hand-spinning for the nation and therefore for themselves, and that some day it will be recognized as a matter of shame for anybody not to spin even as it would be today a matter of shame not to protest one’s loyalty to the country or not to attend on due occasions public meetings.

But even though the membership has not increased and has not attracted those who would work a big financial corporation like the Association, its finances have grown. It is therefore thought advisable to appoint a permanent Board of Trustees in whom the funds should be vested. With that end in view Sjt. Jamnalal Bajaj, Sjt. C. Rajagopalachari and Sjt. Rajendra Prasad have drafted the following resolutions:

I. Whereas the All-India Spinners’ Association was founded on 23rd September 1925, as an expert and independent organization for the development of hand-spinning and khaddar and it was endowed with assets by the Indian National Congress for the said purpose:

Whereas the first Executive Council of the All-India Spinners’ Association under the constitution so framed was to hold office for five years and authorized not only to deal with its assets and to raise further funds for the purposes of the Association, but also to make such amendments in the constitution as may be considered necessary in the light of its experience:

Whereas the Executive Council since its establishment has raised and in view of the increasing work of the Association must continue to raise from time to time considerable funds from the public:

Whereas it is found necessary often to enter into agreement, raise funds by way of loans on the security of its assets, and make commitments going beyond its own lifetime:

And whereas for these and other reasons, the experience of the last three years has shown that it is desirable to amend the constitution so as to vest the funds and all the assets of the Association in a permanent Board of Trustees who shall hold them for the purposes of the Association and who shall also be the Governing Body of the Association:

It is hereby resolved as follows:

1. That the funds and assets now held by the All-India Spinners’ Association and its various Branches henceforth vest in a Board of Trustees who shall also be the Executive Council of the Association.

2. That the said Board of Trustees and Executive Council shall consist of the undermentioned twelve persons who shall hold office for life, provided they continue to be members of the Association, and three other persons elected annually by the members of the Association from among its A-Class members, provided that for this purpose no one who has not been on the rolls continuously for two years at the time of election shall be entitled to vote.

Names of members of the Board of Trustees and Executive Council:

3. That any vacancy occurring by reason of resignation, death or otherwise shall be filled up by the remaining members from amongst A-Class members of the Association:

II. Resolved that if any member fails to send his yarn quota for six months he shall cease to be a member.

III. Resolved that the constitution be amended to embody the foregoing provisions.

IV. Resolved that a meeting of the members of the Association be convened as early as possible to elect three members to the Board of Trustees and Executive Council under Resolution I, clause 2.

It is being circulated among the members of the Council and will be placed before it for adoption at a special meeting to be convened at Wardha on the 18th December next.

I heartily endorse the proposal. One striking feature about the proposal is that it introduces an element of election in the appointment of trustees. This was not contemplated by any of us when the Council was self-formed. The idea is to make the All India

---

1 As in the source; for list of trustees, vide “All-India Spinners’ Association”, 27-12-1928.
Spinners’ Association a democratic body as early as it is possible to do so. I invite suggestions from the readers of Young India on the proposal.

Young India, 15-11-1928

272. AS EVER

The Punjab Government’s communiqué over the unprovoked assault on Lalaji and other leaders exculpates the police from all blame which means that the old policy of excusing the police and the military, no matter how they act, continues to reign supreme as ever. This is not to be wondered at. So long as the Government remains irresponsible and irresponsible to the popular will, so long must it be subservient to the police and the military.

The departmental inquiry proposed by the Government is a further eyewash. It is preposterous to expect Lalaji and the other leaders to stultify themselves by leading evidence before a committee which the people have every reason to distrust. If the Government had been really anxious to know the truth about the incident, they would have appointed a representative committee of a judicial nature which would inspire public confidence and whose findings would command respect. I congratulate Lala Lajpat Rai and his friends on having decided not to lead evidence before the departmental committee. Lalaji has thrown down the challenge. He courts a libel action and undertakes to prove a case which the Government had the hardihood summarily to brush aside.

But the question that arises from this incident is much larger than the mere demonstration of the truth of Lalaji’s version. For the public, so long as the Government do not prove otherwise beyond doubt, Lalaji’s version stands. The larger question is how are the people to remedy the evil of irresponsible Government. The assault and the bolstering are but a symptom of the great disease of bondage. I wish that we could all seriously deal with the root of the evil rather than set about cutting off the branches which sprout forth like Ravana’s heads as soon as they are cut off. In other words we have to develop sufficient strength to resist the main disease.

I dare not enter into the question of remedies. My own remedy is well known. My purpose just now is not to insist upon its acceptance or the acceptance of any particular remedy. I simply plead that it is up to all the leaders of public opinion seriously to concentrate upon finding an expeditious and effective remedy for dealing with the evil of foreign domination.

Young India, 15-11-1928
273. NOTES

FOR REST

After having been at the Ashram, now Udyoga Mandir, for nearly eleven months I propose to go to Wardha during the last week of the month to pass a quiet time at the Satyagraha Ashram there. As usual the newspapers have anticipated me and the date of my departure. They have announced 15th instant as the date. Already correspondents are on my track asking for interviews. I may say that I do not reach Wardha before 24th instant nor leave Sabarmati before 22nd instant." But when I go to Wardha I go there for rest and not for appointments. I would therefore request people living in that neighbourhood to excuse me from all appointments and allow me to have the rest which perhaps I deserve.

KARACHI SWEEPERS

With reference to the discussion that took place recently in Karachi Municipality on the question of khadi wear for its employees, the President of the Sweepers’ Union has now sent me the text of a resolution passed by the Sweepers’ Union. It runs as follows:

The Union notes with regret the discussion regarding khadi uniforms in a recent Municipal meeting and thanking sincerely the President of the Karachi Municipality for the solicitude shown by him for the sweepers, most respectfully and humbly begs to draw his attention to the fact that as agriculturists sweepers have been wearing pankorun, i.e., khadi, for a long time and that the khadi uniforms are not at all inconvenient to them. On the contrary they (the sweepers) appreciate the national sentiment signifying the use of khadi and sympathize with their brothers and sisters, who get much-needed supplementary income by spinning and doing other processes. This Union therefore urges on the Municipality to continue khadi uniforms in future.

I wonder whether this resolution was passed only by half a dozen sweepers or whether it was known and explained to all the sweeper employees of the Municipality. The Secretary informs me that it was fully explained to the sweepers before the resolution was passed. It is a resolution which I can gladly commend to all the municipal employees. No compulsion superimposed upon them about khadi or anything else can possibly last; but if an educative propaganda such as has been carried on amongst the sweepers of Karachi were to be carried amongst the employees of municipalities throughout India and if they were to ask for khadi uniforms, no municipality will be able for any length of time to resist such a demand. I therefore congratulate the Sweepers’ Union upon their resolution.

---

1 Gandhiji actually left on November 23; vide “Telegram to G. D. Birla”, 22-11-1928.

“God Is”

Having read this article in Young India (11-10-1928) a reader sends the following bracing quotations from Emerson:

A little consideration of what takes place around us every day would show us that a higher law than that of our will regulates events; that our painful labours are unnecessary and fruitless; that only in our easy, simple, spontaneous action are we strong and by contenting ourselves with obedience we become divine. Belief and love—a believing love will relieve us of a vast load of care. O my brothers, God exists. There is a soul at the centre of Nature, and over the will of every man, so that none of us can wrong the universe.

The lesson is forcibly taught that our life might be much easier and simpler than we make it; that the world might be a happier place than it is; that there is no need of struggles, convulsions, and despairs, of the wringing of the hands and the gnashing of teeth; that we miscreate our own evils. We interfere with the optimism of Nature.

If we would but have a little faith we would see God and His love everywhere about us.

GREENS AND DIETETIC AHIMSA

A friend writes from Calcutta:

You have observed in one of your previous articles on dietetics that it is undesirable to cook the greens since cooking destroys their vitamin contents.

Now the Jains believe that all vegetable fare with the exception of ripe fruit contains countless germs invisible to the eye which by setting up putrefaction give rise to a variety of diseases unless the vegetables are cooked. Jain sadhus do not even take water unless it is previously boiled. This view is thus in direct contradiction to your view. Which of these views can be correct? Would you throw some light on the matter?

I have already expressed my opinion on this point in Nava-jivan. If one may take ripe fruit without cooking I see no reason why one may not take vegetables too in an uncooked state provided one can properly digest them. Dieteticians are of opinion that the inclusion of a small quantity of raw vegetables like cucumber, vegetable marrow, pumpkin, gourd, etc., in one’s menu is more beneficial to health than the eating of large quantities of the same cooked. But the digestions of most people are very often so impaired through a surfeit of cooked fare that one should not be surprised if at first they fail to do justice to raw greens, though I can say from personal experience that no harmful effect need follow if a tola or two of raw greens are taken with each meal provided one masticates them thoroughly. It is a well established fact that one can derive a much greater amount of nourishment from the same quantity of food if it is masticated well. The habit of proper mastication of food inculcated by the use of uncooked greens, therefore, if it does nothing else, will at least enable one to do with less quantity of food and thus not only make for economy in consumption but also automatically reduce the dietetic himsa that one commits to sustain life. Therefore whether regarded from the viewpoint of dietetics or that of ahimsa the use of uncooked vegetables is not only free from all objection but is to be highly recommended. Of course it goes without saying that if the vegetables are to be eaten raw extra care will have to be exercised to see that it is not stale, over-ripe or rotten, or otherwise dirty.

1 Vide “My Notes”, sub-title Disregard for the Living Quern

Young India, 15-11-1928

274. LETTER TO K. M. VAIDYA

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 15, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I am tired out. I have no desire to accept any engagement this time whilst I am at Wardha. I want to give myself as much quiet as possible. I would not have the energy to give an address worth listening to. You will please therefore excuse me.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. K. M. VAIDYA
BEHIND HITAVADA PRESS, CRADDOCK TOWN, NAGPUR

From a photostat: S.N. 12998

275. LETTER TO EVELYN C. GEDGE

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 15, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I wish I could do something for the friend you mention. But it is difficult for me to suit him. All the work we have at the Ashram is principally physical labour such as spinning, weaving, farming, dairying and payments we make are also very small.

1 Miss Gedge had a student, Mrs. Cama, at her settlement whose husband had lost his job in the Provincial Civil Service on the charge of accepting a bribe. He had undergone a sentence at Sabarmati Jail and now upon his release needed rehabilitation in some job. Miss Gedge had suggested that Gandhiji might offer him a job or arrange to obtain one for him through Mr. Ambalal Sarabhai.

Yours sincerely,

MISS EVELYN C. GEDGE
UNIVERSITY SETTLEMENT
VACCHAGANDHI ROAD, P.O. 7, BOMBAY
  From a photostat: S.N. 12999

276. LETTER TO MADELEINE R. HARDING

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SATARMATI,
November 15, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I was delighted to receive your letter enclosing the introduction from Rev. F. B. Meyor. I should have been delighted to meet personally one bringing a note from Mr. Meyor, and I hope that it will still be possible for us to meet some time. When you write to Mr. Meyor, please send him my kind regards and tell him that the meeting in Johannesburg to which he refers in his note is still fresh in my memory.

Yours sincerely,

MISS MADELEINE R. HARDING
JOSHI VILLA, NAINITAL
  From a photostat: S.N. 13000

277. MESSAGE TO ANDHRA CONFERENCES

[On or before November 16, 1928]

I wish every success to the Conferences\(^1\) and I hope, in a poor district like yours, the wheel will have its due appreciation.

The Hindu, 16-11-1928

\(^1\) Which were to begin on November 17, 1928 at Nandyala
278. LETTER TO LONGMANS GREEN & CO. LTD.

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 16, 1928

MESSRS LONGMANS GREEN & CO. LTD.
39 PATERNOSTER ROW, LONDON E.C. 4.

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter addressed to Swami Anand about the Autobiography. The rights of English publication were given by me some time ago to the Macmillan Company of New York. Mr. Andrews is now engaged in doing something of the kind of work you propose. I would therefore refer you to Mr. Andrews, 112 Gower Street, London S.W.I.

Yours faithfully,

From a microfilm: S.N. 14844

279 LETTER TO DEVI WEST

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 16, 1928

I have your letter and the photographs for Ba. I have not the time to say anything more about the activities here, but I am keeping in touch with you through the pages of Young India. I have therefore satisfied myself with simply sending you my love.

Yours sincerely,

MISS DEVI WEST
23 GEORGE STREET, LOUTH, LINCOLNSHIRE

From a photostat: S.N. 14406

280. LETTER TO MURIEL LESTER

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 16, 1928

I have your two letters. I was delighted to have your description about the opening ceremony¹. I hope you will flourish more and more. Do keep me in touch with your movements.

I should certainly be delighted to see Mrs. Winifred Dickenson²

¹ Of the new prayer hall
² A friend and co-worker of the addressee who was coming over to India to teach in a school near Madras

VOL. 43 : 10 SEPTEMBER, 1928 - 14 JANUARY, 1929 227
when she comes.

I don’t need to give you any information about the Ashram because you must glean everything about the Ashram from the pages of Young India.

Yours sincerely,

MISS MURIEL LESTER
KINGSTON HALL, POWIS ROAD, BOW, E. 3
ENGLAND

From a photostat: S.N. 14414

---

281. LETTER TO SIR MAHOMED HABIBULLAH
SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 16, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your kind letter. I am sorry that it is not possible for you to accept my first suggestion.¹ I appreciate your objection.²

From your letter I gather that the decision about Sir K. V. Reddi had already been taken.³ I am afraid I shall not be able to support the appointment, and may feel called upon to oppose it. You might have seen in the papers that the matter has already leaked out. I have myself received a letter asking me to protest against the proposal. But I do not yet see my way clear to take any step. Have you ascertained from Sastriji his opinion about the appointment of Sir K. V. Reddi ?

Yours sincerely,

SIR MAHOMED HABIBULLAH SAHEB BAHADUR, K.C.I.E.
NEW DELHI

From a photostat: S.N. 14854

---

² In his letter dated November 9, 1928, the addressee had said: “My domestic difficulties, however, are such that it is impossible for me even to think of making sojourn outside India for any length of time. A motherless unmarried daughter and a young son in school are living obligations which must claim my attention during the rest of what is left to me of my life, at least until they are suitably settled” (S.N. 12786).
³ In his letter he had also said: “It was after the most careful survey of the whole situation that we decided to select Reddi.”
282. TELEGRAM TO AMRIT RAI

November 17, 1928

Lala Amrit Rai
Lahore

Your wire\(^1\) stuns me. Lalaji’s death calamity first magnitude. My deepest sympathy with you, mother, other members, family. Hope God will give you strength follow his footsteps.

Gandhi

From handwritten draft: S.N. 2456

283. TELEGRAM TO VALLABHBHAI PATEL

November 17, 1928

Vallabhbhai Patel
Swaraj Ashram, Bardoli

Lalaji died this morning heart failure. Hold condolence meeting there.

Bapu

From handwritten draft: S.N. 2456

284. LETTER TO HARRY

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
November 17, 1928

Dear friend,

I have your letters. I would like you first of all to tell me what you want to confer with me about. I cannot possibly trouble you to come to Sabarmati or to Wardha where I expect to proceed shortly.

With reference to your intention to stay at the Ashram for some days, I am sorry that it will not be possible. The Ashram or rather the Udyoga Mandir is under the control of a board of management.

Yours sincerely,

Harry, Esq.
C/o S. K. Ghosh, Esq.
Executive Engineer’s Office, Nagpur

From a photostat: S.N. 12790

\(^1\) Vide “The Lion of the Punjab Sleeps”, 18-11-1928.
285. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

SATHYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 17, 1928

MY DEAR JAWAHAR,

Your letter frees me from all anxiety. So long as you are willing to act as Agent, no change need be made, and certainly not whilst there is rumour of your being spirited away. When that event happens, we shall see. Personally I like the idea of Kripalani becoming Agent when you can no longer shoulder the burden. We shall discuss the matter further if you can come to Wardha on the 18th December or we shall do so in Calcutta.

Sitla Sahai wanted to be in the Ashram for some months for mental adjustment more than anything else. He has domestic and other worries preying upon him. He wanted a quiet time and he is having it.

I am sorry about Kamala. Evidently she never completely recovered in Switzerland. I am glad you are taking her to Calcutta. She will at least have the best advice possible.

I hope you are not overworking yourself. Lalaji’s death is a great calamity.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

PANDIT JAWAHARLAL NEHRU
ANAND BHAWAN, ALLAHABAD

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1928. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library; also S.N. 12791

1 In reply to his letter dated November 14, 1928, which read: “... for various reasons it would be desirable for the A.I.S.A. Council to have a more competent person than myself as agent in the U.P. ... I did not mean that I want to get rid of the responsibility of the work. ... But if it is possible to make better arrangements I shall welcome them.

... The only person I can think of in the U.P. is Kripalani. He is practically a U.P. man now, is well known in khadi circles here and is a whole-timer. ...

“... There is no immediate hurry in this matter. I wanted the A.I.S.A. Council to consider it largely in view of the rumours of the impending arrest” (S.N. 12787).

2 In his letter Jawaharlal Nehru had said: “Kamala has been giving us a great deal of anxiety.”

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
286. LETTER TO PERIN CAPTAIN

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 17, 1928

I have your two letters by me. Mahadev is not here. I am quite out of the wood now though still somewhat weak and have to be careful.

I do not know where I shall stay in Calcutta. Nothing is yet decided, but you will stay with me no matter where I am accommodated. You need not therefore bother about your lodging in Calcutta. Kindly tell me who will be coming. The date of my reaching Calcutta I shall let you know in good time from Wardha and perhaps you will join me by the train that will take me to Calcutta.

MRS. PERIN CAPTAIN

ISLAM CLUB BUILDINGS, CHOWPATTI, BOMBAY

From a photostat: S.N. 12792

287. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 17, 1928

DEAR SATIS BABU,

I have your letter. Having allowed Vakil to deal with poverty I cannot very well refuse admission to his articles on remedies. They have done one good. He is interesting himself in this question and he has stimulated a little more interest. My criticism disposes of his main argument.

I wonder whether you know that Anil Baran Roy has been writing to the Chronicle violently against khadi. The article is almost of a same style as the Welfare article that appeared some years ago.

About the Social Conference. I had a letter from the Conference people and I was obliged to say no.

When I come to Calcutta I shall be delighted to go into the Pratishthan affairs and see what should be done.

1 Entitled “Remedies of Poverty”; these were published in Young India on September 27, October 4, 11 and 18, 1928.
2 Vide “Notes” sub-title Are We Getting Poorer and “Our Poverty”, 6-9-1928
I am glad Baidyanathji is coming in close touch with you. He is a good-hearted man and wants to do active service. I must suggest to him coming either to Wardha to discuss his scheme or postpone the discussion till after I am in Calcutta, only there may be no time in Calcutta for a quiet discussion. It is difficult for me to sketch a scheme without cross-examining Baidyanathji and finding out what is exactly at the back of his mind.

I am glad Krishnadas is there with you. I hope he is keeping well. Please give my love to him. I would like him to stay with you for some time if the climate at Sodepur agrees with him.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA
KHADI PRATISHTHAN, SODEPUR

From a photostat: S.N. 12793

288. LETTER TO RAMNARAYAN PATHAK
November 17, 1928

Bhai Ramnarayan,

I have your letter. Even sitting still in a cave is a form of action. In that too, there may be attachment or other such evils. So long as we live in the body, we cannot escape exercising the will, that is, action. It is not true that patriotic service is necessarily characterized by attachment. Our purushartha lies in striving to overcome whatever weaknesses we see in ourselves.

Blessings from

BAPU

Shri Ramnarayan Nagardas Pathak
Shri Gandhi Antyaja Ashram
Chhaya (Porbandar)

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 2784. Courtesy: Ramnarayan Pathak

289. LETTER TO JAL KHAMBHATTA
November 17, 1928

Bhaishri Khambhatta,

I have your letter. It is good news indeed that you have returned and are all right. I am very happy to know that your health is completely restored. Please let me know if you have had any new experiences about water treatment. Be careful and preserve the health you have recovered. My blessings to you both.

1 Kedia
2 Endeavour

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 5018. Courtesy: Tehmina Kambhatta

290. LETTER TO NAGINDAS DALSUHBBHAI SHAH

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

November 17, 1928

BHAISHRI NAGINDAS,

I have your letter. If you come on Tuesday at 4.30, we shall talk.

Blessings from

MOHANDAS

SHRI NAGINBHAI DALSUHBBHAI SHAH
VAKIL DALSUHBBHAI SHAH’S HOUSE

GODHRA

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 32845

291. INTERVIEW TO ASSOCIATED PRESS OF INDIA

November 17, 1928

I got the sad news from the deceased patriot’s son early this morning. I regard Lalaji’s death at this juncture to be a national calamity of the first magnitude.1 His place is difficult and impossible to fill. Not many public men can today show an unbroken record of public service of such long standing as Lalaji’s. Whatever might be said to the contrary, it has been my firm conviction that he was a friend of Mussalmans and sincerely desirous of promoting Hindu-Muslim unity. How I wish that this truth could be realized by us all and that Lalaji’s death could be turned to good account by the nation by establishing unity and promoting perfect toleration for which Lalaji always stood. I know that in his heart there was neither rancour nor ill will for anybody. His life was an open book. As a comrade, it was a privilege to work with him; as a friend he was ever faithful. To the student world he was a tower of strength. I know that many will gladly bear testimony to his wise counsel, guidance and patronage. I know that there would be a memorial to the memory of the deceased but I can imagine no truer memorial than work for swaraj and all it implies with redoubled zeal.

1 Vide also “Telegram to Amrit Rai”, 17-11-1928.

The Hindu, 19-11-1928

292. TRIBUTE TO LAJPAT RAI

AHMEDABAD,

November 17, 1928

Mahatmaji said that Lalaji’s death had left a gap which it was difficult to be filled. His was a glorious death and he died a patriot. Mahatmaji asked the inmates to take lessons from Lalaji’s life and emulate his high sense of duty.

I do not believe that Lalaji is dead, but he lives.

The Tribune, 20-11-1928

293. SOME MORE POSERS IN AHIMSA

Letters in connection with the calf incident still continue to pour in. But I have had my full say already and such letters as needed a reply I have already answered. I however feel in duty bound to deal with some posers addressed to me by some correspondents. Not to do so might lead to consequences not warranted by my action.

I

One of them writes:

My baby is four months old. It fell ill a fortnight after its birth and there seems no end of its ailment in sight. Several vaidyas and doctors have tried their skill upon him, but in vain; some of them now even decline to administer any medicine to him. They feel, and I feel with them, that the fate of the poor thing is sealed. I have a big family to maintain and I feel myself reduced to sore straits as I have an accumulation of debts. Nor can I any longer bear to see the terrible sufferings of the baby. Would you kindly tell me what I should do in the circumstances?

1 Released by Free Press with the following introduction: “After prayers in the Satyagraha Ashram this evening Mahatma Gandhi, addressing the inmates of the Ashram, feelingly communicated the sad news of Lalaji’s death.”

2 This is a translation by Pyarelal of Gujarati items which appeared in Navajivan, 4-11-1928 and 18-11-1928.
It is clear that this friend has not been reading Navajivan carefully or he would not have asked this question. There would be no warrant for taking the life of the baby even if all the doctors in the world were to pronounce the case to be hopeless because it would always be possible for its father to nurse it. He can soothe the baby in a variety of ways, its size unlike the calf’s being manageable. It is only when every possible avenue of service however small is closed and the last ray of hope of the patient surviving seems extinct that one is justified in putting him out of pain, and then too only if one is completely free from the taint of selfish feeling. In the present case, not only is the service of the ailing baby possible, but the main consideration that, on the father’s own admission, weighs with him is the personal inconvenience involved in nursing the baby. Largeness of the family or one’s pecuniary difficulty can never serve as a justification for putting an end to the life of an ailing patient and I have not the slightest doubt that in the present instance, it is the bounden duty of the father to lavish all his love and care on his suffering baby. There is however one thing more which he can do: if he has sense enough to see it, he should resolve forthwith to lead a life of perfect self-restraint and further stop procreating irrespective of whether his present baby survives or not.

II

Another friend writes in the course of a Hindi letter:

I am the manager of . . . goshala. There are in my charge some 500 head of cattle. They are all utterly useless for any purpose and are simply eating their head off. Out of these from 350 to 400 animals on the average are constantly at death’s door, destined to die off one by one in the long end every year. Now tell me what am I to do?

As I have already explained, giving the short shrift, from considerations of financial expediency, can never be compatible with non-violence. And if it is a fact that not a day passes in this goshala without some animal or other dying painfully in the manner of that calf in the Ashram, it makes out a strong case for closing the goshala at once for it betrays fearful mismanagement. The calf in the Ashram was reduced to such piteous plight only as the result of an accident but daily instances like this should ipso facto be impossible in a well-managed institution. The duty of the management in the present case is thus clear. It is incumbent upon them and upon the organizers of all similarly placed institutions to devise the most effective means of nursing and ministering to the needs of diseased and ailing cattle.
would also recommend to them for careful study and consideration my description of an ideal pinjrapole and the way it ought to be managed that I have given more than once in these pages.

III

Wrote a Kanbi friend:

There is a grazing-ground for the cattle near our village. It is overrun by a herd of deer about five to seven hundred strong. They work havoc upon all our cotton saplings. We are in a fix. We can easily get rid of them by employing professional watchmen who would kill them for the venison they would get. What would be your advice to a man in my condition? Again when insect pests attack our crops the only way to deal with them is to light a fire of hay which means making a holocaust of the insect pests. What course would you suggest in these circumstances?

This question is of a different order from the other two questions; it falls under the category of the monkey question, not the calf question. I am unable to guide anyone in the path of himsa. In fact no person can lay down for another the limit to which he may commit himsa. This is a question which everybody must decide for himself according to the measure of his capacity for ahimsa. This much however I can say without any hesitation that to use the analogy of the monkeys to justify the killing of the deer would only betray a laziness of thought and lack of discrimination; the two cases are so dissimilar. Besides, I have not yet decided to kill the monkeys, nor is there any likelihood of my doing so presently. On the contrary it has been and shall be my ceaseless anxiety to be spared that painful necessity. Moreover there is quite a number of ways of keeping off the deer from the fields which would be impossible in the case of elusive creatures like monkeys. Whilst therefore reiterating what every farmer knows from his daily experience also to be true, viz., that destruction of small insects and worms is inevitable in agriculture, I am unable to proceed any further, but must content myself by stating generally that it is the sacred duty of everybody to avoid committing himsa to the best of one’s power.

IV

Still another friend writes:

You say that an absolute observance of ahimsa is incompatible with life in the body, that so long as a man is in the flesh he cannot escape the commission of himsa in some form or other as the very process of our physical existence involves himsa. How then can ahimsa be the highest virtue, the supreme duty? Would you set forth as the highest religious ideal a code of conduct which is altogether impossible of being fulfilled in its completeness by man? And if you do, what would be the practical worth of such an ideal?

My humble submission is that, contrary to what this writer says, the very virtue of a religious ideal lies in the fact that it cannot be completely realized in the flesh. For a religious ideal must be proved by faith and how can faith have play if perfection could be attained by the spirit while it was still surrounded by its “earthly vesture of decay”? Where would there be scope for its infinite expansion which is its essential characteristic? Where would be room for that constant striving, that ceaseless quest after the ideal that is the basis of all spiritual progress, if mortals could reach the perfect state while still in the body? If such easy perfection in the body was possible all we would have to do would be simply to follow a cut-and-dry model. Similarly if a perfect code of conduct were possible for all there would be no room for a diversity of faiths and religions because there would be only one standard religion which everybody would have to follow.

The virtue of an ideal consists in its boundlessness. But although religious ideals must thus from their very nature remain unattainable by imperfect human beings, although by virtue of their boundlessness they may seem ever to recede farther away from us, the nearer we go to them, still they are closer to us than our very hands and feet because we are more certain of their reality and truth than even of our own physical being. This faith in one’s ideals alone constitutes true life, in fact it is man’s all in all.

Blessed is the man who can perceive the law of ahimsa in the midst of the raging fire of himsa all around him. We bow in reverence before such a man; he lays the whole world under debt by his example. The more adverse the circumstances around him, the intenser grows his longing for deliverance from the bondage of flesh which is a vehicle of himsa and beckons him on to that blessed state which in the words of the poet, a state in which the will to live is completely overcome by the ever active desire to realize the ideal of ahimsa and all attachment to the body ceasing man is freed from the further necessity of possessing an earthly tabernacle. But so long as that consummation is not reached a man must go on paying the toll of himsa for himsa is inseparable from all physical existence and it will have its due.

Even the Great Masters saw only in a trance
Which even their tongue could not declare.

Young India, 22-11-1928
294. IN QUEST OF REST

As already published in the newspapers, I hope to reach the Wardha Satyagraha Ashram not on the 15th but on or about the 25th of this month. I do not, however, expect to do anything there in addition to carrying out my daily routine. As I wish to get as much rest as possible, no one should expect an interview with me there or request me to make speeches. In view of the present state of my health I shall hardly be able to complete in my spare hours the amount of work that I am taking with me to Wardha. I would request all kindly to bear in mind this appeal of mine.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 18-11-1928

295. THE LION OF THE PUNJAB SLEEPS

As the pages of Navajivan were going to the printing machine on Saturday, the following telegram was received from Lala Lajpat Rai’s son: “Following a heart attack this morning, Lalaji has fallen asleep.” Lalaji’s death means the dissolution of a great planet from India’s solar system. Lalaji was the lion of the Punjab, a brave son of India, a true public servant and a true patriot. It is well-nigh impossible to make a precise assessment of Lalaji’s services of half a century. At this critical juncture for India, Lalaji’s loss is irreparable. Despite this, I would request the people not to be overcome with grief but rather to imbibe his great virtues—his courage, sacrifice, for bearing, generosity, bravery and patriotism, and make a superhuman effort to secure that swaraj for which he lived and died. Blessed indeed is the country which gave birth to such a gem of a son as Lalaji. May God grant peace to his soul and fortitude to his family. The whole of India shares their sorrow.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 18-11-1928

296. MISUNDERSTANDING

A misunderstanding seems to be afloat in Ahmedabad that a deputation consisting of gentlemen belonging to the pinjrapole had come to reason with me regarding calves and monkeys. This is not a fact. The truth of the matter is that I had asked them to see me in connection with the pinjrapole and the nuisance of dogs. They had kindly come over and while they were with me, I told them of my...
dilemma in regard to the killing of calves and about monkeys and this led to a pleasant little conversation between us.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 18-11-1928

297. DIFFICULTIES OF A BOY

A lad of sixteen and a half writes:

Many young men must be in such a pitiable plight. What a denial of freedom that they cannot even get letters addressed to them? I do not believe that parents do any good to their sons and daughters who have reached the age of sixteen by imposing such restrictions upon them for keeping a watch upon their activities in this manner. Such young people who have not still outgrown their cradles cannot, it is clear, worship the Goddess of Independence. Those who live in such a deplorable condition cannot by themselves understand the nature of their dharma. Dharma is not something that can be practised simply by imitating others. It implies supreme effort on the part of oneself.

Where the environment is so weak, what advice can I give the youth, except to offer civil disobedience? If this young man has courage, he will courteously point out his dharma to his mother. If the mother forbids him to go to a national school, he may not do so but he should at least never go where the atmosphere is unhealthy. He should sit at home and practise whatever trade he can; he may spin, card or sew; he can buy a few carpenter’s tools and practise carpentry; he can read good books and reflect upon them, he can find out the essence of these, he can read to his mother all about Prahlad from the Bhagavata, he can go out for walks daily, do exercise and create a pure and fearless atmosphere around his physical and mental self.

A boy of sixteen and a half should never lead the life of a householder. Hence he should politely tell his mother that, until he is twenty-one or twenty-five, she should give up the idea of his living with his wife. If this young man and others like him in a like situation inform their parents of their worthy resolve and at the same time are not disrespectful towards the latter and serve them, they will improve

---

1 The letter is not translated here. The boy had written that he had been married at the age of sixteen. His elder brother took him to the pictures and gave him cheap novels to read. As a result, he had bad dreams, and became weak in body. Reading a book Better Path or Moral Destruction helped him to cure to some extent. He wanted to attend a national school, but his mother would not hear of it because untouchable boys also went to it.
themselves, the parents too will learn a new lesson and the country and dharma will thereby benefit.

This young man seems to know that human effort by itself is futile. Nothing can be achieved without God’s grace. Not a blade moves without His will. This is something that can be perceived directly. Hence those young men who wish to make this effort must realize its limitations and pray to God every day with unflinching faith regarding their worthy resolves. They may well pray to God as Rama or as Krishna or by any other name that is familiar or dear to them.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 18-11-1928

298. I HAVE NOT DONE ANY KILLING

A gentleman writes:

I have not read this Jain newspaper. However, if any gentleman who had come to see me has written as above, it is, indeed, a matter of regret. Moreover, it is for me a matter of even greater regret if anyone believes such a story after my denial in Navajivan. The four gentlemen should have realized that I who have on certain occasions advocated the killing of monkeys could not conceivably hide the fact had I killed some. However, who can shut the mouths or stop the pens of those who are bent on speaking or writing ill of others? I repeat here that nowhere in the Ashram or on behalf of the Ashram have monkeys been killed, beaten or injured. There is no doubt in my mind regarding this matter of killing of monkeys or employing others to kill them, as there is still a strict ban on it. I cannot say the same with such certainty about injuring them, because bows and arrows have been used for a day or two and catapults are still being used. As soon as I realized the possibility of a serious injury resulting from the use of bows and arrows, their use was, as I have already written, discontinued. The catapult is still being employed now but I find that the monkeys merely play with it. Nevertheless, I believe that at times it may certainly cause an injury. I do not know, however, of a single instance in which a monkey has been injured in the Ashram as a result of the use of either of these weapons. The killing of monkeys is something that I do not contemplate doing in future either. I know

---

1 The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had referred to a report in a Jain newspaper that four Jains had seen monkeys killed by Gandhiji despite the latter’s assertion to the contrary in Navajivan.

2 Vide “The Fiery Ordeal”, “The Tangle of Ahimsa” and “More About Ahimsa” that it involves violence. Hence I shall think again and again before indulging in such an extreme act of violence and I shall also try to find out as many ways as I can of sparing myself that form of violence. Despite this, I can give the assurance that the world will certainly come to know, if ever an occasion arises in my life, when I employ violence.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 18-11-1928

299. ANTYAJAS OF KARACHI

One of the good results of the discussion that took place recently in the Karachi Municipality on the question of khadi is that the President of the Sweepers’ Union has now sent me the text of a resolution passed by the Sweepers’ Union. It runs as follows:

When this resolution was sent to me for publication, the question arose in my mind whether it was passed with understanding by a large number of Antyaja brothers or whether it had been passed for the sake of appearances alone by a handful of them getting together. Moreover, as sweepers were regarded as farmers, the question also arose whether there was any truth in it or was it done for the sake of prestige. So I enquired through the secretary and received the following reply:

This clarification enhances the importance of the above resolution. And whenever similar resolutions are passed in such associations, their value increases when this is done with understanding and after due deliberation. Because, if such resolutions are passed without proper understanding or if those who pass them or frame them do so for the sake of demonstration, not only do they lose their impact with the passage of time but they are also harmful. Nowadays many such resolutions are passed merely for outward show. I, therefore, felt the need to exercise the above caution. I hope that the Antyaja brothers will act according to the resolution that they have adopted. And if they do so, both they and the country will benefit. It is not enough if they wear khadi when working in the municipality, but if they have the feelings for khadi which they have expressed in

1 For the text, vide “Notes”, 15-11-1928, sub-title, “Karachi Sweepers”.

2 Not translated here. The secretary of the Antyaja Sangh had informed Gandhiji that sweepers had been regarded as farmers because farming was their original profession and that, although the resolution was passed by the managing committee, it had been explained to the general body and in any case the importance of khadi was being constantly explained to the Antyajas.
the resolution, they will give place to khadi alone even in their homes. It is the task of the Antyaja Sangh to see that durable and cheap khadi is made available. Recently in Mysore, a khadi co-operative association has been set up, and such associations can have within them a khadi store on a co-operative basis and obtain khadi at much cheaper rates. Or, one can also follow the practice adopted in Madras where people are able to get khadi at cheaper rates by the system of chits. There is a saying in English: “Where there is a will there is a way.” The truth of this has been proved by experience. Our Bhangi brothers and their leaders can take to heart this saying.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 18-11-1928

300. LETTER TO K. M. MUNSHI

November 18, 1928

BHAISHRI MUNSHI,

I got your telegram. I am not interested in expression of regret.
I have received several telegrams from the Punjab and some friends are coming from there for consultations. Rest assured that I shall do all that is necessary.

Vandemataram from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 7511. Courtesy: K. M. Munshi

301. SPEECH AT CONDOLENCE MEETING, AHMEDABAD

[November 18, 1928]

My position is somewhat awkward. My relationship with Lalaji had become so close that just as one feels embarrassed to praise some friend, comrade or brother, I too feel awkward to praise him today. Even so, I feel that I should say a few words. I first met Lalaji in 1914 in England; then his love for the country left a deep impression on me. Although I had heard of him earlier through newspapers, since I always have little faith in them I did not straightway take their reports as true. When he returned to India in 1920, he was elected President of the Indian National Congress. Since then I came into close contact with him. There was a difference of opinion between us at the Calcutta

1 On the bank of Sabarmati
2 From The Bombay Chronicle, 19-11-1928
Congress, but that did not affect our relations at all. How could it, when Lalaji concealed nothing in his heart and expressed everything frankly? Young people have to draw a lesson from Lalaji’s life. He has left a will. In a message only fifteen days ago, he had said that he had only a few days more to live, that he had grown old and that he did not want to take much part in the agitation concerning the attack on him. That was the work of young people and they should do it.

Lalaji chanted the mantra of swaraj for fifty years. Youths should take up his work of swaraj. In the work of winning swaraj, Lalaji neither enjoyed peace and happiness himself nor did he allow others to do so. In his time it was not fashionable to go to jail or to undergo a sentence of transportation. At that time there was no fearlessness about going to jail as there is today. I was not in India when Lalaji was exiled from the country. He betrayed no weakness during or after his exile. We must observe the dharma which Lalaji has laid down in his will. Various suggestions will be made to make Lalaji’s memorial a lasting one. All will be in vain if there is not one about winning swaraj. Winning swaraj is the true memorial to Lalaji.

In the resolution Lalaji has been mentioned as the guardian of the poor and there is significance in it. His heart melted wherever he saw misery. His language was certainly strong, but there was no contempt in it. Lalaji’s heart was full of universal love. He concealed nothing from the people, why should he conceal anything from his co-workers? Lalaji was such a kindhearted person that his heart melted if he saw anyone unhappy either in India or abroad. He did not have the slightest enmity towards the Muslims. It was his innermost desire that the Hindus and the Muslims should live as brothers. He wanted that in India there should be neither Hindu rule nor Muslim rule but a rule of all the people. Lalaji’s life began with religious activity and social reforms but he felt that as long as India did not get independence, nothing could be done about religious or social reforms. Like Lokamanya Tilak, he was compelled to plunge into politics.

The duty of everyone—young and old—is to free the country from the yoke of dependence. If we do not make our contribution in shouldering that burden, praising Lalaji would only amount to imitating bards and minstrels. He went on working for swaraj single-mindedly for fifty years without ever getting disappointed. Till the last days of his life, he kept on thinking about swaraj. May God give us the strength to achieve the object for which he expended his whole life.

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 25-11-1928
302. TELEGRAM TO SATYAPAL

November 19, 1928

SATYAPAL

YOUR WIRE. WOULD LIKE YOU OMIT FEEDING POOR.

GANDHI

From a microfilm: S.N. 13326

303. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

[November 19, 1928]

CHI. MIRA,

Too busy to say much. Though I disagree with you in your estimate of the people here, I should be entirely satisfied for you to choose a place in Bihar to work in. The people of Bihar are certainly among the most attractive on earth. The Austrian friends left today.

Love.

BAPU

[PS.]

Your next letter should be to Wardha. I leave here on Friday reaching there Saturday afternoon.

BAPU

SHRIMATI MIRABAI

KHADI Depot, Muzaaffarpur, Bihar

From the original: G.N. 8213; also C.W. 5323. Courtesy: Mirabehn

1 In reply to his telegram dated November 19, 1928, which read: “Provincial Congress requests Doctor Ansari to announce twenty-ninth November Kriya Day of Lala Lajpat Rai to be observed by whole of India as Lajpat Rai Day and to observe following programme. Morning prayer meetings evening procession and public meeting feeding of poor. Please support this in Press.”

2 From the postmark
304. AWARD ON THE LABOUR UNION SUBSCRIPTION

AHMEDABAD
November 21, 1928

The Labour Union shall supply each mill with a list of its members working in the mills and the subscription at the rates prescribed by the Union shall be collected on all pay days from all working people included in the list. In case a dispute regarding the fact of membership or resignation of a member in the mill is not settled between the Labour Union and the mill and regarding which the Mill-owners’ Association and the Labour Union also do not come to an amicable settlement, the matter shall be submitted to arbitration and the subscription shall continue to be collected and paid to the Labour Union till the final settlement. The Union shall refund the subscription of any operative in respect of whom it is proved that he was not a member at the time of collection. The arbitrators hold that the current practice in the matter of collection of subscription involves the possibility of indiscipline. The arbitrators, therefore, urge that the formation of a Labour Union must have the fullest support of mill-owners and there should be no subscription of any sort.

The Bombay Chronicle, 22-11-1928

305. LONG LIVE LALAJI

Lala Lajpat Rai is dead. Long live Lalaji. Men like Lalaji cannot die so long as the sun shines in the Indian sky. Lalaji means an institution. From his youth he made of his country’s service a religion. And his patriotism was no narrow creed. He loved his country because he loved the world. His nationalism was international. Hence his hold on the European mind. He claimed a large circle of friends in Europe and America. They loved him because they knew him.

His activities were multifarious. He was an ardent social and religious reformer. Like many of us he became a politician because his zeal for social and religious reform demanded participation in politics. He observed at an early stage of his public career that much reform of the type he wanted was not possible until the country was

1 The Arbitration Board consisting of Mahatma Gandhi and Sheth Mangaldas Girdhardas gave the award in the dispute submitted to them for settlement by the Mill-owners’ Association and the Labour Union regarding collection of subscription of members of the Labour Union.

2 An article by Gandhiji on the same subject appeared in Navajivan, 25-11-1928.
freed from foreign domination. It appeared to him, as to most of us, as a poison corrupting every department of life.

It is impossible to think of a single public movement in which Lalaji was not to be found. His love of service was insatiable. He founded educational institutions; he befriended the suppressed classes; poverty wherever found claimed his attention. He surrounded young men with extraordinary affection. No young man appealed to him in vain for help. In the political field he was indispensable. He was fearless in the expression of his views. He suffered for it when suffering had not become customary or fashionable. His life was an open book. His extreme frankness often embarrassed his friends, if it also confounded his critics. But he was incorrigible.

With all deference to my Mussalman friends, I assert that he was no enemy of Islam. His desire to strengthen and purify Hinduism must not be confounded with hatred of Mussalmans or Islam. He was sincerely desirous of promoting and achieving Hindu-Muslim unity. He wanted not Hindu Raj but he passionately wanted Indian Raj; he wanted all who called themselves Indians to have absolute equality. I wish that Lalaji’s death would teach us to trust one another. And we could easily do this if we could but shed fear.

There will be, as there must be, a demand for a national memorial. In my humble opinion no memorial can be complete without a definite determination to achieve the freedom for which he lived and died so nobly. Let us recall what has after all proved to be his last will. He has bequeathed to the younger generation the task of vindicating India’s freedom and honour. Will they prove worthy of the trust he reposed in them? Shall we the older survivors—men and women—deserve to have had Lalaji as a countryman, by making a fresh, united, supreme effort to realize the dream of a long line of patriots in which Lalaji was so distinguished a member?

Nor may we forget the Servants of People Society which he founded for the promotion of his many activities, all designed for the advancement of the country. His ambition in respect of the Society was very high. He wanted a number of young men all over India to join together in a common cause and work with one will. The Society is an infant not many years old. He had hardly time enough to consolidate this great work of his. It is a national trust requiring the nation’s care and attention.

Young India, 22-11-1928
306. CONDOLENCES FROM OVERSEAS

‘Anavil Yuvaks’ send me the following message from Port Louis Mauritius:

Deeply regret Lalaji’s death. Irreparable loss national cause. Tender heartfelt condolence bereaved family.

Transvaal Khatri Mandal, Johannesburg, sends the following:

Khatri community deeply mourns death great patriot Lalaji. Kindly convey message condolence to bereaved family.

Patidar Society, Johannesburg, cables:

Patidar community mourns death great patriot Lala Lajpatrai. Kindly convey Society’s condolence to bereaved family.

Young India, 22-11-1928

307. AJMAL JAMIA FUND

I know that this Fund has to work under a heavy handicap. It has to cut its way through the hard rock of prejudice. Why should a Hindu pay to perpetuate the memory of a Mussalman and for a fund principally devoted to a Muslim cause will be the argument of many a kattar 1 Hindu in these times of mutual hate. Why should a Mussalman subscribe to a fund in memory of one who was pro-Hindu and for an institution partly supported by the idolatrous Hindu will be the argument of a kattar Mussalman against supporting the Fund. In spite, however, of this double handicap I must continue to ask for subscriptions for this memorial. The constitution of the Jamia Millia has undergone a radical and desirable change and is placed on a better footing. And I am happy to be able to announce the subscription for this fund of Rs. 10,000 already paid up from a Hindu friend whose trust, I confess, is largely based on my own. I know no other way of promoting nationalism, toleration and friendliness except by trusting and hoping in spite of appearances to the contrary. It matters little that one may have been deceived before or may have built hope on a paper foundation. Hope to be worth anything must “spring eternal in the human breast”. Trust can have no limits. It must always give the benefit of the doubt. It is better to suffer a million disappointments than not to have trusted where mistrust was a mistake. A man who permits himself to be deceived is never the loser. Indeed he is the gainer in the end, not the so-called successful deceiver. A thousand deceits would leave me unrepentant. My personal experience is that in spite of some very hard knocks which I can recall at the time of writing, I have no cause to regret the trustful nature with which the world around me has credited me. It is my conviction that I and those whom I have involved in my trustfulness have lost nothing, if we cannot prove to have always gained. A man loses only when he loses his soul and that can never be lost through another man’s deceit.

1 Diehard

Young India, 22-11-1928

308. TELEGRAM TO G. D. BIRLA

AHMEDABAD,
November 22, 1928

GHANSHYAMDAS BIRLA
BIRLA PARK, CALCUTTA
LEAVING FOR WARDHA TOMORROW MORNING. EXPECT YOUR AND MALAVIYAJI’S REPLY NOW WARDHA. IN VIEW THIS CALAMITY¹ WOULD LIKE YOU HASTEN YOUR COMING WARDHA IF AT ALL POSSIBLE.

GANDHI

From the original: C.W. 7879. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

309. LETTER TO MRIDULA SARABHAI

November 22, 1928

Even it we put truth on one scale of the balance and all other qualities and something besides on the other, truth will have more weight. This is the verdict of experienced people and we should not doubt it at all.

MOHANDAS

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 11176. Courtesy: Sarabhai Foundation

310. LETTER TO MOOLCHAND AGRAWAL

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
Thursday [November 22, 1928]²

BHAJI MOOLCHANDJI,

Your letter. Your decision to have khadi as the hub and impart education through khadi is very much to my liking. If I get from you

¹ The passing away of Lajpat Rai
² Gandhiji left Sabarmati Ashram on November 23, 1928. Thursday fell on November 22.
any khadi news of public interest I shall certainly publish it in Navajivan.¹

Yours,

MOHANDAS GANDHI

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 754

311. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

November 23, 1928

BHAISHRI CHHAGANLAL,

Chi. Santok² cannot at present live according to the rule of
Rs. 12 which I have suggested, and so she has decided with Chi.
Radha³ and Chi. Rukhi⁴ to live permanently in Rajkot. She says that they will need Rs. 60 every month in Rajkot. Though I think this figure exorbitant, I do not wish to hurt her and have therefore agreed to let her have it. While thinking about the matter last night, I felt that the most straightforward course was to treat this sum as pension and pay it from the Ashram account.

I am hoping that Chi. Santok and the girls will be able to bring down this sum to a lower figure.

I hesitated to come to this decision and it has even pained me.
At the moment I console myself with the hope that one day they will sincerely accept the ideals of the Ashram and come and live in it.

This case should be treated as an exception. The reasons why I have come to this decision in regard to Chi. Santok are plain. We cannot, therefore, regard this case as a precedent to go by and make similar arrangements in future for other families. Others can get maintenance from the Ashram only if they live in it.

The sum in question should be paid from month to month till I decide otherwise. After my death, the Managing Committee may consult Jamnalalji and change the decision if it so wishes.

Chi. Santok will be staying in the Ashram for ten days more. If during this period she asks for anything else, please consult me. My understanding is that she cannot ask for anything beside what is agreed.

Send one copy of this to me and give one to Chi. Santok.

¹ A report sent by Moolchand Agrawal regarding the progress of khadi in Rajasthan was published in Young India, 29-8-1929, under the title “Self-spinning in Rajputana”. A similar report was later published in Hindi Navajivan too.
² Wife of Maganlal Gandhi
³ Daughters of Maganlal Gandhi
⁴ ibid
It will be enough if you pay the sum to Chi. Narandas every month.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro-7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshine, pp. 8-9

312. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

[November 23, 1928]

BHAISHRI CHHAGANLAL,

I have your letter. The money asked for by Chhaganlal and intended for the women may be sent out of Women’s Fund. Other help required for Orissa may be sent out of the Famine [Relief] Fund with Vallabhbhai and the small balance in the Orissa account lying in the Ashram.

Write to Vallabhbhai. It should be possible to meet Chhaganlal’s demand from the Fund with him, since the work which Chhaganlal is doing is all famine relief work. Shri Vithalbhai has written to me and told me that we can draw more from the money he has contributed to the Famine [Relief] Fund. If there is any difficulty in this, pay from our funds.

Pay from the Ashram funds, in addition to Rs. 12, expenses for four students. See Krishnamaiyadevi. Do not omit to do this through oversight.

I wrote to Shardabehn and told her to leave the Ashram in certain circumstances. The letter you have sent is not a reply to my letter. I should certainly be happy if she feels sincerely disinterested in worldly things.

I have been consuming five tolas of linseed oil. I shall be able to eat less from today since I have started mixing some almond oil with milk. I do not worry about the taste at all. Nor is it that the oil does not suit me. But I have not been able to gain weight with oil and rotli only, and so from today I have added almonds and fruit. If you require linseed oil, please write to me so that I may send fresh supply from time to time.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro-7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshine, pp. 9-10

1 As in the source
2 Widow of a Congress worker from Nepal to whom Gandhiji had given shelter in the Ashram along with her son and four daughters.
313. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

Friday [November 23, 1928]

Bhai Chhaganlal,

I forgot to write about one thing. Call in Dr. Talwalkar or Dr. Kanuga to examine Kashi. I am afraid she has got dysentery. If that is so, she will have to be given injections of ipecacuanha. Place this suggestion of mine before the doctor whom you call in.

Blessings from

Bapu

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshine, p. 10

314. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

Surat,
November 23, 1928

Bhaishri Chhaganlal Joshi,

Read the accompanying letter and hand it over to Parnerkar. After careful thought but with firm decision take whatever steps seem necessary in regard to Jethalal.

Gangadevi has asked for sewing work; give it to her. If nothing else, let her make caps of all sizes and covers of large pillows. I will sell them. If I cannot easily find customers for them, then let her make, if she knows how to, large handkerchiefs with borders, and as many as she can.

When Champabehn arrives there, get her to work with Gangadevi. I am sure you have arranged for someone to sleep near the women’s wing. Look after Harasukhrai and also give me news of him from time to time.

I trust you have made the required arrangements for Amina.

Blessings from

Bapu

---

1 As in the source
2 Wife of Chhaganlal Gandhi
3 Daughter of Abdul Kadir Bavazeer
[PS.]

Do everything with complete faith and the utmost courage. The burden of winning over Narandas lies on you. Do not think that it is a difficult task.

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshine, pp. 10-1

---

315. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA

Friday, November 23, 1928

CHI. GANGABEHN,

I felt unhappy when leaving you. You are bearing with great courage the burden which has fallen on you, but I see all the same that it has disturbed your equanimity a little. The Gita, however, teaches us that we should in no case lose our equanimity.

You may certainly take any quantity of milk that is necessary for your health. Do not feel that you are doing anything wrong in that.

I have left Kusum¹ there. Make her work. She works methodically. You will not at all find it difficult to mix with her freely. Keep writing to me.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-6: G. S. Gangabehnne, p. 15

---

316. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

November 23, 1928

CHI. KUSUM,

You should understand that I shall always be where my work calls me.

One should accept as they are the rules and conditions for membership of an organization or an institution. If we live as members of an organization, it becomes necessary for us to obtain the permission of others for doing a number of things. Freedom does not mean licence, nor does it mean being dependent on one individual only.

¹ Widow of Haribhai Desai who was Gandhiji’s secretary during the early days of Satyagraha Ashram

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI

Anyone who lives in a community should submit to its restrictions. This is what an institution means. Anything different from this means the rule of one person. I wish that you should reflect and understand the meaning of this, compose yourself and be devoted to your duty.

Take proper care of your health.
Cultivate friendship with everyone.
Give complete satisfaction to others in regard to Manu, by working in the Bal Mandir and, if you find it congenial to do so, in the kitchen.
Write to me regularly.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1853

317. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

Friday, November 23, 1928

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I can understand your misery. Physical separation will however always be there. Shake off anxiety and be firm and devoted to your duty.

Keep writing to me. Go to Dwarka only if you want to, otherwise don’t.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 3343

318. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

[After November 23, 1928]

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

Work as much as you wish to but don’t let it tell on your health. Never grieve over separation. We will always be confronted with the separation from loved ones. “What is unavoidable, thou shouldst not

1 From the reference to “separation” in this and the preceding letter regret.”1 If you don’t understand the meaning of this verse ask Chi. Purushottam. It is from the Gita.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 3325

319. MESSAGE TO KHADI WORKERS, AMALNER6
[After November 23, 1928]1

Gandhiji after asking a few questions about the details of their work and emphasizing the necessity of self-carding, said to them.

Our scriptures say that not to begin any enterprise is the first degree of wisdom but it is folly to give it up after having commenced it. Now that you have commenced your project after due deliberation I hope you will see it through.

Young India, 13-12-1928

320. DISCUSSION WITH SHANKARRAO DEV6
[After November 23, 1928]

I have no doubt about it, there are more actual spinners and more genuine khadi wearers in India today than there were in the “white cap” days of 1920-21, and as for organized khadi production it has grown by tenfold at least. But the thing is, we do not see the wood for the trees. Otherwise, where is there another organization in India which is functioning in nearly 2,000 villages as the A.I.S.A. is doing? It is a compact body, it has influence over the masses because it has established a living contact with them. But the khadi worker

1 Bhagavad Gita, II, 27; quoted in Sanskrit in the source.
2 From Pyarelal’s “Wardha Letter” which explained the work of the Samarth Udyoga Mandir, Mukti (W. Khandesh), thus: “They are trying to organize khadi production on what is known as the ‘integrated system’. The underlying idea is to develop the internal economics of hand-spinning and hand-weaving by assembling as many processes of cloth manufacture as possible under the same roof to be performed as far as possible by the same family. The system has been tried with great success at Bijolia and would mark a new era in the development of khadi organization if it could be successfully introduced elsewhere too.”
3 Gandhiji left Sabarmati on November 23, 1928, and reached Wardha on November 24.
4 From Pyarelal’s “Wardha Letter”; Shankarrao Dev travelled with Gandhiji as far as Jalgaon and the discussion turned on the theme “Is khadi really making headway?”
must bide his time. His faith is on trial today. He must refuse to be diverted from his purpose by exciting politics. I have no doubt that the country will remember this perennial source of strength at no distant date. See how one leader after another turns to it for consolation in the darkness of despair. Deshbandhu Das remembered it and declared his faith in it a week before his death, and when a damp fell around the path of Lalaji he too turned to it for strength. You know how he told Mahadev at Simla that he had become a complete convert to khadi and was learning how to spin? I have no doubt that in its hour of darkness it will be khadi alone that will come to the nation’s rescue.

Young India, 13-12-1928

321. REPLY TO MARWARI DEPUTATION, WARDHA

[After November 24, 1928]

Gandhiji: Is your objection religious and fundamental or is it on the score of social tradition?

We are no learned pundits, our objection is based on the latter ground.

In that case you should bear with Shethji. If you objected to Shethji’s dining with such ‘untouchables’ as were addicted to drink or led unclean lives I could understand you, but for lack of moral courage to hold that food is polluted by the mere touch of one born in a so-called untouchable family, though otherwise he may be a pure and righteous man, is a negation of religion. I admit that social tradition should be respected when it is meant for the protection of society even though personally one may not feel any need for following it, but to respect a tradition even when it becomes tyrannous spells not life but death and it should be discarded.

Jamnalalji has chosen a wider field of service. He cannot exclusively identify himself with any particular community. The world is his family and he can serve his community only through the service of humanity. So let Jamnalalji go his way. One can overcome opposition only by love, untruth by truth, not by compromising truth. See the state of society we are living in, it is full of falsehood,

---

1 From Pyarelal’s “Wardha Letter” under the sub-title “At Grips with Orthodoxy”, which explained that Jamnalal Bajaj had caused a flutter in the orthodox Marwari community by throwing open the Lakshminarayan temple at Wardha to the so-called untouchables for which he was excommunicated by the diehard section of his community. The excommunication had left him altogether unrepentant and he had gone a step further by partaking food cooked by the so-called untouchable boys recently at Rewari. It was to understand Gandhiji’s views that a deputation of Agrawal Marwaris waited upon him.
hypocrisy, hatred. Our panchas should be the Gangotri\textsuperscript{1} of our society. But today they have become corrupt. What would be left of the sacredness of the Ganges if its stream were polluted at the very source? Let us therefore try to purify our panchas, by doing penance, by suffering for right’s sake. That is what Jamnalalji is doing. You should give him your blessings even if you cannot follow him. For, a day will come when not only you but even the orthodox section will recognize that by his action Jamnalalji rendered the truest service to Hinduism and the future generation will thank him for it.\textsuperscript{2}

Young India, 13-12-1928

322. INFLUENCE OF MUSIC\textsuperscript{3}

A student of the Gujarat Vidyapith asks:

What has been the influence of music on your life?

Music has given me peace. I can remember occasions when music instantly tranquilized my mind when I was greatly agitated over something. Music has helped me to overcome anger. I can recall occasions when a hymn sank deep into me though the same thing expressed in prose had failed to touch me. I also found that the meaning of hymns discordantly sung has failed to come home to me and that it burns itself on my mind when they have been properly sung. When I hear Gita verses melodiously recited I never grow weary of hearing and the more I hear the deeper sinks the meaning into my heart. Melodious recitations of the Ramayana which I heard in my childhood left on me an impression which years have not obliterated or weakened. I distinctly remember how when once the hymn “The path of the Lord is meant for the brave, not the coward” was sung to me in an extraordinarily sweet tune, it moved me as it had never before. In 1907 while in the Transvaal I was almost fatally assaulted, the pain of the wounds was relieved when at my instance Olive Doke gently sang to me “Lead Kindly Light”.

Let no one infer from this that I know music. On the contrary it would be more correct to say that my knowledge of music is very elementary. I cannot critically judge music. All I can claim is that I have a natural ear for good homely music.

I do not mean to suggest either that because the influence of music has been uniformly good on me it must act similarly on others.

\textsuperscript{1} Source of the Ganga in the Himalayas

\textsuperscript{2} Also published in Navajivan, 16-12-1928

\textsuperscript{3} The Gujarati original of this appeared in Navajivan, 25-11-1928. This is a translation by Pyarelal.
On the contrary I know that many people employ music to feed their carnal passions. To sum up, therefore, we may say that the influence of music will differ according to temperaments. As Tulsidas has sung:

The Lord of Creation created everything in this world as an admixture of good and evil. But a good man selects the good and rejects the evil even as the fabled swan is said to help himself to cream leaving the water in the milk.

Young India, 10-1-1929

323. MY NOTES

PLAN FOR CATTLE DEVELOPMENT

An experienced gosevak\(^1\) from Kathiawar writes:\(^2\)

This scheme is good and deserves to be put into practice. However, if indeed I had the capacity for inspiring people which this correspondent imagines that I have, I would convert all the States of Kathiawar into places for serving the cow ideally. But, like the people, the States too do not like the constructive work very much. Moreover, such tasks could be easily accomplished if the States were not eager to accumulate wealth, if they opposed cruel customs and cultivated public opinion. Students should be given such problems to study in national schools. Such problems will be solved with less difficulty when the educated classes come into contact with villages.

A CRUEL CUSTOM

A gentleman from Visavadar writes:\(^3\)

I must admit my ignorance of the practice mentioned in this letter. It is clear that this practice should be ended wherever it is prevalent. Our superstitions have been added to our ignorance of cattle-rearing and hence our task has become doubly difficult. There are wise men in every village. They do not have the leisure to examine minutely the question of how the people can be made happy. They know that the task of increasing the cattle wealth is not one which brings in huge profits but one which at the outset entails a large

---

\(^1\) Worker for cow-protection

\(^2\) The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had suggested a scheme for preservation of milch cattle including cows and buffaloes, and wanted Gandhiji to persuade one or two States to take up this work of scientific cattle-rearing and set an example for others to follow.

\(^3\) The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had referred to the custom of a weak male calf being branded and driven away.
expenditure. Hence who can create an interest in it? Nevertheless, the above-mentioned scheme deserves consideration at the hands both of the ruler and the ruled. Hence after keeping it in my files for many months, I venture to publish it in the columns of Navajivan today.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 25-11-1928

324. TELEGRAM TO DR. M. A. ANSARI

Express                    SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, WARDHA,

DR. ANSARI

PALACE, BHOPAL

PROPOSE ISSUING LALAJI MEMORIAL APPEAL
OVER YOUR SIGNATURE MALAVIYAJI’S AND GHANSHYAM
DAS BIRLA’S AS SECRETARY TREASURER. APPEAL WILL BE FOR FUNDS TO BE DEVOTED TO ADVANCEMENT LALAJI’S POLITICAL WORK. YOU
THREE WILL CONSTITUTE TRUSTEES WITH AUTHORITY
DETERMINE EXACT USE FUNDS. PRAY WIRE WARDHA.
AUTHORITY ATTACH YOUR SIGNATURE APPEAL.

GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 13339

325. TELEGRAM TO MIRABEHN

WARDHAGANJ,

MIRABAI

KHADI BHANDAR, MUZAFFARPUR

YOUR LETTERS. YOU MAY COME. LOVE.

BAPU

From the original: G.N. 8216; also C.W. 5326. Courtesy: Mirabehn

---

1 Vide “Appeal for Lajpat Rai Memorial Fund”, 26-11-1928.
326. TELEGRAM TO DR. B. C. ROY.

[November 26, 1928]

DR. BIDHAN
36 [WELLINGTON STREET]
CALCUTTA

MOTILALJI WROTE LAST WEEK YOU HAD DECIDED ACCEPT MY VIEW ABOUT EXHIBITION. HEARD NOTHING FROM YOU. WIRE REPLY.² WARDHA.

GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 13319

327. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

WARDHA,
November 26, 1928

BHAISHRI CHHAGANLAL,

I experienced no difficulty at all in the third class. There was no crowding in the trains during any part of the journey. All of us could sleep for the whole night. Other passengers vacated their seats for us. Since, however, the compartment was never crowded, they suffered no inconvenience because of us. I was extremely happy. In first and second classes I always feel like one imprisoned, besides feeling guilty. I felt happy within and at least thirty rupees were saved for the poor.

As it was my wish that this time I would join in all the Ashram activities here, I had all the three meals of the day in the company of the other Ashram inmates and ate the food served to me, which was the same as what they had. Here after the midday meal everyone helps in cleaning the grains. I too joined in this work. Ghanshyamdas Birla has come here and he too joined. Wonderful peace prevails here at mealtime and when people are working.

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshine, pp. 11-2

² The reply dated November 28, 1928 read: “Your wire. Reception Committee meeting tonight. Hope that after mill textiles are banned you and A.I.S.A. will take part in Exhibition. Kindly wire your ideas.”
328. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

WARDHA,
Silence Day, November 26, 1928

DEAR SISTERS,

We reached Jalgaon an hour late. Consequently we missed the connecting train and reached Wardha late.

I may at once draw your attention to one thing I see here. I am, of course, dining in the Ashram kitchen here. By now I have had three meals; there was an utter absence of all noise. It was perfectly quiet and I thought at that time of the loud din in our Ashram kitchen. There was no noise here of clattering vessels or of people talking. Of course, in our Ashram we have children, while here there are none. That does make some difference, and yet you can teach children not to make noise and you yourselves can withstand the temptation of talking. That we cannot put a stop to the noise in our kitchen is one of our great failings.

I keenly feel the separation from you, because much remains to be done for getting more work from you. You should complete what remains unfinished.

Of course you understand your duties. The kitchen, Bal Mandir (kindergarten) and prayers are even now going on; if you undertake any other responsibility besides these, never give it up out of a sense of failure. To become fit for it the most necessary condition of all is this:

Whatever work you once undertake, carry it out fully, never give up what you have offered to do. If you have to be absent, then make some arrangement for your work; and if no arrangement can be made, do not leave it and go.

Keep ever cheerful; be calm; and make it a point to carry on your share of all the activities of the Ashram equally with men, and as well as men. This is not at all beyond your capacity. You need only desire it, and strive for it.

Blessings from

BAPU

Letters to Ashram Sisters, pp. 61-2
329. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

Silence Day [November 26, 1928]

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

Do you expect a letter from me by every post? What a girl! Well, I shall try to write.

All the news about me is in the letter to Ashram women and to the [Udyoga] Mandir. So, I will not write more today.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 3324

330. APPEAL FOR LAJPAT RAI MEMORIAL FUND

November 26, 1928

The following appeal has been issued over the signatures of the President of the Congress, Dr. Ansari, Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviyaji and Sheth Ghanshyamdas Birla:

APPEAL FOR FIVE LAKHS

TO THE CITIZENS OF INDIA

It is but meet that there should be a national memorial to the revered memory of a patriot so brave, so great and so self-sacrificing as Lala Lajpat Rai. We the undersigned have therefore taken it upon ourselves to make an appeal to the generous public for funds, which we hope will meet with universal response. If we expect large donations from the rich, we know that Lalaji’s spirit would find the greatest solace from the coppers of the poor. We propose to announce later the exact manner in which the funds will be used, but we constitute ourselves as trustees for the funds with power to associate others with us in their administration. We may, however, generally state that we shall use them for the advancement of Lalaji’s many political activities to which he so nobly gave the best part of his life. We shall naturally bear in mind his great creation and the instrument of his operations—the Servants of the People Society.

We have fixed the sum of Rs. 5,00,000 (five lakhs) as the mini-

1 Vide the preceding two items (Ashram was being called Udyoga Mandir).

2 The appeal was drafted by Gandhiji and carried corrections in his handwriting; vide also “Telegram to Dr. M. A. Ansari”, 25-11-1928. The appeal was published in Young India, 29-11-1928.
mum that a grateful country should give to Lalaji’s memory. Regard being had to the bad times through which we are passing, we have chosen the lowest sum consistently with Lalaji’s all-India greatness and the cause to which the monies are to be devoted.

Subscriptions should be sent to Sjt. Ghanshyamdas Birla, 8 Royal Exchange Place, Calcutta, who has kindly consented to act as Secretary and Treasurer for the Fund.

M. A. ANSARI
MADAN MOHAN MALAVIYA
GHANSHYAMDAS BIRLA
26th November, 1928

I have seen also the appeal issued by the President of the Congress fixing the 29th instant for observing in memory of the deceased patriot. I heartily endorse both these appeals, and I trust that meetings will be held throughout the country at which subscriptions will be collected in aid of the proposed memorial. Indeed it would be a striking demonstration if a fixed determination was made by all the public workers to finish on the memorial day the collection of five lacs which the distinguished signatories have asked for as the minimum.

I know that the time left for organizing such an effort is short; but where there is one will and one purpose no time is too short. Let the public recall the palmy days of 1920-21 when not five lacs but even 10 lacs were collected in one single day. After all the crore was collected practically in one month. If trusted volunteers will set apart the 29th for this one single item and go out collecting, there should be no difficulty in making up the amount.

Let the collectors remember that they have all to make their return immediately to Sheth Ghanshyamdas Birla at the address given in the appeal. If the collectors will send me the names intimating that they have sent the collections to Sjt. Birla, I shall see that the names are duly acknowledged in Young India. They are free to send the collections to Young India office from which they will be forwarded to the treasurer. If however the task of collecting the full sum in one single day is considered in our present disorganized state to be beyond our capacity let the collection committee prolong the period for collecting their quota.

In the absence of any other rule, I suggest each district or taluk fixing its own quota according to its own population. That is the least that can be done. The fairest way is for each district, taluk or circle to fix its own quota, in no case less than the minimum on the basis of population and to fix its own period within which to finish that collection. I suggest also a resolution at each meeting to do some constructive work in terms of swaraj for which the local workers may be best fitted, provided that there is a determination to carry out that resolution. The memory of the deceased patriot will not suffer if no such resolution is passed, but it will suffer so long as the memory is a trust in our charge if after having passed resolutions we forget all about them.

M. K. GANDHI

From photostats: S.N. 13340 and 13341; also The Bombay Chronicle, 28-11-1928

331. LETTER TO DWARKADAS

WARDHA,
November 26, 1928

DEAR DWARKADAS,

I have your letter. I think it is difficult to give any advice without meeting the lady. For the present I can only say that she should be patient and, giving up the idea of dying after her husband, she must dwell on his virtues.

BOMBAY

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/27

332. LETTER TO MADHAVJI

WARDHA,
November 26, 1928

BHAISHRI MADHAVJI,

From your age I guess that you are married. If so, you should avoid sex with your wife for some time. If you have any other weakness, you should give up that also. Your asthma will certainly be cured.

Another fast will certainly benefit you. Drop the evening meal. Do not take any salt at all for the present. In fruit do not eat anything sour. Tomatoes are not necessary. Try to live on mosambi, sweet grapes and milk. Take boiled fruit in case of constipation.

Brown bread is more easily digested than our chapatis. Butter is lighter than ghee and probably contains more vitamins. For two or three months you should live in a place with a dry climate. Marwar, Cutch or Kathiawar would be good, except for the ports.
If you do not know pranayam learn it. Do it every day on empty stomach. Have Kuhne’s bath also every day on an empty stomach. You should take sun-bath in the morning before nine o’clock. Sun-bath has to be had without any clothes on. You can cover the head if you feel the heat. I do not think Calcutta is good at all for sun-bath.

You must go for a walk every clay. On rising in the morning drink a glass of warm water immediately after brushing your teeth.

Avoid sugar. You may take honey with water.

One can live only on fresh fruit if confined to bed. But if one wants to be active, it will be sufficient to take a little milk along with fruit.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary: S.N. 32577/27

333. LETTER TO GURUPRASAD

WARDHA,
November 26, 1928

DEAR GURUPRASAD,

You should not leave either home or your wife. You should continue to live there and sleep in a separate room. You should make some arrangement to educate your wife. I feel after reading your letter that you will not be able to save yourself by running away. You have got to solve the problem remaining where you are. You will succeed if you try. But even if you do not succeed, you need not at all lose heart. Tell yourself that that is the way of the World. It will be enough if you do not give up trying.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S. N. 32577/25

334. OUR DUTY

November 27, 1928

I hope there will be a prompt and whole-hearted response to the appeal which the Congress President, Dr. Ansari, Bharat Bhushan Pandit Malaviya and Sheth Ghanshyamdas Birla have made to the people in regard to the Lalaji Memorial. There is an English proverb to the effect that he who gives quickly gives double. There is a similar saying among us: “Prompt charity brings greater spiritual merit.” Both these sayings are the result of the experience of wise men of different countries. We have forgotten that saying. Today it is said about us that we always wake up late, that is to say, instead of giving donations or taking action at the right time, we allow time to pass and then become impatient and bewildered and somehow get through charity or work. As a result, this does no credit to us and its value is reduced by half. I hope that this will not happen with regard to this memorial. For a memorial that is to be raised to a popular leader like Lalaji, funds ought to come forth for the asking.

1 Vide also “Lalaji Memorial”, 29-11-1928.

I trust no one will question why there are only three signatories to the appeal. There was difficulty in finding more names and there was a fear that, if time elapsed, the 29th would pass by; moreover, procrastination in such matters is dangerous.

In fact, if the magic is not there in Lalaji’s name, the power of three, or even thirty, signatures cannot attract funds. Even great men can get money only for a good cause.

Hence, donors have merely to assure themselves about the safety of their money and its good deployment. From this point of view, nothing could possibly be said against these three persons. Moreover, every donor must rest assured that where a man like Ghanshyamdas Birla is treasurer and secretary, the accounts will be properly kept.

Having thus known the amount needed for the memorial and its guardians, the duty of every patriot and everyone desiring swaraj is clear. Everyone should contribute his share to the Fund according to his capacity. It is my request that the whole sum should be subscribed by the 29th. I am writing this article on the 27th. Though I have said that the entire sum should be subscribed by the 29th, I do not entertain great hopes about it. Hence I write this article assuming that the whole sum has not been collected by the time the reader has this article in his hands and, if my fears prove true, those who have not given their share or who have not got their neighbours to subscribe, should get that money in time and forward it to the treasurer. If anyone wants to subscribe through Navajivan, he can do so. His contribution will be acknowledged in Navajivan and it will be forwarded to the treasurer.

I hope that every man and woman will contribute his or her share to this Fund. The number of students attending schools and colleges alone is 27,00,000. If all of them donate half the amount of their monthly pocket-money and make a sacrifice of their enjoyments to that extent, they can contribute a huge sum without any effort. It will be more creditable if 5,00,000 men, women, labourers, Antyajas and students together donate Rs. 5 lakhs than if five or ten rich men give that amount. It is evident that our strength to win swaraj will grow in proportion to the increase in our capacity to collect big amounts by virtue of the numerical strength of those able to pay only small sums. One need hardly say that the value of Rs. 5 lakhs received from 5 lakhs of men and women is very much greater than the same sum received from a few wealthy persons. Thus we serve two purposes in collecting funds by taking a little from many people. Hence I hope that, keeping this in mind, every volunteer will collect as much as possible from his friends and relatives.

I also hope that our Antyaja brethren will not forget this work. Even if they donate copper coins, they will bring credit to the memorial and to themselves. Lalaji commenced his life with service of the Antyajas and, till the end, he got his followers to do this work. I hope our Antyaja brethren will not forget this fact.

I hope no one will waste his time in commenting that if the memorial had some other object in view it would have looked better or brought in more funds. In this world nothing done by man is perfect, and there is always room left for criticism. But it will be considered improper to waste time criticizing a good work that has been commenced, or not to assist it because the memorial does not fall in line with one’s ideas. It is the dharma of all those who hold that there should be an all-India memorial to Lalaji and that those who have visualized it and ask for contributions towards it are worthy men, to contribute to the best of their ability and make others do so and only afterwards engage themselves in other national activities.

[From Gujarati]

\textit{Navajivan, 2-12-1928}

\textbf{335. TELEGRAM TO S. SRINIVASA IYENGAR\textsuperscript{1}}

\textbf{SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, WARDHA,
November 27, 1928}

\textbf{APPEAL FOR LALAJI MEMORIAL ISSUED\textsuperscript{2} SIGNED BY ANSARI, MALAVIYAJI, BIRLA. PLEASE ORGANIZE COLLECTIONS TWENTYNINTH.}

GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 13343

\textsuperscript{1} Identical telegrams were sent also to Jawaharlal Nehru, Rajendra Prasad and Jairamdas Daulatram.

\textsuperscript{2} \textit{Vide} “Appeal for Lajpat Rai Memorial Fund”, 26-11-1928.
DEAR LALA KISHANCHAND,

Sjt. Banker has sent me a copy of your letter about fixing a Lajpat Rai week for khadi hawking and collections. Nothing would please me better than to do this. But I have not the slightest desire to exploit the great name of Lalaji for khadi or anything else. I can therefore only fix the week if all the members of the Servants of the People Society sincerely desire and feel as Lalaji felt during the recent months that khadi should be the centre of all constructive work in terms of millions. I therefore had not even dreamt about doing anything in the name of Lalaji. But now that you have mentioned it and Dr. Gopichand approves of your suggestion, I discussed it somewhat with Lala Jagannath. You may show this letter to the other members of the Society and if they all sincerely desire the fixing of a week for khadi propaganda and if they will make khadi the central activity in future, I will gladly fix the week. If they have no such faith, I am sure it will be wrong to adopt your proposal. Let khadi wait for the psychological moment which must arrive some day, if even some of those who are now in charge of khadi organizations in various parts of the country have a living faith in khadi are sincere and are devoting all their spare energy to its success.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

LALA KISHANCHAND BHATIA
A. I. S. A., PUNJAB BRANCH
ADAMPUR DOABA (JULLUNDUR)

From a photostat: S.N. 13344

---

1 Dated November 21, 1928
2 A copy of this was forwarded to the Secretary, A.I.S.A., Ahmedabad, for information with reference to his letter No. 748 of November 24, 1928.
337. LETTER TO ACHYUTANANDA PUROHIT

Satyagraha Ashram, Wardha,
November 27, 1928

Dear Friend,

I have your letter. I do propose to come to Sambalpur on my way to Calcutta. I hope that you will organize a good khadi demonstration and a good collection for the All-India Spinners’ Association.

I am unable just now to fix the exact date, but it will be somewhere near the 20th December and I shall try to give you two days—the day on which I reach there and the next day.

I remember your telling me how I can reach there, but I shall thank you to let me have the timings again.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. Achyutananda Purohit, Pleader
Sambalpur

From a microfilm: S.N. 13735

---

1 The addressee had requested Gandhiji to visit Sambalpur as it had been left out during the Utkal tour in December 1927.
338. LETTER TO NIRANJAN PATNAIK

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, WARDHA,
November 27, 1928

DEAR NIRANJAN BABU,

I saw your letter to Mahadev. Mahadev is not with me as he had to be in Bardoli with reference to the Bardoli Inquiry. There is no change in my eating periods. Food also almost remains the same. I have cut down the quantity of milk, but no elaborate precautions should be taken to ensure the quantity of goat’s milk or fruit. The less expense undergone about personal comfort the better pleased I shall be. Every anna spent on such things is an anna lost to the poor. Let the Sambalpur Committee also know this working of my mind.

I have discovered that the letter I thought I had sent, after all never went to you. I am now trying to have it translated and forwarded to you.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm: S.N. 13736

339. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, WARDHA,
November 27, 1928

DEAR SATIS BABU,

I have your two letters. I note what you say about Baidyanathji.

Rajendra Babu did send a reply to the Chronicle about Anil Babu’s writings. They may not have any effect on your side, but in Bombay they might have some effect, especially as the Chronicle gave his contribution a place of honour. But I quite agree with you that generally all these superfluous writings betraying hostility may be safely ignored.

With me confusion is getting worse confounded with regard to the Exhibition. Motilalji writes to me that the Committee has accepted my view of what an Exhibition should be. But I have heard nothing from Dr. Bidhan. I therefore telegraphed to him yesterday¹ and I am now waiting for his reply. The cutting you sent me is certainly bad.

¹ Vide “Telegram to Dr. B. C. Roy”, 26-11-1928.
I am sorry about Krishnadas. Tell him he must be well and strong. When I come to Calcutta I want to see him in good health.

The progress you have made in the common kitchen is quite encouraging.

We have now installed our own bakery in the Ashram. You will remember I talked to you about it. The bread turned out is extremely good and has proved popular and saved much time, labour and fuel. Making chapatis occupied the best part of the time of the workers in the kitchen. Chapatis still remain, but bread has supplemented them with many. All eat bread only for breakfast and the evening meal. For the mid-day meal many still take chapatis.

I hope Hemprabhadevi is keeping well and cheerful. Tarini must really build up his shattered body.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 1599

340. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

November 27, 1928

CHI. KUSUM,

I have both your letters. I was indeed afraid that you would get fever. See that you do not get it again. It would help if you take chiretta or Sudarshan powder regularly; or else you may take quinine from time to time and also Kuhne baths. Ba told me today that, after you had recovered, you used to eat cashew nuts. If this is true, it would make me unhappy. I expect you to control your palate. You will be a good girl if you give up the habit of eating things every now and then.

You thought it strange that you had to obtain permission from two or three persons. The Secretary’s permission should of course be obtained. But it is also necessary to obtain the permission of the head of the department in which you are working. In a big institution, the Secretary cannot take upon himself the responsibility of granting leave to everyone. The application for leave should be made to him through the head of the department concerned. Anyone who understands his or her responsibility towards the institution will apply for leave only if circumstances are convenient. I did not say all this to you to put you off. I thought you had immediately grasped my point. I am pained to know that you had not, and that you still think that I was putting you off. Now that I tell you that I was not trying to put you off, you will feel surprised and think the procedure rather strange.

Anyone who wants to do all work in love has no choice but to reduce himself or herself to zero. How often have I explained this to you? Love is the utmost depth of humility. Today I stop this discussion here.

Ba is worrying about Manu. Who will help her now to wash and dress her hair and to wash her clothes? She goes on asking these and no end of similar questions. I have told her that I am sure you are looking after these things either by yourself or with somebody’s help.

Sarojini Devi must be doing her share of work. Does she remain cheerful?

A handkerchief of mine is left behind there. Prabhavati probably knows where it is. Inquire about it. If you get hold of it, keep it somewhere carefully.

I will not like it if you let your health suffer.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1854

341. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

November 27, 1928

BHAISHRI CHHAGANLAL,

I got both your letters. Chi. Santok cannot be given any money for the grain she is returning. That grain and whatever else she has in her possession is the property of the Ashram. Explain this patiently to Chi. Rukhi, etc., or ask Narandas to do that. If truth is combined with love, your decision will always be correct. But do not fail in your duty out of fear of committing mistakes.

The persons who had been working with Narandas are leaving him one by one. Put others in their place, if necessary. It is essential that you two should work in complete harmony. How this can be brought about is for you to consider.

Gangabehn never told me what you write to me concerning . . . behn'. I am shocked by what you write. Despite that, however, we should continue to serve her in a disinterested spirit. If Shripatrao stays on, it would be very good indeed. I intend to write about milk

1 The names are omitted in the source.
tomorrow. I am trying today to secure ghee. So far nothing has been fixed.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro-7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshine, pp. 12-3

342. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

Tuesday [November 27, 1928]

BHAISHRI CHHAGANLAL,

I don’t have time today to write at length. I was very much pained to read about the affair concerning... ² My pain is all superficial, so it has not disturbed me in my work. All the same, the thing fills me with anguish. I have written a letter to him. Probably he will show it to you.

More in the next letter.

You should not lose courage. Acquit yourself well in the post you have accepted. May God help you.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro-7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshine, pp. 64-5

343. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

November 27, 1928

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I have both your letters. Do go to Dwarka if you wish to. Do not at all take to heart my absence. Some day this body is bound to leave for ever. Why be distressed over separation from it? We should find happiness in devotion to a cause for which our passing away would have a meaning.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 3341

¹ Vide the preceding item.
² ibid
DEAR DR. BIDHAN,

I have your telegram.\(^1\) I sent the following reply:

“One wire. Having read Exhibition advertisement see great conflict our ideals. Would therefore urge you go your way leaving me alone.—Gandhi”

Before your telegram was received, early in the morning today I dictated a letter to Pandit Motilalji from which I extract the enclosed apposite paragraph.

There remains very little for me to add to it. I have seen the advertisement sheet about which I would like to say one word. It contains no restrictions as to exhibits. It offers among other items a riotous worship of goddess Vani. The Exhibition authorities are said to have approached all local Governments for exhibits. Apart from this indiscriminate permission for all and sundry exhibits, I am unable to endorse the approach to local Governments one of which only the other day dealt shamelessly by one of the bravest sons of India and which had the temerity to bolster up the unprovoked assault. Nor am I in a mood to go in for enchanting music and riotous displays. But I have no business to interfere with your programme. You are the best judges of what is good for the nation from your own standpoint. Only I should find myself absolutely lonely in that Exhibition. There is a clear clash of ideals. I do not expect through correspondence to convert you nor will you expect to convert me. It is surely better therefore to leave me out of account. I would not on any account have you to deflect yourself from your course, simply for the sake of pleasing me.

Yours sincerely,

DR. BIDHAN ROY
36 WELLINGTON STREET, CALCUTTA

From a photostat: S.N. 13303

---

\(^1\) Vide footnote 2 to “Telegram to Dr. B. C. Roy”, 26-11-1928.
DEAR MOTILALJI,

I have your letter of the 15th instant. I waited all these days for a confirmation from Dr. Bidhan Roy or Subhas, but I have none up to the time of dictating, that is, 28th morning. I wired on Monday to Dr. Bidhan. There is no reply. Meanwhile I have seen a cutting which I send you herewith. They are evidently inviting local Governments’ co-operation. Evidently now all distinction has vanished and the Exhibition will be a more spectacular display than an instructive effort designed to educate the poor cultivator and the other public. There is a gratuitous mention there of khadi. But there is no room in this Exhibition for me or khadi in the real sense. Evidently it will not exclude either foreign cloth or foreign anything. I cannot say I am not grieved over this, but I do not want you to carry the matter any further. I write this letter merely for your information. I do not seek your intervention for a mechanical change of opinion or for a mechanical respect for my wishes. I must cut my way through these grievous difficulties with patient toil. After all Dr. Bidhan and Subhas represent a definite school of thought. Their opinion is entitled to my respect as I expect theirs for my own. That which is in the interest of the people will prevail in the long run. Who can decide beforehand which is the correct opinion in terms of the multitude?

I see you are having no end of difficulties with Mussalman friends regarding your report. But I see you are unravelling the tangle with consummate patience and tact. May your great effort be crowned with full success.

From your note I gather that the Convention will meet not on the 22nd December but on the 26th, 27th and 28th, the dates on which the Muslim League is to meet. Or, am I to understand that the Convention will formally meet on the 22nd and continue its session till the 28th? I do not see the slip referred to in the note. Hence the little confusion in my mind. Surely, you do not want me to be in Calcutta all these days.

From our conversation at Sabarmati I had understood that you would want me for the Congress and not the Convention. For myself I do not know what possible service I can render at the Convention. There is utter confusion in my mind created by the kaleidoscopic scenes going on before one in the country. All I can say is that I do not envy your position. But I know you are as much at home with such things as I am with the charkha. And if you will agree to the arrangement, I should be content to remain at the wheel and leave you to the joys of meandering through the intricate paths of diplomacy. But my fate is in your hands until you give your decision. Meanwhile I drink in the peace and the silence that Jamnalalji has provided for me in Wardha.

You will have seen the appeal about Lalaji Memorial. After much telegraphing to the Punjab friends, I decided that there should be no more signatures to the Memorial than the three that have appeared. It would have taken a long time to have got the consent of all the men who were mentioned as signatories. They insisted upon at least your and my name appearing together with the three. But I vetoed the proposal anticipating your approval of the veto. You will however please do whatever you can for the Fund, due regard being had to your taxing appointments.

I see that you have to begin with the first letter of the alphabet about Kamala’s treatment. I am glad, however, that she will be in Dr. Bidhan’s capable hands, and he will have Sir Nilratan at his beck and call in case of emergency.

Yours sincerely,

ENCL. 1
PANDIT MOTILAL NEHRU
ANAND BHAWAN, ALLAHABAD
PS.

Since dictating this I got Dr. Bidhan’s wire to which I have sent the enclosed letter¹.

From a photostat: S.N. 13302

¹ Vide the preceding item.
MY DEAR SRINIVASAN,

I have your letter. I do not propose to deal with it in the pages of Young India for I am sure no one else is likely to draw the deduction that you and your sister seem to have drawn from my writings. The whole of the case for a humanitarian ending of a creature’s life is based upon the assumption that whether belonging to the human species or a lower order if they had consciousness such a creature would not wish to live as I had assumed the calf would not in the circumstances in which it was placed and that there was no other service possible. In your sister’s case you and many others are at her beck and call and you all consider it, and that rightly, a privilege to render what service you can and relieve her pain be it ever so little. Her momentary wish to have her life put an end to was purely philanthropic out of regard for the convenience of her nurses. She was wrong in her reasoning. What she considered was an inconvenience to her nurses was a privilege, or should be, in the latter’s estimation. And if she desired death, the nurses could not comply with her desire, for that compliance would be tantamount to shirking of an obvious duty.

The question of karma does not arise at all in either case. This has been repeatedly explained in the pages of Young India. If we were to bring in the law of karma in such matters, we would put an end to all effort. The working of the law of karma is an incessant, ever-going process; whereas you and your sister evidently assumed that certain actions were set in motion and that the motion in that straight direction continued uninterrupted without the operation of any further actions coming into play. The fact indeed is that every activity in nature is constantly interfering with the law of karma. Such

1 In reply to his letter dated November 21, 1928, which read: “My sister aged 20 who is suffering from paralytic attack has had all kinds of treatment from various medical experts. No doctor has yet given hope of recovery. . . . She happened to be near me when I was reading your article on the killing of the Ashram calf. She said in an appealing tone, ‘Will you allow me to end my life? . . . ’ She paused for a while, and after some reconsideration said, ‘Oh, how can I escape from my karma? I cannot avoid it; I can only postpone it by death. I suppose, then, Gandhiji is not right in killing the calf.’ . . . May I request you to consider the matter in Young India as I believe that many others may share the same opinion” (S.N. 13729).

2 Permanent address
interference is inherent in the law. For the law is not a dead, rigid, inert thing, but it is an ever-living, ever-growing mighty force.

Yours sincerely

SJT. T. K. SRINIVASAN
Sakti Nilayam, Palaiyur, Via Muthupet

From a photostat: S.N. 13307

347. LETTER TO GIRDHARILAL

Satyagraha Ashram, Wardha,
November 28, 1928

DEAR LALA GIRDHARILAL,

I had your long telegram and now I have your long letter redirected to me from Sabarmati. It is for that reason perhaps that I miss The Tribune cutting which I have not yet seen. Lala Jagannath tells me he sent no telegram to The Tribune or any other paper. Without knowing the contents of the cutting it is difficult for me to say anything more.

About the memorial you will have seen the appeal¹ signed by Dr. Ansari, Pandit Malaviyaji and Sheth Ghanshyamdas Birla. I do not think that it is possible to support the Congress out of these funds. Nor should any appeal in the name of a great person be made on behalf of Provincial Congress. Each organization must really stand on its own merits and command the confidence of monied men in its own province. Anyway that is my firm conviction. I do not know what view the signatories will take of your proposal. It comes upon me as a surprise. The only way in which, in my opinion, these funds should be utilized is first to put Lalaji’s own creation—the Society—on a firm footing and support such political activities of his, which have an all-India character. There may be other provincial or sectional memorials, but even these can’t include the support of a growing and varied organization like a Provincial Congress Committee.

Yours sincerely,

LALA GIRDHARILAL
Diwan Bhawan, Delhi

From a photostat: S.N. 13345

¹ Vide “Appeal for Lajpat Rai Memorial Fund”, 26-11-1928.
348. LETTER TO DR. SATYAPAL

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, WARDHA,
November 28, 1928

DEAR DR. SATYAPAL,

I had your wire as also your letter. I have not been writing to you as I had no time. You will see from Young India\(^1\) that I have noticed your telegram and made suitable comments upon it. Your telegram is excellent if it fulfils the condition I have laid down in my note in Young India. My caution was necessary because, if my recollection serves me right, in the communication that I had from you some months ago during Lalaji’s lifetime, you had represented yourself as the injured party. If you still have that sense of injury, your telegram is meaningless. What we want at this critical period in our history is not a mechanical unity, that is a superfluous thing, but a heart unity which can’t break under any strain. No other unity, no patched up truce, will answer our purpose when a supreme heroic effort is necessary.

Yours sincerely,

DR. SATYAPAL
42 NISBET ROAD, LAHORE

From a photostat: S.N. 13346

349. LETTER TO C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,\(^2\)
November 28, 1928

I enclose herewith Rev. Gordon’s letter. The lame young man whom he mentions is evidently otherwise a capable man. Can you take him up? He won’t be a burden and it will be a good thing if we can accommodate him. The Committee at Sabarmati was afraid to have him and as Mr. Gordon says the young man could not have been happy either not knowing Hindi. If you think that he can be taken please write to Rev. Gordon.

I expect to see you here next month. You will do whatever is

\(^1\) Vide “Good if True,” 29-11-1928.
\(^2\) Permanent address possible regarding the Lalaji Memorial. You will have seen the appointment of the new Agent General\(^1\). No comment is necessary.

SIT. C. RAJAGOPALACHARI
GANDHI ASHRAM, TIRUCHENGODU

From a photostat: S.N. 13738

350. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, WARDHA,

November 28, 1928

MY DEAR JAWAHAR,

I have your letter. I shall be sorry indeed if you have to enter the Municipality again, unless you enter it on condition of perfect obedience being rendered to you. If you have to go in for the purpose of settling disputes, it is not worth while. My conviction is that you cannot combine all-India work with solid municipal work. Solid municipal work is a thing complete in itself and requires all the energy that a man can give it and I would not like your work to be anything but solid.

I was to have gone to Mysore to attend the Christian Convention. That was the hope I had given to friends during the middle of the year, but I informed them about a month ago that my going was impossible, if I was to have any rest at all.

The news you had given me about Kamala is bad. I like the idea of her being under treatment in Calcutta. She will have there the best medical advice possible.

I do hope that you will find time to attend the meeting here.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

PANDIT JAWAHARLAL NEHRU
ANAND BHAWAN, ALLAHABAD

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1928. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library; also S.N. 13739

\(^1\) K. V. Reddi; vide “Letter to Sir Mahomed Habibullah”, 9-11-1928.
351. LETTER TO SARSI LAL SARKAR

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 28, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter and the booklet for which I thank you. If you knew how pressed I am for time, you would not ask me to read anything outside my line of work.

I hope you do not want me to develop further the theme of the chanting of Ramanama and the so-called autobiographical chapters I am writing.

Could you please send me a brief summary, if not a translation, of the Poet’s letter referred to in your letter? I am sorry to say that it has escaped my attention as I must confess to my shame I do not read Bengali.

Yours sincerely,

SJS. SARSI LAL SARKAR
177 UPPER CIRCULAR ROAD
SHYAMBAZAR P.O., CALCUTTA

From a photostat: S.N. 13740

352. LETTER TO PRESIDENT, LATENT LIGHT CULTURE

AS AT SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 28, 1928

THE PRESIDENT
LATENT LIGHT CULTURE, TINNEVELLY

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I am sorry that I have not yet been able to reach your book and now that I am again on the move I do not know when I shall be able to look at it. I would really not trouble you to send me the lessons that you have kindly offered to send. I shall have no time to read them. And I do not think that the other members of

---

1 In reply to his letter dated November 19, 1928
2 Permanent address
3 On Tagore’s poems
4 On charkha

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
the Ashram, busy as they are, will have much time at their disposal to tackle new things.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm: S.N. 13741

353. LETTER TO KISHORELAL G. MASHRUWALA

November 28, 1928

CHI. KISHORELAL,

I have shown your letter to Jamnalalji. He would prefer that you should join the Gandhi Seva Sangh. To me it is the same either way.
You certainly have the right to draw money from the Ashram, but Jamnalalji thinks that if you come over to the (Gandhi Seva) Sangh, you will be of some help in shaping it. I see only one difficulty in this. If you join the Sangh you should attend the one or two meetings of the Sangh which take place every year. If your health can stand that strain, then there is no harm in joining. From this point of view, the decision will have to be yours. Do not think of any other difficulties. That is, if you can undertake a little travelling occasionally, do join the Sangh. Your activities there will continue as at present. It will mean that you will continue to belong to the Ashram, but will also, in addition, be a member of the Sangh. After I hear from you either by letter or wire I will write to Jamnalalji’s firm to arrange about the money.

Tara and Shanti are here at present. I met Nanabhai on the way.
I have asked him not even to come here. His health is bad indeed.

I have written to Bhai Karsandas about Surajbehn. I had expected her to be much more patient.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 10709. Courtesy: Gomatibehn Mashruwala
354. LETTER TO BALBIR TYAGI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,¹
Wednesday [November 28, 1928]²

CHI. BALBIR,

You should have sent me a letter. Why haven’t you written? You should write at least once a week.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 6635

355. WHO SHOULD WEEP?

I have before me notes of Acharya Kripalani’s speech delivered at Jabalpur at a public meeting from which I take the following striking extracts³ to show what the British people have lost through Lalaji’s death. Though the vast majority of them are today ignorant of Lalaji’s genuine friendship towards them, a day will come when they will realize what service patriots like Lalaji have rendered to them.

But there is another party which should participate with us today in this our immense loss though it may be unconscious of what it has lost. Our rulers have a vast empire at stake. And in Lalaji they have lost a friend true and sincere, a friend who helped them even every time that he was punished and insulted by blind and intoxicated authority.

It was in the Partition agitation days that Lalaji was deported without trial by the Government and yet when he returned he resisted the overtures of the so-called extreme wing of the Congress politicians. He helped the Moderates headed by Phirozeshah and Gokhale. Though he was injured the most yet he turned the left cheek to the nominal Christians who no more remember the virtues of their Master. . . .

Once more during the Non-co-operation movement he was sent to jail on a charge which could not bear the light of law and justice. But when he was discharged from jail he again helped his persecutors. He pleaded for entry into the Councils for what is called discriminate support.

. . . Well therefore might the British people weep, and weep they would were

¹ Permanent address
² From the printed letter-head it is evident that this letter was written in 1928. As Balbir lived in Sabarmati Ashram, vide “Letter to Abhay Sharma”, 11-11-1928, Gandhiji must have written this after reaching Wardha on November 24. Wednesday following this fell on this date.
³ Only excerpts are reproduced here.
they not dazzled and blinded by the pride of power.

If even after the departure of such trusty Indian friends, tried and true, the Englishmen persist in their obstinacy, a time may come when the Indian generations to be will vow eternal enmity to England. It may even be the kind of enmity that Christians vowed and carried out through centuries against the Jews for the Christ who was crucified. It is quite possible that their domination may come to be viewed as a crucifixion of a whole nation and might rouse the worst passions of the generations yet unborn. Let therefore the Empire take thought and take heed, make up while yet there is time for the night cometh when the die will have been cast and retreat and compromise will be out of the question.

Young India, 29-11-1928

356. LALAJI MEMORIAL

I invite the attention of readers to the appeal for five lakhs issued over the signatures of Dr. Ansari, Pandit Malaviyaji and Sjt. Ghanshyamdas Birla. Signatures have been purposely restricted to those only without whose signatures no memorial can be considered truly national. There was great difficulty in choosing other names. Nor was there time enough to consult all the parties whose names should appear, if some of them might. After all if the prestige of Lalaji’s name is not enough to induce the public to subscribe liberally, no names however many or distinguished they may be are likely to fetch subscriptions. The only assurance therefore the public need have in respect of memorials such as this is that the appeal must be from those whose names are a guarantee of good faith and honest administration. The three signatories are more than ample guarantee of these essentials.

I hope that the response will be quick and generous. It is to be wished that all those who have come under Lalaji’s benign influence will send in their mite. The Memorial will gain in weight for small subscriptions making up the total of five lakhs. If we can collect five lakhs from five lakhs men and women, this collection by itself will be substantial propaganda for swaraj. And if the minimum sum fixed by the signatories to the appeal is made up principally of small subscriptions, no pressure will be felt by anyone during these hard times. If monied men have a special duty in such matters, the others are not on that account absolved from their duty of contributing according to their ability.

I suggest therefore to the various associations and societies that they make immediate collections from all on their rolls or under their influence. We have at least 27,00,000 students in high schools and colleges. They can always save from their pocket money enough to make a very substantial sum. Nor should the suppressed classes lag behind in tendering their quota.

We often waste time and energy in debating and wrangling over a multitude of suggestions and rehearse many possible improvements. Let such critics remember that perfection is not possible in human undertakings. Let us therefore try to do well things even though we may think of better things so long as what is presented to us for acceptance is not open to any fatal objection and especially when it comes from tried and trusted leaders.

Any subscriptions sent to the Young India office will be acknowledged in these columns.

Young India, 29-11-1928

357. GOOD IF TRUE

Dr. Satyapal sent me on 22nd November, 1928, the following telegram:

Lala Lajpat Rai’s death causes irreparable loss to Punjab. I offer my most humble and affectionate salutations to the great departed leader at this deplorable and critical juncture. I on my behalf and of other friends who differed from Lalaji assure friends who were offended for differing from Lalaji that we hereby sink all differences and resolve starting with a clean slate. We bear no ill will, we have no prejudice and we offer our hearty co-operation in all political movements started by Lalaji and we place ourselves unreservedly at the disposal of such friends. We offer hearty invitation to all these friends who have remained away from the Congress to join hands with us vigorously to pursue the campaign of swaraj, for which Lalaji lived and died. Henceforth in sacred memory of Lalaji we resolve to present a united front, even if it be possible by our complete surrender.

It reflects great credit upon its authors, if the sentiments expressed in the telegram are heartfelt. I am obliged to utter this note of warning because I have known so many such deathbed repentances that one is never sure whether they are heartfelt or whether they are due to the impulse of the moment, or what is worse, outward pressure. The authors will never be able to bury the hatchet if inside their hearts they feel that their opposition to Lalaji was justified and warranted by circumstances and dictated by no selfish consideration or other unworthy motives but by the purest patriotism. If such was the case there would be no cause for repentance. One can only be just to the memory of a dead man, one cannot wipe from one’s memory the wrong he might have really done. Repentance presupposes conviction. of one’s own error. If then the authors feel that on the whole they wronged Lalaji in his lifetime or that the motive for their opposition was mixed then the repentance is genuine and should last. Subject to this reservation, I tender my congratulations to Dr. Satyapal and his companions on this patriotic message and hope that there would be a strong, sustained and united effort in the Punjab to carry on the mission bequeathed by Lalaji. In many respects it is possible for the Punjab to give the lead to the whole of India, if only the Punjab wills it, and if party feeling and communalism disappear in that land of five rivers. If the Punjab Press, instead of indulging in vituperation and innuendoes as a portion of it does, will but educate public opinion along right lines, I have no doubt that the rest of India will follow. Nothing can be a greater monument to the memory of Lalaji than that the Punjab should lead all India along the right path.

Young India, 29-11-1928

358. ‘A BLOT ON BOMBAY’

Shri Nagindas Amulakhrai of Ghatkopar Sarvajanik Jivadaya Khatun has sent to the President, Municipal Corporation, the following reasoned letter on the question of milk supply to Bombay:

Bombay has been called Bombay the beautiful. If Bombay means merely Malabar Hill and Chowpati and beauty is to be referred only to the exterior, then Bombay is certainly beautiful. But if the heart of Bombay is penetrated, like most of our cities it is ugly both in appearance and reality. The indifference of city fathers to the milk supply of their city is truly criminal and the facts carefully compiled in the foregoing letter do constitute a “blot” on Bombay the beautiful. But it seems to me to be useless merely to blame the members of the Municipality. They are after all what the voters make them. If Bombay is to have a cheap supply of pure milk the education of the voters should be undertaken on a wide scale. They should be taught never to vote for any candidate who does not pledge himself to secure a proper milk supply for the city in the quickest possible time. In the language of Blatchford milk should be treated like postage stamps. It should not be left to private enterprise but should be the first care of every municipality.

Young India, 29-11-1928

1 The letter is not reproduced here. The correspondent had quoted authoritative opinions explaining that high price of milk was due to the faulty system of stabling animals in the heart of the city, their ‘costly feeding’ and their ‘premature slaughter’.
No State in India has so systematically encouraged hand-spinning as the State of Mysore. I have before me a copy of the note prepared by Sjt. G. Ranganatha Rao Sahib, the Director of Industries in Mysore, for submission to the State Sub-committee “constituted to consider the question of hand-spinning.” I give the note below in full:

I congratulate the Director and the Sub-committee on the thoroughness with which they are handling this very important national supplementary cottage industry. Naturally the Director is cautious in his note. Equally naturally every step taken in organizing hand-spinning is being taken with deliberation and due thought. The result is that even from the very commencement the Department has been able to avoid loss on capital. The Department did not disdain to profit by the labours of the All-India Spinners’ Association or to accept the technical assistance offered by it. It is quite clear from the report that the field to be covered by the wheel is vast enough to engage the attention of many workers in the field. I hope that the experiments that are being carried on to perfect a village carding machine will succeed. The machine to be of value will have to be such as to be capable of being worked by the villagers. My own humble opinion is that it is not possible to improve upon the carding-bow now in use in our villages. The Technical Department of the All-India Spinners’ Association tried to introduce small changes in the original bow, but the foundation seems to be incapable of alteration, if we bear in mind the purpose for which the bow is intended. What is more, if the cotton to be carded is good, well-picked and well-cleaned, carding with the bow becomes an incredibly easy, simple and quick process and capable of being undertaken by even delicately built men and women. And my own experience is that no more than five minutes need be given to carding and sliver-making for an hour’s spinning of thirty counts. Half a tola of thirty counts gives 320 yards, fine average speed for a good spinner. To card half a tola of cotton will not require more than five minutes for a tolerably good carder. And if the thousand spinners whom the Director mentions could be coaxed to learn carding, they could prepare their own slivers and add a little more to their earning per hour, because it will be possible to give spinners who are their own carders a little more wage than to those who spin with slivers prepared for them.

1 Not reproduced here. It described an attempt in village Badanval “to test by intensive work, the practicability of introducing hand-spinning as a subsidiary occupation to our agriculturists”.

286  THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
Whilst tendering my congratulations to the Mysore State upon its zeal on behalf of the poorest raiyats, I venture to remind the well-to-do citizens of Mysore and also the officials that khadi will not find an abiding place in the homes of the people of Mysore unless these two classes adopt khadi for their own wear. They now know that it is possible to get as fine khadi as they wish to possess. Let them not confuse the minds of the unsophisticated villagers by leading them to think that the so-called higher classes are not prepared to practise what they preach. Let them remember the words of the Bhagavad Gita:

The simple folk imitate the action (not the speech) of excellent men.

Young India, 29-11-1928

360. MORE CONDOLENCES OVERSEAS

The following cablegrams have been received from the Kathiawar Arya Mandal and the Saurashtra Hindu Association, Durban, and the Indian Union, Glasgow University, respectively:

Young India, 29-11-1928

361. LETTER TO J. KRISHNAMURTI

Satyagraha Ashram, Wardha,
November 29, 1928

Dear Friend,

I have your letter for which I thank you. I hope that you are completely restored. It will certainly give me much pleasure to see you whenever you can find the time. I am in Wardha up to the 20th December at least, then I shall be in Calcutta for about a week and then I hope to find myself in Sabarmati.

Yours sincerely,

S. J. J. Krishnamurti
C/o R. D. Morarji, Esq.
Vasant Vihar, Mount Pleasant Road, Bombay

From a photostat: S.N. 13006

1 III. 21
2 These are not reproduced here; all these organizations had sent condolences on the death of Lajpat Rai.
3 Dated November 22, 1928, which read: “I was so greatly looking forward to seeing you . . . but most unfortunately I have had to cancel my whole tour on account of my having a bad cold. . . . I hope I may have the pleasure of meeting you soon.”
362. LETTER TO M. K. GOVINDA PILLAI
& WIJNANA CHANDRA SEN
AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 29, 1928

MY DEAR FRIENDS,

I have your letter. Please give me your respective ages, whether you are married, whether you have parents, whether you know any other language beyond Malayalam, what training you have received in English and where you were trained. What certificate does the head of your institution give you? And you should send all the other particulars which I should know.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. M. K. GOVINDA PILLAI
SJT. WIJNANA CHANDRA SEN
ARYA SAMAJ, KOTTAYAM (TRAVANCORE)

From a photostat: S.N. 13008

---

363. LETTER TO KANNAYIRAM PILLAI
AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 29, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

As promised in my last letter to you, I made enquiries and I am now satisfied that in mentioning certain depots there was no question of favouritism. Only those depots were mentioned where large sales were expected. The leaflet was circulated only in the places which were on the list. There was no question of slighting private merchants. The Charkha Sangh Vastralaya does sell in retail full dhotis and pieces. You should really discuss your grievances with Sjt. Varadachari with and under whom you are working.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. KANNAYIRAM PILLAI
TAMIL NAD KHADI VASTRALAYA, TIRUPPUR (S. INDIA)

From a microfilm: S.N. 13292
364. LETTER TO HANNA LAZAR

AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
November 29, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your very touching letter. I am glad that you have given me your confidence. It is very difficult for me to guide you from this distance without knowing full circumstances. But, generally speaking, I would say ‘no divorce’. But if your temperaments are incompatible, you should live in voluntary separation.

In any case, I hope you will have mental peace.

Yours sincerely,

MRS. HANNA LAZAR

WEST BANK, VICTORIA STREET, OUDTOABAARA, C. P.

From a microfilm: S.N. 13743

365. LETTER TO C. F. ANDREWS

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, WARDHA,
November 29, 1928

I have your cable redirected to me from Sabarmati. It was received on the 26th. At first I found it difficult to understand it. I thought you did not know anything about Lalaji’s death. But then I saw that you had alarming telegrams about Lalaji’s death being due to the injuries received. My own opinion is that the physical injury was not serious, though, having been received in the region of the heart, it might have proved fatal. And the injuries would have been very serious had it not been for the intervention of friends who surrounded him bravely and received the blows themselves. But there is no doubt that Lalaji received a nervous shock from which he never completely recovered. All his writings, all his speeches after the incident are eloquent proof of my statement. Government’s indifference and elaborate statement summarily dismissing Lalaji’s challenge ignoring even Lalaji’s name added fuel to the fire that was raging in his breast. He did not feel so much the personal wrong as the wrong done through him to the whole nation. The prostration of the people made the insult all the more galling. You will see in the pages of Young India the appeal issued for a national Memorial for Lalaji. Sheth Ghanshyamdas Birla has started it with a handsome donation of Rs. 15,000. I am hoping that the appeal will meet with generous response.

I am in Wardha at least up to the 20th December. I shall have to be in Calcutta for a few days. Then I want to go back to Sabarmati. I have not the courage yet to bury myself there. Somehow or other I feel that I must go out for a while and then there is the often postponed European visit. If you have altered your views and think that I should not visit Europe, you will cable so. Your negative decision would be final for me. If you mean yes, you need not cable, because there may be many things in spite of my wish to go to Europe that may prevent me. The going therefore will take its own course.

I enclose herewith copy of a letter received from the Macmillan Company. Having got the copyright, they evidently want the pound of flesh. I wish I had not entered into this. I entered into it because of Rev. Holmes. But it is all right. Perhaps they will give the permission to you. I shouldn’t mind if they would only publish the Autobiography in volumes. I have no notion when the whole thing will be finished, even though I am omitting many important events and trying to hurry on to the Non-co-operation days. I want to break off after the Special Session at Calcutta, because the events are too fresh and there are so many contemporaries whom I must describe, if I am to write further. I feel too that it would be advisable for me to stop at that stage for thenceforward my life has been too public. Therefore there is no need for further elucidation. And then of course there is Young India, a clear mirror through which anybody who cares can look at me.

Mahadev I had to leave at Bardoli this time because of the Bardoli Inquiry which is getting on quite nicely.

I hope you are doing quite well.

I have received your article though belated on Gopabandhu Babu. You will of course send me your reminiscences of Lalaji.

I have your correction about Miss Mayo. It will go in the forthcoming issue of Young India.

Bristol Times cutting is shocking, but such is modern journalism and such is also the notion about truth of fliers through the air!

C. F. Andrews, Esq.
112 Gower Street, London W.C. 1

From a photostat: S.N. 15099

1 Published on December 6, 1928; it read: “I regret that an inaccuracy came unawares into my first article on Miss Mayo’s book about India. I had been informed by an authority, on whom I implicitly relied, that Miss Mayo had been ‘employed’ to write a book for propaganda purposes just after the War. I find now that the word ‘employed’, which implied some monetary payment, was inaccurate and I wish to withdraw it with an apology.”
CHI. NARANDAS,

I have your letter.

If the meaning you read in ‘win over Narandas’¹ is correct, I admit that it should hurt you. But you should never have read that meaning in the remark. How can you know the context in which it was made? It was in continuation of a conversation with Chhaganlal. It is plain that there are reserves between you two. Chhaganlal is the Secretary. He knows his weakness, and I know it too. If at all, I should advise him. The remark ‘win over Narandas’ was intended to suggest to him that it was his duty to try to understand you, to listen to your point of view and to accommodate himself to you. It does not imply any defect in you. If I had wished to imply any defect in you, I would not have said ‘win over’. Instead, I would have said ‘reform Narandas through love’, or something to that effect, and I would also have first drawn your attention to your defect. I have observed no such defect in you and, therefore, there was no question of my drawing your attention to it. I certainly do not wish that you should remain silent or should not draw attention to any errors you may observe. If you fail to draw attention to them, I would blame you for that. Do you understand my meaning now? Please let me know if there is any other point which requires to be clarified. You can show this letter to Chhaganlal. I think it would be better if you do so. But I leave it to you to decide whether or not you should.

I wish to make a few inquiries about Chalala². I shall, therefore, write about it afterwards.

Pass on the accompanying letters.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

How is Purushottam? Did he derive any benefit from Jivan³? How is Jamna?

From Gujarati: C.W. 7722. Courtesy: Radhabehn Chowdhari

² A centre of constructive work in Saurashtra
³ An Ayurvedic tonic
BHAISHRI CHHAGANLAL.

I am sure you have sent the accompanying papers to me through some mistake. I often receive papers like these which need not have been sent to me.

In your letter you make no suggestion concerning Shankerlal’s letter. Should I get another resolution passed here?

I will inquire a little further into the Chalala affair and then write to you. I return with this the letters of . . . behn¹ and . . . lal². It is certainly a painful chapter.

The reason why Mahavir, Durga and Maitri fall ill frequently is nothing but their food.

I wanted to write to you about myself when I had leisure. There is no trace of impatience in the experiments I am making. It was all along my intention to experiment with the use of oil after coming here. I had not been taking fruit even when I was there. Even then I ate nothing but fruits during the journey. Here, too, I do not exclude fruits altogether.

Today being Lalaji Day, and for other reasons, I have eaten only fruits. The only material difference is that I take no milk.

I naturally feel sometimes that I should compete with all of you. But you have no reason to feel worried about this. No one here feels worried. Everyone knows that I will attempt nothing beyond my strength. It is many years since I overcame the attachment to life; this is not a new thing.

It is enough that you keep on striving. You should never worry that you will not be able to attain the level which you say I have done. It is easy enough to attain that level; in any matter in which you find it difficult to do so, put yourself in God’s hand. If you stop worrying, your efforts will succeed better. If you lack fitness for anything, you will acquire it by patiently striving for it. If even after this, you have any questions to ask me, ask them.

The problem of Chi. Santok and Keshu is difficult. I have been thinking what to do. At any rate, this sum cannot be paid against wheat.³ I will write about this later.

¹ The names are omitted in the source.
² ibid
You have done well in relieving Somabhai. He cannot be continued for six months, or even for one month.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro- 7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshine, pp. 13-4

368. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

[November 29, 1928]¹

BHAISHRI CHHAGANLAL,

I have finished the letter to be read in the presence of everyone. Since you have succeeded in obtaining cow’s ghee, I now wish to take no hasty step.

On a day such as Lalaji Memorial Day, may we not reckon the wages for all forms of labour at the same rate? It would be better to apply this rule to items where it can be easily applied. For that purpose, a register such as I have suggested should be maintained. That is, the wage per hour should be fixed at one or three-quarters of an anna, and the register should show the quantum of work per hour for each kind of labour. For instance, for spinning 300 yards per hour, or any other figure that you may fix, and similarly for grinding grain, weaving, digging, cleaning grain, cleaning land, weaving Pati, carpentry, etc., calculation would become easy if we had such a table. Everyone maintains a diary, so that we can count up the value of everyone’s work for our information. My point is that, if we accept the principle I have suggested, we can thus scientifically examine its working.

I have been thinking about Krishnamaiyadevi. You will have to play a prominent part in this matter. You should speak to her if she shirks work or does anything improper.

It is necessary that you should write to me about what you hear concerning Shardabehn. Sometimes the stories we hear are false. What is the nature of Gangabehn’s discontent?

I like the idea that one day in the week everyone should work for a fixed number of hours. There should be no dirt anywhere in the [Udyoga] Mandir.

I shall have a talk with Mirabehn. The issues of “Mandir

¹ “Lalaji Memorial Day” mentioned in this letter fell on this date.
² Bed-tape
Samachar” for both the weeks have been got up so badly that it is impossible to read them.

I see no harm in drawing Shamalbhai’s expenses either from the Mandir or from the Vidyapith. Kaka may do what will give him better peace of mind. I believe Kaka cannot join in the experiment of living within Rs. 12 [a month]. For one thing, he is not an expert in experimenting with his body so that he can take any kind of liberty with it.

There is no letter from Bal. I was taken aback to learn what he had demanded. I was ready to be told that he had asked for something more than Rs. 12, but not as much as Rs. 20. You need not hurt him. I shall thrash out the point with him.

I understand what kind of an agreement we should have with the Spinners’ Association. I shall now write to Shankerlal. You need not worry on this account. You are also doing right in collecting opinions. Think about all aspects objectively.

Cultivate such health that you should never catch cold or any such infection.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro-7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshine, pp. 14-6.

369. LETTER TO SHANTIKUMAR MORARJI

WARDHA,
November 29, 1928

CHI. SHANTIKUMAR,

I got your letter and the books sent by you. The books are being used. We now make bread in the Ashram. If you come across a simple book about making biscuits, please send it. The book on bread contains no information about making biscuits.

I am making inquiries in regard to Shri Jerajani’s brother. If you come to know about anyone else who knows bee-keeping, please let me know.

I am taking some steps in regard to Sumant. If the facts are as stated by you, I will certainly write in the papers.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 4708. Courtesy: Shantikumar Morarji
370. LETTER TO SURENDRA

November 29, 1928

CHI. SURENDRA,

I have your postcard. I am pleased by your single-minded devotion to the tannery. If you become an expert in that work, you will be able to do the highest service both to the world and to human beings. Our men of dharma have taken no interest in this field at all, for modern Hindu society has committed the great sin of regarding that work as, from its very nature, tainted with adharma. We should atone for this sin by infusing the spirit of dharma in that work. I have been discussing the problem of cow-protection with some rich persons here. These discussions also lead me to the same conclusion. Give me from time to time a detailed description of your experiences there, so that I may gradually get the complete picture. I suppose I told you that Chhotelal had accompanied me here.

My work here is progressing satisfactorily. If you have not started keeping a diary, please do so.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3093

371. LETTER TO SITARAM PURUSHOTTAM PATWARDHAN

WARDHA,
November 29, 1928

DEAR APPA,

You have raised a good question about the calf. We have of course to give up the fear of death as also of pain. This is true for oneself, but it cannot be applied to others. Our duty is ourselves to shed fear of death and other pains and help others when they are in pain. Thus, on the one hand we have to shed the fear of pain and on the other to follow the dharma of compassion, of relieving others of their pain. The same about death. Some pains can be relieved only through death. If we wish to shed the fear or death, we should have no hesitation in seeking or giving relief from pain through death. At any rate we should not consider it a sin. Why should we have hesitation in hastening the moment of death—that is, where the motive is to help?
Thereby we are not violating any law of nature. . . Everybody who is born is sure to die. We are only changing the moment . . .

It was necessary to turn the calf on its side and I wanted to do so too. But it was impossible without giving it more pain. So it was impossible to act on the wish. In the case of a child it is always possible to carry out such a wish. If you still do not follow my point, ask me again. Let me know if you do not receive the money from the Charkha Sangh.

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/32

372. ADDRESS TO ASHRAM INMATES, WARDHA

November 29, 1928

Our scriptures tell us that childhood, old age and death are incident only to this perishable body of ours and that man’s spirit is eternal and immortal. That being so, why should we fear death? And where there is no fear of death there can be no sorrow over it either. It does not therefore behove us to shed tears over Lalaji’s passing away but to emulate and copy his virtues. The central feature of his character was his burning passion for service of the motherland and he began his career with the service of the most downtrodden of his countrymen, viz., the so-called untouchables, whilst he was still a youth. It may not be given to everybody to emulate his career in the Assembly which was but a small incident in his career, but all can develop the spirit of sacrifice which ran like a continuous thread through his life. And sacrifice means self-purification. I would like you therefore on this solemn occasion to resolve to make an ever-increasing effort for self-purification. Through it you will be serving yourselves, your country and the world.

Young India, 13-12-1928

---

1 Omission as in the source
2 Two sentences following are unintelligible in the source.
3 From Pyarelal’s “Wardha Letter” under the sub-title “Lajpatrai Day”, which explained: “The 29th November, the day of national mourning over the loss of Lalaji, was duly observed here. . . . The inmates of the Wardha Ashram observed the national day after the poor man’s way by doing manual labour and contributing the day’s wages and denying themselves a week’s ration of gud, the only item of luxury in their gheeless menu.”

296 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
DEAR BROTHER,

I have your letter. I had your speech at Cawnpore read to me. I do not see substantial difference between the Associated Press report and the report you have sent me. All the terrible threats and still more terrible exaggerations that are in the English report are to be found in the Urdu report. The slavery of the Hindus, the digging out of eyes, the challenge, the unequivocal indictment against the Hindus are all there in their nakedness. If you can spare the time, I would like you to read the cutting that I sent you, or if you have destroyed it, get another copy, and you will see almost every sentence of English report in the report you have sent me. And tell me if you will still call the speaker as per English report “a cad and a very crude performer”, and, if you will do so, I would like you to tell me why and show me the difference between the English report and the Urdu in my possession.

No, the speaker at Cawnpore is not the Maulana with whom I have been so long familiar and with whom I have passed so many happy days as with a blood-brother and bosom friend. The Maulana of Cawnpore is an utter stranger to me. The Maulana I have known vowed that he was so bound to the Hindu for his help during the Khilafat agitation that he would put up with him, even if he ravished his sister, that so far as he and the Mussalmans under his influence were concerned, he was out to suffer at the hands of the Hindus who had done so well. Well, I do not ask him to suffer to the extent that he promised; but I do plead with him on bended knees to revise his Cawnpore speech, admit: that he was out of sorts and bravely apologize to his Hindu brother for wounding his feelings as the Cawnpore speech undoubtedly does. If the Hindu has been a slave of old, you are co-sharer in his slavery by ties of blood, by acceptance of indissoluble partnership. You chose in 1920 to be co-sharer with the Hindu in his virtues as well as his vices for eternity, in his strength as well as his weakness.

I would go all the way with you in accusing the Hindu of his many misdeeds; but I am unable to hold with you that he has been ever the aggressor, ever the tyrant and his Mussalman brother always the injured victim. If I had at all felt like that, you would have found me proclaiming it from the house top. But I am not going into a controversy with you. I simply want to tell you that, in my opinion, all your incitement is wrong, your judgment is one-sided and that the Mussalman is at least equally guilty with the Hindu, if not on the whole more so. Assuming that you will impute honesty of motive and statement to me, I would ask you to make room for doubt as to the correctness of your judgment. In your Cawnpore speech you are too terribly dogmatic and emphatic. The assumption of infallibility is unworthy of you. I ask you to disown it for friendship’s sake.

\(^1\) Which appeared in Hasrat Mohani’s paper Khilafat, 18-11-1928

One personal thing, I must correct. The Khilafat Committee did pay for a time for my expenses at your instance, not on my request, and certainly not for the reason that you state, for the simple reason that I have never travelled at Congress expense on any single occasion, even when I have done exclusively Congress work. My travelling expenses have always been borne by friends. And when I accepted your offer, I had Rs. 25,000 placed at my disposal by a common friend, whom you know, purely for my travelling as he was most anxious that I should never stint myself about these, nor draw upon any public funds for them. I had given you this information, but I agreed with you that it would be more graceful if I let you pay my travelling expenses. But in the manner in which you now put the matter, I feel inclined to offer to return the whole of these expenses with interest if you will accept them without being insulted or offended. I think that Mahadev will have somewhere a record of these expenses.

Let me also correct another grave error. The Tilak Swaraj Fund is a matter of audited record. Every pie received is accounted for in the printed accounts which have been before the public now for years. You will perhaps be painfully surprised to discover that let alone 20 lacs there are not even two lacs received from Mussalmans for the Tilak Swaraj Fund. I do not make a grievance of this, but I want you to hold truth as a sacred thing. And if you want me to produce the handsome figures of Hindus who have paid to the Khilafat coffers I shall gladly do so and perhaps it would be another surprise for you. I wish you could recall those stirring days of our joint peregrination from shop to shop where Hindus vied with one another to pay even to the Khilafat Fund as to the Tilak Swaraj Fund. Do you want me to furnish you with a sample list? If am erring, I would like you to correct me not by a counter assertion but by figures. But if you have none, I want you to tender an apology not to me, not to the public, but to God for having been betrayed into a hasty but painful error.

I had the report of your version of the Cowasji Jehangir Hall meeting read to me. The conduct of the audience was disgraceful beyond words. I have always held this imitation of the West as a degraded and degrading thing unworthy of us. This wretched imitation may yet prove our undoing. You were entitled to a respectful hearing. Above all at a condolence meeting such conduct was criminal. In spite of what I consider to be a temporary aberration on your part the meeting should have remembered your many and brilliant services to the Motherland. But here my agreement with you ends. I refuse to endorse the deduction that you have drawn in favour of your theory of universal condemnation of Hindus. A purely Mussalman audience has been known before now to behave no better. The conduct of the meeting in question was symptomatic not of Hindu mentality but of the present mentality of city Indians. You and I, Mussalmans and Hindus, have to club together to eradicate this growing evil from our midst and no to fling mud against one another. Just as you remained unmoved in the meeting so should you have remained unmoved when you reached home and found yourself surrounded by friends. You should have laughed at the incident as I have so often generously seen you laugh at such incidents and forgive contrary to my wish what you have called the pardonable indiscretions of exuberant youths. Have you not said so often, let them do so, they have been too long under slavery?

I have done. Personally if you are still your old self, I have no anxiety to see our correspondence in print.\(^1\) But if you think, that there is nothing left for you but war to the knife, by all means publish the correspondence. But if you are still the old gentle brother that I have known you to be, then read this letter again and again if the first reading does not satisfy you. Read it with Mahomed Ali. I am in no hurry. Then lay aside all other work and both of you come down to Wardha, you with a determination still to hold me in your pocket. You will find me easy enough to carry. I am fast losing weight. But if after mature joint deliberation you cannot take any such heroic step, then publish this correspondence and spare me the painful necessity of having to make some statement to the public. And believe that, whether you feel my presence in your pocket or not, I am there. My unchangeable creed is non-violence and universal brotherhood. Therefore I repeat what I have said from a thousand platforms that mine is a unilateral partnership and therefore my partnership with you and the other Mussalmans is indissoluble. Though they may disown me a million times, I shall still be theirs when occasion demands it. May God help so that I am not found wanting.

I appreciate your decision about All-India Spinners’ Association. I won’t misunderstand it. Your decision is right and your resignation will be accepted. But I would expect you to come back to the Association when you feel that spinning is part of your duty not only as a nationalist but also as a Mussalman, that you owe it to the millions of your countrymen not merely because you are an Indian but equally because you are a Mussalman, that is, if my reading of Islam is correct.

---

\(^1\) In his letter dated November 25 Shaukat Ali had asked: Have I your permission to publish the correspondence or a portion of it . . .”, (S.N. 13733).

Yours sincerely,

MAULANA SHAUKAT ALI
THE CENTRAL KHILAFAT COMMISSION
SULTAN MANSIONS, DONGRI, BOMBAY
From a photostat: S.N. 13744

374. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

Friday [November 30, 1928]

BHAISHRI CHHAGANLAL,

I had no letter from you today.

I have thought about the Chalala matter. For the present, let the work go ahead according to the budget prepared by Jaisukhlal. I mean by this that you should make the required sums available from the balance in the khadi account. These sums should be debited in the Chalala account and should be recovered from the proceeds of the sale of Amreli khadi lying with us. We would not have to pay anything if all that stock could be sold off immediately. All that I have to decide, therefore, is this: how to help Chalala so that it would not matter if it incurred a loss up to Rs. 800 during the next year. The loss should be met from the profit from Amreli khadi and not by raising the price of Chalala khadi. If you are required to undertake responsibility for anything more than this, let me know.

If you require Shripatrao’s help in the Ashram, by all means ask him for it.

The inmates of the Ashram here did physical labour yesterday¹ to be able to contribute something to the Lalaji Memorial Fund and have decided to give up eating jaggery for a week from today. They were served gruel every morning containing three tolas of jaggery per head. Instead of jaggery, salt is being added now.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a microfilm of the Gujarati: S.N. 14822

¹ November 29; vide “Address to Ashram Inmates, Wardha”, 29-11-1928.
November 30, 1928

CHI. MAHADEV,

I have had a letter from you after a long time. I can forgive you everything. Certainly you need not spin nor keep a diary. I certainly observe a difference of temper between us but what does that matter? How can I expect that you should look at everything through my eyes, or that your eyes and mine should be alike? I may not give up the spinning-wheel, because I have come to regard spinning as a form of yajna. There are other items in our daily programme of work, and I see their results from day to day. It gives me pleasure to see them. The results of the spinning-wheel yajna are a matter of faith. Has anyone observed personally that our spinning ends the poverty of the poor? But my faith tells me that it does, and so I keep apart some time for the yajna from the other tasks of our daily programme. If I did not do so, I would regard myself guilty of the sin of theft.

About the diary, there is another reason. I keep it because it is part of the discipline of the Ashram, or to be correct, of the [Udyoga] Mandir, to do so. A diary may not be necessary for me, but it is so for others and, therefore, I would not confuse their minds by not keeping one myself.

If anything in the rule which I follow with regard to Santok is not clear to you, please bear with it to that extent. The problem has perplexed me very much indeed.

I do not suffer any hardships. The atmosphere here is very congenial for the work I am doing. I will certainly not do anything at the cost of my health. Do not jump to conclusions from any rumours you may hear. If you have any apprehensions, write to me. If I had time, I would myself write to you about everything. I am not determined to continue at any cost the experiments in which I am currently engaged. The only change I have made is giving up of milk once again. Give it up, and resume it again—this will go on, like ebb and flow alternating with each other, for, as you know, I am not at all happy that I take milk.

I have not received a specimen of the diary. Ghanshyamdas is still here, as also Jagannathji. There are daily additions to the other company.

Tell Ramdas that he should write once in a while.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11442
376. LETTER TO RAMNIKLAL MODI

November 30, 1928

BHAISHRI RAMNIKLAL,

I send the accompanying cutting for you to read. Will the average Jain accept the views expressed in it? Do you know the editor of Jain Jagat? He has also written a pleasant letter to me.

Write to me and give me news about the health of you both.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4143

377. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

November 30, 1928

CHI. NARANDAS,

You must have received the letter I wrote to you yesterday. Can we not supply every month ten to twenty pounds of yarn of between 30 and 40 counts to those women in Poona who want fine yarn? We should feel ashamed if we cannot. If we cannot obtain the quality from anywhere, why cannot we spin fine yarn of that quality in the Ashram? Do not all of us spin one tola of yarn every day? Everyone should spin fine yarn and sell that quantity. If necessary, we may supply cotton to all.

In the yarn I spin at present I easily attain a count of 30. To make one tola of 30 counts, we should have 480 (lengths of thread). I see, therefore, that we may not be able to maintain that average. But cannot we maintain an average of one half tola? The cotton which I spin is grown locally from American seed. I am collecting more information about it.

I enclose a letter from Mirabehn for your information. We should not mind her anger, but should appreciate her sincere criticism. There is no limit to her frankness of heart. She is arriving here today.

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C. W. 7723. Courtesy: Radhabechn Chowdhari
378. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIĐYA

November 30, 1928

CHI. GANGABEHN (SENIOR).

Prabhavati informs me in her letter that you are not keeping good health at present. If this is true, the cause must be mental agitation and the heavy burden on you. Please lighten that burden. Reduce physical work at any rate. If you fall ill, I shall blame you alone. The path which you should follow is clear and you must not deviate from it.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 8710. Courtesy: Gangabehn Vaidya

379. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

[After November 30, 1928]

BHAI CHHAGANLAL,

I got your letter. I sign the one regarding Shardabehn and return it. We must now think what to do about her. I shall not be able to send the letters to you today. I have not been able to read them all.

We ourselves require Narandas’s opinion about the Chalala matter.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro- 7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshi, p. 64

---

1 From the reference to Chalala matter; vide also “Letter to Chhaganlal Joshi”, 30-11-1928.
CHI. PRABHUDAS,

I got your letter of 26th August. The reason why I got it so late is that it came into my hands after it had wandered among others who read it first one after another. One naturally forgets about a letter which has not been filed. That is what happened in the case of your letter. And once it is filed, it comes into one’s hand when its turn comes. However I take it that the delay has caused no inconvenience to you.

As long as you keep yourself within the amount sanctioned by the Managing Board for the expense, you should continue to carry on that same activity in the manner you think fit. I am of the opinion that you do not need the Board’s legal consent for that. Even so, I will place your letter before the Board. However, if you can immediately proceed to Bageshwar, you should do so. I see no difficulty in your doing so. Do not do anything in haste.

If necessary, you may lend upto Rs. 200 for completing the construction of the building. Keep in mind the idea of buying some land in Bijoria as a branch of the Ashram and putting up buildings on it, but first test it on the anvil of experience and determine whether it is sound or unsound. You will be able to decide more easily after you have settled down at Bageshwar and, if you remain firm in that idea, I will consider it and have it considered by others also. I will of course not worry about your health, but at the same time, I will be apprehensive that you might not steadily cling to your work. You can remove that fear only by convincing me by your conduct. However, do not sacrifice your health by being over enthusiastic for, if you do so, it will harm your work and we should regard that consideration as more important than the question of your health. The point is that one should look upon one’s health as a trust and take as much care of it as possible. You have done well to tell me in your letter that the cow is being neglected for the sake of the pine-tree gum. I will have to think over it. You, on your part, should forget about such things after you have passed them on to me and, regarding them beyond your field of

---

1 In the letter, Gandhiji asks Prabhudas to proceed immediately to Bageshwar near Almora. Prabhudas was in Almora in April 1928 and the storm referred to in the last paragraph may have been about the change of the name of the Ashram from Satyagraha Ashram to Udyog Mandir. The change was effected in November 1928; vide “Satyagraha Ashram” work, not let them weigh on your mind. God has not given the necessary strength to any individual or organization to fight all injustice. If He were to do so, He would Himself have produced His rival. We should believe that He is not so stupid as all that and dance in our own circle.

One more storm is raging in the Ashram these days. But it is through such storms that it is purified. I am therefore calm. I do not have the time to give you a description of it. You may read something about it in the Ashram magazine. The rest you will know from what Chhaganlal or Kashi might be writing to you.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: S.N. 33052

381. A GOOD BEGINNING

Subscriptions for the Lalaji Memorial have begun well with Sjt. Ghanshyamdas Birla heading the list with Rs. 15,000 at Wardha. The fact that a strong provincial committee has been formed in the Punjab and had at the time (lst instant) of writing this already had Rs. 25,000 on their list also augurs well. I wish all the provinces will follow suit and fix their own minimum and set about collecting that sum. Whilst I suggested a method of finding one’s quota on the basis of population, it was obviously not intended to apply to those provinces, districts or cities which could bear a far larger proportion. It would be ridiculous for instance for Bombay to fling at the treasurer of the Fund its quota on the basis of population. Its quota can only be fixed according to its world-wide name and fame. Unfortunately we have in our country terrible contrasts. There are the submerged not tenth but fifth who are living in semi-starvation and who can therefore give nothing. Their burden has to be shouldered by the cities and the other prosperous areas.

The rapidity with which the subscriptions for the Memorial are collected will be a measure of people’s earnestness about preserving the memory of the Lion of the Punjab whose roar we shall hear no more. But let us remember that even twice the amount asked by the distinguished signatories to the appeal will not meet the requirements of the present day. Evidence is daily gathering round us that if we are to vindicate national honour which was stabbed when Lalaji was so brutally assaulted, we have to devise some means of hastening the advent of swaraj. One such means and the mildest is to finish the work that Lalaji was doing. He had undertaken to popularize the Nehru Report. Surely an effort in this direction is worth making and is quite feasible. To secure unanimity of approval for the Report is but a step in the national march. By itself it will not give even dominion status. But we shall surely need unanimity about some demand of ours before we devise common action to enforce the demand.

1 Written on December 1, 1928

In my humble opinion any discussion on the respective merits of dominion status and unadulterated independence is irrelevant to our present purpose. Everybody seems to agree that if we get dominion status it would be a long step in the direction we want to go. But the independence group seem to argue that it is certain that we are never going to get dominion status and that since dominion status is not our final goal, why waste national energy on a fruitless errand and why not straightaway work for independence pure and simple? There would be considerable force in the argument if the attainment of dominion status was an impossibility and if unanimity on independence was possible. As it is, if we can take action for independence with a fair chance of success, the same action plus unanimity which the Nehru Report has made possible on the issue of dominion status should surely make its attainment more possible than that of independence. All therefore I plead for is not cessation of independence propaganda on the part of those who are enamoured of the enchanting formula but whole-hearted support for dominion status even as a stage in their progress. I claim that the two are in no way incompatible provided of course dominion status for India does not mean something quite different from what it means for South Africa or Canada. Memory of Lalaji and reason then demand consolidation of public opinion on the Nehru Report, and that now. For let it be borne in mind that that report is not a permanent or final document. It is a compromise the best attainable which representatives of most parties have endorsed. If public opinion cannot be now focussed upon it, all the effort spent upon it will be reduced to nought and the great document will be out of date and out of place. Its value depends purely upon its immediate acceptance by all the great national organizations.

Young India, 6-12-1928
382. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

December 1, 1928

CHI. KUSUM,

May I not say that you are a little fool? Why should you feel hurt because I asked you? If you feel hurt like this every time, I can ask you nothing.

I want to see you what I have imagined you are. I have no time today to write more. I can have no doubt that you would look after Manu properly.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1761

383. LETTER TO FULCHAND

WARDHA,

December 1, 1928

BHAISHRI FULCHAND,

I have your letter. I for one consider animals and birds as much entitled to live as myself. But though knowing this, I am unable to overcome the desire to live. I have exhibited this cowardice of mine by starting the discussion about the problem of the monkeys.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/33

384. TELEGRAM TO SHANKERLAL BANKER¹

[On or after December 1, 1928]

SHANKERLAL BANKER

NO OFFICIAL INTIMATION RECEIVED. OTHER OBJEC-TIONABLE FEATURES RETAINED. ANY CASE TOO LATE ORGANIZE DECENT SHOW.

GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 13306

¹ In reply to his telegram, received at Wardha on December 1, 1928 which read: “Referring Calcutta Reception Committee resolution excluding mill-cloth from Exhibition. Bihar inquiries whether participation permitted. Kindly wire final decision.”

VOL. 43 : 10 SEPTEMBER, 1928 - 14 JANUARY, 1929 307
385. TELEGRAM TO K. SANTANAM

[On or after December 1, 1928]

Hope you will try collect subscriptions wherever you can.

Gandhi

From a photostat: S.N. 13306

386. “A YOUNG HEART”:

A correspondent who signs himself “A young heart” has addressed me a long letter dealing with a number of subjects. This anxiety to keep the writer’s name secret betrays cowardice or lack of moral courage, alas, fast becoming but too common amongst us. It ill becomes those who aspire after swaraj. I would appeal to our young men to shed this moral weakness and speak out their thoughts with courage and yet with humility and restraint. Even if they cannot be sure of their sense of discrimination and courtesy, let them express their thoughts in the language that comes to them naturally. Cowardly silence will not only not teach them discrimination or courtesy but it will demoralize them into the bargain.

REGARDING THE CALF

To come now to the questions adverted to by “A young heart” in his letter: The first one is about the yet unfinished calf episode. After observing that it was a grievous error on my part to have killed that calf, he goes on to give his arguments which I will skip over as they have already been answered in Navajivan. He then sums up:

In short if the poor calf had the tongue to speak it would certainly have implored you to spare it the poison injection and let it die a natural death after drawing its allotted number of breaths. It seems to me that in an excess of pity for the suffering animal you betrayed yourself into a great error and soiled your pure hands with the blood of an innocent calf. I am sure that on further reflection the truth of my observation and the magnitude of your mistake will become clear as daylight to you. It would be improper to say anything more to one like you who has seen truth face to face, still I cannot help adding that in case you ever discover your error and according to your nature confess it to the world, the world would feel grateful

---

1. In the source this and the preceding item appear on the same sheet.
2. The Gujarati original of this appeared in Navajivan, 2-12-1928. This is a translation by Pyarelal.
to you and further misunderstanding on the subject would be prevented. As it is, your action is bound to be misinterpreted and the sin of it all will be on your head. The sooner, therefore, you confess your error the better it would be for you and the world. May God vouchsafe to us all light and understanding!

Let me hasten to tell this writer and all those who think like him that I am not in a position to avail myself of their advice. But this much I can promise that the moment I discover that I was wrong I will in all humility confess the wrong and also make for it all the amends possible. Let me also admit that my error, if an error it is found to be in the long run, would be deemed to be no light one as I shall in that event have been guilty of committing an irreligious act—be it in ignorance—in the name of religion. Such a thing would be reprehensible in anybody; in me not the least. For I know that for good or for evil, my conduct is likely to influence many. I have thus a full sense of my responsibility.

But whilst I have not the slightest desire to minimize my responsibility in the matter, I believe that if in spite of the best of intentions one is led into committing mistakes, they do not really result in harm to the world or, for the matter of that, any individual.
God always saves the world from the consequences of unintended errors of men who live in fear of Him. Those who are likely to be misled by my example would have gone that way all the same even if they had not known of my action. For in the final analysis a man is guided in his conduct by his own inner promptings, though the example of others might sometimes seem to guide him. But be it as it may, I know that the world has never had to suffer on account of my errors because they were all due to my ignorance. It is my firm belief that not one of my known errors was wilful. Indeed what may appear to be an obvious error to one may appear to another as pure wisdom.
He cannot help himself even if he is under a hallucination. Truly has Tulsidas said:

Even though there never is silver in mother-o’pearl nor water in the sunbeams, while the illusion of silver in the shining shell or that of water in the beams lasts, no power on earth can shake the deluded man free from the spell.

Even so must it be with men like me who, it may be, are labouring under a great hallucination. Surely, God will pardon them and the world should bear with them. Truth will assert itself in the end.

REGARDING THE MONKEYS

The other question touched by “A young heart” in his letter is regarding the monkeys. He writes:
All that I wish to write regarding the monkeys is that you will, pray, not entertain the idea of killing them even in a dream. If they threaten your crops you may adopt such measures for keeping them from mischief as other farmers do, as for instance pelting them with stones, shouting, etc., but for heaven’s sake do not recommend their killing for a paltry few measures of grain. It would be wanton selfishness to compass such destruction for a trifling gain. There cannot be two opinions in this matter: Hindus will always regard your action as ahimsa pure and simple. It is only on such occasions that one’s ahimsa is put to the test. Is it not monstrous to deprive a fellow-creature of life for the sake of a miserable little crop? What selfishness and what cruelty! How can such an iniquitous suggestion proceed from your lips at all? Well, you may by your superior brute force kill the monkeys but remember you will have to pay the price for it one day, and before the Great White Throne all your subtle arguments will avail you nothing. In the name of mercy, therefore, I humbly beseech you not to besmirch your hands by such cruel deeds.

That this question should be put to me in this way at this late hour of the day surprises me. I have already admitted that there would be violence in killing the monkeys. But what these professors of ahimsa do not seem to realize is that even so there is ahimsa in stoning or otherwise torturing them. By restricting the meaning of ahimsa to non-killing we make room for nameless cruelties in this country and bring the fair name of ahimsa into disrepute and if we continue like this we shall as a nation soon forfeit our proud title as specialists in ahimsa. What I want is not only to be saved from killing the monkeys but from stoning or otherwise hurting them as well. That is why I have invited suggestions from such readers of this journal as believe in ahimsa. But instead of helping me, most readers have responded only by bombarding me with angry criticisms without even troubling to read my articles, much less to understand them; and even “A young heart” has not been able to avoid this pitfall. I can understand an honest difference of opinion, but what can be the use of advice based on assumptions not in the least warranted by my writings?

THE HINDU-MUSLIM QUESTION

The third question adverted to by “A young heart” is that of Hindu-Muslim unity. I cull the following sentences from his observations:

Thinking that your efforts at establishing Hindu-Muslim unity have proved fruitless you are sitting with your lips almost sealed in this matter. That does not seem to me to be right. You may keep your silence on the question of unity, but do not you think that it is your duty to ascertain facts whenever there is a communal disturbance and after full consideration to express your opinion on merits? You may not take an active part but how will it injure the interests of the country if after giving an impartial hearing to both the sides you frankly speak to whomsoever might appear guilty in your eyes? The attitude that you have taken up with regard to the Godhra riot and Surat is, to be frank, hardly proper. Where is your valour gone now which you displayed abundantly on other occasions by calling a spade a spade? Good God! I am really surprised at this attitude of yours. I humbly ask you to advise the Hindus, if they cannot observe ahimsa as defined by you, to fight, in self-defence, those who assault or murder them and their dear ones without cause.

I have already explained my position in this matter. I trust it is not out of fear that I do not air my views on this subject nowadays. But when it may be out of place for me to write or when I have not sufficient material to form an opinion or when the matter does not fall within my province, I consider it to be my duty to maintain silence. At present neither of the two parties is prepared to accept my solution of the Hindu-Muslim problem. There is therefore no occasion for me to express my opinion.

There remains the question of expressing opinion on the riots that have taken place or might take place in the future. When the subject itself, as I have already pointed out, has gone out of my province, there can be no question of my expressing an opinion on events that may arise. Again, if I proceed to express opinion on such matters before scrutinizing what both the parties might have to say on them, my conduct would be justly held to be improper and even impertinent. There would also be the danger of my misjudging. And how can I set out to make an inquiry into a question when I know that I have no ready solution for it?

Let no one however run away with the idea, from this, that I have washed my hands of this question for good. I am simply biding my time like an expert physician who has faith in his remedy. It is my firm belief that mine alone is the sovereign remedy for this seemingly incurable communal disease and that in the end one or both the parties will willy-nilly accept my cure.

In the mean time those who want will fight, in spite of whatever I might say. Nor do they need any prompting from me. This I have said repeatedly; I do not want any cowardice in our midst. The heroism of ahimsa cannot be developed from cowardice. Bravery is essential to both himsa and ahimsa. In fact it is even more essential in the latter for ahimsa is nothing if it is not the acme of bravery.

Young India, 3-1-1929
What should a public worker holding a responsible position in public life do if he is subjected to dishonest and malicious innuendoes or is falsely accused of misappropriation of public funds? Should he bring an action for libel against his calumniator in a law-court? Will it not be his duty as a responsible public worker to do so, and is it not likely that if he fails to do so some unwary people would be deceived? And if one may in no circumstance bring an action in a law-court, is there not a real danger that unscrupulous persons might take shelter behind a brazen silence and defy public scrutiny into their malpractices while pretending to follow your advice? Again if recourse to law-courts must be ruled out altogether, does it not follow that some other remedy against the evil of unrestrained libel should be found?

These are some of the questions arising out of the case of a prominent public worker that I have been called upon to answer. My reply is that slander and misrepresentation have always been the lot of public men. The way to overcome the opponent is by non-resistance and that is the remedy needed in the present case. Nor is a successful action in the law-court by any means a conclusive proof of a man’s innocence, for do we not meet everyday instances of scoundrels who use the certificates of law-courts as a cloak to hide their sins and to continue with impunity their practices? Again can any penalty that a law-court may inflict stop the poison of evil tongues from spreading? Would not what was said openly before be now, for fear of penalty, propagated secretly and in whispers and thus be rendered all the more insidious? My advice, therefore, generally speaking, is that one should take no notice of baseless and malicious imputations, but pity the calumniator and always hope and pray for his ultimate conversion. As for the public it can always take care of itself against dishonest servants. Corruption will be out one day however much one may try to conceal it, and the public can, as it is its right and duty, in every case of justifiable suspicion, call its servants to strict account, dismiss them, sue them in a law-court, or appoint an arbitrator or inspector to scrutinize their conduct, as it likes. Therefore instead of suing one’s calumniator in a law-court for false allegations of corruption, the best and the only right course would be for the public to prevent actual corruption from taking place by maintaining a sleepless vigilance and for the servant to keep the public on the qui vive.

If this course is found to be insufficient and some further action is felt to be necessary, the author of a libel can be called upon to bring his charge before a panchayat. The aggrieved party can offer at the same time to appear before it to vindicate its position. Of course this remedy would be useless when the calumniator is an altogether unscrupulous person. For he will never agree to appear before the panchayat. But where allegations are made by respectable persons offering to produce evidence in support, reference to a panchayat would be found to be most useful.

---

1 The Gujarati original of this appeared in Navajivan, 2-12-1928. This is a translation by Pyarelal.

‘But what about the villain who fakes a silent hauteur to mask his villainy,’ one may ask. My reply is that if the people are vigilant and wide awake such a person will not be able to maintain his mask for long, while, if on the other hand they allow their vigilance to go to sleep, not all the law-courts in the world will be able to prevent the practice of villainy. For we daily see how law is unable to touch gentlemen rascals dressed in spotless white, and going about in motor-cars. The fact is, as Carlyle has observed, that the fool and the scoundrel go always hand in hand. Where there is one the other is bound to be. But a true and just man need not worry on that account. Let him remember and ponder over what Dadu has sung:

My reviler is like a respected and dear brother unto me.
He labours for my good for nothing,
And helps to purge me of my countless sins
And comes to my aid without expectation of reward.
He loses his own soul but that of others he saves;
He is my dear friend—my saviour;
O Ramdev, pray to God for his long life—may he live for ever.
My reviler is my greatest benefactor, says Dadu,
For he brings home to me my littleness.

It is enough if one is true to one’s own self: one can then safely let the “turbid streams of rumour flow”.

Young India, 6-12-1928

388. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

ASHRAM, WARDHA,
December 2, 1928

BHAISHRI CHHAGANLAL,

I have your letter. You are right in what you say about labour and your method of counting the payment is also correct. When such paid labour is required, those who can put off their other work may offer to do such labour after finishing the work which they do as sacrifice. They may let go their study on that day and utilize the time in labour. The labour which they put in should be of a useful nature, otherwise it would amount to our giving them some charity out of the Ashram funds.

Here, too, it has rained. They say it is normal in this part. You did right when, having missed the post, you did not send a telegram and thereby saved 12 annas.

My letter had two sheets only. You should not have found the continuity broken at any point. I put down the figure 3 for the third page. I do not write the page number on the back, but keep it in mind.

I know that the cloth-lined envelope is very costly. I have not succeeded in getting Subbiah, Pyarelal and Mahadev to use it, but this is how it should be used. It should be opened with a knife and closed every time with a fresh slip of thick paper. On the side on which the address is written, a piece of thick paper should be pasted afresh every time. If used thus, we can make such an envelope last a long time. Do you not know that in prisons some such device is followed in order to save expenditure even on ordinary covers?

If you are not troubled by the question raised by Shankerlal, I certainly am not. If Narandas works in obedience to you and the organizational set-up, our purpose and that of the organization will be met. When Shankerlal raises the question with me, I shall discuss it. The question before me is not how to satisfy him but how to satisfy you. You should, be able to do your work smoothly and may ask me for whatever help you need for that purpose.

It was good news that Shankerbhai has recovered. Tell him that he should not fall ill again.

Have you given any sewing work to Gangadevi? If you have not, please do.

I got today’s post in the afternoon. Chi. Narandas is upset. I send his letters to you. If all of you agree, let them all remain [in the Ashram] on the basis suggested by Chi. Narandas and let Radha’s name be counted for payment. I have objection against this arrangement, too, but I do not wish to be obstinate. I would certainly not hurt Narandas.

I thought it was decided to retain Shanabhai. If there is nothing more than suspicion against him, it would not be proper to ask him to leave.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro- 7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshine, pp. 18-9

314 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
389. TELEGRAM TO DR. B. C. ROY

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, WARDHA

[December 3, 1928]

DR. BIDHAN ROY
36 WELLINGTON STREET, CALCUTTA

RECEIVED LETTER WHICH IS VARIANCE WITH PUBLISHED REPORTS ABOUT EXHIBITION. SEEMS TO ME TOO LATE NOW FOR ASSOCIATION DO JUSTICE TO EXHIBITION. BUT AM LIFTING BAN LOOK TO YOU SEE LOCAL KHADI ORGANIZATION.

Gandhi

From a photostat: S.N. 13316

390. TELEGRAM TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, WARDHA,

[December 3, 1928]

KHADISTHAN
CALCUTTA

RECEIVED OFFICIAL LETTER ABOUT EXHIBITION LIFTING BAN. YOU MAY ARRANGE KHADI COURT IF POSSIBLE.

Gandhi

From a photostat: S.N. 13318

391. TELEGRAM TO SECRETARY, A. I. S. A., AHMEDABAD

[December 3, 1928]

CHARKHA
AHMEDABAD

HAVE JUST RECEIVED OFFICIAL LETTER. THOSE EXHIBITORS WHO WISH MAY ATTEND. MAKING PRESS STATEMENT.

Gandhi

From a photostat: S.N. 13317

1 Vide “Letter to Dr. B. C. Roy”, 3-12-1928.
2 In reply to his telegram received on December 3 at Wardha; vide also “Letter to Satis Chandra Das Gupta”, 3-12-1928.
3 Vide “Telegram to Free Press and Associated Press”, 3-12-1928.
392. TELEGRAM TO SHANKERLAL BANKER

[December 3, 1928]

BANKER
MIRZAPUR, AHMEDABAD
ASSOCIATION BHANDARS SHOULD EXHIBIT IF THEY CAN.

GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 13307

393. TELEGRAM TO FREE PRESS AND ASSOCIATED PRESS

[December 3, 1928]

FREE PRESS, ASSOCIATED PRESS
VIEW BENGAL COMMITTEE’S DECISION GANDHIJI ADVISES THOSE KHADI ORGANIZATIONS PARTAKE CONGRESS EXHIBITION WHO CAN DURING SHORT TIME LEFT DO SO.

From a photostat: S.N. 13319

394. LETTER TO DR. B. C. ROY

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, WARDHA,
December 3, 1928

DEAR DR. BIDHAN,

Your letter makes sad reading. It is remarkable you accuse me of not having dealt fairly by the Committee whereas I should be the accuser. I had felt that I had shown the most delicate consideration to the Committee and in the attempt had suppressed myself. Lest at the last moment the Committee might feel offended, I have forced myself on your attention and tried to argue with you all and then to let you decide what you liked without exposing you to any criticism from me in the Press.

But to business now. If the published reports are true, your letter is not. Here is a tit-bit. The Exhibition authorities have approached all local Governments for exhibits! But perhaps you do not know what has happened.

Nor do I like this deference to Panditji’s wishes. I have promised that I shall attend the Congress in any event. Why should the Committee not work out its policy unhampered by personal considerations? Why should there be a public misunderstanding because I do not attend the Exhibition or the A.I.S.A. is not represented?

1 Vide “Letter to Satis Chandra Das Gupta”, 3-12-1928.

But there it is. You have rescinded your previous resolution. I have therefore wired to you and the Secretary of the A.I.S.A. as also Satis Babu, the Bengal Agent. I do not know how far it will be possible to organize the khaddar court. You will please now get hold of Satis Babu and other workers and do whatever is possible.

My grief was there. Your decision and letter have not eased it. There is an unreality about the whole thing. O God, lead us from the unreal to the Real.

There is nothing personal in this letter. It is the outpouring of a troubled soul.

Yours sincerely,

DR. BIDHAN CHANDRA ROY
36 WELLINGTON STREET, CALCUTTA

From a microfilm: S.N. 13758

395. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

December 3, 1928

DEAR SATIS BABU,

I have all your letters. The whole affair is bad. But we must not resist. Therefore I have wired you.¹ Please inform the other centres. You should now do whatever is possible. I have sent a wire² to Shankerlal too and issued a brief Press message³. Here are copies of correspondence.

No more today but love of which you will need now much.

BAPU

From a photostat: G.N. 8921

¹ Vide “Telegram to Satis Chandra Das Gupta”, 3-12-1928.
² Vide “Telegram to Shankerlal Banker”, 3-12-1928.
³ Vide “Telegram to Free Press and Associated Press”, 3-12-1928.
396. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU
WARDHA, December 3, 1928

MY DEAR JAWAHAR,

My love to you. It was all done bravely. You have braver things to do. May God spare you for many a long year to come and make you His chosen instrument for freeing India from yoke.¹

Yours,
BAPU

A Bunch of Old Letters, p. 68

397. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN
WARDHA, Silence Day, December 3, 1928

SISTERS,

I have your letter written by Gangabehn. There is some point in what you say about the noise. But the responsibility for it lies not only with the children but also with the adults. Again, it should not be difficult for you to observe silence or to make the children observe silence while dining or working. The main point is this: You should not think that if there is no talking, time will hang heavily while dining or working; or that the children cannot be kept quiet. There are millions of men who do their work quietly. You know, do you not?, that labourers in big factories are forced to keep silent while working. Why cannot we voluntarily do what they have to do under compulsion?

Hereafter Kakasaheb will be with you once a week. Do you still insist on Valjibhai too coming there? If I press him, he will come; but I know that he is always too busy and so, as a rule, I do not like to put any more burden upon him, if I can help it.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3683

¹ Explaining this in his book, Jawaharlal Nehru had written: “I think this letter was written soon after the incident at Lucknow when many of us demonstrated peacefully against the arrival of the Simon Commission there. We were severely beaten by the baton and lathi blows of the police.”
398. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

Silence Day [December 3, 1928]

CHI. MAHADEV,

I have your letter. You are busy doing more work even than when you were in the [Udyoga] Mandir. I am happy that you are doing it in the right spirit. Write to me when you can.

I have sent Harker's article for inclusion. She asks questions about Young India. I suggest that you yourself should reply to her.

As for other news, please be satisfied with what Pyarelal and Subbiah tell you in their letters.

I have read your note and understood the views you express in it. I am certainly not unhappy that you do not write or spin. I would feel hurt if I thought that you were not doing something through lethargy. A sincere person may or may not do a particular thing, it is all the same. I include you among such sincere persons.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Send on the accompanying letter to Manilal at his present address.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11445

399. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

WARDHA,

December 3, 1928

CHI. MANILAL AND SUSHILA.

Sushila has asked us to suggest a name for the baby girl. But Nanabhai has already cabled the name and, therefore, there is no need to give her another name. The name “Dhairyabala” is also a good one. It requires many other virtues to be able to cultivate patience which has no taint of lethargy in it. Bhartrihari described patience as father. “He whose father is patience and mother is forbe-

1 From the reference to Emma Harker's article “The Lion of the Punjab” which appeared in Young India, 6-12-1928. The preceding Silence Day was on 3-12-1928.

2 That is, keep a diary; vide “Letter to Mahadev Desai,” 30-11-1928.

3 Dhairya means ‘patience’.
arance, whose wife is undisturbed peace of mind”, etc. If you do not know the full verse, please let me know and I will give you the text.

Tara and Shanti were here for four days. I met Nanabhai on the way [to Wardha]. Kishorelal will stay for the present at Vileparle.

With me are Ba, Pyarelal, Subbiah and Chhotelal. Mahadev has had to go and stay at Bardoli.

We are all right, all of us.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

If you can, collect contributions there for the Lalaji Memorial Fund.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4745

400. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI
Silence Day [December 3, 1928]

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I get your letters regularly. I am writing to Babuji about you.

Are the children regular in coming to Bal Mandir? Are they attentive? Has Bimla fully recovered now?

I think it is time for you to leave for Dwarka.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 3338

401. MY NOTES
December 4, 1928

LALAJI MEMORIAL

The reports that I have received while writing this on the 4th December are hopeful. By contributing Rs. 15,000 on his own behalf at the Wardha meeting, Shri Ghanshyamdas Birla has made a good beginning. A committee consisting of worthy persons has been for-

1 From the reference to Prabhavati’s proposed trip to Dwarka; vide also “Letter to Prabhavati”, 9-12-1928.

2 Brij Kishore Prasad
med in the Punjab and it hopes to collect a good amount. I hope that Gujar and the Gujaratis will as usual contribute a share which will be worthy of them. If we have genuine feelings for the “Lion of the Punjab”, if we accept the worthiness of this Memorial and if we have confidence in those who have formulated the scheme for this Fund as well as in the trustees, it should not take long for it to be fully subscribed. And it is a matter of prestige for us that not much time should elapse before this is done. Hence it is my hope that Gujarat will pay up whatever is to be subscribed as soon as possible. The students of Shraddhanandji’s Gurukul had years ago, by sending for the South Africa struggle Rs. 300 to Rs. 400 earned as wages for working as labourers, answered the question of what should be done in such cases by students and salaried workers, who do not have large sums of money to spare and are hardly able to make both ends meet. Some can contribute their share by working as labourers, while for those who are unable to do so, or though being able do not find such an opportunity, the way is open on such occasions to give up certain pleasures for a specific period of time. If they are addicted to anything, they can save money by giving up their addiction for a short or long period or they may give up an item of food, as was done by the women-teachers and girls of Kanya Gurukul in Dehra Dun at the time of the struggle in Bardoli. Hence there are many ways open to those who wish to contribute to this Fund. We have formed an evil habit that we do not contribute anything until someone approaches us for funds. It is to be hoped that no one will wait for people to approach him for donations in the case of a memorial for a patriot like Lalaji.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 9-12-1928

402. LETTER TO ACHYUTANAND PUROHIT

WARDHA ,
December 4, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter as also your telegram. I have not said anything to you because I am unable to fix the date. It will be somewhere between the 20th and 23rd instant.

There will be besides my wife three or four with me about whom you need not worry to make any special arrangements. They will stay where you put me up. No special arrangements are necessary for me either. I would like you to save every pice you can of the funds that you may collect. You need not send for any fruit for me. Ordinary simple food will do. All that you may arrange to have ready is two pounds of goat’s milk. One thing I do need is a commode kept in a clean place. You will please not send for any fruit from Calcutta.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 13009

403. LETTER TO PADMAJA NAIDU

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, WARDHA,
December 4, 1928

MY DEAR PADMAJA,

You must not mind this dictated letter. It is better that I dictate than that I delay writing to you. What on earth are you doing with your health? Is it not more your mind that is at fault? Why can’t you make up your mind to be and remain healthy? This set back in your health is bound to trouble the poor old songstress in America. You must become a good daughter.

SHRIMATI PADMAJA NAIDU
HYDERABAD

From a photostat: S.N. 13013

404. LETTER TO DR. B. S. MOONJE

WARDHA,
December 4, 1928

DEAR DR. MOONJE,

I have just received your letter. If you want an early date and if it is convenient I suggest Thursday next at 4 p.m., i.e., 6th instant; if that day is not convenient, 11th Tuesday at 4 p.m.

Yours sincerely,

DR. B. S. MOONJE
NAGPUR

From a photostat: S.N. 13014

1 In reply to her letter dated November 16, which read: “I have been very bad for the last fortnight” (S.N. 13001).

2 Sarojini Naidu
405. LETTER TO H. M. JAGANNATH

AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
December 4, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. The signatories to the appeal propose to raise five lakhs to be utilized for the promotion of the political activities of Lala Lajpat Rai. These naturally include the welfare of the suppressed classes. You may know that some workers of Lalaji are devoting their energy exclusively to the service of the suppressed classes.

Yours sincerely,

S. H. M. JAGANNATH
PRESIDENT
THE ALL INDIA ARUNDHATEEYA CENTRAL SABHA, MADRAS

From a photostat: S.N. 13016

406. LETTER TO SIR MAHOMED HABIBULLAH

WARDHA,
December 4, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter for which I thank you. You will note that I have not said one word as yet about the appointment and I propose to retain my silence as long as I can.

Yours sincerely,

SIR MAHOMED HABIBULLAH KHAN BAHADUR, C. I. E.
MEMBER, VICEROY’S COUNCIL, NEW DELHI

From a photostat: S.N. 15094
407. LETTER TO SECRETARY, KHALSA DIWAN SOCIETY, VANCOUVER

AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

December 4, 1928

THE SECRETARY, KHALSA DIWAN SOCIETY
SIKH TEMPLE, VANCOUVER B. C.

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter for which I thank you. We were all wondering what this money was for and from whom. I now enclose receipt for the amount which will be utilized as desired by you.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm: S.N. 15116

408. LETTER TO RAMNIKLAL MODI

Tuesday [On or after December 4, 1928]²

CHI. RAMNIKLAL,

I received both your letters concerning non-violence. I have preserved them. I am despatching the matter about Bhai Bechardas for Navajivan. That article could have been more clearly written. Had the tales been given, they would have been useful to scholars. But now I shall not take more of your time in this matter. It is absolutely essential to bring light to the present atmosphere of darkness and depression. I have received another pure-hearted letter from the editor of Jain Jagat. He writes that the material provided by him is insufficient. He writes that the present idea of non-violence lacks clarity of conception and is devoid of spirituality. I for one experience this at every step . . . Pure behaviour is the only true means to get over that deficiency. Therefore the article does not interest me. If pure non-violence does not enter our practice, what purpose can be served by learned articles? If we can keep our behaviour pure the scholarship of the whole world will come to our help. Hence, preserve your health and allow yourself as little as possible to be dragged into the whirlpool of thoughts. In fact I would say that you should not allow yourself to be so dragged. We should certainly devote ourselves to the thoughts that are necessary to improve our behaviour. The rest of the thoughts are mere whims. I do wish you would give me news of your physical state.

¹ The addressee had sent Rs. 1,000 for the Bardoli struggle without specifying for what purpose it should be spent. Meanwhile the struggle had come to a successful conclusion. Thereupon he wrote that the money might be used for relief of those who suffered during the struggle in Bardoli.

² From the contents this letter appears to have been written about the same time as the letter to the addressee dated November 30, 1928; vide “Letter to Ramniklal Modi”, 30-11-1928. The Tuesday following that date was December 4.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4185

409. LETTER TO SIR JAGDISH CHANDRA BOSE

WARDHA,
December 5, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I am stupid and live as in a well not knowing what goes on outside its walls. I came to know of your birthday only yesterday. Though late, pray let me add my greetings to the many you have received. May you be spared long to enable India to share your ever increasing power and greatness.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: G.N. 8736

410. LETTER TO VITHALDAS JERAJANI

ASHRAM, WARDHA,
December 5, 1928

BHAISHRI VITHALDAS,

I got your letter. I understand the position about honey. I have been witnessing good evidence of our economic, physical and intellectual poverty.

You have thought more than I have about methods of khadi propaganda. If you get financial help in your efforts, you will be able to do better work. That is, you will be able to look after the khadi work in the whole country. See that you acquire excellent health. Instead of remaining in Bombay and getting crushed under the burden of work there, you should better go to Matheran and improve your health. I trust you are not grieving over Velabehn’s passing away.
Remember Narasinh Mehta’s utterance: “Welcome the snapping of the bond, I shall cultivate bhakti for Shri Gopal the more easily.”

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9765

411. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

Wednesday [December 5, 1928]

CHI. MAHADEV,

I can get no time at all to write to you. But you should not behave as if you, too, had resolved not to write this time.

Do you remember I gave you a wire about Surajbhn’s husband to be sent to Karsandas? I am sure I gave it to someone. But Karsandas does not seem to have received it.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

I could not send to you any matter from Young India. From the articles which appear you may translate any which seem to you worth translating and inform me immediately.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11441

412. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

WARDHA,

Wednesday, December 5, 1928

CHI. KUSUM,

You want to hear about me. If I get some time, I would certainly write. As it happens, however, I get no time here even to talk with anyone. I keep Pyarelal also very busy with work, so he too cannot 1 From the reference to Mahadev Desai’s failure to send the wire to Karsandas (vide “Letter to Mahadev Desai”, 9-12-1928.), it is evident that this letter was written before the other.

spare time. Be patient for a while.

Prabhavati must have left now, and so I do not write to her.

If I knew that Vidyavati was there, I would have written to her.

If she is there tell her that she ought not to fall ill.

_Blessings from_
_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1762

413. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

Wednesday [December 5, 1928]

BHAISHRI CHHAGANLAL,

I have your letter. I would advise you to show to Narandas all the letters I write to you. This will make your path easy and will help him too. I have written to him advising him that he should not keep aloof.

If Santokbehn wishes to leave for Rajkot, let her do so. You may certainly see her and try to dissuade her. I shall be happy if she likes the Ashram atmosphere and decides to stay on. But I would not like her staying in such a condition of mind that I would have to strive every day to keep her pleased and contented.

It is natural and desirable that one’s relations should become one’s co-workers in national work. The difficulty comes only when the motive is of self-interest. Once we are convinced that we are pursuing no personal interest, we can invite all our relations to join us; if they do join, it will be only to offer themselves as oblations in a sacrifice.

Rama’s co-workers were his relations, and so were Yudhishthira’s. The co-workers of Prophet Mahomed, too, were his relations. Jesus’s co-workers included a brother of his. Lord Salisbury had surrounded himself with relations. When he was criticized for that, his reply was: “If not my relations, whom else shall I sacrifice? In whom, if not in them, should I put my trust? If I had more relations who were worthy of the honour, I would sacrifice them too. For me, this is a sacrifice and not a means of amassing wealth.”

Balfour was a relation of Lord Salisbury’s. We find innumerable instances of a contrary nature, too, in which relations are fixed up in

---

1 Prabhavati’s sister, daughter-in-law of Rajendra Prasad
2 From the reference to “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 29-11-1928. Wednesday following November 29 fell on this date.
places to help them serve themselves. The upshot of this is that to one who is prompted by unselfish motives, relations and non-relations are the same. When one is prompted by selfish motives, what difference does it make if the co-workers are not relations? Even so, all of us, as you say in your letter, should be careful. I am convinced that my experiment has not cost me anything. You may also believe this to be true about our equals. In our country, equals cannot easily work together, because the spirit of self-sacrifice has not yet been fully developed.

I have not understood exactly your question about the goshala. You will have to explain it further before I understand it.

We should let Lahoriram stay with us as long as he is not confined to bed and goes his way. It will be another matter if he cannot control his palate. If we are convinced that he is a good man, we cannot send away a person who has joined us. The case would have been different if we had not admitted him when he first came.

It should be enough if we keep ourselves ready to lay down our lives when robbers raid the Ashram. God will preserve our honour.

The best thing would be that one of our men should go and work among the robbers.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS .]

I have not revised the letter after writing it. The envelope arrived yesterday in a torn condition. It should have been tied up with a string.

BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro-7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshine, pp. 16-8

414. NOTES

‘HER EYES AS OUR EYES’

Mr. N. M. Bell is the joint editor of a tiny monthly called the International Sunbeam published at 2 shillings per annum at 59 Mary’s Road, Christchurch. He has favoured me with a copy of his monthly which contains the following interesting article.¹

India sees life through different windows than we do; but her eyes are as our eyes, and she has the same desires as we have.

¹ Only excerpts are reproduced here.

Total world disarmament, the only material safeguard of peace, should be the outward and visible sign of that inward mental disarmament on which alone outward peace can rest secure. So long, however, as one people is actually subjecting another to itself by superior military might, even the very first step towards this inward mental disarmament has not been taken.

What has this got to do with India? Everything.

When the Russian delegates made their historic proposals for total world disarmament before the Special Disarmament Committee of the League of Nations, what really prevented Great Britain from agreeing? India. In India are some 70,000 British troops and some 1,40,000 native levies, costing some £70,000,000 a year keeping some 350,000,000 Indians subject to British rule. When the Egyptians make their periodic attempt to secure peaceably the independence of their country from British domination, what prevents Britain from granting their request? India. The Suez Canal is the main route to India.

Disarmament would mean to Great Britain the loss of the ‘brightest jewel’ in the British imperial crown. . . . It is a disagreeable saying, but true, that empires rest on armaments. . . .

Young India, 6-12-1928

415. ITS GORY CAREER

The certificate granted by the Punjab Government to the police seems to have emboldened the Lucknow police to outdo the Punjab police in the free use of the baton and the spear. The Lucknow police seem according to Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru to have even used brickbats in order to disperse an utterly innocent crowd. Granted that the processionists were defying orders supposed to be legal, the police, I hold, were not justified in charging the processionists unless injury on the part of the latter to person or property was imminent. I rely implicitly on Pandit Jawaharlal’s narrative. According to it the crowd was orderly and well behaved. It was not out to do any harm to anybody. Its motive was known to be a peaceful demonstration against the entry into Lucknow of a Commission that has been imposed upon the people against their will. The exercise by the police of punitive powers in such circumstances was arbitrary, uncalled for and brutal. The behaviour of the crowd in the face of this provocation and in the face of a cowardly assault upon their chosen leader Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru and his companions was amazingly exemplary.

1 Vide also “The Blood-stained Path,’ 9-12-1928.
Their self-restraint was as great as their leaders’. I claim that no crowd outside India would have retained the calmness that the Lucknow crowd did.

But this calmness is probably mistaken for cowardice by the brave Commissioners who under the protecting wing of an armed police seem to be bent upon continuing their blood-red progress. Innocent blood was spilt in the Punjab and severer injuries seem to have been inflicted by the police in Lucknow on an equally innocent crowd. Two men are said to have been so badly injured as to be in danger of losing their lives. Difficult as the conduct of the English Commissioners is to understand, that of their subordinate Indian colleagues is still more difficult to understand. They do not seem to perceive the widening gulf between them and the people whom they are supposed to represent and whom (some of them flower of the nation) they are content to see trampled under horses’ hoofs, charged with batons and driven with spearheads like cattle for the heinous offence of daring to demonstrate against this unwelcome Commission. Well did the enraged father and patriot Pandit Motilal Nehru give a warning to the Government, that “if a violent disturbance takes place in this city or any other part of the country, the responsibility for that would fall upon such officials as misbehaved themselves for the last three days at Lucknow”. My fear is that the Government do not mind, if they would not actually welcome, such a disturbance. If a disturbance takes place, they will have another opportunity of showing the red claws of the British Lion and of terrorizing a docile people into abject submission to their imperious will.

For if the Government do not desire an outbreak of violence on the part of the people and if the Commission will persist in their peregrinations, they should notify to the latter that they should instead of going from place to place summon witnesses to a central place and finish their work. But such wisdom and a consideration for popular will are hardly to be expected of the Government.

The duty before the people is clear, to continue their non-violence in the face of the gravest provocation. Then one may safely regard these great demonstrations as so many lessons in non-violence preparatory to the final struggle in which people will willingly and valiantly lay down their lives without the slightest retaliation. That day is fast coming, faster than most of us imagine. So far as I can see, sacrifice of precious lives will have to be made before we come to our own, whether in a struggle wholly non-violent or predominantly violent. I am hoping and praying that non-violence will be maintained even up to the last heat.

Young India, 6-12-1928
I know it is very easy of us to give advice; but only those who live amongst the nuisance can realize how destructive monkeys are, and as one who has suffered some small loss at their small, mischievous hands I can sympathize.

And yet is it the fault of man or monkeys—this impasse? Why do monkeys come into the cities, near the dwelling places of men, risking, poor wretches, their lives, and the lives of their dearly loved babies for food?

Said an official to me just recently at Mt. Abu: “The monkeys are too dreadful a nuisance, and yet we are not allowed to shoot them. They get worse and worse every year, I wonder why.”

And yet the reason is obvious. From every jungle tree, Jamboo, Karenda and Bod, we see man, with perfect disregard for everything but his own selfish purposes, stripping the trees of their fruit to the last berry.

The Bhils of Abu take down hundreds and hundreds of baskets, one sees them rotting at Abu Road.

The sahibs' butlers have learnt to make Karenda jam; it costs only the sugar and the picking.

Man encroaches ruthlessly on the rights of animals and birds, but punishes with severity any encroachment by them on his supreme rights.

Do the gods treat men thus? I see in the misery that presses on man . . . the awful reckoning due to this continual encroachment on the privileges of bird and animal.

It is nature’s retribution: a retribution that has already come to the sailors on ships who shot the ‘Stormy Petrel’ whose appearance warned them of storm, shot them to extinction. Men destroyed birds in thousands and saw their dear ones in the grip of the malarial mosquito whose larvae are now too many for man’s scope.

Thus writes a fair correspondent who is a lover of bird and beast. Unfortunately for me she adds to my difficulty, does not solve it. Knowing the wrongs done by my kind, am I to give up agriculture and seek the cave, or am I to prevent the monkeys’ encroachment? The natural consequence of her reasoning which I do not deny is that the monkeys should have full play of my garden’ in other words I should grow for them what my fellowman has robbed them of !!!

Young India, 6-12-1928
417. LETTER TO DR. B. C. ROY

WARDSHA,
December 6, 1928

DEAR DR. BIDHAN,

Panditji is anxious that I should be by his side as early as possible after his arrival in Calcutta and that I should be staying as near him as possible. He now wires saying that the Reception Committee has arranged to accommodate both of us under the same roof. As you know I have always a large party with me. I am sure therefore that it would be inconvenient for the Reception Committee to accommodate that party under the same roof as Panditji’s. I therefore suggest that you reserve a little accommodation for me so that if necessary I may detach myself from my party and stay with Panditji. But if the Committee does not mind, I propose to accept the offer of Sjt. Jiwanlal to accommodate the whole of my party. I have accordingly telegraphed to you today.

I do not know to whom I should really write officially. If necessary therefore you will pass on this letter to the proper quarters.

As at present arranged I reach Calcutta on the morning of the 23rd by Calcutta Mail.

Yours sincerely,

DR. BIDHAN CHANDRA ROY
36 WELLINGTON STREET, CALCUTTA

From a photostat: S.N. 13312

418. LETTER TO SUBHAS CHANDRA BOSE

WARDSHA,
December 6, 1928

I have your letter. Thank you for the consideration underlying it. But I have no choice about volunteers. Any volunteer would do.

I have written to Dr. Bidhan Roy¹ already saying that while some accommodation might be reserved for me under the same roof as Motilalji’s, seeing that he wants me near by him, I am accepting the invitation of Sjt. Jiwanlal for myself and party to be accommodated by him. My party would be really too unwieldy for you to take care of and not all of them would need to be taken care of.

¹ Vide the preceding item,

Mohanlal Bhoot may attach himself to me as he has always done so.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. SUBHAS CHANDRA BOSE
1 WOODBURN PARK, CALCUTTA

From a photostat: S.N. 13313

419. LETTER TO NIRANJAN PATNAIK

WARDHA,
December 6, 1928

DEAR NIRANJAN BABU,

I have sent you a telegram today about Sambalpur. I leave here on the 20th by passenger and reach Sambalpur on the 21st evening, and leave Sambalpur on the 22nd evening. No great preparations about my comforts need be made. Only goat’s milk might be made available. No fruits are to be brought from Calcutta.

I send you now translation of a letter from Sjt. Jethalal Govindji. You have known him through the columns of Young India. He is the organizer of the Bijolia centre on the self-sufficiency plan. I would like you to read his letter side by side with the figures you gave me in one of your letters which I reproduced in Young India¹ and tell me where he has erred.

Yours sincerely,

Enclosure: 1

From a microfilm: S.N. 13762

420. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

WARDHA,
December 6, 1928

DEAR SATIS BABU,

You must have got my telegram² about the Exhibition. The whole thing is finished now. You will do what you can. I wonder if they are giving you a free hand.

¹ Vide “Help Utkal”, 6-9-1928
² Vide “Telegram to Satis Chandra Das Gupta”, 3-12-1928.
I reach Sambalpur on the 21st instant, leave there on the 22nd and reach Calcutta 23rd Mail. I shall have to put up with Jiwanlal. Panditji wants me to be available at Calcutta from the 23rd and I am anxious to give him all the help that I can. He is shouldering a tremendous burden.

As you know Sjt. Birla has been with me all these days and we have been discussing many matters, khadi, etc. I suggested to him that he should take up all surplus khadi to relieve the congestion wherever there may be, so as not to interfere with production. He entertains the idea favourably and may make a cautious beginning at once.

He asked me whether, if he made the beginning with Calcutta and started a khadi shop where he could collect khadi from all parts of India, whether you would not object. I told him that in the circumstances placed by me before him, there was not likely to be any objection on your part.

I have revived my original idea of pooling the prices. But you will consider this proposition and if you think that there is any objection, you will please let me know.

Mahavir Prasad whom perhaps you know and who is a very enthusiastic honest worker and who is at present in Gorakhpur has offered to undertake the responsibility of running the new store for Sjt. Birla. He is proceeding today to Calcutta. I have asked him to see you and discuss things with you. This letter will be in your hands 24 hours after he reaches there.

I hope you and Hemprabhadevi are keeping quite fit in spite of the strain that both of you must be undergoing.

Yours sincerely,

S. N. SATISCHANDRA DAS GUPTA
KHADI PRATISHTHAN, SODEPUR

From a photostat: S.N. 13762

421. LETTER TO R. VENKATRAM

WARDHA,
December 6, 1928

MY DEAR VENKATRAM,

I have your letter and the issues of your journal. You fairly guessed my general view about journalistic ventures. If you watched me working for full 24 hours, you would have pity on me and not ask me to read any journal quite apart from my attitude. Much as I should like to, I am much obliged to deny myself the pleasure of reading the literature that is pouring upon me from all sides. You will please therefore excuse me.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. R. VENKATRAM
EDITOR, “INDIAN STATES JOURNAL”
EMPIRE BUILDING, FORT, BOMBAY

From a microfilm: S.N. 13763

422. LETTER TO ACHYUTANAND PUROHIT

WARDHA,
December 6, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I telegraphed to you today as I was able to fix the date of departure only today. I hope to leave Wardha by the passenger train on the 20th instant reaching Jarsuguda at 13.53 in the afternoon of the 21st instant. There is a train according to your letter immediately after from Jarsuguda for Sambalpur and I should leave Sambalpur the evening of the next day (22nd instant). That gives a day and a half which I hope is quite enough. I must reach Calcutta on the 23rd instant,

I am unable to give you the number and names of the party that will accompany me, because I am not yet sure whom I should take with me. But you may take it that there will be at least three with me including my wife.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm: S.N. 13764

423. LETTER TO WILLIAM I. HULL

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, WARDHA,
December 6, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

The Secretary of the Ashram, now Udyoga Mandir, has forwarded your letter to me. I shall be delighted to meet you and Mrs. Hull in Calcutta some time after the 23rd instant. My address in Calcutta will be: C/o Sjt. Jiwanlalbhai, 44 Ezra Street, Calcutta, where perhaps you would enquire about the time we can meet.

VOL. 43 : 10 SEPTEMBER, 1928 - 14 JANUARY, 1929 335
Thanks. I had Miss Adam’s introduction forwarded to me from Sabarmati.

There will be no difficulty to buy a visitor’s ticket and this can be done after your arrival in Calcutta as you would be reaching Calcutta early enough for making all arrangements. The Congress meets as you know on the 29th instant.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm: S.N. 13765

424. LETTER TO WILLIAM SMITH

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, WARDHA,
December 6, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

When I was in Bangalore you kindly gave me the names of some trustworthy and well-trained young men who could be had for starting dairies. I have not got the correspondence with me and it may be that the young men whose names you gave are already suited. Could you oblige me with giving me such names and their addresses and their requirements if you know them again? Having received their names I shall put myself in touch with them. I want at least two.

I await your observations upon the little experiment I am conducting at Sabarmati.

I am in Wardha till 20th instant, after which my address for the rest of the month will be 44, Ezra Street, Calcutta.

Yours sincerely,

WILLIAM SMITH, ESQ.
IMPERIAL DAIRY EXPERT, BANGALORE

From a microfilm: S.N. 13766

425. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

WARDHA,
December 6, 1928

BHAISHRI CHHAGANLAL,

I have your letter. I see nothing suspicious in the fact that Chi. Santok retained those bills with her against the price of the wheat. I can understand how Chi. Narandas may have seen this in a different light.
The capacity for self-sacrifice of Chi. Santok and her children cannot be compared with yours or of anybody else. In such matters we can make no comparisons. The sacrifice by one person of all he possessed may seem insignificant in comparison with a small sacrifice by another person. It makes me unhappy that I do not get from Santok and hers as much as I had expected. This last episode, too, is painful. But in this case I do not wish to go further than Chi. Narandas would like and so I have loosened the reins. If, now, Radha works for payment, let her do so.

You, on your part, should always tell me what you think right and, in all matters in which you may exercise your freedom, you should do so. If you act thus, you will feel that your burden of responsibility has become much lighter. After having taken certain steps, never enter into a discussion about them with anyone. It is another matter if you explain the matter to me, when that is necessary. Instead of comparing yourself with anyone, consult your antaratman; when that is pleased, when your actions or words are not prompted by partiality or aversion, have no fear at all.

About Shanabhai your decision should be accepted as final. I have written to Shankerlal to see you in connection with the weaving section and decide everything in consultation with you. It is three days since I wrote to him. I agree with your view of the matter. All that remains to consider is how to solve the difficulties that may arise in doing what you suggest. Since the problem has come up, I will solve it once for all.

The news that Kusumbehn still gets fever worries me. I think the fact that I have not brought her with me is also a contributory cause of the fever. Mental agitation aggravates every disease. I have observed that its effect is more pronounced in malaria and similar diseases. She has remained behind, though she was extremely eager this time to accompany me. I do believe that from her own and from every other point of view it was desirable that she should remain there. That is why I insisted that she should stay behind.

Here Chhotalal has once again been confined to bed. In his case, too, the mind has had an important share. He has made other mistakes too. The bakery here is ready, but the first lot of bread turned out was not good. How is bread-making progressing there?

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

_Bapuna Patro — 7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshine_, pp. 20-1

1 Inner self
426. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

Thursday, December 6, 1928

CHI. KUSUM,

How is this? Fever again? Mental agitation is certainly a contributory cause. I have even left with Ramniklalbhai some Italian pills. If they do not have an adverse effect on you, you should take them for some time. Many persons take these pills in place of quinine. You were probably present when Motilalji praised them. It was he who sent those with Ramniklalbhai. Use them and see if they help you. If you do not wish to take them, I believe you must take quinine for some days. If you take Kuhne bath at the same time, the toxic effects of quinine, if not altogether counteracted, will at any rate be mitigated. My further advice is that, till you are completely all right, that is, for ten days at least, you should live only on milk and fruit. Spend as much as you like. In cases like yours, exclusion of fruit from the diet should be regarded as a crime. You know that during the first spell of fever also it was fruit which had helped you. I assume that you will do what I have suggested.

While the fever is on and as long as the weakness persists, do not be too eager to do physical work.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1763

427. TELEGRAM TO KHADI SHOP, SRINAGAR

December 7, 1928

KHADI SHOP
SRINAGAR
YOUR WIRE. KHADI BHANDARS FREE TAKE PART EXHIBITION.

GANDHI

From handwritten draft: S.N. 2456
428. TELEGRAM TO BANARSIDAS CHATURVEDI

December 7, 1928

BANARSIDAS CHATURVEDI
91 UPPER CIRCULAR ROAD, CALCUTTA

YOUR WIRE. ACCEPT PRESIDENTSHIP ON CONDITION SAMMELAN MORE BUSINESSLIKE THAN SPECTACULAR.

GANDHI

From handwritten draft: S.N. 2456

429. LETTER TO MOTILAL NEHRU

WARDHA,
December 7, 1928

DEAR MOTILALJI,

I have your two letters. The last enclosing a copy from Subhas Bose. But before he wrote I had already capitulated on the receipt of Dr. Bidhan’s letter copy of which is in your possession together with my answer. You will have seen that I have also sent instructions to khadi organizations to take part in the Exhibition in so far as at this late time in the day, it is possible for them to do so.

Yours sincerely,

PANDIT MOTILALJI NEHRU
ANAND BHAVAN, ALLAHABAD

From a photostat: S.N. 13774

430. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

WARDHA,
December 7, 1928

DEAR SATIS BABU,

I have your letter. I know the difficulties you raise, but this is again a case of self-suppression. I have said my say. We simply take such part in the Exhibition as is possible and with such detachment as we are capable of.¹ It is quite clear that the Committee had expected to ¹ Vide also “Letter to Satis Chandra Das Gupta”, 13-12-1928.

make a good deal out of mill-cloth exhibition and therefore it is a great thing from their standpoint to have done away with mill-cloth.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 13775

431. LETTER TO AKSEL G. KNUDSEN

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, WARDHA,

December 7, 1928

DEAR FRIEND

I wish indeed that I could at once comply with your request. But it is really almost a physical impossibility. The word ‘almost’ is a polite superfluity. Whilst therefore you have my good wishes, you will please excuse me. But you may select anything you like from my writings for your journal.

Yours sincerely,

AKSEL G. KNUDSEN
BREDGADE
90 SKERN, DENMARK

From a photostat: S.N. 13776

432. LETTER TO BHAGWAN DAS

December 7, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I hope by proper treatment you may yet get rid of your tuberculosis.

I send you a copy of Navajivan. If you wish to become a subscriber, you can do so. And if you are able to read Gujarati, why do you not write in Gujarati?

We are trying here for freedom as much as possible.

Yours sincerely,

BHAGWAN DAS, ESQ.
C/O AUSTRALIA-INDIA LEAGUE
SYDNEY, NEW SOUTH WALES, AUSTRALIA

From a photostat: S.N. 15073
433. LETTER TO CARLO LUCCARO

December 7, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter. I am sorry to have left upon you the impression when you came to see me that I was not pleased to receive you. You had come outside the time for visitors and therefore I was unable to give you much time.

Yours sincerely,

CARLO LUCCARO, ESQ.
TAORMINA
SICILY, ITALY

From a photostat: S.N. 15087

434. LETTER TO FRANCISCA STANDEATH

December 7, 1928

I have your letter subscribed also by Satyavan. Of course you will wear exactly what you like instead of my musts and must-nots. Do keep on smiling.

I am just now in Wardha. Mirabehn has come here to see me. She will presently be on the move again. Ba is with me. We are all well.

I hope both of you are happy there. You must be happy.

Yours sincerely,

MRS. FRANCISCA STANDEATH
GRAZ

From a photostat: S.N. 15091
435. LETTER TO KLAAS STORM

December 7, 1928

MY DEAR STORM.

Every letter that comes from you gives me delight and pleasure. I am so glad that you are getting on so well. I was delighted to have the card containing a portrait of your teacher and his family.

Do continue to write to me from time to time.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 15107

436. LETTER TO H. S. L. POLAK

December 7, 1928

MY DEAR Bhai,

I have your letter as also the contribution to the Maganlal Memorial. I do not know what other object to commend to your attention. There is of course the untouchability work and there is women’s work and there is the general national education work. There is tannery in terms of cow-protection, Hindi propaganda, agricultural improvement; these are the spending departments apart from the activities that can be properly called political. For me the foregoing constructive activities are an integral part of solid political work. The other, that is, the destructive type is absolutely useless and necessary, but it takes up the least part of my time.

What you tell me about Leon does surprise me. With the strictly abstemious life free of excitement that Millie lived when she was bearing Waldo and Leon and the hygienic and natural upbringing that the two boys had, I cannot understand the premature death of Waldo and the trouble with Leon. I suppose that the deadly poisonous atmosphere of London is responsible for shattering even such splendid constitutions as those of your boys. I am glad that Leon has recovered from the serious part of the disease and I hope that he will regain his hearing completely. How I wish it was possible to give Leon an open air life instead of the wretched solicitor’s desk.

I am glad you were successful about British Guiana.

The model of the Welsh spinning-wheel had not arrived when I

1 A trainee in the House of Brotherhood in Holland, an institution which was opened to carry on peace propaganda by Kees Bocke, an engineer and missionary acknowledged it. It did arrive safely for which many thanks. I have at the Ashram a full wheel of that type. It was sent by some German friend.

The calf incident has provided me with much instruction and an equal amount of amusement. It has thrown on me a tremendous amount of work in that I have to go through dozens of letters or rather essays on ahimsa. The majority of which were not in ahimsa but himsa tone. I do not know that I ever held a different view from the one I have now expressed though I had not as clear a perception of it as I seem to have now. You may not remember that when West brought to me a cat whose head was full of maggots and was living in tortures, I endorsed his suggestion that the poor animal’s life should be ended by drowning and it was done immediately. And at the Ashram too I allowed Maganlal to destroy rabid dogs.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 15108

437. LETTER TO V. G. TCHERKOFF

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

December 7, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter for which I thank you. I hope in the near future to deal with the objections so gently raised by you. Even if I don’t convince you in the reply that I may attempt, you will please believe me that expediency¹, as I understand the word, has no place in my scheme of life. Whatever I have done in connection with war I have done believing it to have been my duty for the moment.

Yours sincerely,

V. G. TCHERKOFF, ESQ.
PRESIDENT, MOSCOW VEGETARIAN SOCIETY
OULITZA OGAREVA 12, MOSCOW 9, U.S.S.R.

From a photostat: S.N. 15109

¹ A friend and follower of Tolstoy whose ‘objections’ were dealt with by Gandhiji in Young India, under the title “My Attitude towards War”, 7-2-1929
² Permanent address
³ The source however has ‘experience’.

VOL. 43 : 10 SEPTEMBER, 1928 - 14 JANUARY, 1929 343
438. LETTER TO GERTRUDE MARVIN WILLIAMS
SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,¹
December 7, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

Your book² came into my hands long before your letter. It came with several requests from friends to read it. I have been carrying it with me in the hope of snatching a few moments to be able to read it, but I have not yet succeeded in finding the time. As soon as I do, I shall certainly read the book and let you have my opinion.

Yours sincerely,

M. GERTRUDE MARVIN WILLIAMS
35 EAST 30TH STREET, NEW YORK CITY
From a photostat: S.N. 15111

439. LETTER TO A. MIRBEL
SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,³
December 7, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

It was a perfect pleasure to receive your letter in such good English. I have no difficulty about understanding what you wrote.

Mirabehn is just at present with me, but she has decided for the time being to travel from village to village in the several provinces of India with a view to understanding still more fully the message of khadi as also to assist the khadi movement with the technical knowledge that she has now gained.

Any little thing that you can send for babies will be accepted with grateful pleasure.

Mrs. Gandhi, Devdas and all the rest are quite well.

I am glad that you are trying to observe brahmacharya.
I am at present staying in the Satyagraha Ashram, Wardha, which is a branch of the parent body. I return to Sabarmati in January.

Yours sincerely,

A. MIRBEL
126 RUE DE DOUAI, LITTLE NORD (FRANCE)
From a photostat: S.N. 15112

¹ Permanent address
² Vide “Letter to F. B. Fisher”, 26-10-1928
³ ibid
440. LETTER TO JOHN HAYNES HOLMES

SAYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,¹
December 7, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter as also copy of the Macmillan Company’s. I must confess that I do not like the tone of their letter. But I suppose they cannot look at this transaction in any other light but that of a business job, whereas I think I have told you I have never entered into any business transactions about my writings. Nor did I enter into this transaction from any pecuniary motive.

Mr. Andrews is in direct correspondence with you and between you two you may do what you can with the Macmillan Company.

The Macmillan Company are mistaken in thinking that the autobiographical articles will be handed to them in a compressed form. When the chapters come to an end, they will be handed to them just as they are. For I should not have the leisure to compress them, and even if I tried, I should not know how to do so for the Western reader.

I am forwarding copy of your letter to Mr. Andrews.

Yours sincerely,

REV. JOHN HAYNES HOLMES
12 PARK AVENUE, NEW YORK CITY

From a photostat: S.N. 15122

441. LETTER TO C. F. ANDREWS

SAYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,²
December 7, 1928

MY DEAR CHARLIE,

I have your letter. I think I sent you a copy of the letter from the Macmillan Company, but not that of the letter from Rev. Holmes. I am now sending you copies of both in order to avoid any mistake. You will enter into communication with Holmes and do whatever you like. Personally I don’t want anything from the transaction and, if you can get something for the Pearson Memorial, by all means get it.

You will see from my letter³ to Holmes that I do not like at all

¹ Permanent address
² ibid
³ Vide the preceding item.
the manner in which the Macmillan Company are looking at this transaction. But I suppose they cannot look at it in any other way.

I am keeping fairly well. If you are going to British Guiana, Fiji and South Africa, I don’t suppose you will be back before the middle of next year. But I don’t mind that if you will promise to keep well and return stronger and healthier.

Love.

Mohan

ENCL. 3
C. F. ANDREWS, ESQ.
112 GOWER STREET, LONDON W. C. 1

From a photostat: G.N. 2631

442. LETTER TO MESSRS LONGMANS GREEN & CO., LTD.

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, WARDHA,
December 8, 1928

MESSRS LONGMANS GREEN & CO., LTD.
BOMBAY

DEAR SIRS,

I note what you say in your letter dated 3rd December that you do not publish or sell Morris’ Imperialism. I should however thank you to let me know whether you could procure it for me from some other book-seller, or let me know its publisher’s name as also whether it is likely to be available from any other bookseller in India.

In the mean time I should feel obliged if you could send me per V.P.P. at your earliest convenience the following books:

1. Lambert’s Imperialism
2. Adam’s Law of Civilization and Decay

I would also request you to send me a free catalogue of books on cotton and cotton industry.

Yours faithfully,

From a photostat: S.N. 15113
443. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

Saturday [December 8, 1928]

BHAISHRI CHHAGANLAL,

I have your letter. You should go on patiently doing what you can.

The Hasmukhrail chapter does not surprise me. In outbursts of enthusiasm he wishes to do many things, but cannot do them. I would advise you not to entrust him with outdoor work. If he becomes engrossed in the industrial activities of the Ashram, he will probably forget other things. Let him leave whenever he wishes to. I have no doubt that he is a really good man.

If Shardabehn can sincerely and wholly dedicate herself to service, I would regard the mistakes she has made as the fruit of God’s grace towards her. Certainly, she has ability. I am awaiting her letter.

If Radha is ready to work and if the family wishes to stay on, fix her pay. I cannot say whether, after my rather strong letter, they will stay. I expected Radha’s letter today.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I have written to you regarding Kusumbehn. If you feel that by being forced to remain there she will become weaker day by day and if she is very keen on going over here, let her come.

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshine, p. 22

444. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

WARDHA,

Saturday, December 8, 1928

CHI. KUSUM,

You never get well how is that? If your only wish is to come to me and if you think you will get well then please do come. I have written to Bhai Chhaganlal [Joshi] about it. But think about

1 As in the source
2 Vide “Letter to Chhaganlal Joshi”, 6-12-1928.
3 Vide the preceding item.

VOL. 43 : 10 SEPTEMBER, 1928 - 14 JANUARY, 1929 347
Prabhavati. At present, however, your first duty is to take care of your health.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1764

445. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

[After December 8, 1928]¹

CHI. NARANDAS,

I have your letter. I both like and do not like your suggestion. I like it if Santok, Radha and Rukhi have their heart in the Ashram, if they can tolerate a simple life and like the common kitchen. If, however, they are ready to identify themselves with the Ashram, they should indeed have faith in its ideals and try to live within Rs. 12. They could tell me if they found the sum too small. We would certainly not let anyone fall ill and die. If there is excessive expenditure on account of Manjula, it is certainly not Kashi who will meet the excess. What I yearn to see in them is faith in the Ashram and readiness to live in poverty. I have not seen these in them, nor in others. When I don’t see them in Santok and Radha and Rukhi, I naturally feel hurt. We should not allow the atmosphere in the whole Ashram to be spoiled because of their attitude. If the Ashram life does not suit the other inmates, they may leave it. If it does not suit Santok, even then the Ashram must provide for her maintenance. This is how I feel in the matter. But what you brothers say will be final with me. Even among the brothers, it is for you to think over the matter and guide the other brothers and me. I have already written² and explained that Radha should be paid a regular salary. I have written to her, but she has not yet replied to my letter.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-9: Narandas Gandhine, p. 46

¹ From the reference to a regular salary to be paid to Radha, this letter seems to have been written after “Letter to Chhaganlal Joshi”, 8-12-1928.
² Vide “Letter to Chhaganlal Joshi,” 8-12-1928.
AN UNNATURAL FATHER

A young man has sent me a letter which can be given here only in substance. It is as under:

I am a married man. I had gone out to a foreign country. I had a friend whom both I and my parents implicitly trusted. During my absence he seduced my wife who has now conceived of him. My father now insists that the girl should resort to abortion; otherwise, he says that the family would be disgraced. To me it seems that it would be wrong to do so. The poor woman is consumed with remorse. She cares neither to eat nor to drink, but is always weeping. Will you kindly tell me as to what my duty is in the case?

I have published this letter with great hesitation. As everybody knows such cases are by no means unfrequent in society. A restrained public discussion of the question therefore does not seem to me to be out of place.

It seems to me clear as daylight that abortion would be a crime. Countless husbands are guilty of the same lapse as this poor woman, but nobody ever questions them. Society not only excuses them but does not even censure them. Then, again, the woman cannot conceal her shame while man can successfully hide his sin.

The woman in question deserves to be pitied. It would be the sacred duty of the husband to bring up the baby with all the love and tenderness that he is capable of and to refuse to yield to the counsels of his father. Whether he should continue to live with his wife is a ticklish question. Circumstances may warrant separation from her. In that case he would be bound to provide for her maintenance and education and to help her to live a pure life. Nor should I see anything wrong in his accepting her repentance if it is sincere and genuine. Nay, further, I can imagine a situation when it would be the sacred duty of the husband to take back an erring wife who has completely expiated for and redeemed her error.

THE TRAGEDY OF A YOUNG COUPLE

A young man writes:

I am fifteen years of age. My wife is seventeen. I am in a great fix. I was opposed to this ill-assorted union all along, but my father and my uncle instead of paying heed to my protest only flew into a temper and began to scolded me and call me names, and the father of the girl just for the personal satisfaction of securing a rich alliance married his child to me although I was at that time of tender age and younger than she. How stupid! And why could not my father leave me alone instead of forcing an incompatible match upon me and landing me into a pit? Could I have understood at that time the implications of the thing I would never have suffered myself to be married. But that is all now over and done. What would you now advise me to do?

\[1\] The Gujarati original of this appeared in Navajivan, 9-12-1928. The translation is by Pyarelal.

The correspondent has given his name and address in full but wants the reply to be given to him through Navajivan as he is afraid that my letter may not be permitted to reach him. This is a deplorable state of things. My advice to this young man is that if he has the courage he should repudiate the marriage. For neither he nor the girl in question could possibly have had any idea of the vows that were administered to them at the saptapadi1 ceremony when they were married. Since their marriage they have never lived together. It is up to the young man therefore to take his courage in both hands and brave the prospect of being driven out of his home as a result of his repudiation of the so-called marriage. And I would beseech the respective parents of the couple, if my words can reach them, to have pity on their innocent children and not to force a cruel tragedy upon them. A boy of fifteen is just a stripling. He should be going to school or attending a workshop, not be saddled with the duties of a householder. I hope the parents of the couple in question will wake up to a sense of their duty. If they do not, it will be the clear duty of the boy and the girl respectfully to disregard parental authority and follow the light of reason and conscience.

Young India, 3-1-1929

447. THE BLOOD-STAINED PATH

The Government and the Commission do not appear to be satisfied with the senseless beating up of Lalaji and his colleagues. It seems that the Central Government has adjudged the Punjab police to be innocent and given the latter a certificate to this effect. This has provided encouragement to the police in Lucknow, because, if the police in Lahore had no reason to assault Lalaji and his colleagues, the police in Lucknow had even less excuse for attacking Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru and his colleagues. And whereas the police in Lahore used only lathis, their counterparts in Lucknow were found to have used spears besides lathis against innocent and unarmed persons. Further, it

---

1 An essential ritual in Hindu marriage; literally, ‘seven steps’ also seems from Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru’s account that they demonstrated their courage by showering stones on the people too.
Two of these persons are in a critical condition.

In this manner, the Commission’s path is stained with the blood of the innocent. The members of the Imperial Commission have, through country-wide strikes, black-flag demonstrations and processions, received due notice that the people do not welcome the Commission although it may have met with the approval of selected Government officials and a few peasants. Some witnesses too may go over to their side. It would be a matter of surprise if from among the population numbering crores in a vast country like India, a few people could not be found to welcome or assist the Commission. It is, however, clear that the majority of the people who take part in politics do not welcome it. The fact that, despite this, it goes round touring from one city to another amounts to nothing but an exhibition of authority. The Commission need not travel from one city to another in search of witnesses. Neither has it to conduct any police inquiry nor make any investigations on the spot, but merely to examine witnesses who have been nominated for that very purpose. It can do this task at smaller cost, with less trouble and without irritating the people who are sufficiently enraged. It looks, however, as if it is ashamed of following this course of action. It wants garden parties to be given for its members, it wants addresses of welcome and deputations to wait on it.
All this pomp and show cannot be accomplished by remaining at one place.

However, if the Commission does not realize its limitations and if the Government does not wish to see any violation of law and order, the Government should serve a notice to the Commission, that the people are displeased by its arrival in various cities, that the majority of the people cannot tolerate its presence, that disturbances may break out in cities upon its arrival there, and that therefore it should work sitting at one place. If the Government issue such notice, the Commission would sit in one place but the Government does not wish to have a peaceful atmosphere; it wishes to exercise its authority.
Hence it wishes to take round the Commission in procession from one city to another, even at the cost of suppressing the people.

And if my guess is correct, the warning that Pandit Motilal has given the Government will have little effect. Panditji’s warning runs as follows: “Your Performance in Lucknow is such that, if any, disturbances now occur there or at any other place, your officers, who for the last three days have been behaving in an atrocious manner, will bear the sole responsibility for them.” There is no doubt that despite the indignities perpetrated by these officers, despite the fact that public leaders have been beaten up, the peaceful atmosphere that the people have maintained can be maintained in India alone. In any other part of the world outbreaks of violence would definitely follow such insults. Some people may well regard this as cowardly conduct. I believe that underlying this is the people’s training in peaceful conduct. It is my belief that the people have, to some extent, learnt the lesson of peace which they are being taught since the year 1920. Both the Pandits—father and son—have drawn the very same conclusion and in their speeches have laid emphasis on the need for peace.

If the inferences drawn by Pandit Motilal, Pandit Jawaharlal and me are correct, the peace that has been maintained in Lucknow and Lahore is a good sign. We shall get our verdict much sooner than is generally believed. That verdict may be one which is delivered peacefully or otherwise. The present state of suspense is not going to last long. However, it is also evident that swaraj cannot be secured by the leaders merely suffering blows. There is no alternative before the public but to make great sacrifices, whether violent or non-violent. It is my prayer to God that the people may make sacrifices for upholding the pledge of non-violence which they took in 1920, so that India will gain a prime place in world history in lessons of peace. This so because this world which is filled with violence sorely needs peace, and if today there is any country on the horizon which can show the path of peace it is only India.

While thinking of the blood-stained journey of the Commission, there is one painful fact which is a matter of shame and should not, cannot, be overlooked. Perhaps it may be regarded as something understandable that the insult to the people does not have any effect on the Commission’s British members. But it is a matter of shame and sorrow that those Indians who have been appointed subsidiary members of the Commission are putting up with this insult and holding on to their positions. We can see a reflection of our own weaknesses in the behaviour of these members. They are aware that members of all prominent political parties in India have boycotted the Commission. How will the people be able to forget the fact that they have ignored such a boycott?

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 9-12-1928
448. GOOD CARDING

At one time the processing of cotton had become so very common that in all the languages of the world many proverbs and figures of speech which were based on it came into use. If anyone is hypercritical, we say to him: ‘You spin yarn which is too fine.’ If anyone goes on talking uselessly and is also critical of others, we say: ‘Why do you keep carding in this manner?’ This indicates that in the art of spinning and carding people knew exactly when the limits had been exceeded either way. As we have forgotten that knowledge today, we have also forgotten the many subtle verbal usages in our language drawn from the processing of cotton. Now as that activity is being revived, those who regard it as a sacrificial act are trying to exalt it as well and are engaged day and night in thinking out ways and means of improving and expanding it. They are aware of the fact that, along with these additions and improvements, the capacity is being gained to supplement the meagre income of the poor. With this idea in view, one who spins in order to serve writes:

Till now I myself was under the impression that cotton could be carded well only by drying it. This correspondent is an experienced person. He has made a careful study of the art of carding cotton. He teaches others and I find his argument well grounded. Hence this letter of his has been published in order that we may learn from the experience of experts like him. I hope that those who are interested in such activities and those who spin regularly will write of their experiences and I suggest that those who spin for sacrificial purposes should imitate the interest taken in this activity by the above writer. Those who perform their sacrificial acts should not do so merely as an onerous duty to be done with; they would take the greatest interest in the activity if they hoped to have daily darshan of God in it; they would make it more interesting and would be sorry if they were prevented or had to refrain from doing that activity on any particular day. I have seen devoted Vaishnavas worshipping their Master. Every day they add some adornment to the image. They prepare many kinds of delicacies as offerings and feel upset if while travelling or due to ill health they cannot perform this worship. They either give up all food or at least subsist on the very minimum until they can perform their worship. Nowadays ostentation, false pride and the desire to enjoy oneself have crept into it and it has become part of this worship.

---

1 The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had condemned the common practice of drying cotton in the sun prior to carding.
That form of worship has therefore become the subject of adverse criticism and those performing it instead of purifying themselves very often suffer from lack of character. Such rituals which have originated in the purest of sentiments are being continuously misused in the world. Hence Narasinh Mehta has sung:

What if one has put on a caste mark or worn a string of tulsı beads? What if one counts one's beads and repeats the name of God? All these are merely tricks to earn one's living.

May the great sacrifice of spinning never fall into disrepute. This depends on the purity and understanding of those who perform it.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 9-12-1928

449. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

WARDHA,
December 9, 1928

CHI. MAHADEV,

I got your letter. I have no doubt that your experience will prove very useful. I have some share in Mrityunjaya’s foolishness. He asked me whether he could write to me to inquire if he would get an agency in case some newspaper reporters accompanied me. I thought there was no harm. I had never expected such a long business letter. How can I protest now that this is too sharp a thrust?

Trivedi had sent to me, about a month ago, the original of the extract he has sent to you. I have preserved it for use on an appropriate occasion.

I have gone through the portion about the spinning-wheel in R. B.’s speech. I will make use of it.

It would be surprising if Vallabhbhai did not do what he asked others to do. He is out to win swaraj through Bardoli, and he can succeed in that only if he identifies himself completely with the cause. Tell him that before asking you to learn riding he himself should do that. He is not too old for it.

My health is fairly good. In my experiment, which I am carrying on with great caution, I have now included milk of almond and fruits. Your forgetting to send the wire to Karsandas\(^1\) is certainly unpardonable. I had to suffer much for your lapse. Karsandas was in extreme distress. Surajbehn did not receive help when she needed it

---

1 Son of Rajendra Prasad urgently. But I have always forgiven even unpardonable lapses by you. Hence I forgive this too. Please do not make such a mistake again. In future, even if such a task is entrusted by me, you may tell me that you would be happier not to be burdened with it when you had come to spend only a day or two with me. I remember now that there was no one in the verandah at that time except you, and so I placed the wire in your hand. But do not grieve over the matter now. I have dwelt on it at this length only in order that you may be careful in future. You had also forgotten to give my message to Shantikumar, but that was about a small matter.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11440

450. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

WARDHA,
Sunday, December 9, 1928

CHI. KUSUM,

I got your letter. In a sense your inference is correct. At present, I may be said to be busier than I used to be there. I do not get up early in the morning. I go to bed before nine in the evening. However, I used to have some leisure when I was there. Here, on the other hand, I am all the time writing or dictating something, with my head bent low, and even then I can hardly cope with the work. Of course I do not let the work exceed my strength. It cannot weigh me down with worries. I do the best I can. As a rule I go out for a walk twice a day. In this matter I am able to follow the rule more regularly here.

You ought to improve your health. Do not for any reason miss the benefit of milk and fruit. For the present, live only on these two. If, in addition, you take a little quinine daily, you should not get fever again. For some time eat nothing which is of no benefit to your body.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1765
451. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

Sunday [December 9, 1928]

CHI. PRABHAVATI

Your letter. Mrityunjaya’s letter mentioned Friday as the probable day of your leaving for Dwarka. But having waited for a day and knowing well your nature, I have written.

Do only as much as you can. Do not fall ill through your desire to work to excess. Half the period is over now. I hope to come in January. Learn the rest from the letter to Kusum.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 3323

452. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

Sunday [December 9, 1928]

BHAISHRI CHHAGANLAL,

I have your letter. You need not be in a panic if Lakshmidas or Mahadev cannot go over there. After all, it is for the Secretary to shoulder the burden.

I can understand Lakshmidas’s view of our relation with the Spinners’ Association. Both the views, yours and his, can be supported, but your view will be regarded as final since it will be for you to carry out the arrangements decided upon. Whatever arrangements are preferred by the person in charge of a piece of machinery must be made. But the important thing, as I see from here, is that there should be harmonious relations between you and Narandas.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I also feel that Shardabehn’s letter is not clear. If you have a talk with her, you will be able to understand her mind better.

1 From the reference to letter to Kusum Desai; vide the preceding item.
2 As in the source
3 The relation of the Ashram with the office of the Spinners’ Association located in the Ashram
See that you do not imitate others and attempt anything beyond your strength. Take as much milk and other things in your food as you require. God protects my life, for my experiments are inspired from within. What you attempt will be at present imitation. Your duty is to build a strong body with whatever food is necessary for the purpose and to devote yourself to your work. My experiments have not, so far, come in the way of my work. On the contrary, I believe, that they have helped it, for I have gained through them serenity of mind.

[From Gujarati]

_Bapuna Patro-7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshi, p. 23_

453. LETTER TO SHANTIKUMAR MORARJI

ASHRAM, WARDHA,

December 9, 1928

CHI. SHANTIKUMAR,

I have your letter. I have credited into the Lalaji Memorial Fund the cheque which you sent.

I see no need for sending the Parsi or the Irish lady to the Ashram. It will suffice if they write out the various methods of making biscuits which they know. Even though no ghee or oil may have been added, the biscuits must be light.

I read in the _Times_ about the 6th or 7th (December), a review of a pamphlet about how to recognize poisonous snakes. I forget the author’s name. The review appeared in the “Current Topics”. If you can get the pamphlet there, please send a copy.

In regard to Sumant, Shankerlal writes and tells me that it is not necessary to publish any statement about him in newspapers. He has been dismissed.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

[PS.]

I have got the name of the book:

_Poisonous Terrestrial Snakes of British India and How to Recognize Them_ by Colonel Wall issued by the Bombay Natural History Society.

1 _The Times of India_
454. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

[Before December 10, 1928]¹

CHI. NARANDAS,

I send with this a newspaper which contains a report about the Hyderabad State and also a letter from Babu Rupanarayan. I have taken an extract from the report which was relevant to my purpose and drafted a note² and sent it for publication in Young India. In my note I have also given a framework of the co-operative scheme advocated by Rupababu. Read it and think over the matter and write to me if you wish to suggest any changes.

As regards spinning yarn of five counts, why do you say that we cannot spin yarn of over 20 counts? If you do not get there cotton of the required quality for spinning fine yarn, we get here any quantity of cotton grown from American seed. These days I spin yarn of not less than 30 counts. I find no difficulty in doing so. I do not get even tired in carding the cotton. I hardly take 15 minutes to card 3/4 tola weight of cotton and making a sliver from it. I spin yarn of 30 counts from that sliver. I, therefore, require only 3/8 of a tola weight of cotton. I have not got the strength of the yarn tested yet. I have told Chhotelal to get it tested. It may not perhaps come to much, but it should be good enough after some experience. That we should spin fine yarn is an old idea of mine. I believe that we should wear whatever coarse khadi we can get and should spin fine yarn and give it to those who require it. Think over this.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-9: Narandas Gandhine, p. 48

¹ From the reference to Gandhiji spinning yarn of 30 counts and not having got the strength of the yarn tested, the letter seems to have been written before “Letter to Chhaganlal Joshi”, 11-12-1928.
² Vide “Khadi in Hyderabad State”, 20-12-1928.
455. A MESSAGE

WARDHA,
December 10, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

Your wire and letter were received simultaneously. Here is the message:

“Our patience is proverbial. Let it not be said by the future generations it was the patience of the coward.”

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a microfilm: S.N. 14609

456. LETTER TO VITHALDAS JERAJANI

WARDHA,
December 10, 1928

BHAISHRI VITHALDAS,

I have your letter. Do you remember that you received a letter from Bareilly suggesting that there should be a separate department for khadi propaganda and that you sent that letter to me? I thereupon wrote in Young India on this subject. In response to that, I received one or two hundred rupees. Ever since that time, I have been thinking about the subject of propaganda. But, then, who would undertake this work? As I reflected over this problem, I thought of you. You are already doing something in Bombay. Moreover, you know from experience about the kinds of khadi produced in the country. Probably, therefore, you will understand what propaganda work needs to be done and you will be able to do it. That is why I asked you because you understand more about the problem [than others are likely to do].

If you still do not follow me, please write to me.

I have not yet been able to finish the article about Kashmir.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 9766
457. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

WARDHA,
Silence Day, December 10, 1928

CHI. KUSUM,

I got your letter. It is good that you have started taking quinine every day. What about hip-baths? It is very necessary to take them. They will definitely counteract the toxic effects of quinine.

You can accept service from Kanti¹. One who is always ready to serve may certainly accept service from others. This will do for today.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1766

458. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

WARDHA,
December 10, 1928

SISTERS,

I have the letter written on your behalf. You will get information about me from the letter written to the whole Ashram.

All that is required to put a stop to the noise in the kitchen is a firm determination. Once you make such a determination the noise will definitely cease.

If you are not at home with your kitchen work as yet, let me remind you that you cannot think of doing any other for another year. It is best therefore that you make up your mind to like your work.

But the painful incident that has just occurred must set all of you thinking. The incident is not now a secret and it should not be hidden. Therefore I want to discuss it here. Not one but at least three of you were involved in it. It is needless to point the finger of scorn at any of these three because all of us, whether men or women, might be guilty of such misconduct at some time or other or have already been guilty; I want you to learn two lessons from this incident. In the first place we must stick to our kitchen work for it is through it that we came to know about the misconduct. If we live in the shelter of a home, we can never know our capacity for sin. We realize the extent of it only when a suitable opportunity presents itself. Here such an opportunity occurred, aided by [bad] company. The result was the emergence of the latent sin. The kitchen has in this way proved useful. Secondly there was not enough courage to do things openly, so theft and lying were resorted to. Why should we not do a thing we want to do boldly? Why should we be afraid of appearing as we actually are?

¹ Harilal Gandhi’s son

360 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI

If we like tasty food, why hide the fact? Craving for tasty dishes is no sin. The sin lies in hiding the craving and in secretly indulging in it. Everyone, man or woman, is at liberty to eat whatever he or she desires. That was one of our objects in converting the Satyagraha Ashram into an Udyoga Mandir. Anyone may satisfy his craving for good food, the only restriction is that the good food must be prepared in the common kitchen. None should cook delicacies whether secretly or openly in one’s private rooms. One may go out and eat a delicacy at a friend’s place, there is nothing to hide in this, or one may keep eatables such as dried fruits and so on in one’s room. It is better if such freedom is not availed of, though there is no restriction on such freedom. My earnest request to you is this: Always appear what you really are; whatever you do, do it openly. Never allow yourselves to be unduly influenced by another; if you ever promise to do a thing, never act contrary to it.

Everyone that does kitchen work must strictly follow her routine. It does not look as though you had as yet been able to remove the fears of Gangabehn senior. Every single activity in the kitchen must go on regularly like clockwork.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
I have not revised this letter.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3684
I think all of you would like me to give in my weekly letter the details of my experiments in diet. I started feeling considerably weak from the last Wednesday or Thursday. As I had told you, I did not wish to persist in my experiments if I lost weight because of them. Vinoba, too, felt a little unhappy, for he saw my weakness; the weight also had gone down. On Friday, I started taking oranges and other fruits and included in the diet almond-milk. My weight was taken yesterday and it had increased by one pound. The weakness had begun to disappear from the very day that I included almond-milk and fruits in the diet; there is no trace of it now. I still see, therefore, no need to include milk. I have continued oil. I see no harm done to anyone here through it. The loss of weight and the weakness may be ascribed to no other cause but the sudden reduction of protein in my diet. The only things which are excluded now are milk and ghee. My objection is especially to goat’s milk. If I can give it up, I shall have peace of mind. I have no aversion to fruits, fresh or dry. In giving them up I was prompted only by the consideration of expense. I will not, however, insist on excluding either at the cost of my health. All of you will see that the results so far are beneficial. Nevertheless, I wish to make no predictions about the outcome of the experiment. We can judge nothing in fifteen days. We can come to some conclusion only if the same condition is maintained for three months. Let no one, therefore, give up milk in a fit of enthusiasm. But anyone who wishes to try the effect of milk and linseed oil may do so. It is the experience of many here, including of course Pyarelal and Chhotelal, that fresh oil is harmless. It has done Pyarelal and Chhotelal no harm whatever. Subbiah has joined them now, and so has Vasumatibehn. These two have not been in the experiment for many days. It seems, however, that linseed oil, if anyone wishes to experiment with its use, must be fresh. It should not be warmed. You may get the seeds pressed in ghani¹ there. The oil can be sent from here, but the railway freight is excessive. If sent by goods train, it will take a long time to reach there. You can instal a ghani for about Rs. 100, or Rs. 150. But the best course just now is to arrange with the owner of a

¹ Indigenous oil-mill
ghani in the city. Of course I do not insist that this matter be taken up. We experience many difficulties, and they will remain; that is why I merely set down here the effects of excluding ghee and make a suggestion about how to get the oil. Two other effects of the oil have been observed, and they are these: it acts as a laxative and stimulates appetite. It is Pyarelal’s experience that, instead of weakening, it stimulates appetite. It is the experience of the people here that it acts as a laxative. Personally I can say nothing positive about its having such an effect.

And now another subject.

The noise in the kitchen there must stop. I expect to see this outward reform when I return there. It should not be difficult for anyone never to speak, unless quite necessary, while eating. It should also not be difficult to keep the children quiet.

My second suggestion is that some restriction should be placed on the quantity of vegetables served. Whatever the vegetable that is cooked, the quantity per head should not exceed 10 tolas. According to medical science, more than this quantity of green vegetable is not required. I hear that attendance at prayers is again becoming thinner. It should not be necessary for me to explain at this hour of the day that no one should expect someone else to stimulate his or her interest in prayers. The interest should be felt within. As the body needs food and feels hungry, so the soul needs and feels hungry for prayer. Prayer is a form of communication with God. So long as our need for attendance at prayers is not the same as that for attendance at meals, for which we require no one to goad us, so long our faith in God is weak; or, though we subscribe to the rules of the Ashram we do not observe them and to that extent we are unfaithful to it and violate the vow of truth. Anyone who realizes this will not remain absent at prayers—whether morning or evening—without some strong reason.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshi, pp. 24-6

460. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

December 10, 1928

BHAISHRI CHHAGANLAL,

On Mondays I write letters in the early morning. The post comes later. I have got today’s.
The more attentively you listen to the antaratman, the purer will your decisions be, you will become purer, more fearless and calmer, and your health too will improve.

I have written to Vidyavatibehn and told her that...¹ [of] Berua², who is a votary of truth, will never disappoint me.

Even the fanciful experiments of Prabhudas’ do not displease me. If nobody else, I shall help to get his woollen khadi sold. Acquaint him from time to time with your views and those of Narandas.

Chhotelal has now recovered. If only he would agree, I would send him away. He is a bit conceited and often interferes with affairs for which he has little aptitude. I am patient with him because he is a lover of truth and brahmacharya. Though violent by nature, he sincerely believes in non-violence. I see his many weaknesses every day, still I think well enough of him to be patient with him. And so we cling to each other.

I hope the bread which you make there is good.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro-7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshine, pp. 26-7

461. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIDYA
Silence Day, December 10, 1928

CHI. GANGABEHN,

I have your letter. Please do not spoil your health by working beyond your strength. And do not feel hurt whether others work or do not work or whether they respect you or insult you. Only when you can do this can it be said that your tapascharya in the kitchen has succeeded. As you become less sensitive, the work will be done more smoothly and others, too, will help you. Acknowledge whatever help they give. If you see insincerity and false show in anyone, non-co-operate with that person.

How many persons take their meals in the kitchen these days? Do you run short of milk? Do all the persons come for the meals in

¹ As in the source
² Name of a village in U. P.
³ Son of Chhaganlal Gandhi time? Is there a little more quiet now? Are you gaining on weight? I put on one pound during this week.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-6: G. S. Gangabehnne, p. 16

462. LETTER TO BRIJKRISHNA CHANDIWALA

December 10, 1928

CHI. BRIJKRISHNA,

I have your letter. The experiment\(^1\) I am conducting was necessary for my mental peace; I am careful [about it].

On the 20th I leave this place for Sambalpur. I shall reach Calcutta on the 23rd. I hope to reach the Ashram in January.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

What shall I do about the Fund?

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2361

463. LETTER TO ASHRAM CHILDREN

WARDHA, December 10, 1928

DEAR BOYS AND GIRLS,

Your club has grown. You have elected a little boy as president and appointed another little boy secretary. Now bring lustre to your club and let the president and the secretary be worthy of their positions.

Do remember this: 1. Never depart from truth in whatever you do. 2. Always maintain cleanliness and tidiness. Know the difference between cleanliness and tidiness. A pupil who washes his towel preserves cleanliness. But if he then puts it anywhere crumpled up he is not tidy. Tidiness means that as soon as the towel has dried it should be properly folded and carefully put in its place.

\(^1\) Of giving up milk and taking almond-milk, oil and fruits; vide also “Letter to Chhaganlal Joshi”, 10-12-1928.
3. Whether you are in the school-room or in the kitchen, for us both are school, and therefore there should be no noise in either place.

4. Keep the rule in everything.

5. Everyone should go for physical exercise and do it according to his capacity.

6. The yajna of spinning should be performed everyday. Spinning includes carding. I have suggested to Nara Ondasbhai that everyone should spin yarn of 30 counts.\(^1\) There is a great demand for yarn of that count and we should be able to meet it.

Blessings form

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/35

464. LETTER TO DURGA GIRI

WARDHA,

December 10, 1928

CHI. DURGABEHN\(^2\) (BALMANDIR).

What have you done? Will you pass the test when I come there? Have you stopped bring troublesome in class? Are everybody’s eyes, ears and nails kept clean? Like the body, do you also keep the mind clean? We should not speak untruth even if we have to die. Do you remember that story about the axe of gold? Do you understand that truth is a million times more precious than an axe of gold?

Let those who are creating noise in the kitchen raise their hands and promise not to do so in future and keep the promise.

The boys and girls ought not to quarrel with one another. The older children should never harass the younger ones. What more may I write?

BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/38

\(^1\) Vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, 10-12-1928

\(^2\) Daughter of Dalbahadur Giri
465. LETTER TO MADAN MOHAN MALAVIYA

WARDHA,
December 10, 1928

Bhai Saheb,

I was pained to learn from Ghanshyamdasji that you are being indifferent to your health. You have vowed to live long. You are not going before the attainment of freedom. Then, how is it that you are not taking the necessary care of your health?

I shall meet you in Calcutta.

Your younger brother,

Mohan

From a copy of the Hindi : Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/39

466. TELEGRAM TO MOTILAL ROY

WARDHAGANI,
December 11, 1928

Motilal Roy
Chandernagore

You have not lost but gained your wife.
Being disembodied she will claim greater affection.
May you and she have peace.

Gandhi

From a photostat: G.N. 11036

467. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

WARDHA,
December 11, 1928

Bhaishri Chhaganlal,

The issues of “Mandir Samachar” which I get are still illegible. If there is any defect in the machine, please get it repaired. If the fault lies with the person who takes out copies, find out what it is.

On getting my yarn tested, I find that its count is 30, evenness 93 and strength 68. These days the yarn I spin is uniformly of 30

1Where Gandhiji was to attend the Congress session in December counts. I cannot draw more than 160 lengths an hour.

Are you now taking more cow’s milk? Does everyone write his or her diary regularly?

I wrote this last night.

Tuesday

I have got your letter.

I questioned Keshu and he tells me that he did not write what you attribute to him. He merely described my condition and suggested that it would be better if Santok and others left the Ashram. I believe that in such matters Keshu keeps himself within limits. Whether or not he does, you should do your duty with firmness. I have stated my views clearly. Give them the facility which Chi. Narandas has suggested and then let them live as they choose.

Do not attach too much importance to what Shankerlal says. That is his manner of speaking. We should admit, however, that there is some truth in what he says and remove our shortcomings.

The members of every institution which has acquired prestige in society tend to become proud. We are not free from this defect. I shall not, however, feel hurt if the office of the Spinners’ Association is finally removed from the Ashram. Our aim is to carry a burden, to do our duty, and not to enjoy authority. When one burden becomes light, we may, if we have the necessary strength, accept another. If the khadi section of the Spinners’ Association is removed from the Ashram and if we can lend to it the services of our men, we may do even that. But the position is this: the decision in the present case is to be arrived at jointly by you and Narandas. If you two can unite as milk and sugar mix and become one, the department will work and be a success. If there is a gulf between you, it will never work. In that case, it may as well be removed from the Ashram. I am neutral in this matter.

There is no harm if the totals of the entries in regard to spinning are read on Friday. None of us understood whom you meant by Makarani1.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I have not read the letter after finishing it.

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshine, pp. 27-8

---

1 A woman belonging to Makarana community in Saurashtra; Gandhiji had given this name to Ramabehn, the addressee’s wife. Vide also “Letter to Chhaganlal Joshi”, 20-12-1928.
468. LETTER TO KUSUM AND PRABHAVATI

December 11, 1928

CHI. KUSUM,

I have your letter, and Prabhavati’s too. Take this letter as meant for both of you. There is little time now before the post is cleared and I have plenty of work lying before me. You have not done right in stopping oranges. It will do you good even if you take them for a week. I think they are necessary for your health, and there is no doubt that they suit you. Papaya cannot take the place of oranges. Lemon and honey do, but only in some degree, as I see from my own experience here.¹

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I understand what you say about yourself too. There was a letter from Vidyavati today. I wrote to her a long letter only yesterday.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1767

¹ What follows was written in Hindi.
469. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

WARDHA,

Tuesday [December 11, 1928]

BHAI GHANSHYAMDASJI,

I got your letter about Rajagopalachari. I like the suggestion. But it is difficult to say whether Rajaji’s constitution will stand the strain of this work. Anyway I shall write to him. How is your health now?

Yours,

MOHANDAS

SHRIYUT GHANSHYAMDAS BIRLA

8 ROYAL EXCHANGE PLACE, CALCUTTA

From Hindi: C. W. 6163. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

470. TELEGRAM TO DR. B. C. ROY

WARDHA,

December 12, 1928

DR. BIDHAN ROY

36 WELLINGTON STREET

PARTY ABOUT TWENTYFIVE CAN EASILY STAY TENTS. BUT PLEASE LET ME ACCEPT JIWANLAL’S HOSPITALITY.

GANDHI

From handwritten draft: S.N. 2456

---

1 This letter is presumably the reply to the addressee’s letter of December 8, requesting Gandhiji to induce C. Rajagopalachari to accept the position of the Honorary General Secretary of the Prohibition League of India, in succession to Rev. Herbert Anderson.
471. A LETTER

WARDHA,
December 12, 1928

DEAR FRIENDS,

I have now gone through the copy of the memorandum signed by you all. I have explained what I consider to be the implications of truth and ahimsa. In the memorandum you mention non-co-operation of the Congress which is based on ahimsa, and you mention in the eighth article ahimsa and satya as the foundations of religion and yet I saw in our discussion that some of you believe in both truth and non-violence as a policy or, if you like, a temporary creed obligatory only whilst you were attached to the national schools. I have endeavoured to show you that national schools whose foundation is truth and ahimsa cannot be built up when the teachers are half-hearted even regarding the very foundation. At the critical moment they are bound to fail. While, therefore, I honour you for your convictions and the brave manner in which you have stated them, I want you to appreciate my difficulty in trying to find financial support for your institution in any extraordinary manner. It must be also, I suggest, then a matter of honour for you whether you would ask for or accept money through one who is absolutely wedded to truth and ahimsa and for whom they are not a temporary creed but matters of life and death.

In the circumstances, I would like you to consider the whole position and you discuss amongst yourselves what you would have me to do and then Sjt. Tijaray and others who do not believe in truth and ahimsa as their final creed should come over to Wardha and discuss the thing with me and come to a final conclusion. My desire is to help the school to the best of my ability. But I see that there is a moral difficulty which I had not foreseen.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 13781

---

1 A.R. Tijaray, Principal of Tilak Vidyalaya, Nagpur, in his letter dated November 15, 1928, had invited Gandhiji to inaugurate the annual lecture series of the institution which were to be held between November 20 and 25, 1928. This letter seems to be addressed to the staff and students of the institution.
472. LETTER TO N. C. CHUNDER

WARDHA,
December 12, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I do hope that you are not going to drag me to the Indian National Social Conference.¹ In many respects though I am claimed as a social reformer, I am really a back number and perfectly useless.

In spite of the great weight attached to Sir Sivaswami Iyer’s matured views, I am in no sympathy whatsoever with artificial birth-control methods advocated by him so energetically. You may not know that I oppose them uncompromisingly as I consider them to undermine the very moral foundations of society. But of course I have no desire whatsoever to engage in a platform controversy and air my views before the Social Conference. I would therefore ask you to put me out of sight and out of mind for the Social Conference.

Yours sincerely,

N. C. CHUNDER², ESQ.
CALCUTTA

From a microfilm: S.N. 13782

473. LETTER TO NARGIS CAPTAIN

WARDHA,
December 12, 1928

I had your letter and the cheque. I know you do not expect any letters from me, though you may write an occasional letter to me. I certainly like this one-sided arrangement.

But are you keeping better now? Are you stronger? I have certainly not been more ill than you had believed. As a matter of fact, the illness was only a slight derangement.

Do write to me whatever you like. Are you not coming to Calcutta? Or are you not strong enough? But, if you don’t come, do write the promised long letter. I shall try to read it and I shall not

² Chairman, Reception Committee of the Conference attempt to reply to it unless there is something arising from it which I must say.

MISS NARGIS CAPTAIN
BOMBAY

From a photostat: S.N. 13783

474. LETTER TO E. C. DEWICK

WARDHA,
December 12, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I was indeed sorry that I could not be with you in Mysore, but it was not possible. I tried but failed.

I would indeed be delighted to meet Dr. Mott1. The only suitable time is likely to be between 7th to 15th January, 1929. So far as I am aware, at present, I am likely to be in Sabarmati during those dates, and, if I am, I should be delighted to receive Dr. Mott at the Ashram.
It is however just likely that after Congress I might have to go to Burma when the whole of my programme will be disturbed.

My present dates are: up to the 20th at Wardha, from 23rd to the end of the year Calcutta. My Calcutta address would be C/o Sjt.
Jiwanlalbhai, 44 Ezra Street, Calcutta.

Yours sincerely,

REV. E. C. DEWICK
MADRAS

From a photostat: S.N. 13785

475. LETTER TO ROLAND J. WILD

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, WARDHA,
December 12, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter. I had hoped to be able to give you a reply in full. But I have not been able to get hold of the articles you sent me. I have not them by me in Wardha and I have just discovered that the cuttings that you were good enough to send me were passed on to the Austrian friends who have left India. If you could kindly send me the cuttings again, I would certainly tell you where, in my opinion, I was misrepresented, no doubt quite unconsciously, by you.

1 Dr. John R. Mott, Chairman of the World Student Christian Federation
If you will send the cuttings to my present address at Wardha, I shall get them more quickly than if you send them to Sabarmati. I am in Wardha till the 20th instant and then go to Calcutta where my address is:

C/o Sjt. Jiwanlalbhai, 44 Ezra Street, Calcutta.

Yours sincerely,

ROLAND J. WILD, ESQ.

“THE CIVIL AND MILITARY GAZETTE”, LAHORE

From a microfilm: S.N. 13786

476. LETTER TO N. R. MALKANI

WARDHA,

December 12, 1928

MY DEAR MALKANI,

I have been unconscionably long in replying to your letter. But I know that there was no hurry. In all my plans Jamnalalji is ever with me. I showed your letter to him and told him what I expected of you. He was delighted, but he asked me whether I had made clear to you what the Ashram life means. I told him I had so far as I knew and so far as I could. You know what it is. You know that the vow of brahmacharya is obligatory and there is only one kitchen at the Ashram, now Udyoga Mandir. Jamnalalji doubts whether your wife would be able to put up with the Ashram life as it has developed and is developing.¹

I would therefore like you to confer with your wife and make it absolutely plain to her. Go through every clause of the Ashram constitution which is binding on the Udyoga Mandir. For you to come to the untouchability work is to throw in your lot with the Ashram and make complete surrender to the cause for life, because the work is to be developed through a secretary who would give his whole time and attention to this one cause to the exclusion of everything else. Jamnalalji thinks that it is no use your coming to this work unless you think that the work will be sufficiently interesting for you to absorb your whole time, and that your wife would be in sympathy with your being so occupied. Please confer with her and let me know what conclusion you jointly come to.

¹ In his letter dated November 14, 1928, the addressee had written: “I have consulted my wife about the terms of my future employment. . . . in the Ashram” (S.N. 13723).

I am here till 20th. I reach Calcutta 23rd instant where my address will be C/o Jiwanlalbhai, 44 Ezra Street, Calcutta.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

SIT. N. R. MALKANI
HYDERABAD (SIND)

From a photostat: S.N. 890

477. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

Wednesday, December 12, 1928

CHI. MAHADEV,

I understand your difficulty. We cannot suspend publication of the papers for a week. I am preparing from now on. I, therefore, don’t think that it will be difficult to publish them. I count on three columns by you. May you win success after success there.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11437

478. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

Wednesday [December 12, 1928]

CHI. KUSUM,

I got your letter and also Prabhavati’s. Follow any treatment you like, but do recover and I shall be happy. I have no time to write more today.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1768

1 Vide also the following letter.
479. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

Not Revised     December 12, 1928

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I have your letter. There is no reason for panic. Write thus to your father-in-law:

“Your wish ought to be a command for me. My father wants me to act in accordance with your command. I am faced with a conflict of loyalties since your son keeps writing from America telling me to live in the Ashram and study. He also wants me to study English too very well. I am quite comfortable in the Ashram. Bapuji treats me like a daughter. Ba too is good to me. Arrangements have been made for my stay in the women’s section after Rajbanshi Devi ji leaves this place. I am quite safe in the women’s section. I therefore wish to stay in the Ashram as your son bids. But then I shall do as you say. And I may assure you that you need not worry on my account. While I live here I am quite alert, there are many women in the Ashram and I am on good terms with them all.”

You may, if necessary, improve upon the language. Inform your father also regarding the developments. Give all details to Mrityunjaya and send him a copy of your husband’s letter.

Whatever happens you should be unperturbed. Remember the shloka: “Hold alike pleasure and pain”\(^1\); etc. Be courageous and recite Ramanama.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 3342

\(^1\) Wife of Rajendra Prasad and mother of Mrityunjaya

\(^2\) Bhagavad Gita, II. 38
Describing the incidents of Lucknow in a private letter Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru writes:

An incident which took place yesterday morning might interest you. I have not mentioned it in my statement. Soon after the mounted and foot police had driven us back near the station, a young man, whom I took to be a student, came to me and said that he could bring me two revolvers immediately if I wanted to use them. We had just experienced the baton and lathi charges and there was a great deal of anger and resentment in the crowd. I suppose he thought that it was a favourable moment to make the offer. I told him not to be foolish. Soon after I found out quite casually that this particular person was known to be in the C.I.D.

Pandit Jawaharlal was safe as he has no secrets. If he finds any use for revolvers in his scheme for the freedom of the country, he will not need the offer from the outsider to lend him one. He will carry it himself openly and use it effectively when in his opinion the occasion has arrived. So he was safe from the blandishments of the C.I.D. And what applies to Pandit Jawaharlal applies in a measure to all Congressmen. For happily the Congress politics abhor secrecy. Congressmen have ceased to talk with closed doors; they have shed the fear of the C.I.D.

But the C.I.D. will not be itself if it does not have emissaries whose business among other things it is to expose people to temptations and entrap them in the nets prepared for them. It is difficult to imagine an occupation more debasing and degrading than this, and yet it has been reduced to a science by the chief governments of the world and has attracted to it some of its cleverest brains. Britain takes perhaps the first place in this occupation. Lying in the C.I.D. is cultivated as a fine art. Ponsonby’s Falsehood in War Time gives a

1 Gandhi writing on the same subject in Navajivan, 16-12-1928, began thus: “Wherever we turn, the Government has cast their nets far and wide. We do fall into one or the other deadly traps. Some of them are open, some are concealed, and some are tempting. The liquor bars are the open traps, the hidden traps are the C.I.D.; schools, legislative assemblies, courts, etc., are the tempting traps . . . I know this much that only God can save us from these. And to ask for protection of God one should have extreme faith and unlimited determination.” He concluded: “If we create in ourselves the spirit of dedication then we can deliver our country this very moment and the liberation of many countries of the world lies in our liberation.”

2 Member, House of Commons
painful record of lying on the part of all the powers that were engaged in the pastime of mutual destruction on the false plea of philanthropy. It is a black record of crimes committed by the nations of whom Britain was not the least but probably the greatest offender. She could have stopped the War if she had been less greedy and less selfish.

Wherever you turn in India you encounter pitfalls. To me every institution—be it the most philanthropic—run by and in the name of the Empire in India has an unmistakable taint about it. That we run to and hug most or some of them is no test of their goodness. It is test of our helplessness, short-sightedness or selfishness. We have not the courage to sacrifice much, in order to save ourselves from criminal participation in sustaining an Empire which is based on fraud and force, and whose chief, if not one, aim is to perpetuate the policy of ever-growing exploitation of the so-called weaker races of the earth.

In a way the C.I.D. is the least dangerous of the traps so cleverly laid by the builders. Those whose exterior is attractive are really the most dangerous of all. We often fall into one of these enticing but deadly traps, before we hardly know where we are. It was for some such reason that the Romans said: “Beware of the Greeks, specially when they bring you gifts.” When an enemy comes to you bearing the look of philanthropy, he is to be most dreaded. Would that the youth of the country learnt this simple truth and avoided the pitfalls into which they daily fall even whilst they are cursing the Empire and hoping to deliver the country from the intolerable yoke which is not only ruining the nation economically but is also causing unfathomable moral mischief.

Young India, 13-12-1928

481. JUSTICE RUN MAD

I reproduce elsewhere in this issue the first instalment of a sample of the translation of the Tamil songs of the late Bharati, the Tamil poet, whose songs were the other day confiscated by the Madras Government acting under instructions, or, it is perhaps more proper to say, orders from the Burma Government. The Burma Government it appears in its turn suppressed these songs not by any order of court but by executive declaration. It appears that under that declaration the books of this popular Tamil poet which have been in vogue for the last 30 years and which, as appears from the evidence before the High Court of Madras, were under consideration by the Education Department of Madras for introduction in the school curriculum, are liable to confiscation in any part of India. I must confess that I was unaware of any such wide executive powers being held by Provincial Governments. But these are days in which we live and learn. This was no doubt a matter falling under the jurisdiction of the Education Minister. But it is becoming daily more and more clear that these Ministerial offices are a perfect farce, even as the legislative chambers are and that the Ministers are little more than clerks registering the will of the all-powerful I.C.S. Therefore the poor Education Minister could do nothing to save these popular books from confiscation. Probably at the time the confiscation took place, he had even no knowledge, or if he had, he was not even told what it was that he was really signing. In due course however the confiscation attracted public attention. Pandit Harihara Sharma of Hindi Prachar Karyalaya and publisher of Bharati’s songs, on behalf of his poor widow, could not sit still under the confiscation. He therefore moved the public and the matter was naturally debated in the Legislative Council which condemned the confiscation. Pandit Harihara Sharma even petitioned the High Court for an order to set aside what was clearly an illegal confiscation, and because of some understanding that the order of confiscation will be withdrawn, that the books will be returned and that the Madras Government will make reparation to the poor widow, the petition has been withdrawn. But the wrong still remains. One can only hope that the expectations of Pandit Harihara Sharma will be fulfilled and that the wrong will be remedied by the return of the books. But whatever reparation is made by the Madras Government, the sense of wrong will abide and so will the sense of insecurity created in the public mind by the action of the Madras Government in slavish obedience to the Burma Government.

Young India, 13-12-1928

482. LETTER TO SARASI LAL SARKAR

As at the Ashram, Sabarmati,
December 13, 1928

DEAR FRIEND.

I thank you for your letter. I shall certainly bear your suggestion in mind and try to enter into a greater self-analysis wherever possible. I have to deal with a concrete question of that character and if you are following the pages of Young India fully, you will notice it.

1 In his letter dated December 1, 1928, the addressee had said that in his opinion the psychological factors were very real things in Gandhi’s life but he did not deal with these factors in his autobiographical and introspective writings.
If you can without inconvenience get hold of the journal referred to by you, I would certainly look at it and if I find anything to controvert, I shall do so.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. SARASI LAL SARKAR
177 UPPER CIRCULAR ROAD, SHYAMBazar P.O., CALCUTTA

From a photostat: S.N. 13790

483. LETTER TO SUHASINI NAMBIAR

AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
December 13, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

You have given me a big commission. Whatever answer I may give will be incomplete unless I enter into details for which I have no time. I am sorry. But if you will refer to the pages of Young India, you will certainly find the majority of these questions answered and for the rest you will be able to frame your own answers after having read the Young India articles. They are to be had in book-form, except the current year numbers, from Sjt. S. Ganesan, 18 Pycrofts’ Road, Triplicane, Madras.

Yours sincerely,

SHRIMATI SUHASINI NAMBIAR
441 1ST ROAD, Khar, BOMBAY

From a microfilm: S.N. 13791

484. LETTER TO DR. H. W. B. MORENO

WARDHA,
December 13, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter for which I thank you. Why do you think that those who make no mention of Anglo-Indians take no interest in them or their doings? You don’t think that because I make no mention of many important things in the pages of Young India I am not interesting myself in them. Sometimes mention means not a friendly interest but hostility. I could offhand tell you of a dozen things in which I am deeply interested, but which never found any mention in the pages of Young India or in my speeches.

1 International Journal of Psycho-analysis published from London, in which Berkely Hill, Superintendent, European Mental Hospital, Ranchi, had published a paper about the unconscious ideas in Gandhiji’s mind concerning charkha.

My views remain the same that I expressed to you when I had the pleasure of meeting you in Calcutta.

If you have anything special in mind which you think I should deal with please do not hesitate to tell me.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 13792

485. LETTER TO REVA DATTA

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, WARDHA,

December 13, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your long letter containing interesting information.

It was a severe disappointment to me that I could not join the Convention\(^1\) at Mysore, where I expected to see many friends. But I could not make time for it.

It is just likely that I should be in Calcutta on the 2nd January and I should be delighted to meet you in Calcutta.\(^2\) My own dates after then would be uncertain, though according to present arrangements, I should expect to be the whole of January at Sabarmati.

Yours sincerely,

MRS. R. DATTA

C/O MRS. HENSMAN

LOCOCK’S GARDENS, MADRAS

From a photostat: S.N. 13793

---

\(^1\) Of the World Student Christian Federation

\(^2\) In her letter dated December 7, 1928, the addressee had said that she would be in Calcutta from January 2 to 20, 1929.
MY DEAR SATIS BABU,

I have your letter. I am passing on your reflections on pooling1 to Ghanshyamdasji.

I am glad you are already in touch with Mahavirprasadji. If you have not known him before, I would like you to come in intimate contact with him. He is an extremely fine man sharing most of our ideals, if not all of them.

Krishnadas is here now, and I am drinking in all the many things that he has to say about you and Hemprabhadevi and Sodepur in general. Only you and Hemprabhadevi may not kill yourselves with work. Those who work in the Gita spirit never overwork themselves, because they work with complete detachment and complete detachment means utter freedom from anxiety. When we work purely as His instrument with an absolute self-surrender there can be no cause for anxiety or fretfulness whatever the result or however black may be the horizon for the time being. Jesus summed up the same lesson in one sentence: “Be careful of nothing.” Krishnadas tells me Hemprabhadevi is wearing out her body. She may not do so and let her not deny herself the ordinary creature comforts which may be essential for keeping her body up to the mark.

1 In his letter dated December 10, 1928, the addressee had written: “If it is intended to reduce the price of the khaddar of any Province then it may be done by mixing with local khadi the cheaper khadi of other Provinces. But the pooler in this case is to guarantee sale of all the production of the Province in which the pooler operates. . . . The pooler in this instance wants to dispose of as much as possible without disturbing the local market. Pooling can be applied here by keeping the local prices as the standard and buying some dearer and some cheaper khadi from outside and selling them at the local standard price along with the local khadi. . . . Injurious pooling is pooling in a producing Province without taking the responsibility for the disposal of its whole output. For example, Mr. Jerajani may buy the best khaddar from all over India, pool the prices and sell at a standard price at Bombay. This is harmless in Bombay where there is no local khadi.”
I note what you say about the Exhibition. I do not mind it. It is enough we do not resist and hold ourselves in readiness to help where need be and this we must do in a spirit of utter goodwill and without irritation.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. SIT S. SATI DAS GUPTA
KHADI PRATISHTHAN, SODEPUR

From a photostat: S.N. 13794

487. LETTER TO KALI KRISHNA NARAIN

AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
December 13, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I am of opinion that these demonstrations if they continue to be disciplined and strictly non-violent, they have an immense educational value and therefore should not be abandoned, so long as there is a guarantee as perfect as is humanly possible that there will be no violence on the part of the demonstrators whatever the nature of the provocation.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. KALI KRISHNA NARAIN
LUCKNOW

From a photostat: S.N. 14827

488. LETTER TO MATHURADAS

WARDHA,
December 13, 1928

CHI. MATHURADAS,

The way before you is not clear. Read the accompanying letter. I have even suggested to Ram Sahay that he should have a talk with you. Show unlimited love. If you exercise patience and do not give up in despair, ultimately victory is yours. Do not be easily satisfied with

1 The addressee had also said: “The Exhibition authorities have not communicated with me. . . . Agents of the Committee went about the country and secured non-Association khaddar from Bengal, Bihar, Andhra, etc. They arranged to run spinning shows also in the same way. That the A.I.S.A. is coming now is something additional and therefore the old arrangement continues.”
your work. Show love to both; that is what is meant by an equal mind. When we give bread to a hungry person and advise another suffering from indigestion to fast, in both cases we are prompted by love; this, therefore, is showing an equal mind and treating an ant and an elephant with equal consideration. Do not assume, in dealing with him, that your new method has succeeded completely. If you patiently explain it to those who insist on following the old method and carry them with you, there will be minimum friction.

Whether the method adopted is the old or the new one, it must be followed faithfully. Write to me from time to time about the difficulties which you experience. Never feel worried in the smallest measure. If you feel at any time that my conclusions are based on inadequate data or incorrect reasoning, draw my attention to the fact. You may have faith in the principles which I lay down, but the conclusions which I draw from certain facts cannot be a matter of faith.

Faith has no place in a matter which can be grasped by reason. Hence, whenever you see my ignorance as regards facts and find the reasoning vitiated by that ignorance, please do correct me. If you make this a regular practice, I shall be able to write to you more freely and guide you better.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4213

489. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

December 13, 1928

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I have started from today using ‘Chi.’ in place of ‘Bhai’; let this be a permanent change.

It was not my fault that you received no letter on the 11th. I did write to you. You must have received two letters on the 12th. This happens sometimes when letters are given to be posted when it is about clearing time.

It is a serious illness indeed which Ramabehn has brought with her. Do not get nervous. Take necessary measures to get her cured and everything will be all right. Other illnesses, too, will go in their due time. For Kailas’s illness, it is Dahibehn and Nanubhai who are responsible. Even children’s stomachs cannot bear any burden for ever. The same is true about Dharmakumar. The moment he is all right, he starts taking all sorts of liberties. As for Velanbehn, illness is part of her constitution. She, too, cannot control her palate, and Sabarmati’s water will not let us take any liberty. From one point of view, this is for our good.

I see nothing wrong in charging to the khadi section the expenditure of Rs. 12 on account of those inmates of the Ashram who are being trained exclusively for khadi work.

Whatever difficulties, internal or external, you may have to face, see that you are ever vigilant. Do not lose patience, and do not undertake any task beyond your strength. Go on doing silently whatever is necessary, and you will feel no burden.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro-7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshine, p. 29

490. LETTER TO RAMABEHN JOSHI

Thursday [December 13, 1928]

CHI. RAMABEHN.

You have returned to the [Udyoga] Mandir with illness in the family. By the time you get this letter, the children will no doubt have recovered. If, however, you cannot bring them up well, that will be a discredit to you and to the Mandir. You should give to the children not what they ask for but what is good for them. In refusing to give them what they ask for, you need not be harsh with them. You can reason with them. I have often explained this to you.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro-7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshine, p. 277

1 From the reference to Ramabehn and children’s illness; vide also the preceding item.
491. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

Thursday [December 13, 1928]¹

Bhai Ghanashyamdasji,

I have your letter about Lalaji. I am happy to learn that khadi work is progressing. In this connection there is a letter from Satis Babu. I send it to you for perusal. You need not return it.

Yours,

Mohandas

From Hindi: C.W. 6164. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

492. LETTER TO TULSI MAHER

ASHRAM, WARDHA,
December 13, 1928

CHI. TULSI MAHER,

Your letter to hand. Neither I nor anyone else has forgotten you. I did not write simply because there was no occasion. What you write about Lalaji is quite correct. You are happy and the hopes of success in the work are ever increasing. I am therefore not worried on your account. God alone knows whether we are actually successful or not. Our duty is only to have faith. These days I am at the Wardha Ashram. Ba and others are with me.

Blessings from

Bapu

Shri Tulsi Maher, Charkha Pracharak
Koba Hall, Patan, Nepal

From a photostat of the Hindi: G. N. 6536

493. LETTER TO HEMPRABHA DAS GUPTA

[About December 13, 1928]¹

DEAR SISTER,

I have your letter.

I want you to be in good health no matter how you manage it. You must not overstrain yourself.

I shall try to treat Sodepur on the same footing as Sabarmati. It is because I have my doubts about the feasibility of conducting the same experiments there as at Sabarmati and Wardha that I cannot regard it as such. I do not wish to spoil Sodepur by carrying on experiments there on the lines of Sabarmati. The existence of Sodepur is for the sake of khadi, while that of Sabarmati is for experiments in truth, etc. This does not mean that Sabarmati is superior. I merely defined the fields of work at the two places. I do desire to make experiments at Sodepur, similar to those at Sabarmati. But all this lies in the hands of God. Whatever be the state of affairs at Sodepur, you are in my eyes an Ashram inmate.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 1646

494. LETTER TO DR. B. C. ROY

WARDHA,

December 14, 1928

DEAR DR. BIDHAN,

Here is a wire from the A.I.S.A. Agent in Kashmir. I know from personal experience that a great deal of stuff from Kashmir passes on as hand-spun and hand-woven, but the yarn is foreign. There is no question of swadeshi mill yarn in Kashmir. It is either foreign or hand-spun. The foreign yarn was fast displacing the hand-spun. The A.I.S.A. Agent has just gone to stop the rot. How far it can be stopped remains to be seen. But in any case his being posted there has resulted in exposing many a fraud.

¹ The activities of the Sodepur Ashram were being expanded during the year 1928. By December the addressee was apparently trying to immerse herself in work. Vide also “Letter to Satis Chandra Das Gupta”, 13-12-1928.
May I hope that nothing will be exhibited which is not certified by the A.I.S.A.

Yours sincerely,

Encl. 1

DR. BIDHAN CHANDRA ROY
36 WELLINGTON STREET, CALCUTTA

From a microfilm: S.N. 13301

495. LETTER TO AKOOR ANANTHACHARI

AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
December 14, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. Much as I should like to ventilate the grievances referred to by you, there are so many such grievances that it seems to me utterly useless to pick up this one with any hope of getting redress. Such grievances will not be redressed unless the atmosphere around us is purged of weakness and helplessness.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. AKOOR ANANTHACHARI
GOWTHAMA ASHRAM
CHENGADU VILLAGE, WALAJAPET

From a microfilm: S.N. 13797

496. LETTER TO RUP NARAYAN SHRIVASTAVA

AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
December 14, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter. The calf incident was an isolated case with which I was called upon to deal personally. The rats question is too big a question for me to handle. You will therefore excuse me for not dealing with it in the pages of Young India.

Yours sincerely

SJT. RUP NARAYAN SHRIVASTAVA
C/O SETH JAMNADAS, M.L.A.
JUBBULPORE

From a microfilm: S.N. 13799

388 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
497. LETTER TO HARI KRISHAN DASS

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. Unless I see the text of the definite promise¹ said to have been made by the British when your town was founded, it is difficult for me to give you any advice. But of course before adopting satyagraha, if it ever becomes advisable, you will exhaust all the constitutional means at your disposal and if you have a strong case, you will also approach good Mussalmans and seek their intervention. By way of example I give you the name of Dr. Ansari.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. HARI KRISHAN DASS
EDITOR, “THE BIJLI”, FAZILKA

From a photostat: S.N. 13800

498. LETTER TO DR. SACHCHIDANAND SINHA

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter. I am still keeping your articles on my file.

The supersession of the Gaya District Board did seem to me an extraordinary step on the part of the Minister. I have never been able to find the slightest justification for it, and I hope that you in Bihar have been able to find an effective remedy against such gross abuse of power.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. SACHCHIDANAND SINHA
PATNA

From a microfilm: S.N. 13802

¹ That no cow-slaughter would be permitted in the town
499. LETTER TO J. D. ATRE

AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
December 14, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. It is clear that you have not read my articles carefully. B’s life cannot be taken by A, because A must be credited with sufficient intelligence to know that B when he seeks to commit suicide is temporarily insane. A must arrive at his own judgment and not rely upon another’s, and certainly not upon the one who may be suffering from insanity.

Yours sincerely,

J. D. ATRE, ESQ.
38 ZAOBA’S WADI, BOMBAY 2

From a microfilm: S.N. 13803

500. LETTER TO V. N. KHANOLKAR

AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
December 14, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I am now corresponding with the khadi bhandar. I quite agree with you that if slivers are supplied, they must be good and workable.

You tell me in your letter that you cannot card, but in the concluding portion you ask for one pound of cotton. Is it carded cotton that you want, or cotton for carding?

Yours sincerely,

SJT. V. N. KHANOLKAR
GANESH BHUWAN, Khar, District Thana

From a microfilm: S.N. 13804

501. LETTER TO AMARNATH

AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
December 14, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I am sorry you have lost your wife. I hope that you are now much more cheerful and resigned than you were when you wrote your letter. If I were you I would not trouble to know the destiny of the soul of your wife. But you should trust that wherever the soul is now lodged, it is well with her.

As to your second question, it is well if your wife lived in detached love in which case, there will be no pangs of separation as there should be none. For we all meet in Him if we yearn for the union with the Divine. Though we seem to be separated one from the other, yet considering the common source we are one and not merely as husband and wife or parents and children but as all life.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. AMARNATH

BATALA

From a microfilm: S.N. 13805

502. A LETTER

AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

December 14, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. There is no reason whatsoever for you to grieve over your disease, for impotency is also a disease. But if you live in the fresh air, take a moderate amount of exercise, eat unstimulating food, i.e., milk, wheat, green vegetables without condiments and some fresh fruit, and take Kuhne’s baths for sufficient length of time, you may regain your vitality. But you must not be anxious about it.

It will be certainly sinful for you to put an end to your life.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm: S.N. 13808

503. LETTER TO C. N. DEVARAJAN

AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

December 14, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I am sorry I have not been able to reply to your letter earlier. And I am equally sorry to find that there is distress in Jaffna. There is a Government Famine Relief Fund. I do not think that there is any constitution about it. There is a permanent small fund kept by Sjt. Devdhara of the Servants of India Society, Poona. It is a voluntary fund. You may be able to get further information from him if you write to him. I would also like you to write to Sjt. C. Rajagopalachariar (Gandhi Ashram, Tiruchengodu), who did much work during the South Indian flood time.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. C. N. DEVARAJAN
MANIPAY, JAFFNA (CEYLON)

From a photostat: S.N. 15119

504. LETTER TO JEROME DAVIS

AS AT SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

December 14, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I appreciate your warm letter. It is not want of funds that is keeping me from going to America. The question is far deeper than one of finance. My expenses have been offered by Indian friends, if I would but go. My difficulty is whether there is a call of duty, whether, that is to say, I have a message to be delivered personally. I wonder if my function is not limited to let the message drip down to America through the life that I am privileged to live in India supplemented or interpreted through my writings. I do not feel the inner urge.

But I have undertaken, if everything is quite clear before me, to go to Europe about the end of April next. Whether I should then take America and whether I should have the time, if I felt the call, is a different matter.

Let me also tell you that friends like Dr. Ward are of opinion that I have been right up to now in my decision not to go to America. They think that I would be a nine days’ wonder, would be perhaps lionized for a few days, but that the message for which I stand and which I am trying to live will be lost upon the people.

Yours sincerely,

JEROME DAVIS, ESQ.
YALE UNIVERSITY, 1110 EDWARDS HALL
NEW HAVEN, CONNECTICUT, U.S.A.

From a photostat: S.N. 15120
505. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

WARDHA,

Friday, December 14, 1928

CHI. MATHURADAS,

It is surprising that there was no letter from you until today. I too feel tempted by your account of the place. But where do I have such luck? Only yesterday Jamnalalji and I were talking about you. He was thinking of sending his son to you for some time. I am well. Have I written to you that Mahadev is not with me? There is no time to write more.

Blessings from,

BAPU

SJT. MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI
EVERGREEN
MATHERAN

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

506. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

December 14, 1928

CHI. NARANDAS,

There is a Marwari youth\(^1\) who is a B.Sc, and is at present serving in a mill in Amalner; now it is time to get him married. He must be about 22. When Maganlal was alive, I had expressed the view that he must be a pleasure-loving man and very rich, and that, therefore, we should not think about the matter. The proposal, therefore, was not pursued. I have now met him. In my judgment, he is a suitable match for Rukhi. He is not very rich, but is quite well-to-do. His father lives in England; he has to make up the losses which he has incurred. This youth is a lover of khadi and wears khadi. Please ascertain from the mother and the daughter now whether they desire this match. He is a Vaishnava. He will not interfere with Rukhi’s way of life. I advise the match. If you think it necessary, you may consult Khushalbhai\(^2\) too; afterwards let me know your decision in time, so that I may pursue the matter further when I visit Calcutta. Neither the

\(^1\) Banarasilal Bajaj
\(^2\) Addressee’s father young man himself nor anyone else knows who is the girl I have in view and to which place she belongs.

Are things all right with you?

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 7724. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

507. LETTER TO KASHI GANDHI

Friday [December 14, 1928]

CHI. KASHI,

I keep worrying about you. It is in your hand to remove my worry. You should unhesitatingly ask for whatever your body needs. Only if you do so, will the kitchen deserve to be called a kitchen and continue to function as at present. This is a matter not of a day or two but of all days. Hence, you should start procuring right from today the facilities you need.

Somewhat similar is the case with Nimu. It is not easy to know her needs. You should find out her inclinations and see that her health improves.

Mix with all the women, get to know them and so arrange things that they live peacefully.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33093

508. LETTER TO RAMDAS AND NIRMALA GANDHI

[WARDHA ,

December 14, 1928]

CHI. RAMDAS AND NIMU,

I have received your letters. There was not the least note of disappointment in my letter. There was no reason either, for me to be

1 From the contents, it is evident that this letter was written about the same time as the one to the addressee dated December 17, 1928, but since Gandhiji here does not mention the likelihood of his leaving Wardha, it presumably preceded that letter. The Friday preceding the Monday on which that letter was written, fell on December 14.

2 Place-name and date as supplied in the source.
disappointed.

I should like both of you to find time to go out for walks. I look upon it as your good fortune that old people come to you and you have opportunities of nursing the ill.

Do write to me regularly. How can you be lazy about it? One ought not to be lazy about anything, certainly not in writing letters to one’s elders.

Blessings from
BAPU

From the Gujarati original : Mrs. Sumitra Kulkarni Papers. Courtesy : Nehru Memorial Museum ant Library

509. LETTER TO DIRECTOR, PUSA INSTITUTE

WARDHA,
December 15, 1928

THE DIRECTOR
PUSA INSTITUTE

DEAR SIR,

Could you please let me know whether you have bee-keeping on the Pusa Farm, and if so, whether instruction is given there in bee-keeping and whether there is any literature about bee-keeping in India?

Yours faithfully,

From a microfilm: S.N. 13810

510. LETTER TO JAGANNATH

WARDHA,
December 15, 1928

MY DEAR JAGANNATH,

I dare say Balwantra Mehta has been writing to you directly. He is already in harness and has made a good beginning.

I write this to you to find out whether scientific bee-keeping is done in the Punjab and if so, where and to what extent and whether it is possible to put oneself in touch with any expert in bee-keeping. I have just heard that bee-keeping is an extensive occupation in the Punjab.

Yours sincerely,

LALA JAGANNATH
2 COURT STREET, LAHORE

From a photostat: S.N. 13811

511. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

December 15, 1928

CHI. KUSUM,

I have your letter. The news that you have recovered completely has lifted a burden off my mind. Do not fall ill again.

Things are all right with me, more or less. The work is certainly heavy, but I do not feel the burden.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

From Monday there will be crowds of people here. How many dine in the common kitchen?

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1769

512. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

December 15, 1928

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I have your letter. You may certainly credit half of Sanderson’s £15 in the khadi account and half in the Antyaja account.

I should very much like to permit the Bihar lady to come and stay, but that cannot be done at present. We must, however, get ready to admit such women. Let us be fit for that without delay.

Yes, I thought so. There is a mention of my having given the title of Makarani to someone, but I soon forget such humorous inventions of mine. Convey to Ramabehn my apologies.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshine, p. 30

1 Vide “Letter to Chhaganlal Joshi”, 20-12-1928.
513. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

[December 15, 1928]¹

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

Your letter. Consult Chhaganbhai about Suryamukhi Devi. Write from Dwarka too.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 2339

514. LETTER TO MOOLCHAND AGRAWAL

December 15, 1928

BHAI MOOLCHANDJI

I have your letter. Owing to overwork I was unable to write earlier. You should continue with both the jobs, khadi as well as teaching, although I would not call it unswerving devotion to khadi. For that reason my devotion too cannot be regarded as such.

There is nothing artificial about such devotion.

People like you will serve khadi while teaching. Bhai Jethalal thinks of nothing else. There is room enough for both.

Yours,
MOHANDAS

SHRI MOOLCHANDJI
KHADI ASHRAM, REENGUS, RAJPUTANA

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 751

515. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

[After December 15, 1928]²

CHI. KUSUM,

I do not have the time today to write a long letter. Your health is now all right. Maintain the improvement in your health. There is no

¹ From the reference to Suryamukhi Devi from Bihar this letter appears to have been written at the same time as the preceding letter.
² In Bapuna Patro-3: Kusumbehn Desai, the letter has been placed between those of December 15 and 17, 1928. letter about Padma yet. But I shall have no objection if she comes to stay there and behaves well. You would know the real state of things.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1770

516. SUGGESTIONS FOR IMPROVEMENT OF KHADI

A gentleman from Mombasa who is a khadi lover has written the following letter¹ to Shri Vithaldas Jerajani, who has sent it over to me:

The implication of this is that those who are proficient in the art of producing several articles of cloth from mill-made yarn should take an interest in khadi and get yarn produced which is twisted in varying degrees. This is a task which can be accomplished. It is being carried out to some extent but only in a very small measure. So far very few persons who have a knowledge of the techniques used in mills have taken any interest in khadi, while those who are engaged in furthering the cause of khadi have not made a study, from the standpoint of khadi, of mill-made cloth and the techniques involved in making it. Many people believe through ignorance that nothing whatever can be learnt from the industrial techniques used by mills, while others have assumed that khadi of any quality would pass muster. Despite this, compared with the first pair of dhoti woven in the khadi cause in 1918 at the Satyagraha Ashram, the price of which was fixed at seventeen annas a yard, which was the actual cost, the khadi of today is vastly different in both quality and price. Hence it may be claimed that some workers in this movement have also paid attention to the quality of khadi. The late Shri Maganlal was the first to begin a systematic study of this matter. It has borne good results. That study is still being continued; however, I must admit that further improvements are needed. There is no doubt that much more improvement can be made if, as the above writer suggests, those who know the mill techniques devote even a little of their time to improving khadi. In order to carry out widespread propaganda for khadi, the maximum possible variety of quality and design should be introduced. Nevertheless, something will in the end remain where the limits of both will be marked out and the one cannot and need not resemble the other. For instance, there are some artistic achievements of khadi

¹ Daughter of Sitla Sahai
² Not translated here. The writer had suggested that the quality of khadi should be improved by drawing on the experience of textile experts.
which the mills have to this day not been, and will never be, able to imitate. Similarly, the same quality of khadi cannot be produced in bulk as the fine-looking cloth amounting to crores of rupees which the textile mills can produce at a low cost. And there will be no need to produce it either. Mill-made cloth is produced, whether there is need for it or not, simply in order to make people use it and in order to earn larger profits. Khadi can only be produced in the quantity in which it is required. Khadi cannot have and will never have the capacity for mass production with the intention of making people wear it. That advantageous limit will always be there with regard to khadi because man is not a gross machine which can be worked beyond a certain limit. However, it is the special task of the organizers of the centres run by the Charkha Sangh to adopt all possible improvements in the quality of khadi. Let those who are dimly aware of this become fully awakened to it. Let us hope that those who are familiar with the techniques of mill-made cloth will start taking an interest in khadi and devote their time to it.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 16-12-1928

517. LETTER TO DR. B. S. MOONJE

WARDHA,

December 16, 1928

DEAR DR. MOONJE,

I have your letter. If Malaviyaji is too old, don’t you think that I am also running a neck to neck race with him? And I am possibly even more kind, more mild, more pliable, more docile, in your sense of these words, than he is. How can a Mahatma living up in the clouds give any lead? But why is a Mahatma wanted at all for “the rough and tumble of a hard matter-of-fact struggle”? And what about men like you who are daily growing younger? Why not let the poor Mahatma have his lonely greatness upon earth be done with? But joking apart, I do want to do my humble share in the service of the religion I profess to own and about this we must talk when you and I have more leisure.

I have glanced through your address and like many things this has also a sting in its tail. If you will take the analogy of Afghanistan,

---

1 In reply to his letter dated December 14, 1928, inviting Gandhiji to lead the Hindus
2 To All-Parties Conference organized to support the Nehru Report, as Chairman, Reception Committee why do you expect Mussalmans to be Hindus in Hindustan? Afghans don’t expect Hindus to be Mussalmans, but they may expect them to be like Afghans, that is, like the inhabitants of Afghanistan. The corresponding term, therefore, is Indian. For the service of India, Mussalmans, Jews, Christians should be Indians even as Hindus should be Indians. Whilst each group will follow its own religion intact without interfering with those of their fellow groups. Surely that for-mula is quite enough for you and every one of us.

Yours sincerely,

DR. B. S. MOONIE
NAGPUR

From a photostat: S.N. 13814

518. LETTER TO HONORARY SECRETARY,
ALL-INDIA PRESS CONFERENCE

WARDHA,
December 16, 1928

THE HON. SECRETARY
ALL-INDIA PRESS CONFERENCE
34 BOWBAZAR STREET, CALCUTTA

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your circular letter. I now understand the meaning of your telegram. Though you do me the honour to consider me a journalist, I can hardly adopt it. In any case I consider myself as quite unfit to guide you on the three questions put by you.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm: S.N. 13815

519. LETTER TO DEVDAS GANDHI

WARDHA,
Sunday [December 16, 1928]

CHI. DEVDAS,

I have your letter. The diet experiment which I made in the Ashram had certainly pleased Rajaji, for it included only rotli, milk, ghee and vegetables. He does not care very much for fruit. He will not

1 In “Letter to Kusum Desai”, 15-12-1928. Gandhiji speaks of crowds gathering at Wardha “from Monday”, December 17, 1928.
probably like the experiment I am making here. They use oil in the food here, and so I too have started taking it. I do not wish to do anything at the cost of my health. If oil does not suit me, I will stop it.

Kusumbehn can come here for the Gujarati work. She can certainly do justice to it but I felt that she should remain in the Ashram. There is Pyarelal here who attends to some of the Gujarati work. He ought to improve his handwriting. Since Keshu is with me, I can use his services too for this work, if necessary, though in fact I have brought him here for the sake of his studies and his health.

You did well in sending Navin and Rasik to Meerut. They should write and describe their experiences there.

Pyarelal, Chhotelal, Subbiah, Ba and Keshu are with me here. Many others will come not from the Ashram but from outside. Ghanshyamdas Birla arrived here only yesterday. Haribhau came today. So I expect we shall have good company here.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 2042

520. LETTER TO SHANTIKUMAR MORARJI

Sunday [December 16, 1928]

CHI. SHANTIKUMAR,

I have your letter. I have received the book about snakes.1 If I want another copy, I shall write to you. What was the accident which befell grandmother, and how? Tell her that she has many more years still to live.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Tell Gokibehn that I got her letter.

SHRI SHANTIKUMAR

SHANTI BHUVAN, PEDDER ROAD, BOMBAY

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 4710. Courtesy: Shantikumar Morarji

---

1 Vide “Letter to Shantikumar Morarji”, 9-12-1928.
521. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

December 16, 1928

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I have your letter. I am thinking over. There is no cause for anxiety. I have no time to write more.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 3344

522. TELEGRAM TO MOTILAL NEHRU

December 17, 1928

MOTILAL NEHRU
ALLAHABAD

DON'T UNDERSTAND RAJAGOPALACHARI'S SUGGESTION
BUT HE MAY REPRESENT SEVA SANGH. JOSHI
ASHRAM BANKER SPINNERS.

GANDHI

From handwritten draft: S.N. 2456

523. LETTER TO V. S. SRINIVASA SASTRI

December 17, 1928

MY DEAR BROTHER,

Your latest letter brings tears of joy to my eyes. Indeed you have surpassed all my expectations and those of most who have known you, your worth [and] your love for the country and humanity.

About the new appointment the less said, the better. I had long correspondence with Sir Mahomed. But he opened it after everything

1 In reply to his telegram dated December 15, 1928, which read: “At Rajagopalachari’s suggestion, I invite representatives of Gandhi Seva Sangh, All-India Spinners’ Association and Satyagraha Ashram to All-Parties Convention, Calcutta, as they don’t fall under invited organizations. Kindly wire names representatives” (S.N. 13813).
2 Chhaganlal Joshi
3 Shankerlal Banker
was done. He wanted me to bless it. I told him as I did not know the gentleman, I could not bless it. 1 I suggested that they should have your nominee. It was no good. I therefore suspended my judgment and imposed silence on myself. It still continues.

      May God keep you for many a long year to come. Well, you are coming to the turmoil. But you wanted to. You shall have it with a vengeance.

      With love,

      Yours,

      M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 8816

524. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

WARDHAGANI,
Silence Day, December 17, 1928

CHI. MAHADEV,

Today is silence day and so this is just to tell you that I remember you. Now that three of us have applied ourselves to work for Young India and Navajivan, I don’t think there will be any difficulty.
There is plenty of other material here.

Rani is coming this evening. Miss Royden is also coming.
Subbiah does not remember the wire you speak of.

      Blessings from

      BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: S.N. 11438

525. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

WARDHA,
Silence Day, December 17, 1928

CHI. KUSUM,

I got both your letters. You were of course forgiven. If I believe a girl to be foolish, she will certainly be forgiven her foolishness, but it ought to be pointed out to her. To excuse yourself by saying that you did not know how to express yourself in words may not be foolishness, but people call it cleverness or smartness.

I read today of your getting fever again. There is pride in working beyond one’s strength, and the foolishness of doing so is plain enough. Those who have an iron constitution may work beyond their strength, that is, there is no work indeed which is beyond their strength. Those who have reduced themselves to a cypher and trust everything to God, they alone can work like that. When you have such faith and can live like a cypher, you may work as much as you like. For the present, work within limits.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1771

526. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

WARDHA,

Silence Day, December 17, 1928

SISTERS,

There has been no letter from you today. But I gather from your previous letters that there is now comparative quiet in the kitchen. Do not rest till you establish perfect quiet there. This job is mainly yours. Take upon yourselves the responsibility of making the kitchen attrac-tive in every way. It can be regarded as an ideal part of an ideal school only when everyone can eat in perfect peace, when all do their work out of a sense of duty and a love of perfection and remain content with whatever is served in it. The whole institution is a school as you know, and the kitchen is a school too. There the food should be scientifically stored, cooked and eaten. Thus in every detail there should be cleanl-iness and a spirit of discipline. We do not go there or dine there for sense gratification. The body is a temple of God; as such it has to be kept clean and preserved through nourishment. If you adopt such an attitude all the quarrels we see in regard to kitchen work will dis-appear. In my letter addressed to the whole of the Ashram, I have made four suggestions. Think over them and try to practise whatever appeals to you.

Kailas, Sheela and other children must not fall ill. If any child is ill, do not think it is the concern and responsibility of its mother alone but assume responsibility for it yourselves. It should be the normal practice in our Ashram whenever a mother is not able or does not know how to nurse a sick child, for anyone who knows the job to offer to look after the child. No mother should feel that she is alone with no one to help her.

I have nothing more to say.

Blessings from

BAPU

PS.

Received both your letters.

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3685

527. LETTER TO TARABEHN

December 17, 1928

CHI. TARA,

I have a letter from you after a long time. Of course the last letter [between us] was yours. You ought to recover your health completely. I am at present in Wardha. Ba is with me. Among others are Pyarelal, Subbiah and Chhotelalji. Vasumatibehn was here for some time before I came. Within four days I shall leave for Calcutta. You can write to me c/o Jiwanlalbhai.

Blessings from

BAPU

CHI. TARABEHN
C/o Messrs Mohanlal Kalidas & Co.
14 Mugal Street, Rangoon

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8783

528. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

December 17, 1928

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I have your letter. Why should you get upset because of children’s illness? These things come and go. Sometimes we may even lose one of the children. God gave them and He may take them back; there is nothing strange in this. Besides, everyone in the world has to go along the royal road sooner or later, why, then, should we grieve if anyone leaves early? And rejoice if someone leaves late? There is no difference between Umi’s soul and that of a calf. Both are diamonds

¹ Addressee’s daughter
from the same mine, drops from the same ocean, leaves of the same tree. One need not be afraid of whooping cough. It always disappears in due time. If we do not harass the child with too many medicines while the attack lasts, he or she lives through the attack all right. Hot water and hot milk—everything hot. The bowels should move regularly. [Give her] light massage with oil on the chest and put her in sunshine early in the morning.

Do not be sure of Chhotelal arriving there till you actually see him of course he will arrive.

Gangabehn should put her feet in hot water with soda bicarb mixed in it and massage them long with vaseline before going to sleep. Besides this, she must put on shoes, of any type, during day time. Since we now look upon the hide of a dead cow as sacred, there will be no harm even if she wears light slippers—not chappals—made of it. It will be enough if the slippers meant for use in the kitchen always remain in the kitchen. Slippers of rubber are also available.
Slippers of hessian get wet and dirty, and they cannot be washed.
Slippers made from leather can be washed.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I do not consider the last issue, too, of “Ashram Samachar” as properly cyclostyled. I leave this place on the evening of Thursday, the 20th. On 21-22 in Sambalpur and on 23 in Calcutta, at Jiwanlal’s place. Address the letter to Sambalpur only once, or not at all.

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshi, pp. 30-1

529. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

Silence Day [December 17, 1928]

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I got your letters. It was impossible to write yesterday.

You have displayed much firmness and patience. That is how we should always act. You are on the potter’s wheel, and I am sure God will mould you well. Do not lose heart in regard to brahmacharya.
Surely it is a difficult task. If we believe that we can succeed in it merely by our own effort, [we should remember that] in the story of

1 As in the source
the Yaksha, as we saw, the god of wind found it impossible to blow away even a straw by his own strength. But even the most difficult task becomes easy when human effort is supported by divine grace. Both of you should strive, but leave the result to God and you will surely get it.

Blessings from
BAPU

530. LETTER TO KASHI GANDHI

Silence Day [December 17, 1928]

CHI. KASHI,

Do something about Nimu’s and Bachu’s constipation. Bachu is likely to benefit by gentle massage of his abdomen. Similar exercise will benefit Nimu too.

Did you send that chain to Talwalkar? I think we shall be leaving this place (Wardha) on the 20th.

Blessings from
BAPU

531. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

[December 17, 1928]

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

Your nice letters in a beautiful hand come quite regularly and I am highly pleased.

You must not be dejected. Not many days remain for me to return to the Ashram. A few days will pass in your visit to Dwarka and the journey back.

1 In Kenopanishad
2 Gandhiji here says he would leave Wardha on 20th. In 1928, he left Wardha for Sambalpur on December 20. Monday, i.e., Gandhiji’s silence day, prior to that date, fell on December 17.
3 From the reference to “Kusum’s falling ill again”, this letter seems to have been written along with the one to Kusum Desai dated 17-12-1928. Year and month from the reference to the addressee’s proposed visit to Dwarka.
Ask Vidyavati to write to me; I want to write to her but do not for lack of time.
I feel a little worried over Kusum’s falling ill again.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]
Who will be responsible for nursing Kusum in your absence?

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 3321

532. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI
[Before December 18, 1928]

CHI. PRABHAVATI,
Your letter. Your presence there spares me any anxiety on Kusum’s account. Rajendra Babu came yesterday. I hope a telegram has been sent cancelling the Dwarka trip. There is no time now.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 3315

533. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI
Tuesday [December 18, 1928]

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,
I wanted to write about many things today, but have no time.
I do not know what Santok wants. If she wishes to stay on and lives contentedly, it would be very good indeed. You and Narandas should decide about this. It will be best if you leave this decision to Narandas. I will write about Devdas later. I had read Mirabehn’s letters. I will write to the Gurukul in regard to Balbir.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro-7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshine, p. 32

---

1 From the reference to Rajendra Prasad who came to attend the A.I.S.A. meeting held on December 18 and 19
2 As in the source
534. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

WARDHA,
Tuesday, December 18, 1928

CHI. KUSUM,

I cannot help but get angry with you. Who allowed you to eat everything? Why should you give up coffee? If you attempt to do so in my presence, I will help you. Why do you make such experiments in my absence? May I once again beg you to live on milk and fruits and pick up health? If you wish to eat anything else, ask for my permission.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1772

535. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

December 19, 1928

CHI. NARANDAS,

I have your letter. You may certainly go to Rajkot if you find that necessary. I have experimented with earth treatment for *bamblai*¹ and found it succeed. I cannot say whether the experiment will suit Khushalbhai at his age.

I have made my point of view clear in regard to Santok. If what I think is wrong and if she likes the Ashram, its inmates and its mode of life, I will like nothing better than that she should live there. How can I possibly be happy that she should live elsewhere? If, however, I have to try every day to keep her pleased, the situation will be intolerable to her, to me and to other inmates of the Ashram. I do not want to see her take the last seat; I want to see her in the front seat. But how can she take the first number in the Ashram unless she learns self-sacrifice, gives up love of pleasures and selfishness?

If Rukhi is ready for a match with this Marwari youth, I may proceed further in the matter. I shall certainly obtain a photograph. By “meeting”, do you mean that she wants to see the youth or talk with him? In either case, I see nothing wrong in her meeting him. I shall not feel hurt even if she rejects the match. In this case, I believe it my duty to respect her wishes fully. Please let me know if you want any other details. I have no time today to write about other matters.

¹ A boil in the arm-pit

Blessings from

BAPU

From Gujarati: C.W. 7725. Courtesy: Narandas Gandhi

536. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

WARDHA,
December 19, 1928

CHI. KUSUM,

What shall I tell you now? The doctor’s advice to you to eat everything is not correct and should not be followed. If you drink plenty of milk and eat plenty of fruits, your illness will certainly disappear. There is no harm in taking a little coffee with the milk for some time. You should work very little, have enough sleep, and see that you have regular motions. It is my firm belief that if you look to all these things, you cannot but recover health. Do not be afraid to take quinine. If the doctor sends you something to counteract the toxic effects of quinine, there is no harm in taking that.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1773

537. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

Wednesday [December 19, 1928]¹

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I got your letter and the statement of accounts. I will show them to Jamnalalji. I feel unhappy all the time over the affair of Sharda, Kashibehn and Shakaribehn. When I think of Sharda’s courage, I both smile and cry. She seems to have put her courage to wrong use. Do you not agree that my boasted skill in understanding people is nothing of the kind? It is good that I know some of my imperfections well enough and God opens my eyes to the rest. He will save.

These clouds trouble me; still bigger ones will come. Remain

¹ As in the source

410 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
vigilant. Do not lose heart. Try to fill the place which Maganlal did. Do not give up hope even when all round you lose it.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

Do not worry about my experiments. I am in God’s keeping. With this is a letter from Mirabehn. Henceforward, credit the money received† to her name. The expenses incurred for her should of course be debited to the Ashram account. Do not debit it against this money.

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro- 7; Shri Chhaganlal Joshi, pp. 32-3

538. LETTER TO JETHALAL

December 19, 1928

BHAISHRI JETHALAL,

I got your letter. I have written to Chi. Narandas at the Ashram. He will reply to you. If his reply does not satisfy you, then write to me.

Blessing from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1347

539. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

[After December 19, 1928]†

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

We had received through Krishnadas a gold watch costing Rs.500/-. He is here at present. He tells me that if we still have the watch, a friend of the donor is ready to pay that sum for it. If we have it, let me know.

Speak to Krishnamaiyyadevi† and tell her in strong words that if

† From Mirabehn’s father, who used to send £50 every month during the early years of her stay in the Ashram

‡ From the contents it appears that the letter was written towards the end of the year 1928, evidently after December 19. Gandhiji’s letter dated December 19, 1928, to the addressee (vide “Letter to Chhaganlal Joshi”, 19-12-1928) acknowledges receipt of his “letter and the statement of accounts,” saying that they will be shown to Jamnalal Bajaj.

† Widow of a Congress worker from Nepal; Gandhiji gave her and her children shelter in the Ashram.
she behaves as she does, she will have to leave the Ashram. Stop paying her cash; instead, supply within Rs. 12/-, such of her needs as you approve of. Do this with immediate effect. Ask her to state the amount she has spent so far. Request all the inmates of the Mandir\(^1\) to have no dealings with her and to give her no facilities. If they feel that you or I are doing her injustice, they should tell you so. All the vegetables which grow should be supplied to the Mandir. If she does not wish to grow them on that condition, she may not. I will of course write to her.

If she cannot digest bread, why does she eat it? She will certainly not digest it if she does not chew it properly or eats it in excess. She will also not digest it, of course, if it is not properly baked. Do people think that it is too dear at one anna a loaf?

Jamnalalji has looked into the figures sent by you. He was sorry to know that the account books were either damaged by moths or lost. Who was at fault in this? Cannot we, however, add up the income from the beginning to this day from the available records, like pass books, etc. If we can, we shall also be able to make up the account of expenditure. Make a greater effort in this regard.

We have no option but to bear the expenditure being incurred on Manjula.\(^2\) But take care and see that the expenditure is justified. For how many days more will she have to go? Of course she is not to be paid Rs. 12/- separately. Has she recovered her health? Is the injury to her eye healed?

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G. N. 5486

540. DISCUSSION WITH A CAPITALIST \(^3\)

[Before December 20, 1928]

God forbid that India should ever take to industrialism after the manner of the West. The economic imperialism of a single tiny island kingdom (England) is today keeping the world in chains. If an entire nation of 300 millions took to similar economic \(^1\) Udyog Mandir, under which name the Satyagraha Ashram had begun to run all its external activities, while still maintaining its ideal as an Ashram.

\(^2\) Daughter of Vrajlal Gandhi

\(^3\) From Pyarelal’s “Wardha Letter” exploitation, it would strip the world bare like locusts. Unless the capitalists of India help to avert that tragedy by becoming trustees of the welfare of the masses and by devoting their talents not to amassing wealth for themselves but to the service of the masses in an altruistic spirit, they will end either by destroying the masses or being destroyed by them.

Young India, 20-12-1928

541. DISCUSSION ON KALI TEMPLE

[Before December 20, 1928]

He next turns to a khadi worker who is also accompanying him. He must agree to go to Calcutta where he is wanted in spite of his disinclination. If we could transform Calcutta we should transform the whole of India, he argues. He himself would go there and make it the centre of his activity, but . . . And he then gives out this sorrowful secret that he has harboured in his bosom all these years of his life. It is the Kali temple.

There lies my difficulty. I cannot bear the sight of it. My soul rises in rebellion against the cold-blooded inhumanity that goes on there in the name of religion. If I had the strength I would plant myself before the gate of the temple and tell those in charge of it that before they sacrificed a single innocent animal they should have to cut my throat. But I know that for me to do so would be an unreal, a mechanical thing today because I have not yet completely overcome the will to live. And till I can do that I must bear the cross of my imperfect existence.

Young India, 20-12-1928

542. DISCUSSION WITH A TEACHER

[Before December 20, 1928]

A deputation of the teachers of a national school has come to wait upon Gandhiji. . . . In the course of conversation one of the teachers lets out that he holds non-violence as a creed only for individual conduct. In the political field he holds to non-violence only as a temporary expedient. Gandhiji starts as at a snake in the grass. ‘Are there many other teachers in your school who think like this?’ he quietly asks. But his countenance betrays what is passing in his mind. The teacher notices this and tries to explain his position. True, he believes in non-violence in politics

1 From Pyarelal’s “Wardha Letter”
2 For the Indian National Congress session
3 Gandhiji left Wardha on December 20, 1928.
pas a policy but a policy is as good as a creed while it lasts, if it is sincerely and conscientiously adhered to. For the time being therefore there is no difference between his position and Gandhiji’s. As for the future, if he should feel like changing his policy he would surely obtain the permission of the school authorities first for doing so. But the explanation fails to satisfy Gandhiji.

Don’t you see the difference, with you non-violence is only an intellectual proposition, with me it is an article of faith, the first and the last. You try to make a distinction between individual conduct and social conduct. I do not see how it is possible. Where is the line to be drawn? And who is to decide where the one ends and the other begins? यथा पिण्डे तथा ब्रह्माण्डे, As with the individual so with the universe.’ You say that your abandonment of non-violence would be conditioned by the permission of the school authorities. But let me tell you that in the circumstances postulated by you there should be no room for asking such permission. For then, you would be bound to sacrifice your school at the altar, according to your belief, of your country just as I would my country at the altar of truth and non-violence. And I would honour you for doing so. No, I do not want to blame you. You must follow the light of your convictions. I am only trying to view the question from a different angle. There are at present a number of national institutions in the country with truth and non-violence as their creed. I have my eye upon them constantly. For a time is fast coming, it may, as I wrote in Young India the other day, come much sooner than most people expect, when the country will be put upon its trial, and will have to make its final choice. I count upon these institutions in that hour to give a good account of themselves. Maybe a mere handful of workers as we are, we shall have to make a holocaust of ourselves to testify our faith. So far I had believed that I was absolutely safe in your hands. But I now see where I stand. But that need not make you feel unhappy; it is a question for me only to think about.

There is a deep note of sadness in his voice as he utters these words. . . .

Young India, 27-12-1928
543. SPEECH TO KHADI WORKERS

[Before December 20, 1928]

We must distribute production and centralize sales for the time being. We must try the experiment of pooling prices of khadi produced in various centres to bring down the average. Look at the figures of mill khadi. . . . What does it indicate? A revolution in the people’s taste. They are prepared to make a sacrifice. They ask for coarse cloth. But they are being foully deceived by the mill-owners who do not hesitate to exploit their patriotic sentiment. Spurious khadi is being palmed off on them as Gandhi cloth, even my portrait is put upon it. Could there be a greater fraud or a worse betrayal? But the moral for us in this is that we must increase our production. And to do this we must bring about a general reduction in khadi prices by pooling. Do they ever think what a fierce resentment it will cause among the masses when they discover, as they are bound to one day, that they have been betrayed at every step? I should not be surprised, if in a frenzy of anger they should in that event rise against the mill industry in general.

Young India, 27-12-1928

544. THE ETERNAL DUEL

A friend writes:

In the article entitled “The Tangle of Ahimsa” appearing in Young India of October 11th, you have stated most forcefully that cowardice and ahimsa are incompatible. There is not an ambiguous syllable in your statement. But may I request that you tell us how cowardice can be exorcised from a man’s character? I notice that all characters are but the sum total of habits formed. How are we to undo our old habits and build the new ones of courage, intelligence, and action? I am convinced that habits can be destroyed, and better and nobler habits can be formed giving birth to a new character in a person. It seems to me that you know prayers, discipline, and studies by which a man can attain a second birth. Won’t you kindly tell us about them? Do give us your knowledge and advice in one of the numbers of Young India. Please help us by giving an account of the method of praying and working by which a

1 From Pyarelal’s “Wardha Letter”
2 Gandhiji left Wardha on December 20, 1928.
3 As in the source
The question refers to the eternal duel that is so graphically described in the Mahabharata under the cloak of history and that is every day going on in millions of breasts. Man’s destined purpose is to conquer old habits, to overcome the evil in him and to restore good to its rightful place. If religion does not teach us how to achieve this conquest, it teaches us nothing. But there is no royal road to success in this the truest enterprise in life. Cowardice is perhaps the greatest vice from which we suffer and is also possibly the greatest violence, certainly far greater than bloodshed and the like that generally go under the name of violence. For it comes from want of faith in God and ignorance of His attributes. But I am sorry that I have not the ability to give “the knowledge and the advice” that the correspondent would have me to give on how to dispel cowardice and other vices. But I can give my own testimony and say that a heartfelt prayer is undoubtedly the most potent instrument that man possesses for overcoming cowardice and all other bad old habits. Prayer is an impossibility without a living faith in the presence of God within.

Christianity and Islam describe the same process as a duel between God and Satan, not outside but within; Zoroastrianism as a duel between Ahurmazd and Ahriman; Hinduism as a duel between forces of good and forces of evil. We have to make our choice whether we should ally ourselves with the forces of evil or with the forces of good. And to pray to God is nothing but that sacred alliance between God and man whereby he attains his deliverance from the clutches of the prince of darkness. But a heartfelt prayer is not a recitation with the lips. It is a yearning from within which expresses itself in every word, every act, nay, every thought of man. When an evil thought successfully assails him, he may know that he has offered but alip prayer and similarly with regard to an evil word escaping his lips or an evil act done by him. Real prayer is an absolute shield and protection against this trinity of evils. Success does not always attend the very first effort at such real living prayer. We have to strive against ourselves, we have to believe in spite of ourselves, because months are as our years. We have therefore to cultivate illimitable patience if we will realize the efficacy of prayer. There will be dark-ness, disappointment and even worse, but we must have courage enough to battle against all these and not succumb to cowardice. There is no such thing as retreat for a man of prayer.
What I am relating is not a fairytale. I have not drawn an imaginary picture. I have summed up the testimony of men who have by prayer conquered every difficulty in their upward progress, and I have added my own humble testimony that the more I live the more I realize how much I owe to faith and prayer which is one and the same thing for me. And I am quoting an experience not limited to a few hours, or days or weeks, but extending over an unbroken period of nearly 40 years. I have had my share of disappointments, uttermost darkness, counsels of despair, counsels of caution, subtlest assaults of pride; but I am able to say that my faith—and I know that it is still little enough, by no means as great as I want it to be—has ultimately conquered every one of these difficulties up to now. If we have faith in us, if we have a prayerful heart, we may not tempt God, may not make terms with Him. We must reduce ourselves to a cipher. Barodada sent me a precious Sanskrit verse not long before his death. It means impliedly that a man of devotion reduces himself to zero. Not until we have reduced ourselves to nothingness can we conquer the evil in us. God demands nothing less than complete self-surrender as the price for the only real freedom that is worth having. And when a man thus loses himself, he immediately finds himself in the service of all that lives. It becomes his delight and his recreation. He is a new man never weary of spending himself in the service of God’s creation.

Young India, 20-12-1928

545. DINABANDHU’S TRIBUTE

Dinabandhu Andrews writes as follows from Manchester on Lalaji’s death:

The news of the death of Lala Lajpat Rai was a very terrible shock to me for it was absolutely unexpected. I reached Birmingham very late on Saturday night and my brother told me about it. Since then I have referred to it and made clear in the Manchester Guardian how great the loss must be both to India and to England, and indeed to the world of humanity; for he was the friend of the oppressed in every country and knew no racial barriers. What I am now waiting to hear is how far the death was caused by injuries received at the railway station at Lahore at the time of the boycott of the Simon Commission. This is not at all made clear in the newspapers here, which are very guarded in

1 Dwijendranath Tagore, elder brother of Rabindranath Tagore their utterances, though there is just a hint about it.
I may add that he cabled to me for correct news to which needless to say I sent a suitable reply.¹

Young India 20-12-1928

546. NOTES

LALAJI’S MEMORY

With reference to my note on Dr. Satyapal’s telegram² which was published in these columns, Lala Dunichand of Ambala writes :³

The publication of Dr. Satyapal’s telegram in connection with Lala Lajpat Rai’s death in Young India of November 29, 1928 and your comments thereon have induced me to write this letter to you which I hope you will be able to publish. I am one of those who had been devoted to Lalaji for nearly all their life and it was only during the last elections that serious and even acute differences had arisen between him and myself. . . . But the blows received by him at the hands of the police and his death shortly after that have naturally and rightly changed altogether my mental attitude towards him and his work. .
. . Now I look upon the sum total of his life-work too great to let me entertain any kind of ill will and his life too sacred to be remembered with anything but feelings of genuine respect. I feel as if quite a different kind of relations have sprung up between him and myself after his death. If the question of our differences with him is viewed in this light, we who differed from him and those who differed from us on account of him can again become comrades in the fight for winning freedom for our country.

This is undoubtedly the correct attitude to take and I hope that everybody who had some differences of opinion with Lalaji will adopt the same attitude and work for the common cause.

INDIA’S AMBASSADOR IN AMERICA

The readers of Young India will be glad to share with me the following letter⁴ from Mr. R. E. Hume, son of Dr. R. A. Hume of Nagar, regarding the fine work that is now being done by Devi
Sarojini Naidu in America:

² Vide “Good if True”, 29-11-1928.
³ only excerpts are reproduced here.
⁴ Only excerpts are reproduced here.
You will be pleased, I am sure, to receive this message concerning the successful start of our friend Mrs. Sarojini Naidu in her visit to the United States.

I heard her at her first appearance in New York city. And I have been testifying that I have never heard either from man or from woman the equal of her platform performance for the beauty and flow of English diction and for the structure and sequence of English sentences. . . .

However, more beautiful and significant than the grammatical structure of English sentences were the beauty and goodness and truth of her utterances. I rejoice that Mother India is being presented to America in the person of this charming and potent woman, who is perceiving the spiritual side of American life, and who is similarly conveying to the people here the spiritual side of the Indian people. . . . But I am especially happy thus to report to you promptly the very successful realization of your plan for Mrs. Naidu to visit the United States as an ambassadress from the women and people of India.

AJMAL JAMIA FUND

A Mussalman friend asks the following questions and asks me to reply to them in Young India:

I read Young India with intense interest especially the news of Islam. But I am puzzled to hear some undesired news about Ajmal Jamia. Will you kindly reply to the following queries and oblige me?

1. On what principle is the Jamia being carried on?
2. Whether it is solely for Mussalmans or the members of every caste and creed are admitted into it?
3. If they are also admitted, how do they manage for their boarding, lodging, etc.?
4. How many and who are the members of the managing body, is there any other than Mussalmans upon it?
5. The Fund which is being collected by you is handed over to the institution or is still with you?
6. If it is still with you, when do you intend to use it and how?

Here are the answers:

The Jamia is carried on, on the broadest principles. The correspondent should study the constitution a copy of which he will get upon application to the authorities in Delhi.

It is in practice solely and naturally for Mussalmans, but members of every caste and creed are freely admitted.
I believe that such students have to make their own boarding arrangements.

Sheth Jamnalalji is one of the trustees. The others are Mussalmans.

The Fund is in the possession of Sheth Jamnalal Bajaj who is the treasurer.

Young India, 20-12-1928

547. WANTED HINDI TEACHERS

The Dakshina Bharat Hindi Prachar Sabha invites applications from educated young men whose mother tongue is Hindi and who are willing to serve as Hindi teachers in South India for a period not less than 2 years. . . Letters may be addressed to the Secretary, Hindi Prachar Sabha, High Road, Triplicane, Madras.

W. P. IGNATIUS

I hope that there will be sufficient young men from the North to respond to this appeal.

Young India, 20-12-1928

548. EXTRACTS FROM LETTERS

To a national worker who has been ordered off to far away Orissa where at present cholera is raging, Gandhiji writes:

And do not be afraid of cholera. . . . observe proper precautions. . . . If in spite of all precautions the worst befalls, there is no help for it. There is no place in the world entirely free from danger. . . . But do as the inner voice prompts you.

To another struggling soul he writes:

With the help of Rama we have got to overcome the ten-headed Ravana of passions within us. Success is bound to be ours if we have faith in Rama and surrender ourselves to His grace. Above all do not lose self-confidence. Avoid indulgence of the palate.

---

1 Only excerpts are reproduced here.
2 From Pyarelal’s “Wardha Letter”, sub-title “Tit-Bits”
3 As in the source
4 ibid
5 ibid
To another he says:

There is a world of difference between spinning for sacrifice and spinning for recreation. I would advise you to observe a religious silence while spinning. It would give you spiritual peace and if you make it a point always to spin at a particular fixed hour, it will automatically regulate your other appointments too and help you to a well-ordered life.

To still another he writes:

You may not force the wearing of khadi on your mother if she is unwilling. But if your faith in khadi is genuine and strong enough it is bound to prove infectious.

To another correspondent again:

My sovereign panacea (for communal troubles) is well known. If either of the parties were completely to purge itself of ill will and patiently bear any injustice that the other side might inflict, a real heart unity between the two was bound to be established in the end. The injustice would come to an end and both sides would become brave. Today they are pitiful cowards.

Young India, 20-12-1928

549. KHADI IN HYDERABAD STATE

At a Co-operative Conference held the other day in the Hyderabad State, the Finance Minister, Sir Hyder Nawaz Jung Bahadur, delivered an address from which a friend sends me the following translation of his reference to the spinning-wheel:

But the most important thing to which I wish to draw your attention is our home industries. To preserve and help them is the supreme duty of co-operative societies. If co-operative societies could be organized to distribute domestic implements and raw materials amongst the people, it would be a great boon to the country. For the sake of illustration, I would mention spinning and weaving. If they could be revived in our towns and villages, it would be a great achievement. Quite till the other day, spinning and weaving were commonly practised in our homes. Not only in the huts of the poor but also in the homes of the rich and well-to-do, young girls and their matrons used to utilize their leisure time by spinning; and a variety of things for household use, like carpets, sheets, coverlets, table-cloths, etc., were prepared out of the yarn thus spun. Respectable widows who have no other means of livelihood used to support themselves and their children by spinning and sewing. By popularizing this occupation, you would not only augment the slender resources of the people but by providing them with useful work for filling their spare time save them from falling a prey to many a temptation. I hope that the energetic officials of our Department will make a beginning in this direction this year. I shall carefully go through the next year’s report to see how many of us have taken to this good work. . . .

We should never forget that man isolated from society is but an animal. He rises to his full estate which has been described as ‘little less than the angels’ only through mutual aid and co-operation with his fellow-beings. So long as you stand apart, self-sufficing units, so long as ‘I’ am ‘I’ and ‘you’ are ‘you’, we are only glorified animals called men. When ‘I’ and ‘you’ combine to form ‘we’ we develop a divine force and the process of developing this force is spelt co-operation.

I congratulate the Minister on his pronouncement and trust that the State of Hyderabad will compete with that of Mysore in the spread of the spinning-wheel. Co-operation in spinning is easy and an indispensable thing if khadi is to be placed on a stable basis. A hand-spinning co-operative society will start with a cotton depot where bag cotton, not pressed cotton, will be stored for converting into cards. It will have carders, if the spinners do not themselves card in the initial stages. This depot will keep the necessary furniture, i.e., hand-gins, carding-bows, spinning-wheels, accessories and necessary tools with facility for repairs. The depot will be a distributing, receiving and selling depot and will distribute cotton or slivers as the case may be. It will receive against cash-payment yarn spun by the members and sell to the members khadi woven from their yarn or bought from other places. It will sell khadi at special prices to the spinning members and at ordinary prices to the public. If such societies are formed under State patronage and with State aid, partial or in full, there is really no limit to the possibilities of mass co-operation. Only this presupposes a khadi atmosphere among the officials; in other words, the officials must be converts, lovers and trustees of the masses, not their lords and masters, for whom the masses are born to toil and sweat on starvation wages. If the Finance Minister infects his officials with the zeal which his address shows there is a great future for the people of the State. And Hyderabad unlike Mysore is a vast cotton area.

Young India, 20-12-1928

1 As in the source
550. TELEGRAM TO MANAGER, ASHRAM, SABARMATI

December 20, 1928

MANAGER
SHABARMATI ASHRAM

SHIVABHAT’S SUGGESTION ABOUT MOTHER QUITE GOOD. NO CASTE DINNER PERMISSIBLE BUT MAY PAY CASTE LUMP SUM FOR EDUCATION OR OTHER BENEVOLENT USE.

BAPU

From handwritten draft: S.N. 2456

551. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

WARDHA,
December 20, 1928

CHI. CHHAGANLAL.

Today too, I am sure I shall not be able to write a letter which will satisfy me. Preparations are going on for leaving the place. Finding some spare time, I am dictating this letter.

First I shall remove a misunderstanding. I certainly did not apologize to Ramabehn for applying to her the name Makarani. I have always been indulging in such jokes, and the victims of the jokes have always enjoyed them. I apologized to her because I forgot this beautiful joke and, when you wrote to me that Makarani had arrived, I had to ask you whom you meant. Is this not an unpardonable lapse?

What will you say of a father who gives pet names to his children through affection and then forgets them? The poor children may forgive the father, but how can the father forgive himself? All that I can say in my defence is that my family is a large one and is growing in size. Such mistakes, therefore, are likely to occur again. Explain all this to Ramabehn, for the name Makarani will now cling to her for ever.

I stop the work here. Jamnalal’s whip is here.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshi, pp. 33-4

1 To restrain Gandhiji from overwork
552. A LETTER

WARDHA,
December 20, 1928

. . . Since you have resolved to dedicate yourself completely to service how can I send you away? I do not wish to punish you. It is not for man to punish anybody. . . . I want to guide you to better ways and, when you commit unpardonable mistakes, to suffer the punishment myself. I am suffering the punishment now in that I have been pained. Do not give me such pain in future.

. . . also wrote to me about the jewellery. There seems to be a discrepancy in what you said in your earlier letter and what you say in the present letter. But that does not matter.

You will now have to be ready for strictness on my part. I am not any longer going to be soft with you as I have been so far. You will limit your expenditure to . . . rupees as far as possible. But I will do everything necessary for your health. . . . It will not be for you now to judge . . . or somebody else will have to do that. But of course not at the cost of your health. I would hate any expenses except those on your food. For food I will give more than . . . if necessary. Let me know what you eat at present. . . .

If you have overcome your mental tension, you are sure not to fall ill.

Ask me if you wish for further clarification. . . . Keep writing to me.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/42

553. A LETTER

WARDHA,\(^1\)
December 20, 1928

You are really in a moral dilemma. You had a hand in fixing the engagement. . . . It seems to me that you should write to . . . that she should wait till she is eighteen. . . . You may send Chh.’s letter to her. If she is not willing to wait even that long and in spite of Chh.’s letter is keen on getting married right now, you may convey . . .’s wish to her and against your better judgment give her away in marriage on her condition in Uphota and wash your hands of the affair. You

\(^1\) Omissions in the letter are as in the source.
\(^2\) Omissions in the letters are as in the source.
\(^3\) ibid
should make all this clear to . . . and say that you have been solely guided by the girl’s and her mother’s wish. If she agrees, give her in marriage by way of atonement since you had a hand in arranging the engagement. Be clear in dealing with her mother also. This is how I see your duty. But you will be the best judge of what is right.

From a copy of the Gujarati : Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/41

554. SPEECH AT WARDHA ASHRAM

December 20, 1928

You have all set out to become expert spinners, weavers and carders. But that is not enough. Every turn of the spinning-wheel, every throw of the shuttle, every stroke on the cardingbow should awaken a responsive echo in your soul. The task that lies before you is tremendous. You have to reach and establish a living contact with not a few hundred, not a few thousand but millions of the poor that are scattered over the seven lakhs of villages in India. Till that work is accomplished you dare not rest. Then, if you want really to serve the country you must keep your bodies and minds pure so as to make of yourselves a fit instrument for carrying out His work. If you awake every morning with His name on your lips and invoke His aid to help you in your struggles during the day and at night time before retiring take stock of the day’s failures and lapses, make a confession of them to your Maker and do a sincere penance for them—the only fitting penance for a lapse is to make a firm resolve not to allow it to happen again—you will thereby build, as it were, a solid wall of protection round you and gradually temptations will cease to assail you.

In the end whilst I shall always recall this period of my stay in your midst with joy and satisfaction, my feeling is not free from a regret; and that is, that in spite of my being in your midst for all these days I have not been able to play with the children of the Ashram, to know them individually by their names, to win their personal friendship and confidence as I would have liked to do. But what could
I do? I was so hard pressed by work.

Young India, 10-1-1929

1 From Pyarelal’s “Weekly Letter”, which explains: “The period of grace and privilege of our stay at the Wardha Ashram came to an end on the 20th December, 1928 and it was not without a wrench that Gandhiji bade goodbye to his peaceful surroundings to plunge into the seething cauldron of Congress politics in Calcutta.
Leave-taking was a touching affair. Gandhiji poured all the poignant pathos of the parting in a few brief sentences that he addressed to the inmates of the Satyagraha Ashram after the evening prayer.”
555. INTERVIEW AT NAGPUR STATION

December 20, 1928

[QUESTION]: What would be your attitude towards a political war of independence?

[ANSWER]: I would decline to take part in it just as I would refuse to support the British Government in any war that it might engage in tomorrow.

But in South Africa you supported an alien Government in its war against the Boers, although it was at that time oppressing the Indians; again in 1914 you supported the British Government in its War against Germany. How is the situation altered since then that you should refuse to support your own country in a war of independence?

The situation today is radically different for me from what it was at the time of the Boer War or the War in 1914. On both the occasions I was a believer in the Empire. I thought that in spite of its lapses the sum total of its activity was beneficial to the world. And though I was against war at that time as I am now, I had no status or strength to refuse to participate in war. I suppressed my private judgment in favour of the duty of an ordinary citizen. My position is wholly different now. I have become by force of circumstances a teacher of non-violence. I claim to enforce my teaching in my own life to the best of my ability and I feel that I have the strength to resist war in my own person.

Then you would not support a national militia?

I would support the formation of a militia under swaraj if only because I realize that people cannot be made non-violent by compulsion. Today I am teaching the people how to meet a national crisis by non-violent means. But it is one thing to adopt non-violence for a specific purpose in a time of crisis, and quite another thing to advocate its adoption by all for all time as a philosophy of life. Not that I consider such adoption to be impossible. But I lack the strength for such a mission. I may not therefore resist the formation of a national militia. Only I cannot join it myself. I feel quite clearly within me that a militia is unnecessary but I have not the word that would carry conviction to others.

1 From Pyarelal’s “Weekly Letter”, which explains: “It was a late hour and the friends had come at the fag-end of an exceptionally busy day for Gandhiji . . . and engaged him in an absorbing conversation on some of the burning questions of the day.”

If that be your view, surely you would like our youth to avail themselves of the University Training Corps that have been organized by some universities?

To receive military training under the present Government is to train yourself into a limb of the present system, a limb that is liable to be used against your own people at any time. A Gurkha is an Indian, blood of our blood and bone of our bone, yet he would shoot his own countrymen when ordered to do so.

But our young men will be educated people, they will never consent to do such an unpatriotic act?

You are welcome to that belief if you like but let me tell you that you are living in a fool’s paradise. You little realize the demoralizing effect of environment. How many people can you point out in the country today, who having gone under the Government’s influence have been able to escape from its hypnotic spell and to keep their independence intact. The British rulers know the workings of human nature. They know that a vast majority of men when they come under a system conform to it especially when it is full of promise for self-aggrandizement. There are educated Indians enough in the Government employ who do the will of their masters even though it may be, as it often is, against national interest. And you do not seem to attach any importance to the fact that the young men who join the corps have to take the oath of allegiance.

Young India, 10-1-1929
556. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

December 21, 1928

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

The fact that you did not get a letter on Sunday means that Kanti is not there. He wanted me to write a personal letter to him, which I wrote and enclosed yours in the same cover. This time there has not been a single day without my writing a letter to you. I can leave you without one only when all your worries disappear and the atmosphere there becomes completely purified. I certainly yearn for a time when I need not write letters to anyone in the Ashram. Such a day will also come. At present, to write letters is no burden to me.

For the Orissa matter you will have to write to Vallabhbhai.

Indu Parekh should go to Calicut or stay in Bardoli. He should stop his studies completely.

Umi must now be out of danger. You need not worry even if she is suffering from pneumonia. The treatment for both is the same, rest and hot water. If she feels hungry, give her milk and fruit juice. I shall write a detailed reply later.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshine, p. 34

557. SPEECH AT SAMBALPUR

[December 22, 1928]

I have only one request to make to you and all others concerned, and that is that whatever days of life on this earth are now left to me, they should be utilized for advancing what I regard as the most fruitful work of my life—and that is khadi—and not frittered away for mere demonstrations. You are at liberty to hold your own view as to what the most fruitful activity of my life is but then you should leave me alone.

Referring to the deepening poverty of the country, he said:

1 From “Weekly Letter” by Pyarelal. The meeting was held in the morning on the sandy bank of the Mahanadi.

2 From the reference to the meeting in the following item
While on the one hand the Government is despoiling the country by an evergrowing burden of taxation, the trader is mulcting it yearly of 60 crores of rupees by dumping foreign cloth on it. Is it any wonder that between the upper millstone of taxation and the nether one of exploitation the masses are being ground to powder? In fact it would be a surprise if things were otherwise.

He then went on to describe how three great leaders to whom Utkal owed a deep debt of gratitude, namely, the late Deshbandhu, the late Lalaji and the late Gopabandhu Das had in their lifetime affirmed an unequivocal faith in khadi as a means for village reconstruction and combating poverty of the Indian masses and how that faith had grown and deepened as they approached the end of their earthly journey. The only way in which Utkal could do justice to their memory was by taking to khadi in right earnest and insuring Utkal against the ravages of nature and of man by its means. Sambalpur had vast potential resources for khadi work in its weaving population. What he therefore wanted of them was to convert Sambalpur into a flourishing khadi centre.

Young India, 10-1-1929

558. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

SAMBALPUR,
December 22, 1928

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

After finishing the work at a meeting, I had my meal and am now working at the spinning-wheel. I have some quiet time and so have sat down to reply to your letter which was received here. I had kept aside the other letters with the intention of replying to them in detail. You may, therefore, expect a reply to every point.

So far I have been able to keep to third-class travel, and all of us have been travelling in great comfort. From Nagpur, we were given one section of the carriage, the label “reserved” put on it, so that we experienced no difficulty on the way.

In the meeting here, I sold khadi to my heart’s content. There are a number of Gujaratis here. They gave more than eight hundred rupees. I expect that they will make up one thousand before I leave this place. The untouchables here gave me self-spun yarn and also khadi woven by themselves.

The question of agency was discussed in the meeting of the Spinners’ Association. I did not have to sit through it. But I had liked your suggestion in principle and, therefore, pressed it at the meeting. All the members have approved of it. It has now been finally decided that, if we are to keep the agency, it will be not in the name of an individual but in the name of the institution. They may let the agency remain with the institution so long as they are satisfied with its work. I have told them that if they find some other arrangements more convenient, they may certainly make it, and that, if they do so, it will not displease me or any of us. The committee should do fearlessly what they find, on an objective consideration of the matter, to be in the best interest of khadi. A subcommittee has been appointed to take a final decision, and it will do so and inform us. Narandas is included in that committee. The matter will be settled in a few days.

1 Vide the preceding item.

The Mandir will get some money for the expenses which are incurred for Devdas and others. You should pay Devdas’s bills. If you have anything to say with regard to the actual figures of expenditure, you may draw my attention to them or make a suggestion directly to Devdas.

Mirabehn and Chhotelal have stayed back in Wardha. Mirabehn will return to the Ashram after completing the work she has started in Bihar. Chhotelal will go to Bombay in a few days and return to the Ashram after learning some details there about bee-keeping. It has been decided that he should finally return there. All the same, it will be good if you and Gangabehn keep up your efforts to attract him there. I suppose those two have gone out to Savali to see the work being done there. Chhotelal gained five pounds in Wardha. Vasumati’s weight, too, has gone up and is still increasing. She has gained nearly eight pounds at least. The causes for the increase in the weight of both are oil and mental peace.

Umi must have recovered now. In whooping cough the most important remedy is proper nursing. And we hear of more and more instances of the wonderful effect of sun-bath. This field, of restoring health through the sun, has hardly been explored so far; all the facts about the power of its rays have not been fully investigated yet. I for one believe that innumerable diseases can be cured mainly through different treatments with the sun’s rays. Revashankerbhai’s Dhiru recovered through such treatment. One of his bones was infected from within. About one pound of pus used to flow out every day. He has now recovered completely through treatment with the sun’s rays. Hence complaints like weakness, cough, getting out of breath with the slightest exertion, etc., can certainly be cured by treatment with the sun’s rays.

Kishorelal, too, has come to Wardha. But I may say that as he arrived I left. We could, therefore, have no talk. His health may be described as so so. I keep very well. Keshu’s low fever has gone and he has gained 4 pounds in weight.

More in the next letter.

Blessings from
BAPU

[PS.]

I have not revised the letter.

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshi, pp. 35-7

559. LETTER TO SHANTIKUMAR MORARJI

SAMBALPUR,
December 22, 1928

CHI. SHANTIKUMAR,

Chi. Chhotelal, who has been asked to learn bread-making, had read the literature sent by you and, after observing an ordinary bakery, learnt the work, but it cannot be said that he has mastered the process. It would certainly help if he gets an opportunity of seeing a good bakery and watching the process followed there and the ingredients which are mixed. It would also be good if those ladies demonstrate once the method of making biscuits. Chhotelal will be going there hoping that he will get an opportunity to observe these things and in order to learn about bee-keeping from Vithaldas’s brother. Give him whatever help you can. Arrange for him to see a bakery, if you can. If the Tatas have a bakery of their own, probably the manager of the Taj Mahal will help in getting him an opportunity to see it. Please do not be upset if I again and again entrust you with tasks like these. Grandmother must have recovered completely now.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 4791. Courtesy: Shantikumar Morarji
560. LETTER TO MOHANLAL MISRA

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,¹

December 22, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. There is an association for the very purpose you mention. It was founded by the late Sir Ganga Ram. I suggest your writing to the Association (Lahore). They have on their list some suitable names.

I think that both the bride and her advisers ought to go a step further and not confine themselves to sub-castes. It ought to be enough if a suitable person can be found from among Brahmins all over India.

Yours sincerely,

S. J. Mohanlal Misra
145 New Mandi
Muzaffarnagar
U.P.

From a photostat: S.N. 13022

561. LETTER TO BABAN GOKHALAY

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,²

December 22, 1928

MY DEAR GOKHALAY,

Here is a letter from Mr. Bhosle and my reply to him. If you think that they will raise a decent sum and a board of trustees can be formed in which you could have a deciding voice, it may be possible for me to find ten to fifteen thousand rupees. But it would be impossible to get the whole 40 thousand rupees that are required³.

I do feel that the hostel to be of any use to these friends has to be in Bombay. They do not live in the suburbs and they cannot afford to go there. It is tragic, but it is true that the suburbs are meant not for the poor but for the well-to-do.

¹ Permanent address
² For the construction of a hostel and a hall for depressed classes; vide “Letter to Baban Gokhale”, 3-10-1928
³ ibid
If you have leisure I would like you to take special interest in this thing, in forming the trust, seeing people like Mr. Velji. I suggest as trustees you, Mr. Velji, Revashankerbhai, Kishorelal Mashruwala, Jamnalalji, Avantikabai, Bhosle, Nekaljay, Sir Purushottamdas and Devdhar if he will come in.

Yours sincerely,

Encl. 2

From a microfilm: S.N. 13817

562. LETTER TO K. T. PAUL

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,¹

December 22, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I shall be in Calcutta from tomorrow probably for a week. I shall be staying with Sjt. Jiwanlal, 8 Pretoria Street.

I have the summary of the proceedings of the Conference as also the text of your speech. The speech I have not yet been able to read. As soon as I get the time, I shall certainly read it and if there is anything I have to say on it I shall gladly do so.

Mr. Dewick wrote to me² before you about Dr. Mott. I would also like to meet him. My movements during January and February will be determined in Calcutta.

Yours sincerely,

K. T. PAUL,³ ESQ.
5 RUSSEL STREET
CALCUTTA

From a photostat: S.N. 13818

¹ Permanent address
² For Gandhiji’s reply to Dewick, vide “Letter to E. C. Dewick”, 12-12-1928.
³ Chairman of the Committee for Arrangements of the World Student Christian Federation
563. MY NOTES

FOR LOVERS OF SPINNING

With reference to the article1 which suggests that ginned cotton need not be dried in the sun before carding, Shri Lakshmidas writes:2

This important suggestion has been made, thanks to a mistake I had made out of ignorance. I have now come to realize the distinction between kapas (unginned cotton) and ru (ginned cotton); however, before acquiring that knowledge I had used the two terms as synonymous. Hence, in the article mentioned above, I happened to write kapas instead of ru. In this manner, good results come out of innocent mistakes.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 23-12-1928

564. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

[Before December 24, 1928]3

I have your letter. You should not mind Shankerbhai having written you that letter. It expresses his anger and his frankness. The anger will subside, let us cherish his frankness. At every step you should learn something. You will succeed in your task only if you become a cipher. No one will judge you by a low standard. Swallow all bitter pills; if you do, your body and mind will be as strong as copper.

You did the right thing in arranging for Manjulla to stay in the town. We certainly cannot request a car every day. I have had full experience of Ranchhodbai’s goodness. I am, therefore, not surprised

---

1 Vide “Good Carding”, 9-12-1928.
2 The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had pointed out that Gandhiji in his note on carding had mentioned unginned cotton instead of ginned cotton and that cotton could be ginned only after it had been dried in the sun and threshed and cleaned, whereas ginned cotton had neither to be threshed nor dried. He had also suggested that in making slivers the stick used should have a circumference equal to the length of the fibres of the cotton, for only then could the strands easily separate from the sliver while the yarn was being twisted.
3 From reference to the illness of the addressee’s children, this letter appears to belong to December 1928 (vide “Letter to Chhaganlal Gandhi”, 17-12-1928 and “Letter to Chhaganlal Joshi”, 22-12-1928) and since the girl Umi succumbed to her illness on December 24, this must have been written earlier than December 24.
to learn that he himself comes with the car every day. Tell him that I would have been surprised if he had not done that.

There was nothing about the children in your letter. I believe, therefore, that they are improving. Do not take even a seemingly dangerous illness as really so. Never become panicky. We know a most effective remedy. Whether it is children or grown-ups who are ill, give them nothing except water make the nature of illness is not known.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5485

565. TELEGRAM TO PRINCIPAL, GUJARAT VIDYAPITH

December 24, 1928

PRINCIPAL
VIDYAPITH
AHMEDABAD
CONSULTED VALLABHBHAI. LET ELEVENTH STAND.¹

BAPU

From a copy: S.N. 2456

566. TELEGRAM TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

December 24, 1928

CHHAGANLAL
ÚDYOGA MANDIR
SABARMATI
YOU HAVE DONE BRAVELY. HOPE NOW RAMA REALIZES UMÍ’S² SOUL NOT DEAD AND ALL ASHRAM CHILDREN HERS.

BAPU

From a copy: S.N. 2456

¹ The seventh convocation of the Gujarat Vidyapith was held on 11-1-1929.
² Who died of pneumonia
567. TELEGRAM TO PURUSHOTTAMDAS TANDON

December 24, 1928

PURUSHOTTAMDAS TANDON
PUNJAB NATIONAL BANK
LAHORE

JUST HEARD YOUR LOSS. GOD GIVE YOU PEACE. YOU WILL COME IF POSSIBLE.

GANDHI

From a copy: S.N. 2456

568. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

[CALCUTTA,]
December 24, 1928

CHI. MIRA,

I have your note. This is Xmas eve. If Xmas has a special memory and special meaning for you, may you have on that day a purer and greater grasp of the realities of life. You have a sound heart and, therefore, all will be well with you. I knew you were happy and at peace in Wardha and to see you so made me happy.

Motilalji had work cut out for me as soon as I reached the station. So I was able to spin only at night.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5327. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 8217

569. LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

CALCUTTA,

Silence Day, December 24, 1928

SISTERS,

Today I have time only for a short letter.

I have written a letter to Durgabehn. Please read it because it applies to all of you. You women should learn a lesson from the death of Umi. All the children of the Ashram are the children of all of you. If any of them dies, take it that God has taken it away. If new ones are

1 Wife of Mahadev Desai

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
born, take it that God has sent them to you. Even if new births do not add to the number of children in the Ashram, the coming of new families add to their number. If we learn to cherish equal love for all of them, we shall not feel the pain of separation from Umi, though we should strive to understand its deeper meaning.

We shall meet soon.

_Blessings from Bapu_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3668

570. _A LETTER_²

_CALCUTTA_,

December 24, 1928

CHI . . .

You should surely not leave if you are not getting fever, if your mind is at peace and if you have become accustomed to the work there by this time. It is true that the Bal Mandir does not belong to anyone and everyone. But the Bal Mandir should be the finest part of the [Udyog] Mandir. The experiment we are conducting is unique. Treat it as an experiment in non-violence. If all of you sisters shower love on the children, they will dance as you wish and will teach you the art of teaching them. Nothing is impossible for love. Let none of you therefore, think of leaving the Bal Mandir without reason. If you identify yourself with it, your physical illness will also vanish.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/44

571. _LETTER TO RAMA C. JOSHI_

_CALCUTTA_,

*December 24, 1928*¹

CHI RAMA,²

You are being tested well. Since it is natural for you to feel pain at the loss of Umi³ it should of course be so regarded. But we have been trying to forget the habit of grieving over the loss of our dear ones. why should we grieve when we know that union is bound to end

¹ From Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary

² Wife of Chhaganlal Joshi

³ Urmila, addressee’s daughter, news of whose death from pneumonia had just reached Gandhiji; vide “Telegram to Chhaganlal Joshi”, 24-12-1928 in separation? We feel it natural to grieve because we have got into that habit. There are certain communities which do not feel so. Among the Muslims death causes the least grief. Grief over death is thus not a universal rule. It does of course seem to be regarded as natural by the Hindus. Being contrary to the teaching of the Gita, the habit needs to be given up. The first chapter refers to the difference we make between our people and other people. Shri Krishna abolishes that distinction. In the Ashram we have been trying to forget it. You should regard your present misfortune as an occasion for succeeding in our attempt. To whom do the children in the Ashram belong? Loving those children and serving them, you will not feel the loss of Umi and the strength of worldly desires in you will diminish.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro—7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshe, p. 276

572. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

Silence Day [December 24, 1928]

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I have received your letters. Father is here, his health is fair. I have not been able to see him so far. I am glad to know that you are getting well acquainted with Kusum.

You need not keep anything from her. Being firm herself she can advise you correctly. However much other people may dissuade you, always inform me if anyone falls ill.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 3319

---

1 From the reference to the growing acquaintance between Kusum and the addressee, this letter appears to have been written in 1928, and Gandhiji hoped to meet addressee’s father in Calcutta where he had gone to attend the session of the Indian National Congress.
573. LETTER TO V. G. JANARDAN RAO

CALCUTTA,
December 26, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I have transferred it to Sjt. Ghanshyamdas Birla who will correspond with you directly.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

SJT. V. G JANARDAN RAO

GURU RAJA VILAS

SRIRAMPET, MYSORE

From A copy: S.N. 26908

574. SPEECH ON RESOLUTION ON NEHRU REPORT,
CALCUTTA CONGRESS— I

December 26, 1928

Mahatma Gandhi in an introductory speech delivered in Hindustani before moving the resolution said that the gravity of the situation demanded that he should also put his views before the country. Although he liked to speak in Hindustani, circumstances demanded that he should move the resolution in English. Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru then read out the text of the resolution.

This Congress having considered the constitution recommended by the All-Parties Committee Report welcomes it as a great contribution towards the solution of India’s political and communal problems and congratulates the Committee on the virtual unanimity of its recommendations and whilst adhering to the resolution relating to Complete Independence passed at the Madras Congress adopts the constitution drawn up by the Committee as a great step in political advance, specially as it represents the largest measure of agreement attained among the important parties in the country, provided however that the Congress shall not be bound by the constitution, if it is not accepted

1 At the Subjects Committee Meeting

2 As a result of the All-Parties Conference’s resolution, a committee was appointed under the chairmanship of Motilal Nehru to draft the principles of a constitution before 1-7-1928. The report of this Committee, known as the Nehru Report, was submitted at the All-Parties Conference held at Lucknow from August 28 to 30, 1928. Vide... on or before the 31st December 1930 and provided further that in the event of non-acceptance by the British Parliament of the constitution by that date the Congress will revive non-violent non-co-operation by advising the country to refuse taxation and every aid to the Government.

The President is hereby authorized to send the text of this resolution together with a copy of the said report to His Excellency the Viceroy for such action as he may be pleased to take.

Nothing in the resolution shall interfere with the propaganda for familiarizing the people with the goal of independdence in so far as it does not conflict with prosecution of a campaign for the adoption of the said Report.1

(2) Meanwhile the Congress shall engage in the following activities: (a) In the legislatures and outside every attempt will be made to bring about total prohibition of intoxicating drugs and drinks; picketing of liquor and drug shops shall be organized wherever desirable and possible. (b) Inside and outside legislatures methods suited to respective environments shall be immediately adopted to bring about boycott of foreign cloth by advocating and stimulating production and adoption of hand-spun and hand-woven khaddar. (c) Specific grievances, where-ever discovered and where people are ready, shall be sought to be redressed by non-violent action as was recently done at Bardoli.

(d) Members of legislatures returned on Congress tickets shall devote the bulk of their time to the constructive work settled from time to time by the Congress Committee. (e) Congress organizations shall be perfected by enlisting members and enforcing strictest discipline. (f) Measures shall be taken to rid the country of social abuses. (g) Measures shall be taken to remove disabilities of women and they will be invited and encouraged to take their due share in national upbuilding (h) It will be the duty of all Congressmen, being Hindus, to do all they can to remove untouchability and help the so-called untouchables in every possible way in their attempt to remove their disabilities and better their condition. (i) Volunteers shall be

1 To this, amendments were moved by Jawaharlal Nehru and Subhas Chandra Bose. Their aim was to put no time-limit, nor, even by implication, to accept for India Dominion Status as contemplated in the constitution drawn up by the All-Parties Conference (at Delhi). Subsequently, this resolution was withdrawn. For the resolution approved by the Congress, vide “Speech on Resolution on Nehru Report, Calcutta Congress-II”, 28-12-1928.
enlisted to take up village reconstruction in addition to what is being done through the spinning-wheel and khaddar. (j) Such other work as may be deemed advisable in order to advance nation-building in all its departments and in order to enable the Congress to secure co-operation in national efforts of the people engaged in different pursuits. In order to finance the activities mentioned in the foregoing programme every Congressman with a monthly income of Rs. 100 and over shall contribute five per cent of his monthly income provided that in special cases exemption may be granted at the discretion of the Working Committee.¹

Continuing, Mahatma said:

Friends, I hope I shall not detain you for many minutes in my introductory remarks. It is an open secret that we have in our camp sharp differences of opinion as to the lead Congressmen should receive in connection with the epoch-making Report. I call it an epoch-making Report of the All-Parties Constitution Committee. We have the Delhi resolution² and the first thing that strikes anybody would be why not affirm or reaffirm the Delhi resolution dealing with this question. If it could have been done consistently with national interest there would have been an end to all new resolutions and certainly I would not have troubled you. I must take you in confidence and tell you that the President himself felt that the Delhi resolution required rethinking and revision. Some of us putting our heads together came to the conclusion that the Delhi resolution was a self-contradictory resolution. So we cast about to find a middle path so that consistently with honesty and with desire to accept the Nehru Report we should frame another resolution. This resolution is the result of it. Even as it is, this resolution is an attempt to satisfy and if not to satisfy at least to conciliate those schools of thought that are prevailing in the Congress with regard to the Report. That we have two schools of thought is no matter of misfortune or grief.

I suggest to you that the purpose of Congressmen should be to adopt the Nehru Report in the same spirit in which it was received by the whole of India at the time it was published. Let me recall to you that at the time of its publication it was not only enthusiastically received by the nation but it commanded, it extorted, the unstinted admiration of our critics, of our opponents and of outsiders who were disinterested spectators. It is, if you choose to do so, open to you to say that we shall not accept the Report, but I say it would be bad if we came to such a conclusion hastily. But if after the first flash of enthusiasm had died out and after a careful study of the Report we come to the conclusion that the best interests of the nation will not be served by accepting the Report, it would be your bounden duty, though painful, to reject it. I suggest to you either we should give our wholehearted support or we should not support it at all. It is a document which is not an end in itself but the beginning of the end. It is a document which is designed to bring together as many important parties as it is possible with a view to concentrating their attention and efforts upon some common purpose in connection with our political advance.

¹ This clause on constructive programme was later passed, after a few amendments, as a separate resolution; vide “Speech on Constructive Programme, Calcutta Congress”, 1-1-1929

² Passed by the All-India Congress Committee at Delhi on November 3, 1928. It reiterated the demand for Complete Independence and accepted the Nehru Committee recommendations for the settlement of communal differences.

When the Committee approached its labours you must know that the horizon was dark. I know myself there were tremendous difficulties and there was a time when there was nothing but despair staring the members in the face, but Dr. Ansari and your President were not men who would give in easily to despair. They fought the tide of despair and how successfully you know and the world knows.

You the Congressmen are the authors of this Convention and in the same breath that you adopted complete national independence as your goal you asked the Working Committee to have the Convention of all parties with a view to framing a scheme of swaraj as I call it or call it a constitution that would be acceptable to the majority of the parties and you had a committee consisting of the most eminent men in the country known for their services to the country and you imposed on Congressmen the labours of bringing together all these men and getting them to go as near the Congress goal as they could possibly do. This must have been in your minds at the time you thought of the Convention, and at the time of asking the Working Committee to call a Convention into being.

That being so I suggest that unless there are overwhelming reasons for you not to accept the Report, it must be accepted by you. You cannot take this Report piecemeal or chop it up, for it is an organic whole. Just as you cannot chop a body and say I will have so much of the body and will not have the other half, so you do not chop this Report and say you will accept this part and not the other one. As Dr. Ansari has pointed out if you attack the central theme of the Report you stab the heart itself and the centre is what is known as Dominion Status. I suggest to you that it will be a grievous blunder to Independence against Dominion Status or compare the two and suggest that Dominion Status carries humiliation with it and that Independence is something that is triumphant. I do not want to go into the controversy just now. I simply say to you as a man of business wanting to serve the nation, wanting to educate the masses and influence the masses and desiring to enlist active co-operation of the masses in order to vindicate the honour of the nation. I suggest if you seek to do all these things you will think fifty times before you will go to the masses and compare these two things. Don’t run to the hasty conclusion that the distinguished authors of the Report had the interest of the country less at their heart than any of us, or most of us. Do not run away with the hasty conclusion that they want anything else than Complete Independence for the country. The word ‘independence’ is much abused and is an equally misunderstood word. The contents of that word would vary with the strength that the nation can call to its aid from time to time. (“Hear, hear.”) Independence of Nepal is not attained in the same way as independence of America. Then there is independence of the feudatory States—they flatter themselves sometimes with the belief that they are independent and they are sometimes called semi-independent States—they adopt the role of independence in their relations with their subjects. That is a species of independence. Let us not therefore make too much of that one word and let us not belittle the other two words (Dominion Status). I as a tried worker, as one who knows something of the masses, desire to warn you against confusing the mind of the nation. For you will simply entrap them and leave them in trap holes. Beware of doing any such thing.

I suggest that the utmost that a man desires—Independence—has been given to him by this resolution. The Madras resolution gives you the goal of the Congress. It tells you that Independence shall be the goal, but it has not declared independence. You are not now working for independence of the type that the authors of that resolution had in their mind. In one way we are all striving for independence. The Congress creed is the creed of independence. I challenge anybody to deny that. That is the process of evolution, but some of us consider that we should have the word ‘independence’ incorporated in the same resolution of the Congress so that we can put it before the nation. By all means have it, keep that word; but in considering this resolution I desire to tell you that, in the process of working, the very pace of independence is accelerated by it and not retarded. You might have easily slept over the goal you set before yourselves in Madras. But here by this resolution you dare not sleep over your goal; for at the end of two years you will have to work out your independence and practically you will have to declare independence. Some of us, and I include myself among them if I survive two years, may have to die in order to give a good account of ourselves for the sake of achieving independence and it may be till it is achieved, you will have to see our carcases. I yield to none in my desire to attain completest independence. So long as there is any one man who can interfere with my freedom or with the nation’s freedom it is intolerable and I consider that I live in vain. The fire of independence is burning within me as much as in the most fiery breast of anyone in the country but the ways and methods may differ and it may be that when I am nearing my destiny on this earth you may say, ‘For independence we may wait for fifty years’. If it is so, you will tell me and point out that I am weakened and you will then not listen to me but hiss me out of the Congress platform. And I shall consider myself unworthy to serve the nation. I want to dedicate what little strength I may have to the nation and not my weakness. For my weakness I shall answer before my Maker. For my strength it is all at your disposal. Do not run away with the idea for a single moment that I want to suggest anything less than what the nation can have today or what the nation should have tomorrow. Therefore I suggest that if really you want to work out the resolution of the Madras Congress for Independence you have got the amplest possible scope in this resolution but with one Supreme condition that having called the Convention into being you must be faithful to that Report as you will be faithful to your goal.

I would ask you to interpret that Report in terms of that goal and feel that the authors of that Report have also the goal of Independence in view and remember that the Chairman of that Committee which brought out the Report is the President of your Congress. I do not want to dissect this resolution at this stage but I want you to dismiss, in considering this resolution, all personal factors. I do not want you to become my patron. I want you to treat me as a comrade marching side by side with you and I also want you to outbid me in the march towards the goal. You may say, ‘Doctors have ordered rest for you, you can take well-deserved rest, we shall run and if you march side by side with us we may have to crawl.’ I say crawling we have buried in that wretched lane at Amritsar. We shall never crawl. I do not ask you to consider this resolution in any patronizing spirit, nor does your President stand in need of any patronage. I can swallow patronage, but not he. Eliminate therefore all considerations and make your own choice.

The Report is merely the commencement of the end. There is a lot of work to be done to achieve the purpose behind it. There is much spade-work even in this Congress. The Muslim League, Hindu Mahasabha and every other organization has got to do its duty before we can launch out that Report upon the wide ocean. It is necessary for you to chalk out a resolution which will satisfy all needs of that Report and not merely say: ‘All right, we accept the Report lest anybody should be offended or in order that diplomats may go on with diplomacy and steal something for us.’ It will not come by stealing. Freedom has never come by stealing. It has come by bleeding and you will have to bleed even for getting what is attempted in that Report.

I therefore want you to accept that Report whole-heartedly with the fixed determination to work for that goal. I do not want to wash down your goal. I want you to sustain your goal. If you wish you may misinterpret it or interpret it in any other way. I hope you will approach consideration of this resolution in a national spirit and if I may also say in a prayerful spirit.

Amrita Bazar Patrika, 27-12-1928

575. UNITY IN THE PUNJAB

With reference to my note in Young India on Dr. Satyapal’s telegram he has sent me the following letter which I welcome:

I am deeply obliged to you for your letter of 28th November (in reply to my telegram and letter) and also for the valuable comments made by you thereon in Young India.

I wish to assure you that every word of that telegram is heartfelt and sincere and is not prompted by any momentary impulse and interested reason, or any outward pressure. . . . The passing away of Lala Lajpat Rai throws a very heavy burden of responsibilities on the shoulders of the nationalist workers and they cannot afford to have any split in that camp. . . .

One point however I want to make quite clear. I have not been able to appreciate the idea of your finding ‘repentance’ on our part in that telegram. I have read the telegram several times over and still have not been able to find any words which signify any repentance on my part for my having opposed Lala Lajpat Rai during his lifetime when I felt it necessary to do so. . . .

I pay my heartfelt tribute to the memory of Lala Lajpat Rai but that does not mean that I subscribe to everything he advocated or championed. . . .

Young India, 27-12-1928

1 Vide “Good If True”, 29-11-1928.
2 Only extracts are reproduced here.
3 Vide “Letter to Dr. Satyapal”, 28-11-1928
576. CURSE OF ASSASSINATION

The assassination¹ of the Assistant Superintendent Mr. Saunders of Lahore was a dastardly act apart from whether it had a political motive behind it or not. Violence being in the air, there will no doubt be silent and secret approbation of the act, especially if it is discovered to have had any connection with the assault on Lalaji and his utterly innocent comrades. The provocation was great and it became doubly great by the death of Lalaji which was certainly hastened by the nervous shock received by him from the disgraceful conduct of the police. Some will insist, not without considerable justification, on ascribing the death even to the physical effect of the injury received by the deceased in the region of the heart. The provocation received also additional strength from the Punjab Government’s defence of the police conduct. I should not wonder if the assassination proves to be in revenge of the high-handed policy of the Punjab Government.

I wish however that it was possible to convince the hot youth of the utter futility of such revenge. Whatever the Assistant Superintendent did was done in obedience to instructions. No one person can be held wholly responsible for the assault and the aftermath. The fault is that of the system of Government. What requires mending is not men but the system. And when the youth of the country have the real determination they will find that it is in their power as it is in nobody else’s to kill the system.

English books have taught us to applaud as heroic deeds of daring, even of freebooters, villains, pirates and train-wreckers. Newspapers fill columns with exciting stories real or, in their absence, imaginary, of such deeds. Some of us have successfully learnt this art of applauding as heroic anything adventurous irrespective of the motives or contemplated results behind such deeds.

This cannot be regarded as anything but a bad omen. Surely there is nothing heroic about a cold-blooded robbery accompanied by murder of an innocent wealthy pilgrim carrying treasures for distribution in well-conceived charity. There is equally none in the deliberate secret assassination of an innocent police officer who has discharged his duty however disagreeable its consequences may be for the community to which the assassin belongs. Let us remember that the administrators of the system have held on to the system in spite of previous assassinations. After all the story of the building of the British Empire is not itself wanting in deeds of valour, adventure and sacrifice worthy, in my opinion, of a better cause. If we may regard the assassination of Mr. Saunders as a heroic deed the British people would be able to answer this one, I hope, solitary act of so-called heroism with countless such acts enough to fill a volume. But it is time we began irrespective of nationalities to regard deeds with mean motives or meaner consequences with nothing but horror, indignation and disapprobation, no matter how daring they may be. I know that this means a new valuation of such terms as heroism, patriotism, religiousness and the like. No one, I hope, regards the assassinations of Presidents Cleveland\(^1\) and Carnot\(^2\) as reflecting any credit upon the assassins or the nations in whose cause the mad men carried out their evil plans. Islam is not better for the assassination of so many Caliphs or, to take a modern instance, for the assassination of the late Swami Shraddhanandji. Nor has Hinduism been ennobled by the frenzied deeds one occasionally reads about of so-called protectors of the cow. The curse of assassination and kindred crimes is not advancing the progress to humanity, religion or true civilization.

¹ On 17-12-1928. Later, Bhagat Singh, Rajguru and Sukhdev were accused in the Lahore conspiracy case and sentenced to death.

Let the youth of India realize that the death of Lalaji can only be avenged by regaining her freedom. Freedom of a nation cannot be won by solitary acts of heroism even though they may be of the true type, never by heroism so-called. The temple of freedom requires the patient, intelligent, and constructive effort of tens of thousands of men and women, young and old. Acts such as we are deploiring decidedly retard the progress of this quiet building. When it does nothing else, it diverts the attentions of countless builders.

Young India, 27-12-1928

577. ALL-INDIA SPINNERS’ ASSOCIATION

The draft constitution proposed by Sheth Jamnalal Bajaj, Sjt. C. Rajagopalachariar and Babu Rajendra Prasad for the All-India Spinners’ Association as circulated amongst the members of the Executive Council of the Association and published in the papers was considered by the Council of the Association at its meetings held at Wardha on the 18th and 19th instant and was finally adopted with slight amendments.

The following were appointed as trustees for the permanent

---

\(^1\) Stephen Grover Cleveland (1837-1908), twenty-second and twenty-fourth President of the United States of America

\(^2\) Marie Francois Sadi Carnot (1837-94), fourth President of the French Republic

\(^3\) Presumably signed by Gandhiji without revising

The twelfth seat was kept vacant. The elections of the remaining three trustees retireable annually will take place in the due course.

Copies of the constitution can be had from the central office at Ahmedabad.

Young India, 27-12-1928

578. A SINDH CURSE

The Amils of Sindh are probably the most advanced community in that province. But in spite of all their advance, there are some serious abuses of which they seem to have a monopoly. Of these the custom of deti-leti is not the least serious. I have more than once remarked upon it in these columns. My attention was drawn to this abuse during my very first visit to Sindh and I was invited to speak to the Amil friends about it. Though no doubt isolated work has been done in the direction of removing this abuse, no organized effort seems to have been made to end the evil. The Amils are a compact little community. The seriousness of the evil is not questioned by anybody. I have not known a single Amil to defend the vile custom. It has persisted because it is a custom patronized by the educated youth among the Amils. Their mode of life is above the means they can honestly command. Hence they have thrown all scruples to the wind and do not mind degrading themselves by prostituting the institution of marriage for their own base ends. And this one vicious habit has told upon the quality of their national work which otherwise by their intellect and education they are capable of doing to the great benefit of the country.

In order to put an end to this evil, a provisional committee has already been formed now of which Acharya A. T. Gidwani has accepted the presidency. This is as it should be. When he undertook to go to Sindh from Brindaban it was naturally expected that he would throw himself with zest into all desirable movements that conduce to national well-being. It is to be hoped that the provisional committee will soon become a permanent organization and under his able leadership the reform which is already belated will make steady

---

1 Dowry
The Secretary, Sjt. Mirchandani, asks me for suggestions. The only suggestion that I can think of just now is that this organization should create a public opinion against deti-leti that would become irresistible. Your educated Amils are able to squeeze the poor parents of marriageable girls only because there is no active public opinion against the custom. There should be work done in the schools and colleges and amongst the parents of girls. The parents should so educate their daughters that they would refuse to marry a young man who wanted a price for marrying and would rather remain spinsters than be party to the degrading terms. The only honourable terms in marriage are mutual love and mutual consent.

Young India, 27-12-1928

---

579. MILK FOR BOMBAY

A friend on reading the article ‘A Blot on Bombay’ in Young India (29th November) writes to Mahadev Desai as follows:¹

I am afraid that the writer of the letter has misunderstood the article in question. No one has suggested that the question of the slaughter of cattle in Bombay or of the supply of pure milk will be solved by shifting the stables from the city of Bombay to the suburbs of Bombay. What is required and what has been suggested is that Bombay should bravely face the problem as behoves it. Surely the Gujaratis who are not living in Bombay are not the philanthropists who might be expected to come to the rescue of Bombay and solve one of its tremendous and equally urgent problems. The Municipality of Bombay has to take the initiative and make the move and if need be enlist the sympathy and co-operation of philanthropically-inclined Gujaratis. I fear that even if anybody outside Bombay wanted to come to the rescue, he would require special facilities from the Bombay Corporation. But we have not in this country the requisite capacity for private enterprise which would take great risks involved in a big venture that the supply of milk to a large city like Bombay undoubtedly is. Let it be also known that such private effort has been made before now in Bombay and it failed. I think that failure had definite causes. There was not sufficient grit and ability behind those ventures. But I submit that no cost is too great, no enterprise too risky for the Municipality of Bombay to undertake in order to ensure a supply of cheap and pure milk for its citizens and to rid Bombay of stables which are a source of danger to its health and which must be always coming in the way of any radical measure for dealing with malaria and other diseases which are rampant in Bombay. I freely admit that Bombay has to travel outside its radius for the organization of a vast dairy scheme. But that every city in the world has done for many of its wants.

---

¹ This is not reproduced here.

Young India, 27-12-1928

580. TELEGRAM TO LABOUR UNION, AHMEDABAD

December 27, 1928

LABOUR
AHMEDABAD

YOUR LETTER REACHING AHMEDABAD FOR CERTAIN BEFORE 11TH JANUARY.1

BAPU

From a copy: S.N. 2456

581. LETTER TO DR. H. W. B. MORENO

8 PRETORIA STREET,
CALCUTTA,
December 27, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your kind letter. I am so hemmed in that in this place of long distances, much as I should like to, it is not possible for me to go to your house. But if you could take the chance of finding me at the above address, please come tomorrow, the 28th instant at 8 p.m.

Yours sincerely,

H. W. B. MORENO, ESQ.
PRESIDENT, THE ANGLO-INDIAN LEAGUE
2 WELLESLEY SQUARE, CALCUTTA

From a photostat: S.N. 13024

1 In the dispute between the workers and the management of the Gujarat Ginning Mill, Gandhiji was a member of the Arbitration Board.
582. LETTER TO RAJA OF KANIKA

8 PRETORIA STREET,
CALCUTTA,
December 27, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. Much as I should like to send you an appointment, I am so much pressed for time that I hardly know whether I could give you an appointment before the Congress meets. I would therefore ask you to tell me briefly in writing what you want to say.

Yours sincerely,

THE RAJA OF KANIKA

From a microfilm: S.N. 13822

---

583. LETTER TO HOWARD HANLEHURST

AS AT SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM,
SABARMATI,
December 27, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I would not take the responsibility of advising you to come here. Though there is no movement in India called by the name that your movement bears, the spirit of brotherhood is there and works away silently. I fancy that your abilities can be more economically and usefully employed in your natural environments.

Yours sincerely,

HOWARD HANLEHURST, ESQ.
CHESTER-LE-STREET, ENGLAND

From a photostat: S.N. 15101

---

584. A LETTER

AS AT SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM,
SABARMATI,
December 27, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter received during Christmas week. I send you therefore my very best wishes.

I welcome your questions. So long as we indirectly sustain a system and derive our own support from it, so long are we bound to give it even direct support, unless we feel that the system being bad presents and effective opportunity for destroying it. The question when the opportunity is effective can only be determined in every individual case by one’s own strength of conviction and corresponding self-confidence. At the time of my participation in the Boer War and the late War, I saw neither the effective opportunity nor had I the confidence. Seeker after God which is Truth does not bother when the opportunity is effective or about self-confidence. God gives him the light when his time has come. All that man can do, is required to do, is to keep himself pure, humble to the extent of becoming a cipher in very truth. The light at the correct time is assured for him. Such a seeker confines himself to progressively narrow participation in a system in which he finds himself and from which he is too unable to extricate himself wholly at a bound.

---

1 Brotherhood of the World Association of Youth

I think that the second question is partly if not wholly answered in the foregoing. I can only add that a silent prayer is often more effective than the spoken word consciously uttered. Therefore in irresponsible surroundings like those of the Wall Street a reliance must be placed exclusively upon silent prayer accompanied by the strictest uncompromising conduct.

I am not absolutely sure of the European visit. But if I do go to Europe next year and if there is a call from within to go to America and if I have the time I would certainly go. But here again I am following my tried prescription within for light and guidance.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 15127

585. LETTER TO C. F. ANDREWS

CALCUTTA,
December 27, 1928

Being in the midst of all turmoil I have not much time to send you a love letter much as I should like during this Christmas week. Tucker\(^1\) has been constantly with me and was anxious to join the morning prayer on Christmas day and give appropriate hymns, but could not as his friends failed him at the last moment.

I am dictating this just for one thing, and that is Lalaji’s book.

---

1. In his letter dated 28-11-1928, the addressee had enquired about the publication of an English edition of Lala Lajpat Rai’s Unhappy India, and expressed concern about the misunderstanding created in the West by Miss Mayo’s Mother India.

2. Boyd William Tucker
After very careful consideration I have come to the conclusion that it is unnecessary just now to publish an abridgement of Unhappy India. Lalaji’s wish about the circulation of a thousand copies in Britain should be respected, not by presenting copies gratis to anybody except those who may want it but by keeping a stock there for sale. The third edition printed here is a well-got-up volume attractively bound. It may be sold even cheap. But it is the Indian copy which should be circulated there.

I do not attach much importance to replies to Miss Mayo’s calumny, however able and true they may be, and certainly not much importance will be given in the West to an Indian contribution. What must however be done is to present the West with a very brief and attractive volume containing the life and selections from all Lalaji’s writings. Such a volume will illustrate the truth that the most forward nationalists of India have not been haters of the West or of England or in any other way narrow but that they have been internationalists under the guise of nationalism. Such were Lalaji, Tilak, Das. I hardly need to mention many others. It may serve the cause of humanity if the truth can be brought out that the men who have been persecuted and practically done to death by this wicked Government had deserved a better fate.

I have perhaps not yet made absolutely clear what I want to say. But I have no doubt you have understood it.

Ba, Mahadev, Subbiah, Pyarelal, Krishnadas, Chhaganlal, Jamnalal, Keshu, Jamnalal and Rajagopalachari and several others whom you know intimately are with me.

C. F. ANDREWS, ESQ.
112 GOVER STREET
LONDON W.C. 1

From a photostat: S.N. 15128
586. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

Friday [On or before December 28, 1928]

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

Your letters come regularly. There are many Bombay friends travelling up and down. Some of them may escort you. I shall write to Mrityunjaya.

I am very careful in conducting my experiment of taking oil. I shall give it up if it does any harm.

Ba is slightly indisposed today.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 3317

587. SPEECH ON RESOLUTION ON NEHRU REPORT,
CALCUTTA CONGRESS—II

December 28, 1928

When Pandit Motilal called upon Mahatma Gandhi to move the new resolution a member objected to this procedure so long as the original resolution and the amendments had not been withdrawn.

The President ruled that Mahatmaji might take the permission of the house to substitute his resolution. All other amendments would be considered as amendments to the substituted resolution.

Thereupon Mahatma Gandhi in moving the withdrawal of his original resolution made an important statement giving an idea as to what had happened behind the scenes. He said:

Before I move the resolution which has been circulated to you, I beg leave of the house to withdraw the resolution which I had the honour of moving the other day and to which so many amendments have al-ready been moved. I know that in asking for permission to withdraw my resolution I owe to the house an apology. You have been

1 Vide “Letter to Chhaganlal Joshi”, 10-12-1928, mentioning the experiment in taking oil and “Letter to Kusum Desai”, 30-12-1928, which mentions Prabhavati’s absence from the Ashram.

2 At the Subjects Committee meeting

3 Vide “Speech on Resolution on Nehru Report, Calcutta Congress-I”, 26-12-1928. put to consi-derable inconvenience and trouble and a great deal of time has been given to the consideration of the amendments. I was going to say that a great deal of time was wasted but it would not be proper to call it a waste of time, because the consideration of these propositions has enabled you to understand more fully than ever before the mental condition of many of the national workers. It is perfectly correct to insist upon leave being granted for the withdrawal of the resolution into which I had put so much force and to which I attach a great deal of importance, but the national life is a perpetual struggle whilst it is growing. It is a struggle not only against the environments that seek to crush us but also a struggle between our own ranks. Often the struggle between our own ranks is more prolonged, more exacting and even more bitter than the struggle against the environment which is outside ourselves. You may depend upon it that we who were behind the resolution which will be withdrawn and those who were behind the principal amendment of Pandit Jawaharlal put their heads together and wanted to avoid a conflict. Mr. Sambamurthi was sur-prised why Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru was not here today. He may very well be surprised and I propose to take you into confidence. He was, as he said at the outset, not in sympathy with much that was going on in our midst. He has come impen-tant to throw off the yoke. Every twenty-four hours of his life he simply broods upon the grievances of his countrymen. He is impatient to remove the grinding pauperism of the masses. He is impatient against capitalists who are in the country exploi-ting the masses as he is against the capitalists who rule over this country and exploit and bleed this country in the words of late Lord Salisbury. I may tell you frankly that he is not in sympathy even with this resolution which I seek to substitute for the resolution which will be withdrawn if you give permission. He thinks this resolution itself falls far short of what he wants but, a high-souled man as he is, he does not want to create unnecessary bitterness. Bitterness and worse he is prepared to face if face them he must. He sees deliverance out of it by seeking to impose silence upon himself and remaining absent. Hence you find that even though he is a Secretary, and a faithful and diligent Secretary of the Congress, he feels that it is better for him this morning to absent himself than be a helpless witness to proceedings with which he is not in sympathy. I am sorry because I do not share his discontent over this resolution, while I share all his grief, the intensity of grief over the pauperism of our country and the slavery which is grinding us down. I do not share his belief that what we are doing at the present moment is not sufficient for the present needs of the country. But how can he help feeling dissatisfied? He would not be Jawaharlal if he did not strike out for himself an absolutely unique and original line in pursuance of his path. He considers nobody, not even his father, nor wife, nor child. His own country and his duty to his own country he considers and nothing else.

Now you understand why he is absent and now perhaps you will also understand why I have to perform the painful duty of withdrawing the resolution which I moved, not because I am sorry for that resolution, not because I am not in love with that resolution, not because the one I am now going to move is a better resolution by any means; I hold that that was far superior to the resolution which is now in my hand. But as I have said, our life is a perpetual struggle against oppressive environments and a perpetual struggle within our ranks. If we want unity, then adjustment and readjustment, a series of compromises honourable to both parties and to variety of opinions, is to be effected. We invest every occasion with the importance of a sacred siddhanta or principle from which not an iota should be removed. Many of the things which we call by the name of principles are no more principles than so many details which we do not call principles, and therefore this resolution is a result of attempts on the part of all parties in this house or those parties who are interested in that resolution and its principle amendments. It is a resolution of compromise between them, of a series of adjustment and readjustment between them. Hence, I feel that I am doing nothing wrong, not only that I am doing nothing wrong in asking for permission to withdraw that resolution although I consider it far superior to the resolution which I will presently move before you, but because I know that our national interest will be better served by the resolution which I consider far inferior to the former resolution because it will hold all parties together. They are no more inclined to divide the house than I was or Pandit Motilal was. Both of us were for dividing the house because we thought that we would win, but what would that victory mean if it increased the bitterness, if it increased the weakening of our national unity and our national forces?

There were not three or four people behind my original resolution but two parties behind it and even the principal amendment of Pandit Jawaharlal was a compromise. Even that fell far short of what he held to be dear to him, but he said, “If I could keep together all the different elements in the country I would waive my objection and move this resolution.” Hence you see that even that resolution was a result of compromise just as this is. Therefore if you still think that you will shoulder the responsibility and you consider that the interest of the country will be better served by not allowing me to withdraw that resolution, of course you can shoulder that responsibility, but remember what it means. I now leave the proposition in your hands. (Applause)

There are in our midst today those who would stop at nothing, who in their impatience do not mind if they rush headlong even to perdition. What are we to do? What am I to do—a man approaching his end? What am I to say to those flowers of the country who prize its liberty just as much as I do, if not perhaps much more? What am I to say to it? Am I to say I shall no longer come with you because I consider that my principle is better, my method is better, therefore you shall work out your own destiny; you shall work out that without my services? I assure you, it is not without a considerable pain, that I have taken up this position. I could have defied them just as they could have defied me, but they say: ‘We do not do it, because we want your services also, if we get them; but not altogether at your price. We want you to pay the same price to us also. We want you to meet us also.’ I could not possibly resist it without stultifying myself and without degrading myself. Although I feel it was a better resolution, I will move this with all the force at my command and with all the insistence that I put into the original resolution. This resolution, therefore considering the circumstances, becomes really, for the time being, superior to the resolution that I moved and hence I ask for your leave to withdraw that resolution and let me put before you this resolution for your consideration.

If after what I have told you, if after I have taken you into the secrets and if after I have told you of something which induced me to withdraw my resolution, if after all that you do not want that my original resolution be withdrawn and if you care to take that serious responsibility upon your shoulders, you can say that the resolution shall not be withdrawn. Then your vote will be tantamount to your voting for that resolution. But I warn you against that serious responsibility.2

The President asked the house to signify its desire whether leave be allowed to Mahatmaji to withdraw his former resolutions and move the present agreed one. This was given by the whole house with show of hands. There were only four dissentients.

Mahatmaji then moved his resolution:

This Congress, having considered the constitution recommended by the All-Parties Committee Report, welcomes it as a great contribution towards the solution of India’s political and communal problems, and congratulates the Committee on the

1 Here a member raised a point of order that Gandhiji should not be allowed to make a speech in withdrawing the resolution.
2 After the speech, Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya opposed the withdrawal of Gandhiji’s former resolution.
virtual unanimity of its recommendations, and, whilst adhering to the resolution relating to Complete Independence passed at the Madras Congress, approves of the constitution drawn up by the Committee as a great step in political advance, especially as it re-presents the largest measure of agreement attained among the important parties in the country.

Subject to the exigencies of the political situation this Congress will adopt the Constitution, if it is accepted in its entirety by the British Parliament on or before December 31,1929, but in the event of its non-acceptance by that date or its earlier rejection, the Congress will organize a campaign of non-violent non-co-operation by advising the country to refuse taxation and in such other manner as may be decided upon.

Consistently with the above, nothing in this resolution shall interfere with the carrying on, in the name of the Congress, of the propaganda for Complete Independence.

In moving the substituted resolution Mahatma Gandhi said:

Friends, I don’t want to inflict a long speech upon you but I must confess to you that I have not been able to collect my thoughts, my brain is muddled and I have got to put my thoughts together as I proceed. It is really a fact that my brain is muddled. A physician will tell you what happens to a man who has to undergo an all-night vigil and that anxiously following the delicate proceedings as I had to do in a little tent nearby when the Convention Committee was meeting to which I was dragged, not called, by our Chairman. I had hoped that I would not have to attend that Committee, but a peremptory summons came and I had to jump into a car that brought me to the place which I could not leave before half past two in the morning after which it was no longer possible for me to go and sleep.

You will now see what I mean when I say I have got a muddled brain.

The resolution that I have the honour of moving, you have already heard. I want you first of all to consider what has been omitted from the original resolution. It is necessary to do so not in order to commend this resolution to your attention because I know that this resolution having been accepted by the two parties, large parties in this house, it does not need any commendation. Even if I merely place this resolution before you I feel it is absolutely safe in your hands. There may be a few who may vote against it but it is not my purpose merely to get this resolution passed. That is the least important part of it. But my purpose is to draw your attention upon what is expected of you, why you are having this resolution and not

458 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
the original resolution passed and what is expected of the party which is instrumental in having the first resolution watered down. You will find there is a glaring omission for which I am sorry. That is the omission in connection with the sending of the resolution to the Viceroy. I could understand even whilst I was drawing that clause that when it would be read to you some of you would be shocked and say to yourselves: ‘Thou too, non-co-operator!’ I rehearsed that to myself. But a non-co-operator, the author of non-co-operation, has brought in that clause and if I could even now convince you how important that clause is and if you ask me to restore it I would gladly restore it. I have no time. You do not know how pressed some of us are for time. I had no time even to discuss the reason for putting down that clause to the original proposition. I said to myself when I drew up that clause if I discovered any reluctance on your part I would gladly destroy it. But I want to put my case before this house not because of my reputation as non-co-operator—because that is well able to take care of itself, because there is still action left behind it—but because I want the house to understand the implications of non-co-operation as also the implications of this very resolution.

Somebody has said that this resolution is a challenge and so it is. It is open to the British Government to interpret this as an insolent challenge if they wish. We need not be afraid of it. But if there is the slightest trace of change of heart about these in the governors then it is open to them also to understand the yearnings of the nation which is trying to rise, which is trying to throw off the yoke of thraldom. It would be better for them; it will be better also for the world because they represent a big nation. But we cannot help if they will not put correct interpretation upon this resolution. But as I said if it is a challenge it is also a threat. I am not frightened of going even to the House of Commons. I am not even frightened of going to the Viceroy. But when could I go there? Only when it is honourable for me to do so quite consistently with the creed of non-co-operation. I non-co-operate with the evil, I do not non-co-operate with the good. I do not non-co-operate with persons, I non-co-operate with measures and when measures commend themselves to me I co-operate with them. If the Viceroy today asks me to go to him to discuss things of importance for the country on a footing of equality I will go there barefooted and still defend my non-co-operation. If the time comes—and time must come, it is possible for you to hasten that time—it will be possible for you to hasten that day you have put before you, if you only work out that programme and approach the resolution in the spirit in which it ought to be approached. It is possible for you to have summons to go to the House of Commons and then you will go as non-co-operators, not as co-operators. Then you will go as national deleagtes who are required to come to some reasonable terms in respect of what we are demanding. It won’t be something degrading to us, it won’t be something which is a right of the House of Commons to give and for you to take as beggars. It will be then a matter of “high contracting parties”, as the term goes and as it is described, even as South Africa went.

I have been quoting to you things about South Africa, because not being a student of history which is written in dead pages but being a student of history which is now being written, I know more of South Africa than of any other country because I lived there. I tell you that General Botha and General Smuts fought so gallantly and bravely extorted the admiration of King Edward who sent a message saying:
“I do not want to fight any longer with these gallant people.” It was then that these gallant generals went to England. But as what? They went as delegates and ambassadors of that nation to vindicate their honour, to gain their liberty not on terms dictated by the House of Commons but on terms they had settled at a Convention just like this.
Have we got the bravery of those generals?

Have we got a General Botha in our midst who is prepared to sacrifice 20,000 acres of his valuable property and so many thousands of his sheep? You do not know perhaps that General Botha was one of the experts of the world in knowing a good sheep from a bad sheep.
He was as free with these things as he was free with his life-blood.
Have we got a General Botha? Have we got a General Smuts who is just as ready to tuck up his sleeves and work underground as to shoulder his rifle when the country demanded? I feel we have. If we had not I would not place this resolution before you. I would simply retire to Sabarmati.

Dr. Pattabhi Sitaramayya asked me: ‘What is it that has brought you again out of your den? Is it again to coquet with the Swaraj Party because you were in love with Pandit Motilal Nehru? Is it still your lingering love for Motilal that has brought you?’ These are not his exact words. This is the substance of what Dr. Pattabhi said. You will, therefore, take this with some degree of reservation. I told him I would give an explanation of it. It was no lingering love but the burning love for my dear comrade. When he said: ‘You were instrumental in putting this crown of thorns upon my head, you will now have to come and see how many bruises that crown of thorns caused to my head and you will have to come and share some of those bruises,’ I would be guilty of breach of friendship, I would be guilty of breach of duty to

1 What follows is from Forward, 29-12-1928.
the nation, if after having pressed them to take their share at this critical juncture in the history of the country, I had not responded to his call and said: ‘I shall come on the day you fix and I shall leave on the day you ask me.’ (Applause) You now understand why I have come here and you now understand the importance I attach to this resolution, compromised though it is, weaker though it is, than the original resolution.

Then coming to this clause about the Viceroy; that is because it was a necessary sequel to that resolution as it is a necessary sequel to this resolution. This resolution is really without its crown, but we are today suffering from what is known in psychology as inferiority complex. We have King Charles’ head dangling before our eyes every five minutes. You know the celebrated Mr. Dick who could not possibly think of anything without imagining the head of King Charles. This brand of inferiority is marked on our foreheads, on our breasts. It is always dangling before us and worrying us to death. That we see in every-thing and there is the apprehension lest we might weaken ourselves. Now we are strengthening ourselves. It was, as some papers put it, an ultimatum. But it was a performance of courtesy. I expected those who are the trustees of the honour of the British nation to understand the implications of this resolution, I want them to understand the yearnings of the nation, and therefore I perform this delicate task, the delicate courtesy, of transmitting this resolution to them to do what they like with it. I understand what all these proceedings mean.

I do not want to leave anything open to them to say ‘we do not know anything about this resolution’.

Do not make any mistake about it, that this All-Parties Constitution is not a demand to be considered by the British nation, but do not go away with the idea that this is a document which is never to be considered by them. It is not a thing to be submitted to the Simon Commission, but this is a document to be considered by the British Government, by the Imperial Government, by the Viceroy and those who are today supposed to be ruling the destinies of India. It has been drafted for this purpose. I say it is also a Charter of Independence as we consider it today. Friends, I think I warned you against drawing any distinction between Dominion Status and Independence. I call it Independence. I had to say last night “for heaven’s sake, do not depart from this document” nor can you contemplate a departure from this document. It is a sacred document. It is nothing more, nothing less. If it is a sacred document, you cannot possibly depart from it. Then you will have a special session of the Convention and the Congress to consider the desirability of removing even a comma if necessary. Having given that sacred character to that document it does not mean that it has got to be kept in a treasure chest. It is a document which must be circulated and above all to Viceregal ranks. Do not leave it open to them to say: ‘You have not sent this for our consideration. Even if it was an ultimatum you should have sent it to us.’

I did the same thing in regard to Bardoli. I wrote a letter addressed to the Viceroy but within 24 hours of that letter I had the painful duty of withdrawing it and reshaping it as I considered this was necessary because of the further events. If I was suffering from the fever of inferiority complex I could have given an interview to the Press representatives and expected the Viceroy to send me an answer. But I took the proper course. Similarly, I want to take a proper course in regard to this resolution for thereby you will not weaken but strengthen your case if you are going to do anything at all.

I again repeat that the Nehru Report has got to be considered by the British Parliament and by the Viceroy if it is to result in anything whatsoever. The authors of the Nehru Report knew it. You know it and I know it. It would be a sign of weakness, it would be undignified, not to recognize it. If the Viceroy is a worthy representative of his King and his nation, he will take note of this resolution even though it does not contain the clause which I should have liked to be inserted but from this platform I declare if he cares to read my remarks which I do convey to him that it will be proper for him to take this resolution to heart and to understand that at least some of us mean to vindicate every word of what is contained in it. (“Hear, hear”) If you cry “hear, hear” then I ask you to restore that clause for submission to the Viceroy. (Cries of “No, no”) If you say “no” then I say you are suffering from inferiority complex. I have had some experience of it myself in South Africa where I was addressed as a cooly.

I now address my remarks to the impatient young men who have insisted upon 1929 and also to those who want December, 1930. When I put down 1930, I counted the consequences. So many friends have been coming to me and asking me: “If we vote for this resolution and if we vote for this programme, will you repeat what you did in 1920, will you take virtual control of national affairs?” I said I have

---

1 What follows is from Amrita Bazar Patrika, 29-12-1928.
2 The tragedy of Chauri-Chaura on February 4, 1922; vide “Letter to Viceroy”, 1-2-1922
3 What follows is from Forward, 29-12-1928.
4 Vide “Speech Replying on Non-Co-Operation Resolution, Calcutta”, 8-9-1920 and “Swaraj in One Year”, 22-9-1920 not got the strength today to fight single-handed. But I will if you come to terms with me and if you will bear the yoke. The yoke will be much tighter and much heavier than it was in 1920. It is a seasoned yoke and it has not worn out by usage. It becomes stronger and stronger by usage. If you give me the discipline that I shall exact, then certainly I will give you my work, so much of it as my frail body can give. Today I have come to perform a sacred duty to my country and after that my back is turned upon Calcutta and I retire to Sabarmati. I say to you that beyond putting this resolution before you, you may not expect anything unless these inexorable terms are granted to me by you, not unwillingly but of your own accord. It will be no use dragging me, no good asking me to take control unless you mean every word of what you say.

I thought two years was a shortening of time to organize our forces, in order to give battle if we must give battle to the Government. One year is nothing, one year will be required to create the discipline in our ranks. Our Congress roll today is nothing but a bogus affair. Let us face facts. It is worth nothing. If I went with inspectors to examine the Congress registers it would be a sad disappointment for me. We want a living register of the Congress. We want to be in a position to say even from day to day, so many more members are enrolled, so much more yarn given, so many more four-anna bits given and whatever it is, but I would expect the figure to come to our Central Office from week to week if not from day to day, showing enhanced subscription and increasing membership.

That will take one year and one year more will be required for giving ourselves confidence and courage, and for consolidation of communal unity. Communal unity is not yet in sight. Much has got to be done. The whole of last night was spent in trying to bring about communal unity. We want some time for the atmosphere to clear. I hold therefore that two years is all too short a time. But I said to myself: ‘What does it matter if all these impatient young men want me to share the discredit of showing nothing at the end of one year? I will share it.’ I have given the warning that if they do not give a good account of themselves in terms of this resolution and no other, they will earn discredit and I shall gladly share it with them as a comrade and a party to this document. But I give them a warning from this public platform. Let them give themselves night in, night out and day in and day out to work out the constructive part of the programme in terms of the resolution in order to hasten the march towards our goal.

I now come to the Madras Congress approval. It would have needed no commentary on my part but for a discussion we had in the tent. I simply want to clarify the issues. Independence we may reiterate from a million platforms in the name of the Congress, but we must not treat the report of the All-Parties Committee as something separate from Independence. By approving it, you are not weakening your struggle for Independence. You are using that document as a stage and as a big stage in your progress towards Independence and as you harangue upon Independence from your platforms, it will be your duty, if you are true to this resolution of approval to your constitution, to say, ‘We want you to treat this Nehru Report in terms of our goal and consolidate the Nehru Report in the struggle for Independence.’ Do not consider the Nehru Report as an excrescence to be deplored but regard it as an integral part of the struggle. I tell you that this resolution commits you to that attitude of mind. Unless you do that, the Nehru Report really will be a halter round your necks, and it will be always like King Charles’ head coming before you and you will always seek to hide it behind you. And if somebody says, ‘what about the Nehru Report?’ you will omit all mention of it or pretend you did not hear him or had forgotten all about it. If that is your attitude towards the Nehru Report, then do not approve it because approval means that you like it, you appreciate their labour, you feel that they have discharged the national trust and they have discharged the trust on behalf of those who want independence and nothing else. They have worked on behalf of them as much as they have worked on behalf of those who are still frightened of Independence, who cannot stand the glare of Independence and they have worked for both parties, they have accommodated both parties, but the Independent-wallah has nothing to be ashamed of in this Report but everything to be proud of. You can make what you like out of that Report and I think you can make much more out of that Report than the man who cannot stand the dazzle and glare of Independence.

You call it special pleading. I have never been guilty of that art. Every word that I say comes out of the deepest recesses of my heart. The heart is responding although the brain is reeling. I ask you to bear in mind what you are doing when you accept the resolution. Do not say that it is a waste paper or a consolation prize to Motilal Nehru lest he be offended with the magnificent ride he had on a chariot drawn by 34 more or less white horses. After that triumphant ride he stands in no need of a consolation prize. Much less do I need a consolation prize.

I want drops of your life-blood to mingle with mine, the drops of Hindu blood to mingle with Muslim blood and Sikh blood, Parsi blood and Christian blood so that a magnificent memorial may rise in Calcutta, if you like, to show what this nation has done in order to earn its liberty, in order to buy its liberty, not with gold but with blood. That is what I want you to read into this resolution. The resolution calls you to that duty and nothing else. Then there is very little left for me to say.

But I had better explain to you the exigencies of the political situation. Of course it sticks in the throat. It is again an interpolation from that old dame “Inferiority Complex”, but sometimes we will have to treat old dames as young maidens. Supposing that a Viceroy or a Secretary of State for India loses his head and says: “What are these insolent men doing, firing these insults against the nation and demanding Dominion Status even at the point of the bayonet?” We have no bayonets. But the points of our pens sometimes feel like bayonets. But how can we avoid it? If yearnings of our hearts, if the miseries or signs of the burning of our hearts, are misread, we cannot help it. But they choose to do so, imprison some of us, or do something worse. Suppose after this resolution and after all we are doing here, we have a demonstration against the Simon Commission whenever it comes officially to Calcutta—the last time I understand it did not come officially and therefore you restrained yourselves and showed how you were capable of behaving yourselves—but when it makes its official entry and you welcome it with black flags, supposing then that some Superintendent of Police in the discharge of his duty as he considers it, uses his rifle, what are we to do? Are we still to say “Yes, we shall accept Dominion Status”? We can say that if we do not want to treat it as an exigency of the political situation and if we do not feel strong enough, we can swallow that injury, and weak we certainly are, and yet we can say: “Yes, we shall accept Dominion Status.” But we may get together sufficient courage and have a manifestation of such courage within us that will enable us to say “No more Dominion Status, no more parleying. Now Complete Independence”. That is a political exigency that we have provided for.

If the Commission reads these signs aright, it will see the country stands by the Nehru Report. Of course there is no such hope from the Commission to read the signs aright. And I am not such a simpleton to believe it but I am also an irrepressible optimist. If some sudden influx of energy comes to us, the Hindus, and if Mohammedans and Sikhs say after having listened to this mad man and known the fire that was burning in his breast: “Let us shed our mutual distrust and say we don’t want communalism at all”, we shall trust our Muslim and Sikh friends and if as a result of the trust some of us have to die or to be deprived of our franchise and rights, it does not matter, that will be a step in our march towards our goal; if that kind of courage and conviction comes to you all of a sudden, then I promise that Sir John Simon will say: “That is my Report, I understand the situation in India as no other representative of the British Nation does understand.” Today we have not got that atmosphere, we have not got that trust, we have not got that self-confidence, hence you hedge yourselves round with all the badges of inferiority complex. But the key lies in the resolution which I have placed before you.

(Applause)

Amrita Bazar Patrika, 29-12-1928 and Forward, 29-12-1928

588 WHAT IS IN A NAME?

December 29, 1928

At the time of writing this (forenoon, 29th December) it is too early to give my impressions of the Congress. The events are moving and changing so fast that the impressions of the morning are nullified by those of the evening. Meanwhile, therefore, it may be well to understand the controversy raging round Dominion Status and Independence. The more I hear the arguments of those who have forced the issue, the more clearly do I see the harm that is being done by it. Up to a certain point it was perhaps health giving and necessary. It was certainly good to appreciate the fact that nothing short of independence could possibly be the goal of the nation and that therefore every advance should be interpreted in terms of independence. It follows therefore that every political change or reform that may impede the nation’s march towards independence should be rejected.

But what is the meaning of this independence? For me its meaning is swaraj. Independence is a word employed for European consumption. And those whose eyes are turned outward, whether it be towards West or East, North or South are thinking of anything but India’s independence. For finding India’s independence we must look to India and her sons and daughters, her needs, and capacity. It is obvious that the contents of her independence must therefore vary with her varying needs and increasing capacity. India’s independence therefore need not have the meaning current in the West. Italian independence is different from that of England, Sweden’s differs from both.

One thing that we need is undoubtedly freedom from British control in any shape or form. But freedom from such control of any other power is equally our need in terms of independence. The Nehru Report points the way to such freedom and it prescribes the remedy that India can assimilate today. It is a worthless document if it means anything less. Its acceptance is wholly compatible with the national goal and I venture to think that the fiercest champion of national independence can and should safely work for its full fruition. The Report is not an end in itself. It simply gives us the formula according to which we should work. It presumes concentrated ceaseless work by all the different parties before it can bear fruit.

Great confusion has been created by tearing the much abused expression ‘Dominion Status’ from its context. It is not an elixir of life to be imported from Westminster to put life into us. The expression has been used by the distinguished authors of the Report to show by analogy what in their opinion is needed for India’s political growth. The scheme of government adumbrated in the Report, whether it is known by the expression Dominion Status or any other, whilst it may fully answer our needs today, may easily fall short of them tomorrow. But it contains its own corrective. For it is a scheme to be worked out by the nation, not one to be imposed upon or thrown at her by Britain. If it fructifies, it contains all we need for future growth; hence I call it the Charter of our Independence.

After all, if the Nehru Report is consigned to oblivion, we shall still need a charter. It may be known as the charter of India’s independence and may still conceivably be much less than the Dominion Status of the Nehru Report.

If what we want therefore cannot be sufficiently described by the swadeshi word swaraj, it cannot be described by any other word that can be coined. All that the man in the street should know is that he wants the scheme of government framed by the nation’s representatives without the change of a comma and then he can say with the greatest confidence: ‘What is in a name?’

That the Nehru scheme requires endorsement by the British Parliament is no defect in it. Since we are connected with Britain, we shall in every case need some sort of endorsement from her Parliament whether the scheme is to be transmutation of the present bondage into an absolutely equal partnership to be destroyed at will or whether it is to end every sort of connection with Britain. I shall always maintain that the transmutation, complete conversion, is any day a higher status than destruction. But of this later. Enough for us to learn by heart for the moment that any scheme to take us towards swaraj or if you will, independence, must be framed by us and must be accepted without a single alteration dictated by the British Parliament.

Young India, 3-1-1929
589. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

Saturday, December 29, 1928

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I have a few moments to myself today and I give them to this letter. Despite pressure of work and late hours, I have kept good health.

Tell Gangabehn that she should take complete rest and not be in a hurry to resume work. Tell Shankerbhai\(^1\) that he should never spend as much as one hour in the lavatory. In any case he should never strain. He should make changes in his diet and improve his health, or go out to some other place and do so. It will be quite proper for Kamala\(^2\) to make the kind of chapatis her father requires, but it is not proper to cook his meals separately. We have to learn to run a joint kitchen and overcome all the difficulties which arise. We have taken a vow to continue this experiment for at least a year. I believe, therefore, that we can make no changes.

I expect to leave this place on the 2nd or the 3rd. I hope to reach there before the 11th in any case. Mirabehn is coming here tomorrow and from here she will go to Bihar.

About other things, in the next letter or when we meet.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro-7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshi, p. 37

590. SPEECH ON RESOLUTION ON CONSTRUCTIVE PROGRAMME, CALCUTTA CONGRESS\(^3\)

December 29, 1928

The President [Pandit Motilal Nehru] then requested Mahatmaji to move his second resolution which runs as follows:\(^4\)

Mahatmaji said that he had no desire of detaining the house for many minutes

---

1. An inmate of the Ashram, looking after accounts
2. Daughter of Shankerbhai
3. At the Subjects Committee meeting
4. For the text of the resolution, \textit{vide} “Speech on Resolution on Nehru Report, Calcutta Congress-I, 26-12-1928, and for the final amended version, \textit{vide} “Speech on Constructive Programme, Calcutta Congress”, 1-1-1929 in explaining the resolution. It was plain enough. After what he had listened to for the last half an hour he would only say that the resolution could be worked out only by true Congressmen. It was only by them that the revival and organization of non-co-operation was possible. If they wanted the Nehru Report to fructify, the least that they could do was to work out the resolution with the greatest concentration and with equal integrity during the coming months.¹

Mahatma Gandhi said that he thought that he could take over one or two things from the amendments but when he ran his eye over the amendments suggested, he found nothing which needed to be taken over in the original resolution. The National Volunteers Corps was already in the country. He had proposed an effective use of the National Volunteers. As regards the suggestion about the peasantry and workers, he had been engaged in organizing the peasantry and workers and he did not think there was any person in that assembly there who could claim greater knowledge of the organization of the peasantry than himself. Knowing the matter as well as he did he was not inclined to take over this clause also because the clause in its most effective part was already in the resolution. There was one thing which he would like to clear up and that was with reference to the five per cent. He had never anticipated that the five per cent contribution was to last for ever. What he had anticipated was that this programme would be adhered to for one year and it would prove to be an effective test as to what the nation was capable of doing. If the nation could honestly work out, then the fear that Mrs. Besant had as to non-violent non-co-operation, non-payment of taxes and civil disobedience would be totally dispelled. The probability was that there would be no occasion for any such drastic step or direct action. She will discover that there is no such atmosphere in the country and that there is no untowardness from non-payment of taxes or other forms of civil disobedience. She had no fear of civil disobedience or suspension of taxes in Bardoli, and she thought that the people of Bardoli were justified because she said that the people had a felt grievance and there they could act as one man. But here they did not have a felt grievance or a longing or yearning for swaraj. If they had, they would not find the gross irregularities which had been brought to notice. He was very glad that these irregularities had been reported and hoped the matter would be properly investigated and the complaint effectively dealt with. With regard to the percentage he said it was intended as an acid test of the sincerity of the Congressmen. If they were really sincere about this programme and about getting the Nehru scheme accepted by the British Parliament or on failure of acceptance they were going to work out independence for themselves, and independence could not be gained simply by shouting from the house-tops, then they would not hesitate over this five per cent. He had deliberately excluded anything below Rs. 100, because he knew what difficulties some families had and he had also provided for excluding even this five per cent for the same reason, and left these matters to be dealt with by the Working Committee. If Congressmen were prepared to honestly work this programme, this test would show it. But if a proper atmosphere was not created then this would not be forthcoming except from solitary promises. He knew there was the danger of Congressmen leaving in force, of honest Congressmen who would fear that the money would be wasted and not properly applied. He considered all these dangers but unless they incorporated this provision for the purpose of making the Congress effective they would not make much headway. In spite of all these dangers he would take courage in both his hands and say no, as they all knew that he was an irrepressible optimist. He pressed the Resolution for their acceptance. If they liked they might remove that clause.

¹ After this Dr. Thambe moved an amendment that the term “swadeshi” be substituted for “hand-spun and hand-woven khaddar”. The amendment was, however, lost.

All the amendments were put to vote and lost and Mahatma Gandhi’s resolution put _en bloc_ and carried.

Amrita Bazar Patrika, 30-12-1928

591. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

CALCUTTA,

Sunday, December 30, 1928

CHI. VASUMATI,

Every day I want to write to you, but how could I possibly do so? You did not write to me about [your] weight. By all means go to Bombay and learn everything. When you go to work in the Udyoga Mandir this time, you must preserve your peace of mind absolutely.

_Blessings from_

BAPU

CHI. VASUMATIBEHN

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, WARDHA

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 501. Courtesy: Vasumati Pandit
592. LETTER TO M. T. WALAWALKER

AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

December 30, 1928

DEAR FRIEND.

I have your letter. You will have received the acknowledgment of the money order for Lalaji memorial.

As to the solutions you have offered about the monkeys, whilst they are interesting, you will notice that they are not non-violent. What I want to avoid is the slow torture of the monkeys.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. MAHADEV TUKARAM WALAWALKER
VENGURLA, KHADI KARYALAYA

From a microfilm: S.N. 13824

593. LETTER TO SAYYID ABDUL LATIF

AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

December 30, 1928

DEAR FRIEND.

I thank you for your letter. I have received the magazine. I have glanced through its interesting contents. But I am sorry to say that I have not a moment to spare to give you the kind of article that you want and I should like to give. I am however not sorry for the want of time for the simple reason that unity is not to be reached by any amount of writing but it will be reached by a silent transformation of our hearts which would only come when we are truly desirous of achieving unity.

Yours sincerely,

PROF. SAYYID ABDUL LATIF
OSMANIA UNIVERSITY COLLEGE
HYDERABAD (DECCAN)

From a microfilm: S.N. 13825
594. LETTER TO TARA SHANKER

AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
December 30, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. Personally I do think that you should remain firm and cut off all contact even if there is the slightest danger of her dying. In seeking to do the right often we have to risk the death of dearest ones. I am quite clear in my mind that all contact must cease.

I return the Hindi letter.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. TARA SHANKER
50 BUTLER HOSTEL
BADSHAHBAGH, LUCKNOW

From a microfilm: S.N. 13826

595. LETTER TO SACHINDRA NATH MAITI

AS AT THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
December 30, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I would suggest your studying the constitution of the Ashram published in the pages of Young India and I would further ask you to live in accordance with its vows at least for one year and then write to me what progress you have made. It will be then time enough to take stock and consider whether you should join the Ashram or not.

Yours sincerely,

SACHINDRA NATH MAITI, ESQ.
MIDNAPORE, BENGAL

From a photostat: S.N. 13827

---

1 The correspondent, a young man of 23, was returning from England and wished to join the Ashram.
596. LETTER TO RAJA OF KANIKA

CALCUTTA,
December 30, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter¹. I note the contents. The letter shall be treated as strictly private.

Yours sincerely,

RAJASAHEB OF KANIKA
19-A BALLYGUNGE, CIRCULAR ROAD, CALCUTTA

From a microfilm: S.N. 13828

597. LETTER TO LADY R. L. RAMANATHAN

AS AT THE ASHRAM, SARBAMATI,
December 30, 1928

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your touching letter. It revived all the memories of my visit to your college². It gave me joy to note that you are not forgetting Daridranarayana³. The handsome collection made by you should be sent to Sabarmati which I reach about the 6th of January.

Yours sincerely,

LADY RAMANATHAN
RAMANATHAN COLLEGE
CHUNNAKAM (CEYLON)

From a photostat: S.N. 13823

598. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

December 30, 1928

CHI. KUSUM,

I get your letters regularly. Prabhavati will have returned by the time you get this.

It has reassured me on your account to know that you have been serving everyone. Tell Sarojini Devi that I did not write to her because

¹ In reply to Gandhiji’s letter of 27th instant; vide “Letter to Raja of Kanika”, 27-12-1928
² On November 29, 1927. On the anniversary of that event the college collected Rs. 1,200 to be sent to Gandhiji.
³ God in the form of the poor.
I had nothing particular to say. And now we shall be meeting in four or five days. I intend to reach there on the 6th. Letters are now being taken away to be posted, and so I shall not write more.

_Blessings from_

_BAPU_

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1774

599. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

_December 30, 1928_

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I have your letter. I see that I shall not be able to start from here before the 3rd.

After I return there, you must give yourself some rest from office work.

The problem here has become very complicated this time. I simply cannot say what the outcome will be.

It is a question how long the Mandir should go on supervising khadi work done outside. Lakshmidas’s view certainly deserves consideration. We bear Prabhudas’s expenses as incidental to his living where he does. About Shantilal\(^1\), I have been thinking. I had a talk with Chhaganlal.

I for one feel that if the parents of any inmates of the Mandir come there and cannot take their meals in the joint kitchen, we cannot make separate arrangements for them. Our decision on this point will depend on our intention as to the direction in which we wish to develop the Mandir. If we wish to develop it into an Ashram, we ought to weaken our personal ties. If we wish to develop in the opposite direction and take interest in worldly life, the number of separate kitchens is bound to increase. If I want _shiro\(^2\)_ for myself, I must get it cooked in the Mandir’s kitchen. If my relations come, the only kitchen I have is the Mandir’s kitchen. Our uncles should know that our family has grown in the Mandir. I for one feel that we cannot add to the two exceptions\(^3\) which we have made. Those who cannot fit into this scheme may leave, and we should reconcile ourselves to their doing so.

---

\(^1\) Shantilal Joshi, helpmate of Prabhudas

\(^2\) A sweet made from wheat flour

\(^3\) Narandas Gandhi and Valji Desai
I, too, had a letter from Devasharmaji1 about Balbir. Send him away at the first opportunity.

Blessings from BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro- 7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshine, pp. 38-9

600 LETTER TO ASHRAM WOMEN

CALCUTTA,
Silence Day, December 31, 1928

DEAR SISTERS,

I expect this to be my last letter to you. According to present indications I should be there on Sunday morning.

Today I have only enough time to warn you that on coming there I shall ask all of you to render an account of your activities. Where is the need now to write anything new? If you have settled down, if you have been able to bring quiet in the kitchen, and if you are regular in attending prayers, I should think that you have done a great deal.

Blessings from BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3687

601. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,
Silence Day [December 31, 1928]2

I need not write much today. I expect to start from here on Thursday and reach Ahmedabad on Sunday by the train which arrives there at six in the morning. In an hour’s time, I have to reach the Congress session. How happy would I be if, when I arrive there, I see everyone carefully attending to all the things I have been writing about!

Vallabhbhai and Mahadev are leaving for Bardoli this very day.

Blessings from BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro-7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshine, p. 39

1 A teacher at Gurukul Kangri
2 From the reference to Gandhiji’s intention to leave Calcutta for Ahmedabad which he did on January 3. The silence day immediately preceding was December 31.
602 SPEECH ON RESOLUTION ON NEHRU REPORT, CALCUTTA CONGRESS—III

December 31, 1928

At Monday’s sitting of the Congress, Mahatma Gandhi moved the following compromise resolution.

Mahatma Gandhi in moving the resolution delivered a short speech in Hindi. As the loudspeakers failed to work, his speech could not be heard and Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru repeated his speech sentence by sentence.

Mahatmaji in the course of his speech said that after due consideration and carefully judging the whole situation he was going to move the resolution before the house. The younger group in the house were eager for Complete Independence.

If you all wish India to become free you should stop all this controversy about Dominion Status and Independence. You should remember swaraj is what we have outlined here [in this Report]. I have come all the way from Sabarmati Ashram to support the Nehru Committee’s recommendation. And that also because the Report is the tangible fruit of the directive given by the Madras Congress. Today we may accept this as swaraj in a way. I don’t know what shape it will take tomorrow. We must always insist on truth. If people give up truth and self-respect or break promises and disregard tradition, they cannot secure freedom for they don’t deserve it.

You must honour the compromise I have worked out in the Subjects Committee. If you think I am lowering the ideal of Congress, you may repudiate me and not listen to me. I do not want you to accept the resolution simply because I have moved it. You must accept it only if you are prepared to work the specified programme. If you reject this then you will have to find yourself another President, as your present President is the moving spirit behind this resolution. I do not believe in resorting to dirty manoeuvring to obtain a majority vote. It will only delay swaraj. If you want swaraj you must cleanse your mind of all such ideas by voting for this Resolution.

Replying to the debate, Mahatma Gandhi said that his remarks were principally addressed to young Bengal and if they considered for one moment that a mere Gujarati could not understand young Bengal, then young Bengal would commit a most serious blunder.

1 The speech was delivered at the open session.
2 Not reproduced here. Vide “Speech on Resolution on Nehru Report, Calcutta Congress-II, 28-12-1928
3 What follows is from Aaj.
4 What follows is from Amrita Bazar Patrika.
5 Two or three voices cried “No, no”.

476 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
I will ask you not to interrupt me when I am endeavouring to address a few words to you, as a fellow-worker of yours. If however you want to interrupt me, I shall certainly retire and not address you. If on the other hand you want to listen to me, then listen to me in perfect silence. I want to make it absolutely clear that if you are wise, you will dismiss from your mind the bogey of Independence v. Dominion Status. There is no opposition between Dominion Status and Independence. I do not want a Dominion Status that will interfere with my fullest growth, with my independence. These words, I suggest, are misleading. I would therefore suggest a better method. That is independence whereby we can grow to our fullest height. We are the architects of our own destiny and I suggest that the architects of the Nehru Report are your own countrymen appointed by you. There is no hand on the part of the Government in the framing of this document. This document owes its origin to the Madras Congress and it is through the Madras Congress that this Committee was appointed and it is this Report by which I ask you to stand for the time being. The question has been agitating my mind since yesterday afternoon when I heard that there was going to be seriously put forward an amendment to this resolution on behalf of those who, I thought, were a party to the resolution that I moved.

The resolution that I have submitted to this house is the direct result of a compromise. The resolution that I originally framed, you have not seen. And even the one that was printed and moved in the Subjects Committee was also in a way the result of informal compromise or some kind of understanding, whatever language you might wish to use. That resolution was not framed by me only; there were many heads behind that. There was an attempt to placate as many parties as it was possible to placate. That resolution was discussed by various men, men who were supposed to represent different parties. I do not want to suggest that you are bound by that resolution but I do want to say that those who were supposed to be behind that resolution were honour-bound to support it.

If anybody runs away with the idea that I am here appealing to sentiment, he is in the wrong. You can appeal to one’s sense of honour and I am proud of having made my appeal to that sense of honour. I suggest that if those who were behind this compromise subsequently discovered that they have committed a blunder and that they must clear their position before the world and say that they are penitent for what they had done previously, I suggest that penitence is made of sterner stuff. It is not made by amendments. There are other drastic steps to be taken. If those who were behind the compromise consider that they have committed no such blunder but have committed only tactical blunder or a blunder that involves displeasure of some party, then I suggest that it is their bounden duty to swallow that blunder and abide by that compromise. If you have not got that sense of honour and if, giving a word of honour you are not sure that it should be kept at any cost, then I say that you will not be able to make this nation free.

You may take the name of Independence on your lips just as the Muslims utter the name of Allah or a pious Hindu utters the name of Krishna or Rama, but all that muttering will be an utterly empty formula if there is no honour behind it. If you are not prepared to stand by your own words, where will Independence be? Independence is after all a thing made of sterner stuff. It is not made by wriggling of words. I suggest that if you want to vindicate the honour of this nation, because the Viceroy insults us or president of a European Chamber of Commerce insults us, we say, we want our independence because we want to vindicate our honour, then you are dragging independence into the mire. Do not imagine for a moment that I am trying to snatch a vote from you. Believe me there is no such thing at the back of my mind.

I would fain suffer defeat at the hands of young men, but I am jealous of their honour. If you, young men, who are behind this amendment, understand the significance of the message I am delivering to you, you may say for the present that you have committed a blunder but that you want to abide by that compromise because our leaders have entered into compromise. If you think it is not a matter of honour, if you think that the independence of the country will be lost if you accept my resolution, I invite you to throw out my resolution by an overwhelming majority. But if you accept my resolution by an overwhelming majority or even by any majority whatsoever, then those who vote for this resolution should understand that it would be a matter of honour for them to work for it because they pledge themselves for it.

But why are you so oppressed? Why are you labouring under that inferiority complex that within a year we shall not be able to convince the British Parliament that we shall not be able to marshal our forces and summon to ourselves the strength that we need? Swaraj is my birthright just as breathing through the lungs is my birthright. It must be as natural to you as your breath. Why are you so afraid?

I have got full faith. If you will help me and follow the programme honestly and intelligently, I promise that swaraj will come

---

1 By Subhas Chandra Bose, repudiating Dominion Status and declaring Complete Independence as the goal of the Indian people within one year. I want you to die a proper death. I want you to develop full courage and die with calculated courage. If you have got that courage, if you can stand with your breast bare before the bullet, then I promise, you will get all that you possibly desire. Do not be frightened by the shadow. Do not be afraid of the long-drawn-out agony. I admit that it is a long-drawn-out process, but under the present state of the country when we cannot trust our brothers and sisters, our parents, and party leaders, when we cannot trust anybody, when we have no sense of honour, when we cannot allow our words to remain unaltered for 24 hours, do not talk of independence. But if you will develop that calm courage and honesty of purpose and that determination which will refuse to accept ‘no’ for an answer to your demand, then I promise what the tallest among us can possibly desire.

Throughout these days we have heard a great deal that we are not able to carry on the Congress election campaign in an honest manner. It cut me to the quick when I heard that delegates’ tickets passed hands and were sold like bills of exchange and the rates increased as the days went on and rupee ticket sold for Rs. 15. It is discreditable to the Congress and I tell you that you are not going to get Independence by these methods. On the other hand you are forging your own shackles, from which there will be no escape because it is of your own will.

May God direct you in coming to a decision.

I do not want you to decide the question, because I am the mover of the resolution or because Pandit Motilal is at the back of the resolution. It is you who must decide with your calm reasoning but showing honour with it. (Loud applause)

Amrita Bazar Patrika, 1-1-1929 and Aaj, 2-1-1929

603. LETTER TO RAMDAS GANDHI

CHI. RAMDAS,

I have received your letter. Your earlier letter represented the high tide, the present one represents the low tide. But do not worry. We must live as God wishes. You must sing Narasinh Mehta’s morning hymns and understand their meaning. Therein you will find the remedy for your restlessness. Even restlessness is something like a 1 At this stage amendments were put to vote and they were all lost Gandhiji’s resolution was then separately put to vote and adopted.

2 As noted by the addressee.
ghost. How can the atman be restless? But that is not something which can be understood by being explained. It has to be experienced. One day you will certainly experience the peace you are longing for. If you want to go to South Africa I can help you. But will you find peace even there? One’s peace does not depend on time and place, which are external things. Very often we have an illusion of peace when we are drunk, but the feeling of peace vanishes when we are sober again. You want that kind of peace which can pass through the severest test. Ordinary things cannot give you that peace. May God grant you patience. Ba is undecided about coming.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Motana Man, p. 45

604. LETTER TO GANGABEHN JHAVERI

Silence day, [1928]

CHI. GANGABEHN JHAVERI,

The letter addressed to the women is enclosed. Where are you yourself?

Are you occupying with credit the position of the women’s organization? Have you found the key to life? Have you acquired control over your mind? I have come to the conclusion that your mental agitation has been the cause of your illness. Know it for certain that God is not to be found in temples or in pilgrimages. God resides in your very heart. He is to be found in your duty. Your energy will be well spent if you go deep and purify your thinking. You do have energy.

I notice diplomacy in your letters. Why diplomacy with me? A daughter can utter any crazy thing before her father or mother. She does not choose her words to express herself. You have deliberated on your words and sentences. Beware. Do not add to my disappoint-ments. The matter about Sharada is still hurting me like a knife. The wound has not healed. I have myself closed this letter.

If you write ‘Personal’ on the letter, it will come straight to me.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati : G. N. 3131

1 From the reference to the matter about Sharada; vide “Letter to Chhaganlal Joshi”, 8-12-1928 and “Letter to Kusum Desai”, 19-12-1928

480 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
605. LETTER TO GANGABEHN VAIIDYA

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM,
SABARMATI,
[1928]

CHI. GANGABEHN,

Improve your health. If there is anything more to be written about Sharada, do write. Discuss things with her.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapune Patro - 6 : Gangabehnne, p. 17; G. N. 11264

606. THE ASIATIC PASSIVE RESISTANCE STRUGGLE — THE FINAL STAGES

[Before 1929]

He who played an important part in the Indian Passive Resistance Movement did not live to see the final stages. He has described the struggle in his own graphic style in his monograph on me, Gandhi.

This chapter is intended to take a brief survey of the movement from where Mr. Doke left it. No Englishman had such a keen grasp of the subject as he, by patient study, had acquired. Busy though he was with the work of his own flock, if a man of his breadth of vision and his all-round humanity could be said to have had a special flock, he made this Indian question as much his own as the work of the Pastorate. He collected and tabulated every scrap of paper upon the subject. He wrote much upon it. He saw the authorities and spoke to them with the certainty of the knowledge of an expert. He took charge of the editorial work of the Passive Resistance organ, Indian Opinion, during Mr. Gandhi’s and Mr. Polak’s absence from South Africa.

The leading articles he wrote for the journal during the period are literary monuments. His anxiety to keep up the traditions of the

---

1 Period inferred; vide also the preceding item.
2 Gandhi wrote this for William E. Cursons, who was preparing a biography of the Reverend Doke at the request of his family. It was published as Chapter XV of the biography. Joseph Doke: The Missionary-hearted. The date when Gandhiji wrote this is not available; there was a delay of several years before the publication of the biography in 1929 by the Christian Literature Depot, Johannesburg.
4 The Reverend J. J. Doke was editor for a brief period in 1913.
journal was so great that, in matters of policy, he took the advice of and allowed himself to be guided by, those whom he was not bound to consult. He came in contact with the best and the worst of Indians. All his study was not merely to bring to a close a movement, however great it may have been. He had dreams about the future of South Africa, the part that Indians were to play in it, the part that Christianity had to play in the great drama that was being enacted before him. His Indian work was taken up in answer to the question of his soul. "What am I to do in South Africa in the midst of many races?"

Mr. Doke had intended, if he had lived, to take part in the constructive programme of the Indian community after the struggle was finished. He had intended, too, to write a volume on the lessons of the struggle. But that was not to be.

The readers of these pages will, however, be glad to know the final results of the historical struggle which attracted world-wide attention. Only a bird's-eye view is possible in a single chapter of a book, when a full description would require several volumes. During the last stages it took a most unexpected and brilliant turn. Every act of repression by the authorities only heartened the resisters. The refusal of the Government to recognize the legal status of Indian miners and to abolish the poll-tax on indentured Indians, which it was claimed on their behalf the Government had promised the late Mr. Gokhale to do, brought thousands to the Passive Resistance fold. Indentured Indians, working in the Natal mines and in the sugar fields, struck work and sought imprisonment. This strike must be distinguished from ordinary strikes. It was undertaken, not to usurp the functions of the Government or to paralyse the industries concerned. It was declared simply as a protest against the £3 tax. It was an assertion on the part of the strikers, men and women, of their self-respect. They were no longer content to pay a tax, which not only told heavily upon their slender purses, but which was a mark of their degradation and a cause of terror to the womenfolk. At one time, nearly 30,000 men were on strike. The Government and the planters tried every means to bend the strikers, but without avail. They had but one purpose in life, these strikers refused to be left alone. They wanted to fill the prisons. After due notice to the Government, nearly 2,000 of them, men, women and children, marched into the Transvaal. They had no legal right to cross the border, their destination was Tolstoy Farm, established by Mr. Kallenbach for Passive Resisters, the distance to be covered was 150 miles. No army ever marched with so little burden. No waggons or mules accompanied the party. Each one carried his own blankets and daily rations, consisting of one pound of bread and one ounce of sugar. This meagre ration was supplemented by what Indian merchants gave them on their way. The Government imprisoned the leaders, i.e. those whom they thought were leaders. But they soon found that all were leaders. So when they were nearly within reach of their destination, the whole party was arrested. Thus their object (to get arrested) was accomplished. That extreme reasonableness was mixed with such an unbending spirit that was shown when the Indian strikers voluntarily stayed their activity during the strike of the Government railwaymen, which was certainly not a Passive Resistance Movement.

The Indian strikers at once stood aloof, and their self-restraint was much appreciated throughout the Empire, whilst it had not a little to do with the final settlement for which negotiations were opened.

It will be easily imagined that India would not remain supine when a mighty effort was being made by her sons in this far-off continent. Under the splendid leadership of the late Honourable Mr. Gokhale, meetings of protest were held all over the country, and thousands of pounds were collected to aid the Resisters. Lord Hardinge, the Viceroy, who strongly protested in a public speech at Madras¹ against what was transpiring in South Africa, sent a Commission² to investigate the cause of the upheaval. A local Commission was appointed. Though for high political reasons, the Indian community as a whole refused to give evidence before it, the Commissioners completely vindicated the Resisters by declaring in favour of every one of the main contentions of the aggrieved Indians. And so at last legislation was passed, repealing the poll-tax, restoring racial equality in law, and recognizing the status of Indian wives. Thus ended the great struggle in 1914, after having lasted nearly eight years.

Mr. Doke, along with many, considered it to be a religious or ethical struggle. It was not undertaken in order to gain individual rights but to gain national dignity. The methods adopted were not those of brute force or violence, but those of self-sacrifice and suffering. Repeal of obnoxious legislation was an embodiment of the vital principle that Indian sentiment must not be flouted on Indian matters. It was an admission of the right of the Indians to be consulted in everything affecting their status and intimate well-being. And it was for such an achievement that Mr. Doke laboured during his lifetime. Who knows how important a part he would have played in the more difficult work of reconstruction? Certainly the Indian community misses the guiding hand.

Joseph Doke : The Missionary-hearted, pp. 147-150

¹ Delivered on November 24, 1913; vide “Lord Hardinge’s Speech”, 3-12-1913.
² The Indian Enquiry Commission set up on December 11.
Mahatmaji first spoke in Hindi explaining the resolution. Speaking in English he said:

I do not want to detain you for long over the resolution which is an integral part of the first resolution1 which you were good enough to endorse yesterday. It was only for the sake of convenience that the Subjects Committee insisted upon dividing this one resolution into two parts; one in connection with the Nehru Committee Report and the second in connection with the programme of work based upon that Report. Hence it is that the second part of the first resolution I am now putting before you today. But it was after all a happy thing for “all’s well that ends well”, and that arrangement enables me to give you the welcome information that a complete agreement without any mental reservation has been accomplished. I don’t propose to read that resolution to you, because you have had that resolution before you and I am trying to economize my voice, energy and time as much as possible. Therefore, let us consider it an arrangement between yourselves and me that I do not read this resolution.

There are two amendments to the resolution and of these amendments Mr. Satyamurthi has chosen the second one. But now as I have agreed to his suggestions, he has authorized me to withdraw his alternative amendment and the suggestions I have accepted are these. You will notice in his alternative resolution that he refers to the organization of the peasantry and workers. So far as the peasantry is concerned you will find in my resolution there is a reference where the volunteers are called upon to enlist themselves in order to do village reconstruction work, and this village reconstruction work is nothing but the organization of the peasantry and workers upon an economic basis. We want to enter into the hearts of the peasants. We want to identify ourselves completely with the masses. We want to make their woes our own. We want to feel with them in everything in order to better the lot of those on whose toil we the people of the city are really living. We must therefore make common cause with the workers. I do not want it for one moment to be understood that the city workers and labourers are to be neglected; I cannot possibly mean that because I am myself organizing labour, and I have been identifying myself with labour for the last 30 or 35 years of my life. So I have no hesitation in accepting that part. The second suggestion that I have adopted is in connection with the tax; I suggested in my resolution five per cent, on incomes exceeding Rs. 100. Personally, I would like that clause, but many of my friends and many Congressmen have suggested that it would work as a hardship upon people. People cannot really pay so much, they cannot really pay. If they cannot pay, there is a remedy in that clause itself. The suggestion was that they are not yet in the habit of conforming to that exact discipline whereby men or women would automatically recognize it as a compulsory obligation to pay. I have appreciated the force of that argument and therefore I have accepted the suggestion so that that clause will now be remodelled. I am not telling you how it is to be remodelled, because I have not really the text of that clause before me and you do not want me to worry you about it just now. But it will enable you to carry out the meaning of what I am telling you just now. That clause will be so worded as to carry out the formula that was suggested for another thing by Deshbandhu Das that the Congress expects every Congressman to contribute to the Congress coffers month by month in accordance with his ability, in order to advance the cause of the Congress, more especially in order to embark upon a programme that is set forth in the foregoing resolution. That will be the wording instead of the wording in the last clause of the printed paper. I do not want to take up your time any longer but I cannot help giving you a warning note. I want you to take this resolution seriously and I want you to adhere with all seriousness to this resolution. I do not want you to raise your hands as accepting this resolution and then sleep over it for a solid twelve months and expect the A.I.C.C. or the Working Committee or the President to work wonders for you. Neither the President nor the A.I.C.C. have a magic wand. There is no magic wand except your own iron determination and will and that is the magic wand that will alone bring swaraj within your grasp and give the country peace and happiness. Therefore, I would beseech you not to accept the resolution with the two suggestions adopted unless everyone here in his own person means seriously to carry out all the items of the programme which are applicable to them and unless you are determined to take the message of the Congress from door to door ceaselessly for these twelve months.

1 Vide “Speech on Resolution on Nehru Report”, Calcutta Congress-I, 26-12-1928
At the end of this period I hope to see an atmosphere totally different from the atmosphere of distrust and despondency that I can read in the faces of every one of us today.

With these words I leave this resolution in your hands and I thank you for giving me this very patient hearing.¹ (Loud and continued applause)

The resolution ran as follows:

Meanwhile the Congress shall engage in the following activities:

(1) In the Legislatures and outside every attempt will be made to bring about total prohibition of intoxicating drugs and drinks; picketing of liquor and drug shops shall be organized wherever desirable and possible.

(2) Inside and outside the legislatures, methods suited to respective environment shall be immediately adopted to bring about boycott of foreign cloth by advocating and stimulating production and adoption of hand-spun and hand-woven khaddar.

(3) Specific grievances, wherever discovered and where people are ready, shall be sought to be redressed by non-violent action as was done recently at Bardoli.

(4) Members of Legislatures returned on the Congress ticket shall devote the bulk of their time to the constructive work settled from time to time by the Congress Committee.

(5) The Congress organization shall be perfected by enlisting members and enforcing stricter discipline.

(6) Measures shall be taken to remove the disabilities of women and they will be invited and encouraged to take their due share in national upbuilding.

(7) Measures shall be taken rid the country of social abuses.

(8) It will be the duty of all Congressmen, being Hindus, to do all they can to remove untouchability and help the so-called untouchables in every possible way in their attempt to remove their disabilities and better their condition.

(9) Volunteers shall be enlisted to take up the work among the city labourers and village reconstruction in addition to what is being done through the spinning-wheel and khaddar.

(10) Such other work as may be deemed advisable in order to advance nation-building in all its department and in order to enable the Congress to secure the co-operation in the national effort of the people engaged in different pursuits.

¹ The resolution was seconded by Mr. Srinivasa Iyengar. Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru read out the resolution as corrected by Mahatmaji in consultation with Mr. Satyamurthi and he then explained it in Hindi, after which it was put to vote and carried with only two dissentients.
In order to finance the activities mentioned in the foregoing programme, the Congress expects every Congressman to contribute to the Congress coffers a certain percentage of his or her income according to his or her ability.

Report of the Forty-third Session of the Indian National Congress, 1928

608. SPEECH AT ALL-PARTIES CONVENTION, CALCUTTA

January 1, 1929

Mahatmaji then moved:

This Convention is of opinion that the resolutions it has already passed on the recommendations of the All-Parties Committee contained in clauses one to six of their Report sufficiently indicate the will of the nation as to the nature and main principles of the constitution acceptable to it and is further of opinion that except on points on which notes of dissent have been recorded at the instance of some of the parties present there is a general agreement on the basis of the solution of communal problem recommended by the said Committee.

This Convention adjourns sine die authorizing the Working Committee of the Indian National Congress to convene it when necessary for more detailed examination of the recommendations of the Committee.

In doing so Mahatmaji offered an apology for his presence in the Convention but he came as a legal adviser to the President who had met him and Pandit Motilal and requested them to be present in the Convention and help him with advice. To facilitate work he was going to move the present resolution and hoped there should not be much discussion and no amendment. Continuing, Mahatmaji said:

Whilst we have very nearly exhausted the Nehru Report and accepted it without much alteration, yet much still remains to be done. The situation in the country is such that we shall have to keep both the Nehru Report and the Convention alive.

As regards the Mohammedan question, he said the Convention had not been able to placate all parties. The Sikhs also required to be placated. Continuing, Mahatmaji said:

Personally I think we have not done full justice to the Sikhs.

---

1 Dr. Ansari presided. Among those present were Dr. Moonje, Dr. Besant, Messrs Satyamurthi, Bhagwandas, Vijayaraghavachariar, Bipin Pal, B. Das, Satyen Mitter, Devratan Sharma, S. A. Breli, Nikanta Das, Manilal Kothari, Hirendranath Dutt, Lalit Das and Shyam Sunder Chakravarti.
Hence it is necessary for all of you to put your heads together and make suggestions and evolve order out of chaos. There is the Utkal question which still requires to be solved and is giving trouble. This question is a nightmare. It crops up in all my speeches. The exhibition given by Utkal delegates the other day was like an animal undergoing vivisection.

The Nehru Report can only be touched here and there and not in its entirety. Only in matters of detail can we make alterations. If anything is wanted to satisfy the Muslims then also we have to touch it but if the Muslims spring some surprise it is not for the Nehru Committee to do so. That is the business of some other organization.

Mahatmaji concluded with the hope that the resolution be carried without any amendment.¹

Mahatmaji announced that as a result of discussion he had come to some compromise and agreed to make some verbal alterations in the latter part of the resolution.²

This Convention adjourns sine die to meet when necessary for completing its work.

Forward, 2-1-1929

609. INTERVIEW TO THE PRESS ³

CALCUTTA,
January 2, 1929

The Mahatma had just returned from his morning walk and was surrounded by a score of his followers while we talked. He remarked with a smile in explanation of our audience:

I have no secrets from my friends.

[QUESTION:] What exactly does the Congress stand for—Dominion Status or Independence?

Mr. Gandhi thought for a moment, and then, peering at me keenly through his glasses, replied:

I can realize the Britisher’s difficulty in understanding our point of view, but I am glad that he is trying to. My position is very clear. To me Dominion Status means Independence. Others have been led, through suspicion of Britain’s good faith, and partly also, I am afraid, ¹ Dr. Annie Besant then moved an amendment.

² The first paragraph of the Resolution is not reproduced here.
³ The interview also appeared in The Daily Telegraph, 3-1-1929, as from its special correspondent.
for their own party purposes, to make a distinction between the two. But it has been largely a battle of words. There is no real room for misunderstanding as to what I personally—and the Congress—stand for. We want Home Rule—a Freedom Constitution built up by ourselves—something not imposed from without. The Nehru Constitution is of our own making. If that is accepted it means that we become partners at will and makers of our own destiny.

In that case why did you make what the British people cannot but consider a surrender on your part to those to whom Independence is not the same thing as Dominion Status and frankly implies severance of the British connection?

Mr. Gandhi pondered the question carefully before he replied.

I have in a sense made a surrender to those who are considered “the extremists”, but it has been a surrender on points which do not seem to me to affect the real position. There has been no surrender of the principle for which I have always stood and always will stand. Severance on any account is not my goal. Power for severance when desired is.

You have, nevertheless, added to your demand for Home Rule on the basis of the Nehru Report a time-limit which you must know to be an impossible one. You have, in effect, presented a pistol at the head of the British Parliament. You declare that unless the Nehru Report is adopted by the 31st of December this year something dreadful is going to happen.

Mr. Gandhi shook his head and said quietly:

You are wrong. We are not in a position to point a pistol at the head of the British Parliament—and I cannot agree with you that the time-limit we have laid down is an impossible one. If Britain today were threatened with another war she would face the situation and deal with it at once. But the Indian situation is not considered serious enough to warrant immediate handling. That is where Britain has been making a very big mistake. She does not consider the Indian situation sufficiently important. It is a minor affair in the business of the Empire, a minor affair that can be put off and off, to be attended to some day when there is nothing else to worry about. That is what we resent, and that is what is aggravating this tragic suspicion that is poisoning the whole atmosphere of our political life. Let the leaders of the British people make some definite, serious and sincere move to meet us within the year and then ultimatums and time-limits need not matter.

If the British Parliament has not conceded the Nehru Constitution by the 31st of December what is going to happen?

Mr. Gandhi smiled and said:

I am an incorrigible optimist. Up to midnight on the 31st of December 1929, I shall be hoping and hoping—and praying—that the definite move we ask for will be made by Britain.

Q. And if your hopes are not realized?

The Mahatma thought a moment before he answered.

In that case on New Year’s Day 1930 I shall wake up to find myself an Independencewahlah.

But he has hope and faith that things will so shape themselves that his will not be the responsibility for ringing up the curtain upon another Indian tragedy. Summing up, he said:

Get rid of the suspicion of Britain’s good faith that is poisoning the political atmosphere of India and the way will be clear for an understanding between the leaders of the British people and the leaders of my own people that will solve all our difficulties.

The Englishman, 3-1-1929

---

610. SPEECH AT CHITTARANJAN SEVA SADAN, CALCUTTA

January 2, 1929

Mahatma Gandhi in declaring the new block formally open said that two years ago when the people of Bengal invited him to lay the foundation-stone of the new block, he gladly accepted the invitation and this time they also had extended their invitation to him to open the new block of the Seva Sadam which was built on the foundation which he had laid. From that he realized the real love and respect which they had shown to him and he was really fortunate to attend the function. When he comes to this building he recalls in his mind the sacred memory of Deshbandhu Das, the great leader of Bengal, who had dedicated his life for the cause of his country. Whenever he comes to Bengal, he feels the absence of Deshbandhu and thinks within himself: ‘What was Deshbandhu’s Bengal and what is today’s Bengal!’ The enthusiasm which he had seen during his lifetime was unique and Bengal would ever remember the great sacrifice which their leader did for their good and for the good of Bengal. Mahatmaji then thanked Dr. Bidhan Chandra Roy, Sir Nilratan Sarcar and other members of the trust who had worked hard so long for the prosperity of the institution which would be the living memory of Deshbandhu Chittaranjan Das, the karmayogi of Bengal.

Proceeding, Mahatmaji said that the members of the trust had appealed for more funds for the maintenance and further development of the institution. He also joined with them in their appeal and asked the people of Bengal to contribute according to their means to the Seva Sadan Fund. In conclusion Mahatmaji hoped that middle and higher class women of Bengal would spare no pains to keep this institution alive as a fitting memorial of Deshbandhu Das.

Amrita Bazar Patrika, 3-1-1929
611. SAROJINI DEVI’S LETTER

The following graphic and poetic account of her experiences during her American visit sent by Shrimati Sarojini Devi will be read with interest:

. . . I am writing tonight from the charming old town of Cincinnati which is called the Gateway of the South, where long ago lived a very noble woman who dedicated her genius to the deliverance of the Negroes from their pitiful bondage. I have just returned from interpreting to a large audience (whose parents and grandparents knew Harriet Beecher Stowe in the days when she was writing the poignant tale of Uncle Tom’s Cabin) the message of the ‘Mystic Spinners’ . . . .

And through me the New World sends back a greeting of love for the Mystic Spinner and admiration for the Land whose people are set out on the way of self-deliverance from their sevenfold bondage.

Young India, 3-1-1929

612. ‘BROKEN’

A friend sends me a number of Spiritual Life which contains a beautiful paragraph under the heading “Broken” which reminds one of so many hymns by Tulsidas, Surdas and the other saints that I am tempted to give the following condensation of the paragraph.

God uses most for His glory those people and things which are most perfectly broken. The sacrifices He accepts are broken and contrite hearts. It was the thorough breaking-down of Jacob’s natural strength at Peniel that got him where God could clothe him with spiritual power. It was by breaking the surface of the rock at Horeb by the stroke of Moses’ rod, that it let out the cool waters to thirsty people.

It was when the three hundred elect soldiers under Gideon broke-their pitchers, a type of breaking themselves, that the hidden lights shone forth to the consternation of their adversaries. It was when the poor widow broke the seal of the little pot of oil, and poured it forth, that God multiplied it to pay her debts and supply means of support.

It is when a beautiful grain of corn is broken up in the earth by death, that its inner heart sprouts forth and bears hundreds of other grains. And thus on and on through all history, and all biography, and all vegetation, and all spiritual life, God must have broken things.

1 Only extracts are reproduced here.
2 This appeared under the title “Notes”.

VOL. 43 : 10 SEPTEMBER, 1928 - 14 JANUARY, 1929 491
Those who are broken in wealth and broken in heart, broken in their ambitions, broken in their beautiful ideals, broken in worldly reputation, broken in their affections, and broken sometimes in health, and those who are despised, and seem utterly helpless and forlorn, the Holy Ghost is seizing upon and using for God’s glory. It is “the lame that take the prey”, Isaiah tells us. It is the weak that overcome the devil. God is waiting to take hold of our failures and cleanse away the cause and shine through us in victory.

The paragraph shows how religion at its highest is one.

Young India, 3-1-1929

613. LALAJI MEMORIAL

After consultation with several friends interested in the Lalaji Memorial we have decided to devote the collections to the following objects:

1. Four lakhs and twenty five thousand for the maintenance of the Servants of the People Society.
2. Twenty five thousand for the completion of the Lajpat Rai Hall which is already half finished.
3. Fifty thousand for the consolidation of the work done through the Society for the uplift of the suppressed classes.

We propose to utilize the first proceeds for the first object and the rest for the second and the third respectively. But it is open to any donor to earmark his donation and it will be utilized according to his or her wish.

The Society was founded in 1920. The object of the Society is to enlist and train national missionaries for the service of the country whose duty it is to work for its educational, political, social and economic uplift. There are at present sixteen life-members who are pledged to devote their whole time and attention to the fulfilment of the object. There are two Assistant members. There are six Associates. Seven members are engaged exclusively in the suppressed classes’ work.

Lajpat Rai Hall was conceived and commenced by Lala Lajpat Rai for the purpose of accommodating the library collected by him and for delivering political and other lectures. It was found difficult, if not impossible, to hire, at reasonable rates, a hall in Lahore for political lectures.

---

1 This was an enclosure to the following item. It appeared under the title “Notes”.

492 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
The work among the suppressed classes is distributed in several areas and touches every department of their lives.

It was a serious question as to who should guide the Society and take, so far as possible, Lalaji’s place in this connection. Sjt. Purushottamdas Tandon enjoyed Lalaji’s confidence in the fullest measure. He is one of the earliest associates of the Society and was in close touch with its affairs during Lalaji’s lifetime. He has consented to take charge of the affairs of the Society as its president. We feel therefore that the public need have no anxiety or fear as to the character of the future work of the Society and we hope that the appeal for subscriptions will receive a quicker and more liberal response than hitherto.

M. A. Ansari
Madan Mohan Malaviya
Ghanshyamdas Birla

Young India, 10-1-1929

614. LETTER TO DR. M. A. ANSARI

The Ashram, Sabarmati,
January 6, 1929

Dear Dr. Ansari,

Here is a copy of a statement I propose to issue on behalf of the trustees of the Lalaji Memorial Fund. Will you please wire your consent? If I do not hear from you to the contrary, I propose to publish the same.

I hope you are none the worse for the terrific strain of Calcutta.

Yours sincerely,

Enclosure 1.

From a photostat: S.N. 15256-a

615. LETTER TO H. S. L. POLAK

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
January 6, 1929

This is to introduce Mr. Jiwanlal Motichand to you. He has been a most constant supporter and friend of all my constructive activities. He has a good aluminium business in Calcutta and elsewhere. He has been to England once. This time he is combining business with recreation which he needs very badly. I know that you will give him all the assistance you can and he may need.

1 Vide the preceding item.

With love,

HENRY S. L. POLAK, ESQ.
42, 47 & 48 DANES INN HOUSE
265 STRAND
LONDON W. C. 2

From a photostat: S. N. 14983

616. LETTER TO G. M. ¹

THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 6, 1929

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I am sorry for your bereavement. You will not meet your child in the flesh. There is therefore no question of recognition in the flesh. But this hankering after meeting in the flesh is surely not true love. Love to be true must be transferred to the soul within and, on that spiritual platform, there never has been separation. But that union transcends earthly relations.

Yours sincerely,

G. M.
C/O CONGRESS KHADI BHANDAR
BHADRAK
ORISSA

From a photostat: S.N. 15257

617. LETTER TO V. L. PHADKE

Sunday, January 6, 1929

BHAIMAMA,

I have your postcard. I arrived here last night. Bring along Jaggu and his wife. We shall lodge her in the women’s quarters. Do you still require help for the house? If so, how much?

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3822

¹ Addressee’s full name is not available.
618. MESSAGE TO CHRISTIAN INDIANS1

[Before January 7, 1929]

If Christian Indians will not cease to be Indians because they are Christians, they will identify themselves with all national movements and with the starving millions by listening to the message of the spinning-wheel.

The Hindu, 7-1-1929

619. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

January 7, 1929

CHI. MIRA,

No time to write beyond saying we had a most comfortable journey to Delhi and thence to the Ashram.

Hope you had a good time at Santiniketan.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5329. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9384

620. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

Tuesday [January 8, 1929]2

CHI. VASUMATI,

I have your letter. I see no harm in your prolonging your stay there. It is true that I shall have to leave this place about the 20th. Ba and Keshu stayed in Delhi for two days. Travelling via Delhi saved eight rupees for each person and eight hours.

Kashi’s Address:

Satyabadi, Sakhi Gopal, via Cuttack

The work here is going on very well.

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

My diet is still the same

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 502. Courtesy: Vasumati Pandit

---

1 This was sent through The Guardian of Calcutta.

2 From the postmark
621. LETTER TO ABBAS TYABJI

Tuesday, January 8, 1929

MY DEAR BHRRR,

I am warned betimes. But remember, the Gujarat mail does not go to Sabarmati and it is the day of convocation. I therefore propose to send somebody’s car to Ahmedabad, where you will be received. I can’t give Raihana a drive in the royal cart.

Love.

Yours,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 9565

622. LETTER TO TARABEHN

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

January 8, 1929

CHI. TARA,

Be satisfied that I dictate this letter rather than delay in writing to you. It is not right. I am sorry that you do not keep good health. Keeping good health is an art, which everyone should learn. Why should you not come to the Ashram? If you come and stay here in peace for a few months perhaps you may learn that art. I am planning to go to Rangoon.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 8784

623. LETTER TO GANGADHARRAO B. DESHPANDE

January 9, 1929

Bhai GANGADHARRAO,

This telegram was received today. What is it about?
I think you will send me an account of Pundalik’s satyagraha.²

¹ This was a form of greeting used between Gandhiji and the addressee.
² A satyagraha was launched in Miraj State in Maharashtra against the unreasonably enhanced rate of land revenue. Narayan Tamaji Katagade alias “Pundalik” had to assume its leadership when it took a violent turn.
What was the outcome of the satyagraha?

I hope your health is all right.

Kaka is, of course, quite busy.

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi: G.N. 5225

624. THE CONGRESS

Last year’s was a remarkable Congress in more ways than one. It was remarkable for the attendance of delegates, visitors and spectators, it was remarkable for the resolutions it passed; it was remarkable for the compromises the leaders made and broke. There was both reality and terrible unreality about the Congress. But behind the unreality it showed the greatest possibilities for the nation. The bubbling enthusiasm of the people who knew nothing of the unreality was an unmistakable proof of what the nation could do if it was properly harnessed and its energies turned into profitable channels.

Pandit Motilal Nehru’s address was eminently practical. It was even great for the boldness with which he defended the Report and for presenting the nation with an unexciting but true programme in spite of the clamour for unadulterated excitement. The whole address is a piece of constructive statesmanship. It promises the substance of independence instead of the shadow of which one hears so much nowadays.

If thus Pandit Motilal Nehru’s address is boldly constructive, Sjt. Sen Gupta’s is usefully destructive and polemical. He defends and accepts the Nehru Report rightly as a step towards the goal of complete independence. His address clears the ground as if by design for the Presidential address. He successfully explodes the doctrine of Britain’s trusteeship and the ‘blessings’ of British rule. He asserts that Britain has never done justice except under pressure of physical force and concludes by insisting on freedom at any cost. To this end he demands social revolution equally with the political. Both the addresses show that there is no political progress without equal social progress, if the former is to come, as it must to be real, from internal effort and not as a gesture from the British ‘trustees’ in answer to India’s ‘prayer’.

Hence the ‘tame’ programme of social reconstruction and effort. Behind the ‘tameness’ lies the battery for storing the necessary strength for internal and national political effort.

1 The Nehru Report
OVERHAUL CONGRESS

The first item of preliminary importance therefore is the overhauling of the Congress. It is owing to my hurried draftsmanship that reorganization of the Congress stands fifth in the list in the second resolution moved by me. It should have stood first by right. For without complete overhauling of the Congress, there will be no other work. If the Congress which is the salt loseth its savour, wherewith shall it be salted? The Congress is the powerhouse from which all the power for all the work is to be derived. If the power-house is rotten, the whole national work must be necessarily so.

The delegates to the Congress were mostly self-appointed. The election procedure laid down by the Congress constitution was discovered to have broken down. This was one of the terrible unrealities about the great annual demonstration. If the fight for swaraj whether defined as independence or dominion status is to be solid and real, the re-formation of the Congress is the first need to which the Working Committee has to devote its attention. Let nothing be hushed. We shall gain nothing by a policy of 'hush hush'. The disease must be made known all over the Congress world before it can be successfully tackled. Every organization to be living must show growth. But the Congress is suffering from internal decay. And even as a patient suffering from tuberculosis often shows ruddiness and plumpness, so is the Congress showing every year the ruddiness and plumpness of a consumptive patient betraying to the seeing eye of the physician the surest signs of approaching decay. As at present constituted, the Congress is unable to put forth real, united and unbreakable resistance. If the Calcutta demonstration were a reality, there was no reason why such a vast mass of people as had gathered there could not wrest power from unwilling hands. But the demonstrators had gone not to demonstrate strength, they had gone as if to a circus as sightseers. And strange as it may appear, the Congress pandal was constructed as an adjunct to and in the midst of an enlarged edition of Filis’s circus.

WARNING TO PUNJAB

This must be changed if we are to exhibit reality at the next Congress. The volunteers dressed in European fashion presented, in my opinion, a sorry spectacle at Calcutta and the expense incurred was out of keeping with the pauperism of the nation. They were no representatives of rough and rugged businesslike farmers. The Punjab has to alter this.

1 Vide “Speech on constructive Programme, Calcutta congress”, 1-1-1929
The Congress must not be used for making money. If there is to be a surplus, it must be a surplus from the humble offerings of poor but real representatives of a poor nation coming to the annual gathering not as idle sightseers but as soldiers eager to take part in the annual stock-taking and ready to give a good account of themselves on the occasion arriving.

If I had my way I should separate the deliberative portion from the demonstrative and spectacular. I should exclude visitors from the deliberative section; or if they must be allowed, I should have an open air enclosure divided into sections strongly but elegantly fenced.
Meetings in the enclosure will then have to be held during the early morning hours and in the evenings. This will at once simplify the labours of the reception committee and result in great economy.
Artistic decorations are surely possible in an open air enclosure which is any day preferable from the standpoint of hygiene to a closed pandal which suffocates, no matter how well ventilated it may be.

We are a nation passing through the valley of humiliation. So long as we have not secured our freedom we have not the least excuse at the annual stock-taking season for amusements, riotous or subdued.
It is a week of serious business, introspection and heart-searching; it is a week for evolving national policies and framing programmes for giving battle to a power perhaps the strongest and the most vicious the world has ever seen. I submit that it is impossible to do clear thinking or to evolve programmes political, social, economic and educational in the midst of distraction, noise, rush and a lavish display of boisterous amusements fit enough for a children’s pantomime, entirely out of place as an appendage to a deliberative assembly intent on preparing for a grim life and death struggle. Our annual exhibition ought therefore to be strictly of an educative character and its organization should be entrusted to an expert body like the All-India Spinners’ Association. Indeed, it is the only body fit to handle it, so long as the Congress retains khadi as the centre of its policy of boycott of foreign cloth and of economic reform among the millions of India’s peasantry.

Prepare Now

If the Punjab is in earnest, it will profit by the lessons of Calcutta. It will give up nothing of the glowing enthusiasm of Calcutta but would shed all its unreality which damped one’s hope. If the Punjab begins now in a businesslike fashion to work out every item of the Congress programme, it may even hope to celebrate the attainment of a constitution as portrayed in the Nehru Report. If in spite of its best effort, such a consummation has not come about by the end of the year, it has to show its preparedness for inaugurating a no-tax campaign and such other direct action as may then be devised by the Congress. If the Punjab means all this, it will begin by putting the Congress organization in perfect order without any prompting from above, it will enroll members by the thousand and show an absolutely honest and clean register of membership and an equally clean record of its accounts. It will hasten to remove all internal friction and squabbles. A year is none too much for the preparation suggested in these lines. Will the Punjab rise to the occasion? If it cannot, the next best thing it can do is in all humility to advise the Working Committee that it cannot shoulder the responsibility hastily undertaken by its leaders.

Young India, 10-1-1929

625. HINDI IN BENGAL

The Hindi Prachar Conference that met in Calcutta during the Congress Week lasted not more than two hours and had only two speeches, one by Sjt. Subhas Chandra Bose who in spite of the busy time he had with his volunteers and the Congress reception work made time for becoming the Chairman of the Reception Committee of this Conference. The other was by me as President. Sjt. Bose’s speech was printed. He read the Devanagari script without difficulty. His pronunciation was almost faultless. The address was short and businesslike. He effectively disposed of the calumny that Bengal was indifferent to Hindi by reminding his audience that it was Bhudev Mukerji who strove to popularize Hindi and Devanagari script in Bihar, it was Navinchandra Ray who strove likewise in the Punjab, it was Swami Shri Chintamani Ghosh who was responsible in the United Provinces for the publication of many useful Hindi books, it was Justice Sharadacharan Mitra who was the father of the idea that there should be one script for all India and that it must be Devanagari, it is Amritlal Chakravarti who is issuing a Hindi newspaper, it is Ravindranath Tagore who has published the popular translation of some of Kabir’s songs, it is Sjt. Kshitish Mohan Sen of Shantiniketan who has made and is still making researches in the writings of Hindi saints, it is Sjt. Nagendranath Vasu who is issuing his monumental Hindi Encyclopaedia¹ and it is Sjt. Ramanand Chatterjee who is issuing a Hindi monthly called Vishal Bharat. He recognized the necessity of Hindi for establishing touch with labour. He ended by promising to be the first to enlist himself for learning Hindi.

¹ Vide “Notes” sub-title Khadi Bhandar in Calcutta”, 10-1-1929
My speech simply suggested that a beginning should be made by establishing free Hindi classes in Calcutta after the style of Madras and made an appeal for subscriptions on the spot.

A resolution was passed forming a Committee, at least for one year, for the purpose of carrying on Hindi propaganda in Bengal with a view to making it a permanent body. The Committee consists of Sjt. Ghanshyamdas Birla who has consented to act as Treasurer, Sjt Subhas Chandra Bose, Sjt. Prabhu Dayal, Sjt. Satish Chandra Das Gupta, Sjt Banarasidas Chaturvedi, Editor, Vishal Bharat, Sjt. Ranglal Jajodia, Sjt. Bijnath Kedia, Sjt. Mahavirprasad Poddar and Baba Raghavdas, Prachar Mantri, Hindi Sahitya Sammelan. The following have offered their services as part-time honorary Hindi teachers:

| Sjt. Satyadev | Sjt. Devadatt |
| Sjt. Ramshankar | Sjt. Madanlal |
| Sjt. V. K. Ghosh | Sjt. Rameshchandra |
| Sjt. Bhajavaram | Sjt. Vikasitji |
| Sjt. Rajaram Pande | Sjt. Krishna Gopal Tewari |

There was a handsome response to the appeal for collections, over Rs. 3,000 having been collected on the spot.

Those who offered their services as teachers were duly warned by me of the responsibility they shouldered. They were to be not merely Hindi teachers but interpreters of Indian culture and Indian purity. Hindi was to be taught not merely as any language but as the national language. As Hindi for Hindus it was a language of religion and morals. Millions could not be expected to learn Sanskrit but they could receive the message of the Vedas through Tulsidas, Surdas, Kabir and a host of other saints who kept the well of religion undefiled. They were moreover to teach Hindi as also Hindustani, not as a rival to Urdu. It was to be a blend of Hindi and Urdu. They had therefore to be repositories of purity of character and strength of purpose. Theirs was a noble mission demanding nobility of conduct.

In spite of a resolution of the Congress and its constitution the Congress proceedings are still often carried on in English for the benefit principally of the delegates from the South and Bengal. If in both the provinces those who propose to do national work make full use of the facilities provided in these provinces, the way will be clear for the forthcoming Congress to conduct its proceedings wholly in Hindi-Hindustani—surely a consummation devoutly to be wished for in view especially of the momentous resolution of the Calcutta Congress. There is no independence for the masses if their representatives cannot conduct their proceedings in the national language. When the true yearning for swaraj comes, there will be no need for English speech in the national assembly. English will still have its place and a place of importance at that. It will be and must remain the language of international diplomacy and intercourse. But it must not be allowed to usurp the function of the national language.

Young India, 10-1-1929

626. NOTES

KHANDAR IN CALCUTTA

A khadi bhandar was opened in Calcutta, 251 Harrison Road, by me on New Year’s Day in the presence of Pandit Malaviyaji. The bhandar owes its origin to a conversation I had at Wardha with Sjt. Ghanshyamadas Birla. He and his brothers are noted for their silent munificent charities. Among the many causes helped by Sjt. Ghanshyamadas khadi has been one. I have always felt the need of a depot that would relieve the pressure, in times of need, on production centres which are generally made responsible by the All-India Spinners’ Association for the sale of the khadi they manufacture. I suggested to Sjt. Birla that he should not only give money but he should also give the use of his mercantile talents to khadi. I told him that if the merchant princes of India took no personal interest in khadi it could not in the near future be made universal merely through the effort of the clerical class who were largely manning the Association. Sjt. Ghanshyamadas appreciated the argument. Hence the khadi bhandar of Calcutta. It has secured the services of a khadi lover in Sjt. Mahavirprasad Poddar of Gorakhpur. Malaviyaji blessed the effort. The arrangement was to sell khadi immediately after the opening ceremony. Nearly five thousand rupees worth of khadi was sold on the spot.

This bhandar is in no way designed to compete with the Khadi Pratishthan and Abhoy Ashram which have large depots. On the other hand, it is designed to supplement and support them. My own opinion is that in the lines which they manufacture there should be no variation in prices by way of pooling or other adjustment. Such adjustment will take place only regarding khadi received from other provinces. I hope that the public will liberally support this bhandar so as to enable it adequately to perform the function for which it is designed. Needless to say that there is behind this effort no idea whatsoever of making profits.

“HINDI VISHVA KOSH”

Reference has already been made to Sjt. Vasu’s Hindi cycloedia in my notice of the Hindi Prachar Conference.¹ I knew of this great work two years ago. I knew too that the author was ailing and bedridden. I was so struck with Sjt. Vasu’s labours that I had a mind to see the author personally and know all about his work. I had therefore promised myself this pilgrimage during my visit to Calcutta for the Congress. It was only on my way to Khadi Pratishthan at Sodepur that I was able to carry out my promise. I was amply rewarded. I took the author by surprise for I had made no appointment. I found him seated on his bed in a practically unfurnished and quite unpretentious room. There were no chairs. There was just by his bedside a cupboard full of books and behind a small desk. He offered me a seat on his bed. I sat instead on a stool near it.

He is a martyr to asthma of which he showed ample signs during my brief stay with him. “I feel better when I talk to visitors and forget my disease for the moment. When you leave me, I shall suffer more,” said Sjt. Vasu.

This is a summary description he gave me of his enterprise: “I was 19 when I began my Bengali cyclopaedia. I finished the last volume when I was 45. It was a great success. There was a demand for a Hindi edition. The late Justice Sharadacharan Mitra suggested that I should myself publish it. I began my labours when I was 47 and am now 63. It will take three years more to finish this work. If I do not get more subscribers or other help, I stand to lose Rs. 25,000 at the present moment. But I do not mind. I have faith that when I come to the end of my resources, God will send me help. These labours of mine are my sadhana². I worship God through them, I live for my work.”

There was no despondency about Sjt. Vasu but a robust faith in his mission. I was thankful for this pilgrimage which I should never have missed. As I was talking to him I could not but recall Dr. Murray’s³ labours on his great work. I am not sure who is the greater of the two. I do not know enough of either. But why any comparison between giants? Enough for us to know that nations are made from such giants.

The address of the printing works behind which the author lives is: 9 Vishvakosh Lane, Bagbazar, Calcutta.

Young India, 10-1-1929

¹ Vide the preceding item.
² Spiritual effort
³ Sir James Augustus Henry Murray (1835-1917), British lexicographer, editor of New English Dictionary
As your President has mentioned, I am now so busy with my activities that I can hardly spare even a moment from them. But because of my affection for children and your pressing invitation, I had no alternative but to come here. With regret, I had to make this condition that it would not be possible for me to see all the items on the programme or take part in the children’s merriment.

I am watching the work done by the youth associations all over India. I must admit that I cannot say that I like all that is being done. Again, as explained by the President, co-operation between the old and the young is essential. It is pardonable if an old man like me cannot work with you, but I must add, “please do not altogether rule out the old”. Bear in mind that you too will grow old and, although we are advanced in age, our minds are as fresh as yours. It is impossible that your soul will always stay in a youthful body. The conduct and efforts of one whose soul is always pure are unique and I wish that everyone living in India has such a soul.

The Government provides for your education from the income received through the excise department. The 25-30-crores that make up the income of this department are extracted from the poor; in other words, the education imparted to you is from the money collected by sucking the blood of the poor.

Condition of youth in India is the same as that of others. They also have the zeal for swaraj. Some seem to dislike this name and have substituted an English name for it—and there is a duel going on between the two names. I wish to protect you from this duel, because perhaps I may have greater enthusiasm and greater zeal for India’s independence than you. And why not? You have a whole age before you, while I have passed that age and I am on the brink of death—and therefore if I claim to have a greater desire for the independence of India than you, it cannot be considered wrong.

I wish to give you some advice—and in a field where I have much experience. I merely wish to advise you not to be deceived by names. If I place before you a rose made out of paper and a withered but real rose with only a few petals, you would still like to have the latter though it is shrunken. Similarly if you really wish to test the pulse of India, do not run after names. Engage yourselves in work. The fragrance of independence lies in work.

You are at present in the midst of a crisis. A struggle should always bring joy. I have not made a study of the entire situation in your college. But from what I have come to know I think that your stand is just. As I am a staunch enemy of the present administration and always hope for its overthrow, I wish that some good people side with you. But even those who are good cannot remain so in the administration under which they work, since injustice lies at the very root of this administration.

I have not met the other party, yet from what I have gathered as a result of my contacts, I feel that your strike is justified. It is not strange that your Principal should find the foundation of the Empire shaken by this insignificant strike. If I were the Principal then I too would have, like him, seen in it the fall of the flag of Empire. I hope that you would justify the fears of the Principal.

When the revolt of 1857 was over, Lord Canning said that they should not be deceived even if a small distinct cloud, not bigger than a thumb, is seen in the skies of India. His warning is justified. I hope that this small cloud of yours is a signal for a bigger one. If you had not taken this step you would not have been blamed, but if you back out now, remember that you will be censured. A brave man fights desperately after entering the battle-field—and would be ready to meet death. Spies alone will go looking behind.

There is no question of death here; at the most you will waste one or two or, perhaps five or seven years. And if this does happen, what are you going to lose? I believe that at the end it will be a gain for you. Do not be disheartened even if you yourselves are totally boycotted. Nothing can be achieved if you do not even sacrifice this much. What even if your number rose from one to ten thousand? What is the value of even those 10,000 pebbles on the other banks of the Sabarmati? It is sufficient if out of the 1,000 even ten turn out to be diamonds. If all of you become pebbles, you will be of no use to anyone. May you achieve victory in your struggle such is my hope and my wish.

Before I conclude I specially wish to warn you that you must never be discourteous. Do not insult the teachers or utter bitter words. Harsh words do no good. They will only create bitterness. And if there is hard work combined with courtesy, you will do credit to yourselves and your name will be cherished in future history. Be courteous at heart as well. Your struggle is a peaceful one, and whatever the provocation, you may not cross the limits of peacefulness.
I hope that Mr. Shirras’ fear may prove true. The flag of India, and the reins too, are in your hands. An old man like me has no right to hold those reins. I congratulate you for having stood firm in your strike so far.

For the sake of the poor, recognize the importance of the spread of khadi. This also is the main plank of the programme framed by the Congress. I am not at the root of that resolution. Its origin lies in the President’s speech and I was only instrumental in bringing forward the resolution.

[From Gujarati]
Prajabandhu, 13-1-1929

628. MESSAGE TO THE THIRD GATHERING OF GRADUATES

January 12, 1929

The old and the new graduates of the Vidyapith should think and decide what they are going to contribute to the yajna of swaraj at this critical juncture.

MOHANDAS KARAMCHAND GANDHI

Sabarmati, Vol. VII, Number 3

629. LETTER TO JAIRAMDAS DOULATRAM

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 12, 1929

MY DEAR JAIRAMDAS,

I instructed Subbiah to send you my answer yesterday in reply to your letter. Your programme stands. I see you are compelling me to travel on Sunday night, that is, whilst I am silent. I would of course have preferred all suspension of travel for 24 hours, that is, during my silent hours. But if it cannot be done, I do not mind.

What about that place in Sind at which through my stupidity I did not see the people who had assembled on the platform to see me at midnight whilst we were going back to Hyderabad? If that place has got to be done, that is, if the people want it, I am prepared to redeem the promise even if it means extension of a day unless you will take the day from the programme already sent.

I do not know the whereabouts of Manilal. You will trace him

1 Findlay Shirras was then the Principal of the Gujarat College.
and see to his going to Sind. Do you make the visit contingent upon his going to Sind, or am I to take the programme as an absolute fixture?

Yours sincerely,
M. K. GANDHI

SJT. JAIRAMDAS DOULATRAM
BOMBAY VIEW, GOWALIA TANK ROAD, BOMBAY

From the original: C.W. 9251. Courtesy: Jairamdas Doulatram

630. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU
ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 12, 1929

MY DEAR JAWAHAR,

I have your telegram¹. I had certainly intended to tour in some parts of the U.P. in response to a request made by some workers in Banda and Jhansi. But they withdrew the request, being diffident. The tour, therefore, was cancelled. There is yet another in prospect and that is near Meerut and Delhi. They want me to go there in March. But for March I have so many engagements from which I have got to choose. There is Andhra, there is Karnatak and there is Burma besides Delhi and Meerut; and there is also the Punjab. Lalaji’s Society people want me there for their anniversary celebration. I am awaiting Father’s decision as to the proposed European visit. If he cancels that visit, then the way will be open for me to satisfy all the demands upon my time. If he wants the European visit to come off, then I may not extend my tour beyond the first week of April. I cannot take the matter any further just now. But I would like you to help me to make my choice. You will consult Father about his wishes and that will enable you to guide me better.

By the time this reaches you, Father will have probably telegraphed to me his opinion. If he has not, please see that he does.

How is Kamala doing now? And how are you yourself faring? You have become Secretary. I want you to throw yourself heart and soul therefore into the programme, and compel obedience to instructions from the Working Committee and try to bring order out of the existing disgraceful disorder.

Yours sincerely,
BAPU

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1929. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library; also S.N. 15276

¹ Dated January 11, 1929 It read: “Papers announce you touring North United Provinces. Hope you will extend tour South also.”
631. LETTER TO THE SECRETARY, BEE-KEEPERS’ ASSOCIATION

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 12, 1929

THE SECRETARY
BEE-KEEPERS’ ASSOCIATION
SANAWAR (PUNJAB)

DEAR SIR,

We in the Satyagraha Ashram are interesting ourselves in the question of bee-keeping. We have learnt about the Bee-keepers’ Association from the publication of the Punjab Agricultural Department entitled A Guide to Bee-keeping. We will be obliged if you would kindly let me know whether the Bee-keepers’ Association at Simla mentioned in the book is still in existence and whether someone from the Ashram can go there for receiving practical instructions in bee-keeping.

Thanking you in anticipation,

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 14984

632. MY NOTES

THE NATIONAL FLAG

A lover of the nation puts down his thoughts as follows:¹

I have also had the painful experience of which this correspondent has written. There was inconsistency even about the national flag that was unfurled at the hands of Pandit Motilal at the Congress session. There was no spinning-wheel on it. So far the Indian National Congress has not passed a resolution to decide upon the dimensions of the national flag, its colour, etc.² But in 1920 my proposal was accepted almost unanimously. If those who believe in khadi and in the unity of Hindus, Muslims and others stick to my original proposal correctly and voluntarily, the occasion will readily come for the ¹ The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had complained of lack of uniformity in national flags and of the use of mill-cloth and foreign cloth for them.

² The A.I.C.C. adopted a resolution in August 1931, determining the specifications of the national flag. It consisted of saffron, white and green horizontal stripes with the spinning-wheel in dark blue in the centre of the white stripe. The resolution also stated that the colours stood for qualities and not communities.
Congress to decide upon a flag. It would certainly be an unbearable and shameful matter if the spinning-wheel is not the focal point in the flag, and if it is made of foreign or Indian mill-made cloth.

Fascination for English

The same correspondent writes:

This is indeed a fact. Not only do pupils and teachers devote a third of their modest talent to English, but many devote all or most of it to English and even after doing all this their greed is not satiated. The efforts to break this spell of English can be directed in two ways: those who love English should stick to it and translate attractively into the national language the literature and the special knowledge found in it and those not knowing English should, despite lack of knowledge of that language, leave the stamp of their own personality on the people and prove that a knowledge of English is not essential for development of character, for intellectual progress, courage or inventiveness.

Let me point out an error in the correspondent’s reasoning. He wishes that the propaganda to undermine the status of English should be launched through Young India; how can that be? To launch this propaganda through Young India, that journal itself should be closed down. The advent of Young India has proved to be a sort of headache to me. I believe and a number of my friends believe that the success of Young India has, to some extent, added to the fascination for English. Some young men see a consequence in a mere sequence when they infer that I have proved the necessity of a knowledge of English by accepting the editorship of Young India. As a matter of fact, my assumption of the editorship can only prove that knowing English and being a practical man, I have made use of that knowledge to suit the circumstances. The conclusion may also be drawn from this that knowledge of English is not to be renounced. But an infatuation for English at the cost of the national language is reprehensible. However, it is difficult for me to explain this distinction so long as I continue to publish Young India and, as I believe that the latter too renders some service, it is difficult even to give it up all of a sudden. Hence Navajivan alone can take up the task of ending the false status of English and that too not by publishing articles on the need to do so, but by increasingly improving itself, by adding to its usefulness and by proving in practice that nothing more than what is published in it about service to the country could be available in English. I know

---

1 The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had complained that fascination for English had not lessened and that pupils and teachers of national schools spent too much time on it.
that Navajivan falls short from this point of view. The attempt to remedy the shortcoming is going on.

OBScenity On Trains

A passenger writes to say:

Those who write obscene words will hardly be reading Navajivan and hence there is nothing that I can write here for them. But I believe many cultured people read Navajivan. I feel the suggestion made to them is quite practicable. It is not that we come across obscene writing in latrines only. I had seen such writing on the walls of a well-known street in Bhuj during my tour of Kutch. One may perhaps come across this even in other cities. The municipality should efface such writings wherever they are found and should paste prohibitory notices in those places.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 13-1-1929

633. AHIMSA AMONG THE JAINS

I do not touch upon the matter of the calf in Navajivan; none should therefore conclude that I have forgotten about it. Two types of people have criticized my action: one, those who are full of anger against me, two, those who are thoughtful. I know that my action which appears to me to be innocent has shocked the second type of people, and chiefly the Jains among them. I have been scrutinizing Jain literature. I believed there ought to be a great deal of support for my action in the Jain books. An expert professing the Jain religion had sent me his opinion and an article in which I found such support. Hence I carried on correspondence with known Jain friends. As a result I have received the following article. I publish it for the benefit of those who can think objectively.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 13-1-1929

---

1 The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had urged Gandhiji to write in Navajivan appealing to educated readers to efface obscene writings inside latrines on trains.

2 The killing of an ailing calf in the Ashram caused great commotion in certain circles. Vide “The Fiery Ordeal”, sub-title When Killin May Be Ahimsa

3 Not translated here
634. AVERSION TO KHADI

A Brahmin from the South writes: ¹

We shall not know how many such wearers of khadi there must be in every nook and corner. It is a matter of sorrow and surprise that those who wear a cap or other garments of khadi are ridiculed by our own people. But those who have accepted the dharma to wear khadi should be able to suffer it. I remember that when I went to England, for fear that I would be ridiculed, I had decided to wear my hair in the English style rather than have it cut in accordance with the native practice. For the same reason, I dispensed with my tuft too. But one to whom his duty has become clear will stick to it, abjuring all fear of ridicule, etc. If khadi is an Annapurna ² to the starving peasants dwelling in the seven lakh villages of India, the thoughtful will stick to it, despite ridicule, contempt or risk of being beaten up. This Brahmin should never permit himself to think that he is low or contemptible because he is a cook. Neither the profession of a cook nor that of cleaning latrines is low. King Nala had cultivated cooking as an art. Every mother cleans latrines. I hope this Brahmin will stick to his khadi cap, and realize that an essential service can never be degrading.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 13-1-1929

635. A FINE SUGGESTION

Shri Mathuradas Purushottam writes as follows on how to make khadi cheap: ³

I think this is a good suggestion. If there is true patriotism in the country, if the people have even a little faith in the constructive programme, it should not be difficult to find a lakh of people to undertake the task of sewing. The art of sewing according to a given pattern is both easy and enjoyable. There are sewing machines in a number of houses; if one or two hours of leisure are given to this work for the sake of the country, ready-made garments of khadi will surely sell very cheap and all talk of khadi being expensive will end.

¹ The letter is not translated here. The correspondent, who had studied up to the fifth standard, served as a cook. People ridiculed him for wearing a khadi cap.
² Giver of plenty
³ The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had suggested that if khadi was purchased and made into garments and put up for sale without adding stitching charges, etc., it could compete with garments made out of mill-cloth.
People buy khadi in order to make garments out of it. It is likely that many other ideas will strike us as a result of this suggestion. At the moment I place this attractive suggestion before the reader and I solicit the names and addresses of those who know sewing and are willing to sew as a measure of sacrifice. Tailors can make a very great contribution to this work. The Wadhwan tailor, the late Motilal, used to sew for an hour for his livelihood and utilize the rest of his time to serve others and used to teach sewing gladly to those who were desirous of learning. This noble example is there for all tailors and others to emulate.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 13-1-1929

636. WHAT SHOULD STUDENTS DO? 1

A sort of awakening and turmoil have spread among students as among others in the whole country. That is an auspicious sign but it can easily turn into its opposite too. If steam is confined within a limited space, one can make a steam-engine, whose enormous power can haul mighty loads. If, however, it is not harnessed, it either goes waste or causes destruction. In like manner, if the steam that is being produced today among the students is not kept under control, it will either go waste or destroy us all; if it is intelligently harnessed, it will generate great power.

The strike of the students of the Gujarat College that is going on at present, is a product of this steam that has been released. From what I have heard, I believe that both the students’ strike and their complaint are just. They had participated in the boycott of the Simon Commission in October last and had absented themselves from the College. For doing so, the Principal had conveyed his decision to them that those who wished to appear for the examination would have to pay a fee of Rs. 3. Those who did not appear for the examinations would not be punished. Despite this decision, I hear that the Principal has adopted another policy and is compelling everyone to pay Rs. 3 and sit for the examination. The strike is against this order and, if the facts are as above, injustice has been done to the students.

But the President of the Youth League says that the Principal is angry and he sees a danger to the Empire in this strike. The strike is harmless, it is a sign of youthful vigour. The Principal can avoid the

1 Vide also “Speech During Youth Week, Ahmedabad”, 10-1-1929 and “Duty of Resistance”, 24-1-1929

512 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
danger by regarding it merely as a youthful exercise. But if by regarding the strike as a danger and a great sin, he persists in meting out some punishment, harsh or otherwise, what is not a danger today is likely to become a great danger tomorrow.

Speaking about the revolt of 1857, Lord Canning had observed that in the Indian skies a cloud no bigger than one’s thumb could in a trice assume enormous proportions and no one could say when it would do so. Hence wise men should not underestimate an innocent little cloud but regard it as a symptom and administer necessary remedies.

This strike is a cloud small as a thumb; but it can generate power enough to blow up the sky. I certainly desire that such power should be generated. I have neither respect nor love for the modern British system of government. I have described it as the creation of Satan. I desire the destruction of that system once and for all. It is desirable in every way that such destruction is accomplished by the young men and women of India. It is in the hands of the students to acquire this destructive power. If they store up the steam that is being released among them, they could generate that force today.

The first thing is that the students should make a success of the strike begun by them. Had they not started it, no one would have said anything to them. Having once begun it if they lose it, they will certainly deserve blame and will harm both themselves and their country. The worst result of the strike could only be that the Principal will expel the students for a long time or forever or will impose a fine for their re-admission. The students should face both these gladly. A brave man once in the field of battle never turns back. The students cannot now beat a retreat.

Moreover, students should never give up their good manners. They should not utter a single bitter word about the Principal or the professors. Harsh words harm the speaker and not the one addressed. The students have to keep their pledge and do a difficult task. It will surely have an effect. Out of this will be born the power to destroy this political system; it cannot but be so. Our young men and women should remember the example of Chinese students. Of them not one, nor two, but fifty thousand spread themselves into the villages and in a short while prepared both young and old by imparting to them literary and such other needed knowledge. If students desire to make a significant contribution to the yajna of swaraj, they must do something like what was done in China.

As I understand matters, students are desirous of sacrificing themselves in a peaceful struggle. Even if I am mistaken about the facts, the above applies to both kinds of war—soul-force and brute force. Even if we want to fight with ammunition, we shall need to observe discipline; we shall have to store up the steam; up to a certain extent both have a common path. The Khalifas offered unique sacrifices for Islam, the Crusaders for Christianity and Cromwell and his warriors for political ends. Taking recent examples, Lenin, Sun Yat-sen and others have placed before the world instances of simplicity, endurance of hardship, sacrifice of enjoyments, single-minded devotion and eternal vigilance that would put even yogis to shame. Their followers have placed before us equally illustrious examples of devotion and discipline.

We must perform make such sacrifices. Our sacrifices are no sacrifices, they are only trifling. Our capacity to observe rules is small, our simplicity is comparatively little, our devotion is almost insignificant, and our determination and concentration show themselves only in the beginning. Hence youths should remember that they have yet to accomplish much. I have not forgotten what they have achieved; they need no praise from me. If one friend praises another, he ceases to be a friend and becomes a professional pane-gyrist and forfeits the title of friend. A friend’s job is to point out failings and try to get these remedied.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 13-1-1929

637. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

Sunday [January 13, 1929]

CHI. VASUMATI,

What could I write when the programme was not settled? Now it has been settled. I start from here on the 31st and go to Sind, from where I shall return by the 15th. What I shall do after that has not been decided. My advice is that at present you should stay on there.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 503. Courtesy: Vasumati Pandit

---

1 From the postmark
638. LETTER TO JAGANNATH

THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 13, 1929

MY DEAR JAGANNATH,

I have your letter. I expect that Manilal will be going to Sind. I do not know where he is at the present moment. I leave on the 31st instant for Karachi. It would be better to send someone on behalf of the Society in advance.

As to my visit to the Punjab for the opening ceremony, etc. in April, please ask me later. I am awaiting a communication from Pandit Motilalji before I can decide.

Yours sincerely,

LALA JAGANNATH
CARE PEOPLE
COURT STREET, CALCUTTA

From a microfilm: S.N. 15268

539. LETTER TO KHURSHED NAOROJI

THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 13, 1929

I have your letter. I ought to have acknowledged it earlier, but I have been overwhelmed with work. Those Indo-Chinese friends will be welcome whenever they come.

I am sending a short message to the friends.

Jamnabehn should come here because I go to Sind from here by the rail route. I leave here on 31st instant. Jamnabehn may come whenever she likes before 31st instant. Of course she is bringing with her a choice assortment of fine khadi. It would certainly be extremely nice if you will join me during my trip to Burma, if it ever comes off.

What happened to the balance of the stuff in Calcutta?

MISS KHURSHED NAOROJI
F 8 NAPEAN SEA ROAD, BOMBAY

From a photostat: S.N. 15264

1 Servants of the People Society, Lahore
2 Gandhiji was requested by the Servants of the People Society to preside over the anniversary of the Society which was to be held in April and perform the opening ceremony of the Lajpat Rai Hall.
3 The addressee had requested Gandhiji on behalf of the Indo-Chinese delegates to give a message to the people of Indo-China (S.N. 15263).
4 Vide the following item.
640. LETTER TO BUI QUANG-CHIEU

THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 13, 1929

DEAR FRIEND,

Miss Khurshedbai Naoroji has written to me to say that you want a message from me. My message is:

True freedom lies through Truth and Non-violence and nothing else.

Yours sincerely,

BUI QUANG-CHIEU, ESQ.
P 253 SHAHNAGAR STREET
KALIGHAT P.O., CALCUTTA

From a photostat: S.N. 15265

641. LETTER TO C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 13, 1929

I have your letter. What is one to do with Prakasam or anybody else ? I have certainly not taken charge. I do not see how I can take the sole charge. I have today a letter from the Working Committee, copy of which I enclose. I shall frame some sort of a scheme. Let us simply do whatever we can in spite of adverse circumstances. In my opinion, dictatorship is out of question. When you receive the formal communication to prepare a scheme, I suppose you will prepare something and send it. If they put you in sole charge, you will ask for absolute powers and ask for the Congress Committees being put in proper order.

The health-god dealt with me most handsomely during the Calcutta strain. I am none the worse. In spite of reduced diet, bad hours, want of sleep, I had lost only one lb., and I have regained all the lost weight during the week I have been here. Yes, almonds, bread and vegetables seem to answer the purpose well. The quantity of almonds is for the last two days 6 ounces, bread untoasted 14 tolas. I am keeping well.

Encl.

SJT. C. RAJAGOPALACHARIAR
GANDHI ASHRAM, TIRUCHENGODU

From a photostat: S.N. 15273
642. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

January 13, 1929

DEAR SATISBABU,

Can you prepare the tricolour national flag with the charkha in it? The question is how to have the three colours nicely on one piece. If you can prepare it, let me have the price also.

You will keep me informed of how the new Khadi Bhandar is going on.

I wish I could have given more days to you. Hemprabha Devi must not overwork herself. What is the cost there per head of feeding and how is it worked out?

Love.

BAPU

SIT. SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA
KHADI PRATISHTHAN, SODEPUR, CALCUTTA

From a photostat: G.N. 1601

643. LETTER TO HARIBHAU UPADHYAYA

January 13, 1929

BHAI HARIBHAU,

I have your letter. It would have been better if you could have personally come to Allahabad. But now it will do even if a responsible representative of yours comes. A satyagrahi must be absolutely faultless. Then alone can he be invincible. If necessary, we will talk further about this when we meet. I presume that you will definitely come to Wardha if you have not come to the Sabarmati Ashram before that.

Blessings from

BAPU

From the Gujarati original: Haribhau Upadhyaya Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library

---

1 Vide “Notes” sub-title Khadi Bhandar in Calcutta
644. LETTER TO RAMESHWARDAS PODDAR

Sunday [January 13, 1929]

Bhai Rameshwardas,

Your letter. Have patience. Always remember Rama. He will remove all impurities.

Blessings from

Bapu

From the Hindi original. Courtesy: National Archives of India; also G.N. 198

645. LETTER TO G. D. BIRLA

January 14, 1929

BhaiShri Ghanshyamdasji,

I got your wire and your letter too. I am going to Sind at the end of this month in connection with the Lalaji Memorial [Fund]. Did you collect any subscriptions in Calcutta?

Did you write to the South Indian gentleman whose name I had sent for the dairy? If he does not suit I can suggest a few other names.

As regards the Khadi Bhandar do not let its purpose slip off your mind. It ought not to be run merely on a commercial basis. It is to be conducted from an altruistic viewpoint.

My health is good. These days my diet consists of milk from 15 tolas almonds, 14 tolas roti (soaked), vegetable, raw tomatoes, 4 tolas linseed oil and 2 tolas of wheat flour gruel in the morning. I have left off fruit. The increase in weight in one week is 1 lb.

I am maintaining good strength.

Yours,

Mohandas

From Hindi: C.W. 6152. Courtesy: G. D. Birla

646. LETTER TO SHANTIKUMAR MORARJI

Monday [January 14, 1929]

Chi. ShantiKumar,

I have your letter. Let me have the date of departure of your ship for Rangoon. I would certainly like to go by it. Most probably it

1 From the postmark
2 ibid
will be cheaper to sail from Calcutta. But you can guide me better.

We need not wire for the literature about bee-keeping. There is no urgency about it. The honey you sent is very sweet. Send me a book on chromopathy if you can get one. I hope grandmother is all right.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 4711. Courtesy: Shantikumar Morarji

---

647. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

Not revised Silence Day, January 14, 1929

CHI. MIRA,

I have all your love letters. I am glad indeed that you liked the poet and his great creation. Your letters soothed me. I have sent them to Mahadev for I know he will like them. I would like you to go there again and, if you will like it, before returning home.

I am satisfied so long as you do not expect long letters from me.
But you need not shorten yours to spare me. I like your letters. They give me useful news and they are your temperature chart.

I do not mind your opinion of Krishnadas. I cannot endorse it.
But give me the reasons for that terrible judgment. I might be able to correct it or endorse it. If it is the worst, I must know it. But I feel that I shall be able to correct your judgment. No one else has the opinion you have.

Things are going on well here. The kitchen is better ordered.
Bread is almost perfect. Chhotelal has returned with more accurate information about bakeries. Surendra will be back in a few days.

I leave here on 31st instant for Sind, returning by 15th
February. You shall have the Sind dates in due course.

I have regained my lost weight and added 1 lb. It was 95_ yesterday after performance at the library. Fruit replaced by tomatoes.
No lemon either.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5330. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G. N. 9384

---
January 14, 1929

CHI. MANILAL AND SUSHILA,

I get your letters. I missed one mail as I have been very busy.

If it was left to me to give a name to Dhairyabala, I would call her Sita. It is a holy name. It is easy for friends there to pronounce and suggest the virtues we wish her to have. I considered some other names too, but could not think of a better one.

What need is there now to write about Sastriji? Keep me informed how the new Agent is doing. Since I do not know him, I have not written a single line about him. The other reports that I have received are not favourable, but we should not form an opinion on the basis of these reports. It is possible that he may show only his better qualities there. You should not, any of you, be prejudiced against him from the beginning.

I am doing fairly well. At present I have given up goat’s milk and fruits. Fruits I gave up after coming here. I take tomatoes instead, and almond-milk instead of goat’s milk.

I hope you write to Ramdas. It appears he and Nimu are doing well at Bardoli. Devdas, Navin and Rasik are still in Delhi. All three are doing well. Mahadev is in Bardoli.

Kishorelal was here for four days. His health can be said to be fairly good. Ba, too, can be said to be well. We can say that she shows her age now. I have already written to you that she was with me at Calcutta. I returned via Delhi. Ba came later, having stayed on in Delhi for two days. Keshu had stayed back with her. Brijkishan has come here.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4749

---

1 Daughter of the addressees
2 Sir Kurma Venkata Reddi who took over the charge of the office of Agent in South Africa from V. S. Srinivasa Sastri on January 28, 1929
APPENDICES

APPENDIX I

COW-PROTECTION TRUE AND FALSE

The question of cow-protection is extremely complex. The fanatic, the humanitarian and the economist will of course view it differently. . . . But the Hindu ideal of cow-protection has nothing in common with that of the first and transcends that of the other two.... The camel and the horse occupy the same position in the economic life of the people of Arabia that the cow does in ours.... Yet the ideal of camel-protection or horse-protection never arose in Arabia.... Even in the West the cow has more and more come to be regarded as the “mother of prosperity” and dairying has been developed into an elaborate science, but Westerners have not adopted the ideal of cow-protection in the sense in which we have. The cow-protection ideal set up by Hinduism is essentially different from and transcends the dairy ideal of the West. The latter is based on economic values, the former, while duly recognizing the economic aspect of the case, lays stress on the spiritual aspect, viz., the idea of penance and self-sacrifice for the relief of martyred innocence which it embodies....

The story [in Kalidasa’s Raghuvamsa] runs that King Dilip of the famous Raghu line finding himself in his declining years without issue went to seek the advice of sage Vasishtha his preceptor and was told that the attainment of his desire was prevented by a curse pronounced upon him by Surabhi, the Divine Cow, on account of an unintended insult that he had once offered to her and that the only way to remedy it was to propitiate her by personally serving her and by protecting her against all harm in her roamings in the forest. So dismissing all his servants, the King entered upon his penance . . . “offering her palatable mouthfuls of grass, rubbing her body, keeping off the gnats, following her as her shadow, halting where she halted, sitting down where she lay down, moving forth when she moved.” . . . Such was the power of the King’s penance and so all-conquering his love that even wild Nature felt its spell. “When he entered the forest as its protector, forest conflagrations would become extinguished even without any shower of rain . . . the stronger animals no longer oppressed the weaker ones.”

Thus it went on for “thrice seven” days at the end of which, wishing to test the devotion of her protector, the cow entered a cave in the Himalayas . . . and was suddenly seized upon by a lion unnoticed by the King who was lost in contemplating the beauty and grandeur of the surrounding mountain scenery. Startled from his reverie by the plaintive lowing of the cow, the King, ashamed of his absent-mindedness, fitted an arrow to his bow to shoot at the lion, but to his utter amazement and dismay he felt himself hold as if by a spell and all his strength paralysed. . . . The lion . . . told him that all his prowess was vain, since he was not an ordinary lion but Kumbhodara the servant of God Siva and was protected by the blessing of that God in consequence of which no arms could prevail against him.... “I know I am helpless,” replied the King . . . but one thing still remains to me. I offer my body to thee as ransom for the cow and I beseech thee to appease thy hunger on my flesh and let the cow go.”

1 Only excerpts are reproduced here.

The lion tries to move him from his resolve by a variety of arguments. “If compassion is your motive,” he expostulates, “then your decision is wrong, since by your death you will save only one cow, whereas if you live you will as their father ever protect your people against all troubles.” . . . The King . . . once more presses his request. “So be it,” replies the lion at last and the King laying down his arms throws himself before the wild beast “like a lump of flesh,” so that it might make a meal of him.... But ... instead of the dreadful leap of the lion which he was expecting, flowers begin to shower from the heavens and he hears a gentle voice speak, “Rise up, my son.” He gets up and finds the cow standing before him like his own mother, with milk overflowing from her udders and “nowhere the lion!” . . .

And since the King has discharged his trust so nobly she grants him his wish. “Do not think I can produce milk alone,” she says to him, “if pleased I can grant any wish”.

Dilip is here depicted as love incarnate. Faced with the dilemma whether to lay down his life to save the cow or to gain the merit of giving crores of cows in charity he unhesitatingly chooses the former and finds that he has thereby propitiated an angel unawares. His relentless pursuit of truth leads him to the discovery of the true way of cow-protection—the way of ahimsa, of perfect love and therethrough everything else is added unto him....

The cow whose service and protection is enjoined by Hinduism as a sacred duty is not cow, the animal merely, but cow that in our sacred lore appears as the personification of the “agony of the Earth”, and that pleads for redress before the Great White Throne whenever the Earth grows weary under its load of iniquity. Its service includes the service of the entire afflicted humanity, of all those “who toil and suffer and are weary and need rest”, the service of Daridranarayana . . .

Dilip’s way [is] the way of perfect love . . . self-suffering and selfpurification. It is this spiritual ideal of cow-protection that is exalted by Hinduism as the highest dharma and with reference to which the promise is held out:

‘न केवलानें पशुं प्रमुखवेहवं यां कम्पुं जि नाम।’

“Do not think I can produce milk alone, if pleased I can grant any wish.”

Young India, 20-9-1928

APPENDIX II

LETTER FROM DR. B. C. ROY

SHILLONG,

October 28, 1928

MY DEAR MAHATMAJI,

I had written to you some months ago to find out from you your directions regarding the Exhibition to be held in connection with the 43rd session of the congress. I confess I did not get from you any definite instructions for us to follow as your letter was vague and guarded. It is time now (I hope it is not too late) that I received them and shall be grateful if I am told exactly what are the decisions of the Calcutta Committee which embarrass you. I understood from Mr Khandelwal just before I left Calcutta that you had not decided to come to Calcutta during the Congress.

The Calcutta Congress Committee have so far decided (I am speaking from memory)

(i) not to exhibit any textiles made of foreign yarn or anything of this nature manufactured in any foreign country,

(ii) not to allow any advertisements regarding the same,

(iii) not to allow the exhibition of any British goods,

(iv) not to allow any advertisements of these goods,

(v) to allow the exhibition of small machinery (non-British) good enough for cottage industries,

(vi) to allow the exhibition of mill-cloth only if the Committee is convinced that the cloth is made of Indian yarn.

While the Committee have come to these conclusions yet I am perfectly certain that no member of the Committee will insist on the compliance by us of any or all of these conditions if they knew that you had objection to any of these decisions.

We have set apart a large portion of the exhibition grounds for khaddar cloth I am now informed by Pandit Motilalji that the A.I.S.A. have decided to abstain from being represented in the exhibition. This decision is unfortunate. As an humble office-bearer of the Congress I am bound to see that the Association is represented at the exhibition as also to take orders from my Committee. Please do not leave me in this predicament. Kindly revise your decision and come to Calcutta. We shall not accept a ‘no’ from you. If necessary I will try and close down the exhibition. Please let me know your wishes and I will try and follow them. Only I would request you not to be too unbending.

I am going down to Calcutta in two days and I shall be anxiously awaiting a reply there from you, giving me definite directions. The Seva Sadan is going on well. I do hope you will find time to open the new wards when in Calcutta. We are looking forward to it.

Yours sincerely,
B. C. Roy

From a microfilm: S.N. 14852

APPENDIX III

EXTRACTS FROM SHAUKAT ALI’S LETTER

SULTANI MANSION, DONGRI, BOMBAY

October 23, 1928

MY DEAR MAHATMAJI,

I had received your letter of the September 24th all right. . . . I know from the writings in the Press that your name was being dragged in to raise the people’s feeling against me. . . . Our Kohat differences and other things had also been mentioned. So I do not feel surprised that at Simla Mahadev heard something about it. Here is what I had said about you and I assure you that in giving the details of the incident I depend not only on my own good memory and also on Shuaib’s, but Dr. Ansari or even Pandit Motilal cannot disprove my facts. . . . I had real quarrel with Panditji at Ambalal Sarabhai’s and very nearly came to blows, as my blood boiled when in our face he was heaping abuses on us “No-changers” . . . . You have forgiven them, may have even forgotten the wrongs they may have done, but most of us cannot do it. . . . You can retire from active politics, being many-sided, but unfortunately we cannot; and I have got to save my Muslim brethren from going to the English fold which means death to them and a great deal of harm to Islam to service of which I have devoted my life. . . . I have always liked Srinivasa iyengar. He is impulsive and open, may be changeable, but he is sincere and good-tempered. Whether his sponsorship of the Madras Resolution was responsible for Panditji’s opposition I cannot say. . . . In May last I came for the first time in touch with the All-Parties Conference at Bombay and, you know, in your presence Motilalji and myself differed so strongly. . . . Over this reservation of Muslim seats question he gave out strong views and we had equally strong views on that subject. You were in agreement with Motilalji and wanted the reservation to go both in the case of majority and minority provinces. . . . The Working Committee of the Congress discussed this question for three days and the majority did not want the Madras Resolution to be reopened. There was great fear of the collapse of the All-Parties Conference and to overcome the deadlock you had suggested the formation of this committee to draft the constitution in the spirit of the Madras Resolution. Panditji asked you to give the names of the members also and you suggested four names—Dr. Ansari, Pandit Motilal Nehru, Pandit Jawaharlal Nehru and Mr. Aney. On this Dr. Ansari said that personally he had always been opposed to the reservation of seats but the general Muslim public did not agree with him on this point. He would not be able to find time to work on this committee. . . . Mrs. Naidu and I suggested Shuaib’s name in place of Dr. Ansari who could not work on the committee; but you said, “No, not Shuaib”, which rather surprised me and I said, “Why not, Sir? There must be someone to represent the Muslim point of view and Shuaib will be the best person.” You said in reply that he would not work and give time or some such words; and when we assured you that he would work, you withdrew your objection, and Shuaib’s name was added and also, I believe, Subhas Bose’s. It is this incident that I have mentioned in the statement which I issued at Delhi on the 4th September on my return from Lucknow Conference. You yourself say in your letter of the 24th referring to this incident, “I do not even remember what I said about him and others.” I never said in my statement that you made every effort to keep Shuaib out. I only gave the true picture of that scene and said that you objected to Shuaib’s name which was proposed but afterwards agreed saying that if Shuaib promises to work I have no further objection. That is all that I have said about you. I did say then and say it now also that the original committee of four as proposed by you—Ansari, Motilal, Jawaharlal and Aney—was composed of men who did not want Muslim reservation of seats, but at the open meeting of the All-Parties Conference, I was surprised that other names were added to the committee, i.e., Sir Ali Imam, Sir Tej Bahadur Sapru, Mr. Jayakar, Mr. Joshi, Sardar Mangal Singh, so that Shuaib’s alone, and possibly Subhas Bose were the only members who could put forward the Muslim point of view, the views of the others being against the reservation of seats.

I am afraid you have been out of touch with all that is going on in this connection. You saw my English letter to Dr. Ansari, but you did not see the reply he issued after reading my statement of the 4th September in Hamdard and to which this letter was a rejoinder. Naturally you would not like two brothers Dr. Ansari and myself fighting over anything. . . . My quarrel really is not with Ansari but with Pandit Motilal, who knowing that I was giving expression to the views of millions of Mussalmans, yet would not listen. . . . It was a big task before us to make them accept Joint Electorates which, I think, in itself was a very great gain. . . .

I am sorry to write this letter to you. . . . Ansari is a gentleman and an honest man and I love him; but he is not strong. . . .

. . . . It matters little if any action of mine annoys you today or any action of yours makes me angry. We have fought together side by side and will carry the wounds we earned together to our graves. They are a link between us, but I beg you not to ignore the warning I give you. We cannot allow things to drift because that way lies danger and that terribly ugly thing called civil war which means a brother killing a brother. I must stop it in my own way and I beg you to do the same in your way. . . .

_Yours in great sorrow,_

SHAUKAT ALI

From a photostat: S.N. 13710
1. TELEGRAM TO MIRABEHN

   January 16, 1929

MIRABEHN
CARE KHADI BHANDAR
MUZAFFARPUR

WRITED FULLY YESTERDAY¹. NOT LEAVING TILL THIRTYFIRST. LOVE.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5331. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9386

2. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

   SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
   Wednesday [On or before January 16, 1929]²

CHI. NARANDAS,

You seem to have been hurt. I would have been happy to respect your wishes in regard to Chi. Santok³, but I did not approve of your plan. For the manner of living of the mother and the daughters is so expensive that they would always have been a cause of discontent in the Ashram. Santok never liked the common kitchen, nor the inmates of the Ashram.

About the khadi training section, I have already stated my view that neither suggestions can be supported. I see nothing wrong in the view that the Ashram and not an individual should have the agency. I shall decide finally on the 18th at the latest. I want you to take interest in all activities and participate in them. Trust Chhaganlal. He is a sincere and hard-working man. Do not mind his errors, but consider his motive.

About Sannabhai, I have simply said that Chhaganlal Joshi’s decision should be final. For no one of whom the secretary does not approve should remain.

¹ Presumably a slip for “day before yesterday”; vide “Letter to Mirabehn”, January 1st, 1929.
² Year inferred from the allusion to the problem of Santok; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, December 19, 1928. As Gandhiji asked Narandas to see him on the 18th, the date of this letter could be fixed on the preceding Wednesday which was 16th January.
³ Widow of Maganlal Gandhi.
You may write to me anything you wish to. If you can come over for the 18th, do so. If you think that both of you should come, do that. If you do not, I shall reach the decision which seems best to me.

Blessings from
BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro–9: Shri Narandas Gandhine—Part I, p. 47

3. AMERICAN PATRIOTISM

Sjt. C. V. Rangam Chetty writes:

Rev. . . . is the head of the American Mission Schools at . . . He deputed Mr. . . ., who was an Indian teacher in the Mission School at . . . and who knows mechanism, to go to . . . and bring materials for his motor-car. Mr. . . . purchased German material which is cheaper and better than the American. Rev. . . . refused to touch it and said that he would not like to pay his money so far as possible to any nation except America. Mr. . . . then sold the material to a Brahmin gentleman at . . . and purchased American material. Mr. . . . who was indifferent to my repeated requests to wear khaddar has now come forward to confess his folly and has resolved to wear khaddar in future after this incident. I hope our educated and rich countrymen will take a lesson from the American and set an example to others.

I have purposely omitted names and places as they are not germane to my theme. The point is quite clear. Whether the Reverend gentleman referred to did not overstep the limit of patriotism is not the point to be examined. The lesson Sjt. Rangam Chetty wishes to draw from the incident is quite legitimate. We, in our country, are in honour bound to prefer handspun khaddar to foreign cloth, no matter how inconvenient it may be to us. It is flimsy philosophy that teaches us to go to the cheapest market irrespective of what happens therethrough to our next-door neighbours. Free donations of fine wheat from Australia or America will be poison to us, if that meant a workless India with her soil growing weeds instead of golden grain. Similarly a free gift of cloth from Manchester would be too costly a bargain for India to accept. I repeat, therefore, that khaddar is cheap at any price so long as it serves to utilize the idle hours of the nation and there is nothing else immediately in view to occupy them as usefully.

Young India, 17-1-1929
4. THEN AND NOW

Some critics of the constructive resolution
1 passed by the Congress think that it is something new sprung by me upon a Congress that was eager for a vigorous, forward policy. In the first place I claim no originality for my resolution, for, it closely follows the presidential address. In the second, it is identical with the now much lauded programme of 1920-21, 2 with certain desirable additions. In 1921, as now, we had prohibition with picketing, we had khaddar and boycott of foreign cloth with the burning demonstrations and we had untouchability campaign and Hindu-Muslim unity. The present programme adds the amelioration of the status of women and removal of kindred social abuses. It also adds village reconstruction and organization of city labour—surely, items that must find place in any constructive programme for the attainment of swaraj.

Is there not excitement enough in the programme, if Congressmen are serious about it? Picketing of liquor shops, foreign cloth shops and collection and burning of foreign cloth are exciting enough for any worker and are enough to evoke all the resourcefulness that the best workers may be capable of.

What, indeed, we have not in my resolution of the programme of 1920-21 is the boycott of legislatures, law-courts and educational institutions and titles. Nothing would please me better than to find these institutions that sustain the Government abandoned by the nation or at least Congressmen. I know that then we should have swaraj and, what is perhaps more, we should have less corruption in the Congress than we now have. But that time is not yet. Congressmen assist legislatures, law-courts and schools as much as any other, and perhaps during this year when the Congress works for the attainment of a constitution in accordance with the Nehru Report it must function through the legislatures. In any event one year is not too much even for the most impatient independencewallah to organize for the quadruple boycott assuming, of course, that the Nehru Report status is not attained during the twelve months. And if we are serious about complete severance of British connection, we shall, when the year is over, certainly cease to patronize the very institutions that are the emblems of British power and instruments for holding us under subjection.

1 Vide ”Speech on Constructive Programme, Calcutta Congress”, January 1, 1929.

And is the present programme quite so tame as it is made to appear? Was the picketing of liquor traps a tame affair? Let Dr. Kanuga and his band of volunteers who were assaulted by angry liquor dealers and their myrmidons answer. Let the hundreds of the prisoners in Assam answer who were mercilessly clapped into the Assam jails because they had the audacity to picket opium dens. Was the burning of foreign cloth a tame affair? Let Sarojini Devi who gave her very beautiful costly foreign scarf and many girls who gave up their rich foreign silks and other fineries they had learnt to treasure answer. There is nothing to prevent Congressmen now from picketing liquor traps or opium dens or from collecting and burning foreign cloth. Apart from the great social and economic value of these two very powerful items they have a political value of the very first order. If we achieve boycott of foreign cloth we remove from Britain’s path the greatest incentive to greed, and if we stop the liquor and drug revenue, we force the rulers to reduce the ever-growing military expenditure. These two things so easy to accomplish, so well suited to employ the energy of a vast mass of people, I hold, will go a long way towards the fulfilment of the national purpose, if we can but accomplish them.

I claim that the programme is so catholic as to satisfy all tastes and to occupy the whole nation. If we are many workers, we can take up all the items at once, if we are few, we may take up one item at a time.

There is, I admit, one important condition necessary to make the programme palatable, and that is, a living belief in non-violence for the establishment of swaraj or Dominion Status or Independence, whichever the name we may give to our object. It is not difficult to think out a programme that would immediately precipitate violence. That however is beyond my ken or capacity.

Young India, 17-1-1929
5. NOTES

REPORTED THREAT

It is reported that the Government propose to take legal proceedings against those who strive for complete independence carrying severance of British connection with it. It has further been suggested that organizations working for complete independence should be suppressed. I am not aware of any law enabling the Government to punish the active advocacy of independence. I wish the Government would take steps against the promoters of independence. It will clear the political atmosphere and show what the Government mean by Dominion Status. If it does not carry with it the power to sever connection with the British, it is a form of bondage be it so mild. An India, impatient of servitude and waiting to come to her own, will never be content with any form of bondage. No national assembly can possibly be permitted to be the custodian of national honour, if it does not strive for the best that the nation is entitled to. Any move on the part of the Government, therefore against the propaganda of independence cum severance of British connection will precipitate the issue and undoubtedly give added strength to the severance movement. As I have already remarked, we must have the power to sever the connection even though we may never exercise that power. Whether we should and would exercise that power or not will depend wholly upon how British rulers behave towards us during these critical times. The school of severance must have the fullest liberty to vow and carry on its propaganda unhampered by any Governmental act, direct or indirect, open or secret. The only honourable way to prevent the school from growing is to make the connection worthwhile for us to retain. That can only be when the imperialistic spirit, the spirit of exploitation is killed and partnership on absolutely equal terms offered in the place of present bondage.

GUJARAT VIDYAPITH1

This National Institution held its seventh convocation on 11th instant. Acharya Ramadeva delivered the convocation speech in the place of Sardar Vallabhbhai Patel who could not attend, but who sent his blessings and a spirited message reminding the graduates that their education had only just begun. Acharya Ramadeva’s was an impassioned address to show that the British educational system was devised to manufacture clerks, not statesmen, to make students ‘black Englishmen’ according to Macaulay, but not better Indians. He had no difficulty in showing that the foreign method, grafted by foreigners on the Indian, had resulted in terrible increase of illiteracy.

---

1 An article on this subject appeared in Navajivan, 20-1-1929.

The Registrar’s report which was a businesslike document showed that the Vidyapith was still doing pruning work and strengthening its foundation. Nevertheless it was able to show a literary output of no mean order in the shape of text books and research work done by the Puratatva Mandir with whose activity were identified scholars like Muni Jinvijayaji and Prof. Dharmananda Kosambi and Pandit Sukhlalji. The Vidyapith hopes inside of three months to furnish the Gujaratis with an authorized spelling dictionary, a want that is being increasingly felt. Great stress is being laid upon manual training which is superstitiously believed to interfere with the development of the intellect.

The occasion was utilized by the graduates to present Acharya Kripalani with the khadi purse which the students had intended to collect and present to their popular Principal when he retired last year. The purse contained over Rs. 6,000. Acharya Kripalani in thanking the students for their purse reiterated his promise to visit Gujarat from time to time and by citing his experience of the solid work being done by the old students among untouchables and Raniparaj showed that the Vidyapith had more than justified its existence. Whilst he was proud of all the menial labour that these workers were doing with zest, he warned them against neglecting brainwork after leaving college. He added that the marvellous work done by the Sardar of Bardoli could not have been done, if he had not combined great brain capacity with rare courage and equally rare powers of endurance.

The ‘old boys’ had their own function over which Sjt. Kishorelal Mashruwala presided. His thoughtful address reminded the students of their serious responsibility and enjoined upon them the necessity of becoming true soldiers of swaraj.

I must not omit to notice the work being done by the students among the untouchables in the shape of night schools in the villages round Ahmedabad. Through these night schools they are dealing with social evils, the drink curse and giving medical relief. All honour to the boys who are thus patiently building brick by brick the swaraj structure.
LALAJI MEMORIAL AND SIND

Sjt. Jairamdas and other Sind friends pressed me whilst I was in Calcutta to go to Sind for the Lalaji Memorial collection. I could not resist the temptation. Though being pledged to tour for khadi I could not go to many places for this collection, I would not refuse the sporting offer from Sind. The collections for the Lalaji Memorial are creeping in, not pouring as they should have. It would be a shame if the five lacs are not forthcoming within a reasonable time. The donors have no excuse now for delaying, as they know exactly the purpose to which the collections are to be devoted. I am hoping therefore that the response from Sind will be generous enough to serve as guide to the other provinces.

Nor must Sind forget khadi. My visit to Sind has, I know, been long overdue. Khadi lovers have been inviting me ever since my release from Yeravda to visit Sind for khadi propaganda and collections. Let them now prepare their offering for Daridra narayana. And I expect the silk-bedecked Sindhi ladies to think of their poor sisters as also to render me an account of their connection with the evil custom of deti-leti. Many of them promised to exert themselves to do away with it root and branch. I hope that they will prove as good as their word.

Young India, 17-1-1929

6. TELEGRAM TO MIRABEHN

January 17, 1929

MIRABEHN
CARE KHADI BHANDAR
MUZAFFARPUR

NO ANXIETY. HOT WATER BOTTLE ABDOMEN. MAY TAKE FOUR OUNCES BOILING RICE WATER PREPARED FROM HALF OUNCE UNBOILED RICE DAILY. SUN BATH ADVISABLE. REPORT DAILY PROGRESS. LOVE.

BAPU

From the original: C. W. 5332. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G. N. 9387
7. LETTER TO ZAFAR-UL-MULK

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 17, 1929

DEAR FRIEND,

I have kept the letter you left in Calcutta all this time. I was sorry indeed that I was silent when you came. I had not thought of the silence when I asked you to come again. I was none the less sorry than you were that we could not talk. Do please write to me whatever you want to say and if you get the time do come and pass a few days when I am at the Ashram. At the present moment I am preparing to go to Sind.

Yours sincerely,

ZAFAR-UL-MULK, ESQ.
LUCKNOW

From a microfilm: S.N. 1986

8. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 17, 1929

MY DEAR JAWAHAR,

I have your letter 1. About the tour in the U.P. I have written to you already. 2 I write this about Kripalani. Jamnalalji tells me that you want Kripalani to take up organization under you, that is to say, to take up the work that Sitla Sahai was doing and add to it as much as he can. Your letter under reply does not quite give me that impression. Kripalani himself, I understand, has written to you already, because on the strength of Jamnalalji’s letter, I had begun to talk to him before receipt of your letter and so had Shankerlal. You will now write to me therefore what you exactly intend in this matter.

If I do not tour in the U.P. in the near future and if you can come over to Sabarmati even for a day or two, we can discuss many things. I utterly distrust doctors’ reports about Kamala whether they are favourable or unfavourable. I wish you and Father and Kamala will make up your minds for her to take the natural treatment, that means Kuhne’s bath and sun baths. Sun baths are now in vogue even amongst the medical profession and very extraordinary results are claimed for them.

1 Dated January 12, 1929 (S.N. 15277)

You will telegraph if necessary about Kripalani.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1929. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library; also S. N. 15276

9. LETTER TO MOTILAL NEHRU

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 17, 1929

DEAR MOTILALJI,

I have both your letters. No apology whatsoever is necessary for taking me to Calcutta. Of course I had never expected to have to take such an active part in the deliberations as circumstances forced me to take. But it was as well. I was quite happy over it and it gave me an insight into the present working of the Congress organization which I certainly did not possess. And after all, we have to battle both within and without.

The big Darbhanga case is a very heavy responsibility and it must take up a great deal of your time which would otherwise have been available for the constructive programme. Nevertheless, I am glad you have this case and if it relieves you of all financial burdens, it will be possible for you then to give much more time to public work and that without a load of anxiety behind you.

Now as to the second letter. If I am to finish the European programme, I may not put off the visit till May and I dare not keep the many friends who have invited me in a state of suspense up to the very time of my sailing. And if I go at all I have to go to Germany, Austria, Russia, possibly Poland, France, England and I would like to add Italy, Turkey and Egypt though I have no invitations as yet from the last three places. There are also pressing invitations from America to include America if I go to Europe. All these things I must settle now or not at all. And your letter leads me to think that I must not think of undertaking the European tour this year at all. The next will take care of itself. Subject therefore to your reply, I propose to announce cancellation of the tour and make no promise for next year.

1 Dated January 12, 1929 (S.N. 15279) and January 14, 1929 (S.N. 15280)

I have been asked to draw up a scheme for boycott of foreign cloth.¹ I hope to do so in a day or two, unless I can be ready to send it even with this letter.

About the Lalaji Memorial Fund I personally do not think it is necessary for you to sign the local appeal. Let the local people make vigorous collections if they will. Purushottamdas Tandon is now taking charge of the affairs of the Society and that ought to inspire confidence.

If I do not go to Europe, I would gladly include the U.P. in my tour programme, when I would like you to join me at least in some places.

It is quite like Jawahar that he should give up smoking, a fine preparation to face Hailey². I do not know that Hailey will lay his hands upon Jawahar quite so easily as you think.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 15281

¹ Vide “Scheme for Boycott of Foreign Cloth Through Khadi”, 2-1-1929.
² Sir Malcolm Hailey, the then Governor of U.P.
10. LETTER TO NIRANJAN SINGH

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 17, 1929

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. Your idea commends itself to me and you are at liberty to translate my other works. I hope that all your translations will be full and not of parts of the books you may translate. I am obliged to write this because some translators have taken such liberty with my writings and that too in a manner so as to give almost different meaning to them.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. NIRANJAN SINGH
PROFESSOR OF CHEMISTRY
KHALSA COLLEGE
AMRITSAR

From a microfilm: S.N. 15289

11. LETTER TO DR. M. A. ANSARI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 17, 1929

DEAR MR. ANSARI,

I have your letter. I hope you have now got rid of your influenza. It was a marvel to me how some of us could get through the terrific strain of the work in Calcutta without coming to grief. I often exclaimed to myself, ‘God is great’!

What you tell me about the Muslim Conference in Delhi makes distressful reading. We have to live it down. And if we will but keep our heads cool, retain our patience in spite of irritation and not swerve from what we may consider to be the true path, I know that all will be well in the end.

I was able to see Dr. Zakir when I passed through Delhi. He was with me the whole time. I agree with you that a bulk of the collections

---

1 Presumably the Muslim All-Parties Conference held under the presidency of the Aga Khan, on December 31, 1928 and January 1, 1929
2 Dr. Zakir Husain (1897-1969), third President of India of the Ajmal Fund should be transferred to the Jamia so as to relieve Dr. Zakir of anxiety at least to a certain extent. I shall be writing to Jamnalalji or perhaps he will be coming here. I do not leave for Sind before the 31st instant and I have asked Jamnalalji before he goes to Madras to come to Sabarmati even if it is for a day. He may be here any time this week. If he does not come, I shall write to him.

I hope that you are still working over the Hindu-Muslim question.

I note what you say about the Lalaji’s Society and I agree with you entirely that, if there are members in it with a communal bias, it should be purged of that then. I shall be writing to the Secretary as also to Purushottamdas Tandon.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 15287

12. LETTER TO JAGANNATH

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 17, 1929

DEAR LALA JAGANNATH,

This is what Dr. Ansari writes in his letter 1 to me signifying his assent to the notice about the Memorial which I sent to him 2 and which referred to the allocation of the Fund for the Society. I would like you to put Dr. Ansari at ease altogether on this score. Please show this letter to Purushottamdas Tandon and it will be better perhaps for him to write to Dr. Ansari. If there is any member whom you think Dr. Ansari has in view, he should also write.

The Sind programme, of which I wrote to you the other day, stands and I leave here on the 31st instant.

Yours sincerely,

Enclosure: Extract from Dr. Ansari’s letter

From a photostat: S.N. 15290

1 Dated January 10, 1929, which read: “I have heard from some very reliable workers in the Punjab that some of the members in charge of the Servants of the People Society have shown a distinct bias towards communalism. I hope this taint would be soon removed from a body which is primarily intended to serve the people and the country at large.”

2 Vide “Letter to Dr. M. A. Ansari”, January 6, 1929.
13. LETTER TO MRS. GIDWANI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 17, 1929

I have your letter. Why do you write to me in English? Surely you know Hindi well. You know Gujarati also. But if you could not write in Gujarati or in Hindi, you might have written even in Sindhi and I would have got someone to decipher it for me. After all Sindhi is written in the Persian script. However, you will have to render an account of these things when I come to Karachi.

Of course, I should like to be with you whilst I am in Karachi. But I shan’t go to Sind as a free agent. I shall be in the custody of the Reception Committee of each place. So you must manage the Reception Committee in Karachi.

Yours sincerely,

MRS. GIDWANI
6 QUEENS ROAD, KARACHI

From a photostat: S.N. 15291

14. LETTER TO DR. B. C. ROY

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 17, 1929

DEAR DR. BIDHAN,

What is the truth about Mukerjee’s claim about the tent? I enquired of Rengaswami and he thinks that his claim is well made. If it is so, should not the Reception Committee make amends for its inability to carry out the contract?

Yours sincerely,

Enclosure 1

DR. BIDHAN CHANDRA ROY
36 WELLINGTON STREET, CALCUTTA

From a microfilm: S.N. 15292

---

1 A. N. Mukerjee, a tent manufacturer, had referred in his letter dated December 1, 1928 to an agreement dated July 7, 1926 signed between himself and the General Secretary of the All-India Congress Committee, A. Rengaswami Iyengar (S.N. 13798).
15. LETTER TO THE SECRETARY, ALL-INDIA SPINNERS’ ASSOCIATION

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 17, 1929

THE SECRETARY
A. I. S. A.
AHMEDABAD

DEAR SIR,

With reference to the matters referred to me for opinion regarding the constitution of the A.I.S.A., I am of opinion that no one is entitled to be enlisted as voter for the election of members of the Council who has not been a paid-up member of the ‘A’ class for full two years at the time of the preparation of the voters’ list and, secondly, no one can be nominated as candidate for election who is not at the date of such nomination a fully-paid member of the ‘A’ class.

Yours faithfully,

From a microfilm: S.N. 15293

16. LETTER TO N. R. MALKANI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 17, 1929

MY DEAR MALKANI,

I have your letter. I had your telegram also about your daughter. I did not quite understand the significance of one sari. Therefore I sent you nothing. I read the telegram to either Kripalani or Choithram whoever was by me and he also could not understand it and could not believe that you could have done with one sari only. And now I see that you have not. Why was the expense of Rs. 700 incurred? The thing is finished, but I would like to know.

With reference to yourself, you may make your own choice either to remain there whilst I am in Sind or come here as soon as you are free, in which case you will be with me for about a week. This letter will be in your hands before the 20th instant. Supposing that you are relieved on the 20th and you leave immediately, you will be able to reach Sabarmati on the 21st and from the 21st to the 30th you will be in the Ashram during my presence. 31st does not count because I have to leave Sabarmati on the morning.

Of course, I shall give you a room all to yourself. I quite recognize that you will want a separate room for yourself.

Yours sincerely

BAPU

SJT. N. R. MALKANI
CENTRAL FLOOD RELIEF COMMITTEE, HYDERABAD

From a photostat: G.N. 891

17. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

CHI. MIRA,

I return the charts prepared by you. They are quite all right I have made two corrections which you will note. And I see no harm in the reference to swaraj. With more figures graphically given, the charts can be made to be more telling. I hope the figures about the daily income for various countries are accurate. In all your chart you will insist upon absolute accuracy and as few words as possible.

I don’t think that it is necessary to publish them in English also in Bihar. English may be necessary for some in the South, but never in the North. However, you will decide in consultation with the local people.

I sent you a wire in reply to yours though I had written to you already that I was not leaving till 31st instant and that the detailed programme would be sent to you later.

You should shake off the cold by vigorous walking. And Why need you wait for milk? Prepare hot water and drink it with or without lemon, and you will get temporary warmth. The rest you get by walking even if it be for 15 minutes.

1 The letter carries the date January 17, 1929. From the last paragraph, however, it is evident that it was concluded the following day.

2 Vide “Telegram to Mirabehn”, January 16, 1929.
This was dictated last night. Now I have your wire about your illness. Never mind. You will soon be well. I have wired full instructions yesterday.¹ You will have two cards weekly about my health and a wire if I am ill.

God be with you.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5333. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G. N. 9388

18. LETTER TO HAROLD F. BING

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 18, 1929

DEAR FRIEND,

I had your letter, but I am able to reach it only today. I see that the date you have given me for my message² to reach is the 15th instant, and I am dictating this on the 18th. I am therefore writing to express to you my regret that I was unable to send you the message.

Yours sincerely,

HAROLD F. BING ESQ.
ORGANIZING SECRETARY
THE BRITISH FEDERATION OF YOUTH
LONDON W.C. I.

From a photostat: S.N. 1⁹⁸⁸

19. LETTER TO RICHARD B. GREGG

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 18, 1929

I have been receiving your letters regularly. But I have not hitherto written to you as I was waiting for your reaching New York before I commenced writing. This is to tell you that the preparations are now being made to print your scientific handbook or whatever it should be called. I have not fixed upon the name by which it will be called. I am ashamed to confess to you that I have not yet finished reading the book. But the publication has been decided upon and as it has been decided upon, I am trying to finish reading it quickly.

¹ Vide “Telegram to Mirabehn”, January 17, 1929.
² For a special issue of Youth devoted to the subject of Indian Youth and Indian problems (S.N. 15085)

I am now again trying my milkless experiment, confining myself to almond milk, tomatoes, some other vegetable and bread that has become the principal diet. You will therefore send me all the latest information about diet.

Mirabehn is in Bihar organizing self-carding in the Bihar villages.

We have at the Mandir at the present moment many European guests. Two Danish sisters have been here for some days now and three friends came today, two men and one woman. Common kitchen is making steady progress.

Yours sincerely,

RICHARD B. GREGG, ESQ.
10 OLD ORCHARD ROAD
CHESTNUT HILL, MASS, U.S.A.

From a photostat: S.N. 15143

20. LETTER TO FRANCISCA AND FREDERIC STANDENAH

I have your letters and I know from your letters to others also how you feel the separation from the Ashram. I want you however to compose yourselves and go on steadily with your mission.

I am quite well even after the Calcutta strain and I am now going on with my experiment in milkless diet confining myself to almond milk, tomatoes, another vegetable and bread. Up to now there has been no difficulty.

Mirabehn is doing charkha work in Bihar. The others are getting on well. At present we have many European guests in the Ashram. I must not try to write more. I am afraid that, owing to the

1 In reply to a number of letters written by Mr. and Mrs. Standenath during their return journey to Europe new developments at the Congress, I may not be able to visit Europe this year. I shall know more definitely next week.

Yours sincerely,

SAVITRI

FREDERIC STANDEATH

From a photostat: S.N. 151

21. LETTER TO SHAUKAT ALI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 18, 1929

DEAR BROTHER,

I have your note. I await your promised letter. But I still more eagerly await your promised visits.

I have the invitation, but I am afraid I won’t be able to attend.

Mahadev is in Bardoli, helping Vallabhbhai about the Inquiry.\(^2\)

Yours sincerely

MAULANA SHAUKAT ALI

THE CENTRAL KHILAFAT COMMITTEE
THE SULTAN MANSION, DONGRI, BOMBAY

From a photostat: S. N. 15285

22. TELEGRAM TO MIRABEHN

January 19, 1929

MIRABAI

CARE KHADIBHANDAR

MUZAFFARPUR

YOUR WIRE. SUBJECT RAJENDRABABU’S ADVICE SUGGEST TRANSFER NEAREST WARM PLACE. LOVE.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 533. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G. N. 9389

\(^1\) Name given to Francisca by Gandhiji; Frederic Standenath was called Satyavan by him.

\(^2\) About the assessment of land revenue in the Bardoli taluk; vide “Evil Genius of Government”, 22-7-1928.
23. LETTER TO SHANKARAN

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 19, 1929

MY DEAR SHANKARAN,

I have your letter. I am forwarding it to Mathuradas. I want you to talk to him and you may go as soon as you are disengaged. On no account will you leave abruptly. Mathuradas will give you what you need. You ought not to have kept this thing from me for such a long time. I expect you to return as early as you can. And don’t spend more than is absolutely necessary.

Your sincerely,

SIT. SHANKARAN
EVERGREEN, MATHERAN

From a microfilm: S.N. 1985

24. LETTER TO DEWAN OF TRAVANCORE

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 19, 1929

DEAR FRIEND,

Correspondents from Travancore continue to write to me about the use by the so-called untouchables of roads surrounding the Suchindram temple. I was led to expect when I was in Travancore¹ that the roads would be thrown open to them within a short time. Considerable time has now elapsed and nothing apparently has been done. May I know whether there is any likelihood of these roads being thrown open to the so-called untouchables in the near future?

Yours sincerely,

THE DEWAN OF TRAVANCORE
TRIVANDRUM

From a microfilm: S.N. 15296

¹ In October, 1927
25. LETTER TO V. L. PHADKE

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
Saturday, January 19, 1929

Bhai Mama,

I got your letter and that of Maneklal Gandhi. I approve of Jaishukhlal Mehta’s name. We can add Lakshmidas’s. But it would be good if Jaishukhlal joins. I cannot think of any other name.

Blessings from

Bapu

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 3823

26. LETTER TO MATHURADAS TRIKUMJI

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 19, 1929

Chh. Mathuradas,

I enclose Shankaran’s letter. It does not appear that he has spoken to you. Can you spare him for a month or two? If you can spare him, and if you need a substitute, would you like someone of your choice to be sent from here, or would anyone I can send do? If Shankaran goes, give him the money he is asking for. I shall ask Revashankarbhai to reimburse the amount by draft.

Chhotalal has given me news about the health of all of you. My visit to Europe is likely to be put off even this year.

Blessings from

Bapu

From the Gujarati original: Pyarelal Papers. Nehru Memorial Museum and Library. Courtesy: Beladevi Nayyar and Dr. Sushila Nayyar

1 For Ghandiji’s reply to Shankaran, vide “Letter to Shankaran”, January 19, 1929.
2 Revashankar Jhaveri
3 For Ghandiji’s decision to postpone the European tour, vide “My Apologies”, 31-1-1929.
27. “PRAN JAAYI ARU VACHAN NA JAAYI”

Tulsidas has put this vow in Ramachandra’s mouth. Indian tradition abounds in examples where one’s pledge is held as dear as one’s life. I hope the students of Gujarat College will add another example by keeping their pledge. The conditions on which the Principal would permit them to study do not enhance his prestige nor do they ennoble the students if they agree to them. In this there is an attempt to get a confession from the students as if they had committed an error instead of the Principal admitting his own. The students deserve congratulations on not agreeing to such conditions. It was their dharma not to agree to conditions. They will be considered truly educated if they keep their pledge till the end. And they will be regarded as having made a great contribution towards taking the country forward. One need not doubt that such action by the students will have far-reaching consequences. The students’ victory does not consist in their returning to the college somehow, but in observing their pledge till their last breath. If they thus learn the first lesson of honouring their pledge, they will in future be able to serve the country well, because they will have greater self-confidence. Moreover, to one who has cultivated self-confidence, everything else in this world becomes easy.

[From Gujarati]
Navajivan, 20-1-1929

28. LETTER TO VASUMATI PANDIT

[January 20, 1929]

CHI. VASUMATI,

I got your letter. It is good that you left Wardha. You have not disobeyed. Come here whenever you feel like doing so. Keep yourself in good health and keep your mind free from worry. My programme of leaving for Sind on the 31st stands.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. 50. Courtesy: Vasumati Pandit

1 “One’s life one may give up but not one’s pledge.”
2 From the postmark
29. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

January 20, 1929

CHI. MIRA,

No news from you today by wire. These mishaps will happen. I wired you yesterday advising removal to a warmer place. I wired too to Rajendrababu suggesting that, if he thought it necessary, you should return to the Ashram for the time being. I know that you are quite safe. You won’t be nervous over the illness. It is a mild attack of dysentery. Milk and fruit juices is the thing. But if the doctor prohibits fruit juices, it does not matter for the time being. You must keep warm and have an abdominal bandage if necessary.

There is no wire today as it is Sunday I suppose. Tomorrow I expect a wire without fail.

Love.

BAPU

[PS]

I am well. No increase in weight. This week, a decrease of 1 lb. But it is nothing.

From the original: C.W. 5335. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9390

30. LETTER TO ANNE MARIE PETERSEN

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 20, 1929

MY DEAR MARIA,

I was delighted to receive your letter after such a long absence. It is not at all certain that I have launched on active politics. I do not know what part I have to play during the year. The next month will perhaps decide.

You are needlessly anxious about my dietetic experiment. Believe me that experiment too is under God’s guidance as I understand it.

You are quite right about the time-limit. Let us see what is in

1 Vide “Telegram to Mirabehn”, January 19, 1929.
2 This telegram is not traceable.
store for us at the end of the year.

I am sorry that Esther is not yet quite restored. I knew about the operation for her appendicitis. Menon was expected to do no less than what he has been doing. However, I am glad that he has come up to the expectation.

You have surmised well about the European visit. In 10 days I shall know definitely whether I am to go to Europe or not. But you are quite right. It would be only as a representative of free India that I should go to Europe. But here too God’s will be done.

The Danish sisters are here. They have been here for the last 4 or 5 days. They are passing a week here at the Ashram.

Yours sincerely,

MISS MARIE PETERSEN

NATIONAL CHRISTIAN GIRLS SCHOOL
PORTO NOVO (S. INDIA)

From a photostat: S.N, 151

31. LETTER TO P. C. GHOSH

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

January 20, 1929

DEAR PROFULLABABU,

I have your letter¹. I am sorry to know that you were ill. I am not yet sure what part I shall have to play during this year in connection with the Congress programme. I am supposed to advise the Working Committee in connection with the foreign cloth boycott and I am preparing a scheme². I am in correspondence with Pandit Motilalji. If I have to do anything, naturally I expect you to play your part in it. I know that you will realize the expectations I have of you.

Yours sincerely,

DR. PROFULLA GHOSH

ABHOY ASHRAM, COMILLA

From a photostat: S.N. 15283

¹ The addressee wanted to know the definite programme of work for 1929 and 1930 (S.N. 15282).
² Vide “Scheme for Boycott of Foreign Cloth through Khadi”, 2¹-1-1929.
32. LETTER TO DR. SATYAPAL

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

January 20, 1929

DEAR DR. SATYAPAL,

I have your letter. Do tell me all you want to.

I wish that I could tour in the Punjab. But my programme for the year is still very uncertain. I am in correspondence with Pandit Motilalji. I hope I shall be able to decide before the end of this month.

The first thing you should tackle is to put the Congress organization in order.

Yours sincerely,

DR. SATYAPAL

‘2 NISBET ROAD, LAHORE

From a microfilm: S.N. 15299

33. LETTER TO THE SECRETARY, ALL-INDIA SPINNERS’ ASSOCIATION

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

January 20, 1929

THE SECRETARY

A. I. S. A., AHMEDABAD

DEAR SIR,

With reference to your letter No. 1519, dated 18th January, you may have 30th September as the date up to which candidates for election should have paid up their subscriptions. And the candidate for election being a member only of one month’s duration, in my opinion, does not matter for the simple reason that one would expect the voters to make the best selection out of candidates nominated.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm: S.N. 15300
34. LETTER TO THE SECRETARY, ALL-INDIA SPINNERS’ ASSOCIATION

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
January 20, 1929

The Secretary
A. I. S. A., Ahmedabad

Dear Sir,

With reference to your letter No. 1517, dated 18th January, enclosing Satisbabu’s letter, I like Satisbabu’s suggestion. There are, however, practical difficulties in the way of holding an exhibition during the Congress Week. Unless the Congress wants such an exhibition, we may not set up an exhibition in the teeth of Congress opposition. What, however, we can do is to hold an independent all-India exhibition every year. And if we can get sufficient workers for the purpose, it can become a striking demonstration. It can draw large crowds and it can be a means of selling off all the surplus stock of khadi without any difficulty. It can become a dignified educational effort. Let Satisbabu consider this suggestion. I may however state that, so far as this year’s Congress is concerned, I am already in touch with the exhibition committee in the Punjab regarding the holding of the exhibition.

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm: S.N. 15301

35. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

January 21, 1929

Chi. Mira,

I have your cheering wire today. I hope now progress will be steady. You will not hesitate to return if it becomes necessary. At the same time I do not want you to give in unless the giving in is wisdom.

Mahadev has returned. He will have to go back in a few days. One is thankful for small mercies.

The loss of weight reported yesterday has no significance. Any variation in food tells. But there is no loss of vitality. Weight in this experiment need not be a factor.
Whenever you feel like taking a change in those parts, you could go to Shantiniketan. There are Ambalal’s sugar works near Sewan. Rajendrababu knows them. You will be quite welcome there. Anasuyabehn mentioned them on Saturday.

We had five Europeans staying on Saturday. Now we have two Danish ladies. Two more coming on Tuesday. Surendra is off to Dholka.

Did I tell you we had thieves here the other day. They took away pots from my bathroom.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5336. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G. N. 9391

36. LETTER TO SHANTIKUMAR MORARJI

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
[January 22, 1929]¹

CHI. SHANTIKUMAR,

I have your letter. There is no need to order from England the equipment for bee-keeping.

I got the books on chromopathy which you sent. They will serve my purpose. If I decide to go to Rangoon after the 15th February, will any of your ships be available? If I can reach Rangoon from Bombay in six days, it would do for me and I would like the voyage too. I will not take another ship if I can sail by yours. I see that your ships do not sail on fixed dates.

Grandmother must be well now. Tell her that I think of her often.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: C.W. “792. Courtesy: Shantikumar Morarji

¹ From the postmark
37. LETTER TO V. SURYANARYANAMURTI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

January 22, 1929

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. You may decline to make any statement if you wish to, but you may not tell an untruth.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. V. SURYANARAYANAMURTI
TEACHER, MRS. A. V. COLLEGE, VIZAGAPATAM

From a photostat: S.N. 1°880

38. LETTER TO C. RAJAGOPALACHARI

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

January 22, 1929

I have your letter. You will see from current Young India what I have done about the boycott of foreign cloth. You would do some such thing like that. I want you to throw yourself into that work.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. C. RAJAGOPALACHARI
GANDHI ASHRAM, TIRUCHENGODU, S. INDIA

From a photostat: S.N. 1°892

---

1 The addressee had written: “A certain student in the Medical College poisoned and killed his wife. He is under arrest now. . . . A letter . . . instigating him to murder his wife was brought to me by an aunt of the accused to read it to her. After hearing the contents in it, she destroyed the letter. The police got scent of the letter and examined me in the affair. I told them all that I had read in the letter. Many of the big men now, being interested in the accused, insist upon my not speaking the truth in the court. Kindly . . . bless me with your advice in this, my most trying affair . . .” (S.N. 1°879).
39. LETTER TO SATIS CHANDRA DAS GUPTA

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 22, 1929

DEAR SATISBABU,

I have your letter. The line at the end of your letter is alarming. I wish you, Hemprabhadevi and Tarini would heed Nature’s warning. It is false economy to wear yourselves out there. Do go out of Sodepur and give yourselves complete rest. Come here if you can be happy and if the climate will agree or go to Chandranagore. It is a great pity that you cannot exchange with Abhoy Ashram. Why not simply send Tarini there? of course, it is to be done naturally and spontaneously.

I shall await a sample flag from you, as also your opinion about Ram Binod’s case. I shall study the figures supplied by you for boarding.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: G.N. 1602

40. LETTER TO PRABHASHANKER PATTANI

SABARMATI,
January 22, 1929

SUNNA BHAISHRI,

It is from visitors that I get news about your health. I am writing this with a selfish motive. Bhai Balwantrai Mehta and others also say that the cultivators of Bhavnagar are poorer even than those in British India and in the other States. I have asked him to substantiate this statement. He wants your help for this and I think you can give it. If what he says is true, it should interest you also.

When you reply, please give me news about your health too. When are you likely to come here?

Vandemataram from

MOHANDAS

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5979

1 An active political and khaddar worker of Bihar. There were allegations against him about misappropriation of the Congress funds.
41. LETTER TO BEHRAMJI KHAMBHATTA

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 22, 1929

BHAISHRI KHAMBHATTA,

I have your letter. I received the book you sent. Since I have been constantly travelling, I seem to have sent no acknowledgement. As the book is in the Italian language, I cannot understand it. How can I, therefore, express my views? If you wish, I can send you a letter of acknowledgement in English for him.

Are you keeping well now?

Blessings to both from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 6590

42. LETTER TO ANNAYYA

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 23, 1929

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. The letter you mention cannot be managed through the Protector of Immigrants.1 If you can spend some money on lawyers’ fees, I can write to someone in Durban who might be able to do something. But if you have [any] friend or if you know any lawyer in Durban you should write to him directly.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. ANNAYYA
FREE INDIA NO. 39869
OVERSEAS LINE, KIRKEE

From a microfilm: S.N. 1877

1 The addressee, who owned a piece of land in Natal, had given a General Power of Attorney to Messrs Pather & Co., Durban, asking them to forward to him in India the proceeds, through the Protector of Indian Immigrants. But as they had done nothing in the matter the addressee wrote to Gandhiji seeking his help (S.N. 1876).
43. LETTER TO A. A. PAUL

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,

January 23, 1929

My dear Rajan¹.

I have your letter². I have the book³ also. I have not yet looked at it.

I must hasten to reply to your letter regarding the proposed visit to Europe. I must confess to you that Dr. Atkinson⁴ did not create much impression upon me and, in any case, I do not think that you need go to Europe and the good it may do is problematical. The harm that must result from the misconception that is bound to arise will be a certainty. I am therefore decidedly of opinion that, irrespective of the impression left upon mind by Dr. Atkinson’s visit, an impression that may be totally unjustified my opinion is that you should not go.

Yours sincerely,

A. A. Paul, Esq

‘Maitri’, Kilpauk, Madras

From a photostat: S.N. 1⁴⁸⁴

44. LETTER TO P. A. WADIA

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati

January 23, 1929

Dear Friend,

I have your letter⁵. Dr. Atkinson did not mention to me that I should join the Committee⁶. It was perhaps because I did not give him much encouragement. For I told him that I did not have much

¹ A. A. Paul, Honorary General Secretary of the Federation of International Fellowships, Madras
² Dated January 18, 1929. The addressee informed Gandhiji about his election as a member of the Executive Committee of the Universal Religions Peace Conference and wanted to know his impression of Dr. Atkinson. The letter also said that Prof. P. A. Wadia was elected Vice-President of the conference. Vide the following item.
³ Attitudes Towards Other Religions by Rev. Dr. D. J. Fleming
⁴ Of the Universal Religions Peace Conference
⁵ Dated January 21, 1928 (S.N. 1⁸⁸⁷)
⁶ Central Committee of the Universal Religions Peace Conference for India faith in conferences, [for] promoting real goodwill and brotherhood, something far more tangible than conferences was necessary. And I must say that, on the whole, Dr. Atkinson did not leave a good impression upon me.

Yours sincerely,

PROFESSOR P. A. WADIA
HORMUZD VILLA, MALABAR HILL, BOMBAY

From a photostat: S.N. 1’888

45. LETTER TO DR. INDLAL KAPUR
SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM,
SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, Sabarmati, Sabarmati, Sabarmati,
January 23, 1929
January 23, 1929
January 23, 1929

DEAR FRIEND,
I have your letter. You were quite-correct in your surmise that the statements\(^1\) issued by Dr. Ansari, Pandit Malaviyaji and Sjt. Ghanshyamdas Birla had my approval. I think that subscriptions given for Lalaji Memorial cannot be better used than by being handed over to his Society. Political Sufferers’ Fund and the like should stand on their own merits.

Yours sincerely,

DR. INDLAL KAPUR
WARBURTON, PUNJAB

From a photostat: S.N. 1’890

46. LETTER TO DR. PARASHURAM
SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, Sabarmati, Sabarmati, Sabarmati,
Sabarmati, Sabarmati,
January 23, 1929
January 23, 1929
January 23, 1929

DEAR DR. PARASHURAM,
I am glad you have given me a full letter. I note your restrictions which I shall bear in mind. I shall make careful use of your important letter. It is a terrible business.

Yours sincerely,

DR. PARASHURAM
PUNJAB PROVINCIAL CONGRESS COMMITTEE, LAHORE

From a photostat: S.N. 1’894

\(^1\) Vide “Appeal for Lajpat Rai Memorial Fund”, November 26, 1928 and “Lalaji Memorial”, January 10, 1929.
47. LETTER TO GANGADHARRAO B. DESHPANDE

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 23, 1929

MY DEAR GANGADHARRAO,

Hereewith two letters with copies of my reply. I wish you would not be guided by Rajaji in the matter of this tour, but take the responsibility upon your own shoulders and decide. If I am not taken at express speed, I should be able to go through the programme without the slightest difficulty as I imagine. But I do not know whether I can spare the time. You must therefore definitely say whether you want me and if so, for how long and when. Together with all other circumstances, I shall then be able to decide. I warn you against putting off the Karnatak tour indefinitely.

I still await your letter regarding Pundalik.¹ It is not right to keep me without information about his doings and his victory or otherwise.

How are you keeping in health?

Yours sincerely,

Enclosures 3

From a photostat: S.N. 1⁸95

48. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

Saturday, [March 23, 1929]¹

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

I have all your letters. I would learn about Andhra Desh on reaching Calcutta. We will reach there tomorrow.

Kusumbehn must have arrived. I am not writing to her separately.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi : S. N. 32⁸7

¹ Vide “Letter to Gangadharrao Deshpande”, January 9, 1929.

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
49. WHY NOT K. S. ASSOCIATION?

If we have graduates’ associations, civil service associations and the like, why not Khadi Service Association or Khadi Sevak Sangha? This service, if it is to succeed, should certainly be the most numerous in the world if not even the most important. It is true that it will never bring the same remuneration as the other services which are only so-called but which are based more or less, perhaps more rather than less, upon exploitation. Khadi Service is a purely philanthropic agency and the servants are merely maintained on the principle that a labourer is worthy of his hire. But in Khadi Service there is a higher satisfaction than that of pecuniary reward. The satisfaction lies in the knowledge that the servant ministers to the needs of the neediest, the most helpless and the most numerous class of men in the country.

As this truth is being realized, khadi servants begin also to plan ways and means of consolidating their trust. Hence at the usual weekly meeting of the Khadi Service candidates who are undergoing training at the Udyoga Mandir, late Satyagraha Ashram, the question of forming a Khadi Service Association was seriously discussed and it was resolved to form such an association. To that end I invite all those who have received training at any of the institutions recognized by the All-India Spinners’ Association to send to the Secretary, Udyoga Mandir, the following particulars: name in full, present address, age, whether married or single, children if any, where trained for Khadi Service, previous qualifications, present occupation, wages and such other information as may be useful for the proposed Association. An early opportunity will be taken to form a provisional body and frame a provisional constitution. The object of this body should be:

1. to promote contact and co-operation among the men and women belonging to the Service,
2. to encourage them to make researches in khadi work in all its branches,
3. to help the needy members,
4. to attract new members,
5. to hold periodical conferences with a view to compare notes and exchange experiences,
6. to devise methods of making khadi more popular from the Service standpoint.
These are only suggestions thrown out at random. The first step will be to publish a directory of names and addresses of such servants. The number of persons trained at the Ashram to date already comes up to 45. There is, no doubt, a large number trained by the other khadi organizations. It will not be therefore an unpretentious directory by any means. In sending names care, I hope, will be taken to send only those who are or were doing khadi work and have received adequate training and who have sought this service as volunteers, i.e., from the strictly philanthropic motive. The desire of the promoters of the idea is to make the proposed association an efficient organization of true servants. Writers will send their suggestions as to the condition of membership, objects, etc.

Young India, 24-1-1929

50. DUTY OF RESISTANCE

The strike of nearly seven hundred students of the Gujarat College which has now gone on for over 20 days is no longer a matter merely of local importance. A labour strike is bad enough, a students’ strike is worse whether it is justly declared or unjustly. It is worse because of the consequences it entails in the end and because of the status of the parties. Unlike labourers, students are educated and can have no material interest to serve by means of strikes, and unlike employers, heads of educational institutions have no interest in conflict with that of the students. Students moreover are supposed to be embodiments of discipline. A strike of students therefore produces far-reaching consequences and can only be justified in extraordinary circumstances.

But though occasions for students’ strikes in well-ordered schools and colleges must be rare, it is not impossible to conceive such as to warrant strikes on their part. Thus for instance if a principal running counter to public opinion refuses to recognize a day of universal rejoicing as a holiday which both parents and their school or college-going children may desire, students will be justified in declaring a strike for that day. Such occasions will be more frequent in India as the students grow more self-conscious and become more alive to a sense of their responsibility to the nation.

In the case of the Gujarat college I cannot help saying that so far as I have been able to judge, the students have had ample reason for the strike. It is quite wrong to say, as has been said in some quarters, that the strike has been engineered by a few mischievous students. It is impossible for a handful of mischief-makers to hold together seven hundred boys for over a fortnight. As it is, there are responsible citizens advising and guiding the students. Chief among these is Sjt. Mavlankar, a pleader of experience and known for his wisdom and moderation. He has been in touch with the Principal and is firmly of opinion that the students are absolutely in the right.

The facts can be briefly told. The students absented themselves from college with the rest of the boys all over India on the Simon boycott day. The absence was no doubt unauthorized. The students were technically in the wrong. They should have at least asked for formal permission before they absented themselves. But boys are the same all the world over. One might as well hope to restrain the winds as hope to curb the roused enthusiasm of students. Theirs was at best a youthful indiscretion. This was condoned by the Principal after a great deal of negotiation, the boys being permitted optionally to appear for their terminal examination on a fee of Rs. 3 each, it being understood that the majority would appear and that those who did not would not be in any way punished. The Principal, however, it is alleged, broke his pledge and put up notice making it compulsory for the boys to appear for the terminal examination upon payment of Rs. 3 each. This naturally incensed the boys. They felt: ‘if the salt loseth its savour, wherewith shall it be salted?, They therefore struck work. The rest is simple. The strike continues and friends and critics alike certify to the great self-restraint and correct conduct of the boys. In my opinion, students of a college are in duty bound to resist such breach of honour by their Principal as is alleged against the Principal of the Gujarat College. It is impossible to tender to a teacher that unreserved respect to which he is entitled by reason of his honourable calling when he is found to be guilty of breach of honour.

If the students are resolute there can be but one end to the strike, viz., withdrawal of the offending notice and an absolute promise of immunity from any punishment to the students. Indeed the most proper thing would be for the Government to appoint another Principal for the College.

There is in the Government Colleges too much of espionage and persecution of boys holding pronounced political views or taking any part in political gatherings not liked by the Government. It is high time that this unwarranted interference was stopped. In a country groaning as India is under foreign rule, it is impossible to prevent students from taking part in movements for national freedom. All that can be done is to regulate their enthusiasm so as not to interfere with their studies. They may not become partisans taking sides with warring parties. But they have a right to be left free to hold and actively to advocate what political opinion they choose. The function of educational institutions is to impart education to the boys and girls who choose to join them and therethrough to help to mould their character, never to interfere with their political or other non-moral activities outside the school room.

The question therefore raised by the strike of the Ahmedabad students is of first-rate importance and they deserve the sympathy and support of other scholastic institutions and the public in general. Parents are as much concerned with the strike as school going boys and girls. For the Ahmedabad students have, I understand, acted throughout with the approval of their parents or guardians.

Young India, 2-1-1929

51. NOTES

FOREIGN CLOTH AND KHADI

The Working Committee of the Congress has passed a resolution asking me to frame a scheme for carrying out the Congress programme regarding boycott of foreign cloth through khadi. The scheme as submitted by me to the Secretary is published elsewhere in this issue. I commend it to the careful attention of the reader and invite him to offer suggestions for its improvement. In my opinion boycott of foreign cloth is a comparatively easy thing to accomplish, if Congressmen would concentrate upon the effort with a will. In order to enable them to do so a living faith in khadi is an absolute necessity. If Congressmen still need conversion the scheme cannot be carried out. I warned the Congress delegates as earnestly as I could against passing the resolution if they had no faith in the programme. Notwithstanding the warning they passed the resolution without dissent and without protest. That presupposes faith in khadi. If they have it, the scheme is capable of being worked. Let it be thoroughly understood that it is not possible to accomplish the boycott through any other means. Let no one worry about the place of the indigenous mill-cloth in the boycott. This cloth has taken care of itself and will take care of itself. What we need to do is to clothe with khadi those whom we reach. If we speak with two voices, we shall fail in carrying out the boycott. We shall succeed only in inflating the prices of indigenous mill-cloth and in tempting unscrupulous mill-owners to commit frauds upon a gullible public.

1 Vide the following item.

Finally I draw the attention of all concerned to my note at the foot of the scheme. No progress in the prosecution of the Congress programme is possible unless the Congress house is put in order and becomes the living structure it was in 1929.

Young India, 2-1-1929

52. SCHEME FOR BOYCOTT OF FOREIGN CLOTH THROUGH KHADI

Congress organizations should call for volunteers to go from door to door in every town and village having a Congress Committee and collect foreign cloth in the possession of the householders and deliver or receive orders for khadi required by such householders.

2. All khadi should bear the stamp of the All-India Spinners’ Association and prices should be distinctly marked on them.

3. Voluntary preachers should be called for to popularize the use of khadi and to advocate complete boycott of foreign cloth.

NOTE. Volunteers and preachers should know genuine from spurious khadi.

4. Foreign cloth collected should be publicly burnt wherever possible.

5. Foreign cloth dealers should be individually visited with a view to enlisting their help and inducing them to stop further purchase of foreign cloth and to cancel all cancellable orders.

6. Picketing foreign cloth shops may be undertaken wherever possible and where there is no danger of violence being committed by Congress pickets, the latter being reliable and seasoned volunteers.

7. All units should from day to day report to the Central Office details of work done in terms of the foregoing and the latter should circulate to the Press for publication a weekly digest of day-to-day progress.
8. Help and co-operation of all political and other organizations should be solicited in the campaign.

9. Help of patriotic ladies should be enlisted to prosecute the boycott campaign.

10. The All-India Spinners’ Association should be asked to furnish the Central Office with a list of places where genuine khadi is available and to open stores where there is a demand for khadi.

11. A small committee called Foreign Cloth Boycott Committee should be formed and entrusted with an initial fund with power to collect more funds. The Committee should be under obligation to publish duly audited statements of income and expenditure every quarter.

12. The Committee proposed in paragraph 11 should publish and distribute broadcast leaflets showing the necessity and possibility of boycott giving full details as to the method of achieving it by individuals.

13. Resolutions should be moved in the provincial legislatures as well as the central calling upon their respective Governments to make all their cloth purchases in khadi irrespective of its so-called costliness. Resolutions should also be moved demanding a prohibitive duty on imports of foreign cloth.

NOTE. The foregoing scheme is based upon the assumption that the Congress Committees all over India will be immediately reorganized and that there will be handsome response to the call for membership and that there will be full co-operation on the part of all Congress Committees in the prosecution of the campaign of boycott of foreign cloth through khadi. It is suggested that if these conditions are fulfilled, it is possible to achieve this boycott during the year, at any rate to the extent of making a visible impression upon the imports of foreign cloth.

_Young India, 24-1-1929_
MY DEAR SHANTIKUMAR,

I have your letter. I am here till Wednesday. I could therefore see Krishnamurti either on Tuesday or on Wednesday. Thursday morning I leave for Karachi.

Have you any sailing during February from Calcutta or Madras, and if you have, how long does the voyage take from Madras to Rangoon or Calcutta to Rangoon? It may be difficult for me to spare 10 days though I should love it. Please tell me also what ports does your steamer touch between Bombay and Rangoon and how long does it stay at those ports.

You ask me also whether you should enquire about B.I. sailings. Do you mean from Bombay to Rangoon? And if there are sailings from Bombay to Rangoon, is there a regular service and, if there is, what is the duration and what is the fare from Bombay to Rangoon?

Blessings from

BAPU

[PS.]

I am glad to know that Father's operation has been successful.¹

From the original: C. W. 793. Courtesy: Shantikumar Morarji

54. LETTER TO G. V. GURJALE

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I would ask you to correspond with Sjt. C. Rajagopalachariar, (Gandhi Ashram, Tiruchengodu) to whom I have forwarded your letter.

Yours sincerely,

M. K. GANDHI

From a photostat: G.N. 1380

¹ The source has “make”.
² These lines are in Gujarati.
³ Later known as Bhikshu Nirmalanand
55. LETTER TO THE SECRETARY, ALL-INDIA SPINNERS’ ASSOCIATION

THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 2\textsuperscript{nd}, 1929

THE SECRETARY
A. I. S. A., AHMEDABAD
DEAR SIR,

With reference to your enquiry, it is difficult to say now whether I should be able to give a few days for Utkal tour when I go to Andhra. Where would they want me to go and how much time will they want?

Yours sincerely,

From a microfilm: S.N. 1329\textsuperscript{f}

56. LETTER TO S. K. SARMA

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 2\textsuperscript{nd}, 1929

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter and your book Towards Swaraj. If you are a reader of Young India, you must have noticed that Young India is not a reviewing paper in any sense of the term, and I have so little time to read the books that friends kindly send me.

Yours sincerely,

S.JT. S. K. SARMA
PLEADER, TEPPAKULAM, TRICHINOPOLY

From a microfilm: S.N. 1'897
57. LETTER TO KARNAD SADASHIVA RAO

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM,
Sabarmati, Sabarmati, Sabarmati,
January 2, 1929
January 2, 1929
January 2, 1929

MY DEAR SADASHIVA RAO,

Here is the report about the closing of Nileshwar centre. Sjt. Chhotelal himself agrees that it should be closed.

Yours sincerely,

E. NCL.

ENCL. 1 in 5 sheets
SJT. KARNAD SADASHIVA RAO
KODAILBAI, MANGALORE

From a microfilm: S.N. 1898

58. LETTER TO VISHNU CHANDER AGARWAL

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM,
Sabarmati, Sabarmati, Sabarmati,
January 2, 1929
January 2, 1929
January 2, 1929

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter which I am able to reach only now.

With reference to dramas, it is difficult to give a dogmatic opinion. All I can say is that under proper supervision, it can be made a vehicle for uplifting student life.

With reference to ahimsa, I can only suggest that the very points you have raised have been exhaustively dealt with in the pages of Young India.

Yours sincerely,

SJT. VISHNU CHANDER AGARWAL
HEAD MASTER, PUBLIC HIGH SCHOOL
P.O. SHAMLI
DISTRICT MUZAFFARNAGAR, U. P.

From a microfilm: S.N. 1899
59. LETTER TO N. V. THADANI
SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 2\textsuperscript{nd}, 1929

MY DEAR THADANI,

I have your letter\textsuperscript{1}. I shall certainly go through the preface as soon as I can and let you have my opinion.

You are quite right in surmising that in Hyderabad I shall have no time left to have a quiet chat with you, though of course I shall have a look at you and it might be possible to steal a few moments.

Yes, I was wondering when you were coming. But now I know the reason and I excuse you. The forgiveness will be doubly earned if your preface promises a discovery after my heart.

Yours sincerely,

S\textsuperscript{JR}. N. V. T\textsuperscript{HADANI}
H\textit{IRABAD}, H\textit{YDERABAD (S\textsc{ind})}

From a photostat: S.N. 1\textsuperscript{8}886

60. LETTER TO K. S. KARANTH
SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 2\textsuperscript{nd}, 1929

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. The first case is not a question of \textit{shuddhi} but of reclamation and, if the so-called converts have no sense of Christianity in them, they should be treated as Hindus.

As to your second question: If the girls look grown up, are intelligent enough to understand what they are doing and they cannot be kept long enough without danger of their being given to a life of shame, they should be married.

\textsuperscript{1} Dated January 21, 1929; it read: “. . . I spoke to you some years ago at Delhi, after your great fast of twenty-one days [in 192\textsuperscript{4}], about my idea of the \textit{Mahabharata}, and you had said that you would give anything to be sure that it was a philosophical work and not a mere story . . . I am sending you a copy of the Preface, which will indicate the idea of the work; and if you feel interested I should feel happy in sending you a copy of the manuscript . . .” (S.N. 1\textsuperscript{8}885).
About the child widow: If a husband can be found who would marry her but who would postpone co-habitation till the girl reaches the proper age, I should see no harm.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. K. S. KRANTH
VASANTA OFFICE, MANGALORE

From a photostat: S.N. 1'896

61. LETTER TO MOTILAL NEHRU

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 2nd, 1929

DEAR MOTILALJI,

I have your telegram. After having written to you, I had almost reconciled myself to abandoning the proposed European tour and, now that you have reconsidered your decision, there is a disinclination on my part to undertake the tour. I feel that if we are to do anything next year,¹ as we ought to, I may not absent myself from India during the year, but should do whatever I can to assist to make the way clear for next year’s battle. Having moved the constructive programme resolution², I almost feel [it] like running away if there is any work that I can do in the country. If I leave at the end of April, I do not expect to return before the middle of October. If then, that is, if I am to go through the long programme sketched by me in my previous letter¹, more especially if I am to throw in America. The more, therefore, I contemplate the European tour, the more disinclined I feel like facing it this year. Next year, of course, may be out of question. I am, therefore, just now on the horns of a dilemma.

I do not want to tax you any further in the matter and I know that I must now decide for myself. But if anything occurs to you, you will please let me know. I am now conferring with Vallabhbhai, Jamnalalji, Rajagopalachari and others and hope to decide finally in a few days.

¹ The Congress was likely to organize a campaign of non-violent non-co-operation after December 31, 1929. Vide pp. 306-10.
² Vide “Speech on Constructive Programme, Calcutta Congress”, January 1, 1929.
A Danish friend, not knowing the inner working of the Congress, grows enthusiastic over our resolutions and says, “It is no use my going to Europe as a representative from an India in bondage, I should go next year as a representative of an India become free.” I wish that we could all share this belief and make an adequate effort to realize it.

Are you doing anything about the Hindu-Muslim question?
I am sending Jawahar a copy of my tour programme in Sind for which I leave on the 31st instant.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 1530

62. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 24, 1929

MY DEAR JAWAHAR,

You will see my letter to Father about the European visit. I would like you to let me have your own opinion on it. It will help me in coming to a decision.

I have your telegram about Kripalani. Jamnalalji and Shankerlal, more especially Jamnalalji, have set their hearts upon Kripalani. They have no faith in Sitla Sahai being able to do much. They think that he has not been able to show himself to advantage during the three years he has been at work in U.P. I am therefore going to confer with Sitla Sahai and see what he has to say. But before I decide anything finally, I would like you to let me have your own view about Sitla Sahai.

Here is a copy of my Sind programme.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

Encl. 1

1 Anne Marie Petersen; vide “Letter to Anne Marie Petersen”, January 20, 1929.

2 Vide the following item.

4 Secretary of the U.P. branch of All-India Spinners’ Association
[PS.]

After writing this, your letter was received. I have now talked to Sitla Sahai. It is on the whole better for him to resign. As to his future programme I am going to confer with him tonight.

BAPU

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1929. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library; also S.N. 15305

63. LETTER TO DUNCAN GREENLEES

THE ASHRAM SABARMATI,
January 25, 1929

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. I am not sure where I should be in June; but if you do not mind coming to the Ashram in my absence, you will be welcome and we would try to give you some English classes. You may not know that whilst the climate here is not very trying in June, it is not so cool as Madanapalle. You may not know too that life at the Ashram is very simple I enclose herewith a copy of the rules which all those who live at the Ashram, even for a brief period, are expected to follow during their stay.

Yours sincerely,

DUNCAN GREENLEES, ESQ.
THEOSOPHICAL HIGH SCHOOL
MADANAPALLE, S. INDIA

From a microfilm: S.N. 1993

64. LETTER TO ZAHID ALI

THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 25, 1929

MY DEAR ZAHID ALI,

I have your letter. Please tell me how many charkhas you have, whether they are in perfect working order, whether they have spindles. And give me also the size of the wheels and the kind of spindle-

1 Dated January 22, 1929; the addressee had asked Gandhiji whether there was any possibility of his being able to work as an English teacher in Sabarmati after June (S.N. 1992). holders and a detailed specification. Tell me also the price required and I shall try to do what I can.

Yours sincerely,

ZAHID ALI, ESQ.
The Chhotani Saw Mills
Sewri Bunder, Bombay

From a microfilm: S.N. 1’995

65. LETTER TO HORACE G. ALEXANDER

Satyagraha Ashram, Sabarmati,
January 25, 1929

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter which I have kept by me for a long long time.
You certainly did not write your first letter in any wrong spirit.
I have now got a parcel of Quaker books which I suppose I owe to you.
I have not had the proposal referred to by you about the Young India literature.

Yours sincerely,

HORACE G. ALEXANDER
BIRMINGHAM, ENGLAND

From a photostat: S.N. 150

1 This letter, dated August 15, 1928, read: “. . . I hope the length of my first letter was not a burden to you. . . . From your reply I am a little afraid that my letter was written in a wrong spirit. . . . Mr. Andrews had been telling us that your publications, issued by Ganesan, have at present no central sale depot in England. . . . if you approve, the Friends’ ‘Book Centre (Friends are Quakers, as I think you know) might become such a depot. . . . I am sure we Quakers have much to learn from you. . . . Our new ‘Friends House’, including the Book Centre, is only three minutes’ walk from the Indian Students’ Hostel. . . .”
66. LETTER TO A. W. COHENTMAES

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM SABARMATI,
January 25, 1929

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter.¹ I should not have the slightest hesitation in acknowledging a mistake if I felt I have made one. I cannot recall the whole of the conversation I had with you. But from your description of it, I do gather that I was very brief, which I am inclined to become if I am to cope with all the work before me including the visitors, many of whom seem to think that they can study Indian problems by a flying visit. I remember to have told you that you could not study Indian problems or, for that matter, any problem in such a fashion. I would ask you therefore instead of expecting an acknowledgement of a mistake on my part to extend your pity towards one who does not know from day to day how he can accommodate visitors who come to him even without appointment and put serious questions.

Yours sincerely,

A. W. COHENTMAES
THE HAGUE, 1‘0 ANTONIE DAVCKSTRASS, HOLLAND

From a photostat: S.N. 15075

67. LETTER TO MRS. I. J. PITT

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 25, 1929

DEAR FRIEND,

I thank you for your letter and the printed leaflet² on mercy to animals. Therein you have gone much further than I should care to go.

So far as pariah dogs are concerned, I am quite at one with you. But I do not see I would be right in taming dogs and destroying those

¹ Complaining that in the interview given to him Gandhiji did not receive him well and concluding “I did not meet the Mahatma I expected.”
² Wherein it was argued that either dogs should be kept and fed properly or the unwanted young ones be destroyed at birth young ones which I do not want. That would be selfish. My definition of ahimsa admits of no selfishness. A selfish destruction may be dignified on other grounds but not on the ground of ahimsa.

I hope both you and Mr. Pitt are doing well.

Yours sincerely,

MRS. I. J. PITT
PENUKONDA, ANANTAPUR DISTRICT

From a microfilm: S.N. 15078

68. LETTER TO A. A. SHAIKH

THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 25, 1929

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. We have so many demands for free copies of Young India that it is difficult to cope with all the applications. You as an Association should surely be able to subscribe to the paper if you appreciate it and you should know that Young India is not run for profits. And if there are and when profits are made, they are all used not for anybody’s personal gain but for corporate public work.

Yours sincerely,

A. A. SHAIKH, ESQ.
BERLIN CHARLO
MOMMENSTRASSE 1, GERMANY

From a photostat: S.N. 15124

69. LETTER TO KENNETH SAUNDERS

SAMYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 25, 1929

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter. It is a difficult job for me to promise to read any book. But if you care to send me your book1, I shall only hope to get a few moments to go through it.

1 Honorary General Secretary, Indian Association of Central Europe
2 On life in India. The addressee had asked Gandhiji if he would like to write a prefatory statement to it (S.N. 15125).
I am sending by registered book post two volumes of Young India and a copy of my autobiography.

Yours sincerely,

KENNETH SAUNDERS, ESQ.
HIGH ASCRIS
BERKELEY, CALIFORNIA

From a photostat: S.N. 15126

---

70. LETTER TO ESTHER MENON

THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 25, 1929

I have your letters, including the one you gave to the Danish sisters. They were here for over a week. They left only two days ago and they told me they enjoyed their stay at the Ashram. They had their meals at the common board at which over 175 men, women and children sit.

Maria has written me that you are still weak and have not completely recovered after your operation, but that you and Menon are due to return at the end of the year. I shall be glad to see you both and the children face to face.

Nothing is yet decided about my European visit this year. But I am hesitating especially in view of the Congress resolution. Maria says I can best go to Europe as a messenger from a free India. My reason inclines towards that view, but I am waiting on God for light.

Yours sincerely,

MRS. ESTHER MENON
TAARCAK, DENMARK

From a photostat: S.N. 15130
71. LETTER TO W. LUTOSTAWSKI

THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

January 25, 1929

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter¹. Though I know Mr. Dhangopal Mukerjee’s name by correspondence, I have never had the pleasure of meeting him personally whether in India or elsewhere. Nor do I pass my time in contemplation as distinguished from active work. You have rightly guessed that my active work is my contemplation. I thank you for with it. I am not ultra strong nor am I ultra weak.

Do please send your book on Pre-existence and Reincarnation.

Current Thought ceased publication many months ago.

Yours sincerely,

PROF. W. LUTOSTAWSKI

JAGIELLONSKA, 7M. 2
WILNO, POLAND

From a photostat: S.N. 15132

¹ In which, inter alia, the addressee had written: “Now I am reading in a French monthly an article by Dhangopal Mukerjee ‘A Visit to Gandhi’. . . . He pretends that you have taken a bath with him in the Ganges near Benares and that you said good actions are useless. He pretends you live in contemplation while I know from your own writings you are leading an active life. . . .” (S.N. 15131).
72. LETTER TO MURIEL LESTER

THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 25, 1929

MY DEAR MURIEL,

I have your letters. I see your work is daily prospering. May it be a complete blessing to all who come under its influence.

Nothing is yet decided about my European visit this year. You shall know about the decision in due course.

Yours sincerely,

MURIEL LESTER
BOW, E. 3, LONDON

From a photostat: S.N. 15147

73. LETTER TO C. F. ANDREWS

THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 25, 1929

I have your communications regularly. I am between the devil and the deep sea. Whether to undertake the European tour or not is the question. My own unaided reason tells me: ‘Don’t go.’ I do not know what my heart tells. Miss Petersen writes to me in effect, hearing conflicting news about the intended tour, “What can be the use of your going to Europe as a messenger from India in bondage? You will deliver your message far more truly after India has become free”, as she believes, it will be next year, because of the Congress resolution. My fate however will have been decided before this letter is in your hands. I am simply sharing with you the conflicting emotions that are arising in my breast. I incline to Miss Petersen’s view.

I am glad you are at least able to see what I had already seen about the Macmillan’s business.¹ However you are in America, you will see them face to face and I shall be satisfied with what you arrange and only let the Company, and all who may care to, understand that I have no desire to make any profits even for my public or philanthropic activities. They are all more than financed by God through other channels. Only I did not want to become pedantic and tell Mr. Holmes that I do not want to have any dealings with publishers on a financial basis.

C. F. ANDREWS, ESQ.
1172 PARK AVENUE, NEW YORK CITY

From a photostat: S.N. 15148

74. LETTER TO J. D. JENKINS

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 25, 1929

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter¹. I have not seen the full text of Pandit Motilal Nehru’s reply in the Assembly and I think that the inquiry should be addressed to the Pandit himself and not to me. But I can give you my own opinion upon the question for whatever it may be worth. In any constitution that I could endorse, I should certainly be against the confiscation of the legitimate rights of any community. I would however put stress upon the word ‘legitimate’. There are many privileges enjoyed by those who belong to the ruling race which privileges have not been legitimately earned. If therefore I had my way, I should most decidedly examine every such privilege and those which are discovered not to have been legitimately obtained should be taken away.

Yours sincerely,

J. D. JENKINS, ESQ.
BOMBAY

From a photostat: S.N. 15149

¹ Dated January 21, 1929; it read: “... Pandit Nehru was supporting a measure in the Assembly which advocates, in the opinion of many, the unqualified confiscation of British property. . . .”
75. LETTER TO JAIRAMDAS DOULATRAM

THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 25, 1929

MY DEAR JAIRAMDAS,

I have your letter and the programme. I shall hope to carry out the programme. Manilal left this morning.

Kikibehn' has written to me asking me to stay with her in Karachi. I should be delighted to do so. But I am telling her that I shall have to go by what the Reception Committee arranges. You will now do whatever is necessary from the tour point of view. Kripalani is insisting that I should stay with Kikibehn and he will be writing to you also. If it is a matter of no consequence where I stay, of course I should love to stay with her. Gangabehn also wrote to me and I referred her to the Reception Committee.

Yours sincerely,

From a photostat: S.N. 15311

76. LETTER TO JUGALKISHORE

THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 25, 1929

MY DEAR JUGALKISHORE,

I have your letter. I feel guilty about not having said anything yet in Young India about the work you are doing. I am now transferring your letter to the Young India file and hope to deal with it in the next issue. If on reading your letter carefully I find anything to suggest you may expect another letter from me.

Kripalani is here just now.

Yours sincerely,

SIT. JUGALKISHORE
PRINCIPAL
PREM MAHAVIDYALAYA
BRINDABAN

From a microfilm: S.N. 15313

1 Sister of J. B. Kripalani
2 Vide “Notes”, 31-1-1929, sub-topic “Village Workers’ Training Class”.

VOL.44:16 JANUARY, 1929 - 3 FEBRUARY, 1929 53
77. LETTER TO KONDA VENKATAPPAYYA

THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 26, 1929

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter¹. It is somewhat surprising. I thought you wanted me not before the beginning of April. All my plans are therefore being made so as to come to Andhra in April. March 30th and 31st I am bound to give to Kathiawar. My present plan therefore is to go to Burma about the end of February, return to Kathiawar and then come to Andhra in the beginning of April. I hope to give one month to Andhra. Isn’t that enough for you? Isn’t that what was agreed upon?

Yours sincerely,

SIT. KONDA VENKATAPPAYYA

GUNTUR

From a photostat: S.N. 15308

78. LETTER TO JAWAHARLAL NEHRU

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 26, 1929

MY DEAR JAWAHAR,

I have had a chat with Sitla Sahai, and both of us have come to the conclusion that, all things considered, it is best for him to resign and that he should, for the time being, be in the Ashram with his wife. During that time he will master all the technique of khadi and take part in all such other activities of the Ashram as may be necessary. I want him also during this time of preparation and probation² to understand my method of work.

I agree with you that he is a valuable worker and therefore should be as efficient as possible. Immediately after my departure from Sind, he will come to Allahabad to wind up his home and to prepare the papers for handing over charge and the balance-sheet to date so that whenever Kripalani is ready to go there he can take charge.

¹ In which the addressee had pleaded: “Anyhow, please do not postpone your visit to Andhra. Your March is ours already and we want half of your April too” (S.N. 15307).

² For the campaign of non-violent non-co-operation envisaged by the Calcutta Congress; vide “Speech on Resolution on Nehru Report, Calcutta Congress—III”, December 31, 1928.

I wish you will not listen to doctors when they object to the Indian sun. You have heard of Dr. Muthu. Revashankerbhai’s son Dhiru was suffering from tuberculosis of the bone. After having tried sanatorium cure in Solon and all the doctors he could get hold of in Bombay, he sent for Dr. Muthu, paid him a fee of thousand rupees per day. Dr. Muthu had no better advice to offer than to prescribe open air, light food and sun treatment. The affected bone was discharging some time one pound of pus per day. The affected bone had to be exposed to the sun every morning for a few hours and he had to lie in the open air the whole day long. He was not even sent to a sanatorium. He is now completely cured. European sun may be better, but the Indian rival is by no means to be despised. Doctors here suggest the morning sun. They say that ultra-violet rays are best taken between 8 and 10 o’clock and in summer between 7 and 8. But it really depends upon the patient’s condition.

Yours sincerely,
BAPU

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1929. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library; also S.N. 15314

79. LETTER TO DEVCHAND PAREKH

THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 26, 1929

BHAI DEVCHANDBHAI,

Chi. Champa will reach there safely. She gets nervous too soon. Saroj of course did have a cough. These days many in Ahmedabad have it. Saroj’s cough got bad in Ahmedabad but you must have seen that she is happy. Nevertheless, I do not mind your having called away Champa and her leaving. Let her return only when she wishes. She need not stay in the Udyoga Mandir against her wishes.

The purpose of this letter, however, is quite different. Write to Sardar Vallabhbhai from time to time. Send him copies of the speeches of the previous presidents. Tell him on what topics you want him to speak. Everyone should send him an invitation. You had forgotten to observe all this courtesy towards Thakkarbapa.

Vandemataram from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 5694

80. MY NOTES

STUDENTS AND THE STRIKE

As this strike drags on, the students are being tested. The fact that they have so far remained resolute does credit to them and takes the country forward. Now I feel inclined to suggest to them that they should do some work. Why should they not clean the lanes of Ahmedabad? They should have confidence that ultimately they will attend the same college honourably. The time is now approaching when the Principal himself will have to quit. In order to acquire this much strength, it is necessary for the students to engage themselves in social service. There is a Congress resolution that the boycott of foreign cloth should be effected through khadi. Will they not give up foreign cloth? Will they not collect it from others? Will they not wear khadi? Will they not sell khadi from door to door? Students should give thought to these questions.

SILENCE DURING SPINNING

One who does sacrificial spinning writes to say: ¹

I was unaware that silence could mean what this writer has interpreted it to mean. In recommending silence I implied that no one should gossip with those sitting around. I certainly did not imply that he who maintained silence should not sing a bhajan about Rama in his heart. Moreover, he who cannot thus repeat the name of Rama in his heart should certainly do so with his tongue. Since the example of a water-lift has been cited, I consider it necessary to make it clear that the bhajan which the farmer sings will have a good effect on a cultured listener, but we cannot assume that the same is always true of the peasant. His lips sing the bhajan by force of habit but his mind

¹ The letter is not translated here. The correspondent, mentioning the bhajans or devotional songs that a farmer used to sing while lifting water from the well, had asked Gandhiji why he had advised maintenance of silence during spinning and not singing bhajans or repeating Ramanama.

56

THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
may well be wandering elsewhere at that time. Hence we cannot acquit ourselves by singing bhajans aloud while spinning. It is only when the tongue is always in tune with the heart that the singing of a bhajan may be regarded as worth while. If we do not keep this in mind, we should assume with the poet that “all means become so many obstacles”.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 27-1-1929

81. HOW TO INCREASE THE SALE OF KHADI

In the Khadi Patrika Shri Vithaldas Jerajani has made an important suggestion about increasing the sale of khadi, from which I give the following extracts:

1. This certainly is one way. I feel like suggesting another which springs from it. Any merchant in a village who wishes to invest even a small sum should buy khadi worth Rs. 10 or more on condition that if he could not sell it within a month he would return it at his own cost to the khadi bhandar. Even those who are not merchants but are desirous of doing this business can do so. In this there is no risk involved for either party and khadi can be propagated easily. A number of good and bad things have thus been propagated in the world. Within no time tea has been made popular all over India by taking it within easy reach of every home. But this is propaganda for a vice. This has resulted in nothing but a loss for the people. In khadi propaganda, the propagandist, the buyer and the thing — all three stand to gain and yet we do not find many persons willing to carry on this propaganda. In these circumstances, if there are a number of people willing to invest a capital of Rs. 10 and forgo interest on it, even then we should feel contented. But I must admit that there is a problem involved in this suggestion. If one man offers a hundred rupees and suggests that khadi worth ten rupees be propagated in ten villages, we can hardly afford to take those hundred rupees and our object too will not be served. My suggestion in effect emphasizes the necessity of having village workers only and the condition is that every one of them should invest a capital of ten rupees. This is because only if such persons are available, can they carry on propaganda for khadi in

---

1 These are not translated here. The correspondent had listed various facilities offered to traders by the Khadi Bhandar, Bombay.
villages. That is to say, my suggestion envisages the search not for those who can donate a hundred rupees or more, but for khadi-lovers of one or more villages who will invest ten rupees of their own or those secured from their friends by virtue of their status and keep doing propaganda for khadi with that amount. Let Shri Vithaldas and all other lovers of khadi make this search.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 27-1-1929

82. LETTER TO PERIN CAPTAIN

SATYAGRAHA ASHRAM, SABARMATI,

January 27, 1929

I have your letter. I am sorry about Jamnabehn. Are you sending the parcel directly to Karachi or are you sending it to me? If it reaches me at Karachi the same time that I reach there, it would be of course ideal. I reach there on the 1st February, leaving Ahmedabad on the morning of the 31st instant.

About the message to be sent to Queen Souriya, what can poor Ba really write out. She doesn’t follow the controversy. Whatever, therefore, she sends would be not hers but somebody else’s. In all such matters, therefore, I should leave her severely alone. Nor am I sure that the step you propose is without question the proper step to take.

If I pass through Bombay on any account, I should love to give you the time you need.

MRS. PERIN CAPTAIN

BOMBAY

From a photostat: S.N. 15000
83. LETTER TO NARANDAS GANDHI

CHI. NARANDAS.

I have been wanting to write this to you, but could find time to do so only today. I had long discussions with Chhaganlal. I see that just now you two will not be able to work in harmony. I, therefore, wish to act upon your first suggestion. That is, you should formally send in your resignation as Director of the Spinners’ Association. Chhaganlal himself will attend to the work being done in the Ashram on behalf of the Association, and you should take up spinning, carding, etc., till Chhaganlal entrusts to you some other work. I want you to continue in the Mandir. It is necessary that the suspicion you harbour in your mind should be removed, or that I should believe about Chhaganlal what you do. It is a painful thing to me that he cannot work in harmony with you. You, too, are at fault in this, though unknowingly. Your letters to him are not such as will quench a fire. Apart from the fact that Chhaganlal cannot work in harmony with you, I see nothing but virtues in him, and their number increase, day by day. Write to me and explain where I am making a mistake in this; or tell me when you are here. I shall be here up to 31st.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna Patro–9: Shri Narandas Gandhine–Part I, p. 49

84. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

CHI. MIRA.

I have your letters. Gurudev’s letter is very good and so is the other. Your visit was altogether well timed and well done.

1 From the reference to the lack of understanding between the addressee and Chhaganlal Joshi; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, on or before January 16, 1929. Gandhiji left on the Sind tour on February 2, 1929. The preceding Sunday was January 27.

2 From the reference to Narandas in the last paragraph; vide the preceding item.
You have dropped weight enormously. But you should have no difficulty in regaining it after full recovery and judicious dieting.

I have gained over _ lb. without any fruit. I must now see what I can do during the Sind tour.

You will go slow in everything you do and keep your extremities and abdominal regions warm. Insist on sitting on a warm surface and therefore never move about without a thick asan.1

Narandas has been withdrawn from the khadi depot. He will now be reserved for women’s classes. Though this is an accident, it is a blessing in disguise. Krishnadas Gandhi left yesterday for Kashmir to help Harjivan2 and to recuperate.

Love.

BAPU

From the original: C.W. 5338. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9393

85. LETTER TO JAIRAMDAS DOULATRAM

January 28, 1929

MY DEAR JAIRAMDAS,

Malkani advises me to abide by your programme and no other.
He evidently does not know me still. But I knew you better before I began to know him as well. Hence his mistake is pardoned. Tell him.
Ba, Pyarelal and Subbiah accompany me as far as I know at present.
Narayandas3 has a programme for Karachi which needs overhauling.
Govindanand4 wants me to visit Kotri. I am referring him to you. Kik-ibehn wants me to stay with her in Karachi. You will do what you can.

BAPU

SIT. JAIRAMDAS DOULATRAM
MARKET ROAD, HYDERABAD, SIND

From the original: C.W. 9252. Courtesy: Jairamdas Doulatram

---

1 Mat or carpet to sit on
2 Harjivan Kotak who had established a branch of A.I.S.A. in Kashmir
3 Narayandas Bechar, labour leader in Karachi
4 Congress leader of Karachi
86. LETTER TO KISHORELAL G. MASHRUWALA

Silence Day [January 28, 1929]

CHI. KISHORELAL,

You have fallen ill properly after you went from here. Does this illness not teach you that you must not be rushing about?

Karsandas has written a very long letter which he has asked me to pass on to you read. Read it and think carefully about it and then discuss it with him.

How is Gomati?

The work here is going on well. I have withdrawn Narandas from the khadi work. I think he will stay on here. Mahadev and Narahari have gone to Bardoli. I am going to Sind on the 31st. I am giving my dates overleaf.

Blessings from

BAPU

31st January 7.28 a.m. leave Ahmedabad
1st February 3.30 p.m. reach Karachi
2nd February Karachi
3, 4 & 5 February Hyderabad
6th February Shikarpur
7th February Jacobabad
8th February Karkana
9th February Sukkur
10th February To Naushera and back to Hyderabad
11th February Hyderabad

1 The Monday before January 31, 1929, the first date in Gandhiji’s itinerary, fell on this date.
2 For Gandhiji’s letter to Karsandas Chitalia, vide the following item.
3 Addressee’s wife
4 On account of a lack of understanding between Narandas Gandhi and Chhaganlal Joshi; vide “Letter to Narandas Gandhi”, January 27, 1929.
5 Narahari D. Parikh
6 To collect funds for the Lala Lajpat Rai Memorial
7 Gandhiji, however, left Ahmedabad only on February 2, 1929, owing to the severe cold in Karachi.
12th February Mirpurkhas
13th February 8.00 p.m. reach Ahmedabad

From the Gujarati original: C.W. 10712. Courtesy: Gomatibehn Mashruwala

87. LETTER TO KARSANDAS CHITALIA

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 28, 1929

BHAISHRI KARSANDAS,

You have been writing regularly. I am not worrying as Kusumbehn writes to you.

I had a long and pleasant conversation with Sulochanabehn. She thinks, and I agree with her, that she is not yet mentally ready to join the Sangh. In order to know where she stand, I feel she needs to join some organization and gain experience as an ordinary worker. She agrees with this and for the present is thinking of doing something of that kind. Her idea of the Sangh was quite different. She thought that a Sangh of the women office-bearers of the existing organizations should be formed and they should meet for an exchange of views. I tried to explain to her that this would serve no useful purpose and I think she was convinced. I have formed a good impression of her.

It is difficult to say anything about . . . behn. This, however, is certain that . . . behn and Sulochanaben cannot carry on together. Their temperaments are absolutely incompatible. Sulochanabehn will find her own way . . . It is doubtful if . . . behn to render much service independently. She keeps good enough health . . . . But I cannot Judge how she will fare in future.

The idea of a separate Sangh will have to be dropped for the present. I do not think we have enough means even for constructing a building. Sulochanabehn has decided to do some introspection for the present and estimate her strength . . . .behn is incapable of coming to a decision. I think there has been too much hurry in asking for the security. I also think that you have been a little hasty in your judgment of . . . behn. Think over this carefully, discuss it with Kishorelal and write to me. Let us not do anything which may seem ridiculous. The fruits of patience are sweet. We can take the plunge even if one women comes forward to dedicate herself. But I see no such woman at present.

1 Omissions in the letter are as in the source.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/45

88. LETTER TO KHUSHALCHAND GANDHI

January 28, 1929

MU. BHAI,

I got your letter. I have not received Chhaganlal’s. However, I am sending a wire today. There is no cause for worry. It is just like a home there, too. They will leave nothing undone to meet all his needs. Even so, if he does not feel well there, I am sending him a wire asking him to come away.

Krishnadas left for Kashmir yesterday. He is sure to get well there. Chi. Keshu is fine. I am starting on a tour of Sind on the 31st and expect to return on the 13th.

Respectful prostration by Mohanadas

MU. BHAJ KHUSHAL JIVAN GANDHI
OPPOSITE MIDDLE SCHOOL
NEW SUBURB
RAJKOT

From the Gujarati original: S.N. 33102

89. LETTER TO MANILAL AND SUSHILA GANDHI

January 29, 1929

CHI. MANILAL AND SUSHILA,

I received together all the letters you had sent by three different mails. I have already sent another name for Dhairyabala. Today I am writing this letter in great hurry. Rasik has caught typhoid in Delhi. Kanti has been down with fever for the past three days. Such are the ups and downs over here.

I cannot advise the closing of Indian Opinion. A journal that has survived till this day cannot be allowed to close down. I would not mind if both of you had to spend your whole life there. That is how great tasks are accomplished. That is what single-minded devotion means. Yes, if you can make some other arrangement for running the paper and leave the place, I would not mind. Nor would I see anything wrong if Sushila came over here once and stayed for some time. I would be happy to see you three living happily.

I was sorry to learn about Charlie¹. That is the way the world goes.

Blessings from
BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 4750

90. SPEECH TO GUJARAT COLLEGE STUDENTS,
AHMEDABAD

January 30, 1929

I have to add one telegram to the many telegraphic messages that you are receiving from various places. This one has been sent by the women of Bharat Bhushan Malaviyaji’s Benares Hindu University. I have forgotten to bring that telegram here but its purpose is to congratulate the women of Gujarat College on their struggle.

You have received messages of gratitude today from all quarters but much remains to be done by you to deserve these congratulations. In a way it is risky to call me to such a meeting. If I have been invited here at the instance of the students, they have run a risk; and if Dr. Hariprasad has himself called me here then he has taken a still greater risk.

I am not in a position to give you encouragement. I believe that the time is now over when encouragement was needed in order to get work out of those who were ready to sacrifice themselves for the yajna of swaraj. The time has now come, when each one has to rely on his own strength. The struggle that you are carrying on today with dignity and the movement which is being carried on all over India will be futile if you fall back now, and you will harm the entire community of youth in India.

Do not remain indifferent towards the activities of your opponents; do not disregard them. He who disregards the ability of his enemies or opponents does in fact disregard his own self.

¹ An African employee at the Phoenix Press who had died
Your struggle—your strike—is not against your Principal. It is directed against the system under which the present Government and this college function. It is not that what your Principal has done is something new. Similar restrictions had been imposed in other colleges also, many had to suffer for disregarding them, many had to pay a fine and also to resort to flattery. You have been saved from this unhappy predicament.

You are a part of the nation and so you have felt that if you go to the college in spite of the betrayal, you will not uphold the nation’s self-respect. This will certainly bring in welcome results. If an honorable settlement can be arrived at, do strive for it, and if at the same time you act politely there need be no doubt about your success. Your victory lies in your defeat. If you have to stay out of college for a year it does not imply your defeat. It is when through a feeling of helplessness you forget your pledge, pay a fine, resort to flattery and go to the college, that you will have been defeated; I have come to give you this warning.

I can quite realize that you will feel unhappy when you have to lose a year or a term. Those who think that they have lost a year or a term do not realize the value of the strike. You had not calculated all this from the beginning but now you have realized that great results can come out of this small struggle. The longer you stay out (of college), and if you are also polite, the more your strength and that of the entire country will grow. The strength and vigour of the students all over India will increase.

I am not exaggerating when I say that you are inaugurating a new era. But this would be true only if you keep your resolve until the end. Some members of your committee had met me; I had told them to remain free from anxiety. You do not even need messages of encouragement. You have to cultivate your collective strength. It would be better if instead of returning to college you take up some other activity.

Your tactics as outlaws will bring credit to you only when you carry out successfully the task that you have taken upon yourselves and also give every moment of your life to it. Do credit to your activity as outlaws. These many messages of congratulations sent to you, what do they indicate? Those who have sent these messages say that a certain type of strength is now needed in India which they themselves lack, but which can be obtained from you. You can fulfil this desire of theirs and this strength only when you can maintain the solidity of your organization.

Previously, I had given you some instructions about this and I remind you of them again. If you are prepared to make a sacrifice for securing swaraj, or for the sake of the country’s honour, it is your dharma to give your full support to the completion of the programme of the Congress. It is the easiest, the simplest and the most readily comprehensible. Perhaps it does not interest you and you feel that it is an outdated thing but much can be derived from such activities and they have a great value. If that programme does not appeal to you, draw up another more to your liking.

If you always have a longing to hear speeches, when assembling on the sands of the river, you will be making a big mistake and remember that you will be tired of it in the end. You may like to hear the lectures in the colleges and to get medals and add the B.A. degree to your name, but Acharya Kripalani is not going to give you any such thing here.

I can say with certainty if you wish to bring glory to this effort, take up some constructive work. By doing so, you will set an example to other students. Khadi is the first thing I shall talk about. You can render much service by wearing and selling it. Until settlement is reached, you can carry on that work and collect foreign cloth from house to house. And if you wish to go a step further, bring it here and make a bonfire of it. The burning of foreign cloth will bring much credit to you. You will see an article about the ruin that we bring upon India by using foreign cloth. There must be at least some of it left with you. When you take up this work, the Government will also be convinced that students have now begun to work.

Among Tolstoy’s stories, there is one in which Satan climbs on the top of a house to give a speech and, falling down, becomes unconscious. When he collapses, people say he has toppled down.

Even if you tumble down people will say that you have achieved something. The nation will certainly admit that students have at any rate done something. You can take a vow to clean up the streets of Ahmedabad or do prohibition work. You can undertake many such tasks.
Do bear it in mind that a settlement which is not unconditional is worthless even if it fetches us crores of rupees.

[From Gujarati]

Prajabandhu, 3-2-1929

91. TELEGRAM TO NARAYANDAS

[On or after January 30, 1929]

NARAYANDAS ANANDJI
NANAWARA
KARACHI

YOUR TELEGRAM DISCONCERTING. POSTPONING VISIT. THOUGH PERSONALLY DO NOT MIND COLD CONSULT JAIRAMDAS INFORM WHEN TO START.

GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 15315

92. TELEGRAM TO JAIRAMDAS DOULATRAM

[On or after January 30, 1929]

JAIRAMDAS DOULATRAM
MARKET ROAD
HYDERABAD, (SIND)

HAVING RECEIVED PEREMPTORY WIRE FROM NARAYANDAS POSTPONING DEPARTURE PENDING YOUR INSTRUCTIONS. READY START FRIDAY OR SATURDAY IF DESIRED. WIRE.

GANDHI

From a photostat: S.N. 15315

93. A SOUTH AFRICAN TRIBUTE

I have hitherto resisted the publication of the many tributes to the Rt. Hon. Sastri’s work in South Africa that I have found in the

1 In reply to his telegram dated January 30, 1929, which read: “Extremely cold Quetta winds blowing. Feel your travelling Sind inadvisable now. Pray postpone week . . .”

2 Vide the preceding item.
cuttings friends in South Africa have sent me. But now that his return to the Motherland is imminent, I cannot resist the temptation to quote in full the following ungrudging tribute from Professor Bell of Cape Town. His official work, great as it has been, has been outweighed by his unofficial contribution. His transparent sincerity and his passionate love of his country made him give unstintingly the whole of his matchless gifts to the service of the cause that took him to South Africa. The result is a changed atmosphere in that subcontinent and a smoother passage for his successor. Let me hope that the great service rendered by the distinguished patriot to the country will be crowned by a rousing reception on his landing not for his sake but for ours.

Young India, 31-1-1929

94. MY APOLOGIES

Circumstances permitting, I had fully intended to undertake my long-talked-of European tour early this year. But after the most careful consideration and consultation with friends I have come to the conclusion that the circumstances compel me to give up the tour for this year at any rate. I dare not think of the next. A dear Danish friend writes to me saying I could usefully go to Europe only as a representative of free India. I feel the truth of the remark. But that is by the way.

Pandit Motilalji, to whom I had mentioned the matter in Calcutta, whilst he at first thought I should not go, has telegraphed withdrawing his objection, pressing me to fulfil the ‘elaborate European programme’ of which I had given him a rough idea. But now that I have freedom of action from him, my courage fails me. I have no voice from within prompting me to go. On the contrary, having put the constructive resolution before the Congress and having received universal support, I feel that I would be guilty of desertion if I now went away to Europe. It may be that those who voted for the resolution never meant to carry it out. It may be that I shall have to do nothing during the year in respect of the programme. But I feel that it is not for me to reason thus. I must not lose faith in the workers. I must, like the immortal Barkis, be ever ‘willing’. The voice within tells me that I must not only hold myself in readiness to do what comes my way, but I must even think out and suggest means of working out what to me is a great programme. Above all I must prepare myself for the next year’s struggle, whatever shape it may take.

1 Not reproduced here

Though one year’s limit was not of my seeking, though I considered it to be too short a notice for the nation and for the British people, I could not make it a point of principle on which to break. No notice is too short for a vindication of one’s birthright. When therefore I accepted the change from two years to one, I was quite serious. For me then I have burnt my boats. What was said by way of humour to a newspaper correspondent was also seriously meant by me. If the Nehru Report is not accepted by or on behalf of the British people before the end of the year, after midnight on December 31st next, it will cease to have any meaning for me, I must declare myself an Independencewallah. But if I mean this seriously, I may not leave India for the best part of this year of probation and preparation. On the contrary, I must strain every nerve to carry out the preparatory programme.

The Satyagraha Ashram, now Udyoga Mandir, too, which rightly or wrongly I claim to be my best creation, demands just now my close attention, if it is to serve the purpose for which it has been created. And what message may I deliver to the West whilst it has yet been hardly delivered in India? Barring those who out of their partiality for me would have me in Europe and America at any cost, the peoples of the West would be justified in saying ‘Physician, heal thyself’. I frankly confess that when I first tempted myself seriously to entertain a European invitation apart from my keen desire to see M. Romain Rolland face to face, I had no idea of seeking help for India in her fight for freedom, but I had a desire to deliver the message of non-violence. Not that I do not need all the help I can get from outside for my country, but I do not believe in a begging expedition for that purpose. That aid will come when we deserve it and then it will come without the asking. I therefore flattered myself with the belief that if I went to the West I should be able to interpret true non-violence to her by word of mouth. But the more I ponder over the thing, the more unworthy I appear to myself to be. I need greater preparation and greater self-purification to make me a worthy vehicle for the transmission of the unbroken message of what appears to me to be the only way of reaching truth which is God. For the time being therefore the friends in the West would pardon me for my inability to visit them personally. The wish is there, capacity is wanting. Let them pray with me that I may have the clearest possible light. Meanwhile let these columns be a living bond between them and me.¹

But with the postponement of my European visit my eyes turn to Gujarat. The workers of Gujarat can, if they will, get a great deal done by Gujarat which has contributed its full share since the era of non-co-operation. I still stand by what I said in 1921. Even if a single taluk of Gujarat becomes totally ready and is prepared to make sacrifices, swaraj can be won through them in a trice. It is to be seen what role Gujarat plays.

Young India, 31-1-1929 and Navajivan, 3-2-1929

95. NOT THAT WAY

I publish below a precious letter² from a Secretary of a provincial Congress Committee. It shows vividly what happened at the last Congress. Not one province, but many did what has been described in the communication. Surely it must be clear as daylight to everybody that the coming of swaraj will be indefinitely postponed if we poison the very source of our strength. And if in an institution where there is no money and less fame, we engage in a scramble for election and manipulate voting lists, what shall we do when a huge machinery with all its terrible temptations comes into our hands? I know the answer that can be given to this objection. If it satisfied patriots, I should be sorry.

Young India, 31-1-1929

¹ What follows is a translation of the last paragraph of a Gujarati article “European Visit Postponed”, appearing in Navajivan, 3-2-1929.
² Not reproduced here. It described in detail the irregularities in the registration of the delegates to the Calcutta Congress Session.
96. HINDI IN THE SOUTH

Sjt. Jamnalalji’s tour in the South on behalf of Hindi should result in a double response in men and women desirous of learning Hindi and in contributions for conducting the Hindi Prachar office. Accounts received from Madras show that Sjt. Jamnalalji’s earnestness is producing the desired effect. So long as the leaders in the South refuse to learn Hindi, it must remain almost cut off from the rest of India. Let it be clearly understood that Hindi is not to supplant the indigenous languages but it is to be the medium of inter-provincial intercourse and the official language of all all-India organizations. Needless to say that Hindi includes its Urdu form.

Young India, 31-1-1929

97. NOTES

STUDENTS’ STRIKE¹

The strike of the students of the Gujarat College, Ahmedabad, continues with unabated vigour. The students are showing determination, calmness and solidarity that are worthy of all praise. They are beginning only now to feel their strength. And I venture to think that they will feel it still more if they do constructive work. It is my conviction that our schools and colleges, instead of making us manly, make us obsequious, timid, indecisive and ballastless. Man-lin-ess consists not in bluff, bravado or lordliness. It consists in daring to do the right and facing consequences, whether it is in matters social, political or other. It consists in deeds not in words. The students have now before them probably a long time of waiting. They must not be disheartened if events shape themselves so. It will then be up to the public to intervene. It will be up to the student world all over India to vindicate the right which is entirely on the side of the students. Those who would study the question in all its fulness can secure from Sjt. Mavlankar copies of all the relevant papers. The fight of the Ahmedabad students is a fight not for their own personal rights, it is a fight for the honour of students in general and therefore in a sense for national honour. Students who have been fighting so pluckily as these are doing deserve the fullest public support.

¹ Vide also “Speech to Gujarat College Students, Ahmedabad”, January 30, 1929.

And this the students will surely get if they will engage in doing national activity. They will lose nothing by doing national work. They need not confine themselves to the Congress programme, if it does not commend itself to them. The chief thing is to demonstrate their capacity for holding together and doing independent solid work. The charge is often brought against us that we are good only at oratorical displays and fruitless demonstrations, but fail when we are called upon to do work that requires cohesion, co-operation, grit and unflinching determination. The students have a splendid opportunity of falsifying the charge. Will they rise to the occasion?

They may not lose faith on any account whatsoever. The College is the Nation’s property. If we were not demoralized, a foreign Government should never be able to hold our property or make it practically criminal for students to take part in the nation’s battle for freedom, which it should be the duty and privilege of students to lead.

LAPSE OF MEMORY

Govindbabu of Champapurhat, Utkal, tells me that in “The Story of My Experiments with Truth”, I have erroneously mentioned two professional spinners of Bombay as having taught spinning to Shrimati Gangabehn, Avantikabai, and Ramibai and that it was he whom I had deputed to teach these sisters. I am thankful for having had the error pointed out to me. Now that I have taxed my memory, I do remember that I asked Govindbabu to teach many in Bombay who wanted to learn spinning. I have no doubt that in the “Story” there are several such omissions. Only the “Story” has been written not to issue certificates to deserving workers but to relate incidents illustrative of the working of the law of Truth. Those innumerable workers who have helped me in my pursuit must find in service its own reward. And Govindbabu has had ample reward in that from an indifferent spinning teacher he has developed into the founder and manager of an Ashram in Utkal which is supported almost wholly from donations given to him by Gujarati patrons. He will be more than compensated.

1. This was published in Navajivan, 27-1-1929 under the sub-title “An Omission”.
2. Vide An Autobiography, Pt. V, Ch. XL.
for his services, if he makes of the Ashram an efficient institution forming a nucleus for village reconstruction. He has set up an ambitious programme for himself. Khadi, medical aid, national education, service of ‘untouchables’ are a big morsel for anybody. But faith can overcome mountains. It is well with Govindbabu if he has faith and if he can show himself deserving of the help he is receiving.

VILLAGE WORKERS’ TRAINING CLASS

Acharya Jugal Kishore of Prem Mahavidyalaya, Brindavan, sends me an ambitious and interesting scheme for the training of village workers through that institution.¹ The scheme was inaugurated last December. He now writes:

The village Workers’ Training Class has already begun to function with five students on the roll and two more students agreeing to join it in about a week’s time. Besides attending lectures on economics and citizenship which for the time being are given by me, they are attending to spinning and carding under Bharatbhai’s instruction. We have been able to make arrangements locally with the Municipal Doctor to give them lectures and exercises on first aid and sanitation, hygiene and physiology. Besides this, they go to villages round about at least once a week, collecting statistics of the conditions in those villages. We are thinking of starting a small centre in one or two villages when we are able to find a suitable field for it. I am hoping that other students of this institution will also be aroused to take greater interest in village work. We have already a Hindustani Seva Dal here and hope to make it a more active and useful body than it has been so far.

The fewness of candidates need not worry the reader. The restrictions put upon admissions naturally keep back many from joining. And it is well that it is so in the beginning. For only those are admitted who among other things pledge themselves to devote at least 10 years of their life to village work after completing the course of two years. Needy candidates receive a stipend of from Rs. 15 to Rs. 20 per month. After completion of the course, they are to receive according to their proved needs from Rs. 30 to Rs. 75 per month. I commend the scheme to the attention of all who are desirous of promoting village reconstruction. They can get a copy of the scheme on application to the Secretary of the Institution. The Acharya invites the co-operation of individuals and kindred bodies, ¹ Vide “letter to Jugal Kishore”, January 25, 1929.

(a) by awarding stipends,
(b) by arranging to enable the candidates under training to receive the practical training under the organizations for village uplift,
(c) by engaging the services of those who will have completed their course of training here,
(d) by donations and presents of useful books for the use of the students of this class,
(e) by their suggestions and advice, and
(f) by periodical lectures on the subjects of village problems.

I congratulate Acharya Jugal Kishore on his courage in having inaugurated a scheme that can, if well worked, yield mighty results.

Young India, 31-1-1929

98. MESSAGE TO “MAJUR SANDESH”, AHMEDABAD

[January 31, 1929]

The labourers should fully try for their rights, but in that they must observe courtesy and peace. The labourers have a right to go on strike if the arbitrators do not give their award or if the owners do not go to the arbitrators or if the owners do not act according to the decisions of the arbitrators. They must not lose patience under any circumstances after going on strike. They must not intimidate those who do not join the strike. So far as the strike in the Gujarat Ginning Mill is concerned, they have to do as they are directed by Shrimati Anasuyabehn, Mr. Shankerlal Banker and the labour union secretaries.

The Hindu, 1-2-1929

1 Organ of the Majur Mahajan, Ahmedabad
2 Released by the Free Press of India from Ahmedabad on this date
99. LETTER TO HARIBHAU UPADHYAYA

SABARMATI,
January 31, 1929

Bhai Haribhau,

I have your letter. I do not mind your not being present at the prayers. But your unhappiness at not being able to come pleases me. Once we realize the significance of prayer, it becomes more essential for us than food and water.

Blessings from

Bapu

From a copy of the Gujarati: C.W. 6064. Courtesy: Haribhau Upadhyaya

100. LETTER TO GOPALDAS K. DESAI

January 31, 1929

Bhaishri Gopaldas 1.

I have your letter. I would have written to you directly if I had received definite information. I had definite information first from Raojibhai 2 and I sent a message to him. Before that somebody—I do not remember who—did tell me that Bhaktibehn 3 was going to Africa. Nor did I know whether both of you were going, or why. What could I therefore write? However, it is very good that you have abandoned the idea. It is best to avail ourselves of whatever help we can get through local influence. If difficulties have to faced in obtaining such help it will be our penance. It purifies our mind and helps us to serve the people in the right manner. When people appreciate out service they readily offer monetary help and then if similar help flows in from other sources it does so on its own. I am not pained at the volunteers having left because they were displeased by your not going out to beg.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary. S.N. 32577/11

1 Durbar Gopaldas, ex-ruler of Dhasa in Kathiawar; vide also “My Notes”, 19-2-1922, sub-topic “Satyagraha by Dasa Durbar”.
2 Raojibhai Patel
3 Addressee’s wife
101. LETTER TO MAHADEV DESAI

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
January 31, 1929

CHI. MAHADEV,

Herewith Motilalji’s telegram expressing his joy.¹ It shows that the decision not to go [to Europe] was correct. Motilalji’s permission to me to go was only to keep my way open. But what is our duty now? There is of course the task of preparing the Ashram. We are daily making progress in our ideas about this, and I see that in order to attain our objection through non-violence we have got to put Ashram forward as a mean. But my purpose in writing this is to suggest to you to consider with Vallabhbhai what Gujarat, and Bardoli, can do.

From a copy of the Gujarati: Kusumbehn Desai’s Diary, S.N. 32577/4

102. LETTER TO K. T. PAUL

THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
February 1, 1929

DEAR FRIEND,

I have your letter². You need not apologize. I know how helpless a busy man often becomes as to his movements.

I am leaving for Sind tomorrow and I shall be back on the 15th February. I shall be at the Ashram at least up to the 23rd or 24th instant.

Yours sincerely,

K. T. PAUL, ESQ.
MAITLAND HOUSE, DELHI

From a photostat: S.N. 15003

¹ Vide also “Letter to Motilal Nehru”, February 1, 1929.
² Dated January 29, 1929. The addressee had expressed his inability to go over to Sabarmati before the end of the month.
MY DEAR JAWAHAR,

You should carefully read the Punjab letter that I have reproduced in Young India¹ about what was done in Calcutta. Probably you knew everything of what is stated in the letter. I wish that you will make it your business first to put the Congress Committees in order and then organize the work in connection with the constructive programme. Unless by some unforeseen circumstances there is an honourable settlement with Great Britain, there will be practically no other party save the party of independence in the country. But the cry will be ineffective if we cannot put up a proper fight. If that fight is to be put up through the Congress, then the Congress must be a living thing. And if it is to be a non-violent fight then the present constructive programme ought to be worked now for all it is worth. Apart from the fact, therefore, that you, as is your wont, having taken up the secretaryship, would work your office whole-heartedly, I would like you on the strength of merits also to give your undivided attention to the Congress programme. I cannot help feeling that we can do much with the boycott of foreign cloth through khadi and, if there are enough workers, also about picketing liquor shops. And if these things are to be done, I think that it is necessary for you to travel in all the provinces and first put the machinery in order.

They stopped me from leaving for Sind yesterday owing to the terrible cold winds that had suddenly overtaken Sind.² It was foolish of them to have stopped me, but I was helpless. I am now leaving tomorrow. You will therefore post-date the programme by two days.

Sitla Sahai is leaving tomorrow to prepare balance-sheets, etc. I expect him back by the time I return from Sind.

Now that the European visit is dropped, you will be free to take me to the U.P. Andhra and Burma which must precede will prevent ² Vide “Telegram to Narayandas”, on or after January 30, 1929.

me from going there before the last week of April.
    I hope Kamala is better.

Yours sincerely,

BAPU

PANDIT JAWAHARLAL NEHRU
11 CLIVE ROAD, NEW DELHI

Gandhi-Nehru Papers, 1929. Courtesy: Nehru Memorial Museum and Library; also S.N. 15318

104. LETTER TO K. SANTANAM

THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
February 1, 1929

MY DEAR SANTANAM,

I have your letter. You have to be firm and strong if you want the Punjab to come out well during the Congress. Unless the Congress is put on a proper footing, you should refuse to give any help and even make a public statement. As it is I am sending your letter to Motilalji and asking him to do whatever is possible.¹

If I were you, I should not bring in Lalaji Memorial in discussing the subject. Let the Memorial stand on its own footing. You should go on with collections irrespective of whether the Congress is to be held in Lahore or not. Those who want to revere Lalaji’s memory will pay in any case. What I am anxious about is that the Congress in the Punjab should be a genuine register of representatives.

You will see the letter I have published in Young India. Of course, you will easily guess that it is from the Punjab. What a heart-breaking revelation. It is this root evil which I am likely to deal with.

I am leaving for Sind tomorrow and shall return on the 15th instant. The enclosed is my programme.

How is Krishna doing?

Yours sincerely,

PANDIT K. SANTANAM
LAHORE

From a photostat: S.N. 15319

¹ Vide the following item.
DEAR MOTILALJI,

I have your telegram. You will have read what I have said in Young India about the European visit.¹ I therefore need not enter into the reasoning that decided the matter for me. When I came to the final conclusion, it was like a weight lifted off my back. And your telegram confirms the correctness of my decision.

I sent the Sind programme to Jawahar and he must have shown it to you already. But to make assurance doubly sure I am sending you a copy. There is an alteration of dates somewhat because owing to the terrific [cold] that has overtaken the country they stopped me from leaving tomorrow morning.

I enclose herewith Santanam’s letter. It speaks for itself. I wish you would send for the Punjab workers and adjust their differences. If we are to do any work at all the next Congress must be a genuine affair, a true register of elected representatives.

For ready reference I send you a marked copy of Young India containing a provincial Congress Committee Secretary’s letter revealing true facts. That letter you will easily guess refers to the Punjab. In order to spare the feelings of the Punjab workers I have removed reference to names. That letter shows how practically the whole of the delegation to the Bengal Congress was manipulated. You were present when Pattabhi² was relating what was done in Andhra. If all the Congress registers were examined they will reveal a terrible state of things. I wish that Jawahar could travel throughout all the provinces and see that the Congress organizations become living bodies.

Yours sincerely,

PANDIT MOTILALJI

11 CLIVE ROAD, NEW DELHI

From a photostat: S.N. 15320

¹ Vide “My Apologies”, January 31, 1929.
² Pattabhi Sitaramayya
106. LETTER TO MIRABEHN

ASHRAM, SABARMATI,
February 2, 1929

CHI. MIRA,

I was detained by the Sind people for two days owing to the extraordinary cold. The programme must therefore be post-dated by two days. Rasik¹ is lying dangerously ill at Delhi. Ba and Kanti have gone there. He has been unconscious for five days. God’s will be done. I return to the Mandir on 15th instant. We are all traveling third class. The closet is wretched, otherwise it is quite all right. Prof. Kripalani is with me.

Love.

BAPU

SHRIMATI MIRABEHN
KHADI DEPOT, CHHATWAN
POST CHHOTARIPAT, BIHAR

From the original: C.W. 5339. Courtesy: Mirabehn; also G.N. 9394

107. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

February 2, 1929

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I got your wires at Siddhapur. I got one at Marwar junction too. There is very little hope². Ba and Kanti got down to take a train to Delhi. May such occasions make us gentle and more devoted to duty. Swami and Yehabhai met me at Siddhapur station. Ramniklal should go there, tour the area and report about the women there who are so poor that they would be ready to card and spin. The intending donor is a friend of Punjabhai and wants khadi work to be started in Siddhapur itself.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]
Bapuna Patro—7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshine, p. 40

¹ Son of Harilal, who had gone to Delhi to help Devdas in khadi work; he died on February 8, 1929.
² Of the survival of Rasik
108. STUDENTS OF GUJARAT COLLEGE

As the students—both boys and girls—of Gujarat College gain glory day by day, their responsibility too increases. To the extent their strike drags on and their determination increasingly attracts the entire country’s attention, the people’s expectations of them rise also. This is exactly like what happened in Bardoli. One can say that at the outset the strike concerned the students alone. Now it concerns the whole of India. Hence they cannot relax now. I hear from all quarters that the majority of students will never break their pledge. Nevertheless, in accordance with the saying, “The wary is always happy”, I do not think it is discourteous to sound a note of warning that the students should remain vigilant and should not succumb to any kind of temptation or fear.

It is only if the students jointly undertake some constructive work that this strike will bring about the best result. There are many such tasks. A letter from a citizen of Ahmedabad about the insanitary condition of the city appears in this very issue.1 This gives an adequate description of the filth there. Along with that letter the writer sent figures of the rate of child mortality which should put us to shame, but I do not publish them because they are well known. The president of the Youth League, Dr. Hariprasad [Desai], has himself given them publicity. The students can easily undertake the job of removing this filth. By showing the people ways of doing away with such dirt they can promote the city’s health. There is altruism as well as glory in this work. Some such work will serve as an example to every student in India. They will earn the blessings of the citizens and I believe this is one fine way of bringing the strike to an early end. As long as the students do not engage themselves in some work, the danger of their falling and Mr. Shirras too will attempt to beat them down.

This much is clear that the students cannot spend a long time in merely listening to speeches and lectures. Now every step must be taken on the assumption that the strike will drag on. It is proper and necessary that we should be ready for a settlement. We should not take any drastic step that would preclude a settlement for ever. Likewise we cannot sit idle waiting for a compromise. Assuring themselves that it will come off honourably at the proper time, the students should not worry about it and should now throw themselves whole-heartedly into work. If this is done, there is a chance of an early settlement since the student, burying themselves in work will be regarded as a symbol of their strength and when their strength is tried, the attempt to cause disunity among them will stop and attempts will be made only to please them.

1 Vide “My Notes”, February 3, 1929

The task of removing the dirt of Ahmedabad has been mentioned only by way of example. That work is extremely necessary. Since it is a local job which can be completed in a short time, should attract all the greater interest. As it is a local matter, the citizens have a right to expect that work from the students. It is difficult to get that work done by hired persons. As volunteers can do it regularly, I have drawn attention to it. But it would do if the students find out some other work which they like and approve of. The object that some consecutive work of public service should be done collectively. I have already drawn attention to khadi and other activities envisaged in the Congress programme. All those items of work are to my mind fine and necessary. I hope that the students will not let go a good opportunity which has readily presented itself. It is only when the strength which the students have realized is consolidated, that the country will benefit by it.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 3-2-1929

109. MY NOTES

SUSPICIOUS

A gentleman from Wadhwan writes:¹

To believe that I will be able to convince the State and the leaders of Wadhwan only shows the writer’s naivety. I do not even know if those who have enforced the above regulations will ever read my criticism. But in the hope that this article will reach them, I can certainly say that in this age of purification, the injustice shown in the above clause to those whom we regard as untouchables, is improper. The Dheds, Bhangis and Chamars are our brothers and sisters; our own kith and kin. In not acknowledging this fact we do injustice to ourselves. And by regarding them as outcastes we have invited the criticism of the whole world upon ourselves. If there is any national awakening in the public of Wadhwan, the citizens should oppose this clause and if the opposition is not heeded, the people should renounce a municipality which upholds such caste distinctions. Whether or not the citizens practise such a boycott, it is my advice to the untouchable brothers that they should not be guilty of electing a representative from among the ‘touchables’.

¹ The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had stated that Wadhwan State had agreed to constitute an elected municipality. But there was a clause in its constitution whereby untouchables would have to elect a representative from the ‘touchable’ class.

SLUMS OF AHMEDABAD

A citizen writes¹ about the slums of Ahmedabad to which Dr. Hariprased has given publicity:

Every citizen, man and woman, needs to ponder over this letter. There is nothing new in it. Nor is what is already known put here in a new form; yet this letter draws attention to something we know. As the insanitary conditions in Ahmedabad are such as to arouse shame in the Municipality and the citizens, any amount of attention paid to it cannot be regarded as too much. If we cannot keep clean our own courtyard, how then can we help in keeping the entire country clean? If we leave our courtyard stinking, then there is every chance of a foul stench arising from our swaraj. Therefore, it is the duty of the Municipality and the citizens of Ahmedabad to adopt ways and means of clearing up this filth. It is possible that many who have got used to this filth may like to tolerate it, but to continue such a slumber in this age of purification should be a matter of shame. The fact that there is an economic loss in preserving this filth is something which should be understood by the wealthy citizens of Ahmedabad. Because, diseases spread fast owing to uncleanliness and lead to loss of manpower. When an inanimate engine stops working we start calculating the loss caused by this stoppage. The body is a living engine and when it stops working there is a twofold loss. Idleness following illness is one loss and another is the cost of medical treatment. And the individual’s loss should be regarded in the final calculation as a loss of public wealth. In the above letter a suggestion has been made to educate pupils in schools about hygiene. This is worth welcoming. If all the students of Ahmedabad, who are mature, are invited to work for cleaning up the city’s filth, and if after forming them into batches, the teachers set out with brooms and buckets, they can change the appearance of Ahmedabad in no time and the students will readily receive practical and real education.

¹ The letter is not translated here. The correspondent had described the foul conditions prevailing in Ahmedabad and his own unsuccessful efforts to improve them. He wanted that children in primary schools should be given lessons in cleanliness.

[From Gujarati]

Navajivan, 3-2-1929

110. A YOUNG MAN’S DILEMMA

A Patidar young man writes:

My parents want me to be married this very year and insist on my obeying their wishes in this respect. . . . In my community no one can secure a bride without conforming to the condition of sata, i.e., without offering a girl of one’s family in exchange. Child-marriage is the rule. In my case too girls of nine or ten years of age are only are available and that too on the condition that we conform to the condition of sata. My father says that even this may not be possible afterwards, if we miss the opportunity this year. If I say ‘no’ my mother weeps and creates no end of trouble in the family. I am a Patidar young man of 22 years of age. My parents will not hear of my marrying a widow or outside my caste. What am I to do in the circumstances?

I know many a young man who is in the same dilemma as this Patidar youth. According to our Shastras, a boy of 16 years and over should be regarded by his parents as a friend whom they should take in their confidence and not as a child whom they can coerce. But some parents in our country seem to think that even their grown-up children are bound to follow every wish of theirs—especially when it relates to such things as marriage—as if they could have no will of their own in the matter. And if this is the attitude with regard to the sons, the plight of the daughters may well be imagined. It seems to me that in all such contingencies it is not only the right but the religious duty of young men and young girls not to be afraid of the parents’ wrath. It has been my experience that when a grown-up boy or girl

---

1 The original Gujarati article appeared in Navajivan 3-2-1929. This is a translation by Pyarelal.
takes up a just and right position and adheres to it with absolute firmness there is the least amount of difficulty created by the parents. When once they realize that the resolution of their children is absolutely unalterable, they get reconciled to it. For behind the parents’ insistence there is always the ultimate hope that it would bring their children to their viewpoint. But when this hope is destroyed further insistence becomes meaningless and is therefore given up. My advice to the young man in question, therefore, is to refuse to be party to the double sin of marrying a child girl and of conforming to the evil practice of sata. He must not mind how much domestic trouble he has to face as a result of his refusal. He should consider it a virtue to marry outside his sub-caste or to marry a widow, subject to the necessary limitations.

Young India, 11-4-1929

111. LETTER TO KUSUM DESAI

KARACHI

Sunday, February 3, 1929

CHI. KUSUM,

The women’s section should be cleaner. Let all the women divide the work among themselves. A lot of water is thrown in the kitchenyard; this should stop. Now that you have two bathrooms outside, everyone had better go there. The room where Yashodabehn' lives, that too should be cleaner. Do something about the water. I am feeling weak these days. I cannot understand why.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Gujarati: G.N. 1775

---

1 Wife of Suraj Bhanji, a khadi worker of Ambala
112. LETTER TO CHHAGANLAL JOSHI

Sunday [February 3, 1929]

CHI. CHHAGANLAL,

I hope you got the postcard I wrote to you from Marwar Junction.

From Devdas’s wire it seems there is little hope of Rasik surviving. We should, on occasions like this, put into practice the ideals of knowledge which we repeat mechanically every day.

Let Ramniklal go to Siddhapur, tour the surrounding villages and examine the conditions of the women there. He told me that this was two or three days’ work. The women should be paid at the normal rate, and they should agree to learn carding. There is one Chhotubhai there who is ready to look after this work. I am not hopeful of anything coming out of this, but it is better that we examine the possibilities.

Take care and see that the arrangement about someone keeping a watch and sleeping in the office is not neglected. The working of the kitchen ought to become smooth. In any case, attend to the problem of vegetables. Take necessary measures about ghee.

Blessings from

BAPU

[From Gujarati]

Bapuna patro–7: Shri Chhaganlal Joshine, p. 40

113. LETTER TO PRABHAVATI

Sunday [February 3, 1929]

CHI. PRABHAVATI,

You have to be very firm and brave. Make all efforts to be self-reliant.

Know all the details about Rasik from Chhaganbhai. You shall not fall ill now.

Blessings from

BAPU

From a photostat of the Hindi. G.N. 3318

1 Vide “letter to Chhaganlal Joshi”, February 2, 1929.
2 From the reference to Rasik’s illness; vide the preceding item.
114. SPEECH IN REPLY TO MUNICIPAL ADDRESS, KARACHI

February 3, 1929

Replying to the address¹, Gandhiji, speaking in Hindi, thanked the Municipality for its address full of warm and affectionate appreciation. He also thanked the Parsi ladies who had prepared a beautiful khadi garland and a bouquet that were presented to him. He acknowledged that the Parsis had always been most kind towards him wherever he happened to go and wherever they were to be found. It was therefore no surprise to him to receive those tokens of affection.

Adverting to the municipal administration he said that the fact that Mr. Jamshed Mehta was at its head was the guarantee of the administrative efficiency and purity of the Municipality. He was glad that the franchise qualification was fairly low but he endorsed the hope of the councillors that at no distant time they would have adult suffrage which was becoming daily recognized and that purely monetary test, however low it was, was an indifferent and inadequate makeshift which excluded many worthy citizens from exercising their undoubted right of administering municipal affairs through the elected representatives. He was glad to note that the Municipality was alive to the elementary needs of the citizens.

Referring to the attempts which were being made to ensure pure milk supply in the city he said that he was sure that Karachi had enough talent and money to embark upon a proper dairy system. The supply of pure milk and pure ghee especially for the aged and the infants in the cities of India was a daily felt want and he would be glad if Karachi would give a lead to all municipalities of India. It would be regarded as a matter of shame for any city not to have a proper supply of pure milk and ghee. He wished the Municipality every success.

Amrita Bazar Patrika, 5-2-1929

¹ Read out by Jamshed Mehta, President of the Karachi Municipality
115. AN AUTOBIOGRAPHY OR
THE STORY OF MY EXPERIMENTS WITH TRUTH

INTRODUCTION

Four or five years ago, at the instance of some of my nearest co-workers, I agreed to write my autobiography. I made the start, but scarcely had I turned over the first sheet when riots broke out in Bombay and the work remained at a standstill. Then followed a series

---

1 The chapters, in Gujarati, under the title “Experiments with Truth or an Autobiography”, appeared serially in the issues of Navajivan, beginning on November 29, 1925 and ending on February 3, 1929. The Autobiography as a whole has therefore been placed under this last date. English translations of these chapters appeared simultaneously in the issues of Young India, and were reproduced weekly by Indian Opinion in South Africa and Unity in the U.S.A.

The English translations by Mahadev Desai and, for chapters XXIX-XLIII of Part V by Pyarelal were revised by Gandhiji for subject-matter and by Mirabehn for language. For the second edition, the translation was further revised by a “revered friend who, among many other things, has the reputation of being an eminent English scholar”. Before undertaking the task, he had made it a condition—which Mahadev Desai had accepted—that his name should on no account be given out. This friend was V. S. Srinivasa Sastri who, in a letter to Mahadev Desai, 28-3-1935, wrote: “I am at work on the Auto, and making good progress.” The text reproduced here is that of the second edition thus revised.

Besides two editions and eight reprints in English, the Navajivan Trust have brought out several editions of the work in Gujarati, Hindi and Marathi. They have also issued abridged editions in Gujarati and Hindi. By the end of 1967 they had issued 4,66,000 copies. Other Indian publishers have brought out abridged or translated editions in Hindi, Kannada, Malayalam, Marathi, Oriya, Punjabi, Tamil, Telugu, Urdu, English and Sanskrit. Foreign publishers have issued editions in the English, Spanish, Portuguese, French, German, Polish, Russian, Swedish, Arabic, Turkish and Serbo-Croat languages and in Braille for English. An American firm published Mahatma Gandhi—His Own Story edited by C. F. Andrews, which combined portions of events which culminated in my imprisonment at Yeravda. Sjt. Jairamdas, who was one of my fellow-prisoners there, asked me to put everything else on one side and finish writing the autobiography. I replied that I had already framed a programme of study for myself, and that I could not think of doing anything else until this course was complete. I should indeed have finished the autobiography had I gone through my full term of imprisonment at Yeravda, for there was still a year left to complete the task, when I was discharged. Swami Anand has now repeated the proposal, and as I have finished the history of Satyagraha in South Africa, I am tempted to undertake the autobiography for Navajivan. The Swami wanted me to write it separately for publication as a book. But I have no spare time. I could only write a chapter week by week. Something has to be written for Navajivan every week. Why should it not be the autobiography? The Swami agreed to the proposal, and here am I hard at work.

But a God-fearing friend had his doubts, which he shared with me on my day of silence. “What has set you on this adventure?”, he asked. “Writing an autobiography is a practice peculiar to the West. I know of nobody in the East having written one, except amongst those who have come under Western influence. And what will you write? Supposing you reject tomorrow the things you hold as principles today, or supposing you revise in the future your plans of today, is it not likely that the men who shape their conduct on the authority of your word, spoken or written, may be misled? Don’t you think it would be better not to write anything like an autobiography, at any rate just yet?”

This argument had some effect on me. But it is not my purpose to attempt a real autobiography. I simply want to tell the story of my numerous experiments with truth, and as my life consists of nothing but those experiments, it is true that the story will take the shape of an autobiography. But I shall not mind, if every page of it speaks only

---

1 Gandhiji was arrested in Ahmedabad on the night of March 10, 1922, sentenced to six years’ imprisonment on March 18, 1922, brought to Yeravda Prison on March 21, 1922, and released on February 5, 1924.

2 Jairamdas Doulatram (b. 1892), General Secretary, Indian National Congress, 1931-34; later Governor of Bihar, of Assam and Union Minister for Food.

3 This and other notes regarding translation from the Gujarati original are marked T1, T2, etc., and are given in Appendix to An Autobiography “Translation Notes for the Autobiography”.

4 Swami Anandanand managed the affairs of the Navajivan Press.
This argument had some effect on me. But it is not my purpose to attempt a real autobiography. I simply want to tell the story of my numerous experiments with truth, and as my life consists of nothing but those experiments, it is true that the story will take the shape of an autobiography. But I shall not mind, if every page of it speaks only of my experiments. I believe, or at any rate flatter myself with the belief, that a connected account of all these experiments will not be without benefit to the reader. My experiments in the political field are now known, not only to India, but to a certain extent to the ‘civilized’ world. For me, they have not much value; and the title of ‘Mahatma’ that they have won for me has, therefore, even less. Often the title has deeply pained me; and there is not a moment I can recall when it may be said to have tickled me. But I should certainly like to narrate my experiments in the spiritual field which are known only to myself, and from which I have derived such power as I possess for working in the political field. If the experiments are really spiritual, then there can be no room for self-praise. They can only add to my humility. The more I reflect and look back on the past, the more vividly do I feel my limitations.

What I want to achieve—what I have been striving and pining to achieve these thirty years—is self-realization, to see God face to face, to attain moksha. I live and move and have my being in pursuit of this goal. All that I do by way of speaking and writing, and all my ventures in the political field, are directed to this same end. But as I have all along believed that what is possible for one is possible for all, my experiments have not been conducted in the closet, but in the open; and I do not think that this fact detracts from their spiritual value. There are some things which are known only to oneself and one’s Maker. These are clearly incommunicable. The experiments I am about to relate are not such. But they are spiritual, or rather moral; for the essence of religion is morality.

Only those matters of religion that can be comprehended as much by children as by older people, will be included in this story. If I can narrate them in a dispassionate and humble spirit, many other experimenters will find in them provision for their onward march. Far be it from me to claim any degree of perfection for these experiments. I claim for them nothing more than does a scientist who, though he conducts his experiments with the utmost accuracy, forethought and minuteness, never claims any finality about his conclusions, but keeps an open mind regarding them. I have gone through deep self-introspection, searched myself through and through, and examined and analysed every psychological situation. Yet I am far from claiming any finality or infallibility about my conclusions. One claim I do indeed make and it is this. For me they appear to be absolutely correct, and seem for the time being to be final. For if they were not, I should base no action on them. But at every step I have carried out the process of acceptance or rejection and acted accordingly. And so long as my acts satisfy my reason and my heart, I must firmly adhere to my original conclusions.

---

1 Literally, ‘liberation’: freedom from the phenomenal cycle of birth and death.

If I had only to discuss academic principles, I should clearly not attempt an autobiography. But my purpose being to give an account of various practical applications of these principles, I have given the chapters I propose to write the title of The Story of My Experiments with Truth. These will of course include experiments with non-violence, celibacy and other principles of conduct believed to be distinct from truth. But for me, truth is the sovereign principle, which includes numerous other principles. This truth is not only truthfulness in word, but truthfulness in thought also, and not only the relative truth of our conception, but the Absolute Truth, the Eternal Principle, that is God. There are innumerable definitions of God, because His manifestations are innumerable. They overwhelm me with wonder and awe and for a moment stun me. But I worship God as Truth only. I have not yet found Him, but I am seeking after Him. I am prepared to sacrifice the things dearest to me in pursuit of this quest. Even if the sacrifice demanded be my very life, I hope I may be prepared to give it. But as long as I have not realized this Absolute Truth, so long must I hold by the relative truth as I have conceived it. That relative truth must, meanwhile, be my beacon, my shield and buckler. Though this path is strait and narrow and sharp as the razor’s edge, for me it has been the quickest and easiest. Even my Himalayan blunders have seemed trifling to me because I have kept strictly to this path. For the path has saved me from coming to grief, and I have gone forward according to my light. Often in my progress I have had faint glimpses of the Absolute Truth, God, and daily the conviction is growing upon me that He alone is real and all else is unreal. Let those, who wish, realize how the conviction has grown upon me; let them share my experiments and share also my conviction if they can. The further conviction has been growing upon me that whatever is possible for me is possible even for a child, and I have sound reasons for saying so. The instruments for the quest of truth are as simple as they are difficult. They may appear quite impossible to an arrogant person, and quite possible to an innocent child. The seeker after truth should be humble than the dust. The world crushes the dust under its feet, but the seeker after truth should so humble himself that even the dust could crush him. Only then, and not till then, will he have a glimpse of truth. The dialogue between Vasishtha and Vishwamitra makes this abundantly clear. Christianity and Islam also amply bear it out.

If anything that I write in these pages should strike the reader as being touched with pride, then he must take it that there is something wrong with my quest, and that my glimpses are no more than mirage.
Let hundreds like me perish, but let truth prevail. Let us not reduce the standard of truth even by a hair’s breadth for judging erring mortals like myself.

I hope and pray that no one will regard the advice interspersed in the following chapters as authoritative. The experiments narrated should be regarded as illustrations, in the light of which everyone may carry on his own experiments according to his own inclinations and capacity. I trust that to this limited extent the illustrations will be really helpful; because I am not going either to conceal or understate any ugly things that must be told. I hope to acquaint the reader fully with all my faults and errors. My purpose is to describe experiments in the science of satyagraha, not to say how good I am. In judging myself I shall try to be as harsh as truth, as I want others also to be.
Measuring myself by that standard I must exclaim with Surdas:

Where is there a wretch
So wicked and loathsome as I?
I have forsaken my Maker,
So faithless have I been.

For it is an unbroken torture to me that I am still so far from Him,
Who as I fully know, governs every breath of my life, and Whose offspring I am. I know that it is the evil passions within that keep me so far from Him, and yet I cannot get away from them.

But I must close. I can only take up the actual story in the next chapter.

THE ASHRAM, SABARMATI, M. K. GANDHI
November 29, 1925

PART I

CHAPTER I : BIRTH AND PARENTAGE

The Gandhis belong to the Bania caste and seem to have been originally grocers. But for three generations, from my grandfather, they have been Prime Ministers in several Kathiawad States.

1 Ramayana, “Balakanda”
2 Vide “Open Letter to Kathiawar Princes”, August 8, 1921.
Uttamchand Gandhi1, alias Ota Gandhi, my grandfather, must have been a man of principle. State intrigues compelled him to leave Porbandar, where he was Diwan, and to seek refuge in Junagadh. There he saluted the Nawab with the left hand. Someone, noticing the apparent discourtesy, asked for an explanation, which was given thus: ‘The right hand is already pledged to Porbandar.’

Ota Gandhi married a second time, having lost his first wife. He had four sons by his first wife and two by his second wife. I do not think that in my childhood I ever felt or knew that these sons of Ota Gandhi were not all of the same mother. The fifth of these six brothers was Karamchand Gandhi, alias Kaba Gandhi, and the sixth was Tulsidas Gandhi. Both these brothers were Prime Ministers in Porbandar, one after the other. Kaba Gandhi was my father. He was a member of the Rajasthanik Court. It is now extinct, but in those days it was a very influential body for settling disputes between the chiefs and their fellow-clansmen. He was for some time Prime Minister in Rajkot and then in Vankaner. He was a pensioner of the Rajkot State when he died.

Kaba Gandhi married four times in succession, having lost his wife each time by death. He had two daughters by his first and second marriages. His last wife, Putlibai, bore him a daughter and three sons, I being the youngest.

My father was a lover of his clan, truthful, brave and generous, but short-tempered. To a certain extent he might have been given to carnal pleasures. For he married for the fourth time when he was over forty. But he was incorruptible and had earned a name for strict impartiality in his family as well as outside. His loyalty to the State was well known. An Assistant Political Agent spoke insultingly of the Rajkot Thakore Saheb, his chief, and he stood up to the insult. The Agent was angry and asked Kaba Gandhi to apologize. This he refused to do and was therefore kept under detention for a few hours. But when the Agent saw that Kaba Gandhi was adamant, he ordered him to be released.2

My father never had any ambition to accumulate riches and left us very little property.

He had no education, save that of experience. At best, he might be said to have read up to the fifth Gujarati standard. Of history and

1 For the genealogical table, vide Appendix to An Autobiography “Genealogical Table of Gandhiji”.
2 Vide, however, “Injustice to Kathiawaris”, June 1, 1924.
geography he was innocent. But his rich experience of practical affairs stood him in good stead in the solution of the most intricate questions and in managing hundreds of men. Of religious training he had very little, but he had had that kind of religious culture which frequent visits to temples and listening to religious discourses make available to many Hindus. In his last days he began reading the Gita at the instance of a learned Brahmin friend of the family, and he used to repeat aloud some verses every day at the time of worship.

The outstanding impression my mother has left on my memory is that of saintliness\(^1\). She was deeply religious. She would not think of taking her meals without her daily prayers\(^2\). Going to Haveli—the Vaishnava temple—was one of her daily duties. As far as my memory can go back, I do not remember her having ever missed the Chaturmas\(^3\). She would take the hardest vows and keep them without flinching. Illness was no excuse for relaxing them. I can recall her once falling ill when she was observing the Chandrayana\(^4\) vow, but the illness was not allowed to interrupt the observance. To keep two or three consecutive fasts was nothing to her. Living on one meal a day during Chaturmas was a habit with her. Not content with that, she fasted every alternate day during one Chaturmas. During another Chaturmas she vowed not to have food without seeing the sun. We children on those days would stand, staring at the sky, waiting to announce the appearance of the sun to our mother. Everyone knows that at the height of the rainy season the sun often does not condescend to show his face. And I remember days when, at his

\(^1\) Mahadev Desai has reported the following conversation with Gandhiji in Yeravda Prison in 1932; “In the morning while examining the proofs of the abridged edition of An Autobiography, I asked Bapu: ‘You have spoken of your mother’s austere vows such as ekadashi, chaturmas kandrayana, etc., but you have used the word saintliness. Do you not wish to say penance instead of saintliness here? Cannot the word austerity be put in?’

Bapu: No. I have used the word saintliness deliberately. In penance there may be external renunciation, endurance and even hypocrisy. But saintliness is an inner quality. My mother’s inner life would reflect itself in her austerity. If you notice any purity in me, that is not my father’s but my mother’s. My mother died at the age of forty, so I have seen her in the prime of life, but I have never seen in her any frivolity, recourse to beauty aids or interest in the pleasures of life or hypocrisy. The one lasting impression that she left on my mind is that of saintliness.” [From Gujarati Mahadevibhaini Diary I, p. 67.

\(^2\) Literally, ‘a period of four months’. A vow of fasting and semi-fasting during the four months of the rains.

\(^3\) A sort of fast in which the daily quantity of food is increased or diminished according as the moon waxes or wanes.
sudden appearance, we would rush and announce it to her. She would run out to see with her own eyes, but by that time the fugitive sun would be gone, thus depriving her of her meal. “That does not matter,” she should say cheerfully, “God did not want me to eat today.” And then she would return to her round of duties.

My mother had strong common sense. She was well informed about all matters of State, and ladies of the court thought highly of her intelligence. Often I would accompany her, exercising the privilege of childhood, and I still remember many lively discussions she had with the widowed mother of the Thakore Saheb.

Of these parents I was born at Porbandar, otherwise known as Sudamapuri, on the 2nd October, 1869. I passed my childhood in Porbandar. I recollect having been put to school. It was with some difficulty that I got through the multiplication tables. The fact that I recollect nothing more of those days than having learnt, in company with other boys, to call our teacher all kinds of names, would strongly suggest that my intellect must have been sluggish, and my memory raw.

CHAPTER II : CHILDHOOD

I must have been about seven when my father left Porbandar for Rajkot to become a member of the Rajasthanik Court. There I was put into a primary school, and I can well recollect those days, including the names and other particulars of the teachers who taught me. As at Porbandar, so here, there is hardly anything to note about my studies. I could only have been a mediocre student. From this school I went to the suburban school and thence to the high school, having already reached my twelfth year. I do not remember having ever told a lie during this short period, either to teachers or to my school-mates. I used to be very shy and avoided all company. My books and my lessons were my sole companions. To be at school at the stroke of the hour and to run back home as soon as the school closed—that was my daily habit. I literally ran back, because I could not bear to talk to anybody. I was even afraid lest anyone should poke fun at me.

There is an incident which occurred at the examination during my first year at the high school and which is worth recording. Mr. Giles, the Educational Inspector, had come on a visit of inspection. He had set us five words to write as a spelling exercise. One of the words was ‘kettle’. I had mis-spelt it. The teacher tried to prompt me with the point of his boot, but I would not be prompted. It was beyond me to see that he wanted me to copy the spelling from my neighbour’s slate, for I had thought that the teacher was there to supervise us against copying. The result was that all the boys, except myself, were found to have spelt every word correctly. Only I had been stupid.
teacher tried later to bring this stupidity home to me, but without effect. I never could learn the art of ‘copying’.

Yet the incident did not in the least diminish my respect for my teacher. I was by nature, blind to the faults of elders. Later I came to know of many other failings of this teacher, but my regard for him remained the same. For I had learnt to carry out the orders of elders, not to scan their actions.

Two other incidents belonging to the same period have always clung to my memory. As a rule I had a distaste for any reading beyond my school books. The daily lessons had to be done, because I disliked being taken to task by my teacher as much as I disliked deceiving him. Therefore I would do the lessons, but often without my mind in them. Thus when even the lessons could not be done properly, there was of course no question of any extra reading. But somehow my eyes fell on a book purchased by my father. It was Shravana Pitribhakti Nataka (a play about Shravana’s devotion to his parents). I read it with intense interest. There came to our place about the same time itinerant showmen. One of the pictures I was shown was of Shravana carrying, by means of slings fitted for his shoulders, his blind parents on a pilgrimage. The book and the picture left an indelible impression on my mind. Here is an example for you to copy,’ I said to myself. The agonized lament of the parents over Shravana’s death is still fresh in my memory. The melting tune moved me deeply, and I played it on a concertina which my father had purchased for me.

There was a similar incident connected with another play. Just about this time, I had secured my father’s permission to see a play performed by a certain dramatic company. This play—Harishchandra’—captured my heart. I could never be tired of seeing it. But how often should I be permitted to go? It haunted me and I must have acted Harishchandra to myself times without number. ‘Why should not all be truthful like Harishchandra?’ was the question I asked myself day and night. To follow truth and to go through all the ordeals Harishchandra went through was the one ideal it inspired in me. I literally believed in the story of Harishchandra. The thought of it all often made me weep. My common sense tells me today that Harishchandra could not have been a historical character. Still both Harishchandra and Shravana are living realities for me, and I am sure
I should be moved as before if I were to read those plays again today.

1 King of Ayodhya who suffered great hardships for the sake of his pledge and, while in the service of a Chandala, got ready to kill his wife Taramati in the performance of his duty.
CHAPTER III: CHILD MARRIAGE

Much as I wish that I had not to write this chapter, I know that I shall have to swallow many such bitter draughts in the course of this narrative. And I cannot do otherwise, if I claim to be a worshipper of Truth. It is my painful duty to have to record here my marriage at the age of thirteen. As I see the youngsters of the same age about me who are under my care, and think of my own marriage, I am inclined to pity myself and to congratulate them on having escaped my lot. I can see no moral argument in support of such a preposterously early marriage.

Let the reader make no mistake. I was married, not betrothed. For in Kathiwad there are two distinct rites—betrothal and marriage. Betrothal is a preliminary promise on the part of the parents of the boy and the girl to join them in marriage, and it is not inviolable. The death of the boy entails no widowhood on the girl. It is an agreement purely between the parents, and the children have no concern with it. Often they are not even informed of it. It appears that I was betrothed thrice, though without my knowledge. I was told that two girls chosen for me had died in turn, and therefore I infer that I was betrothed three times. I have a faint recollection, however, that the third betrothal took place in my seventh year. But I do not recollect having been informed about it. In the present chapter I am talking about my marriage, of which I have the clearest recollection.

It will be remembered that we were three brothers. The first was already married. The elders decided to marry my second brother, who was two or three years my senior, a cousin, possibly a year older, and me, all at the same time. In doing so there was no thought of our welfare, much less our wishes. It was purely a question of their own convenience and economy.

Marriage among Hindus is no simple matter. The parents of the bride and the bridegroom often bring themselves to ruin over it. They waste their substance, they waste their time. Months are taken up over the preparations—in making clothes and ornaments and in preparing budgets for dinners. Each tries to outdo the other in the number and variety of courses to be prepared. Women, whether they have a voice or no, sing themselves hoarse, even get ill, and disturb the peace of their neighbours. These in their turn quietly put up with all the turmoil and bustle, all the dirt and filth, representing the remains of the feasts, because they know that a time will come when they also will be behaving in the same manner.

It would be better, thought my elders, to have all this bother over at one and the same time. Less expense and greater eclat. For money could be freely spent if it had only to be spent once instead of thrice. My father and my uncle were both old, and we were the last children they had to marry. It is likely that they wanted to have the last best time of their lives. In view of all these considerations, a triple wedding was decided upon, and as I have said before, months were taken up in preparation for it.

It was only through these preparations that we got warning of the coming event. I do not think it meant to me anything more than the prospect of good clothes to wear, drum beating, marriage processions, rich dinners and a strange girl to play with. The carnal desire came later. I propose to draw the curtain over my shame, except for a few details worth recording. To these I shall come later. But even they have little to do with the central idea I have kept before me in writing this story.

So my brother and I were both taken to Porbandar from Rajkot. There are some amusing details of the preliminaries to the final drama—e.g., smearing our bodies all over with turmeric paste—but I must omit them.

My father was a Diwan, but nevertheless a servant, and all the more so because he was in favour with the Thakore Saheb. The latter would not let him go until the last moment. And when he did so, he ordered for my father special stage-coaches, reducing the journey by two days. But the fates had willed otherwise. Porbandar is 120 miles from Rajkot—a cart journey of five days. My father did the distance in three, but the coach toppled over in the third stage, and he sustained severe injuries. He arrived bandaged all over. Both his and our interest in the coming event was half destroyed, but the ceremony had to be gone through. For how could the marriage dates be changed? However, I forgot my grief over my father’s injuries in the childish amusement of the wedding.

I was devoted to my parents. But no less was I devoted to the passions that flesh is heir to. I had yet to learn that all happiness and pleasure should be sacrificed in devoted service to my parents. And yet, as though by way of punishment for my desire for pleasures, an incident happened, which has ever since rankled in my mind and which I will relate later. Nishkulanand1 sings: ‘Renunciation of objects, without the renunciation of desires, is short-lived, however hard you may try.’ Whenever I sing this song or hear it sung, this bitter untoward incident rushes to my memory and fills me with shame.

1 A Gujarati poet of the Swaminarayan cult
My father put on a brave face in spite of his injuries, and took full part in the wedding. As I think of it, I can even today call before my mind’s eye the places where he sat as he went through the different details of the ceremony. Little did I dream then that one day I should severely criticize my father for having married me as a child. Everything on that day seemed to me right and proper and pleasing. There was also my own eagerness to get married. And as everything that my father did then struck me as beyond reproach, the recollection of those things is fresh in my memory. I can picture to myself, even today, how we sat on our wedding dais, how we performed the Saptapadi, how we, the newly wedded husband and wife, put the sweet kansar into each other’s mouth, and how we began to live together, and oh! that first night. Two innocent children all unwittingly hurled themselves into the ocean of life. My brother’s wife had thoroughly coached me about my behaviour on the first night. I do not know who had coached my wife. I have never asked her about it, nor am I inclined to do so now. The reader may be sure that we were too nervous to face each other. We were certainly too shy. How was I to talk to her, and what was I to say? The coaching could not carry me far. But no coaching is really necessary in such matters. The impressions of the former birth are potent enough to make all coaching superfluous. We gradually began to know each other, and to speak freely together. We were the same age. But I took no time in assuming the authority of a husband.

CHAPTER IV: PLAYING THE HUSBAND

About the time of my marriage, little pamphlets costing a pice, or a pie (I now forget how much), used to be issued, in which conjugal love, thrift, child marriages, and other such subjects were discussed. Whenever I came across any of these, I used to go through them cover to cover, and it was a habit with me to forget what I did not like, and to carry out in practice whatever I liked. Lifelong faithfulness to the wife, inculcated in these booklets as the duty of the husband, remained permanently imprinted on my heart. Furthermore, the passion for truth was innate in me, and to be false to her was therefore out of the question. And then there was very little chance of my being faithless at that tender age.

But the lesson of faithfulness had also an untoward effect. ‘If I

1 A ceremony consisting of seven steps in which a Hindu bride and bridegroom walk together, making at the same time promises of mutual fidelity and devotion, after which the marriage becomes irrevocable. For details, vide “With Bare Religious Rites”, March 7, 1926.

2 A wheat preparation which the pair partake of after the ceremony should be pledged to be faithful to my wife, she also should be pledged to be faithful to me,’ I said to myself. The thought made me a jealous husband. Her duty was easily converted into my right to exact faithfulness from her, and if it had to be exacted, I should be watchfully tenacious of the right. I had absolutely no reason to suspect my wife’s fidelity, but jealousy does not wait for reasons. I must needs be for ever on the look-out regarding her movements, and therefore she could not go anywhere without my permission. This sowed the seeds of a bitter quarrel between us. The restraint was virtually a sort of imprisonment. And Kasturbai was not the girl to brook any such thing. She made it a point to go out whenever and wherever she liked. More restraint on my part resulted in more liberty being taken by her and in my getting more and more cross. Refusal to speak to one another thus became the order of the day with us, married children. I think it was quite innocent of Kasturbai to have taken those liberties with my restrictions. How could a guileless girl brook any restraint on going to the temple or on going on visits to friends? If I had the right to impose restrictions on her, had not she also a similar right? All this is clear to me today. But at that time I had to make good my authority as a husband!

Let not the reader think, however, that ours was a life of unrelieved bitterness. For my severities were all based on love. I wanted to make my wife an ideal wife. My ambition was to make her live a pure life, learn what I learnt, and identify her life and thought with mine.

I do not know whether Kasturbai had any such ambition. She was illiterate. By nature she was simple, independent, persevering and, with me at least, reticent. She was not impatient of her ignorance and I do not recollect my studies having ever spurred her to go in for a similar adventure. I fancy, therefore, that my ambition was all one-sided.
My passion was entirely centred on one woman, and I wanted it to be reciprocated. But even if there were no reciprocity, it could not be all unrelieved misery because there was active love on one side at least.

I must say I was passionately fond of her. Even at school I used to think of her, and the thought of nightfall and our subsequent meeting was ever haunting me. Separation was unbearable. I used to keep her awake till late in the night with my idle talk. If with this devouring passion there had not been in me a burning attachment to duty, I should either have fallen a prey to disease and premature death, or have sunk into a burdensome existence. But the appointed tasks had to be gone through every morning, and lying to anyone was out of the question. It was this last thing that saved me from many a pitfall.
I have already said that Kasturbai was illiterate. I was very anxious to teach her, but lustful love left me no time. For one thing the teaching had to be done against her will, and that too at night. I dared not meet her in the presence of the elders, much less talk to her. Kathiawad had then, and to a certain extent has even today, its own peculiar, useless and barbarous purdah. Circumstances were thus unfavourable. I must therefore confess that most of my efforts to instruct Kasturbai in our youth were unsuccessful. And when I awoke from the sleep of lust, I had already launched forth into public life, which did not leave me much spare time. I failed likewise to instruct her through private tutors. As a result, Kasturbai can now with difficulty write simple letters and understand simple Gujarati. I am sure that, had my love for her been absolutely untainted with lust, she would be a learned lady today; for I could then have conquered her dislike for studies. I know that nothing is impossible for pure love.

I have mentioned one circumstance that more or less saved me from the disasters of lustful love. There is another worth noting. Numerous examples have convinced me that God ultimately saves him whose motive is pure. Along with the cruel custom of child marriages, Hindu society has another custom which to a certain extent diminishes the evils of the former. Parents do not allow young couples to stay together long. The child-wife spends more than half her time at her father’s place. Such was the case with us. That is to say, during the first five years of our married life (from the age of 13 to 18), we could not have lived together longer than an aggregate period of three years. We would hardly have spent six months together, when there would be a call to my wife from her parents. Such calls were very unwelcome in those days, but they saved us both. At the age of eighteen I went to England, and this meant a long and healthy spell of separation. Even after my return from England we hardly stayed together longer than six months. For I had to run up and down between Rajkot and Bombay. Then came the call from South Africa, and that found me already fairly free from the carnal appetite.

CHAPTER V : AT THE HIGH SCHOOL

I have already said that I was learning at the high school when I was married. We three brothers were learning at the same school. The eldest brother was in a much higher class, and the brother who was married at the same time as I was, only one class ahead of me. Marriage resulted in both of us wasting a year. Indeed the result was even worse for my brother, for he gave up studies altogether. Heaven knows how many youths are in the same plight as he. Only in our present Hindu society do studies and marriage go thus hand in hand.
My studies were continued. I was not regarded as a dunce at the high school. I always enjoyed the affection of my teachers. Certificates of progress and character used to be sent to the parents every year. I never had a bad certificate. In fact I even won prizes after I passed out of the second standard. In the fifth and sixth I obtained scholarships of rupees four and ten respectively, an achievement for which I have to thank good luck more than my merit. For the scholarships were not open to all, but reserved for the best boys amongst those coming from the Sorath Division of Kathiawad. And in those days there could not have been many boys from Sorath in a class of forty to fifty.

My own recollection is that I had not any high regard for my ability. I used to be astonished whenever I won prizes and scholarships. But I very jealously guarded my character. The least little blemish drew tears from my eyes. When I merited, or seemed to the teacher to merit, a rebuke, it was unbearable for me. I remember having once received corporal punishment. I did not so much mind the punishment, as the fact that it was considered my desert. I wept piteously. That was when I was in the first or second standard. There was another such incident during the time when I was in the seventh standard. Dorabji Edulji Gimi was the head master then. He was popular among boys, as he was a disciplinarian, a man of method and a good teacher. He had made gymnastics and cricket compulsory for boys of the upper standards. I disliked both. I never took part in any exercise, cricket or football, before they were made compulsory. My shyness was one of the reasons for this aloofness, which I now see was wrong. I then had the false notion that gymnastics had nothing to do with education. Today I know that physical training should have as much place in the curriculum as mental training.

I may mention, however, that I was none the worse for abstaining from exercise. That was because I had read in books about the benefits of long walks in the open air, and having liked the advice, I had formed a habit of taking walks, which has still remained with me. These walks gave me a fairly hardy constitution.

The reason of my dislike for gymnastics was my keen desire to serve as nurse to my father. As soon as the school closed, I would hurry home and begin serving him. Compulsory exercise came directly in the way of this service. I requested Mr. Gimi to exempt me from gymnastics so that I might be free to serve my father. But he would not listen to me. Now it so happened that one Saturday, when we had school in the morning, I had to go from home to the school for gymnastics at 4 o’clock in the afternoon. I had no watch, and the clouds deceived me. Before I reached the school the boys had all left.
The next day Mr. Gimi, examining the roll, found me marked absent. Being asked the reason for absence, I told him what had happened. He refused to believe me and ordered me to pay a fine of one or two annas (I cannot now recall how much).

I was convicted of lying! That deeply pained me. How was I to prove my innocence? There was no way. I cried in deep anguish. I saw that a man of truth must also be a man of care. This was the first and last instance of my carelessness in school. I have a faint recollection that I finally succeeded in getting the fine remitted. The exemption from exercise was of course obtained, as my father wrote himself to the head master saying that he wanted me at home after school.

But though I was none the worse for having neglected exercise,73 I am still paying the penalty of another neglect. I do not know whence I got the notion that good handwriting was not a necessary part of education, but I retained it until I went to England. When later, especially in South Africa, I saw the beautiful handwriting of lawyers and young men born and educated in South Africa, I was ashamed of myself and repented of my neglect. I saw that bad handwriting should be regarded as a sign of an imperfect education. I tried later to improve mine, but it was too late. I could never repair the neglect of my youth. Let every young man and woman be warned by my example, and understand that good handwriting is a necessary part of education.74 I am now of opinion that children should first be taught the art of drawing before learning how to write. Let the child learn his letters by observation as he does different objects, such as flowers, birds, etc., and let him learn handwriting only after he has learnt to draw objects. He will then write a beautifully formed hand.

Two more reminiscences of my school days75 are worth recording. I had lost one year because of my marriage, and the teacher wanted me to make good the loss by skipping a class—a privilege usually allowed to industrious boys. I therefore had only six months in the third standard and was promoted to the fourth after the examinations which are followed by the summer vacation. English became the medium of instruction in most subjects from the fourth standard. I found myself completely at sea. Geometry was a new subject in which I was not particularly strong, and the English medium made it still more difficult for me. The teacher taught the subject very well, but I could not follow him. Often I would lose heart and think of going back to the third standard, feeling that the packing of two years' studies into a single year was too ambitious. But this would discredit not only me, but also the teacher; because, counting on my industry, he had recommended my promotion. So the fear of the double discredit kept me at my post. When, however, with much effort
I reached the thirteenth proposition of Euclid, the utter simplicity of the subject was suddenly revealed to me. A subject which only required a pure and simple use of one’s reasoning powers could not be difficult. Ever since that time geometry has been both easy and interesting for me.

Samskrit, however, proved a harder task. In geometry there was nothing to memorize, whereas in Samskrit, I thought, everything had to be learnt by heart. This subject also was commenced from the fourth standard. As soon as I entered the sixth I became disheartened. The teacher was a hard taskmaster, anxious, as I thought, to force the boys. There was a sort of rivalry going on between the Samskrit and the Persian teachers. The Persian teacher was lenient. The boys used to talk among themselves that Persian was very easy and the Persian teacher very good and considerate to the students. The ‘easiness’ tempted me and one day I sat in the Persian class. The Samskrit teacher was grieved. He called me to his side and said: ‘How can you forget that you are the son of a Vaishnava father? Won’t you learn the language of your own religion? If you have any difficulty, why not come to me? I want to teach you students Samskrit to the best of my ability. As you proceed further, you will find in it things of absorbing interest. You should not lose heart. Come and sit again in the Samskrit class.’

This kindness put me to shame. I could not disregard my teacher’s affection. Today I cannot but think with gratitude of Krishnashankar Pandya. For if I had not acquired the little Samskrit that I learnt then, I should have found it difficult to take any interest in our sacred books. In fact I deeply regret that I was not able to acquire a more thorough knowledge of the language, because I have since realized that every Hindu boy and girl should possess sound Samskrit learning.

It is now my opinion that in all Indian curricula of higher education there should be a place for Hindi, Samskrit, Persian, Arabic and English, besides of course the vernacular. This big list need not frighten anyone. If our education were more systematic, and the boys free from the burden of having to learn their subjects through a foreign medium, I am sure learning all these languages would not be an irksome task, but a perfect pleasure. A scientific knowledge of one language makes a knowledge of other languages comparatively easy.

In reality, Hindi, Gujarati and Samskrit may be regarded as one language, and Persian and Arabic also as one. Though Persian

---

1 Member of the Vaishnava sect; a worshipper of Vishnu belongs to the Aryan, and Arabic to the Semitic family of languages, there is a close relationship between Persian and Arabic, because both claim their full growth through the rise of Islam. Urdu I have not regarded as a distinct language, because it has adopted the Hindi grammar and its vocabulary is mainly Persian and Arabic, and he who would learn good Urdu must learn Persian and Arabic, as one who would learn good Gujarati, Hindi, Bengali or Marathi must learn Samskrit.

CHAPTER VI : A TRAGEDY

Amongst my few friends at the high school I had, at different times, two who might be called intimate. One of these friendships did not last long, though I never forsook my friend. He forsook me, because I made friends with the other 1. This latter friendship I regard as a tragedy in my life. It lasted long. I formed it in the spirit of a reformer.

This companion was originally my elder brother’s friend. They were classmates. I knew his weaknesses, but I regarded him as a faithful friend. My mother, my eldest brother, and my wife warned me that I was in bad company. I was too proud to heed my wife’s warning. But I dared not go against the opinion of my mother and my eldest brother. Nevertheless I pleaded with them saying, ‘I know he has the weaknesses you attribute to him, but you do not know his virtues. He cannot lead me astray, as my association with him is meant to reform him. For I am sure that if he reforms his ways, he will be a splendid man. I beg you not to be anxious on my account.’

I do not think this satisfied them, but they accepted my explanation and let me go my way.

I have seen since that I had calculated wrongly 1. A reformer can-not afford to have close intimacy with him whom he seeks to reform. True friendship is an identity of souls rarely to be found in this world. Only between like natures can friendship be altogether worthy and endu-ring. Friends react on one another. Hence in friendship there is very little scope for reform. I am of opinion that all exclusive intimacies are to be avoided; for man takes in vice far more readily than virtue. And he who would be friends with God 2 must remain alone, or make the whole world his friend. I may be wrong, but my effort to cultivate in intimate friendship proved a failure.

A wave of ‘reform’ was sweeping over Rajkot at the time when I first came across this friend. He informed me that many of our teachers were secretly taking meat and wine. He also named many

1 Sheikh Mehtab; vide “London Diary”, November 12, 1888.
well-known people of Rajkot as belonging to the same company. There were also, I was told, some high-school boys among them.

I was surprised and pained. I asked my friend the reason and he explained it thus: ‘We are a weak people because we do not eat meat. The English are able to rule over us, because they are meat-eaters. You know how hardy I am, and how great a runner too. It is because I am a meat-eater. Meat-eaters do not have boils or tumours, and even if they sometimes happen to have any, these heal quickly. Our teachers and other distinguished people who eat meat are no fools. They know its virtues. You should do likewise. There is nothing like trying. Try, and see what strength it gives.’

All these pleas on behalf of meat-eating were not advanced at a single sitting. They represent the substance of a long and elaborate argument which my friend was trying to impress upon me from time to time. My elder brother had already fallen. He therefore supported my friend’s argument. I certainly looked feeble-bodied by the side of my brother and this friend. They were both hardier, physically stronger, and more daring. This friend’s exploits cast a spell over me. He could run long distances and extraordinarily fast. He was an adept in high and long jumping. He could put up with any amount of corporal punishment. He would often display his exploits to me and, as one is always dazzled when he sees in others the qualities that he lacks himself, I was dazzled by this friend’s exploits. This was followed by a strong desire to be like him. I could hardly jump or run. Why should not I also be as strong as he?

Moreover, I was a coward. I used to be haunted by the fear of thieves, ghosts and serpents. I did not dare to stir out of doors at night. Darkness was a terror to me. It was almost impossible for me to sleep in the dark, as I would imagine ghosts coming from one direction, thieves from another and serpents from a third. I could not therefore bear to sleep without a light in the room. How could I disclose my fears to my wife, no child, but already at the threshold of youth, sleeping by my side? I knew that she had more courage than I, and I felt ashamed of myself. She knew no fear of serpents and ghosts. She could go out anywhere in the dark. My friend knew all these weaknesses of mine. He would tell me that he could hold in his hand live serpents, could defy thieves and did not believe in ghosts. And all this was, of course, the result of eating meat.

A doggerel of the Gujarati poet Narmad was in vogue amongst us schoolboys, as follows:

Behold the mighty Englishman
He rules the Indian small,
Because being a meat-eater

He is five cubits tall.†

All this had its due effect on me. I was beaten. It began to grow on me that meat-eating was good, that it would make me strong and daring, and that, if the whole country took to meat-eating, the English could be overcome.

A day was thereupon fixed for beginning the experiment. It had to be conducted in secret.† The Gandhis were Vaishnavas. My parents were particularly staunch Vaishnavas. They would regularly visit the Haveli. The family had even its own temples. Jainism was strong in Gujarat, and its influence was felt everywhere and on all occasions. The opposition to and abhorrence of meat-eating that existed in Gujarat among the Jains and Vaishnavas were to be seen nowhere else in India or outside in such strength. These were the traditions in which I was born and bred. And I was extremely devoted to my parents. I knew that the moment they came to know of my having eaten meat, they would be shocked to death. Moreover, my love of truth made me extra cautious.† I cannot say that I did not know then that I should have to deceive my parents if I began eating meat.† But my mind was bent on the ‘reform’. It was not a question of pleasing the palate. I did not know that it had a particularly good relish. I wished to be strong and daring and wanted my countrymen also to be such, so that we might defeat the English and make India free. The word ‘swaraj’ I had not yet heard. But I knew what freedom meant. The frenzy of the ‘reform’ blinded me. And having ensured secrecy, I persuaded myself that mere hiding the deed from parents was no departure from truth.†

CHAPTER VII: A TRAGEDY (CONTD.)

So the day came. It is difficult fully to describe my condition. There were, on the one hand, the zeal for ‘reform’ and the novelty of making a momentous departure in life. There was, on the other, the shame of hiding like a thief to do this very thing. I cannot say which of the two swayed me more. We went in search of a lonely spot by the river, and there I saw, for the first time in my life—meat. There was baker’s bread also. I relished neither. The goat’s meat was as tough as leather. I simply could not eat it. I was sick and had to leave off eating.

I had a very bad night afterwards. A horrible nightmare haunted me. Every time I dropped off to sleep it would seem as though a live goat were bleating inside me, and I would jump up full of remorse. But then I would remind myself that meat-eating was a duty and so become more cheerful.
My friend was not a man to give in easily. He now began to cook various delicacies with meat, and dress them neatly. And for dining, no longer was the secluded spot on the river chosen, but a State house, with its dining-hall, and tables and chairs, about which my friend had made arrangements in collusion with the chief cook there.

This bait had its effect. I got over my dislike for bread, forswore my compassion for the goats, and became a relisher of meat-dishes, if not of meat itself. This went on for about a year. But not more than half a dozen meat-feasts were enjoyed in all; because the State house was not available every day, and there was the obvious difficulty about frequently preparing expensive savoury meat-dishes. I had no money to pay for this ‘reform’. My friend had therefore always to find the wherewithal. I had no knowledge where he found it. But find it he did, because he was bent on turning me into a meat-eater. But even his means must have been limited, and hence these feasts had necessarily to be few and far between.

Whenever I had occasion to indulge in these surreptitious feasts, dinner at home was out of the question. My mother would naturally ask me to come and take my food and want to know the reason why I did not wish to eat. I would say to her, ‘I have no appetite today; there is something wrong with my digestion.’ It was not without compunction that I devised these pretexts. I knew I was lying, and lying to my mother. I also knew that, if my mother and father came to know of my having become a meat-eater, they would be deeply shocked. This knowledge was gnawing at my heart.

Therefore I said to myself: ‘Though it is essential to eat meat, and also essential to take up food reform in the country yet deceiving and lying to one’s father and mother is worse than not eating meat. In their lifetime, therefore, meat-eating must be out of the question. When they are no more and I have found freedom, I will eat meat openly, but until that moment arrives I will abstain from it.’

This decision I communicated to my friend, and I have never since gone back to meat. My parents never knew that two of their sons had become meat-eaters.

I abjured meat out of the purity of my desire not to lie to my parents, but I did not abjure the company of my friend. My zeal for reforming him had proved disastrous for me, and all the time I was completely unconscious of the fact.

The same company would have led me into faithlessness to my wife. But I was saved by the skin of my teeth. My friend once took me to a brothel. He sent me in with the necessary instructions. It was all pre-arranged. The bill had already been paid. I went into the jaws of sin, but God in His infinite mercy protected me against myself.\(^\text{1}\) I was almost struck blind and dumb in this den of vice. I sat near the woman on her bed, but I was tongue-tied. She naturally lost patience with me, and showed me the door, with abuses and insults. I then felt as though my manhood had been injured, and wished to sink into the ground for shame. But I have ever since given thanks to God for having saved me. I can recall four more similar incidents in my life, and in most of them my good fortune,\(^\text{2}\) rather than any effort on my part, saved me.\(^\text{3}\) From a strictly ethical point of view, all these occasions must be regarded as moral lapses; for the carnal desire was there, and it was as good as the act. But from the ordinary point of view, a man who is saved from physically committing sin is regarded as saved. And I was saved only in that sense. There are some actions from which an escape is a godsend both for the man who escapes and for those about him. Man, as soon as he gets back his consciousness of right, is thankful to the Divine mercy for the escape. As we know that a man often succumbs to temptation, however much he may resist it, we also know\(^\text{4}\) that Providence often intercedes and saves him in spite of himself. How all this happens—how far a man is free and how far a creature of circumstances—how far free will comes into play and where fate enters on the scene—all this is a mystery and will remain a mystery.

But to go on with the story. Even this was far from opening my eyes to the viciousness of my friend's company. I therefore had many more bitter draughts in store for me, until my eyes were actually opened by an ocular demonstration of some of his lapses quite unexpected by me. But of them later, as we are proceeding chronologically.\(^\text{5}\)

One thing, however, I must mention now, as it pertains to the same period. One of the reasons of my differences with my wife was undoubtedly the company of this friend. I was both a devoted and a jealous husband, and this friend fanned the flame of my suspicions about my wife.\(^\text{6}\) I never could doubt his veracity. And I never have forgiven myself the violence of which I have been guilty in often having pained my wife by acting on his information.\(^\text{7}\) Perhaps only a Hindu wife would tolerate these hardships, and that is why I have regarded woman as an incarnation of tolerance.\(^\text{8}\) A servant wrongly suspected may throw up his job, a son in the same case may leave his father's roof, and a friend may put an end to the friendship. The wife, if she suspects her husband, will keep quiet, but if the husband suspects her, she is ruined. Where is she to go? A Hindu wife\(^\text{9}\) may not seek divorce in a law-court. Law has no remedy for her. And I can never forget or forgive myself for having driven my wife to that desperation.

\(^1\) Vide “Power of ‘Ramanama’”, May 17, 1925.

The canker of suspicion was rooted out only when I understood ahimsa in all its bearings. I saw then the glory of brahmacharya1 and realized that the wife is not the husband’s bondsman, but his companion and his helpmate, and an equal partner in all his joys and sorrows—as free as the husband to choose her own path2. Whenever I think of those dark days of doubts and suspicions, I am filled with loathing of my folly and my lustful cruelty, and I deplore3 my blind devotion to my friend.

CHAPTER VIII : STEALING AND ATONEMENT

I have still to relate some of my failings during this meat-eating period and also previous to it, which date from before my marriage or soon after.

A relative and I became fond of smoking. Not that we saw any good in smoking, or were enamoured of the smell of a cigarette. We simply imagined a sort of pleasure in emitting clouds of smoke from our mouths. My uncle had the habit, and when we saw him smoking, we thought we should copy his example. But we had no money. So we began pilfering stumps of cigarettes thrown away by my uncle.

The stumps, however, were not always available, and could not emit much smoke either. So we began to steal coppers from the servant’s pocket-money in order to purchase Indian cigarettes. But the question was where to keep them. We could not of course smoke in the presence of elders. We managed somehow for a few weeks on these stolen coppers. In the mean time we heard that the stalks of a certain plant3 were porous and could be smoked like cigarettes. We got them and began this kind of smoking.

But we were far from being satisfied with such things as these. Our want of independence began to smart. It was unbearable that we should be unable to do anything without the elder’s permission. At last, in sheer disgust, we decided to commit suicide.

But how were we to do it? From where were we to get the poison? We heard that dhatura4 seeds were an effective poison. Off we went to the jungle in search of these seeds, and got them. Evening was thought to be the auspicious hour. We went to Kedarji Mandir, put ghee in the temple-lamp, had the darshan and then looked for a lonely corner. But our courage failed us. Supposing we were not

---

1 Literally, ‘conduct that leads one to God’; hence self-restraint, particularly in sex.
2 Belladonna

---

110 THE COLLECTED WORKS OF MAHATMA GANDHI
instantly killed? And what was the good of killing ourselves? Why not rather put up with the lack of independence? But we swallowed two or three seeds nevertheless. We dared not take more. Both of us fought shy of death, and decided to go to Ramji-Mandir to compose ourselves, and to dismiss the thought of suicide.

I realized that it was not as easy to commit suicide as to contemplate it. And since then, whenever I have heard of someone threatening to commit suicide, it has had little or no effect on me.

The thought of suicide ultimately resulted in both of us bidding good-bye to the habit of smoking stumps of cigarettes and of stealing the servant’s coppers for the purpose of smoking.

Ever since I have been grown up, I have never desired to smoke and have always regarded the habit of smoking as barbarous, dirty and harmful. I have never understood why there is such a rage for smoking throughout the world. I cannot bear to travel in a compartment full of people smoking. I become choked.

But much more serious than this theft was the one I was guilty of a little later. I pilfered the coppers when I was twelve or thirteen, possibly less. The other theft was committed when I was fifteen. In this case I stole a bit of gold out of my meat-eating brother’s armlet. This brother had run into a debt of about twenty-five rupees. He had on his arm an armlet of solid gold. It was not difficult to clip a bit out of it.

Well, it was done, and the debt cleared. But this became more than I could bear. I resolved never to steal again. I also made up my mind to confess it to my father. But I did not dare to speak. Not that I was afraid of my father beating me. No. I do not recall his ever having beaten any of us. I was afraid of the pain that I should cause him. But I felt the risk should be taken; that there could not be a cleansing without a clean confession.

I decided at last to write out the confession, to submit it to my father, and ask his forgiveness. I wrote it on a slip of paper and handed it to him myself. In this note not only did I confess my guilt, but I asked adequate punishment for it, and closed with a request to him not to punish himself for my offence. I also pledged myself never to steal in future.

I was trembling as I handed the confession to my father. He was then suffering from a fistula and was confined to bed. His bed was a plain wooden plank. I handed him the note and sat opposite the plank.

He read it through, and pearl-drops trickled down his cheeks, wetting the paper. For a moment he closed his eyes in thought and then tore up the note. He had sat up to read it. He again lay down. I also cried. I could see my father’s agony. If I were a painter I could draw a picture of the whole scene today. It is still so vivid in my mind.

Those pearl-drops of love cleansed my heart, and washed my sin away. Only he who has experienced such love can know what it is. As the hymn says:

‘Only he
Who is smitten the arrows of love,
Knows its power.’

This was, for me, an object-lesson in ahimsa. Then I could read in it nothing more than a father’s love, but today I know that it was pure ahimsa. When such ahimsa becomes all-embracing, it transforms every-thing it touches. There is no limit to its power.

This sort of sublime forgiveness was not natural to my father. I had thought that he would be angry, say hard things, and strike his forehead. But he was so wonderfully peaceful, and I believe this was due to my clean confession. A clean confession, combined with a promise never to commit the sin again, when offered before one who has the right to receive it, is the purest type of repentance. I know that my confession made my father feel absolutely safe about me, and increased his affection for me beyond measure.

CHAPTER IX : MY FATHER’S DEATH AND MY DOUBLE SHAME

The time of which I am now speaking is my sixteenth year. My father, as we have seen, was bed-ridden, suffering from a fistula. My mother, an old servant of the house, and I were his principal attendants. I had the duties of a nurse, which mainly consisted in dressing the wound, giving my father his medicine, and compounding drugs whenever they had to be made up at home. Every night I massaged his legs and retired only when he asked me to do so or after he had fallen asleep. I loved to do this service. I do not remember ever having neglected it. All the time at my disposal, after the performance of the daily duties, was divided between school and attending on my father. I would only go out for an evening walk either when he permitted me or when he was feeling well.

This was also the time when my wife was expecting a baby,—a circumstance which, as I can see today, meant a double shame for me. For one thing I did not restrain myself, as I should have done whilst I was yet a student. And secondly, this carnal lust got the better of what I regarded as my duty to study, and of what was even a greater duty, my devotion to my parents, Shravana having been my ideal since childhood. Every night whilst my hands were busy massaging my father’s legs, my mind was hovering about the bed-room—and that too at a time when religion, medical science and common sense alike forbade sexual intercourse. I was always glad to be relieved from my duty, and went straight to the bed-room after doing obeisance to my father.

---

1 Vide “Letter to Manilal Gandhi”, March 25, 1925 : “My keenest enjoyment was to nurse my father.”

At the same time my father was getting worse every day. Ayurvedic physicians had tried all their ointments, hakims their plasters, and local quacks their nostrums. An English surgeon had also used his skill. As the last and only resort he had recommended a surgical operation. But the family physician came in the way. He disapproved of an operation being performed at such an advanced age. The physician was competent and well known, and his advice prevailed. The operation was abandoned, and various medicines purchased for the purpose were of no account. I have an impression that, if the physician had allowed the operation, the wound would have been easily healed. The operation also was to have been performed by a surgeon who was then well known in Bombay. But God had willed otherwise. When death is imminent, who can think of the right remedy? My father returned from Bombay with all the paraphernalia of the operation, which were now useless. He despaired of living any longer. He was getting weaker and weaker, until at last he had to be asked to perform the necessary functions in bed. But up to the last he refused to do anything of the kind, always insisting on going through the strain of leaving his bed. The Vaishnavite rules about external cleanliness are so inexorable.

Such cleanliness is quite essential no doubt, but Western medical science has taught us that all the functions, including a bath, can be done in bed with the strictest regard to cleanliness, and without the slightest discomfort to the patient, the bed always remaining spotlessly clean. I should regard such cleanliness as quite consistent with Vaishnavism. But my father’s insistence on leaving the bed only struck me with wonder then, and I had nothing but admiration for it.

The dreadful night came. My uncle was then in Rajkot. I have a faint recollection that he came to Rajkot having had news that my father was getting worse. The brothers were deeply attached to each other. My uncle would sit near my father’s bed the whole day, and would insist on sleeping by his bedside after sending us all to sleep. No one had dreamt that this was to be the fateful night. The danger of course was there.
It was 10.30 or 11 p.m. I was giving the massage. My uncle offered to relieve me. I was glad and went straight to the bed-room. My wife, poor thing, was fast asleep. But how could she sleep when I was there? I woke her up. In five or six minutes, however, the servant knocked at the door. I started with alarm. ‘Get up,’ he said, ‘Father is very ill.’ I knew of course that he was very ill, and so I guessed what ‘very ill’ meant at that moment. I sprang out of bed.

‘What is the matter? Do tell me!’

‘Father is no more.’

So all was over! I had but to wring my hands. I felt deeply ashamed and miserable. I ran to my father’s room. I saw that, if animal passion had not blinded me, I should have been spared the torture of separation from my father during his last moments. I should have been massaging him, and he would have died in my arms. But now it was my uncle who had had this privilege. He was so deeply devoted to his elder brother that he had earned the honour of doing him the last services! My father had forebodings of the coming event. He had made a sign for pen and paper, and written: ‘Prepare for the last rites.’ He had then snapped the amulet of his arm and also his gold necklace of tulasi beads and flung them aside. A moment after this he was no more.

The shame, to which I have referred in a foregoing chapter, was this shame of my carnal desire even at the critical hour of my father’s death, which demanded wakeful service. It is a a blot I have never been able to efface or forget, and I have always thought that, although my devotion to my parents knew no bounds and I would have given up anything for it, yet it was weighed and found unpardonably wanting because my mind was at the same moment in the grip of lust. I have therefore always regarded myself as a lustful, though a faithful, husband. It took me long to get free from the shackles of lust, and I had to pass through many ordeals before I could overcome it.

Before I close this chapter of my double shame, I may mention that the poor mite that was born to my wife scarcely breathed for more than three or four days. Nothing else could be expected. Let all those who are married be warned by my example.

CHAPTER X : GLIMPSES OF RELIGION

From my sixth or seventh year up to my sixteenth I was at school, being taught all sorts of things except religion. I may say that I failed to get from the teachers what they could have given me

1 An aromatic plant the leaves of which are offered in worship. Prayer beads are made out of its stalk.
without any effort on their part. And yet I kept on picking up things here and there from my surroundings. The term ‘religion’ I am using in its broadest sense, meaning thereby self-relization or knowledge of self.

Being born in the Vaishnava faith, I had often to go to the Haveli. But it never appealed to me. I did not like its glitter and pomp. Also I heard rumours of immorality being practised there, and lost all interest in it. Hence I could gain nothing from the Haveli.

But what I failed to get there I obtained from my nurse, an old servant of the family, whose affection for me I still recall. I have said before that there was in me a fear of ghosts and spirits. Rambha, for that was her name, suggested, as a remedy for this fear, the repetition of Ramanama. I had more faith in her than in her remedy, and so at a tender age I began repeating Ramanama to cure my fear of ghosts and spirits. This was of course short-lived, but the good seed sown in childhood was not sown in vain. I think it is due to the seed sown by that good woman Rambha that today Ramanama is an infallible remedy for me.

Just about this time, a cousin of mine who was a devotee of the Ramayana arranged for my second brother and me to learn Rama Raksha. We got it by heart, and made it a rule to recite it every morning after the bath. The practice was kept up as long as we were in Porbandar. As soon as we reached Rajkot, it was forgotten. For I had not much belief in it. I recited it partly because of my pride in being able to recite Rama Raksha with correct pronunciation.

What, however, left a deep impression on me was the reading of the Ramayana before my father. During part of his illness my father was in Porbandar. There every evening he used to listen to the Ramayana. The reader was a great devotee of Rama—Ladha Maharaj of Bileswar. It was said of him that he cured himself of his leprosy not by any medicine, but by applying to the affected parts bilva leaves which had been cast away after being offered to the image of Mahadeva in Bileswar temple, and by the regular repetition of Ramanama. His faith, it was said, had made him whole. This may or may not be true. We at any rate believed the story. And it is a fact that when Ladha Maharaj began his reading of the Ramayana his body

1 Name of Rama, name of God
2 Vide “Speech at Suppressed Classes Conference, Ahmedabad”, April 13, 1921.
3 A hymn invoking Rama’s protection
4 Lord Siva, God of destruction in the Hindu Trinity
5 St. Matthew, ix. 22 and St. Mark and St. Luke was entirely free from leprosy. He had a melodious voice. He would sing the dohas (couplets) and chopais (quatrain), and explain them, losing himself in the discourse and carrying his listeners along with him. I must have been thirteen at that time, but I quite remember being enraptured by his reading. That laid the foundation of my deep devotion to the Ramayana. Today I regard the Ramayana of Tul-asidas as the greatest book in all devotional literature.

A few months after this we came to Rajkot. There was no Ramayana reading there. The Bhagavata, however, used to be read on every Ekadashi day. Sometimes I attended the reading, but the reciter was uninspiring. Today I see that the Bhagavata is a book which can evoke religious fervour. I have read it in Gujarati with intense interest. But when I heard portions of the original read by Pandit Madan Mohan Malaviya during my twenty-one days’ fast, I wished I had heard it in my childhood from such a devotee as he is, so that I could have formed a liking for it at an early age. Impressions formed at that age strike roots deep down into one’s nature, and it is my perpetual regret that I was not fortunate enough to hear more good books of this kind read during that period.

In Rajkot, however, I got an early grounding in toleration for all branches of Hinduism and sister religions. For my father and mother would visit the Haveli as also Shiva’s and Rama’s temples, and would take or send us youngsters there. Jain monks also would pay frequent visits to my father, and would even go out of their way to accept food from us—non-Jains. They would have talks with my father on subjects religious and mundane.

He had, besides, Mussalman and Parsi friends, who would talk to him about their own faiths, and he would listen to them always with respect, and often with interest. Being his nurse, I often had a chance to be present at these talks. These many things combined to inculcate in me a toleration for all faiths.

Only Christianity was at the time an exception. I developed a sort of dislike for it. And for a reason. In those days Christian missionaries used to stand in a corner near the high school and hold forth, pouring abuse on Hindus and their gods. I could not endure this. I must have stood there to hear them once only, but that was enough to dissuade me from repeating the experiment. About the same time, I heard of a well-known Hindu having been converted to

---

1. Eleventh day of the bright and the dark half of a lunar month.
2. From September 17, to October 8, 1924, to bring about Hindu-Muslim unity; vide “Letter to Mahomed Ali” & “Silence Day Note”, September 17, 1924, and “Statement before Breaking Silence”, October 8, 1924.
Christianity. It was the talk of the town that, when he was baptized, he had to eat beef and drink liquor, that he also had to change his clothes, and that thenceforth he began to go about in European costume including a hat. These things got on my nerves. Surely, thought I, a religion that compelled one to eat beef, drink liquor, and change one’s own clothes did not deserve the name. I also heard that the new convert had already begun abusing the religion of his ancestors, their customs and their country. All these things created in me a dislike for Christianity.

But the fact that I had learnt to be tolerant to other religions did not mean that I had any living faith in God. I happened, about this time, to come across Manusmriti which was amongst my father’s collection. The story of the creation and similar things in it did not impress me very much, but on the contrary made me incline somewhat towards atheism.

There was a cousin of mine, still alive, for whose intellect I had great regard. To him I turned with my doubts. But he could not resolve them. He sent me away with this answer: ‘When you grow up, you will be able to solve these doubts yourself. These questions ought not to be raised at your age.’ I was silenced, but was not comforted. Chapters about diet and the like in Manusmriti seemed to me to run contrary to daily practice. To my doubts as to this also, I got the same answer. ‘With intellect more developed and with more reading I shall understand it better,’ I said to myself.

Manusmriti at any rate did not then teach me ahimsa. I have told the story of my meat-eating. Manusmriti seemed to support it. I also felt that it was quite moral to kill serpents, bugs and the like. I remember to have killed at that age bugs and such other insects, regarding it as a duty.

But one thing took deep root in me—the conviction that morality is the basis of things, and that truth is the substance of all morality. Truth became my sole objective. It began to grow in magnitude every day, and my definition of it also has been ever widening.

A Gujarati didactic stanza likewise gripped my mind and heart. Its precept—return good for evil—became my guiding principle. It became such a passion with me that I began numerous experiments in it. Here are those (for me) wonderful lines:

For a bowl of water give a goodly meal;
For a kindly greeting bow thou down with zeal;

---

1 Laws of Manu, Hindu law-giver. They have the sanction of religion.
For a simple penny pay thou back with gold;
If thy life be rescued, life do not withhold.
Thus the words and actions of the wise regard;
Every little service tenfold they reward.
But the truly noble know all men as one,
And return with gladness good for evil done.¹

CHAPTER XI : PREPARATION FOR ENGLAND

I passed the matriculation examination in 1887. It then used to be held at two centres, Ahmedabad and Bombay. The general poverty of the country naturally led Kathiawar students to prefer the nearer and the cheaper centre. The poverty of my family likewise dictated to me the same choice. This was my first journey from Rajkot to Ahmedabad and that too without a companion.

My elders wanted me to pursue my studies at college after the matriculation. There was a college in Bhavnagar as well as in Bombay, and as the former was cheaper, I decided to go there and join the Samaldas College. I went, but found myself entirely at sea. Everything was difficult. I could not follow, let alone taking interest in, the professors’ lectures. It was no fault of theirs. The professors in that College were regarded as first-rate. But I was so raw. At the end of the first term, I returned home.

We had in Mavji Dave¿, who was a shrewd and learned Brahmin, an old friend and adviser of the family. He had kept up his connection with the family even after my father’s death. He happened to visit us during my vacation. In conversation with my mother and elder brother, he inquired about my studies.

Learning that I was at Samaldas College, he said: ‘The times are changed. And none of you can expect to succeed to your father’s gadi’ without having had a proper education. Now as this boy is still pursuing his studies, you should all look to him to keep the gadi. It will take him four or five years to get his B.A. degree, which will at best qualify him for a sixty rupees’ post, not for a Diwanship. If like my son he went in for law¿, it would take him still longer, by which time there would be a host of lawyers, aspiring for a Diwan’s post. I would far rather that you sent him to England. My son Kevalram says

¹ By Shamal Bhatt
² Alias Mavji Joshi, a leading lawyer of Kathiawar; for another account of the decision on going to England and of the voyage to England, vide “London Diary”, November 12, 1888.
³ Throne, seat
it is very easy to become a barrister. In three years’ time he will return. Also expenses will not exceed four to five thousand rupees. Think of that barrister who has just come back from England. How stylishly he lives! He could get the Diwanship for the asking. I would strongly advise you to send Mohandas to England this very year. Kevalram has numerous friends in England. He will give notes of introduction to them, and Mohandas will have an easy time of it there.’

Joshiji—that is how we used to call old Mavji Dave—turned to me with complete assurance, and asked: ‘Would you not rather go to England than study here?’ Nothing could have been more welcome to me. I was fighting shy of my difficult studies. So I jumped at the proposal and said that the sooner I was sent the better. It was no easy business to pass examinations quickly. Could I not be sent to qualify for the medical profession?

My brother interrupted me: ‘Father never liked it. He had you in mind when he said that we Vaishnavas should have nothing to do with dissection of dead bodies. Father intended you for the bar.’

Joshiji chimed in: ‘I am not opposed to the medical profession as was Gandhiji. Our Shastras are not against it. But a medical degree will not make a Diwan of you, and I want you to be Diwan, or if possible something better. Only in that way could you take under your protecting care your large family. The times are fast changing and getting harder every day. It is the wisest thing therefore to become a barrister.’ Turning to my mother he said: ‘Now, I must leave. Pray ponder over what I have said. When I come here next I shall expect to hear of preparations for England. Be sure to let me know if I can assist in any way.’

Joshiji went away, and I began building castles in the air.

My elder brother was greatly exercised in his mind. How was he to find the wherewithal to send me? And was it proper to trust a young man like me to go abroad alone?

My mother was sorely perplexed. She did not like the idea of parting with me. This is how she tried to put me off: ‘Uncle,’ she said, is now the eldest member of the family. He should first be consulted. If he consents we will consider the matter.’

My brother had another idea. He said to me: ‘We have a certain claim on the Porbandar State. Mr. Lely is the Administrator. He thinks highly of our family and uncle is in his good books. It is just possible that he might recommend you for some State help for your education in England.’

I liked all this and got ready to start off for Porbandar. There was no railway in those days. It was a five days’ bullock-cart journey. I have already said that I was a coward. But at that moment my cowardice vanished before the desire to go to England, which completely possessed me. I hired a bullock-cart as far as Dhoraji, and from Dhoraji I took a camel in order to get to Porbandar a day quicker. This was my first camel-ride.

I arrived at last, did obeisance to my uncle, and told him everything. He thought it over and said: ‘I am not sure whether it is possible for one to stay in England without prejudice to one’s own religion. From all I have heard, I have my doubts. When I meet these big barristers, I see no difference between their life and that of Europeans. They know no scruples regarding food. Cigars are never out of their mouths. They dress as shamelessly as Englishmen. All that would not be in keeping with our family tradition. I am shortly going on a pilgrimage and have not many years to live. At the threshold of death, how dare I give you permission to go to England, to cross the seas? But I will not stand in your way. It is your mother’s permission which really matters. If she permits you, then godspeed! Tell her I will not interfere. You will go with my blessings.’

‘I could expect nothing more from you,’ said I. ‘I shall now try to win mother over. But would you not recommend me to Mr. Lely?’

‘How can I do that?’ said he. ‘But he is a good man. You ask for an appointment telling him how you are connected. He will certainly give you one and may even help you.’

I cannot say why my uncle did not give me a note of recommendation. I have a faint idea that he hesitated to co-operate directly in my going to England, which was in his opinion an irreligious act.

I wrote to Mr. Lely, who asked me to see him at his residence. He saw me as he was ascending the staircase; and saying curtly, ‘Pass your B.A. first and then see me. No help can be given you now’, he hurried upstairs. I had made elaborate preparations to meet him. I had carefully learnt up a few sentences and had bowed low and saluted him with both hands. But all to no purpose!

I thought of my wife’s ornaments. I thought of my elder brother, in whom I had the utmost faith. He was generous to a fault, and he loved me as his son.

I returned to Rajkot from Porbandar and reported all that had happened. I consulted Joshi, who of course advised even incurring a debt if necessary. I suggested the disposal of my wife’s ornaments, which could fetch about two to three thousand rupees. My brother promised to find the money somehow.

My mother, however, was still unwilling. She had begun making minute inquiries. Someone had told her that young men got lost in England. Someone else had said that they took to meat; and yet another that they could not live there without liquor. 'How about all this?' she asked me. I said: ‘Will you not trust me? I shall not lie to you. I swear that I shall not touch any of those things. If there were any such danger, would Joshiji let me go?’

‘I can trust you,’ she said. ‘But how can I trust you in a distant land? I am dazed and know not what to do. I will ask Becharji Swami.’

Becharji Swami was originally a Modh Bania, but had now become a Jain monk. He too was a family adviser like Joshiji. He came to my help, and said: ‘I shall get the boy solemnly to take the three vows, and then he can be allowed to go.’ He administered the oath and I vowed not to touch wine, woman and meat. This done, my mother gave her permission.

The high school had a send-off in my honour. It was an uncommon thing for a young man of Rajkot to go to England. I had written out a few words of thanks. But I could scarcely stammer them out. I remember how my head reeled and how my whole frame shook as I stood up to read them.¹

With the blessings of my elders, I started for Bombay. This was my first journey from Rajkot to Bombay. My brother accompanied me. But there is many a slip, twixt the cup and the lip. There were difficulties to be faced in Bombay.

CHAPTER XII : OUTCASTE

With my mother’s permission and blessings, I set off exultantly for Bombay, leaving my wife with a baby of a few months. But on arrival there friends told my brother that the Indian Ocean was rough in June and July, and as this was my first voyage, I should not be allowed to sail until November. Someone also reported that a steamer had just been sunk in a gale. This made my brother uneasy, and he refused to take the risk of allowing me to sail immediately. Leaving me with a friend in Bombay, he returned to Rajkot to resume his duty. He put the money for my travelling expenses in the keeping of a brother-in-law, and left word with some friends to give me whatever help I might need.

Time hung heavily on my hands in Bombay. I dreamt continually of going to England.

Meanwhile my caste people were agitated over my going abroad. No Modh Bania had been to England up to now, and if I dared to do so, I ought to be brought to book! A general meeting of the caste was called and I was summoned to appear before it. I went. How I suddenly managed to muster up courage I do not know. Nothing daunted, and without the slightest hesitation, I came before the meeting. The Sheth—the headman of the community—who was distantly related to me and had been on very good terms with my father, thus accosted me:

¹ Vide “Speech at Alfred High School”, July 4, 1888.

‘In the opinion of the caste, your proposal to go to England is not proper. Our religion forbids voyage abroad. We have also heard that it is not possible to live there without compromising our religion. One is obliged to eat and drink with Europeans!’

To which I replied: ‘I do not think it is at all against our religion to go to England. I intend going there for further studies. And I have already solemnly promised to my mother to abstain from three things you fear most. I am sure the vow will keep me safe.’

‘But we tell you,’ rejoined the Sheth, ‘that it is not possible to keep our religion there. You know my relations with your father and you ought to listen to my advice.’

‘I know those relations,’ said I. ‘And you are as an elder to me. But I am helpless in this matter. I cannot alter my resolve to go to England. My father’s friend and adviser, who is a learned Brahmin, sees no objection to my going to England, and my mother and brother have also given me their permission.’

‘But will you disregard the orders of the caste?’

‘I am really helpless. I think the caste should not interfere in the matter.’

This incensed the Sheth. He swore at me. I sat unmoved. So the Sheth pronounced his order: ‘This boy shall be treated as an outcaste from today. Whoever helps him or goes to see him off at the dock shall be punishable with a fine of one rupee four annas.’

The order had no effect on me, and I took my leave of the Sheth. But I wondered how my brother would take it. Fortunately he remained firm and wrote to assure me that I had his permission to go, the Sheth’s order notwithstanding.

The incident, however, made me more anxious than ever to sail. What would happen if they succeeded in bringing pressure to bear on my brother? Supposing something unforeseen happened? As I was thus worrying over my predicament, I heard that a Junagadh vakil was going to England, for being called to the bar, by a boat sailing on the 4th of September. I met the friends to whose care my brother had commended me. They also agreed that I should not let go the opportunity of going in such company. There was no time to be lost. I wired to my brother for permission, which he granted. I asked my brother-in-law to give me the money. But he referred to the order of the Sheth and said that he could not afford to lose caste. I then sought a friend of the family and requested him to accommodate me to the extent of my passage and sundries, and to recover the loan from my brother. The friend was not only good enough to accede to my request, but he cheered me up as well. I was so thankful. With part of the money I at once purchased the passage. Then I had to equip myself for the voyage. There was another friend who had experience in the matter. He got clothes and other things ready. Some of the clothes I liked and some I did not like at all. The necktie, which I delighted in wearing later, I then abhorred. The short jacket I looked upon as immodest. But this dislike was nothing before the desire to go to England, which was uppermost in me. Of provisions also I had enough and to spare for the voyage. A berth was reserved for me by my friends in the same cabin as that of Sjt. Tryambakrai Mazmudar, the Junagadh vakil. They also commended me to him. He was an experienced man of mature age and knew the world. I was yet a stripling of eighteen without any experience of the world. Sjt. Mazmudar told my friends not to worry about me.

I sailed at last from Bombay on the 4th of September.

CHAPTER XIII : IN LONDON AT LAST

I did not feel at all sea-sick. But as the days passed, I became fidgety. I felt shy even in speaking to the steward. I was quite unaccustomed to talking English, and except for Sjt. Mazmudar all the other passengers in the second saloon were English. I could not speak to them. For I could rarely follow their remarks when they came up to speak to me, and even when I understood I could not reply. I had to frame every sentence in my mind, before I could bring it out. I was innocent of the use of knives and forks and had not the boldness to inquire what dishes on the menu were free of meat. I therefore never took meals at table but always had them in my cabin, and they consisted principally of sweets and fruits which I had brought with me. Sjt. Mazmudar had no difficulty, and he mixed with everybody. He would move about freely on deck, while I hid myself in the cabin the whole day, only venturing up on deck when there were but few people. Sjt. Mazmudar kept pleading with me to associate with the passengers and to talk with them freely. He told me that lawyers should have a long tongue, and related to me his legal experiences. He advised me to take every possible opportunity of talking English, and not to mind making mistakes which were obviously unavoidable with a foreign tongue. But nothing could make me conquer my shyness.

---

1 In 1888

An English passenger, taking kindly to me, drew me into conversation. He was older than I. He asked me what I ate, what I was, where I was going, why I was shy, and so on. He also advised me to come to table. He laughed at my insistence on abjuring meat, and said in a friendly way when we were in the Red Sea: ‘It is all very well so far but you will have to revise your decision in the Bay of Biscay. And it is so cold in England that one cannot possibly live there without meat.’

‘But I have heard that people can live there without eating meat,’ I said.

‘Rest assured it is a fib,’ said he. ‘No one, to my knowledge, lives there without being a meat-eater. Don’t you see that I am not asking you to take liquor, though I do so? But I do think you should eat meat, for you cannot live without it.’

‘I thank you for your kind advice, but I have solemnly promised to my mother not to touch meat, and therefore I cannot think of taking it. If it be found impossible to get on without it, I will far rather go back to India than eat meat in order to remain there.’

We entered the Bay of Biscay, but I did not begin to feel the need either of meat or liquor. I had been advised to collect certificates of my having abstained from meat, and I asked the English friend to give me one. He gladly gave it and I treasured it for some time. But when I saw later that one could get such a certificate in spite of being a meat-eater, it lost all its charm for me. If my word was not to be trusted, where was the use of possessing a certificate in the matter?

However, we reached Southampton, as far as I remember, on a Saturday. On the boat I had worn a black suit, the white flannel one, which my friends had got me, having been kept especially for wearing when I landed. I had thought that white clothes would suit me better when I stepped ashore, and therefore I did so in white flannels. Those were the last days of September, and I found I was the only person wearing such clothes. I left in charge of an agent of Grindlay and Co. all my kit, including the keys, seeing that many others had done the same and I must follow suit.

I had four notes of introduction: to Dr. P. J. Mehta, to Sjt. Dalpatram Shukla, to Prince Ranjitsinhji and to Dadabhai Naoroji. Someone on board had advised us to put up at the Victoria Hotel in London. Sjt. Mazmudar and I accordingly went there. The shame of being the only person in white clothes was already too much for me. And when at the Hotel I was told that I should not get my things from Grindlay’s the next day, it being a Sunday, I was exasperated.

Dr. Mehta, to whom I had wired from Southampton, called at about eight o’clock the same evening. He gave me a hearty greeting. He smiled at my being in flannels. As we were talking, I casually picked up his top-hat, and trying to see how smooth it was, passed my hand over it the wrong way and disturbed the fur. Dr. Mehta looked somewhat angrily at what I was doing and stopped me. But the mischief had been done. The incident was a warning for the future. This was my first lesson in European etiquette, into the details of which Dr. Mehta humorously initiated me. ‘Do not touch other people’s things,’ he said. ‘Do not ask questions as we usually do in India on first acquaintance; do not talk loudly; never address people as ‘sir’ whilst speaking to them as we do in India, only servants and subordinates address their masters that way.’ And so on and so forth. He also told me that it was very expensive to live in a hotel and recommended that I should live with a private family. We deferred consideration of the matter until Monday.

Sjt. Mazmudar and I found the hotel to be a trying affair. It was also very expensive. There was, however, a Sindhi fellow-passenger from Malta who had become friends with Sjt. Mazmudar, and as he was not a stranger to London, he offered to find rooms for us. We agreed, and on Monday, as soon as we got our baggage, we paid up our bills and went to the rooms rented for us by the Sindhi friend. I remember my hotel bill came to £3, an amount which shocked me. And I had practically starved in spite of this heavy bill! For I could relish nothing. When I did not like one thing, I asked for another, but had to pay for both just the same. The fact is that all this while I had depended on the provisions which I had brought with me from Bombay.

I was very uneasy even in the new rooms. I would continually think of my home and country. My mother’s love always haunted me. At night the tears would stream down my cheeks and home memories of all sorts made sleep out of the question. It was impossible to share my misery with anyone. And even if I could have done so, where was the use? I knew of nothing that would soothe me. Everything was strange—the people, their ways, and even their dwellings. I was a complete novice in the matters of English etiquette and continually had to be on my guard. There was the additional inconvenience of the vegetarian vow. Even the dishes that I could eat were tasteless and insipid. I thus found myself between Scylla and Charybdis. England I could not bear, but to return to India was not to be thought of. Now that I had come, I must finish the three years, said the inner voice."

CHAPTER XIV: MY CHOICE

Dr. Mehta went on Monday to the Victoria Hotel expecting to find me there. He discovered that we had left, got our new address, and met me at our rooms. Through sheer folly I had managed to get ringworm on the boat. For washing and bathing we used to have seawater, in which soap is not soluble. I, however, used soap, taking its use to be a sign of civilization, with the result that instead of cleaning the skin it made it greasy. This gave me ringworm. I showed it to Dr. Mehta, who told me to apply acetic acid. I remember how the burning acid made me cry. Dr. Mehta inspected my room and its appointments and shook his head in disapproval. ‘This place won’t do,’ he said. ‘We come to England not so much for the purpose of studies as for gaining experience of English life and customs. And for this you need to live with a family. But before you do so, I think you had better serve a period of apprenticeship with——. I will take you there.’

I gratefully accepted the suggestion and removed to the friend’s rooms. He was all kindness and attention. He treated me as his own brother, initiated me into English ways and manners, and accustomed me to talking the language. My food, however, became a serious question. I could not relish boiled vegetables cooked without salt or condiments. The landlady was at a loss to know what to prepare for me. We had oatmeal porridge for breakfast, which was fairly filling, but I always starved at lunch and dinner. The friend continually reasoned with me to eat meat, but I always pleaded my vow and then remained silent. Both for luncheon and dinner we had spinach and bread and jam too. I was a good eater and had a capacious stomach; but I was ashamed to ask for more than two or three slices of bread, as it did not seem correct to do so. Added to this, there was no milk either for lunch or dinner. The friend once got disgusted with this state of things, and said: ‘Had you been my own brother, I would have sent you packing. What is the value of a vow made before an illiterate mother, and in ignorance of conditions here? It is no vow at all. It would not be regarded as a vow in law. It is pure superstition to stick to such a promise. And I tell you this persistence will not help you to gain anything here. You confess to having eaten and relished meat. You took it where it was absolutely unnecessary, and will not where it is quite essential. What a pity!’

But I was adamant.

Day in and day out the friend would argue, but I had an eternal negative to face him with. The more he argued, the more uncompromising I became. Daily I would pray for God’s protection and get it. Not that I had any idea of God. It was faith that was at work—faith of which the seed had been sown by the good nurse Rambha.

One day the friend began to read to me Bentham’s Theory of Utility. I was at my wit’s end. The language was too difficult for me to understand. He began to expound it. I said: ‘Pray excuse me. These abstruse things are beyond me. I admit it is necessary to eat meat. But I cannot break my vow. I cannot argue about it. I am sure I cannot meet you in argument. But please give me up as foolish or obstinate. I appreciate your love for me and I know you to be my well-wisher. I also know that you are telling me again and again about this because you feel for me. But I am helpless. A vow is a vow. It cannot be broken.’

The friend looked at me in surprise. He closed the book and said: ‘All right. I will not argue any more.’ I was glad. He never discussed the subject again. But he did not cease to worry about me. He smoked and drank, but he never asked me to do so. In fact he asked me to remain away from both. His one anxiety was lest I should become very weak without meat, and thus be unable to feel at home in England.

That is how I served my apprenticeship for a month. The friend’s house was in Richmond, and it was not possible to go to London more than once or twice a week. Dr. Mehta and Sjt. Dalpatram Shukla therefore decided that I should be put with some family. Sjt. Shukla hit upon an Anglo-Indian’s house in West Kensington and placed me there. The landlady was a widow. I told her about my vow. The old lady promised to look after me properly, and I took up my residence in her house. Here too I practically had to starve. I had sent for sweets and other eatables from home, but nothing had yet come. Everything was insipid. Every day the old lady asked me whether I liked the food, but what could she do? I was still as shy as ever and dared not ask for more than was put before me. She had two daughters. They insisted on serving me with an extra slice or two of bread. But little did they know that nothing less than a loaf would have filled me.

But I had found my feet now. I had not yet started upon my regular studies. I had just begun reading newspapers, thanks to Sjt. Shukla. In India I had never read a newspaper. But here I succeeded in cultivating a liking for them by regular reading. I always glanced over The Daily News, The Daily Telegraph, and The Pall Mall Gazette. This took me hardly an hour. I therefore began to wander about. I launched out in search of a vegetarian restaurant. The landlady had told me that there were such places in the city. I would trot ten or twelve miles each day, go into a cheap restaurant and eat my fill of bread, but would never be satisfied. During these wanderings I once hit on a vegetarian restaurant in Farringdon Street. The sight of it filled me with the same joy that a child feels on getting a thing after its own heart. Before I entered I noticed books for sale exhibited under a glass window near the door. I saw among them Salt’s Plea for Vegetarianism. This I purchased for a shilling and went straight to the dining-room. This was my first hearty meal since my arrival in England. God had come to my aid.

I read Salt’s book from cover to cover and was very much impressed by it. From the date of reading this book, I may claim to have become a vegetarian by choice. I blessed the day on which I had taken the vow before my mother. I had all along abstained from meat in the interests of truth and of the vow I had taken, but had wished at the same time that every Indian should be a meat-eater, and had looked forward to being one myself freely and openly some day, and to enlisting others in the cause. The choice was now made in favour of vegetarianism, the spread of which henceforward became by mission.

CHAPTER XV : PLAYING THE ENGLISH GENTLEMAN

My faith in vegetarianism grew on me from day to day. Salt’s book whetted my appetite for dietetic studies. I went in for all books available on vegetarianism and read them. One of these, Howard Williams’s The Ethics of Diet, was a ‘biographical history of the literature of humane dietetics from the earliest period to the present day’.
It tried to make out, that all philosophers and prophets from Pythagoras and Jesus down to those of the present age were vegetarians. Dr. Anna Kingsford’s The Perfect Way in Diet was also an attractive book. Dr. Allinson’s writings on health and hygiene were likewise very helpful. He advocated a curative system based on regulation of the dietary of patients. Himself a vegetarian, he prescribed for his patients also a strictly vegetarian diet. The result of reading all this literature was that dietetic experiments came to take an important place in my life. Health was the principal consideration of these experiments to begin with. But later on religion became the supreme motive.

Meanwhile my friend had not ceased to worry about me. His love for me led him to think that, if I persisted in my objections to meat-eating, I should not only develop a weak constitution, but should remain a duffer, because I should never feel at home in English society. When he came to know that I had begun to interest myself in books on vegetarianism, he was afraid lest these studies should muddle my head; that I should fritter my life away in experiments, forgetting my own work, and become a crank. He therefore made one last effort to reform me. He one day invited me to go to the theatre. Before the play we were to dine together at the Holborn Restaurant, to me a palatial place and the first big restaurant I had been to since leaving the Victoria Hotel. The stay at that hotel had scarcely been a helpful experience, for I had not lived there with my wits about me. The friend had planned to take me to this restaurant evidently imagining that modesty would forbid any questions. And it was a very big company of diners in the midst of which my friend and I sat sharing a table between us. The first course was soup. I wondered what it might be made of, but durst not ask the friend about it. I therefore summoned the waiter. My friend saw the movement and sternly asked across the table what was the matter. With considerable hesitation I told him that I wanted to inquire if the soup was a vegetable soup. ‘You are too clumsy for decent society,’ he passionately exclaimed. ‘If you cannot behave yourself, you had better go. Feed in some other restaurant and await me outside.’ This delighted me. Out I went. There was a vegetarian restaurant close by, but it was closed. So I went without food that night. I accompanied my friend to the theatre, but he never said a word about the scene I had created. On my part of course there was nothing to say.

That was the last friendly tussle we had. It did not affect our relations in the least. I could see and appreciate the love by which all my friend’s efforts were actuated, and my respect for him was all the greater on account of our differences in thought and action.

But I decided that I should put him at ease, that I should assure him that I would be clumsy no more, but try to become polished and make up for my vegetarianism by cultivating other accomplishments which fitted one for polite society. And for this purpose I undertook the all too impossible task of becoming an English gentleman.

The clothes after the Bombay cut that I was wearing were, I thought, unsuitable for English society, and I got new ones at the Army and Navy Stores. I also went in for a chimney-pot hat costing nineteen shillings—an excessive price in those days. Not content with this, I wasted ten pounds on an evening suit made in Bond Street, the centre of fashionable life in London; and got my good and noble-hearted brother to send me a double watch-chain of gold. It was not correct to wear a ready-made tie and I learnt the art of tying one for myself. While in India, the mirror had been a luxury permitted on the days when the family barber gave me a shave. Here I wasted ten minutes every day before a huge mirror, watching myself arranging my tie and parting my hair in the correct fashion. My hair was by no means soft, and every day it meant a regular struggle with the brush to keep it in position. Each time the hat was put on and off, the hand would automatically move towards the head to adjust the hair, not to mention the other civilized habit of the hand every now and then operating for the same purpose when sitting in polished society.

As if all this were not enough to make me look the thing, I directed my attention to other details that were supposed to go towards the making of an English gentleman. I was told it was necessary for me to take lessons in dancing, French and elocution. French was not only the language of neighbouring France, but it was the lingua franca of the Continent over which I had a desire to travel. I decided to take dancing lessons at a class and paid down £3 as fees for a term. I must have taken about six lessons in three weeks. But it was beyond me to achieve anything like rhythmic motion. I could not follow the piano and hence found it impossible to keep time. What then was I to do? The recluse in the fable kept a cat to keep off the rats, and then a cow to feed the cat with milk, and a man to keep the cow and so on. My ambitions also grew like the family of the recluse. I thought I should learn to play the violin in order to cultivate an ear for Western music. So I invested £3 in a violin and something more in fees. I sought a third teacher to give me lessons in elocution and paid him a preliminary fee of a guinea. He recommended Bell’s Standard Elocutionist as the text-book, which I purchased. And I began with a speech of Pitt’s.

But Mr. Bell rang the bell of alarm in my ear and I awoke.

I had not to spend a lifetime in England, I said to myself. What then was the use of learning elocution? And how could dancing make a gentleman of me? The violin I could learn even in India. I was a student and ought to go on with my studies. I should qualify myself to join the Inns of Court. If my character made a gentleman of me, so much the better. Otherwise I should forgo the ambition.

These and similar thoughts possessed me, and I expressed them in a letter which I addressed to the elocution teacher, requesting him to excuse me from further lessons. I had taken only two or three. I wrote a similar letter to the dancing teacher, and went personally to the violin teacher with a request to dispose of the violin for any price it might fetch. She was rather friendly to me, so I told her how I had discovered that I was pursuing a false idea. She encouraged me in the determination to make a complete change.

This infatuation must have lasted about three months. The punctiliousness in dress persisted for years. But henceforward I became a student.

CHAPTER XVI : CHANGES

Let no one imagine that my experiments in dancing and the like marked a stage of indulgence in my life. The reader will have noticed that even then I had my wits about me. That period of infatuation was not unrelieved by a certain amount of self-introspection on my part. I kept account of every farthing I spent, and my expenses were carefully calculated. Every little item, such as omnibus fares or postage or a couple of coppers spent on newspapers, would be entered, and the balance struck every evening before going to bed. That habit has stayed with me ever since, and I know that as a result, though I have had to handle public funds amounting to lakhs, I have succeeded in exercising strict economy in their disbursement and, instead of outstanding debts, have had invariably a surplus balance in respect of all the movements I have led. Let every youth take a leaf out of my book and make it a point to account for everything that comes into and goes out of his pocket, and like me he is sure to be a gainer in the end.

As I kept strict watch over my way of living, I could see that it was necessary to economize. I therefore decided to reduce my expenses by half. My accounts showed numerous items spent on fares. Again my living with a family meant the payment of a regular weekly bill. It also included the courtesy of occasionally taking members of the family out to dinner, and likewise attending parties with them. All this involved heavy items for conveyances, especially as, if the friend was a lady, custom required that the man should pay all the expenses. Also dining out meant extra cost, as no deduction could be made from the regular weekly bill for meals not taken. It seemed to me that all these items could be saved, as likewise the drain on my purse caused through a false sense of propriety.

So I decided to take rooms on my own account, instead of living any longer in a family, and also to remove from place to place according to the work I had to do, thus gaining experience at the same time. The rooms were so selected as to enable me to reach the place of business on foot in half an hour, and so save fares. Before this I had always some kind of conveyance whenever I went anywhere and had to find extra time for walks. The new arrangement combined walks and economy, as it meant a saving of fares and gave me walks of eight or ten miles a day. It was mainly this habit of long walks that kept me practically free from illness throughout my stay in England and gave me a fairly strong body.

---

1 Vide “Satyagraha in South Africa — Chapter XIV : Deputation to England”.

Thus I rented a suite of rooms; one for a sitting-room and another for a bedroom. This was the second stage. The third was yet to come.

These changes saved me half the expense. But how was I to utilize the time? I knew that Bar examinations did not require much study, and I therefore did not feel pressed for time. My weak English was a perpetual worry to me. Mr. (afterwards Sir Frederic) Lely’s words, ‘Graduate first and then come to me,’ still rang in my ears. I should, I thought, not only be called to the Bar, but have some literary degree as well. I inquired about the Oxford and Cambridge University courses, consulted a few friends, and found that, if I elected to go to either of these places, that would mean greater expense and a much longer stay in England than I was prepared for. A friend suggested that, if I really wanted to have the satisfaction of taking a difficult examination, I should pass the London Matriculation. It meant a good deal of labour and much addition to my stock of general knowledge, without any extra expense worth the name. I welcomed the suggestion. But the syllabus frightened me. Latin and a modern language were compulsory! How was I to manage Latin? But the friend entered a strong plea for it: ‘Latin is very valuable to lawyers. Knowledge of Latin is very useful in understanding law-books. And one paper in Roman Law is entirely in Latin. Besides, a knowledge of Latin means greater command over the English language.’ It went home and I decided to learn Latin, no matter how difficult it might be. French I had already begun, so I thought that should be the modern language. I joined a private Matriculation class. Examinations were held every six months and I had only five months at my disposal. It was an almost impossible task for me. But the aspirant after being an English gentleman chose to convert himself into a serious student. I framed my own time-table to the minute; but neither my intelligence nor memory promised to enable me to tackle Latin and French besides other subjects within the given period. The result was that I was ploughed in Latin. I was sorry but did not lose heart. I had acquired a taste for Latin, also I thought my French would be all the better for another trial and I would select a new subject in the science group. Chemistry which was my subject in science had no attraction for want of experiments, whereas it ought to have been a deeply interesting study. It was one of the compulsory subjects in India and so I had selected it for the London Matriculation. This time, however, I chose Heat and Light instead of Chemistry. It was said to be easy and I found it to be so.

With my preparation for another trial, I made an effort to simplify my life still further. I felt that my way of living did not yet befit the modest means of my family. The thought of my struggling brother, who nobly responded to my regular calls for monetary help, deeply pained me. I saw that most of those who were spending from eight to fifteen pounds monthly had the advantage of scholarships. I had before me examples of much simpler living. I came across a fair number of poor students living more humbly than I. One of them was staying in the slums in a room at two shillings a week and living on twopence worth of cocoa and bread per meal from Lockhart’s cheap Cocoa Rooms. It was far from me to think of emulating him, but I felt I could surely have one room instead of two and cook some of my meals at home. That would be a saving of four to five pounds each month. I also came across books on simple living. I gave up the suite of rooms and rented one instead, invested in a stove, and began cooking my breakfast at home. The process scarcely took me more than twenty minutes, for there was only oatmeal porridge to cook and water to boil for cocoa. I had lunch out and for dinner bread and cocoa at home. Thus I managed to live on a shilling and three pence a day. This was also a period of intensive study. Plain living saved me plenty of time and I passed my examination.

Let not the reader think that this living made my life by any means a dreary affair. On the contrary the change harmonized my inward and outward life. It was also more in keeping with the means of my family. My life was certainly more truthful and my soul knew no bounds of joy.

CHAPTER XVII : EXPERIMENTS IN DIETETICS

As I searched myself deeper, the necessity for changes both internal and external began to grow on me. As soon as, or even before, I made alterations in my expenses and my way of living, I began to make changes in my diet. I saw that the writers on vegetarianism had examined the question very minutely, attacking it in its religious, scientific, practical and medical aspects. Ethically they had arrived at the conclusion that man’s supremacy over the lower animals meant not that the former should prey upon the latter, but that the higher should protect the lower, and that there should be mutual aid between the two as between man and man. They had also brought out the truth that man eats not for enjoyment but to live. And some of them accordingly suggested and effected in their lives abstention not only from fleshmeat but from eggs and milk. Scientifically some had concluded that man’s physical structure showed that he was not meant to be a cooking but a frugivorous animal, that he could take only his mother’s milk and, as soon as he had teeth, should begin to take solid foods. Medically they had suggested the rejection of all spices and condiments. According to the practical and economic argument they had demonstrated that a vegetarian diet was the least expensive. All these considerations had their effect on me, and I came across vegetarians of all these types in vegetarian restaurants. There was a Vegetarian Society in England with a weekly journal¹ of its own. I subscribed to the weekly, joined the Society and very shortly found myself on the Executive Committee. Here I came in contact with those who were regarded as pillars of vegetarianism, and began my own experiments in dietetics.

I stopped taking the sweets and condiments I had got from home. The mind having taken a different turn, the fondness for condiments wore away, and I now relished the boiled spinach, which in Richmond tasted insipid, cooked without condiments. Many such experiments taught me that the real seat of taste was not the tongue but the mind.

The economic consideration was of course constantly before me. There was in those days a body of opinion which regarded tea and coffee as harmful and favoured cocoa. And as I was convinced that one should eat only articles that sustained the body, I gave up tea and coffee as a rule, and substituted cocoa.

There were two divisions in the restaurants I used to visit. One division, which was patronized by fairly well-to-do people, provided any number of courses from which one chose and paid for a la carte, each dinner thus costing from one to two shillings. The other division provided six-penny dinners of three courses with a slice of bread. In my days of strict frugality I usually dined in the second division.

There were many minor experiments going on along with the main one; as for example, giving up starchy foods at one time; living on bread and fruit alone at another, and once living on cheese, milk and eggs. This last experiment is worth noting. It lasted not even a fortnight.² The reformer who advocated starchless food had spoken highly of eggs and held that eggs were not meat. It was apparent that there was no injury done to living creatures in taking eggs. I was taken in by this plea and took eggs in spite of my vow. But the lapse was momentary. I had no business to put a new interpretation on the vow.³ The interpretation of my mother who administered the vow was

¹ The Vegetarian; commenced publication in 1888 as an independent journal and became the London Vegetarian Society’s official organ

² However, in a paper read in London on 2-5-1891, Gandhiji stated: “I am sorry to say that I have been taking eggs for about a month and half”. Vide “The Foods of India”, June 1, 189 therefor me. I knew that her definition of meat included eggs. And as soon as I saw the true import of the vow I gave up eggs and the experiment alike.

There is a nice point underlying the argument, and worth noting. I came across three definitions of meat in England. According to the first, meat denoted only the flesh of birds and beasts. Vegetarians who accepted that definition abjured the flesh of birds and beasts, but ate fish, not to mention eggs. According to the second definition, meat meant flesh of all living creatures. So fish was here out of the question, but eggs were allowed. The third definition included under meat the flesh of all living beings, as well as all their products, thus covering eggs and milk alike. If I accepted the first definition, I could take not only eggs, but fish also. But I was convinced that my mother’s definition was the definition binding on me. If, therefore, I would observe the vow I had taken, I must abjure eggs. I therefore did so. This was a hardship inasmuch as inquiry showed that even in vegetarian restaurants many courses used to contain eggs. This meant that unless I knew what was what, I had to go through the awkward process of ascertaining whether a particular course contained eggs or no, for many puddings and cakes were not free from them. But though the revelation of my duty caused this difficulty, it simplified my food. The simplification in its turn brought me annoyance in that I had to give up several dishes I had come to relish. These difficulties were only passing, for the strict observance of the vow produced an inward relish distinctly more healthy, delticate and permanent.

The real ordeal, however, was still to come, and that was in respect of the other vow. But who dare harm whom God protects? A few observations about the interpretation of vows or pledges may not be out of place here. Interpretation of pledges has been a fruitful source of strife all the world over. No matter how explicit the pledge, people will turn and twist the text to suit their own purposes. They are to be met with among all classes of society, from the rich down to the poor, from the prince down to the peasant. Selfishness turns them blind, and by a use of the ambiguous middle they deceive themselves and seek to deceive the world and God. One golden rule is to accept the interpretation honestly put on the pledge by the party administering it. Another is to accept the interpretation of the weaker party, where there are two interpretations possible. Rejection of these two rules gives rise to strife and iniquity, which are rooted in untruthfulness. He who seeks truth alone easily follows the golden rule. He need not seek learned advice for interpretation. My mother’s interpretation of meat was, according to the golden rule, the only true one for me, and not the one my wider experience or my pride of better knowledge might have taught me.

My experiments in England were conducted from the point of view of economy and hygiene. The religious aspect of the question was not considered until I went to South Africa where I undertook strenuous experiments which will be narrated later. The seed, however, for all of them was sown in England.

A convert’s enthusiasm for his new religion is greater than that of a person who is born in it. Vegetarianism was then a new cult in England, and likewise for me, because, as we have seen, I had gone there a convinced meat-eater, and was intellectually converted to vegetarianism later. Full of the neophyte’s zeal for vegetarianism, I decided to start a vegetarian club in my locality, Bayswater. I invited Sir Edwin Arnold, who lived there, to be Vice-President. Dr. Oldfield who was Editor of The Vegetarian became President. I myself became the Secretary. The club went well for a while, but came to an end in the course of a few months. For I left the locality, according to my custom of moving from place to place periodically. But this brief and modest experience gave me some little training in organizing and conducting institutions.

CHAPTER XVIII: SHYNESS MY SHIELD

I was elected to the Executive Committee of the Vegetarian Society, and made it a point to attend every one of its meetings, but I always felt tongue-tied. Dr. Oldfield once said to me, ‘You talk to me quite all right, but why is it that you never open your lips at a committee meeting? You are a drone.’ I appreciated the banter. The bees are ever busy, the drone is a thorough idler. And it was not a little curious that whilst others expressed their opinions at these meetings, I sat quite silent. Not that I never felt tempted to speak. But I was at a loss to know how to express myself. All the rest of the members appeared to me to be better informed than I. Then it often happened that just when I had mustered up courage to speak, a fresh subject would be started. This went on for a long time.

Meantime a serious question came up for discussion. I thought it wrong to be absent, and felt it cowardice to register a silent vote. The discussion arose somewhat in this wise. The President of the Society was Mr. Hills, proprietor of the Thames Iron Works. He was a puritan. It may be said that the existence of the Society depended practically on his financial assistance. Many members of the Committee were more or less his proteges. Dr. Allinson of vegetarian fame was also a member of the Committee. He was an advocate of the then new birthcontrol movement, and preached its methods among the working classes. Mr. Hills regarded these methods as cutting at the root of morals. He thought that the Vegetarian Society had for its object not only dietetic but also moral reform, and that a man of Dr. Allinson’s anti-puritanic views should not be allowed to remain in the Society. A motion was therefore brought for his removal. The question deeply interested me. I considered Dr. Allinson’s views regarding artificial methods of birth control as dangerous, and I believed that Mr. Hills was entitled, as a puritan, to oppose him. I had also a high regard for Mr. Hills and his generosity. But I thought it was quite improper to exclude a man from a vegetarian society simply because he refused to regard puritan morals as one of the objects of the Society. Mr. Hills view regarding the exclusion of anti-puritans from the Society was personal to himself, and it had nothing to do with the declared object of the Society, which was simply the promotion of vegetarianism and not of any system of morality. I therefore held that any vegetarian could be a member of the Society irrespective of his views on other morals.

There were in the Committee others also who shared my view, but I felt myself personally called upon to express my own. How to do it was the question. I had not the courage to speak and I therefore decided to set down my thoughts in writing. I went to the meeting with the document in my pocket. So far as I recollect, I did not find myself equal even to reading it, and the President had it read by someone else. Dr. Allinson lost the day. Thus in the very first battle of the kind I found myself siding with the losing party. But I had comfort in the thought that the cause was right. I have a faint recollection that, after this incident, I resigned from the Committee. This shyness I retained throughout my stay in England. Even when I paid a social call the presence of half a dozen or more people would strike me dumb.

I once went to Ventnor with Sjt. Mazmudar. We stayed there with a vegetarian family. Mr. Howard, the author of The Ethics of Diet, was also staying at the same watering-place. We met him, and he invited us to speak at a meeting for the promotion of vegetarianism. I had ascertained that it was not considered incorrect to read one’s speech. I knew that many did so to express themselves coherently and briefly. To speak extempore would have been out of the question for me. I had therefore written down my speech. I stood up to read it, but not. My vision became blurred and I trembled, though the speech hardly covered a sheet of foolscap. Sjt. Mazmudar had to read it for me. His own speech was of course excellent and was received with applause. I was ashamed of myself and sad at heart for my incapacity.

My last effort to make a public speech in England was on the eve of my departure for home. But this time too I only succeeded in making myself ridiculous. I invited my vegetarian friends to dinner in the Holborn Restaurant referred to in these chapters. ‘A vegetarian dinner could be had,’ I said to myself, ‘in vegetarian restaurants as a matter of course. But why should it not be possible in a non-vegetarian restaurant too?’ And I arranged with the manager of the Holborn Restaurant to provide a strictly vegetarian meal. The vegetarians hailed the new experiment with delight. All dinners are meant for enjoyment, but the West has developed the thing into an art. They are celebrated with great eclat, music and speeches. And the little dinner party that I gave was also not un-accompanied by some such display. Speeches, therefore, there had to be. When my turn for speaking came, I stood up to make a speech. I had with great care thought out one which would consist of a very few sentences. But I could not proceed beyond the first sentence. I had read of Addison that he began his maiden speech in the House of Commons, repeating ‘I conceive’ three times, and when he could proceed no further, a wag stood up and said, ‘The gentleman conceived thrice but brought forth nothing.’ I had thought of making a humorous speech taking this anecdote as the text. I therefore began with it and stuck there. My memory entirely failed me and in attempting a humorous speech I made myself ridiculous. ‘I thank you, gentlemen, for having kindly responded to my invitation,’ I said abruptly, and sat down.

It was only in South Africa that I got over this shyness, though I never completely overcame it. It was impossible for me to speak impromptu. I hesitated whenever I had to face strange audiences and avoided making a speech whenever I could. Even today I do not think I could or would even be inclined to keep a meeting of friends engaged in idle talk.

I must say that, beyond occasionally exposing me to laughter, my constitutional shyness has been no disadvantage whatever. In fact I can see that, on the contrary, it has been all to my advantage. My hesitancy in speech, which was once an annoyance, is now a pleasure. Its greatest benefit has been that it has taught me the economy of words. I have naturally formed the habit of restraining my thoughts.

1 For a report of this ‘nervous’ speech, vide Speech at Farewell Dinner”, June 11, 1891.
And I can now give myself the certificate that a thoughtless word hardly ever escapes my tongue or pen. I do not recollect ever having had to regret anything in my speech or writing. I have thus been spared many a mishap and waste of time. Experience has taught me that silence is part of the spiritual discipline of a votary of truth. Proneness to exaggerate, to suppress or modify the truth, wittingly or unwittingly, is a natural weakness of man, and silence is necessary in order to surmount it. A man of few words will rarely be thoughtless in his speech; he will measure every word. We find so many people impatient to talk. There is no chairman of a meeting who is not pestered with notes for permission to speak. And whenever the permission is given the speaker generally exceeds the time-limit, asks for more time, and keeps on talking without permission. All this talking can hardly be said to be of any benefit to the world. It is so much waste of time. My shyness has been in reality my shield and buckler. It has allowed me to grow. It has helped me in my discernment of truth.

CHAPTER XIX: THE CANKER OF UNTRUTH

There were comparatively few Indian students in England forty years ago. It was a practice with them to affect the bachelor even though they might be married. School or college students in England are all bachelors, studies being regarded as incompatible with married life. We had that tradition in the good old days, a student then being invariably known as a brahmchari. But in these days we have child-marriages, a thing practically unknown in England. Indian youths in England, therefore, felt ashamed to confess that they were married. There was also another reason for dissembling, namely that in the event of the fact being known it would be impossible for the young man to go about or flirt with the young girls of the family in which they lived. The flirting was more or less innocent. Parents even encouraged it; and that sort of association between young men and young women may even be a necessity there, in view of the fact that every young man has to choose his mate. If, however, Indian youths on arrival in England indulge in these relations, quite natural to English youths, the result is likely to be disastrous, as has often been found. I saw that our youths had succumbed to the temptation and chosen a life of untruth for the sake of companionships which, however innocent in the case of English youths, were for them undesirable. I too caught the contagion. I did not hesitate to pass myself of as a bachelor though I was married and the father of a

---

1 One who observes brahmacharya, i.e., complete self-restraint son. But I was none the happier for being a dissembler. Only my reserve and my reticence saved me from going into deeper waters. If I did not talk, no girl would think it worth her while to enter into conversation with me or to go out with me.

My cowardice was on a par with my reserve. It was customary in families like the one in which I was staying at Ventnor for the daughter of the landlady to take out guests for a walk. My landlady’s daughter took me one day to the lovely hills round Ventnor. I was no slow walker, but my companion walked even faster, dragging me after her and chattering away all the while. I responded to her chatter sometimes with a whispered ‘yes’ or ‘no’, or at the most ‘yes, how beautiful!’ She was flying like a bird whilst I was wondering when I should get back home. We thus reached the top of a hill. How to get down again was the question. In spite of her high-heeled boots this sprightly young lady of twenty-five darted down the hill like an arrow. I was shamefacedly struggling to get down. She stood at the foot smiling and cheering me and offering to come and drag me. How could I be so chicken-hearted? With the greatest difficulty, and crawling at intervals, I somehow managed to scramble to the bottom. She loudly laughed ‘bravo’ and shamed me all the more, as well she might.

But I could not escape scatheless everywhere. For God wanted to rid me of the canker of untruth. I once went to Brighton, another watering-place like Ventnor. This was before the Ventnor visit. I met there at a hotel an old widow of moderate means. This was my first year in England. The courses on the menu were all described in French, which I did not understand. I sat at the same table as the old lady. She saw that I was a stranger and puzzled, and immediately came to my aid. ‘You seem to be a stranger,’ she said, ‘and look perplexed. Why have you not ordered anything?’ I was spelling through the menu and preparing to ascertain the ingredients of the courses from the waiter, when the good lady thus intervened. I thanked her, and explaining my difficulty told her that I was at a loss to know which of the courses were vegetarian as I did not understand French.

‘Let me help you,’ she said, ‘I shall explain the card to you and show you what you may eat.’ I gratefully availed of her help. This was the beginning of an acquaintance that ripened into friendship and was kept up all through my stay in England and long after. She gave me her London address and invited me to dine at her house every Sunday. On special occasions also she would invite me, help me to conquer my bashfulness and introduce me to young ladies and draw me into conversation with them. Particularly marked out for these conversations was a young lady who stayed with her, and often we would be left entirely alone together.
I found all this very trying at first. I could not start a conversation nor could I indulge in any jokes. But she put me in the way. I began to learn; and in course of time looked forward to every Sunday and came to like the conversations with the young friend.

The old lady went on spreading her net wider every day. She felt interested in our meetings. Possibly she has her own plans about us.

I was in a quandary. ‘How I wished I had told the good lady that I was married!’ I said to myself. ‘She would then have not thought of an engagement between us. It is, however, never too late to mend. If I declare the truth, I might yet be saved more misery.’ With these thoughts in my mind, I wrote a letter to her somewhat to this effect:

‘Ever since we met at Brighton you have been kind to me. You have taken care of me even as a mother of her son. You also think that I should get married and with that view you have been introducing me to young ladies. Rather than allow matters to go further, I must confess to you that I have been unworthy of your affection. I should have told you when I began by visits to you that I was married. I knew that Indian students in England dissembled the fact of their marriage and I followed suit. I now see that I should not have done so. I must also add that I was married while yet a boy, and am the father of a son. I am pained that I should have kept this knowledge from you so long. But I am glad God has now given me the courage to speak out the truth. Will you forgive me? I assure you I have taken no improper liberties with the young lady you were good enough to introduce to me. I knew my limits. You, not knowing that I was married, naturally desired that we should be engaged. In order that things should not go beyond the present stage, I must tell you the truth.

‘If on receipt of this, you feel that I have been unworthy of your hospitality, I assure you I shall not take it amiss. You have laid me under an everlasting debt of gratitude by your kindness and solicitude. If, after this, you do not reject me but continue to regard me as worthy of your hospitality, which I will spare no pains to deserve, I shall naturally be happy and count it a further token of your kindness.’

Let the reader know that I could not have written such a letter in a moment. I must have drafted and redrafted it many times over. But it lifted a burden that was weighing me down. Almost by return post came her reply somewhat as follows:

‘I have your frank letter. We were both very glad and had a hearty laugh over it. The untruth you say you have been guilty of is pardonable. But it is well that you have acquainted us with the real state of things. My invitation still stands and we shall certainly expect you next Sunday and look forward to hearing all about your child-marriage and to the pleasure of laughing at your expense. Need I assure you that our friendship is not in the least affected by this incident?"

I thus purged myself of the canker of untruth, and I never thenceforward hesitated to talk of my married state wherever necessary.

CHAPTER XX: ACQUAINTANCE WITH RELIGIONS

Towards the end of my second year in England I came across two Theosophists, brothers, and both unmarried. They talked to me about the Gita. They were reading Sir Edwin Arnold’s translation—The Song Celestial—and they invited me to read the original with them. I felt ashamed, as I had read the divine poem neither in Samskrit nor in Gujarati. I was constrained to tell them that I had not read the Gita, but that I would gladly read it with them, and that though my knowledge of Samskrit was meagre, still I hoped to be able to understand the original to the extent of telling where the translation failed to bring out the meaning. I began reading the Gita with them. The verses in the second chapter

If one

Ponders on objects of the sense, there springs
Attraction; from attraction grows desire,
Desire flames to fierce passion, passion breeds
Recklessness; then the memory—all betrayed—
Lets noble purpose go, and saps the mind, made a deep impression on my mind, and they still ring in my ears. The book struck me as one of priceless worth. The impression has ever since been growing on me with the result that I regard it today as the book par excellence for the knowledge of Truth. It has afforded me invaluable help in my moments of gloom. I have read almost all the English translations of it, and I regard Sir Edwin Arnold’s as the best. He has been faithful to the text, and yet it does not read like a translation. Though I read the Gita with these friends, I cannot pretend to have studied it then. It was only after some years that it became a book of daily reading.

The brothers also recommended The Light of Asia by Sir Edwin Arnold, whom I knew till then as the author only of The Song
Celestial, and I read it with even greater interest than I did the Bhagavad Gita. Once I had begun it I could not leave off. They also took me on one occasion to the Blavatsky Lodge and introduced me to Madame Blavatsky and Mrs. Besant. The latter had just then joined the Theosophical Society, and I was following with great interest the controversy about her conversion. The friends advised me to join the Society, but I politely declined saying, With, my meagre knowledge of my own religion I do not want to belong to any religious body.

I recall having read, at the brothers’ instance, Madame Blavatsky’s Key to Theosophy. This book stimulated in me the desire to read books on Hinduism, and disabused me of the notion fostered by the missionaries that Hinduism was rife with superstition.

About the same time I met a good Christian from Manchester in a vegetarian boarding house. He talked to me about Christianity. I narrated to him my Rajkot recollections. He was pained to hear them. He said, ‘I am a vegetarian. I do not drink. Many Christians are meat-eaters and drink, no doubt; but neither meat-eating nor drinking is enjoined by Scripture. Do please read the Bible.’ I accepted his advice, and he got me a copy. I have a faint recollection that he himself used to sell copies of the Bible, and I purchased from him an edition containing maps, concordance, and other aids. I began reading it, but I could not possibly read through the Old Testament. I read the book of Genesis, and the chapters that followed invariably sent me to sleep. But just for the sake of being able to say that I had read it, I plodded through the other books with much difficulty and without the least interest or understanding. I disliked reading the book of Numbers.

But the New Testament produced a different impression, especially the Sermon on the Mount which went straight to my heart. I compared it with the Gita. The verses, ‘But I say unto you, that ye resist not evil: but whosoever shall smite thee on thy right cheek, turn to him the other also. And if any man take away thy coat let him have thy cloak too,’ delighted me beyond measure and put me in mind of Shamal Bhatt’s ‘For a bowl of water, give a goodly meal’ etc. My young mind tried to unify the teaching of the Gita, The Light of Asia and the Sermon on the Mount. That renunciation was the highest form of religion appealed to me greatly.

This reading whetted my appetite for studying the lives of other religious teachers. A friend recommended Carlyle’s Heroes and Hero-warship. I read the chapter on the Hero as a prophet and learnt of the Prophet’s greatness and bravery and austere living.

Beyond this acquaintance with religion I could not go at the moment, as reading for the examination left me scarcely any time for outside subjects. But I took mental note of the fact that I should read more religious books and acquaint myself with all the principal religions.

And how could I help knowing something of atheism too? Every Indian knew Bradlaugh’s name and his so-called atheism. I read some book about it, the name of which I forget. It had no effect on me, for I had already crossed the Sahara of atheism. Mrs. Besant who was then very much in the limelight, had turned to theism from atheism, and that fact also strengthened my aversion to atheism. I had read her book How I Became a Theosophist.

It was about this time that Bradlaugh died. He was buried in the Woking Cemetery. I attended the funeral, as I believe every Indian residing in London did. A few clergymen also were present to do him the last honours. On our way back from the funeral we had to wait at the station for our train. A champion atheist from the crowd heckled one of these clergymen. ‘Well, Sir, you believe in the existence of God?’

‘I do,’ said the good man in a low tone.

‘You also agree that the circumference of the Earth is 28,000 miles, don’t you?’ said the atheist with a smile of self-assurance.

‘Indeed.’

‘Pray tell me then the size of your God and where he may be?’

‘Well, if we but knew, He resides in the hearts of us both.’

‘Now, now, don’t take me to be a child,’ said the champion with a triumphant look at us.

The clergyman assumed a humble silence.

This talk still further increased my prejudice against atheism.

CHAPTER XXI: निर्बलेक के बल राम¹

Though I had acquired a nodding acquaintance with Hinduism¹ and other¹² religions of the world, I should have known that it would not be enough to save me in my trials.² Of the thing that sustains him through trials man has no inkling, much less knowledge, at the time. If an unbeliever, he will attribute his safety to chance. If a believer, he will say God saved him. He will conclude as well he may, that his religious study or spiritual discipline was at the back of the state of grace within him. But in the hour of his deliverance he does not know whether his spiritual discipline or something else saves him.

¹ ‘Nirbalke Bal Ram’—refrain of Surdas’s famous hymn, ‘Rama the help of the helpless, the strength of the weak’
Who that has prided himself on his spiritual strength has not seen it humbled to the dust? A knowledge of religion, as distinguished from experience, seems but chaff in such moments of trial.

It was in England that I first discovered the futility of mere religious knowledge. How I was saved on previous occasions is more than I can say, for I was very young then; but not I was twenty and had gained some experience as husband and father.

During the last year, as far as I can remember, of my stay in England, that is in 1890, there was a Vegetarian Conference at Portsmouth to which an Indian friend and I were invited. Portsmouth is a sea-port with a large naval population. It has many houses with women of ill fame, women not actually prostitutes, but at the same time, not very scrupulous about their morals. We were put up in one of these houses. Needless to say, the Reception Committee did not know anything about it. It would have been difficult in a town like Portsmouth to find out which were good lodgings and which were bad for occasional travellers like us.

We returned from the Conference in the evening. After dinner we sat down to play a rubber of bridge, in which our landlady joined, as is customary in England even in respectable households. Every player indulges in innocent jokes as a matter of course, but here my companion and our hostess began to make indecent ones as well. I did not know that my friend was an adept in the art. It captured me and I also joined in. Just when I was about to go beyond the limit, leaving the cards and the game to themselves, God through the good companion uttered the blessed warning: 'Whence this devil in you, my boy? Be off, quick!'

I was ashamed. I took the warning and expressed within myself gratefulness to my friend. Remembering the vow I had taken before my mother, I fled from the scene. To my room I went quaking, trembling, and with beating heart, like a quarry escaped from its pursuer.

I recall this as the first occasion on which a woman, other than my wife, moved me to lust. I passed that night sleeplessly, all kinds of thoughts assailing me. Should I leave this house? Should I run away from the place? Where was I? What would happen to me if I had not my wits about me? I decided to act thenceforth with great caution; not to leave the house, but somehow leave Portsmouth. The Conference was not to go on for more than two days, and I remember I left Portsmouth the next evening, my companion staying there some

---

1 Vide also "Power of ‘Ramanama’", May 17, 1925.
2 This should be 1891, vide "The Foods of India", June 1, 1891.
time longer.

I did not then know the essence of religion or of God, and how He works in us. Only vaguely I understood that God had saved me on that occasion. On all occasions of trial He has saved me. I know that the phrase ‘God saved me’ has a deeper meaning for me today, and still I feel that I have not yet grasped its entire meaning. Only richer experience can help me to a fuller understanding. But in all my trials—of a spiritual nature, as a lawyer, in conducting institutions, and in politics—I can say that God saved me. When every hope is gone, ‘when helpers fail and comforts flee,’ I find that help arrives somehow, from I know not where. Supplication, worship, prayer are no superstition; they are acts more real than the acts of eating, drinking, sitting or walking. It is no exaggeration to say that they along are real, all else is unreal.

Such worship or prayer is no flight of eloquence; it is no lip Homage. It springs from the heart. If, therefore, we achieve that purity of the heart when it is ‘emptied of all but love’, if we keep all the chords in proper tune, they ‘trembling pass in music out of sight’. Prayer needs no speech. It is in itself independent of any sensuous effort. I have not the slightest doubt that prayer is an unfailing means of cleansing the heart of passions. But it must be combined with the utmost humility.

CHAPTER XXII: NARAYAN HEMCHANDRA

Just about this time Narayan Hemchandra came to England. I had heard of him as a writer. We met at the house of Miss Manning of the National Indian Association. Miss Manning knew that I could not make myself sociable. When I went to her place I used to sit tongue-tied, never speaking except when spoken to. She introduced me to Narayan Hemchandra. He did not know English. His dress was queer—a clumsy pair of trousers, a wrinkled, dirty, brown coat after the Parsi fashion, no necktie or collar, and a tasselled woollen cap. He grew a long beard.

He was lightly built and short of stature. His round face was scarred with small-pox, and had a nose which was neither pointed nor blunt. With his hand he was constantly turning over his beard.

Such a queer-looking and queerly dressed person was bound to be singled out in fashionable society.

1 Gandhiji mentions him as the author of a biography of the Prophet Mohammed; vide “letter to Jamnadas Gandhi”, August 28, 1911.
2 Died in 1905; for an obituary by Gandhiji, vide “The Late Miss Manning”, September 16, 1905.
‘I have heard a good deal about you,’ I said to him. ‘I have also read some of your writings. I should be very pleased if you were kind enough to come to my place.’

Narayan Hemchandra had a rather hoarse voice. With a smile on his face he replied:

‘Yes, where do you stay?’

‘In Store Street.’

Then we are neighbours. I want to learn English. Will you teach me?’

‘I shall be happy to teach you anything I can, and will try my best. If you like, I will go to your place.’

‘Oh, no. I shall come to you. I shall also bring with me a Translation Exercise Book.’ So we made an appointment. Soon we were close friends.

Narayan Hemchandra was innocent of grammar. ‘Horse’ was a verb with him and ‘run’ a noun. I remember many such funny instances. But he was not to be baffled by his ignorance. My little knowledge of grammar could make no impression on him. Certainly he never regarded his ignorance of grammar as a matter for shame.

With perfect nonchalance he said: ‘I have never been to school like you. I have never felt the need of grammar in expressing my thoughts. Well, do you know Bengali? I know it. I have travelled in Bengal. It is I who have given Maharshi Devendranath Tagore’s works to the Gujarati-speaking world. And I wish to translate into Gujarati the treasures of man other languages. And you know I am never literal in my translations. I always content myself with bringing out the spirit. Others, with their better knowledge, may be able to do more in future. But I am quite satisfied with what I have achieved without the help of grammar. I know Marathi, Hindi, Bengali, and now I have begun to know English. What I want is a copious vocabulary. And do you think my ambition ends here? No fear. I want to go to France and learn French. I am told that language has an extensive literature. I shall go to Germany also, if possible, and there learn German.’ And thus he would talk on unceasingly. He had a boundless ambition for learning languages and for foreign travel.

‘Then you will go to America also?’

‘Certainly. How can I return to India without having seen the New World?’

‘But where will you find the money?’

‘What do I need money for? I am not a fashionable fellow like you. The minimum amount of food and the minimum amount of clothing suffice for me. And for this what little I get out of my books and from my friends is enough. I always travel third class. While going to America also I shall travel on deck.’

Narayan Hemchandra’s simplicity was all his own, and his frankness was on a par with it. Of pride he had not the slightest trace, excepting, of course, a rather undue regard for his own capacity as a writer.

We met daily. There was a considerable amount of similarity between our thoughts and actions. Both of us were vegetarians. We would often have our lunch together. This was the time when I lived on 17s. a week and cooked for myself. Sometimes I would go to his room, and sometimes he would come to mine. I cooked in the English style. Nothing but Indian style would satisfy him. He could not do without dal. I would make soup of carrots, etc., and he would pity me for my taste. Once he somehow hunted out mung, cooked it and brought it to my place. I ate it with delight. This led on to a regular system of exchange between us. I would take my delicacies to him and he would bring his to me.

Cardinal Manning’s name was then on every lip. The dock labourers’ strike had come to an early termination owing to the efforts of John Burns and Cardinal Manning. I told Narayan Hemchandra of Disraeli’s tribute to the Cardinal’s simplicity. ‘Then I must see the sage,’ said he.

‘He is a big man. How do you expect to meet him?’

‘Why? I know how. I must get you to write to him in my name. Tell him I am an author and that I want to congratulate him personally on his humanitarian work, and also say that I shall have to take you as interpreter as I do not know English.’

I wrote a letter to that effect. In two or three days came Cardinal Manning’s card in reply giving us an appointment. So we both called on the Cardinal. I put on the usual visiting suit. Narayan Hemchandra was the same as ever, in the same coat and the same trousers. I tried to make fun of this, but he laughed me out and said:

‘You civilized fellows are all cowards. Great men never look at a person’s exterior. They think of his heart.’

We entered the Cardinal’s mansion. As soon as we were seated, a thin, tall, old gentleman made his appearance, and shook hands with us. Narayan Hemchandra thus gave his greetings:

‘I do not want to take up your time. I had heard a lot about you and I felt I should come and thank you for the good work you have

1 An Indian pulse done for the strikers. It has been my custom to visit the sages of the world and that is why I have put you to this trouble.’

This was of course my translation of what he spoke in Gujarati.78

‘I am glad you have come. I hope your stay in London will agree with you and that you will get in touch with people here. God bless you.’

With these words the Cardinal stood up and said good-bye.

Once Narayan Hemchandra came to my place in a shirt and dhoti. The good landlady opened the door, came running to me in a fright—this was a new landlady who did not know Narayan Hemchandra79—and said: ‘A sort of a madcap wants to see you.’ I went to the door and to my surprise found Narayan Hemchandra. I was shocked. His face, however, showed nothing but his usual smile.

‘But did not the children in the street rag you?’

‘Well, they ran after me, but I did not mind them and they were quiet.’

Narayan Hemchandra went to Paris after a few months’ stay in London. He began studying French and also translating French books. I knew enough French to revise his translation, so he gave it to me to read. It was not a translation, it was the substance.

Finally he carried out his determination to visit America. It was with great difficulty that he succeeded in securing a deck ticket. While in the United States he was prosecuted790 for ‘being indecently dressed’, as he once went out in a shirt and dhoti. I have a recollection that he was discharged.

CHAPTER XXIII : THE GREAT EXHIBITION

There was a great Exhibition at Paris in 1890. I had791 read about its elaborate preparations, and I also had a keen desire to see Paris. So I thought I had better combine two things in one and go there at this juncture. A particular attraction of the Exhibition was the Eiffel Tower, constructed entirely of iron, and nearly 1,000 feet high. There were of course many other things of interest, but the Tower was the chief one, inasmuch as it had been supposed till then that a structure of that height could not safely stand.

I had heard of792 a vegetarian restaurant in Paris. I engaged a room there and stayed seven days. I managed everything very economically, both the journey to Paris and the sightseeing there. This I did mostly on foot and with the help of a map of Paris, as also a map of and guide to the Exhibition. These were enough to direct one to the main streets and chief places of interest.

VOL. 44 : 16 JANUARY, 1929 - 3 FEBRUARY, 1929
I remember nothing of the Exhibition excepting its magnitude and variety. I have fair recollection of the Eiffel Tower as I ascended it twice or thrice, there was a restaurant on the first platform, and just for the satisfaction of being able to say that I had had my lunch at a great height, I threw away seven shillings on it.

The ancient churches of Paris are still in my memory. Their grandeur and their peacefulness are unforgettable. The wonderful construction of Notre Dame and the elaborate decoration of the interior with its beautiful sculptures cannot be forgotten. I felt then that those who expended millions on such divine cathedrals could not but have the love of God in their hearts.

I had read a lot about the fashions and frivolity of Paris. These were in evidence in every street, but the churches stood noticeably apart from these scenes. A man would forget the outside noise and bustle as soon as he entered one of these churches. His manner would change, he would behave with dignity and reverence as he passed someone kneeling before the image of the Virgin. The feeling I had then has since been growing on me, that all this kneeling and prayer could not be mere superstition; the devout souls kneeling before the Virgin could not be worshipping mere marble. They were fired with genuine devotion and they worshipped not stone, but the divinity of which it was symbolic. I have an impression that I felt then that by this worship they were not detracting from, but increasing, the glory of God.

I must say a word about the Eiffel Tower. I do not know what purpose it serves today. But I then heard it greatly disparaged as well as praised. I remember that Tolstoy was the chief among those who disparaged it. He said that the Eiffel Tower was a monument of man’s folly, not of his wisdom. Tobacco, he argued, was the worst of all intoxicants, inasmuch as a man addicted to it was tempted to commit crimes which a drunkard never dared to do; liquor made a man mad, but tobacco clouded his intellect and made him build castles in the air. The Eiffel Tower was one of the creations of a man under such influence.

There is no art about the Eiffel Tower. In no way can it be said to have contributed to the real beauty of the Exhibition. Men flocked to see it and ascended it as it was a novelty and of unique dimensions. It was the toy of the Exhibition. So long as we are children we are attracted by toys, and the Tower was a good demonstration of the fact that we are all children attracted by trinkets. That may be claimed to be the purpose served by the Eiffel Tower.
CHAPTER XXIV: ‘CALLED’—BUT THEN?

I have deferred saying anything up to now about the purpose for which I went to England, viz., being called to the bar. It is time to advert to it briefly.

There were two conditions which had to be fulfilled before a student was formally called to the bar: ‘keeping terms’, twelve terms equivalent to about three years; and passing examinations. ‘Keeping terms’ meant eating one’s terms, i.e., attending at least six out of about twenty-four dinners in a term. Eating did not mean actually partaking of the dinner, it meant reporting oneself at the fixed hours and remaining present throughout the dinner. Usually of course everyone ate and drank the good commons and choice wines provided. A dinner cost from two and six to three and six, that is from two to three rupees. This was considered moderate, inasmuch as one had to pay that same amount for wines alone if one dined at a hotel. To us in India it is a matter for surprise, if we are not ‘civilized’, that the cost of drink should exceed the cost of food. The first revelation gave me a great shock, and I wondered how people had the heart to throw away so much money on drink. Later I came to understand. I often nothing at these dinners, for the things that I might eat were only bread, boiled potato and cabbage. In the beginning I did not eat these, as I did not like them; and later, when I began to relish them, I also gained the courage to ask for other dishes.

The dinner provided for the benchers used to be better than that for the students. A Parsi student, who was also a vegetarian, and I applied, in the interests of vegetarianism, for the vegetarian courses which were served to the benchers. The application was granted, and we began to get fruits and other vegetables from the benchers’ table.

Two bottles of wine were allowed to each group of four, and as I did not touch them, I was ever in demand to form a quartet, so that three might empty two bottles. And there was a ‘grand night’ in each term when extra wines, like champagne, in addition to port and sheery, were served. I was therefore specially requested to attend and was in great demand on that ‘grand night’.

I could not see then, nor have I seen since, how these dinners qualified the students better for the bar. There was once a time when only a few students used to attend these dinners and thus there were opportunities for talks between them and the benchers, and speeches were also made. These occasions helped to give them knowledge of the world with a sort of polish and refinement, and also improved their power of speaking. No such thing was possible in my time, as the benchers had a table all to themselves. The institution had gradually lost all its meaning, but conservative England retained it nevertheless.

The curriculum of study was easy, barristers being humorously known as ‘dinner barristers’. Everyone knew that the examinations had practically no value. In my time there were two, one in Roman Law and the other in Common Law. There were regular text-books prescribed for these examinations which could be taken in compartments, but scarcely anyone read them. I have known many to pass the Roman Law examination by scrambling through notes on Roman Law in a couple of weeks, and the Common Law examination by reading notes on the subject in two or three months. Question papers were easy and examiners were generous. The percentage of passes in the Roman Law examination used to be 95 to 99 and of those in the final examination 75 or even more. There was thus little fear of being plucked, and examinations were held not once but four times in the year. They could not be felt as a difficulty.

But I succeeded in turning them into one. I felt that I should read all the text-books. It was a fraud, I thought, not to read these books. I invested much money in them. I decided to read Roman Law in Latin. The Latin which I had acquired in the London Matriculation stood me in good stead. And all this reading was not without its value later on in South Africa, where Roman Dutch is the common law. The reading of Justinian, therefore, helped me a great deal in understanding the South African law.

It took me nine months of fairly hard labour to read through the Common Law of England. For Broom’s Common Law, a big but interesting volume, took up a good deal of time. Snell’s Equity was full of interest, but a bit hard to understand. White and Tudor’s Leading Cases, from which certain cases were prescribed, was full of interest and instruction. I read also with interest Williams’ and Edwards’ Real Property, and Goodeve’s Personal Property. Williams’ book read like a novel. The one book I remember to have read on my return to India, with the same unflagging interest, was Mayne’s Hindu Law. But it is out of place to talk here of Indian law-books.

I passed my examinations, was called to the bar on the 10th of June 1891, and enrolled in the High Court on the 11th. On the 12th I sailed for home.

But notwithstanding my study there was no end to my helplessness and fear. I did not feel myself qualified to practise law.

But a separate chapter is needed to describe this helplessness of mine.
CHAPTER XXV : MY HELPLESSNESS

It was easy to be called, but it was difficult to practise at the bar. I had read the laws, but not learnt how to practise law. I had read with interest ‘Legal Maxims’; but did not know how to apply them in my profession. ‘Sic utere tuo ut alienum non laedas’ (Use your property in such a way as not to damage that of others) was one of them, but I was at a loss to know how one could employ this maxim for the benefit of one’s client. I had read all the leading cases on this maxim, but they gave me no confidence in the application of it in the practice of law.

Besides, I had learnt nothing at all of Indian law. I had not the slightest idea of Hindu and Mahomedan Law. I had not even learnt how to draft a plaint, and felt completely at sea. I had heard of Sir Pherozeshah Mehta as one who roared like a lion in law-courts. How, I wondered, could he have learnt the art in England? It was out of the question for me ever to acquire his legal acumen, but I had serious misgivings as to whether I should be able even to earn a living by the profession.

I was torn with these doubts and anxieties whilst I was studying law. I confided my difficulties to some of my friends. One of them suggested that I should seek Dadabhai Naoroji’s advice. I have already said that, when I went to England, I possessed a note of introduction to Dadabhai. I availed myself of it very late. I thought I had no right to trouble such a great man for an interview. Whenever an address by him was announced, I would attend it, listen to him from a corner of the hall and go away after having feasted my eyes and ears. In order to come in close touch with the students he had founded an association. I used to attend its meetings, and rejoiced at Dadabhai’s solicitude for the students, and the latter’s respect for him. In course of time I mustered up courage to present to him the note of introduction. He said: ‘You can come and have my advice whenever you like.’ But I never availed myself of his offer. I thought it wrong to trouble him without the most pressing necessity. Therefore I dared not venture to accept my friend’s advice to submit my difficulties to Dadabhai at that time. I forget now whether it was the same friend or someone else who recommended me to meet Mr. Frederick Pincott. He was a Conservative, but his affection for Indian students was pure and unselfish. Many students sought his advice and I also applied to him for an appointment, which he granted. I can never forget that interview. He greeted me as a friend. He laughed away my pessimism. ‘Do you think,’ he said, ‘that everyone must be a Pherozeshah Mehta? Pherozeshahs and Badruddins are rare. Rest assured it takes no unusual skill to be an ordinary lawyer. Common honesty and industry are enough to enable him to make a living. All cases are not complicated. Well, let me know the extent of your general reading.’

---

1 Gandhiji often cites this maxim; vide, e.g., “Speech on Swadeshi at Missionary Conference, Madras”, February 14, 1916.

When I acquainted him with my little stock of reading, he was, as I could see, rather disappointed. But it was only for a moment. Soon his face beamed with a pleasing smile and he said, ‘I understand your trouble. Your general reading is meagre. You have no knowledge of the world, a sine qua non for a vakil. You have not even read the history of India. A vakil should know human nature. He should be able to read a man’s character from his face. And every Indian ought to know Indian history. This has no connection with the practice of law, but you ought to have that knowledge I see that you have not even read Kaye and Malleson’s history of the Mutiny of 1857. Get hold of that at once and also read two more books to understand human nature.’ These were Lavator’s and Shemmelpennick’s books on physiognomy.

I was extremely grateful to this venerable friend. In his presence I found all my fear gone, but as soon as I left him I began to worry again. ‘To know a man from his face’ was the question that haunted me, as I thought of the two books on my way home. The next day I purchased Lavator’s book. Shemmelpennick’s was not available at the shop. I read Lavator’s book and found it more difficult than Snell’s Equity, and scarcely interesting. I studied Shakespeare’s physiognomy, but did not acquire the knack of finding out the Shakespeares walking up and down the streets of London.

Lavator’s book did not add to my knowledge. Mr. Pincott’s advice did me very little direct service, but his kindness stood me in good stead. His smiling open face stayed in my memory, and I trusted his advice that Pherozeshah Mehta’s acumen, memory and ability were not essential to the making of a successful lawyer; honesty and industry were enough. And as I had a fair share of these last I felt somewhat reassured.

I could not read Kaye and Malleson’s volumes in England, but I did so in South Africa as I had made a point of reading them at the first opportunity.

Thus with just a little leaven of hope mixed with my despair, I landed at Bombay from s.s. Assam. The sea was rough in the harbour, and I had to reach the quay in a launch.
PART II

CHAPTER I : RAYCHANDBHAJ

I said in the last chapter that the sea was rough in Bombay harbour, not an unusual thing in the Arabian Sea in June and July. It had been choppy all the way from Aden. Almost every passenger was sick; I alone was in perfect form, staying on deck to see the stormy surge, and enjoying the splash of the waves. At breakfast there would be just one or two people besides myself, eating their oatmeal porridge from plates carefully held in their laps, lest the porridge itself find its place there.

The outer storm was to me a symbol of the inner. But even as the former left me unperturbed, I think I can say the same thing about the latter. There was the trouble with the caste that was to confront me. I have already adverted to my helplessness in starting on my profession. And then, as I was a reformer, I was taxing myself as to how best to begin certain reforms. But there was even more in store for me than I knew.

My elder brother had come to meet me at the dock. He had already made the acquaintance of Dr. Mehta and his elder brother, and as Dr. Mehta insisted on putting me up at his house, we went there. Thus the acquaintance begun in England continued in India and ripened into a permanent friendship between the two families.

I was pining to see my mother. I did not know that she was no more in the flesh to receive me back into her bosom. The sad news was now given me, and I underwent the usual ablution. My brother had kept me ignorant of her death, which took place whilst I was still in England. He wanted to spare me the blow in a foreign land. The news, however, was none the less a severe shock to me. But I must not dwell upon it. My grief was even greater than over my father’s death. Most of my cherished hopes were shattered. But I remember that I did not give myself up to any wild expression of grief. I could even check the tears, and took to life just as though nothing had happened.

Dr. Mehta introduced me to several friends, one of them being his brother Shri Revashankar Jagjivan, with whom there grew up a lifelong friendship. But the introduction that I need particularly take note of was the one to the poet Raychand or Rajchandra, the son-in-law of an elder brother of Dr. Mehta, and partner of the firm of

---

1 Died in 1901; vide “Letter to Revashankar Zaveri”, May 21, 1901; also “Preface to Shrimad Rajchandra”, November 5, 1926 & Appendix “Gandhiji’s Questions to Rajchandra and His Replies”, before December 12, 1926.
jewellers conducted in the name of Revashankar Jagjivan. He was not above twenty-five then, but my first meeting with him convinced me that he was a man of great character and learning. He was also known as shatavadhani (one having the faculty of remembering or attending to a hundred things simultaneously), and Dr. Mehta recommended me to see some of his memory feats. I exhausted my vocabulary of all the European tongues I knew, and asked the poet to repeat the words. He did so in the precise order in which I had given them. I envied his gift without, however, coming under its spell. The thing that did cast its spell over me I came to know afterwards. This was his wide knowledge of the scriptures, his spotless character, and his burning passion for self-realization. I saw later that this last was the only thing for which he lived. the following lines of Muktanand were always on his lips and engraved on the tablets of his heart:

’I shall think myself blessed only when I see Him
In every one of my daily acts;
Verily he is the thread,
Which supports Muktanand’s life.’

Raychandbhai’s commercial transactions covered hundreds of thousands. He was a connoisseur of pearls and diamonds. No knotty business problem was too difficult for him. But all these things were not the centre round which his life revolved. That centre was the passion to see God face to face. Amongst the things on his business table there were invariably to be found some religious book and his diary. The moment he finished his business he opened the religious book or the diary. Much of his published writings is a reproduction from this diary. The man who, immediately on finishing his talk about weighty business transactions, began to write about the hidden things of the spirit could evidently not be a businessman at all, but a real seeker after Truth. And I saw him thus absorbed in godly pursuits in the midst of business, not once or twice, but very often. I never saw him lose his state of equipoise. There was no business or other selfish tie that bound him to me, and yet I enjoyed the closest association with him. I was but a briefless barrister then, and yet whenever I saw him he would engage me in conversation of a seriously religious nature. Though I was then groping and could not be said to have any serious interest in religious discussion, still I found his talk of absorbing interest. I have since met many a religious leader or teacher. I have tried to meet the heads of various faiths, and I must say that no one else has ever made on me the impression that Raychandbhai did. His words went straight home to me. His intellect compelled as great a regard from me as his moral earnestness, and deep down in me was the conviction that he would never willingly lead me astray and would always confide to me his innermost thoughts. In my moments of spiritual crisis, therefore, he was my refuge.

And yet in spite of this regard for him I could not enthrone him in my heart as my Guru. The throne has remained vacant and my search still continues.

I believe in the Hindu theory of Guru and his importance in spiritual realization. I think there is a great deal of truth in the doctrine that true knowledge is impossible without a Guru. An imperfect teacher may be tolerable in mundane matters, but not in spiritual matters. Only a perfect jnani deserves to be enthroned as Guru. There must, therefore, be ceaseless striving after perfection. For one gets the Guru that one deserves. Infinite striving after perfection is one’s right. It is its own reward. The rest is in the hands of God.

Thus, though I could not place Raychandbhai on the throne of my heart as Guru, we shall see how he was, on many occasions, my guide and helper. Three moderns have left a deep impress on life, and captivated me: Raychandbhai by his living contact; Tolstoy by his book, The Kingdom of God Is within you; and Ruskin by his Unto This Last. But of these more in their proper place.

CHAPTER II: HOW I BEGAN LIFE

My elder brother had built high hopes on me. The desire for wealth and name and fame was great in him. He had a big heart, generous to a fault. this, combined with his simple nature, had attracted to him many friends, and through them he expected to get me briefs. He had also assumed that I should have a swinging practice and had, in that expectation, allowed the household expenses to become top-heavy. He had also left no stone unturned in preparing the field for my practice.

The storm in my caste over my foreign voyage was still brewing. It had divided the caste into two camps, one of which immediately readmitted me, while the other was bent on keeping me out. To please the former my brother took me to Nasik before going to Rajkot, gave me a bath in the sacred river and, on reaching Rajkot, gave a caste dinner. I did not like all this. Buy my brother’s love for me was boundless, and my devotion to him was in proportion to it, and so I mechanically acted as he wished, taking his will to be law. The trouble about readmission to the caste was thus practically over.

I never tried to seek admission to the section that had refused it.

---

1. Seer, knower
Nor did I feel even mental resentment against any of the headmen of that section. Some of these regarded me with dislike, but I scrupulously avoided hurting their feelings. I fully respected the caste regulations about excommunication. According to these, none of my relations, including my father-in-law and mother-in-law, and even my sister and brother-in-law, could entertain me; and I would not so much as drink water at their houses. They were prepared secretly to evade the prohibition, but it went against the grain with me to do a thing in secret that I would not do in public.

The result of my scrupulous conduct was that I never had occasion to be troubled by the caste; nay, I have experienced nothing but affection and generosity from the general body of the section that still regards me as excommunicated. They have even helped me in my work, without ever expecting me to do anything for the caste. It is my conviction that all these good things are due to my non-resistance. Had I agitated for being admitted to the caste, had I attempted to divide it into more camps, had I provoked the caste-men, they would surely have retaliated, and instead of steering clear of the storm, I should, on arrival from England, have found myself in a whirlpool of agitation, and perhaps a party to dissimulation.

My relations with my wife were still not as I desired. Even my stay in England had not cured me of jealousy. I continued my squeamishness and suspiciousness in respect of every little thing, and hence all my cherished desires remained unfulfilled. I had decided that my wife should learn reading and writing and that I should help her in her studies, but my lust came in the way and she had to suffer for my own shortcoming. Once I went the length of sending her away to her father’s house, and consented to receive her back only after I had made her thoroughly miserable. I saw later that all this was pure folly on my part.

I had planned reform in the education of children. My brother had children, and my own child which I had left at home when I went to England was now a boy of nearly four. It was my desire to teach these little ones physical exercise and make them hardy, and also to give them the benefit of my personal guidance. In this I had my brother’s support and I succeeded in my efforts more or less. I very much liked the company of children, and the habit of playing and joking with them has stayed with me till today. I have ever since thought that I should make a good teacher of children.

The necessity for food ‘reform’ was obvious. Tea and coffee had already found their place in the house. My brother had thought it fit to keep some sort of English atmosphere ready for me on my return, and to that end, crockery and such other things, which used to be kept in the house only for special occasions, were now in general use. My ‘reforms’ put the finishing touch. I introduced oat-meal porridge, and cocoa was to replace tea and coffee. But in truth it became an addition to tea and coffee. Boots and shoes were already there. I completed the Europeanization by adding the European dress.

Expenses thus went up. New things were added every day. We had succeeded in tying a white elephant at our door. But how was the wherewithal to be found ? To start practice in Rajkot would have meant sure ridicule. I had hardly the knowledge of a qualified vakil and yet I expected to be paid ten times his fee ! No client would be fool enough to engage me. And even if such a one was to be found, should I add arrogance and fraud to my ignorance, and increase the burden of debt I owed to the world ?

Friends advised me to go to Bombay for some time in order to gain experience of the High Court, to study Indian law and to try and get what briefs I could. I took up the suggestion and went.

In Bombay I started a household with a cook as incompetent as myself. He was a Brahmin, I did not treat him as a servant but as a member of the household. He would pour water over himself but never wash. His dhoti was dirty, as also his sacred thread, and he was completely innocent of the scriptures. But how was I to get a better cook?

‘Well, Ravishankar,’ (for that was his name), I would ask him, ‘you may not know cooking, but surely you must know your sandhya (daily worship), etc.’

‘Sandhya, sir !’ The plough is our sandhya and the spade our daily ritual. That is the type of Brahmin I am. I must live on your mercy. Otherwise agriculture is of course there for me.’

So I had to be Ravishankar’s teacher. Time I had enough. I began to do half the cooking myself and introduced the English experiments in vegetarian cookery. I invested in a stove, and with Ravishankar began to run the kitchen. I had no scruples about inter-dining. Ravishankar too came to have none, and so we went on merrily together. There was only one obstacle. Ravishankar had sworn to remain dirty and to keep the food unclean !

But it was impossible for me to get along in Bombay for more than four or five months, there being no income to square with the ever-increasing expenditure.

This was how I began life. I found the barrister’s profession a bad job—much show and little knowledge. I felt a crushing sense of my responsibility.

CHAPTER III : THE FIRST CASE

Whilst in Bombay, I began, on the one hand, my study of Indian law and, on the other, my experiments in dietetics in which Virchand Gandhi, a friend, joined me. My brother, for his part, was trying his best to get me briefs.

The study of Indian law was a tedious business. The Civil Procedure Code I could in no way get on with. Not so, however, with the Evidence Act. Virchand Gandhi was reading for the Solicitor’s Examination and would tell me all sorts of stories about barristers and vakils. ‘Sir Pherozeshah’s ability,’ he would say, ‘lies in his profound knowledge of law. He has the Evidence Act by heart and knows all the cases on the thirty-second section. Badruddin Tyabji’s wonderful power of argument inspires the judges with awe.’

The stories of stalwarts such as these would unnerve me.

‘It is not unusual,’ he would add, ‘for a barrister to vegetate for five or seven years. That’s why I have signed the articles for solicitorship. You should count yourself lucky if you can paddle your own canoe in three years’ time.’

Expenses were mounting up every month. To have a barrister’s board outside the house, whilst still preparing for the barrister’s profession inside, was a thing to which I could not reconcile myself. Hence I could not give undivided attention to my studies. I developed some liking for the Evidence Act and read Mayne’s Hindu Law with deep interest, but I had not the courage to conduct a case. I was helpless beyond words, even as the bride come fresh to her father-in-law’s house!

About this time, I took up the case of one Mamibai. It was a ‘small cause’. ‘You will have to pay some commission to the tout,’ I was told. I emphatically declined.

‘But even that great criminal lawyer Mr. So-and-So, who makes three to four thousand a month, pays commission!’

‘I do not need to emulate him,’ I rejoined. ‘I should be content with Rs. 300 a month. Father did not get more.’

‘But those days are gone. Expenses in Bombay have gone up frightfully. You must be business-like.’

I was adamant. I gave no commission, but got Mamibai’s case all the same. It was an easy case. I charged Rs. 30 for my fees. The case was not likely to last longer than a day.

This was my debut in the Small Causes Court. I appeared for the defendant and had thus to cross-examine the plaintiff’s witnesses.
stood up, but my heart sank into my boots. My head was reeling and I felt as though the whole court was doing likewise. I could think of no question to ask. The judge must have laughed, and the vakils no doubt enjoyed the spectacle. But I was past seeing anything. I sat down and told the agent that I could not conduct the case, that he had better engage Patel and have the fee back from me. Mr. Patel was duly engaged for Rs. 51. To him, of course, the case was child’s play.

I hastened from the Court, not knowing whether my client won or lost her case, but I was ashamed of myself, and decided not to take up any more cases until I had courage enough to conduct them. Indeed I did not go to Court again until I went to South Africa. There was no virtue in my decision. I had simply made a virtue of necessity. There would be no one so foolish as to entrust his case to me, only to lose it!

But there was another case in store for me at Bombay. It was a memorial to be drafted. A poor Mussalman’s land was confiscated in Porbandar. He approached me as the worthy son of a worthy father. His case appeared to be weak, but I consented to draft a memorial for him, the cost of printing to be borne by him. I drafted it and read it out to friends. They approved of it, and that to some extent made me feel confident that I was qualified enough to draft a memorial, as indeed I really was.

My business could flourish if I drafted memorials without any fees. But that would bring no grist to the mill. So I thought I might take up a teacher’s job. My knowledge of English was good enough, and I should have loved to teach English to Matriculation boys in some school. In this way I could have met part at least of the expenses. I came across an advertisement in the papers: ‘Wanted, an English teacher to teach one hour daily. Salary Rs. 75.’ The advertisement was from a famous high school. I applied for the post and was called for an interview. I went there in high spirits, but when the principal found that I was not a graduate, he regretfully refused me.

‘But I have passed the London Matriculation with Latin as my second language.’

‘True, but we want a graduate.’

There was no help for it. I wrung my hands in despair. My brother also felt much worried. We both came to the conclusion that it was no use spending more time in Bombay. I should settle in Rajkot where my brother, himself a petty pleader, could give me some work in the shape of drafting applications and memorials. And then as there was already a household at Rajkot, the breaking up of the one at Bombay meant a considerable saving. I liked the suggestion. My little esta-lishment was thus closed after a stay of six months in Bombay.

I used to attend High Court daily whilst in Bombay, but I cannot say that I learnt anything there. I had not sufficient knowledge to learn much. Often I could not follow the cases and dozed off. There were others also who kept me company in this, and thus lightened my load of shame. After a time, I even lost the sense of shame, as I learnt to think that it was fashionable to doze in the High Court.

If the present generation has also its briefless barristers like me in Bombay, I would commend them a little practical precept about living. Although I lived in Girgaum I hardly ever took a carriage or a tramcar. I had made it a rule to walk to the High Court. It took me quite forty-five minutes, and of course I invariably returned home on foot. I had inured myself to the heat of the sun. This walk to and from the Court saved a fair amount of money, and when many of my friends in Bombay used to fall ill, I do not remember having once had an illness. Even when I began to earn money, I kept up the practice of walking to and from the office, and I am still reaping the benefits of that practice.

CHAPTER IV: THE FIRST SHOCK

Disappointed, I left Bombay and went to Rajkot where I set up my own office. Here I got along moderately well. Drafting applications and memorials brought me in, on an average, Rs. 300 a month. For this work I had to thank influence rather than my own ability, for my brother’s partner had a settled practice. All applications, etc., which were really or to his mind of an important character, he sent to big barristers. To my lot fell the applications to be drafted on behalf of his poor clients.

I must confess that here I had to compromise the principle of giving no commission, which in Bombay I had so scrupulously observed. I was told that conditions in the two cases were different; that whilst in Bombay commissions had to be paid to touts, here they had to be paid vakils who briefed you; and that here as in Bombay all barristers, without exception, paid a percentage of their fees as commission. The argument of my brother was, for me, unanswerable. ‘You see’, said he, ‘that I am in partnership with another vakil. I shall always be inclined to make over to you all our cases with which you can possibly deal, and if you refuse to pay a commission to my partner, you are sure to embarrass me. As you and I have a joint establishment, your fee comes to our common purse, and I automatically get a share. But what about my partner? Supposing he gave the same case to some other barrister, he would certainly get his commission from him.’ I was taken in by this plea, and felt that, if I was to practise as a barrister, I could not press my principle regarding commission in such cases. That is how I argued with myself, or to put it bluntly, how I deceived myself. Let me add, however, that I do not remember even to have given a commission in respect of any other case.

Though I thus began to make both ends meet, I got the first shock of my life about this time. I had heard what a British officer was like, but up to now had never been face to face with one.

My brother had been secretary and adviser to the late Ranasahab of Porbandar before he was installed on his gadi, and hanging over his head at this time was the charge of having given wrong advice when in that office. The matter had gone to the Political Agent who was prejudiced against my brother. Now I had known this officer when in England, and he may be said to have been fairly friendly to me. My brother thought that I should avail myself of the friendship and, putting in a good word on his behalf, try to disabuse the Political Agent of his prejudice. I did not at all like this idea. I should not, I thought, try to take advantage of a trifling acquaintance in England. If my brother was really at fault, what use was my recommendation? If he was innocent, he should submit a petition in the proper course and, confident of his innocence, face the result. My brother did not relish this advice. ‘You do not know Kathiawad,’ he said, ‘and you have yet to know the world. Only influence counts here. It is not proper for you, a brother, to shirk your duty, when you can clearly put in a good word about me to an officer you know.’

I could not refuse him, so I went to the officer much against my will. I knew I had no right to approach him and was fully conscious that I was compromising self-respect. But I sought an appointment and got it. I reminded him of the old acquaintance, but I immediately saw that Kathiawad was different from England; that an officer on leave was not the same as an officer on duty. The Political Agent owned the acquaintance, but the reminder seemed to stiffen him. ‘Surely you have not come here to abuse that acquaintance, have you?’ appeared to be the meaning of that stiffness, and seemed to be written on his brow. Nevertheless I opened my case. The sahib was impatient. ‘Your brother is an intriguer. I want to hear nothing more from you. I have no time. If your brother has anything to say, let him apply through the proper channel.’ The answer was enough, was perhaps deserved. But selfishness is blind. I went on with my story. The sahib got up and said: ‘You must go now.’

‘But please hear me out’, said I. That made him more angry. He called his peon and ordered him to show me the door. I was still hesitating when the peon came in, placed his hands on my shoulders.
and put me out of the room.

The sahib went away as also the peon, and I departed fretting and fuming. I at once wrote out and sent over a note to this effect: ‘You have insulted me. You have assaulted me through your peon. If you make no amends, I shall have to proceed against you.’

Quick came the answer through his sowar¹:

‘You were rude to me. I asked you to go and you would not. I had no option but to order my peon to show you the door. Even after he asked you to leave the office, you did not do so. He therefore had to use just enough force to send you out. You are at liberty to proceed as you wish.’

With this answer in my pocket, I came home crestfallen, and told my brother all that had happened. He was grieved, but was at a loss as to how to console me. He spoke to his vakil friends. For I did not know how to proceed against the sahib. Sir Pherozeshah Mehta happened to be in Rajkot at this time, having come down from Bombay for some case. But how could a junior barrister like me dare to see him? So I sent him the papers of my case, through the vakil who had engaged him, and begged for his advice. ‘Tell Gandhi,’ he said, ‘such things are the common experience of many vakils and barrister. He is still fresh from England, and hot-blooded. He does not know British officers. If he would earn something and have an easy time here, let him tear up the note and pocket the insult. He will gain nothing by proceeding against the sahib, and on the contrary will very likely ruin himself. Tell him he has yet to know life.’²

The advice was as bitter as poison to me, but I had to swallow it. I pocketed the insult, but also profited by it. ‘Never again shall I place myself in such a false position, never again shall I try to exploit friendship in this way,’ said I to myself, and since then I have never been guilty of a breach of that determination. This shock changed the course of my life.

CHAPTER V: PREPARING FOR SOUTH AFRICA

I was no doubt at fault in having gone to that officer. But his impatience and overbearing anger were out of all proportion to my mistake. It did not warrant expulsion. I can scarcely have taken up more than five minutes of his time. But he simply could not endure my talking. He could have politely asked me to go, but power had intoxicated him to an inordinate extent. Later I came to know that

¹ Messenger on horseback
² This incident is mentioned in a speech in 1921; vide “Speech on Non-Cooperation, Bombay”, June 18, 1921.
patience was not one of the virtues of this officer. It was usual for him to insult his visitors. The slightest unpleasantness was sure to put the sahib out.

Now most of my work would naturally be in his court. It was beyond me to conciliate him. I had no desire to curry favour with him. Indeed, having once threatened to proceed against him, I did not like to remain silent.

Meanwhile I began to learn something of the petty politics of the country. Kathiawad, being a conglomeration of small States, naturally had its rich crop of politicals. Petty intrigues between States, and intrigues of officers for power were the order of the day. Princes were always at the mercy of others and ready to lend their ears to sycophants. Even the sahib’s peon had to be cajoled, and the sahib’s shirastedar was more than his master, as he was his eyes, his ears and his interpreter. The shirastedar’s will was law, and his income was always reputed to be more than the sahib’s. This may have been an exaggeration, but he certainly lived beyond his salary.

This atmosphere appeared to me to be poisonous, and how to remain unscathed was a perpetual problem for me.

I was thoroughly depressed and my brother clearly saw it. We both felt that, if I could secure some job, I should be free from this atmosphere of intrigue. But without intrigue a ministership or judgeship was out of the question. And the quarrel with the sahib stood in the way of practice.

Porbandar was then under administration, and I had some work there in the shape of securing more powers for the Prince. Also I had to see the Administrator in respect of the heavy vighoti (land rent) exacted from the Mers. This officer, though an Indian, was, I found, one better than the sahib in arrogance. He was able, but the ryots appeared to me to be none the better off for his ability. I succeeded in securing a few more powers for the Rana, but hardly any relief for the Mers. It struck me that their cause was not even carefully gone into.

So even in this mission I was comparatively disappointed. I thought justice was not done to my clients, but I had not the means to secure it. At the most I could have appealed to the Political Agent or to the Governor who would have dismissed the appeal saying, ‘We decline to interfere.’ If there had been any rule or regulation governing such decisions, it would have been something, but here the sahib’s will was law.

1 Head clerk
I was exasperated.

In the meantime a Meman firm from Porbandar wrote to my brother making the following offer: ‘We have business in South Africa. Ours is a big firm, and we have a big case there in the Court, our claim being £40,000. It has been going on for a long time. We have engaged the services of the best vakils and barristers. If you sent your brother there, he would be useful to us and also to himself. He would be able to instruct our counsel better than ourselves. And he would have the advantage of seeing a new part of the world, and of making new acquaintances.

My brother discussed the proposition with me. I could not clearly make out whether I had simply to instruct the counsel or to appear in court. But I was tempted.

My brother introduced me to the late Sheth Abdul Karim Jhaveri, a partner of Dada Abdulla & Co., the firm in question. ‘It won’t be a difficult job,’ the Sheth assured me. ‘We have big Europeans as our friends, whose acquaintance you will make. You can be useful to us in our shop. Much of our correspondence is in English and you can help us with that too. You will, of course, be our guest and hence will have no expense whatever.’

‘How long do you require my services?’ I asked. ‘And what will be the payment?’

Not more than a year. ‘We will pay you a first class return fare and a sum of £105, all found.’

This was hardly going there as a barrister. It was going as a servant of the firm. But I wanted somehow to leave India. There was also the tempting opportunity of seeing a new country and of having new experience. Also I could send £105 to my brother and help in the expenses of the household. I closed with the offer without any higgling and got ready to go to South Africa.

CHAPTER VI: ARRIVAL IN NATAL

When starting for South Africa I did not feel the wrench of separation which I had experienced when leaving for England. My mother was now no more. I had gained some knowledge of the world and of travel abroad, and going from Rajkot to Bombay was no unusual affair.

This time I only felt the pang of parting with my wife. Another baby had been born to us since my return from England. Our love could not yet be called free from lust, but it was getting gradually purer. Since my return from Europe, we had lived very little together; and as I had now become her teacher, however indifferent, and helped her to make certain reforms, we both felt the necessity of being more together, if only to continue the reforms. But the attraction of South Africa rendered the separation bearable. ‘We are bound to meet again in a year,’ I said to her, by way of consolation, and left Rajkot for Bombay.

Here I was to get my passage through the agent of Dada Abdulla and Company. But no berth was available on the boat, and if I did not sail then, I should be stranded in Bombay. ‘We have tried our best,’ said the agent, ‘to secure a first-class passage, but in vain—unless you are prepared to go on deck. Your meals can be arranged for in the saloon.’ Those were the days of my first-class travelling, and how could a barrister travel as a deck passenger? So I refused the offer. I suspected the agent’s veracity, for I could not believe that a first-class passage was not available. With the agent’s consent I set about securing it myself. I went on board the boat and met the chief officer. He said to me quite frankly, ‘We do not usually have such a rush. But as the Governor-General of Mozambique is going by this boat, all the berths are engaged.’

‘Could you not possibly squeeze me in?’ I asked. He surveyed me from top to toe and smiled. ‘There is just one way,’ he said. ‘There is an extra berth in my cabin, which is usually not available for passengers. But I am prepared to give it to you.’ I thanked him and got the agent to purchase the passage. In April 1893 I set forth full of zest to try my luck in South Africa.

The first port of call was Lamu, which we reached in about thirteen days. The Captain and I had become great friends by this time. He was fond of playing chess, but as he was quite a novice, he wanted one still more of a beginner for his partner, and so he invited me. I had heard a lot about the game but had never tried my hand at it. Players used to say that this was a game in which there was plenty of scope for the exercise of one’s intelligence. The Captain offered to give me lessons, and he found me a good pupil as I had unlimited patience. Every time I was the loser, and that made him all the more eager to teach me. I liked the game, but never carried my liking beyond the boat or my knowledge beyond the moves of the pieces.

At Lamu the ship remained at anchor for some three to four hours, and I landed to see the port. The Captain had also gone ashore, but he had warned me that the harbour was treacherous and that I should return in good time.

It was a very small place. I went to the Post Office and was delighted to see the Indian clerks there, and had a talk with them.
also saw the Africans and tried to acquaint myself with their ways of life which interested me very much. This took up some time.

There were some deck passengers with whom I had made acquaintance, and who had landed with a view to cooking their food on shore and having a quiet meal. I now found them preparing to return to the steamer, so we all got into the same boat. The tide was high in the harbour and our boat more than its proper load. The current was so strong that it was impossible to hold the boat to the ladder of the steamer. It would just touch the ladder and be drawn away again by the current. The first whistle to start had already gone. I was worried. The Captain was witnessing our plight from the bridge. He ordered the steamer to wait an extra five minutes. There was another boat near the ship which a friend hired for me for ten rupees. This boat picked me up from the overloaded one. The ladder had already been raised. I had therefore to be drawn up by means of a rope and the steamer started immediately. The other passengers were left behind. I now appreciated the Captain’s warning.

After Lamu the next port was Mombasa and then Zanzibar. The halt here was a long one—eight or ten days—and we then changed to another boat.

